When I conſider that Pomponatius did publickly acknowledge, that we cannot be ſure of the Immortality of the Soul by the Light of Reaſon; I don't know what to think of the Diſtinction which he is ſaid to have made before his Judges. The thing is related by la Mothe le Vayer in the following manner, "(g) Such a Dexterity proved very "ſucceſsful to Pomponatius. That Philoſopher having declared with a Peripatetical Liberty, that he "did not believe the Immortality of the Soul, was "proſecuted by the Inquiſition; but he was ſet at "Liberty by virtue of this Explanation, that he did "not believe it, properly ſpeaking, ſince he knew "it demonſtratively, as he explained himſelf in a "long Diſcourſe to ſome Judges, who had been for"merly his Scholars, and who proved favourable "to him." I ſhould rather think that he diſtinguiſhed between Faith and Science, than between Science and Opinion, that is, he confeſſed to them that he had no Demonſtration of the Immortality of the Soul; but that he believed it as an Article of Faith revealed in the Scripture, and decided by the Councils. However it be, 'tis ſaid, he was not ſorry that his Book ſhould be confuted, and that he wiſh'd, the Poyſon that was in it might be deſtroyed by the Antidote of Javellus's Anſwer. This the Jeſuit Antony Sirmond obſerves againſt a Man, who had publiſhed in France Pomponatius's Tract without that Anſwer. (i) Quem repugnante autore neſcio quis curioſus, aut impius, novis typis juſſerat in lucem exire ſolitarium & ſine reſponſione Javelli, quam ipſe Pomponatius ſcriptâ ad eum epiſtolâ ita olim comprobârat, ut palàm rogaret edici, ſe quoque ſuffragante, perſperſum libro ſuo venenum hoc antidoto niſi diluatur, peſtiferum eſſe, ac toti humano generi extimeſcendum. I think this Philoſopher bethought himſelf too late of this Charitable Office; for he maintained his firſt Book twice againſt Niphus, and once againſt Ambroſe, Archbiſhop of Naples. This you'll find in the ſame Sirmond (k); but he ſays nothing of the Book publiſhed by Contarinus, in the Year 1516, againſt that of Pomponatius, which appeared very ſolid to that Philoſopher. (l) Edidit juvenis adhuc (trigeſimum enim tertium ætatis annum tunc agebat) librum contra judicium Petri Mantuani doctoris ſui . . . . . . argumenta autem illa firma ad probandum & gravia fuiſſe, opuſque totum valde elaboratum perſpicitur, quia acutiſſimus ille phyſicus in libro quo defendit opinionem illam ſuam acriter oppugnatam ab eo quem inſtruxerat, tradit eum librum & doctiſſimum omnium & uberrimum eſſe qui omni tempore materiam illam perſecuti ſunt: additque videri prorſus eum divina opera & manu fabricatum fuiſſe. Why then did he not Wiſh that this Anſwer of Contarinus ſhould be printed, for the Time to come, with his Treatiſe, as we are told that he wiſh'd ſuch a thing as to Javellus's Anſwer? Niphus wrote againſt Pomponatius by Leo the Tenth's Order. On the contrary, others ſay, that Pomponatius compoſed that Tract, only to pleaſe that Pope; which is confuted by la Mothe le Vayer. I ſhall ſet down ſomewhat at large what he ſays upon this Subject; there are ſome things in it whereby the Text of this Remark will be illuſtrated. (m) "I need not enlarge upon theſe (n) Conſiderations, "ſince every Body may ſee what thoſe two great "Adverſaries, Pomponatius and Niphus, wrote upon "this Subject above a hundred Years ago. Where"upon I muſt adviſe my Reader to place among "the idle Fancies of Poſtel, a Man who is known "to have had very dangerous Intervals, what he "aſſerts that Pomponatius engaged in that Diſpute "only to pleaſe the Supreme (1) Pontif, of whom "he ſpeaks very diſreſpectfully. For, on the con"trary, 'tis certain that Niphus was pitch'd upon by "Pope Leo X. to whom he dedicated his Book, as "one of the moſt learned Men of his Time, and "beſt qualified to defend a Cauſe as far as it can be "defended. And indeed it muſt be confeſs'd, that "he did all that could be done for a Cauſe which "lay open to great Diſadvantages, being confin'd, "by a mutual Agreement, within the Bounds of "Peripatetiſm; and therefore Pomponatius Jeſts "upon him, ſaying, that he imitated a Phyſician "of Milan, who ordered all ſorts of Graſs that "grew in a Meadow, to be put into a Bath, in "hopes that ſome of 'em would prove beneficial "to his Patient: that in like manner Niphus had "made uſe of all ſorts of Arguments, tho' never "ſo weak and ſophiſtical, to know whether ſome "of 'em would be ſatisfactory. The beſt of all is, "that the Queſtion was only about Ariſtotle's Opi"nion, which, after all, cannot be more prejudi"cial to Truth, than what he ſays of the Eternity "of the World, or the Quinteſſence of the Hea"vens, two Opinions that are laugh'd at in the "Schools." Spondanus having ſaid, that all Philoſophers were forbidden by Leo X. to teach that the Soul of Man is Mortal, and but one in all Men, obſerves, that 'tis thought Pomponatius occaſion'd that Bull. (p) Occaſionem autem prædictæ de philoſophis ſanctioni dediſſe dicitur Petrus Pomponatius Mantuanus, Jovii in philoſophiâ præceptor: qui enarrans Ariſtotelem & Averroëm Bononiæ, animam poſt corporis mortem interituram ex ſententiâ Ariſtotelis probare conatus, juventutem valdè corruperat; ſe eo tuens quod philoſophicè loqueretur, ſed aliter, cùm Chriſtianus eſſet, ſentiret. Thoſe Words are not exact; for Spondanus ſuppoſes that Pomponatius taught, as Averroes did, that all Men have but one Soul in ſome reſpects, than which nothing can be more falſe. If you read his Book, you'll find, that having laid down the Opinion of Averroes in the 3d Chapter, he declares in the very Beginning of the 4th, that it is abſurd and monſtrous, and that he does not think it neceſſary to confute it, becauſe Thomas Aquinas has ſo fully ſhewn the extravagancy of that Opinion (a), that the Averroiſts are not able to make any further Reply: he has ſo entirely overcome them, ſays he, that the only thing they can do is to give him hard Words. And therefore, referring his Readers to Thomas Aquinas, he only ſhews, that Averroes could not find that Chimerical Notion in Ariſtotle. (b) Quamvis hæc opinio tempeſtate noſtra ſit multùm celebrata, & fere ab omnibus pro conſtanti habeatur eam eſſe Ariſtotelis, mihi tamen videtur quod nedum in ſe ſit falſiſſima, verum inintelligibilis, & monſtroſa, & ab Ariſtotele prorſus aliena: imo exiſtimo quod tanta fatuitas nunquam fuerit nedum credita, verùm excogitata: Et primo quidem de ejus falſitate nihil novi intendo adducere, ſed tantùm lectorem remittere ad ea quæ Latinorum decus Divus Thomas Aquinas . . . . ſed quoad ſecundum hæc paucula quæ mihi plenam fidem faciunt adducere ſtatui, videlicet hoc alienum eſſe ab Ariſtotele, verùm hoc eſſe figmentum, & monſtrum ab Averroe confictum. Nevertheleſs, it may be ſaid that he was one of thoſe who occaſion'd the Bull of Leo X. of which he made no great Account. It was read and approved by the Fathers of the Council of Lateran, in the 8th Seſſion, in the Month of December 1513, and he wrote his Book concerning the Immortality of the Soul (c) in the Year 1516. From whence we may infer by the by, that Moreri, Konig, and ſeveral others are miſtaken, who place his Death in the Year 1512. According to the Calculation of his Nativity, mention'd by Gauric, he was born in the Year 1462. But according to Jovius, he died in the 63d Year of his Life, and therefore he muſt have died in 1525. Freherus (d) ſays, that he flouriſh'd in 1530, which is a Miſtake.

(C) He made ſeveral Replies, and inſtead of giving Ground, went on ſtill, keeping to his firſt Corrective.] Having no other Book of Pomponatius but his Treatiſe de immortalitate animæ, I am not able to give a Chronological Hiſtory of the Diſpute that was occaſion'd by it. All that I can do is to make uſe of what I find in M. le Noble. I don't take the Account he gives of it to be altogether exact, and I perceive ſeveral Omiſſions in it; but I am apt to believe that the things contained in it are true, and I muſt be contented with what he ſays, ſince I can have no better Information. "(e) That Tract "(f) made

(o) You'll ſee the Words of that Bull towards the end of the Rem. E in the Article of Spinoza.

(g) La Mothe le Vayer, Dialogue de la diverſité des religions p. m. 294, 295. 'Tis the laſt of the 5 Dialogues of Oraſius Tubero.

(h) Animam eſſe immortalem eſt articulus fidei, ut patet per Simbolum Apoſtolorum & Athanaſii. Pomponatius ub. ſup. p. 126.

(i) Antonius Sirmondus de immortalitate animæ p. 1, & 2. His Book was printed at Paris in the Year 1635, in 8.

(k) Id. ib. in appendice p. 19, & 20.

(l) Johan. Caſa in vita Gaſparis Contarini p. m. 124.

(m) La Mothe le Vayer, de l'immortalité de l'Ame, p. 135, 137. of the 3 Vol. of his Works in 12.

(n) That whether Ariſtotle teaches the Immortality of the Soul.

(1) Lib. 1. ...orb. ...ord.

(p) Spondanus Annal. Eccleſ. ad ann. 1513. n. 20. p. m. 308.

(a) Tam luculenter tam ſubtiliter adverſus hanc opinionem invehitur, ut ſententia mea nihil intactum, nullamque reſponſionem quam quis pro Averroe adducere poteſt impugnatam relinquat; totum enim impugnat, diſſipat, & annihilat, nullumque Averroiſtis refugium relictum eſt, niſi convitia & maledicta in Divinum & Sanctiſſimum virum. Pomponat. ub. ſup. p. 8. & 9.

(b) Id. ib.

(c) Finis impoſitus eſt huic tractatui per me Petrum filium Joannis Nicolai Pomponatii de Mantua die 24 menſis Septembris anno Chriſti 1516. Bononiæ. Pomponat. ib.

(d) In Theatro p. 1441.

(e) Le Noble, Tableaux des philoſophes tom. 2. p. 80.

tion on which he grounded his Belief of the Immortality of the Soul. His Tract de (D) Incantationibus was also accounted a very dangerous Book. He did not ‡ want Apologists; but the only thing that some alledge in his Justification is, that he renounced (E) his Atheism. If the Charge of Impiety laid upon him was only grounded

‡ See the Rem. E.

" (f) made a great Noise, and when it came out " at Venice, Pomponatius adds, that the Monks, whom " he denotes by the Word Cucullati, raised great " Clamours against his Doctrine ..... (g) Those " Cucullati inveighed in their Sermons against Pomponatius, as against a downright Heretick, caused " the Reading of that Treatise to be forbidden by " the Patriarch, whom that Philosopher calls a Man " of a most Holy Life, but very ignorant in Philosophy and Divinity; and afterwards, by a Decree " of the Senate, the Sale of it was prohibited ... " .... A Man of Letters ..... wrote against that " Treatise with great Moderation ..... (h) Pomponatius composed an Apology in Answer to that " Author: in the two first Books of that Apology, " he confuted all the Arguments alledged against " his Doctrine, and proved again, that Aristotle did " not believe the Immortality of the Soul, and that " it could not be proved by Natural Reasons. In " the third Book he very much blames the violent " Anger of Brother Ambrose of Naples, of the Order of the Hermits of St. Augustin, who had been " made Bishop some few Days before. He complains, that preaching his Lent Sermons in the " Cathedral Church of Mantua, he had spoke very " injuriously of him from the Pulpit, calling him " publickly an heretical and impious Man, who did " not believe the Resurrection and the Immortality " of the Soul. He therefore declares, that he believes that the Souls are Immortal, and that he is " ready to Die in defence of that Truth; but that " he is fully persuaded of it, because God hath " revealed it to Men, and not because the Light of " Reason teaches it, and that if Brother Ambrose " will give him good Reasons for the contrary, he " is ready to hear him. „ Afterwards he says, that the Patriarch of Venice wrote to Peter Bembo, who was at Rome, to desire him to get that Tract concerning the Immortality of the Soul, condemn'd by the Pope. Bembo read it, and tho' he found nothing in it contrary to Truth, yet according to the Duty of his Place, he communicated it to the Master of the Apostolical Palace, who having read it, was of Bembo's Opinion, that it contain'd nothing but what was agreeable to the Doctrine of the most celebrated Doctors of the Christian Religion (k).

" (l) Afterwards, as 'tis usual to grow hot by " much Disputing, and to carry things too far, (m) " he maintains and endeavours to prove, that the " Immortality of the Soul is repugnant to Natural " Reason, and that nothing can be more injurious " to Faith, than to pretend to prove it by Natural " Arguments. ...... (n) When Pomponatius had " made this Apology, a new Book, written by Augustin Niphus a Philosopher, came out against his " first Treatise concerning the Immortality of the " Soul. Pomponatius answered it by another Tract, " intitled Defensorium, wherein he shews Niphus's " Ignorance, further proves what he had advanced, " and at last concludes that Work with these " Words: If Christ is raised from the Dead, we shall " likewise rise, and if we rise, the Soul is Immortal. But it is certain that Christ is raised; therefore 'tis true that the Soul is Immortal. This is, " says he, the only solid Argument whereby the " Immortality of the Soul can be proved: whoever " is not contented with it, does not deserve the " Name of Christian, and does not know the excellency of Faith, which ought to have the first " place in all our Reasonings, and is alone sufficient " to lay down in a solid manner what cannot be " maintain'd any other way. „

We shall see by and by, that M. le Noble censures some of these Thoughts of Pomponatius.

(D) His Tract de incantationibus was also accounted a very dangerous Book.] It appears from it, that he believed nothing of what is said about Magick and Witchcraft, and he lays great stress on I know not what Virtues that some Men have had, whereby they produced miraculous effects. He alledges many Instances of it; but his Adversaries don't allow that they are true, or free from Magick. Here is a Passage of Theophilus Raynaud. (o) Exempla quæ ad specialem aliquorum hominum proprietatem individualem ad miros effectus præstandos, præsertim sanationum, à Pomponatio adduntur, vel fabulosa sunt, vel Magica, ut Andreas Laurentius capite (p) lib. 4. contendit. Ridiculè autem Zacutus (q) dicta q. 14. inter magnos autores quibus fidem abrogasse piaculum propè esse dicit, numerat Pomponatium in Opere de Incantationibus, exempla illa recensentem. He refers us to his Theologia Naturalis, wherein the following Words against that Book of Pomponatius are to be found. (r) Nec minor Pomponatii culpa, qui (s) idem conatus in opere de incantationibus ad extremum tamen subjicit opus suum correctioni Ecclesiæ, à qua ut rectè suprà divinavit (t) Carpentarius aliud expectare non potuit, quàm unam lineam à principio ad finem usque ductam. Ita enim factum est, collocato ante aliquot annis, inter reprobata, illo opere, in quo Buccaferr. l. de divinat. per somnium lect. 29. ait asseri à Pomponatio, multa falsa, & multas ac magnas nugas. A Fellow Jesuit of Theophilus Raynaud, expressed himself with greater force. (v) Pomponatii de Incantationibus opusculum certè miratus sui tam diu toleratum ab Ecclesia; nunc recens & meritò in Romano Indice damnatur; verissimum enim quod ab Antonio Mirandulano (x) scriptum, hoc opere Pomponatium, se nec philosophum bonum, nec quod fœdius Christianum bonum exhibuisse, cum effectus omnes mirificos cælorum influxionibus adscribit, adeò ut velit & religiones & leges easumque latores ab iis dependere. Quod prorsus impium. Pomponatius speaking of the Cures that are ascribed to the Virtue of Relicks, said a thing which at first seems to be offensive, but one might give it a very good Turn according to the common Hypothesis. He affirms, that (w) the Bones of a Dog would as effectually produce a Cure, if the sick Person, who relies on the Virtue of those Relicks, formed the same Imagination concerning those Bones, as concerning the Bones and Ashes of Martyrs. The Controversial Writers of the Church of Rome being not able to deny, that some supposititious Relicks have wrought Miracles, as 'tis pretended, say, that the good Intention of those who have recourse to them, procured 'em such a Reward from God.

(E) The only thing that some alledge in his Justification is, that he renounced his Atheism.] Helidæus, a famous Physician of Forli, said, that his Master Pomponatius was an Atheist. John Wierus hopes that this Philosopher did not die in that Condition. (a) Pomponatium ante redditum spiritus extremi halitum resipuisse ex singulari Dei miseratione, nec permansisse ἄθεον, sperare volo. Talem etenim fuisse, à clarissimo medicinæ ornamento D. Helidæo Forolivienfi, ejus olim discipulo non semel auditum est. Voetius tells us that Gratarolus made an Apology for Pomponatius, and is so equitable as not to follow the Stream. (b) He owns, that most of the Catholick Writers, and some Protestant Authors, call that Philosopher an Atheist, and lays some stress upon the Remark of the Apologist, that the Opinion of Pomponatius about the Mortality of the Soul, concern'd only Aristotle's Hypothesis. He should have said, that this is a plain Proof of that Author's Innocency, unless he design'd to hide his pernicious Doctrine under that Cover. Voetius alledges that Restriction. (c) Gul. Gratarolus Medicus Italus (quem propria scripta uno volumine in 8. Basileæ edita, & testimonium Bezæ in epistolis, ut & in dedicatione libelli cujusdam, aliorumque prætereà doctorum virorum suffragia, quorum familiaritate Basileæ & alibi usus est, à Pietatis zelo commendant) eum contra calumniatores tuetur, & piè pro eo tempore vitam cum morte commutasse scribit: in epistol. dedicator. Operibus Pomponatii anno 1567. Basil. editis præfixa...... Illud penitus considerandum, quod respondet: Eum ex mente Aristotelis negasse animæ immortalitatem: quod, ut illi cum aliis philosophis ac Theologis ita judicantibus commune fuit (Plutarcho, Galeno, Aphrodisæo, Justino Martyre, Theodoreto, Origene, Nysseno, Nazianzeno, Cajetano in 3. de Animâ) sic non debet hic fraudi esse: nisi probari posset illum sub hoc schemate subdolè & tutò voluisse hunc Atheismum spargere in animos auditorum. Nisi itaque alia ex dictis, scriptis, factis ejus certior demonstratio suppetat, utique in benigniorem partem, immo in optimam accipienda sunt illa, quæ ille pro modulo & conditione sua de Fato, Providentia Dei, & prædestinatione conscripsit: in quibus si non rei dignitati, & solidis Theologis per omnia satisfaciat, saltem hoc præstat, ne nigra

(f) That is, the Tract concerning the Immortality of the Soul.

(g) Id. ib. p. 81.

(h) Id. ib. p. 82.

(k) Id. ib. p. 83.

(l) Id. ib. p. 84.

(m) That is, Pomponatius in his Apology.

(n) Id. ib. p. 85, 86.

(o) Theoph. Raynaudus de stigmatismo sacro & profano sect. 2. c. 4. p. m. 321, 322.

(p) The [illegible] of the 1. Book de [illegible]

(q) [illegible] of the 1. B. [illegible] medicorum principum historia.

(r) Id. in Theolog. naturali, distinct. 4. quæst. 1. art. 4. n. 14. [illegible] 2[illegible], [illegible]

(s) That is, to reject what is said of the [illegible] operations.

(t) That is, [illegible] in Alcin.

(v) Mart. Delrio, disquisit. Magicar. l. 1. c. 3. p. m. 22.

(x) Lib. 4. de singulari certamine.

(w) Pomponatius dicere non verebatur in [illegible] acquisita ex veneratione Ossium Divis ascriptorum, si essent ossa canis & tanta & talis de eis haberetur imaginatio non minus subsequeretur sanitas. Jo. Wierus de præstigiis Dæmon. l. 5. c. 1[illegible] p. m. [illegible] He puts the 2 Books of Pomponatius de Incantamentis [illegible] 12.

(a) Wierus, [illegible] lib. 5. in cap. [illegible] operis p. m. [illegible]

(b) [illegible] Disput. Theol. 1. p. 1[illegible]

(c) Id. ib. p. 1[illegible]

grounded on his Book concerning the Immortality of the Soul, no Accusation was (F) ever more impertinent, and a more signal Instance of the unjust Prepossession nigra Atheismi nota illi tam peremptoriè inuratur. Hæc ego in re dubia, postquam omnia ejus opuscula præsertim modo nominata videre contigit: qui ante multos annos ex lectione solius tract. de Incantationibus (ubi placitis Avicennæ & Averrois nimis adhærescens, in supernaturalibus quibusdam satis misere fluctuat) & ex communi aliorum judicio sinistram magis de illo opinionem conceperam. I must not omit the Epitaph made by one on this Philosopher. (†) Hic sepultus jaceo. Quare? nescio: nec si scis aut nescis curo. Si vales, bene est: vivens valui. Fortasse nunc valeo. Si aut non, dicere nequeo.

(F) If the charge of Impiety . . . . . . no Accusation was ever more impertinent.] In the first place, to assert, that the Principles of Aristotle lead us to believe that the Soul is Mortal, is at most, a Personal Injury. Whoever says so, is, at most, guilty of doing an Unjustice to a Man, who was Preceptor to the Conqueror of Asia, and the Founder of a most flourishing Sect. But how can it be call'd an Impiety? In the second place, since Aristotle is Dead, and consequently cannot give an Account of his Faith, and clear the Equivocations that are in his Books, any one may be allowed to declare against him, if he finds in his Writings, as many or more plausible Reasons, to shew that he taught the Mortality of the Soul, than to shew that he taught its Immortality; and therefore nothing can be more harmless, than to convert the Opinion of Aristotle on this great Point into a Problem, and to maintain the Affirmative or Negative, according as the Reasons alledged by him for or against the Immortality of the Soul, make a greater Impression. If any one does not take his Sense right, he does him an Unjustice; but after all, it is only a Material Injury, which Aristotle would be obliged to forgive, by imputing it to his want of Exactness, and to his Variations and Contradictions. (d) The most (e) famous of all his Interpreters, and many others after him, as the two Gregory's, Lescot, Cajetan and Simon Portius have acknowledged, that the Mortality of the Soul was a thing altogether necessary, according to the Doctrine of that Philosopher. And therefore he must needs have advanced some Maxims, which afford a fair pretence to ascribe to him such an impious Doctrine. 'Tis therefore a most ridiculous thing to assert, that none but an impious Man can have such Thoughts of Aristotle's Doctrine; and consequently, the pretended Impiety of Pomponatius would be grounded on a gross Illusion. Nay, he could not be suspected, with any shew of Reason, of any Design prejudicial to the Memory of that Ancient Philosopher. In the third place I observe, that one may assert, not only that it appears from his Works, that he did not believe the Immortality of the Soul, but also that his System, such as the Schoolmen have been pleased to explain it, and such as it is explained to this Day in the Universities, cannot afford any proofs of the Immortality of the Soul, and affords many Arguments for the contrary. For in short, the main part of that System is, 1. That Natural Bodies are made up of two Substances, one whereof is call'd Matter, and the other Form: 2. That the Form of all Natural Bodies, Man only excepted, is a corruptible Being, which never fails to be destroyed when the Compound perishes, that is, whenever a Stone, a Tree, a Dog, &c. are converted into Natural Bodies of another Kind. From whence it necessarily results, that those who follow this System, can give no proofs of the Immortality of the Soul; for in order to it, they should make it appear, that it is Immaterial: but how can they shew it, since they own, that the Souls of Brutes, tho' endowed with the Faculty of Feeling, Discerning, and Desiring, are Material Beings? 'Tis to be observed that in Pomponatius's Time, they knew of no Philosophical System but that of Aristotle, so that to assert, that the Immortality of the Soul could not be proved by the Principles of that Philosopher, and to assert that it could not be proved by Philosophical Reasons, was one and the same thing. This goes a great way towards excusing, and even justifying Pomponatius; the rather, because the Platonick, or any other Sect, did not afford better Proofs. Descartes is the only Philosopher who laid down very solid Principles concerning this Subject. He says, that all thinking Substances are distinct from Matter, from whence it necessarily follows, that the Soul of Man is a Spirit, or a simple indivisible Being, and consequently Immortal. No Cartesian will scruple to say, that the Principles of the old Philosophy cannot afford one good Proof of the Immortality of the Soul. Were it not an extravagant thing to maintain, that a Cartesian who says so is an Impious and Atheistical Man? Why then was Pomponatius so ill used? It will be said, that a Cartesian acknowledges that his System affords a demonstrative Proof of the Immortality of the Soul, whereas Pomponatius acknowledged no System that afforded such an Argument. Such a difference cannot be admitted, but by supposing that this Philosopher rejected the Cartesian System, tho' he knew it; but he knew nothing of it, and therefore his Fault lies only in not inventing a System, according to which whatever thinks is Incorporeal and Spiritual. This is the Fault of a great many Orthodox Men, and consequently a chimerical one. I further add, that tho' he had rejected the Supposition whereby whatever Thinks is distinct from Matter, he had done nothing but what is done at this Day by Men of great Parts, who relying intirely on the Authority of the Holy Scripture, as Pomponatius did, cannot be justly charged with Irreligion. Lastly, I observe, that nothing can be more unworthy of a Divine, than to cry down a Philosopher as an impious Man, because he declares, that in order to free our Minds from the Uncertainty of Human Reason, we ought to rely on the Word of God, as containing (g) the true Foundation and most certain Proofs of the Immortality of our Souls. This is what Pomponatius did, for which he was cruelly persecuted by the Monkish Tribe. What a shameful and horrid thing was this!

I go farther, and say, that the Cartesians themselves, who are convinc'd of the Immortality of the Soul, because the Principles of their Philosophy appear evident to them, act the part of Wise Men, when they advise their Readers to have recourse to Faith, as (h) an anchor of the Soul, both sure and stedfast, and which entreth into that without the Veil, that is to ground their belief of this Doctrine on the Authority of GOD, which is the true Remedy of our Uncertainties, and supplies the obscurity of our Reason. For if they have right Notions of things, they ought to know, that what appears evident to them, does not appear so to many other Philosophers, who oppugn it. I have read in a Book of M. Arnauld, that Gassendus's Reply to Descartes made (a) many disbelieve at Naples, the Immortality of the Soul, because Gassendus used all his Skill to enervate the Arguments of Descartes, concerning that Doctrine; which shews, that the Cartesian Principle is not evident to every body. Nay, 'tis certain that if Ignorant People made use of common Sense, they could never be sure of the Immortality of their Souls, whilst they see that the greatest Philosophers don't agree about it. Were an Ignorant Man to blame if he argued in this manner? If Descartes's Arguments were evident, Gassendus could not oppugn them, so as to satisfy many People; for if Gassendus had writ a Book to prove, that the Whole is not greater than its Parts, and that if things equal be taken from things equal, the remainder will not be equal, no Body would have been persuaded of the truth of those Assertions: and therefore since Gassendus, and many other great Philosophers, want no Followers, when they oppose Descartes's Doctrine, they must needs oppugn a Doctrine that is not evidently true; there is therefore some Obscurity in it, it appears true to some, and false to some others: how can I then resolve the Matter, being no Scholar, and having no Skill in Disputes? Some of those Great Men must needs be mistaken, and therefore whatever Party I side with, I run the hazard of being in an Error. People should argue thus, when they see that Learned Men are divided in their Opinions. But if they should do so, how would they get out of their Uncertainties? There is an effectual way for it, as to the Immortality of the Soul, which is to have recourse to the Light of Revelation. And therefore if a Cartesian should imitate Pomponatius, he ought to be accounted a wise Man. 'Tis well done of him to maintain stoutly the truth of his Principle, and to answer, to the utmost of his Power, those † Konig. biblioth. p. 654.

(d) La Mothe le Vayer, de l'immortalité de l'ame pag. m. 139.

(e) Alexander Aphrodisæus.

(g) Hæc sola via inconcussa & stabilis est, cætera verò sunt fluctuantes. Pomponat. de immort. animæ cap. ult. p. m. 125.

(h) Heb. vi. 19.

(a) See the Remark G.

poſſeſſion of thoſe who perſecute the Philoſophers. For he did not queſtion the Immortality of the Soul; on the contrary, he maintained that it was a moſt certain Doctrine, and that he was fully perſwaded of it. He only aſſerted, that the Natural Reaſons alledged for it, are not ſolid and ſatisfactory. Now, tho' a good Uſe (G) may be made of the Opinion he oppoſed, and tho' the Philoſophers, who make thoſe who Object, that Subſtances diſtinct from Matter are, perhaps, of ſuch a Nature as to be able to preſerve their Exiſtence without having any Thought, and that therefore Spirituality is not a neceſſary proof of Immortality: for if the Life of the Soul conſiſts in Thought, 'tis certain, that a total Ceſſation of Thought would be a true Death of the Soul, and therefore the Soul might die without ceaſing to be a Spiritual Subſtance, as Dogs die without ceaſing to be a Corporeal Subſtance: but after all, if he adviſes his Neighbour to relie on the Word of God, he is to be commended for it. Note, that Scaliger the Father, one of the greateſt Wits of his Time, and who was never accounted a Libertin, acknowledged, as Pomponatius did, that 'tis a Matter of Faith to know whether there is a Future Life. It has been always ſuſpected or believed, ſays he (b), but 'tis ſtill a Matter of Diſpute to this very Day.

I ſhall conclude with ſome Paſſages of a Diſpute that laſted ſome Years between a Miniſter of Rotterdam and a Miniſter of Utrecht. The firſt (c) owns, " That tho' he believes that Matter is not capable of " any Senſation or Knowledge, yet he has no diſtinct " Idea and no clear Perception of that Truth, and can- " not prove it to thoſe who deny it. What I perceive " in it, ſays he, is confuſed and undiſtinct...... " (d) Can M. Saurin, and his Rational Collegues ſay " in Conſcience, that they have a clear Perception " and a diſtinct Idea of the Immortality of the " Soul? Are not theſe Propoſitions clear in appea- " rance, that whatever has a Beginning ought to have " an End; that a Being, whoſe Duration is divided " by Moments, Days and Years, cannot be Eternal, " becauſe it would be Infinite, and that Infinite Du- " ration would contain an infinite Number of Mo- " ments, and yet there would be but an Infinite " Number of Days and Years; and therefore there " would be as many Months and Years as Moments, " which is a palpable Abſurdity. An impious Man " ſays, theſe are clear Perceptions, and they ap- " pear to him to be ſo." The Deſign of this Miniſter is ſomewhat like Pomponatius: he will have us to miſtruſt our Reaſon, and to depend on the (e) Authority of God. Here follows his Adverſary's Anſwer: (f) " I anſwer, that I have a clear Per- " ception and a diſtinct Idea of the Immortality of " the Soul. I know that the Soul is a Spiritual and " Indiviſible Subſtance, which can only be deſtroy- " ed by Annihilation: I know that there is a Provi- " dence, a ſupreme Juſtice, a ſupreme Felicity, a " natural Morality, in ſhort, a great many Truths, " which have a neceſſary connexion with the Im- " mortality of the Soul, and conſequently they " would be Chimerical Notions, if the Soul was " Mortal: Muſt a Chriſtian Philoſopher be leſs Or- " thodox than Plato? Muſt he give the preference " to Epicurus, when he draws up a Parallel of the " Ancient Philoſophers? .... (g) Mr. Jurieu " confutes himſelf, when he ſays that thoſe Percep- " tions are clear in appearance: For if they are only " clear in appearance, nothing can be concluded " from them in Favour of thoſe that are really " clear."

I ſhall make ſome ſhort Obſervations upon theſe Words of M. Saurin. I. M. Jurieu does plainly ſuppoſe, that in order to have a diſtinct Idea and a clear Perception of the Spirituality of the Soul, we muſt clearly apprehend, that Matter is not capable of any Senſation or Knowledge. How comes it then, that Mr. Saurin leaves this unanſwered? Should he not have ſaid, that he has a diſtinct Idea and a clear Perception, whereby he knows, that an extended Subſtance cannot have any Senſation. II. 'Tis not ſufficient to know, that the Soul cannot be deſtroyed but by Annihilation; for the ſame may be ſaid of Extenſion, and yet Trees and Beaſts are Mortal. Mr. Saurin ſhould therefore have expreſſed himſelf thus, " I know that the Soul cannot ſubſiſt " without Thought; the diſtinct Idea I have of a " Spiritual and indiviſible Subſtance ſhews me, " that if it were deprived of Thought, it would " ceaſe to exiſt." III. Plato and Epicurus are improperly alledg'd; for he ſuppoſes that Mr. Jurieu is not ſo Orthodox as Plato, and that he prefers the Doctrine of Epicurus to that of the other Ancient Philoſophers; which is falſe. He acknowledges the Immortality of the Soul, but he has not a clear Idea and a diſtinct Perception of it: he means, that his Idea of it is not ſo evident, as that whereby we know the Properties of Numbers, and the connexion of a Local Preſence with the Extenſion of Matter. Do you think that Plato's Idea of the Immortality of the Soul was as clear as that? When a Man declares, that he does as the generality of Mankind do, that is, that his Perſuaſion goes farther than his Evidence, the Charge of Unbelief laid upon him is a falſe Accuſation. He cannot be accuſed of Heterodoxy, ſince he believes what ought to be believed; all that can be ſaid againſt him is, that he does not act like a Philoſopher. IV. The Diſtinction between Ideas apparently and really clear, is inſignificant; for the Clearneſs of Ideas does neceſſarily imply a Relation to our Minds, and is never ſeparated from Appearance; they are always ſtyled or denominated clear from Appearance. An Object may be true, tho' it appears falſe; but an Idea, which appears obſcure, is neither really nor apparently clear; and therefore, if the clear Ideas of the Immortality of the Soul are inconſiſtent with Ideas that are apparently clear, Mr. Jurieu's Objection is good, ſo far is he from confuting himſelf, as his Antagoniſt would have it. V. Mr. Saurin is very much to blame for not anſwering the Objection: he might have confounded Mr. Jurieu in that reſpect, who falſly ſuppoſes that thoſe who ſay, that whatever has a Beginning muſt have an End, go upon this, that an infinite Duration would contain as many Months and Years as Moments. He ſuppoſes that they look upon it as a great Abſurdity. But he ſhould have known that the Atheiſts aſſert, that the Duration of Matter had no Beginning, and will never End: and therefore they don't look upon the neceſſity of admitting an infinite Number of Moments, and an infinite Number of Months, Years and Ages, &c. as a good Reaſon to reject a Doctrine.

(G) Tho' a good uſe may be made of the Opinion he oppoſed, and tho' the Philoſophers who...... enforce the humane Proofs .... ought to be commended.] What I have to ſay upon this, cannot be better, nor more clearly and nobly expreſt than in the Words of a Divine, who was a Follower of Deſcartes, and therefore I ſhall make uſe of no other Commentary upon the Text of this Remark. " (h) 'Tis " ſaid that the Reading of Gaſſendus's Works, led " ſome Perſons at Naples, into the Error of Epicu- " rus, concerning the Immortality of the Soul. It " muſt be confeſt, that the Inſtances of that Phi- " loſopher, againſt the Metaphyſical Meditations of " Deſcartes, may lead young People, not well con- " firmed in the Chriſtian Faith, into that pernicious " Error, becauſe he uſed all his Skill to ſhew, that " Reaſon affords no ſolid Arguments to prevent our " believing, that there is no other Diſtinction be- " tween the Soul and the Body, than between a " thin and ſubtle Body and a groſs one. On the " contrary, I know that ſome pious Perſons are of " Opinion, that what Deſcartes wrote upon that " Subject, ought to be look'd upon as an Effect of " God's Providence, who was willing to put a ſtop " to the Propenſity, which many People of theſe " latter Times ſeem to have for Irreligion, by a " Method ſuited to their Diſpoſition. They are a " ſort of Men, who will admit nothing but what " may be known by the Light of Reaſon; they are " altogether unwilling to begin with Faith; they " look upon moſt of thoſe, who profeſs themſelves " pious Men, as weak minded People; and 'tis im- " poſſible for them to have any Senſe of Religion, " becauſe they are poſſeſt with this Notion (which " in moſt of 'em is an effect of their corrupt Mo- " rals) that whatever is ſaid of another Life, is " only a Fiction, and that the Soul dies with the " Body. It ſeems therefore, that the moſt effectual " Means to remove the greateſt Obſtacle to the Sal- " vation of thoſe Men, and prevent the ſpreading " of that Contagion, was to make 'em ſenſible of " their

---

(b) Thus I render ſomewhat freely theſe Words, Cæterum eſſe alterum eſſe ab hoc eſſe adeo neſcimus ut quotidianis vel ſuſpicionibus vel perſuaſionibus res etiam num ſit controverſa, ſola fide res agatur. Scaliger adverſus Cardanum exercit. 307. c. 33. p. m. 990.

(c) Jurieu, Religion du Latitudinaire p. 393.

(d) Id. ib. p. 394.

(e) Note, that he does not require we ſhould know that Authority by a clear and diſtinct Idea, that is, that we ſhould evidently know that God has revealed ſuch and ſuch things to us.

(f) Saurin, Juſtification of his doctrine p. 457.

(g) Id. ib. p. 458.

(h) Difficultez propoſées à Mr. Steyaert 9. part p. 81. & 82.

make it their Buſineſs to enforce the Humane Reaſons, alledg'd for the Immortality of the Soul, ought to be commended and incouraged; yet ſince they are only Philoſophical “their great Miſtake, in thinking that 'tis a Piece of weakneſs to believe the Immortality of the Soul. Now have we not Reaſon to believe that God, who diſpoſes of his Creatures as he thinks fit, and makes humane Means ſubſervient to his Providence, deſign'd to reclaim thoſe Unbelievers, by forcing them to miſtruſt the Certainty of their Notions, when he raiſed a Man ſo well qualified to work upon 'em, a Man who had an extraordinary Penetration to dive into the moſt abſtracted Sciences, who wholly applied himſelf to Philoſophy, who openly profeſs'd himſelf free from all Prejudices, and by that very thing found out a way to convince the moſt incredulous, (if they will but open their Eyes to ſee the Light) that nothing can be more contrary to Reaſon, than to aſſert, that the Soul periſhes with the Body. But how did he make it appear? By laying down from clear Principles, and ſuch as are only grounded on Natural Notions, which Men of Senſe cannot but acknowledge, That the Soul and the Body, that is, what thinks and what is extended, are two Subſtances wholly diſtinct, ſo that 'tis impoſſible that Extenſion ſhould be a Mode of a thinking Subſtance, and Thought a Mode of an extended one. This being well proved, (as 'tis in Deſcartes's Meditations) no Libertin, if he has any Juſtneſs of Thought, can remain convinced, that the Soul dies with the Body. For, &c. (a).„

This long Paſſage of Mr. Arnauld ſhews what Advantage may accrue to Religion from the Hypotheſis oppoſed by Pomponatius: it may be made uſe of againſt ſome Libertins, who will ſee before they believe, and who deſpiſe the obſcure Arguments alledged by Divines. Nothing can more effectually reclaim thoſe Men, than to convince 'em of the Immortality of the Soul; 'tis an Inlet to the right Way, and this firſt Step may be attended with happy Conſequences. Pomponatius could not work upon 'em in that manner, he would rather have confirmed them in their Error, and conſequently his Hypotheſis is more prejudicial than advantageous in order to convert that ſort of Men; and indeed he would be more praiſe-worthy, if, inſtead of giving himſelf ſo much trouble to examin the Arguments of the Peripateticks, he had endeavoured to find out better Proofs of the Immortality of the Soul, than thoſe which ſeem'd weak to him. 'Tis to be obſerved, that Mr. Arnauld alledges this particular Fact concerning Deſcartes and Gaſſendus, to ſhew that the Inquiſitors of Rome are no diſcerning Men. “The Cenſors of Rome, ſays he (b), little minded the Advantage of Religion, when they put into their Index that Book of Deſcartes, wherein he proves the Immortality of the Soul by Philoſophical Arguments, more ſolidly than was ever done; and when they put into it none of Gaſſendus's Works, nor even that wherein he endeavoured might and main, to confute thoſe Arguments: which is to deprive thoſe, who have no Faith, of all humane Means to free themſelves from their Prejudices againſt that important Truth. Is it not to permit the ſwallowing of the Poyſon, and hinder the taking of the Antidote? This they have done again, by putting into the Index another piece of Deſcartes concerning the ſame Subject. For one of his Followers, who forſook him as to his Metaphyſical Notions, having maintain'd in a Placart, that, were it not for Revelation, one might believe, that Thinking is only a modification of Matter; Deſcartes thought himſelf obliged to confute ſuch a dangerous Doctrine, and ſhew the Abſurdity of it; and yet this Book is prohibited in the Index with this Title, Notæ in programma quoddam ſub finem Anni 1654. in Belgio editum; without condemning the Placart at the ſame time. Once more, this is to permit the poyſoning of one's ſelf, and at the ſame time to forbid the uſe of a Counter-poyſon.„

I have quoted in the Remark C an Author, whoſe Cenſure upon Pomponatius wants ſome reſtriction. Theſe are his Words. “(c) Whereby Pomponatius carried things too far, and did not a little favour the Opinions and Inclinations of the Libertins. Nay, one can hardly forbear calling him an inſolent Man, for ſaying, that whoever goes about to prove the Immortality of the Soul by Philoſophical Arguments, does not deſerve the Name of a Chriſtian; for on the contrary, there is nothing more proper to diſpoſe the Pagans to hearken to the Goſpel, than to prove beforehand, that Reaſon teaches us the Immortality of the Soul, and that therefore Men muſt endeavour to make themſelves Happy after this Life. Whereas, nothing would more effectually prevent the Converſion of Idolaters and Libertins, than their believing that the Soul is Mortal, according to the Light of Reaſon (d) .... (e) Theſe are the (f) Words that have been cenſured, for it is ſo far from being true, that whoever undertakes to prove the Immortality of the Soul, does a thing unworthy of a Chriſtian, that on the contrary, nothing is more proper to confirm him in the Truth of his Religion, than the Agreement of Reaſon and Revelation, tho' the Doctrines reveal'd ought to keep the firſt Rank. I was therefore in the right to ſay, that Pomponatius was guilty of great Inſolence, in aſſerting that a Man, who alledges any Arguments beſides thoſe taken from Revelation, to prove the Immortality of the Soul, does a thing unworthy of a Chriſtian.„

I will examine this Cenſure. The Words of Pomponatius, as they are in Mr. le Noble's Book, may be taken in this Senſe, that a Chriſtian, who endeavours to ſhew that both Reaſon and Revelation teach the Immortality of the Soul, does a thing prejudicial to Faith, and makes himſelf unworthy of the Name he bears. But I think that thoſe Words, in Pomponatius's Book, ſignifie, that a Chriſtian who has recourſe to any Arguments beſides God's Authority, becauſe Faith, without the help of the Light of Nature, is not ſufficient to remove his Uncertainty, does an Injury to Revelation, and acts contrary to the Principles of a true Chriſtian. Such is my Conjecture about the true Senſe of Pomponatius's Words: Having not his Apologies by me, I cannot be poſitive about it, and muſt be contented with Probability. What was the State of the Queſtion between him and his Adverſaries? It was, whether he deſerved to be accounted an Heretical and Impious Man, becauſe he ſaid, that the Philoſophical Reaſons alledged for the Immortality of the Soul, are not ſolid Proofs, and that this Doctrine cannot be well proved but by Revelation. The Queſtion was not therefore to know what Judgment ought to be made of thoſe, who undertake to reclaim the Libertins fond of Lucretius, and full of Contempt for the Word of God. The Queſtion was not to know, whether thoſe who alledge Philoſophical Arguments againſt the Unbelievers, and endeavour to reclaim them by that Method, the only one that can work upon 'em, do an injury to Faith, and make themſelves unworthy of the Name of a Chriſtian. The Queſtion was about thoſe Chriſtians, who have recourſe to the Light of Nature for their own uſe, and to ſupply their perſonal wants, a ſort of wavering Men, who know not whether they ought to prefer Revelation to Reaſon, or at leaſt, don't relie on God's Authority, unleſs it be confirm'd by Philoſophical Arguments. Whoever ſays, that ſuch Men are injurious to Faith, and don't act like Chriſtians, does not make a wrong Judgment of 'em, and does not deſerve the Cenſure I examine in this Place; for, properly ſpeaking, thoſe Men are not yet Chriſtians, they offer to believe the Doctrine of future Rewards and Puniſhments, provided you give 'em better Proof than thoſe of the Goſpel. God's Authority is not ſufficient to them, they will have the Promiſes of the Scripture to be confirm'd by the Light of Reaſon, otherwiſe they give no Credit to them. If the thing be as I fancy it is, all my Readers will own that Pomponatius was cenſured without Reaſon: but the Cenſure paſt upon him would be well grounded in the firſt Senſe above-mention'd.

I don't deny that he might have been told, that he was not a fit Man to convert thoſe who believe the Mortality of the Soul, and look upon the Goſpel as a meer humane Book, and that therefore his Philoſophy was not ſo uſeful as that of his Adverſaries. Had he been ſincere, he would have own'd this, and acknowledged, that unleſs he imitated thoſe Phyſicians, who, to perſuade their Patients to take a Drug, make 'em believe that there is

(a) Mr. Arnauld adds here a ſhort and good Explication of what he intended to prove.

(b) Difficultez à Monſieur Steyaert, ub. ſup. p. 85.

(c) That is, what Pomponatius ſays, that nothing can be more injurious to Faith than to prove it by natural Arguments.

(d) Le Noble, Tableau des philoſophes tom. 2. p. 84, 85.

(e) Id. ib. p. 85.

(f) That is, thoſe that are to be ſeen above in the Rem. C at the end of Mr. le Noble's Quotation.

loſophical Arguments, every Body ought to be allowed to diſpute about 'em, and to ſay what he thinks of 'em. The Anſwer he made to this Objection, that the Doctrine of the Mortality of the Soul (H) would induce Men to all manner of Crimes, is remarkable. I don't know whether we ought to believe what ſome Authors ſay, that this Work was condemned (I) to be burnt by the Venetians, and diſowned by the Author himſelf. One cannot excuſe the Boldneſs (K) of a Lutheran Civilian, who maintains, that this Philoſopher read publick Lectures againſt the Immortality of the Soul, and that he was an infamous Magician, who publiſh'd ſome impious things about the occult Virtue of Sorcery and Imagination. To more Virtue in it than there is, he could not have maintain'd againſt impious Men, that the Mortality of the Soul is certainly contrary to the Light of Reaſon. Perhaps he would not have diſapproved the Charitable Method of the Philoſophers, who ſhould imitate thoſe Phyſicians; he would have been contented to ſay, that he was rather for a perfect Sincerity; but after all, he might have told his Adverſaries, that as to the Reſurrection, and ſome other Doctrines, they were obliged to deal with impious Men, as he would have done as to the Doctrine of the Immortality of the Soul.

(H) The Doctrine of the Immortality of the Soul would induce Men to all manner of Crimes.] This is the laſt thing that Pomponatius objected to himſelf. His Anſwer is, (a) that ſince Man does naturally deſire to be Happy, and hates Miſery, it is enough, in order to make an honeſt Man of him, to ſhew him that the Happineſs of our Lives conſiſts in the Practice of Virtue, and Miſery in the Practice of Vice. He adds, that thoſe who teach the Mortality of the Soul make way for the moſt perfect Virtue, which is practiſed without Hopes of Reward, or fear of Puniſhment. (b) Quare perfectius aſſerentes animam mortalem melius videntur ſalvare rationem virtutis quàm aſſerentes ipſam immortalem, ſpes namque premii, & pœnæ timor, videntur ſervilitatem quandam importare, quæ rationi virtutis contrariatur. He ſays alſo, that bruti'h People ought to be told that their Souls are Immortal, and that 'tis likely ſome Authors taught it without believing it, in order to curb the Licentiouſneſs of that ſort of Men. (c) Exiſtimandum eſt multos viros ſenſiſſe animam mortalem, qui tamen ſcripſerunt ipſam eſſe immortalem: ſed hoc feciſſe ex pronitate virorum ad malum, qui parùm, aut nihil habent de intellectu, bonaque animi non cognoſcentes, nec amantes, tantùm corporalibus incumbunt: Quare hujuſmodi ingeniis neceſſe eſt eos ſanare, ſicut & medicus ad ægrum, & nutrix ad puerum ratione carentem ſe habent. Theſe Obſervations do not remove the Difficulty, and are but weak Solutions. What follows is more reaſonable, being grounded upon Experience. He ſays, that many Knaves and profligate Men believe the Immortality of the Soul, and that many good Men did not believe it. (d) Neque univerſaliter viri impuri ponunt mortalitatem, neque univerſaliter temperati immortalitatem: Nam manifeſtè videmus multos pravos homines credere, verùm ex paſſionibus ſeduci, multos etiam viros ſanctos & juſtos ſcimus mortalitatem animarum poſuiſſe. Plato namque 1. de repub. dicit Simonidem Poëtam virum divinum & optimum fuiſſe, qui tamen eam mortalem aſſeverat: Homerus quoque ut Ariſtoteles 2. de anima refert, exiſtimavit ſenſum ab intellectu non differre: quæ autem fuerit Homeri dignitas quis ignorat? Hippoc. quoque & Galen. viri doctiſſimi & optimi hujus perhibentur opinionis; Alexander Aphrodiſæus, magnus Alfarabius, Abubacher, Avempace, ex noſtratibus quoque Plinius Secundus, Seneca, innumerique alii hoc ſenſere; Seneca namque lib. 7. Epiſtolarum ad Lucilium epiſt. 54. quæ incipit, Longum mihi comitatum dederat mala valetudo, manifeſtiuſque in de conſolatione ad Martiam affirmat, ipſam eſſe mortalem: multoſque alios ſtudioſos & viros doctiſſimos (e) connumerat ejuſdem opinionis fuiſſe.

(I) Was condemned to be burnt by the Venetians, and diſowned by the Author himſelf.] Theophilus Raynaud ſays ſo. (f) Venetos illud opus addixiſſe ignibus, nec de immortalitate ſed de mortalitate animæ fuiſſe inſcribendum tradit Sylveſter lib. 5. de Strigimagis cap. 5. expoſtulans quod à ſe approbatum eum librum dixiſſet Pomponatius, quod negat ſe unquam cogitaſſe. He had been ſaying, that Pomponatius himſelf condemned his own Book, but that the Reaſons which moved him to it are variouſly reported, ſome aſcribing it to a Deſire of ſecuring his Reputation, others pretending that he did it to pleaſe his Friends, and others out of a Principle of Conſcience. (g) Pomponatius, mutata mente, opus ſuum de eo argumento improbaſſe dicitur, variantibus ſententiis, an id amicorum precibus dederit, an famæ ſuæ ac nomini caverit, an ex animo audierit Eccleſiam, & palinodiam cecinerit, ut conſcientiæ faceret ſatis. He had been ſaying alſo, that all the Books, wherein 'tis affirmed that the Immortality of the Soul cannot be proved by Philoſophical Arguments, (h) ought to be deſtroyed; for he pretends they make way for an abſolute negation of that Immortality. This Aſſertion of his is not ſo equitable, as what he owns that the Philoſophers, who were condemn'd by a Biſhop of Paris in the Year 1227, and by Leo X. in the Council of Lateran, were not ſo abſurd as to maintain, that the Soul is Immortal and Mortal abſolutely ſpeaking, Immortal according to Divinity, and Mortal according to Philoſophy. He explains the true Senſe of their Doctrine: they abſolutely acknowledged the Immortality of the Soul on account of Revelation, without which they had believed it to be Mortal. Animam ergo abſolutè videntur agnoviſſe immortalem, quod ita aperte ferant fidei ſcita; quamvis niſi de animæ rationalis perpetuatione fide doceremur, ſolaque naturali ratione conſulta, negaturi fuiſſent immortalitatem. This he acknowledges particularly in favour of Pomponatius, and quotes a Book wherein this Reſtriction was proved, viz. the Book which Cardinal Contarini, a Scholar of that Philoſopher, wrote againſt his Maſter. (i) Non abſolutè ac ſimpliciter, mortalem animam cenſuiſſe videtur (Pomponatius) ſed duntaxat ſi ratio nuda conſuleretur, ut liquet ex opere Contareni Cardinalis, de immortalitate, conſcripto adverſus Pomponatium, ipſius quondam Contareni in Philoſophicis Magiſtrum. Nec aliud cenſuerim voluiſſe illos ejuſdem ævi Philoſophiſtros, damnatos à Lateranenſi Concilio ſub Leone X. & alios longè antè à Stephano Pariſienſi Epiſcopo, anno 1277, vel potiùs 1227, in reſcripto quod extat tomo 5. Bibl. Margarini pag. 1319. æquè damnatos, quod aſſererent, animam rationalem, ſecundùm fidem eſſe immortalem; at ſecundùm Philoſophiam, eſſe mortalem. Boccalini, according to his uſual Cuſtom, jeſts upon this Diſtinction of Pomponatius. (k) He ſuppoſes 1. That this impious Man being condemned to be burnt by Apollo, proteſted, that he believed the Mortality of the Soul only as a Philoſopher. 2. That Apollo, having regard to that Proteſtation, ordered the Executioner to hang him only as a Philoſopher.

We have ſeen above (l) how his Book was uſed, and that it was not burnt.

(K) The Boldneſs of a Lutheran Civilian.] His Name is Godelman: Theſe are his Words. (m) Petrus Pomponatius Mantuanus philoſophus & Epicureiſmi defenſor magnuſque nefarius in Academiis Italiæ publicè contra animæ immortalitatem diſputavit: ſcripſit de fato & de incantatione libros, in quibus de verborum magicorum, imaginum, characterum, & imaginationis occulta poteſtate impiè ſatis diſputavit. In the 1. place, 'tis not true that Pomponatius did publickly Diſpute againſt the Immortality of the Soul in the Univerſities of Italy. Such a thing cannot be charged upon him but by Virtue of the Sophiſm, à dicto ſecundum quid ad dictum ſimpliciter. He maintain'd, that Ariſtotle's Hypotheſis afforded no Proof for the Immortality of the Soul, and he anſwered all the Arguments of thoſe, who pretended to prove by the Doctrine of that Philoſopher, that our Souls are Immortal; but he did not abſolutely maintain the Mortality of the Soul. 'Tis plain therefore, that this Lutheran is neither exact nor equitable. 2. A good Author will not ſay that Pomponatius, who was a notorious Magician, denied the Immortality of the Soul. Men are ſo fully perſuaded, that if there are any Devils, the Soul is Immortal, and commonly ſuppoſe ſuch a connexion between thoſe two Doctrines, that whoever is not willing to be accounted Extravagant, will never charge any Body with Epicureiſm and Magick, without making ſome Reflections upon ſuch a Paradox. He muſt expect, that the Readers will be ſurprized at it, and that ſuch

(a) Pomponat. ub. ſup. c. 14. p. 120.

(b) Id. ib. p. 121.

(c) Id. ib. p. 120.

(d) Id. ib. p. 119.

(e) It is certain that Seneca plainly lays down the Mortality of the Soul in thoſe two places; but I have not obſerved that he gives a Liſt of thoſe who were of that Opinion.

(f) Theoph. Raynaudus de malis & bonis libris n. 43. p. m. 26.

(g) Id. ib.

(h) Iste libri in doctrina reprobe fermen vitiati fu ſtione digni ha habet. Id. ib.

(i) Id. ib. n. 42. p. 25, 26.

(k) Bocca lin. Rag gua li di Parnaſ centur. 1. c. 90. p. m. 30

(l) In the Rem. C. lett.

(m) Godel mannus l. 1. c. 8. de Mag apud Ch Christian Fromma num de Faſcinati one lib. 1. part 2. ſect. 3. c. p. m. 32

To conclude, he was so bent upon resolving Difficulties, that he minded neither Sleep, nor Eating, nor Drinking, nor Spitting; it made him almost Mad, and ridiculous to every Body. He himself (L) informs us of these Particulars.

PONCET (Maurice) Doctor * of Divinity in the University of Paris, † Profest Benedictin in the Abbey of St. Pere at Melun, where he was born, and Curate of St. ASPAIS in the same Town, and then of St. Peter des Arsis at Paris, was one of the famous Preachers of the XVI. Century. He preached with the greatest Boldness against the Disorders of the Court of Henry III. We have seen α above that he was carried to Melun for some Invectives he made from the Pulpit the 26th of March 1583, against a new Fraternity of Penitents instituted by that King. The Passage I have quoted out of Peter Matthieu, is to be found in the same Terms in the Journal of Henry III, with the Answer (A) mentioned in this Article, which Poncet is said to have made to the Duke of Epernon. Others say, he made it to the (B) Duke of Joyeuse at γ another Time; which seems to me (C) more likely. Poncet was afraid of δ being confin'd to the Castle of Loches, as he had been threatned some time before; and therefore he was well pleased when he was only confin'd to St. Pere's Abbey at Melun. He did not continue long under such a Disgrace; for he ξ had leave to return to Paris, and to be there Curate of St. Peter des Arsis: but he preached still with his usual Boldness, and persisted in that Resolution till his last Breath. He died the 23d of November 1586 ‡. He (D) publish'd something, and

* Du Verdier Vau Privas, Bib. Franc. p. 882.

† Rouillard, Antiquitez de Melun p. 527.

α In the Rem. N. of the Art. Henry III.

γ When the D. of Joyeuse's Wedding was celebrated.

δ Rouillard ub. sup.

ξ Id. ib. p. 528.

‡ Id. ib.

such a Combination will puzzle and confound 'em. An Author, who does not foresee such a thing, must needs be very stupid; and if he foresees it without giving himself the trouble to clear that Difficulty, he knows but little what he does. We may therefore conclude, that Godelman is very much to blame. In the 3. place, he confutes himself; for he complains of a Tract of Pomponatius, wherein all the Effects commonly ascribed to Magick, or to a Pact with the Devils, are ascribed to other Causes; and therefore in the same Period he accuses him of Magick, and of having writ a Book against the Existence of Magick. An Author, who writes in such a manner, is inexcusable, when he does not make such an Observation as this: Pomponatius was a Cheat; he believed and practised Magick, but he wrote against it, for fear of being known to be a Magician.

(L) He himself informs us, &c.] Being not able to reconcile some Maxims of Aristotle with Free-Will, he cries out, This is what vexes me, this is what keeps me from Sleeping, and makes me Mad. (a) Ista sunt quæ me premunt, quæ me angustant, quæ me insomnem & insanum reddunt. He says, that like another Prometheus fastened to Mount Caucasus, he is continually tormented with Grief. (b) Perpetuis curis & cogitationibus rodi, non sitire, non famescere, non dormire, non comedere, non expuere, ab omnibus irrideri. He would be more excusable, if the cause of his Anguish was not so unreasonable; but for a Man to vex and torment himself, in order to reconcile another Man with Reason, is a thing that cannot be excused. If a Divine endeavours, tho' he should lose his Health, and even his Life by it, to reconcile the Scripture to Truth, when they seem to disagree, it is a commendable and heroical Action; there being such an Agreement, one may reasonably hope to find it out. But how can any Body flatter himself with such hopes, with respect to the Opinions of a private Man subject to Error, and who drinks it as Fishes drink Water?

(A) The Answer .... which Poncet is said to have made to the Duke of Epernon.] Poncet having been arrested, that Duke went to see him, (b) and told him smiling, " Master, they say you make " People to laugh at your Sermons; which is very " wrong, for a Preacher ought to edifie his Hearers, " and not make 'em laugh. Sir, replied Poncet, I " would have you know that I preach nothing but " the Word of God, and that no Body comes to " my Sermons to laugh, unless they be wicked and " atheistical People: and truly, I never made so " many to laugh as you made cry. A bold An" swer for a Monk to a Lord of that Quality, and it " was found very much to the purpose. „

(B) Others say that he made it to the Duke of Joyeuse at another Time.] Here follows a Passage, wherein le Laboureur mentions the same thing, and adds a Reflection to it as good as the Repartee of our Benedictin. " (c) At that Time (d) there were " some bold Preachers, who did not except from " the number of Sins the cruel or loose Maxims " of the Cabinet. Dr. Poncet, among others, an " eloquent and very zealous Man, boldly compre" hended Kings and Great Men within the Extent " of his Mission; and Brantome says, that one Day " he grew so hot about the Political Axiom, Who " knows not how to Dissemble, knows not how to Reign, " that he made no scruple to assert, They were the " Words of a downright Atheist, and the direct Way " for Kings and Princes to go to the Devil, and turn " Tyrants. He was, adds Brantome, one of the bold" est Preachers that ever got into a Pulpit. One Day " the Duke of Joyeuse, when his Wedding was cele" brated with an extraordinary Pomp and great Char" ges, meeting him in the Street, told him, Mr. Pon" cet, I never knew you before, and am glad to meet " you now; for I have often heard of you, and that " you make People to laugh at your Sermons. Poncet " answered him as coldly as the other spoke to him an" grily. Sir, said he, 'tis not improper for me to " make 'em to laugh, since you make 'em to cry so much, " by reason of the great Charges of your noble Wedding, " which the People have been at. The Duke was " forced to go away, tho' he had a great mind to strike " him; but if he had touched him never so little, the " People, who are fond of such bold Preachers, and " were then gathering, would have done some scanda" lous thing to him and his Retinue; for that Monk " was very well belov'd at Paris. This was a deadly " Hit, whereby the Duke of Joyeuse learn'd, that an " honest Priest, who prefers the Publick Interest to " his own, is like an unruly Horse, whom the " brightness of Grandure makes more furious, and " who ought to be cautiously approach'd, for fear " he should kick. Every Body laugh'd at it, and " the Duke's best Friends, who pitied him, blam'd " him for having thus engag'd a Monk in the Streets, " having so many Dignitaries at his Disposal, who " would have taken it as an Honour to be jested " upon by him, and promised themselves some Ad" vantage by it. „

(C) Which seems to me more likely.] For 'tis agreed, that being taken up he was afraid of being sent to Loches, as he had been threatn'd with. Would a Man, who was under such an Apprehension, as he himself confess (e), have made such a blunt and disobliging Answer to the Favourite of his Prince? It is a great deal more probable that he made it, when he enjoyed a full Liberty, and in the middle of a Street, where he knew the Inhabitants of Paris would have boldly repell'd any Insult offered to him. We ought therefore to keep to Brantome's Account, and at the same time observe, how carelesly the Memory of such Events is preserved by Historians, and consequently how they differ in their Accounts of 'em.

(D) He published something.] Three Books concerning Ecclesiastical Oration by way of Contemplation, Paris 1568. in 8o. A Remonstrance to the French Nobility, concerning the Happiness which the King procures to his People, and how he ought to be instructed to Govern them well, Paris 1572. in 8o. A Funeral Oration pronounced the 31st of August 1574, in the Church of Brecy le Buisson, at the Burial of Messire Eustace de Conflans, Viscount d'Aulchy, Paris 1574. in 8o. A Discourse concerning the Advice given to Messire Peter de Gondy, Bishop of Paris, about the Proposal made by him to the Divines, concerning the Translation of the

(a) Pomponat. de fato l. 3. c. 7.

(b) Id. ib.

(b) Journal de Henry III. ad ann. 1583. p. m. 67. See also Peter Matthieu Hist. des derniers troubles p. 15.

(c) Le Laboureur addit. aux Memoires de Castelnau tom. 2. p. 58, 59.

(d) That is, under the Reign of Henry III.

(e) See the Antiquitez de Melun, p. 527.

and 'tis very likely his way of preaching was (E) ſomewhat Comical, and like that which Father Andrew was ſo fond of in the next Century.

PONTIUS (Conſtantin), burnt in Effigie at Seville in 1559, was called Conſtantin de la Fuente, in Latin Conſtantinus Fontius. Some Body took one Letter for another, a P inſtead of an F, which is the Reaſon why this Doctor is much more known by the Name of Conſtantin (A) Pontius, which does not belong to him, than by his true Name. However it be, he was a Man of great Merit, Doctor of † Divinity, Canon of Seville, and Preacher to Charles V. He followed Philip II. into England; and doubtleſs it was in that Country, that he reliſh'd the Doctrine of the Proteſtants, for which he was apprehended by the Inquiſition, and condemn'd to be burnt. He did not live till the Auto de fe, on which he was to be expoſed to the Publick View. The Spaniſh Hiſtorians do commonly ſay that he kill'd himſelf; others will have it, that he died of Sickneſs; but 'tis agreed on all Hands, that the Inquiſition produced an Effigies, which repreſented him, and was burnt on the Day * of the Auto de fe. Many ſay, that he was Confeſſor to Charles V. and that he attended him on his Death-bed to the laſt Breath; but I have ſhewed in another Place, that he was only his Preacher, and that he was impriſoned before the Death of that Emperor. He wrote (B) ſome Books, which the Spaniſh Inquiſition put into the Index without any Exception ‖: He is mention'd in the Martyrology of the (C) Proteſtants.

Beza †,

Bible into the Vulgar Language, Paris 1578, in 8o. Meditations familieres ſur l'hiſtoire de l'incarnation, Rheims 1574 in 8o. (f).

(E) That his way of Preaching was ſomewhat Comical.] I have three Reaſons to think ſo: for 1. The Words he is ſaid to have ſpoke in his Sermon, that was the occation of his Confinement, are far from being grave. That Petit Tendron, (young Laſs) that was kept ready for the revelling of the Penitents, is very Comical. 2. 'Tis agreed on all hands, that the Favourite, who received ſuch a ſharp Anſwer from Poncet, cenſured him for making his Hearers laugh. Laſtly, James Roulliard his Countryman and Panegyriſt, wards off the Blow in ſuch a manner, as makes me think, that he deſign'd to Anſwer thoſe who found fault with Poncet for acting the part of a Jeſter in the Pulpit. "Beſides "his Learning and Piety, known to every Body, "they are Roulliard's (a) Words, he had this parti"cular Talent, that he freely preached againſt the "Vices of his Age, preferring the Truth of the "Word of God before the Threatnings of Great "Men, and the daily Danger of his Life. 'Tis ſaid "he had ſuch a pleaſant Delivery, that what the "moſt unjudicious laugh'd at, was look'd upon by "the Wiſeſt as a great Piece of Art, that the Sharp"neſs of his Cenſures might go down the better, "and that he might the longer keep up his Mini"ſtry, which was ſo uſeful to the Church: where"as, had it not been for that, the furious Courti"ers, or ſome ſilly People would have endeavoured "to undo him.„ You ſee this Advocate dares not deny, that Poncet's Sermons made People laugh. How then can one doubt that his Sermons were ſomewhat Comical? Had he boldly, but gravely, cenſured the Diſorders of the Court, the Pleaſure he would have afforded his Hearers, tho' never ſo great, had never made any Body laugh.

(A) By the Name of Conſtantin Pontius.] Thuanus calls him ſo, and ſo does Father Paul (c), who was not reproved for it by Pallavicini, tho' he took notice of ſome of his Miſtakes concerning that Spaniard.

(B) He wrote ſome Books.] A Summary of the Chriſtian Doctrine, printed in Spaniſh at Antwerp. Six Sermons on the firſt Pſalm of David, printed in the ſame Language, and at the ſame Place in (d) 1556. A large Catechiſm. The Confeſſion of a Sinner. Some Commentaries on the Proverbs, the Eccleſiaſtes, the Song of Songs, and Job. Don Nicolas (e) Antonio ſeems to believe, that the Sermons were not made on the 1ſt Pſalm, but on the 50th, and that they are the ſame with the Confeſſion of a Sinner; but he is miſtaken: that Confeſſion is a Prayer ſomewhat ſhorter than a Sermon, it is in the Proteſtant Martyrology (f).

(C) He is mention'd in the Martyrology of the Proteſtants.] We find there that Egidius, Conſtantin Fontius and Varquias were the firſt, who diſcovered the Darkneſs of Spain almoſt at the ſame time(g). They were call'd the Three Pillars of Truth: they preached at Seville with great Zeal and Succeſs. Egidius was nominated by Charles V. to the Biſhoprick of (h) Tortona; but the Inquiſitors were ſo vexed at it, that, to prevent his being made a Prelate, they ſeverely perſecuted him for a long time. During that Perſecution Fontius was in the Low-Countries Preacher and (i) Confeſſor to Charles V. "(k) Being "returned to Seville, after the Death of Egidius, he "reſumed his Office with great Courage; and the "Affection the People had for him was ſtill the "ſame. Notwithſtanding the Weakneſs of his "Body, he continued to diſcharge the Duties of "his Office, keeping up himſelf with the uſual "Remedies God gives us to recover the Health and "Strength of the Body. He had ſeveral Encoun"ters with the Prieſts and Monks, and with Waldes "Archbiſhop of Seville, and Preſident of the In"quiſition. And tho' his Enemies were furiouſly "exaſperated againſt him, yet he ſo dexterouſly "warded off all their Blows, that they could not "bring him to make an open Confeſſion of his "Faith, that they might have a better hold of him. "But at length God prevailed upon him in the fol"lowing manner to make a full Declaration of his "Truth, putting a ſtop to all his Subtleties and "Shifts, which he had made uſe of againſt his "Conſcience.„ The Diſcovery was made by his Books coming into the Hands of the Inquiſitors, notwithſtanding the great Care he had taken to conceal them. "(l) They found among other Books, "a large one written with his own Hand, wherein "he treated of the following Doctrines, as the In"quiſitors declared by their Sentence, which was "publickly pronounced, viz. Of the State of the "Church; of the True Church, and the Church of "the Pope, whom he call'd Anti-Chriſt; of the "Sacrament of the Euchariſt, and the Invention "of the Maſs, wherewith he ſaid the World was "bewitch'd, by reaſon of their Ignorance of the "Holy Scripture; of Man's Juſtification; of Pur"gatory, which he call'd a Monkiſh Invention to "feed the Belly; of the Pope's Bulls and Indul"gences; of the Merit of good Works; of Con"feſſion, and ſeveral other Points. That Book be"ing produced, the Inquiſitors ask'd him whether "it was his own Hand-Writing: he anſwered them "without any Tergiverſation, that the whole Book "was written with his own Hand, and maintain'd "the Truth of what was contain'd in it, ſaying, "you need not take further pains to look for Evi"dence againſt me, you have an ample Declaration "of my Faith: deal with me as you'll think fit. "He continued afterwards two Years in Priſon, "where he fell ſick by reaſon of his bad Diet, (tho' "he was little concern'd for it) and of the Grief "he conceived for the diſperſion of the Church, "and alſo becauſe the Sun made his Priſon as hot "as a Furnace; ſo that at laſt, a Looſeneſs, attend"ed with the Gripes, occaſion'd his Death . . . . . . "His Enemies ſpread a Report that he had made "away with himſelf, by cutting one of his Veins "with a piece of Glaſs, to avoid the ignominious "Puniſhment he was to undergo. The Children "ſung Songs about it, which had been made by the "Members of the Inquiſition. On the Day appoint"ed for the Triumph, his dead Body was taken "up, covered with Straw, like a Phantom, and "cloathed, and then it was ſet on a Chair, hold"ing up one Hand, and laying the other upon

the

---

† Nicol. Antonii, Biblioth. Script. Hiſp. tom. 1. p. 196.

* See Nicol. Antonii ib.

‖ Conſtantinus de la Fuente Autor condenado: todas ſus obras en qualquier lengua, y eſpecialmente la Confeſſion del Pecador. Ind. libr. prohib. p. m. 225.

(f) Taken from du Verdier Vau-Privas Bibl. Franc. p. 852.

(a) Pag. 627. of the Antiquitez de Melun.

(c) Hiſt. du Concile de Trente l. 5. p. 425. edit. 1629. in 4o.

(d) Epit. Biblioth. Geſner.

(e) Bibliot. Script. Hiſp. tom. 1. p. 196.

(f) In the 8*th Book fol.* 507. verſo & ſeq.

(g) Hiſtoire des Martyrs Book 8. fol. 505. verſo, edit. 1582. in fol.

(h) It ſhould be Tortoſa.

(i) The Spaniſh Hiſtorians deny that he was Confeſſor. See the Rem. R of the Art. Charles V.

(k) Hiſt. des Martyrs fol. 505. verſo.

(l) Ibid. fol. 505.

Rabus, who calls him Constantin Pontius, and who says that he was for a long time Confessor to Charles V. did not well remember the Circumstances he had read in that Martyrology. I have read a Latin Discourse † concerning the Life and Death of that Spaniard, wherein he is call'd Constantinus Pontius. The Publisher of that Discourse says, that it was written by Reginaldus Gonsalvius Montanus Hispanus. I find in it that Pontius had been a loose Man in (D) his Youth, but that he mended his Life, and took a right Course, tho' he was still faulty in one thing, that was a kind of a Blot; for being a Man of a very lively Wit, he gave himself too much Liberty in his Jests. Many of his witty Sayings went about. His sharpest Railleries were commonly levell'd at the Hypocrites and sorry Preachers of their Time. He perfectly learn'd, without any Master, Latin, Greek, and Hebrew, and whatever is necessary to make a good Preacher. He was Master of all the Beauties of his Mother-Tongue, and preached so eloquently, that an incredible number of Hearers flock'd to his Sermons *. People had much ado to find any convenient Place three or four Hours before he came into the Pulpit. He was free from Avarice and Ambition, and refused a rich Canonship that was offered him at Toledo: his Refusal was attended (E) with a Jest. After the Death of Doctor § Giles, being appointed, Refusal to Preach in the Cathedral, he did it before he had recovered his Health; but he happened to be so weak in the middle of his Sermon, that he was obliged to do a thing (F) which had never been seen before. The Director of the House of Doctrine having founded there a Lecture of Divinity; our Constantin was charged with it, (G) and performed it very well ‡. You'll see in the Remark C the Catastrophe

“ the Chair, as artificially as such a thing could be “ contrived.”

The Latin Author quoted by me in the following Remarks, does also acknowledge that Pontius eluded the Proceedings of the Inquisition, by his cunning Answers; but that he at last gave over all his Subterfuges, when they shewed him his Manuscript. (a) Raptus ad Inquisitoriam arcem, etsi ex controversiis præcedentibus omnium adversariorum animos habebat vehementer exulceratos, tamen acutissimis suis responsis omnes eorum cavillos facilè, more suo, eludens, ad apertam fidei confessionem, ex qua periculum, ut ipsi exoptabant, crearetur, trahi non poterat: atque evasisset tandem, ut sæpè anteà, ipsorum manus, ni mirabili quadam Providentia sua artificio rotundam confessionem veritatis suæ, Deus ab invito & modis omnibus tergiversante extorsisset. ..... (b) Viso hoc libro Constantinus interrogatus ab Inquisitoribus, an propriam manum agnosceret, quum per multos dies, conquisitis undique subterfugiis, conatus illorum elusisset, agnoscens porro Dei voluntatem, quæ omnem tergiversandi amplius occasionem sibi præcidisset, agnosco (inquit) manum meam, ac proinde fateor, me ista omnia scripsisse, quæ & vera esse ingenuè profiteor.

(D) Had been a loose Man in his Youth.] Here are the Words of the Latin Author: (c) Juventutem quidem transegit pro studiosorum juvenum libera educatione non admodum laudatam, sed quæ, quo minùs, quod ætatis subsequutum est, quàm laudatissimum extiterit, haud impedimento fuerit. Probatos enim satis mores, ut erat ingenio mirè festivo, & in jocis peracuto, una subinde jocandi licentia vel in provectiore ætate corrumpebat. Perhaps, the Faults of his Youth had never been objected to him, had he not had extraordinary Gifts, which exposed him to Envy; but having got a great Reputation by his Eloquence and Learning, he could not avoid those Reproaches. His Friends persuaded him to dispute for a Canonship (d) in the Metropolitan Church of Seville; and his Competitor bethought himself of raising Personal Objections against him, and carefully took up all the School-Boy's Tricks that might make him asham'd, and in general, whatever he had done amiss in his Youth, certain Marriages, the Irregularity of his Ordination, &c. (e) Competitor & eruditione & authoritate, & ipsâ demum gratia Capituli Constantino nullo modo comparandus, ad exceptiones personales conatus omnes convertens suscitavit ei ineptias omnes juventutis suæ, contracta videlicet, antequam sacris initiaretur, matrimonia, neque ritè sacris initiatum, neque rectè atque ordine Magisterii & doctoratus insignia accepisse. It were to be wish'd, that young Men, who hope to make themselves Eminent, would remember such Examples. It would be a Restraint upon 'em; they would be afraid of being upbraided with the Follies of their Youth, in the midst of their Glory. Those, who excuse such Faults, will nevertheless say, that it were better to want no such Indulgence. Such Faults are a subject of Mortification, which an Enemy knows how to improve to his Advantage.

(E) His refusal was attended with a Jest.] The Chapter of Toledo sent some Deputies to him, to desire him to fill up the Place of Preacher in the Metropolitan Church. Constantin answer'd, that he was very thankful for that Honour, and would endeavour to shew his Acknowledgment; but that he would do nothing that might disturb the Repose of his Ancestors. (f) Cæterum parentum avorumque suorum ossa ante multos annos sepulta conquiescere, se vero nolle quicquam admittere, occasione cujus à sancta illa quiete interturbarentur. To understand this Jest, the Reader must know, that the Chapter of Toledo had then a great Quarrel with the Arch-Bishop Siliceus, (g) a Man of mean Extraction, who had been raised to that great Post by Favour. That Prelate persecuted the chief Canons, (h) and disgraced them publickly, under pretence that they were descended from Jewish Families. He caused several Inquiries to be made, that were ignominious to the Memory of many Persons, who had been buried a hundred Years before, and by that means he disturbed the Repose of the Dead. Pontius's Jest runs upon this. (i) Ea occasione neque à centum annis sepultis parcebatur, inquirente malo archiepiscopo, & quidem sub pretextu religionis, in parentes, avos, atavos canonicorum, eosque ad originum rationes pessimè è suis sepulchris revocante. Eas non minus impias quàm stultas contentiones, ex sua ipsius vocatione occasione arrepta, Constantinus tempestivè admodum illo conciso Laconismo perstringebat. The Reader will not be displeased to know by the By this Passage of the History of Siliceus.

(F) To do a thing which had never been seen before.] He had some Wine and Water brought to him once or twice, and drank in the Pulpit to recover his Spirits. The great Esteem he was in, and the Authority he had got, made every Body excuse the Novelty of such a Spectacle. (k) Delatus in templum viribusque adeo exhaustus, ut in medio concionis filo uno atque altero limphati vini haustu vires ad pergendum in concione reficeret, novam neque unquam anteà visam licentiam summâ viri tum gratia, tum authoritate, qua pollebat, excusante.

(G) And performed it very well.] The Lectures he made upon some Books of the Scripture were admirable, if one may believe my Latin Author. I shall set down his Words, that the Reader may be more fully acquainted with the Circumstances of the Writings of that reform'd Spaniard. (l) Accepit primo Salomonis libros, Proverbia, Ecclesiasten, & Cantica canticorum, atque his mirabili eruditione explicatis, librum Jobi est aggressus, quem ultra medium interpretando perduxit. Extant ipsius in hos libros prælectiones omnes manu scripta opera Bab. diligentissimi cujusdam ex auditoribus excerpta, quas cum vulgaverimus, deprehenso quanto intervallo post se relinquat eos omnes, qui hactenus in eos libros quippiam ediderunt, de summa viri eruditione certius judicari poterit. You see there was a Design to publish that Work, and it was actually printed. See the Remark B.

---

† [illegible]

‡ It is a [illegible]

* Concionabatur ut plurimum octava hora, tanto erat populi concursu, ut quarta, sæpe etiam tertia noctis hora vix in templo inveniretur commodus ad audiendum locus. Hispanicæ inquisit. secret. p. 254.

§ The same who is call'd Egidius in the Rem. C.

‡ Taken from Hispan. inquis. secretiora p. 251. & seq.

(a) Hispanicæ inquisitionis secretiora p. m. 252.

(b) Ibid. p. 254.

(c) Hispanicæ inquisitionis secretiora p. 253.

(d) Canonicatus Concionalis seu (ut vocant) Magistralis. Ibid. p. 252.

(e) Ibid. p. 251.

(f) Ibid. p. 255.

(g) Qui ex aratro & glebis, neque virtute, neque eruditione, sed (si ita dici licet) fortunæ potius temeritate ad summam totius Hispaniæ, secundum regem ipsum, dignitatem convolarat. Ib. p. 255.

(h) Ibid.

(i) Ibid. p. 256.

(k) Ibid. p. 258.

(l) Id. ib.

and 'tis very likely his way of preaching was (E) somewhat Comical, and like that which Father Andrew was so fond of in the next Century.

PONTIUS (Conſtantin), burnt in Effigie at Seville in 1559, was called Conſtantin de la Fuente, in Latin Conſtantinus Fontius. Some Body took one Letter for another, a P instead of an F, which is the Reaſon why this Doctor is much more known by the Name of Conſtantin (A) Pontius, which does not belong to him, than by his true Name. However it be, he was a Man of great Merit, Doctor of † Divinity, Canon of Seville, and Preacher to Charles V. He followed Philip II. into England; and doubtleſs it was in that Country, that he reliſh'd the Doctrine of the Proteſtants, for which he was apprehended by the Inquiſition, and condemn'd to be burnt. He did not live till the Auto de fé, on which he was to be expoſed to the Publick View. The Spaniſh Hiſtorians do commonly ſay that he kill'd himſelf; others will have it, that he died of Sickneſs; but 'tis agreed on all Hands, that the Inquiſition produced an Effigies, which repreſented him, and was burnt on the Day * of the Auto de fé. Many ſay, that he was Confeſſor to Charles V. and that he attended him on his Death-bed to the laſt Breath; but I have ſhewed in another Place, that he was only his Preacher, and that he was impriſoned before the Death of that Emperor. He wrote (B) ſome Books, which the Spaniſh Inquiſition put into the Index without any Exception ‡: He is mention'd in the Martyrology of the (C) Proteſtants.

† Nicol. Antonii, Biblioth. Script. Hiſp. tom. 1. p. 196.

* See Nicol. Antonii ib.

‡ Conſtantinus de la Fuente Autor condenado: y todo ſu libro aſſi en qualquier lengua, y eſpecialmente la Confeſſion del Pecador. Ind. libr. prohib. p. m. 229.

Bizart,

Bible into the Vulgar Language, Paris 1578, in 8o. Meditations familieres ſur l'Hiſtoire de l'incarnation, Rheims 1574 in 8o. (f).

(f) Taken from du Verdier Vau-Privas Bibl. Franc. p. 852.

(E) That his way of Preaching was ſomewhat Comical.] I have three Reaſons to think ſo: for 1. The Words he is ſaid to have ſpoke in his Sermon, that was the occaſion of his Confinement, are far from being grave. That Petit Tendron, (young Laſs) that was kept ready for the revelling of the Penitents, is very Comical. 2. 'Tis agreed on all hands, that the Favourite, who received ſuch a ſharp Anſwer from Poncet, cenſured him for making his Hearers laugh. Laſtly, James Roulliard his Countryman and Panegyriſt, wards off the Blow in ſuch a manner, as makes me think, that he deſign'd to Anſwer thoſe who found fault with Poncet for acting the part of a Jeſter in the Pulpit. "Beſides "his Learning and Piety, known to every Body, "they are Roulliard's (a) Words, he had this parti"cular Talent, that he freely preached againſt the "Vices of his Age, preferring the Truth of the "Word of God before the Threatnings of Great "Men, and the daily Danger of his Life. 'Tis ſaid "he had ſuch a pleaſant Delivery, that what the "moſt unjudicious laugh'd at, was look'd upon by "the Wiſeſt as a great Piece of Art, that the Sharp"neſs of his Cenſures might go down the better, "and that he might the longer keep up his Mini"ſtry, which was ſo uſeful to the Church: where"as, had it not been for that, the furious Courti"ers, or ſome ſilly People would have endeavoured "to undo him." You ſee this Advocate dares not deny, that Poncet's Sermons made People laugh. How then can one doubt that his Sermons were ſomewhat Comical? Had he boldly, but gravely, cenſured the Diſorders of the Court, the Pleaſure he would have afforded his Hearers, tho' never ſo great, had never made any Body laugh.

(a) Pag. 627. of the Antiquitez de Melun.

(A) By the Name of Conſtantin Pontius.] Thuanus calls him ſo, and ſo does Father Paul (c), who was not reproved for it by Pallavicini, tho' he took notice of ſome of his Miſtakes concerning that Spaniard.

(c) Hiſt. du Concile de Trente l. 5. p. 425. edit. 1629. in 4o.

(B) He wrote ſome Books.] A Summary of the Chriſtian Doctrine, printed in Spaniſh at Antwerp. Six Sermons on the firſt Pſalm of David, printed in the ſame Language, and at the ſame Place in (d) 1555. A large Catechiſm. The Confeſſion of a Sinner. Some Commentaries on the Proverbs, the Eccleſiaſtes, the Song of Songs, and Job. Don Nicolas (e) Antonio ſeems to believe, that the Sermons were not made on the 1ſt Pſalm, but on the 50th, and that they are the ſame with the Confeſſion of a Sinner; but he is miſtaken: that Confeſſion is a Prayer ſomewhat ſhorter than a Sermon, it is in the Proteſtant Martyrology (f).

(d) Epit. Biblioth. Geſner.

(e) Bibliot. Script. Hiſp. tom. 1. p. 196.

(f) In the 8th Book fol. 507. verſo & ſeq.

(C) He is mention'd in the Martyrology of the Proteſtants.] We find there that Egidius, Conſtantin Fontius and Varquias were the firſt, who diſcovered the Darkneſs of Spain almoſt at the ſame time(g). They were call'd the Three Pillars of Truth: they preached at Seville with great Zeal and Succeſs. Egidius was nominated by Charles V. to the Biſhoprick of (h) Tortona; but the Inquiſitors were ſo vexed at it, that, to prevent his being made a Prelate, they ſeverely perſecuted him for a long time. During that Perſecution Fontius was in the Low-Countries Preacher and (i) Confeſſor to Charles V. "(k) Being "returned to Seville, after the Death of Egidius, he "reaſſumed his Office with great Courage; and the "Affection the People had for him was ſtill the "ſame. Notwithſtanding the Weakneſs of his "Body, he continued to diſcharge the Duties of "his Office, keeping up himſelf with the uſual "Remedies God gives us to recover the Health and "Strength of the Body. He had ſeveral Encoun"ters with the Prieſts and Monks, and with Waldes "Archbiſhop of Seville, and Preſident of the In"quiſition. And tho' his Enemies were furiouſly "exaſperated againſt him, yet he ſo dexterouſly "warded off all their Blows, that they could not "bring him to make an open Confeſſion of his "Faith, that they might have a better hold of him. "But at length God prevailed upon him in the fol"lowing manner to make a full Declaration of his "Truth, putting a ſtop to all his Subtleties and "Shifts, which he had made uſe of againſt his "Conſcience." The Diſcovery was made by his Books coming into the Hands of the Inquiſitors, notwithſtanding the great Care he had taken to conceal them. "(l) They found among other Books, "a large one written with his own Hand, wherein "he treated of the following Doctrines, as the In"quiſitors declared by their Sentence, which was "publickly pronounced, viz. Of the State of the "Church; of the True Church, and the Church of "the Pope, whom he call'd Anti-Chriſt; of the "Sacrament of the Euchariſt, and the Invention "of the Maſs, wherewith he ſaid the World was "bewitch'd, by reaſon of their Ignorance of the "Holy Scripture; of Man's Juſtification; of Pur"gatory, which he call'd a Monkiſh Invention to "feed the Belly; of the Pope's Bulls and Indul"gences; of the Merit of good Works; of Con"feſſion, and ſeveral other Points. That Book be"ing produced, the Inquiſitors ask'd him whether "it was his own Hand-Writing: he anſwered them "without any Tergiverſation, that the whole Book "was written with his own Hand, and maintain'd "the Truth of what was contain'd in it, ſaying, "you need not take further pains to look for Evi"dence againſt me, you have an ample Declaration "of my Faith: deal with me as you'll think fit. "He continued afterwards two Years in Priſon, "where he fell ſick by reaſon of his bad Diet, (tho' "he was little concern'd for it) and of the Grief "he conceived for the diſperſion of the Church, "and alſo becauſe the Sun made his Priſon as hot "as a Furnace; ſo that at laſt, a Looſeneſs, attend"ed with the Gripes, occaſion'd his Death ...... "His Enemies ſpread a Report that he had made "away with himſelf, by cutting one of his Veins "with a piece of Glaſs, to avoid the ignominious "Puniſhment he was to undergo. The Children "ſung Songs about it, which had been made by the "Members of the Inquiſition. On the Day appoint"ed for the Triumph, his dead Body was taken "up, covered with Straw, like a Phantom, and "clouthed, and then it was ſet on a Chair, hold"ing up one Hand, and laying the other upon

the

(g) Hiſtoire des Martyrs Book 8. fol. 505. verſo, edit. 1582. in fol.

(h) It ſhould be Tortoſa.

(i) The Spaniſh Hiſtorians deny that he was his Confeſſor. See the Rem. K. of the Art. Charles V.

(k) Hiſt. des Martyrs fol. 505.

(l) Ibid. fol. 5

Moreri, who calls him Conſtantin Ponce, and who ſays that he was for a long time Confeſſor to Charles V. did not well remember the Circumſtances he had read in that Martyrology. I have read a Latin Diſcourſe § concerning the Life and Death of that Spaniard, wherein he is call'd Conſtantinus Pontius. The Publiſher of that Diſcourſe ſays, that it was written by Reginaldus Gonſalvius Montanus Hiſpanus. I find in it that Pontius had been a looſe Man in (D) his Youth, but that he mended his Life, and took a right Courſe, tho' he was ſtill faulty in one thing, that was a kind of a Blot; for being a Man of a very lively Wit, he gave himſelf too much Liberty in his Jeſts. Many of his witty Sayings went about. His ſharpeſt Railleries were commonly levell'd at the Hypocrites and ſorry Preachers of their Time. He perfectly learn'd, without any Maſter, Latin, Greek, and Hebrew, and whatever is neceſſary to make a good Preacher. He was Maſter of all the Beauties of his Mother-Tongue, and preached ſo eloquently, that an incredible number of Hearers flock'd to his Sermons *. People had much ado to find any convenient Place three or four Hours before he came into the Pulpit. He was free from Avarice and Ambition, and refuſed a rich Canonſhip that was offered him at Toledo: his Refuſal was attended (E) with a Jeſt. After the Death of Doctor ‖ Giles, being appointed Refuſal to Preach in the Cathedral, he did it before he had recovered his Health; but he happened to be ſo weak in the middle of his Sermon, that he was obliged to do a thing (F) which had never been ſeen before. The Director of the Houſe of Doctrine having founded there a Lecture of Divinity; our Conſtantin was charged with it, (G) and performed it very well ‡. You'll ſee in the Remark (C) the Cataſtrophe † [illegible] Fol.

§ It is a Work intitled [illegible] ſecretiora, [illegible] at Heidelberg [illegible] per [illegible] Urbanus, Anno [illegible].

* Concionabatur ut plurimum octavâ hora, tanto etiam populi concurſu, ut quarta, ſæpe etiam tertia noctis hora vix in templo inveniretur commodus ad audiendum locus. Hiſpanicæ inquiſit. ſecret. p. 254.

‖ The ſame who is call'd Egidius in the Rem. C.

‡ Taken from Hiſpan. inquiſ. ſecretiora p. 251. & ſeq.

" the Chair, as artificially as ſuch a thing could be " contrived."

The Latin Author quoted by me in the following Remarks, does alſo acknowledge that Pontius eluded the Proceedings of the Inquiſition, by his cunning Anſwers; but that he at laſt gave over all his Subterfuges, when they ſhewed him his Manuſcript. (a) Raptus ad Inquiſitoriam arcem, etſi ex controverſiis præcedentibus omnium adverſariorum animos habebat vehementer exulceratos, tamen acutiſſimis ſuis reſponſis omnes eorum cavillos facilè, more ſuo, eludens, ad apertam fidei confeſſionem, ex qua periculum, ut ipſi exoptabant, crearetur, trahi non poterat: atque evaſiſſet tandem, ut ſæpè anteà, ipſorum manus, ni mirabili quadam Providentia ſua artificio rotundam confeſſionem veritatis ſuæ, Deus ab invito & modis omnibus tergiverſante extorſiſſet. . . . . . (b) Viſo hoc libro Conſtantinus interrogatus ab Inquiſitoribus, an propriam manum agnoſceret, quum per multos dies, conquiſitis undique ſubterfugiis, conatus illorum eluſiſſet, agnoſcens porro Dei voluntatem, quæ omnem tergiverſandi amplius occaſionem ſibi præcidiſſet, agnoſco (inquit) manum meam, ac proinde fateor, me iſta omnia ſcripſiſſe, quæ & vera eſſe ingenuè profiteor.

(D) Had been a looſe Man in his Youth.] Here are the Words of the Latin Author: (c) Juventutem quidem tranſegit pro ſtudioſorum juvenum liberâ educatione non admodum laudatam, ſed quæ, quo minùs, quod ætatis ſubſequutum eſt, quàm laudatiſſimum extiterit, haud impedimento fuerit. Probatos enim ſatis mores, ut erat ingenio mirè feſtivo, & in jocis peracuto, una ſubinde jocandi licentia vel in provectiore ætate corrumpebat. Perhaps, the Faults of his Youth had never been objected to him, had he not had extraordinary Gifts, which expoſed him to Envy; but having got a great Reputation by his Eloquence and Learning, he could not avoid thoſe Reproaches. His Friends perſuaded him to diſpute for a Canonſhip (d) in the Metropolitan Church of Seville; and his Competitor bethought himſelf of raiſing Perſonal Objections againſt him, and carefully took up all the School-Boy's Tricks that might make him aſham'd, and in general, whatever he had done amiſs in his Youth, certain Marriages, the Irregularity of his Ordination, &c. (e) Competitor & eruditione & authoritate, & ipſâ demum gratia Capituli Conſtantino nullo modo comparandus, ad exceptiones perſonales conatus omnes convertens ſuſcitavit ei ineptias omnes juventutis ſuæ, contracta videlicet, antequam ſacris initiaretur, matrimonia, neque ritè ſacris initiatum, neque rectè atque ordine Magiſterii & doctoratus inſignia accepiſſe. It were to be wiſh'd, that young Men, who hope to make themſelves Eminent, would remember ſuch Examples. It would be a Reſtraint upon 'em; they would be afraid of being upbraided with the Follies of their Youth, in the midſt of their Glory. Thoſe, who excuſe ſuch Faults, will nevertheleſs ſay, that it were better to want no ſuch Indulgence. Such Faults are a ſubject of Mortification, which an Enemy knows how to improve to his Advantage.

(E) His refuſal was attended with a Jeſt.] The Chapter of Toledo ſent ſome Deputies to him, to deſire him to fill up the Place of Preacher in the Metropolitan Church. Conſtantin anſwer'd, that he was very thankful for that Honour, and would endeavour to ſhew his Acknowledgment; but that he would do nothing that might diſturb the Repoſe of his Anceſtors. (f) Cæterum parentum avorumque ſuorum oſſa ante multos annos ſepulta conquieſcere, ſe vero nolle quicquam admittere, occaſione cujus à ſancta illa quiete interturbarentur. To underſtand this Jeſt, the Reader muſt know, that the Chapter of Toledo had then a great Quarrel with the Arch-Biſhop Siliceus, (g) a Man of mean Extraction, who had been raiſed to that great Poſt by Favour. That Prelate perſecuted the chief Canons, (h) and diſgraced them publickly, under pretence that they were deſcended from Jewiſh Families. He cauſed ſeveral Inquiries to be made, that were ignominious to the Memory of many Perſons, who had been buried a hundred Years before, and by that means he diſturbed the Repoſe of the Dead. Pontius's Jeſt runs upon this. (i) Ea occaſione neque à centum annis ſepultis parcebatur, inquirente malo archiepiſcopo, & quidem ſub pretextu religionis, in parentes, avos, atavos canonicorum, eſque ad originem rationes peſſimè è ſuis ſepulchris revocante. Eas non minus impias quàm ſtultas contentiones, ex ſua ipſius vocatione occaſione arrepta, Conſtantinus tempeſtive admodum illo conciſo Laconiſmo perſtringebat. The Reader will not be diſpleaſed to know by the By this Paſſage of the Hiſtory of Siliceus.

(F) To do a thing which had never been ſeen before.] He had ſome Wine and Water brought to him once or twice, and drank in the Pulpit to recover his Spirits. The great Eſteem he was in, and the Authority he had got, made every Body excuſe the Novelty of ſuch a Spectacle. (k) Delatus in templum viribuſque adeo exhauſtus, ut in medio concionis filo uno atque altero limphati vini hauſtu vires ad pergendum in concione reficeret, novam neque unquam anteà viſam licentiam ſummâ viri tum gratia, tum authoritate, qua pollebat, excuſante.

(G) And performed it very well.] The Lectures he made upon ſome Books of the Scripture were admirable, if one may believe my Latin Author. I ſhall ſet down his Words, that the Reader may be more fully acquainted with the Circumſtances of the Writings of that reform'd Spaniard. (l) Accepit primo Salomonis libros, Proverbia, Eccleſiaſten, & Cantica canticorum, atque his mirabili eruditione explicatis, librum Jobi eſt aggreſſus, quem ultra medium interpretando perduxit. Extant ipſius in hos libros prælectiones omnes manu ſcriptæ opera Bab. diligentiſſimi cujuſdam ex auditoribus excerptæ, quas cum vulgaverimus, deprehenſo quanto intervallo poſt ſe relinquat eos omnes, qui hactenus in eos libros quippiam ediderunt, de ſumma viri eruditione certius judicari poterit. You ſee there was a Deſign to publiſh that Work, and it was actually printed. See the Remark B.

(a) Hiſpanicæ inquiſitionis ſecretiora p. m. 252.

(b) Ibid. p. 254.

(c) Hiſpanicæ inquiſitionis ſecretiora p. 253.

(d) Canonicatus Concionalis ſeu (ut vocant) Magiſtralis. Ibid. p. 257.

(e) Ibid. p. 251.

(f) Ibid. p. 255.

(g) Qui ex aratro & glebis, neque virtute, neque eruditione, ſed (ſi ita dici licet) fortunæ potius temeritate ad ſummam totius Hiſpaniæ, ſecundum regem ipſum, dignitatem convolarat. Ib. p. 256.

(h) Ibid.

(i) Ibid. p. 256.

(k) Ibid. p. 258.

(l) Id. ib.

taſtrophe of his Life, and in the laſt Remark, a Story he told Cardan, which (H) concerns Apparitions.

POQUELIN (John Baptiſt) a famous Player, known by the Name of MOLIERE, the Son of a Valet de Chambre, Tapeſtry-maker to the King, was born at Paris about the Year 1620. He went thro' his School-Learning under the Jeſuits in Clermont-College. He was deſign'd for the Bar, but after he had made an end of his Study of the Civil Law, he pitch'd upon the Profeſſion of a Player, having a very † ſtrong Inclination for the Stage, and bent his Mind altogether that way. His firſt Play was l'Etourdi, which he expoſed to the Publick View at Lyons in the Year 1653. Being ſometime after in Languedoc, he offered his Services to the Prince of Conti, who received him very kindly, gave an Allowance to his Company, and took him into his Service, as well for himſelf, as for the States of Languedoc. Having ſpent the Carnaval at Grenoble in the Year 1658, he went and ſettled at Rouen, where he ſtaid all the Summer; and having made ſeveral Journeys to Paris privately, he had the good Luck to pleaſe the King's Brother, who granting him his Protection, and making his Company his own, introduced him in that Quality to the King and the Queen Mother. That Company began to appear before their Majeſties and the whole Court the 24th of October 1658, upon a Stage ſet up on purpoſe in the Hall of the Guards of the old Louvre, and were well approved, ſo that His Majeſty gave Orders for their Settlement at Paris. The Hall of the Petit Bourbon was granted them, to act by turns with the Italian Players. ‡ In October 1660 the Hall of the Royal Palace was granted them. Moliere obtained a Penſion of a thouſand Livres in 1663. His Company was altogether in his Majeſty's Service in the Year 1665, and he continued all the remaining part of his Life to give new Plays, which were very much applauded. His laſt Comedy was Le Malade Imaginaire, and it was acted a fourth time on the 17th of February 1673, and he (A) died the ſame Day. This is what I have taken from his Life, prefixed to his Works. Perhaps I have done a needleſs thing, for that Book is more known and read than this Dictionary will ever be, and therefore what I tranſcribe out of that Life will be no new thing to any Body. I have been told of a thing by ſeveral People, which is not to be found in it, viz. that he turn'd Player only to be near an Actreſs, with whom he was very much in Love. Let the Reader gueſs whether this Particular was omitted becauſe it was not true, or for fear of doing him ſome prejudice,

† See the Rem. G.

‡ See the Rem. H.

(H) A Story he told Cardan.] If what Cardan ſays be true, our Conſtantin ſpoke of Apparitions, not upon a Hear-ſay, but as an Eye-witneſs. (a) Vigebat olim in Hiſpania hæc ars, (Necromantia) publiceque docebatur in Salamantica academia, nunc vero publicis legibus ſublata eſt. Unde ibi aliqua adhuc artis experimenta ſuperſunt. Narrabat mihi Don Conſtantinus Fontanus Hiſpanus theologus, & ab exomologeſi Principis Philippi Hiſpaniarum, dum in Vagliadolit civitate Hiſpaniæ, in domo typographi, quæ male ob ſtrepitus audiebat nocturnos, diverſaretur, prima nocte incubum ſenſiſſe: ſed cum olivas nigras in cœna comediſſet, naturale exiſtimaſſe, cum incubus inter morbos numeretur. Sequenti nocte ſuper lecto videt auditque feles concertantes, quod quanquam durum videretur, quia tamen eſſe poterat, & hoc naturale eſſe duxit. Tertia autem nocte cum nondum dormitum iſſet, de hiſque differeret, tubæ vocem quaſi in aure audivit. Exiſtimans ſibili ſpeciem eſſe, pueros videbat, qui ibi aſtabant ridentes: tum vox illa cubiculum circumire cœpit, perfectoque circuitu ſub lecto ſe abdidit, ibi diu ſtrepens, cum nihil videretur. What Cardan ſays of the Magick Schools, which had been in Spain, was affirm'd by a Magician mention'd by Thuanus. See the Remark I in the Article Tireſias.

(a) Card. de ſubtilitate l. 19. p. 591. edit. Lugdun. 1580. in 8.

(A) And he died the ſame Day.] The chief Perſon repreſented in Moliere's laſt Play, is a Sick Man who pretends to be Dead. Moliere repreſented that Perſon, and conſequently was obliged in one of his Scenes to act the part of a dead Man. It has been ſaid by a great many People, that he expired in that part of his Play, and that when he was to make an End of it, in order to ſhew that 'twas only a Feint, he could neither ſpeak, nor get up, being actually dead. This Singularity was look'd upon as very wonderful, and afforded the Poets a plentiful Matter for witty Conceits and ingenious Alluſions; which in all probability was the Reaſon why that Story was ſo much credited. Nay, ſome gave a ſerious Turn to their Thoughts, and made many Moral Reflections upon that Incident. But the truth is, Moliere did not die in ſuch a manner: he had time enough, though very Sick, to make an end of his Part, as it appears from this Paſſage of his Life. " (b) The 17th of February 1673, on which le " Malade Imaginaire was acted a fourth time, " he was ſo much troubled with his Defluxion, " that he had much ado to act His Part; he made " an end of it with great Sufferings, and the " Spectators were ſenſible that he was not far from " being what he acted. When the Comedy was over " he went home, and was ſcarce got to Bed, when " his continual Cough increaſed ſo violently, that " one of the Veins of his Lungs broke. He no " ſooner found himſelf in that Condition, but he " bent all his Thoughts upon Heavenly things; and " immediately he loſt his Speech, and in half an " Hour's time was ſtifled by the great quantity of " Blood that ran out of his Mouth. „ But I muſt inform the Reader, that if ſome other Writers are to be credited, Moliere was not able to hold out till the Play was over. " (d) Moliere . . . . . died in a " very ſurpriſing manner. He had been indiſpoſed " for a long time; which was aſcribed to the Trouble his Wife gave him, but more ſtill to his " great Labour. One Day being to act Le Malade " Imaginaire, a new Piece at that time, and the laſt " he had made, he was taken very ill before he began it, and was like to put it off on account of " his Illneſs. Nevertheleſs, conſidering the great " number of Spectators, and being unwilling " to ſend 'em away, he ſtrain'd himſelf, and acted " his part almoſt to the End, without perceiving " that his Illneſs increaſed upon him. But when " he came to that part of the Play, wherein he " counterfeited a dead Man, he happen'd to be ſo " weak, that 'twas thought he was really dead, and " they had much ado to make him ſtand up. They " adviſed him to go to Bed, but he choſe rather " to make an end; and the Play being far advanced, he thought he could go thro' it without much " prejudice to himſelf. But his Zeal for the Publick " was attended with a ſad Conſequence; for as he " was ſpeaking of Rheubarb and Sena, in the Ceremony of the Phyſicians, ſome Blood came out of " his Mouth, at which the Spectators and his " Friends being very much frighted, he was immediately carried home, and his Wife followed him " into his Chamber, pretending to be very much " afflicted. But every thing proved ineffectual; he " died in a few Hours, having loſt all his Blood, " that came out of his Mouth in great plenty. „ The Poets, as I have already ſaid, took hold of that occaſion to ſhew their Wit: they handed about a great many ſmall Pieces: " But (e) of all thoſe " that were made upon Moliere's Death, none was " better approved than theſe four Latin Verſes:

" Roſcius

(b) Vie de Moliere prefixed to his Works. I make uſe of the Bruſſels Edition 1694.

(d) See the Book intitled, La fameuſe Comedienne, ou hiſtoire de la Guerin, auparavant femme & veuve de Moliere, p. 38, 39.

(e) Vie de Moliere, fol. * 3.

prejudice. Many are of Opinion, that his Plays exceed or equal (B) the nobleſt Performances of that kind in Ancient Greece and Rome. 'Tis no wonder that he did ſo well ſucceed in deſcribing the Jars of married People, and the Uneaſineſs of Husbands that are Jealous, and have Reaſon to be ſo; for 'tis ſaid, he knew (C) it by Experience as well as any Man in the World. This is what I find in a printed “ Roſcius hic ſitus eſt triſti Molierus in urnâ, “ Cui, genus humanum ludere, ludus erat.

“ Dum ludit mortem, Mors indignata jocantem “ Corripit, & mimum fingere ſæva negat.

I add a French Epitaph (f) to thoſe Latin Verſes:

Cy gît qui parut ſur la Scene
Le ſinge de la vie humaine,
Qui n'aura jamais ſon égal,
Qui voulant de la Mort, ainſi que de la Vie,
Eſtre l'imitateur dans une Comedie,
Pour trop bien reüſſir, y reüſſit fort mal,
Car la Mort en eſtant ravie,
Trouva ſi belle la copie,
Qu'elle en fit un original.

(f) It is in the 4. Tome of the Mercure Galant for the Year 1673. There are in it ſeveral other ſuch Pieces, with a Funeral Oration in Proſe, which is ſomewhat waggiſh.

(B) Exceed or equal the nobleſt Performances of that kind in Ancient Greece and Rome.] Mr. Perrault diſpleaſed many People by contradicting thoſe who ſay, that no Modern Author can be compared with Homer and Virgil, Demoſthenes and Cicero, Ariſtophanes and Terence, Sophocles and Euripides. This Diſpute has occaſioned on both ſides many Books, which contain very good things. But we have not ſeen hitherto an Anſwer to Mr. Perrault's Parallele, nor do we know when it will come out. I think I may ſay that among the Productions of the Pen, there are few things, wherein ſo many People have acknowledged the Superiority of our Age, as in the Comical Pieces. Perhaps the Reaſon of it is, that the Beauties and Niceties of Ariſtophanes are not known to all thoſe who are ſenſible of Moliere's Wit and Charms; for it ought to be granted, that in order to paſs a right Judgment upon the Comick Poets of Greece, it were neceſſary to be throughly acquainted with the Faults of the Athenians. There is a Ridicule common to all Times and People, and a Ridicule peculiar to certain Ages and Nations. Some Scenes of Ariſtophanes, which appear dull to us, did, perhaps, wonderfully pleaſe the Athenians, becauſe they knew the thing he ridiculed. Perhaps, 'twas a Fault altogether unknown to us, a Ridicule conſiſting in ſome particular Facts, and in a tranſient and common Taſte of that Time, of which we can have no Notion, tho' we are able to read the Originals. Theſe Obſtacles don't permit us to admire that Poet according to his Merit, neither in Greek nor in Latin, nor in the French Verſions, tho' never ſo faithful and polite. Moliere is not liable to this Inconveniency, we know what he aims at, and eaſily diſcover whether he deſcribes well the Ridicule of the Age we live in; when he ſucceeds in any thing, it cannot eſcape us. Nay, he ſeems to be more copious than Ariſtophanes and Terence, as to thoſe Thoughts and nice Railleries, of which all Ages and polite Nations are ſenſible. This is a very conſiderable Prerogative; for it cannot be ſaid, that our Age has not a true Reliſh of the fine Paſſages of the Latin Poets. If you ſhew ſome Thoughts of Horace, Ovid, Juvenal, &c. to ingenious Ladies in old French, if you tranſlate 'em faithfully, tho' never ſo courtly, they'll tell you that thoſe Thoughts are fine, delicate and nice. There are ſome Beauties of Wit in Faſhion at all Times: one would think that Moliere is more copious in that reſpect than the Ancient Comick Poets. He has ſome Beauties that would vaniſh away in a Tranſlation, or in a Country of a different Taſte from that of France; but he has many others that would be preſerved in all ſorts of Tranſlations, and approved whatever the Taſte of the Readers might be, provided they underſtood the Eſſence of a good Thought. See the Article Amphitryo (a).

(a) Rem. B.

(C) That he knew by Experience the Uneaſineſs of Husbands that are Jealous, or have Reaſon to be ſo.] I have read in a ſmall Book printed in the Year 1688, “That (b) Moliere was leſs praiſed than his Wife was courted; that ſhe was the Daughter of the deceas'd Mrs. Bejard, a Country Actreſs, who made many young Sparks of Languedoc happy when her Daughter was born. And therefore, adds the Author, it were a very difficult thing to know who was her Father among ſo many Galants: all that we know of it is, that her Mother affirm'd, ſhe never admitted any but Perſons of Quality, except Moliere, and that therefore her Daughter was of a very noble Blood. And indeed the only thing ſhe recommended to her all along, was to proſtitute herſelf to none but the beſt ſort of People. Moliere was thought to be her Father, tho' he married her afterwards; but the Truth of it is not well known. . . . (c) Moliere married young Mrs. Bejard ſometime after he had ſettled his Company at Paris: He made ſome Pieces for the Stage, and among others La Princeſſe d'Elide, wherein his Wife, who acted the Part of the Princeſs, (d) ſhone ſo brightly, that he had all the Reaſon in the World to repent his having expoſed her in the middle of all the ſprightly Youth of the Court. For ſhe was hardly got into the Room, where the King gave that Entertainment, but ſhe fell deſperately in Love with the Count de Guiche, and the Count de Lauzun fell deſperately in Love with her. . . . . (e) Moliere was made ſenſible, that the great care he took to pleaſe the Publick, kept him from obſerving how his Wife behaved herſelf, and that whilſt he made it his Buſineſs to divert every Body, every Body made it their Buſineſs to divert his Wife. Jealouſy awaken'd his Tenderneſs, which had lain aſleep by reaſon of his Application to Study: he immediately went and made great Complaints to his Wife, telling her in a reproachful manner, how carefully he had brought her up, how he had ſtifled his Paſſion, how he had behaved himſelf towards her, more like a Lover than a Husband, and that to reward him for ſo many Kindneſſes, ſhe made him ridiculous to the whole Court. His Wife fell a Weeping, and confeſt to him, that ſhe had had an Inclination for the Count de Guiche; but ſhe ſwore, that the only Fault ſhe was guilty of conſiſted in the intention: ſhe added, that he ſhould forgive the firſt Fault of a young Woman, who for want of Experience will be apt to make ſuch Steps; but that the Kindneſs ſhe was ſenſible he had for her, would prevent, for the Time to come, her being guilty of ſuch a Weakneſs. Moliere being perſuaded of her Virtue by her Tears, begg'd her pardon a thouſand times for the Anger he had expreſs'd, and gently repreſented to her, that a good Conſcience was not ſufficient to preſerve one's Reputation, but that one ſhould take care to do nothing that may occaſion ill Reports, eſpecially in an Age wherein People are ſo apt to think ill, and ſo little diſpoſed to judge favourably of things.„ (f) She quickly began again her old Trade more openly than ever. . . . . “(g) Moliere being inform'd of his Wife's Behaviour by ſome People, who were willing to make him uneaſie, renewed his Complaints with more violence than he had done before, and even threatned to get her confin'd. That Woman being provok'd to the higheſt Degree with his Reproaches, wept and fell into a Swoon. Her Husband, who was extremely fond of her, repented of having put her into that Condition, and did his beſt to recover her Spirits, intreating her to conſider, that nothing but Love was the occaſion of his Anger, and that ſhe might be ſenſible of the great Power ſhe had over him, ſince, notwithſtanding all the Reaſons he had to complain of her, he was ready to forgive her, provided ſhe would be more cautious for the time to come. One would think that ſuch an extraordinary Husband ſhould have made her ſenſible of her Fault, and brought her off from her ill Courſe; but his Kindneſs produc'd a quite contrary Effect. She thought ſhe had a fair Opportunity of parting with him, and therefore ſhe ſpoke in a high Strain, and told him, that ſhe knew well enough from whom he had thoſe falſe Stories; that ſhe was weary of being every Day accuſed of a thing ſhe was not guilty of; that he might think of a Separation, and that ſhe could no longer endure a Man, who was always intimate with Mrs (h) de Brie, who lived in their Houſe, and had never left it ſince they were married. The care that was taken to pacifie Moliere's Wife, proved ineffectual:

(b) Hiſtoire de la Guerin auparavant Femme & Veuve de Moliere p. 6.

(c) Ibid. p. 12.

(d) Ibid. p. 14.

(e) Ibid. p. 15.

(f) Ibid. p. 18.

(g) Ibid. p. 19.

(h) She was an Actreſs belonging to the Company, which Moliere found ſettled at Lyons the firſt time he acted there. He fell in Love with that Woman, and was reciprocally loved by her, and got her into his Company. Hiſtoire de la Guerin p. 8.

printed Book, out of which I shall set down * some Passages. What is most strange is, that there has been a Report that his Wife † was his own Daughter. He made Verses with a wonderful ‡ facility; but he took too much liberty (C*) in inventing “ fectual: From that very Moment she conceived an extreme Aversion for him; and when he had a Mind to make use of the Privileges of a Husband, she treated him with the utmost Contempt. At last she carried things to such an extremity, that Moliere, who began to perceive her wicked Inclinations, consented to the Separation she continually desired since their Quarrel; so that without a Decree of Parliament, they agreed to cohabit no longer together. But Moliere could not resolve upon it without doing himself a great violence; and if his Reason made him look upon his Wife as a Woman unworthy of the Caresses of an honest Man, by reason of her ill Conduct, his Tenderness made him sensible, that he would hardly be able to see her without enjoying the Privileges of a Husband. One Day as he was thinking upon it in his Garden at Auteuil, one of his Friends, call'd Chapelle, who came to walk there by chance, accosted him, and finding him more uneasie than he used to be, ask'd him several times the Reason of it. Moliere being somewhat asham'd of shewing so little Constancy under a Misfortune, that was so much in Fashion, held out as much as he could; but having then his Heart full, a thing well known to those that have been in Love, he yielded to the desire of easing himself, and ingenuously confest to his Friend, that the Grief wherewith he was overwhelm'd, proceeded from his being obliged to use his Wife as he did. Chapelle, who thought he was above things of that Nature, jeered him, and told him he wondered that a Man, who knew so well how to represent the weak side of other Men, should be guilty of a Weakness he blamed every Day, and shewed him, that the most ridiculous of all was to Love a Woman, when her Love is not reciprocal. For my part, added he, I must needs tell you that if I was so unhappy as to find myself in such a Condition, and if I was fully persuaded that the Woman I Love grants some Favours to others, I should have such a Contempt for her, that it would infallibly cure my Passion. You have a satisfaction you could not have if she was your Mistress; and Revenge, which commonly succeeds Love in an injured Lover, may make amends for all the Uneasiness your Wife gives you, since you need only get her shut up: and this will be a sure way to quiet your Mind. Moliere, who heard his Friend quietly enough, interrupted him, and ask'd whether he had ever been in Love. Yes, replied Chapelle, I have been in Love, as a Man of Sense ought to be; but I should not have been so much troubled for a thing which my Honour should have required from me, and I am asham'd to see you so uncertain. I perceive, replied Moliere, that you have never been a true Lover, and that you took the Figure of Love for Love itself. I will not alledge many Examples, whereby you might know the Power of that Passion, but shall only give you a faithful Account of the Perplexity I am in, to make you sensible how little a Man is Master of himself, when Love has got an ascendant over him. Wherefore, in Answer to what you say, that I have a perfect Knowledge of Mens Hearts, as it appears by the publick Descriptions I daily make of 'em, I confess that I have made it my chief Study to know their weak side; but if I have learn'd that the Danger may be shunn'd, Experience has taught me that 'tis impossible to avoid it: I judge of it by myself. „ Afterwards he gives an Account of his Marriage, and after some Reflections, he adds: (a) “ I am therefore resolved to live with her as if she was not my Wife. But if you knew the Anguish I am in, you would pity me: my Passion is come to such a pitch, that I cannot forbear being concern'd for her; and when I consider that 'tis impossible for me to overcome my Affection for her, I am apt to fancy, that, perhaps, she finds it no less difficult to conquer her Inclinations to be a Cocquet, and I am more disposed to pity her than to blame her. You'll say that none but a Poet can Love in such a manner; but 'tis my Opinion, that there is but one sort of Love, and that those who have never been so Nice are perfect Strangers to true Love. . . . (b) Don't you wonder that my Reason should serve only to make me sensible of my Weakness, without being able to conquer it? I must needs tell you, replied his Friend, that you are more to be pitied than I thought: but I hope Time will cure you; and I beseech you to use your endeavours towards it. „

Such was the Fate of that Wit. In the midst of the Acclamations of the whole Court, shining with Glory, and admired in France and in Foreign Countries, he was tormented with a thousand Domestick Griefs. His Marriage deprived him of his Honour and Quiet: Nay, he could not have the satisfaction of hating his Cross, I mean the Person who was the Cause of so much Vexation. He might have been told, Physician, cure thyself: Moliere, you give so much Diversion to the Publick, can't you divert yourself? You laugh at every Body, you give very good Advice to the poor Cuckolds, why don't you make use of it yourself? Perhaps he said a thousand times, as Horace (c) did, I had rather be accounted the meanest of all Authors, than have so much Wit, and live such an uneasie Life.

(C*) Too much liberty in inventing new Words and new Expressions.] Take notice, that I only blame the Excess of his Liberty; for I don't deny that he was often very happy in the Use of it, and that it proved useful to our Language. He introduced some Phrases and some Words, that are very pleasant; and if any Grammarian should think otherwise of it, he should deserve no better Treatment than that Ancient Grammarian, who censured the Poet Furius for inventing some Words which shorten'd the Discourse, and had no Harshness in them that might offend nice Ears. Read this Passage of Aulus Gellius. (d) Non hercle idem sentio cum Casellio vindice grammatico, ut mea opinio est, haud quaquam inerudito. Verum hoc tamen petulanter insciteque; quod Furium veterem poetam dedecorasse linguam Latinam scripsit hujuscemodi vocum fictionibus, quæ mihi quidem neque abhorrere à poetica facultate visæ sunt, neque dictu profatuque ipso tetræ aut insuaves esse; sicuti sunt quædam alia ab illustribus poetis ficta durè & rancidè. Quæ reprehendit autem Casellius Furiana, hæc sunt; quod terram in lutum versam lutescere dixerit, & tenebras in noctis modum factas noctescere, &c. I must observe, that there is no better Forge for new Words than the Stage; for when it produces any Novelty in the Language, that is well approv'd, a World of People will immediately take it up, and spread it far and near by their frequent Repetitions. It cannot reasonably be denied that good Authors have a right to Forge new Words, for otherwise Languages would always remain poor, barren and weak. See Vossius (e) and many other (f) Writers upon this Head. It ought therefore to be granted, generally speaking, that Moliere had a Right to enrich his Dramatick Pieces with new Terms: all that can be said against him is, that he misused his Right; for it ought to be remembred, that the Writers of such Pieces are not sensible of the Poverty of a Language, as those who write upon Dogmatical Subjects. It ought to be confest, says Mr. Arnauld (g), that we are more sensible our Language wants Words, when we treat of Sciences, than when we speak or write about common things. This he says in a Preface, wherein he justifies the Liberty he took to invent the Words Philosophisme, Philosophistes and Advertance. 'Tis certain, that a Comick Poet is not so excusable for inventing new Words as a Philosopher. The latter is forced to it by an indispensable Necessity. Read this Complaint of Lucretius:

Nec (h) me animi fallit, Graiorum obscura reperta
Difficile inlustrare Latinis versibus esse,
(Multa novis verbis præsertim cum sit agendum.)
Propter egestatem linguæ, & rerum novitatem;
. . . .
Nunc (i) & Anaxagoræ scrutemur Homœomeriam.
Quam Græci memorant, nec nostra dicere lingua Concedit nobis patrii sermonis egestas.

'Twas not by reason of the Rules of Quantity that he wanted Words; for those who wrote Philosophical Books in Prose did likewise complain of it.

---

* See the Rem. C.

† See the Rem. C.

‡ See the 9 Satyr of Despreaux.

(a) Ibid. p. 28.

(b) Ibid. p.

(c) Prætulerim scriptor delirus inersque videri, Dum mea delectent mala me vel denique fallant, Quam sapere & ringi. Horat. l. 2. epist. 2. v. 126.

(d) Aulus Gellius l. 18. c. 11. p. m. 494, 495.

(e) Vossius institut. orator. l. 4. c. 1. p. m. 442.

(f) Theophilus Raynaud de malis ac bonis libris n. 427. p. m. 243. quotes many of 'em.

(g) Arnauld, Preface to the 5. denonciation de peché philosophique.

(h) Lucretius l. 1. v. 137.

(i) Ibid. v. 830.

inventing new Words and new Expreſſions; nay, he was very (D) often guilty of Barbariſms. You'll find in Mr. Baillet * what Judgment ought to be made of his Talent.

Some pretend, that the Glory of Invention does not belong to Moliere, and that he made a good uſe of the (E) Comedies acted by the Italians at Paris. Thoſe are in the wrong who ſay that Mr. Deſpreaux changed his Note after the Death of that great Comedian: if we may believe ſome ignorant Criticks, he praiſed him in his Life time, and blamed him when he was in his Grave. The Truth is, that he continued to commend him after his Deceaſe, only he found fault with him (F) for humouring too much thoſe that ſate in the Pit; which is a reaſonable Cenſure in ſome reſpects, but unjuſt in the main. Father Bouhours's Verſes in Moliere's Praiſe †, are the beſt that ever he made, if we rely upon ‡ Menage's Judgment. I don't

it. (k) Quanta verborum nobis paupertas, imo egeſtas ſit, nunquam magis quam hodierno die intellexi. Mille res inciderunt, cum forte de Platone loqueremur, quæ nomina deſiderarent, nec haberent: quædam vero cum habuiſſent, faſtidio noſtro perdidiſſent. Quis autem ferat in egeſtate faſtidium? Obſerve by the by, the two Cauſes of the Poverty of Languages mention'd by Seneca: one is, that ſome Words have not yet been found out; the other is, that many grow out of uſe. 'Tis alſo to be obſerved, that the Romans when they wrote nothing but Epigrams, (l) complained that they wanted Words; from whence we may conclude, that Moliere was ſenſible of the ſame want, and therefore he might well have recourſe to Invention. Laſtly, I obſerve, that the Birth of one Word is (m) commonly the Death of another. Which holds true, particularly in France; and therefore it can't be expected that our Language ſhould ever ceaſe to be poor.

(D) He was very often guilty of Barbariſms.] I might give a hundred Inſtances of it, but I ſhall confine myſelf to two, which I take out of a Piece prefixed to his Works in ſome Editions, wherein he thanks the King. He gives a wonderful Turn to it, and perhaps 'tis the beſt ſmall Piece that ever he wrote. Mind theſe four Verſes: he ſpeaks to his Muſe:

Vous pourriez aiſément (z) l'étendre,
Et parler des tranſports qu'en vous ſont éclater
Les ſurprenans bienfaits, que ſans les meriter
Sa liberale main ſur vous daigne repandre.

The Author's meaning is, that his Muſe received great Favours, tho' ſhe did not deſerve them; but according to the Grammatical Senſe, thoſe Verſes ſignifie, that tho' the King did not deſerve thoſe Favours, yet he beſtowed them upon Moliere's Muſe. And therefore this is a barbarous Expreſſion. Here is another Inſtance:

Les Muſes ſont de grandes prometeuſes,
Et comme vos ſœurs les cauſeuſes
Vous ne manqueriez pas ſans doute par le bec.

The Author means, that his Muſe would be like her Siſters, who are full of Talk; but according to the literal Senſe the plain and only Meaning of thoſe Words is, that ſhe would prove a very prattling Muſe, tho' her Siſters are of a quite contrary Humour. By a Barbariſm, I don't mean an Expreſſion or a Word taken from another Language, and unknown to the French, but a Diſpoſition of Words againſt the Rules, which is look'd upon as Barbarous by our beſt Grammarians.

There is in the ſame Poem Marquis repouſſable; which is a barbarous Word. There is alſo prevenant amas, another barbarous Term; for the Word prevenant is only uſed in the figurative Senſe, and does not denote a Man, who goes before others.

(E) And that he made a good uſe of the Comedies acted by the Italians at Paris.] I ſhall not ſcruple to quote an Anonymous Book for this: it is printed and therefore ſufficient to juſtifie what I advance; for I am only to prove that ſome will have it, that the Italian Comedies acted at Paris were Moliere's Original. Read the following Paſſage: Arlequin is brought in ſpeaking thus: “(a) If the Italian Players had never appeared in France, perhaps Moliere had never been what he was. I know he was perfectly acquainted with the old Comick Poets; but after all, he had his firſt Notions from our Stage. You know that his Cocu Imaginaire is il Ritratto of the Italians: Scaramouche interrupted in his Love, produced his Facheux: his Contre-temps are only Arlequin, Valet étourdi, and ſo with moſt of his Pieces: and in theſe latter Times, is not his Tartuffe our Bernagaſſe. 'Tis true, he excell'd in his Characters, and his Comedies are ſo full of Senſe, that they ſhould be read to young People as ſo many Inſtructions, to give 'em a true Notion of the World. And yet thoſe excellent Italian Originals produce nothing now.„

(F) For humouring too much thoſe that ſate in the Pit; which is a reaſonable Cenſure . . . . . but unjuſt.] Moliere was dead when Mr. Deſpreaux praiſed him in (b) one of his Epiſtles, as much or more than in (c) the Satyr he had inſcribed to him. 'Tis therefore a great piece of Unjuſtice to ſay, that he praiſed him out of Policy, and for fear of being bantered by him upon the Stage, if he ſhould ſay nothing to his Advantage, or if he ſhould venture to Criticize him. But, will ſome ſay, he criticized him when he had nothing to fear, and therefore the Suſpicion entertained of him ſeems to be well grounded. I am not of that Opinion; I believe that if he had made his Art Poetique in Moliere's Life-time, he would have inſerted in it the Cenſure contained in the following Verſes. It was, in a manner, eſſential to his Subject; there is in it a very judicious Obſervation, which ſhould be an inviolable Rule, if Comedies were only made to be printed; but becauſe they are chiefly deſigned to appear on the Stage in the preſence of all ſorts of People, 'tis not juſt to require they ſhould be adapted to Mr. Deſpreaux's Taſte. Theſe are his Words:

Eſtudiez (d) la Cour, & connoiſſez la ville,
L'une & l'autre eſt toujours en modeles fertile.
C'eſt par là que Moliere illuſtrant ſes écrits
Peut-eſtre de ſon Art eût remporté le prix;
Si moins ami du peuple en ſes doctes peintures,
Il n'euſt point fait ſouvent grimacer ſes figures,
Quitté pour le bouffon, l'agreable & le fin,
Et ſans honte à Terence allié Tabarin.
Dans ce ſac ridicule où (1) Scapin s'envelope,
Je ne reconnois plus l'Auteur du Miſanthrope.

He blames Moliere for endeavouring to pleaſe not only Men of a nice Judgment, but alſo the People. Moliere had ſome Reaſons for it, and might have ſaid what Arlequin anſwered in a like Caſe. (e) “Thoſe Jeſts, ſaid I to him, (to Arlequin) are pleaſant enough in your Plays; 'tis pity they are not equally good. I own it, replied he, but they pleaſe ſeveral young People, who come to our Play-Houſe only to Laugh, and who Laugh at any thing, and very often without knowing why. Our Plays are frequently acted before ſuch People, and if our Jeſts were not ſuited to their Capacity, our Stage would be very often empty. I am ſorry, ſaid I to him, that you have almoſt left your old Pieces off; they were well approved by Men of Senſe, they contain'd many things of good uſe in Morality, and I dare ſay, that your Stage was a place where Vice was ſo effectually ridicul'd, that every Body found himſelf inclined to love Virtue meerly out of Reaſon. Should we act none but our old Pieces, replied he, our Play-Houſe would be little reſorted to, and I'll tell you what Cinthio told St. Evremont, that good Actors would be ſtarved notwithſtanding their excellent Plays.„ It ought to be obſerved, that Players are at great Charges, and that Plays are no leſs deſign'd for the Diverſion of (f) the People, than for the Diverſion of the Senate; and therefore they muſt be adapted to the Taſte of the Publick, in order to draw in a great many People; for if they ſhould only contain ingenious, nice and exquiſite Thoughts, the Actors would be ruined by them, and they would be of no uſe to the people.

* Jugem. ſur les poetes, t. 5. n. 1520.

† You'll find 'em in the 5 vol. of Menage's Obſervations upon the French Language, p. 15.

‡ Ibid. p. 12.

(k) Seneca epiſt. 58. init. p. m. 261.

(l) See Pliny the Younger epiſt. 18. l. 4.

(m) Juſt as in the productions of Nature, generatio unius eſt corruptio alterius.

(z) That is, your Compliment.

(a) A nameleſs Book divided into 3 Dial. printed at Paris and in Holland in the Year 1695. p. 6. of the Dutch Edition.

(b) The 7th.

(c) The 2d.

(d) Deſpreaux, Art Poetique, Canto 3. p. m. 144.

(1) One of Moliere's Plays.

(e) A nameleſs Book p. 4, & 5.

(f) Mind theſe Words of Terence in his Prologue to his Andria. Poeta quum primum animum ad ſcribendum appulit, Id ſibi negotii credidit ſolum dari Populo ut placerent quas feciſſet fabulas.

don't know whether the Italians like Moliere's Plays, translated into their Language, by one * of their Countrymen settled in Germany. It is more difficult in a Work of this Nature than in others, to preserve all the Beauties of an Original in a Translation. What I have said of Moliere's Inclination for the Stage, is to be found with (G) new Circumstances in a Book of Mr. Perrault. The Readers will not be displeased to know what became of the Company of Players (H) headed by Moliere, when that excellent Actor came to die: it may be of great use to know his Merit.

PORCIA, the Daughter of Cato Uticensis, had such a noble Soul, that she was not corrupted by the (A) ill Examples of her Mother and of her Aunts, but only imitated the Virtues of her Father. She applied herself very much to the Study of Philosophy, and gave convincing proofs of her great Courage; for perceiving that Brutus, her Husband, was preparing himself for a great Enterprize,

A GENERAL Observation against those who criticize this Dictionary.

This is what may be said, not only against those who Criticize Moliere, but also against those who find fault with many other Books, because they don't consider the several uses they are designed for, and because there are many things in 'em which they could wish the Author had left out. What do I care for that, says one? What is it to me, says another, that such a one had a bad Wife? To what purpose so many Quotations, so many merry Thoughts, so many Philosophical Reflections, &c? Such are the Complaints of those who criticize this Dictionary: but they'll give me leave to tell 'em, that they want the most necessary Notion to pass a right Judgment upon this Work. They don't consider that it ought to be of some use to all sorts of Readers, and that if it had been intirely fram'd according to the Taste of the nicest Judges, it would go out of its natural Sphere. I would have 'em to consider, that if I had kept to their Notions of Perfection, my Book would indeed have been very acceptable to them, but then many others had been displeased with it, and it had remained in the Dust of the Booksellers Warehouses? What a poor thing would two or three large Folio's be for most Readers, if there was nothing in 'em but what may please those who pretend to Gravity, and to an exquisite Taste, and who would have the most copious Subjects explain'd the shortest way? They may, if they please, make such a Reflection as Socrates (h) made at the sight of a Fair; but the thing will nevertheless be as it ought to be.

(G) Inclination for the Stage is to be found with new Circumstances in a Book of Mr. Perrault.] Moliere is one of the illustrious Men, whose Pictures have been ingraved by Mr. (a) Begon's Care, who has also procured to the Publick their Historical Encomiums. Mr. Perrault, who wrote those Encomiums, says, (b) that Moliere was born with such an Inclination for the Stage, that it was impossible to prevent his turning Player. He had scarce made an end of his Studies, wherein he did very well succeed, that he joyned with several young Men of his Age and Inclination, and resolved to form a Company of Players, to act in the Provinces of the Kingdom. His Father .... made use of all his Friends to dissuade him from it, and not being able to prevail upon him by their Remonstrances, and the Promises they made him in his Name, he sent to him the Master in whose House he boarded the first Years of his Studies...... but the Master was so far from persuading him to leave the Profession of a Player, that young Moliere prevailed upon him to imbrace the same Profession ..... Having formed his Company, he went and acted at Rouen, and from thence he removed to Lyons, where having pleased the Prince of Conti, &c. The remaining part of the Elogy is very curious.

(H) What became of the Company of Players headed by Moliere, when that excellent Actor came to die.] What I find upon this Subject in a Book of Mr. Chappuzeau is as follows. Before that Company was settled in the Royal Palace, they discovered their Merit at Paris in the Fossez de Nesle, and in St. Paul's Ward, at Lyons, and in Languedoc. They were justly accounted the best Country-Players. The Bejar's, two Brothers, and du Parc were some of the chief Actors. Du Croisy, who headed a Country-Company, and la Grange, a very good Player, joyned with them. They acted for some time in the Hall of the petit Bourbon, by an Agreement with the Italian Players, who had been already settled there. Afterwards the Theater of the Royal Palace was open'd to them, where they acted till the beginning of Lent 1673. Moliere happening to die at that time, four Players of his Company joyned with that of the Hotel de Bourgogne, and because those that remained were not in a capacity to go on, the King was pleased to make but one Body of the Company (c) of the Marais, and of that of the Royal Palace. Mr. Colbert was order'd to pitch upon the best Actors of those two Companies, and to form out of 'em a fine Company, that should be call'd the King's Company. It was settled in the Hôtel du Roy, in the Street call'd Rue (d) Mazarine, and they began to appear in Publick upon a Sunday, the 9th of July 1673. The Players were forbidden to Act upon the Theater of the Royal Palace and upon that of the Marais. Note, that Moliere who was the first Orator of the Company of the Royal Palace, resign'd that Place to la Grange six Years before he died (e).

(A) The ill Examples of her Mother and of her Aunts.] Cato Uticensis was unfortunate in his Relation to the Fair Sex; his Star proved in that respect very unlucky and malignant. He had two Uterin Sisters, call'd Servilia: one of 'em was Brutus's Mother, and suffered herself to be debauch'd (†) by Julius Cæsar, (f) and 'twas the Talk of the whole Town. The other was married to Lucullus, and proved so Lewd, that her Husband put her away. She retired to her Brother's, who was so kind as to take her into his House, and carry her along with him in his Travels. It was no glorious thing for him to have such an infamous Woman in his House, nor convenient to take care that she should not go on in her ill Course. She (g) was not by a great deal so ill spoken of as she had been before, when it appeared, that she willingly submitted to Cato's Custody and strict way of Living, following him in his Flight: nevertheless, Cæsar did further reproach him with this Sister of his. Attilia, Cato's Wife, was so Lewd, that her Husband was obliged to part with her, having had (h) two Children by her. He married a second Wife, whom he afterwards yielded to Hortensius; and he married her again when she was a Widow and Hortensius's Heiress: which afforded Cæsar a fair opportunity of criticizing Cato's Life (k). Besides, Cato being of Age to Marry, courted a Maid who had been contracted to Metellus Scipio. Her Name was Lepida. The Contract was broke, so that being at liberty to marry, she answered Cato's Desires, and was betrothed to him. But at last, Metellus Scipio being sorry that he had broke his Ingagement, left nothing unattempted to recover Lepida, and succeeded in his Design (l). "(m) At which Cato was very much "incensed, and resolved to go to Law about it; "but his Friends persuaded him to the contrary. "However, he was so moved by his Heat of Youth "and Passion, that he writ Iambicks against Scipio, "which had all the Wit and Satyr of Archilochus, "without his Impudence and Scurrility. After this "he married Attilia, the Daughter of Sorranus, "which was the first, but not the only Woman he "ever knew; in this much less happy than Lælius, "the Friend of Scipio, who in the whole Course of "so long a Life, never knew but one Woman." The last part of this Passage is needless, with respect to the Text of this Remark; but it contains a Matter of Fact so curious, that I thought the Reader would be glad to know it. Is there any Man at this Day, of Lælius's Quality, and intimately acquainted with the General of an Army, who, like him, during the Course of a long Life, never knew any Woman but his Wife? Nay, is there any young Man of Cato's Quality, who keeps himself Chast till he gets into the Nuptial Bed? These Particulars are therefore very extraordinary, and deserved that I should lengthen the Quotation.

(B) She

---

* His Name is Nicolas di Castelli, and he styles himself Secretary to the Elect. of Brandenburg. He publish'd that Version at his Charges in the year 1698. at Leipsick in 5 vol. in 12.

(h) Quam multis rebus ego non egeo? How many things there are, said he, which I don't care for? Vide Erasmum in apoph. p. m. 168.

(a) Intendant of Justice and Marine.

(b) Perrault, of Illustrious Men p. 79.

(c) It was settled in 1673, and call'd the King's Company.

(d) Otherwise call'd the Fossez de Nesle.

(e) Taken from a Book intitled le Theatre François. Mr. Chappuzeau is the Author of it.

(†) She did also prostitute her Daughter to him.

(f) Οὕτω μὲν [illegible] Usque adeo Servilia fuit in Cæsarem pervagatus amor. Plutarch. in Bruto p. 985.

(g) Id. in Catone minore p. 785.

(h) A Son and our Porcia.

(k) Taken from Plut. in Catone minore p. 770, 784.

(l) Plut. ibid. p. 762.

(m) Id. ib.

prize, ſhe thruſt a (B) Knife into her Body, to ſhew by her patiently bearing the Pain, that ſhe could hold her Tongue, and conſequently that ſhe deſerved to be intruſted with her Husband's Secret. He imparted it to her, whereby ſhe came to know that there was a Deſign to kill Cæſar. But if ſhe raiſed herſelf then much above her Sex, ſhe appeared like other Women on the Day of the Execution; for ſhe was tranſported with ſuch a violent Uneaſineſs, that ſhe (C) fell into ſeveral Swoons, and was thought to be dead. We don't know what ſhe did, nor what ſhe ſaid when ſhe heard of the Succeſs of that Enterprize, and during the War in which her Husband found himſelf engag'd with Cæſar's Friends; but we know that having accompanied him to the Sea-ſide, and expreſs'd a great Conſtancy, ſhe could (D) not forbear ſhedding Tears at the ſight of a certain Picture, and that ſhe put an end to her Life with great (E) Courage, when ſhe heard that Brutus had killed himſelf. Note, that when ſhe married him, ſhe was the Widow of

(a) Id. in Bruto p. 989.

(B) She thruſt a Knife into her Body to ſhew, &c.] “(a) Porcia being addicted to Philoſophy, a great Lover of her Husband, and full of Courage and Prudence, reſolved not to inquire into Brutus's Secrets before ſhe had made this Trial of herſelf: She turn'd all her Attendants out of her Chamber, and taking a little Knife, ſuch as they uſe to cut Nails with, ſhe gave herſelf a deep Gaſh in the Thigh, upon which follow'd a great Flux of Blood, and ſoon after violent Pains, and a dangerous Fever, occaſion'd by the Anguiſh of the Wound. Now, when Brutus was mightily afflicted for her, ſhe in the heighth of all her Pain ſpoke thus to him: I, Brutus, being the Daughter of Cato, was given to you in Marriage, not like a Concubine, to partake only in the common Civilities of Bed and Board, but to bear a part in all your good, and all your evil Fortunes: And for my part, when I look upon you, I find no Reaſon to repent the Match; but from me, what Evidence of my Love what Satisfaction can you receive, if I may not ſhare with you in bearing your moſt hidden Griefs, nor be admitted to any of your Counſels that require Secrecy and Truſt? I know very well that Women ſeem to be of too weak a Nature to be truſted with Secrets; but certainly, Brutus, a virtuous Birth and Education, and a Converſation with the Good and Honourable, are of ſome force to the forming our Manners, and ſtrengthning our natural Weakneſs. And I can boaſt that I am the Daughter of Cato, and the Wife of Brutus; in which two great Titles, tho' before I put too little Confidence, yet now I have try'd myſelf, and find, that even againſt Grief and Pain itſelf I am invincible. Which Words having ſpoke, ſhe ſhewed him her Wound, and related to him the whole Trial that ſhe had made of her own Conſtancy: At which he being aſtoniſh'd, lifted up his Hands to Heaven, and begg'd the Aſſiſtance of the Gods in his Enterprize, that he might live to be a Husband worthy of ſuch a Wife as Porcia. So having comforted his Wife he left her.„ Valerius Maximus (a) is ſhorter in his Account, and ſuppoſes other Circumſtances, for he affirms, that ſhe knew her Husband's Deſign before ſhe wounded herſelf. He adds, that ſhe wounded herſelf the very ſame Day that Cæſar was aſſaſſinated, and that ſhe did it to try whether ſhe would be ſo courageous as to put an end to her Life, if Brutus's Attempt ſhould be attended with an ill Succeſs. Obſerve how Hiſtorians vary about the moſt memorable Adventures.

(a) Valerius Maximus l. 3. c. 2. n. 15. p.m. 254.

(C) She was tranſported with ſuch a violent Uneaſineſs, that ſhe fell into ſeveral Swoons, and was thought to be dead.] The only Deſign of Plutarch in the particular Account he gives of that Accident, is to ſhew Brutus's Intrepidity. Theſe are his Words. “(b) In the mean while there came one in all haſte from Brutus's Houſe, and brought him News that his Wife was dead: For Porcia being extreamly diſturb'd with expectation of the Event, and not able to bear the greatneſs of her Cares, could ſcarce keep herſelf within Doors, and at every little Noiſe or Voice ſhe heard, leaping forth, and ſtarting ſuddenly, like one of the mad Prieſteſſes of Bacchus, ask'd every one that came to the Forum, What Brutus was doing? and continually ſent one Meſſenger after another to enquire. At laſt, after long expectation, the Strength of her Body could hold out no longer, but overcome with her Doubts and Fears, ſhe fainted away. She had not time to betake herſelf to her Chamber, for as ſhe was ſitting amongſt her Women, a ſudden want of Spirits, and a great Stupidneſs ſeiz'd her, and her Colour chang'd, and her Speech was quite loſt. At this ſight her Women made a great and lamentable Outcry, and many of the Neighbours running to Brutus's Houſe, to know what was the Matter, the Report was ſoon ſpread abroad that Porcia was Dead; tho' ſhe recover'd in a little while, and came to herſelf again. When Brutus received this News, he was extreamly troubled, nor without Reaſon, yet was not ſo carried away by his private Grief, as to neglect the Publick Concern.„

(b) Plut. ub. ſup. p. 990.

(D) Having accompanied him to the Sea ſide . . . . ſhe could not forbear ſhedding Tears.] Plutarch's Narrative contains ſome things that are to Porcia's Honour, and therefore it will not be improperly inſerted in this Place. “(c) Brutus began to deſpair of any good Event of ſuch Proceedings; and reſolving to leave Italy, paſſed by Land through Lucania, and came to Elea by the Sea-ſide. From hence it was thought convenient, that Porcia ſhould return to Rome: ſhe was overcome with Grief to part from Brutus, but ſtrove as much as was poſſible to conceal it; but in ſpight of all her Manly Reſolutions, a Picture which ſhe found there accidentally betray'd it. The Story of it was the Parting of Hector from Andromache, when he went to engage the Greeks, giving his young Son Aſtyanax into her Arms, and ſhe fixing her Eyes upon him, with an earneſt and affectionate Look. As ſoon as ſhe ſpy'd this Piece, the Reſemblance it bore to her own Concern made her burſt out into Tears, and ſeveral times a Day ſhe walk'd where that Picture hung, to gaze at it, and weep before it. Upon this occaſion, when Acilius, one of Brutus's Friends, repeated out of Homer theſe Verſes, wherein Andromache ſpeaks to Hector, “Be careful, Hector, for with Thee my All,

“My Father, Mother, Brother, Husband fall.

“Brutus ſmiling, replied, But I muſt not anſwer Porcia, as Hector did Andromache, “Mind you your Wheel, and to your Maids give “Law.

“For tho' the natural Weakneſs of her Body hinders her from acting what only the Strength of Men can perform, yet ſhe has a Mind as valiant and as active for the good of her Country, as the beſt of us. This Relation is in the Memoirs of Brutus, written by Bibulus, Porcia's Son.„ That Bibulus, who proceeded from Porcia's firſt Marriage, wrote (d) a ſmall Book concerning the Exploits of the Romans. There was at leaſt (e) another Child by that Marriage.

(c) Id. ibid. p. 994.

(d) Id. ib. p. 989.

(e) Id. in vita Catonis minoris p. 771. A.

(E) She put an end to her Life with great Courage, when ſhe heard that Brutus had killed himſelf.] Thoſe, who don't underſtand Latin, will find hereafter in a Paſſage of Plutarch the Senſe of this Apoſtrophe of Valerius Maximus: (f) Tuos quoque caſtiſſimos ignes Porcia, M. Catonis filia, cuncta ſæcula debita admiratione proſequuntur: Quæ cum apud Philippos victum & interemptum virum tuum Brutum cognoſceres, quia ferrum non dabatur, ardentes ore carbones haurire non dubitaſti, muliebri ſpiritu virilem patris exitum imitata. Sed neſcio an hoc fortius, quod ille uſitato, tu novo genere mortis abſumpta es. Plutarch relates the ſame thing, and quotes Valerius Maximus and another Author; but he further ſays, that there was a Letter under Brutus's Name, whereby it appeared, that Porcia reſolved to die, becauſe ſhe was not aſſiſted in her Sickneſs. . . . . . “(g) As for Porcia, his Wife, Nicolaus the Philoſopher, and Valerius Maximus write, That being

(f) Valer. Maximus l. 4. c. 6. p. m. 394, 395.

(g) Plut. in Bruto in fine p. 1009.

of Bibulus, by whom she * had Children. If President du Vair had known it, he would not have ascribed (F) to her an Answer, which probably belongs to another PORCIA, Sister to Cato Uticensis, † and Wife of one Domitius Ahenobarbus, and who was doubtless endowed with noble Qualities, since ‡ Cicero, Lollius and Varro wrote an Encomium upon her. She died before Cæsar had been kill'd.

PORCIUS (Marcus) one of the greatest Men among the Ancients, commonly known by the Title of CATO THE CENSOR, was born at

" desirous to die, but being hinder'd by her Friends, " who continually watch'd her from killing her- " self, she snatch'd some burning Coals out of the " Fire, and shutting them close in her Mouth, " stifled herself, and died. Though there is yet " extant a Letter of Brutus to his Friends, in " which he laments the Death of Porcia, and ac- " cuses them for neglecting her so, that she de- " sired to die, rather than languish with her Di- " sease. So that it seems Nicolaus was mistaken in " the Time. For this Epistle (if it indeed is Au- " thentick, and truly Brutus's) gives us to under- " stand the Disease, and the Love of this Lady, " and the Manner of her Death. „

(F) President du Vair . . . . would not have ascribed to her an Answer.] One of the Decrees pronounced by that President concerns a Suit in Law in the Parliament of Provence, between a Woman, who had married again nine Months after her being a Widow, and the Relations of her first Husband. She was deprived, by virtue of that Decree, (a) of the things left her by her Husband's Last Will, and of her Nuptial Advantages, for having married again before the Year of her Mourning was out. Mr. du Vair alledges a great many Sentences out of the Pagan Authors, and the Ancient Fathers against second Marriages, and says, that our Porcia declared, that a virtuous Woman never marries but once. (b) Dido being intreated to marry again, wishes that she may rather die. . . . . . . Nevertheless, being afterwards persuaded to it, and deploring her Misfortune, she says, & quo solo sidera adibam, Extinctus pudor, as believing, with great Reason, that those who married twice, were neither honest nor happy. And therefore, as we read in Tertullian, Fortunæ muliebri coronam non imponebat nisi univiræ. Which agrees with the Saying of the celebrated Porcia, Brutus's Wife, Fœlix & pudica matrona non nubit nisi semel. That Porcia could not have said this, without condemning herself, since Brutus was her second Husband. I am apt to think, that Mr. du Vair was led into this Error for want of a due Attention in reading St. Jerome's Words. They are not exact, and besides, they contain a Falsity, and therefore they may very well occasion a Mistake; but after all, the Answer in Question is not ascribed to Porcia, Brutus's Wife, in the Words of that Father. St. Jerome having mention'd Martia, Cato's (c) younger Daughter, who would never Marry again, adds, that Brutus married Porcia, who was (d) a Maid, and that Cato married Martia, who was (e) not a Maid; and that accordingly Martia did not scruple to leave Cato, in order to Marry Hortensius, whereas Porcia would not live without Brutus. Afterwards St. Jerome mentions Porcia the younger, who made the Answer we have seen in Mr. du Vair's Passage. (f) Martia Catonis filia minor cum quæreretur ab ea, cur post amissum maritum denuo non nuberet, respondit, non se invenire virum, qui se magis vellet, quàm sua. Quo dicto ostendit divitias magis in uxoribus eligi solere, quàm pudicitiam, & multos non oculis, sed digitis uxores ducere. Optima sanè res, quàm avaritia conciliat. Eadem cum lugeret virum, & matronæ ab ea quærerent, quem diem haberet luctus ultimum: ait, quem & vitæ. Arbitror, quæ ita virum quærebat absentem, de secundo matrimonio non cogitabat. Brutus Porciam virginem duxit uxorem, Martiam Cato non virginem: sed Martia inter Hortensium Catonemque discurrit, & sine Catone vivere Martia potuit, Portia sine Bruto non potuit. Magis enim se unicis viris applicant fœminæ, & nihil aliud nosse, magnum arctioris indulgentiæ vinculum est. . . . . Portia minor, cum laudaretur apud eam quædam bene morata, quæ secundum habebat maritum, respondit: Felix & pudica matrona, nunquam præterquam semel nubit. One cannot well apprehend what he means by Porcia the younger, Porcia minor, for the ancient History does not mention two Daughters of Cato Uticensis; and if it mentions two Porcia's, 'tis to inform us, that one of 'em was Cato's Sister, and the other his Daughter. At this rate, the latter should have been Porcia the younger, Porcia minor; but she could not have declared against second Marriages so severely as St. Jerome relates it. Some will have it that he means the other Porcia, Cato's Sister. (g) Meminit Hieronymus (Porciæ Domitio nuptæ) adversus Jovinianum, qui tale ejus dictum celebrat. But why should he call her Porcia minor? 'Tis more likely that he means one Porcia, younger Sister of Brutus's Wife, and, perhaps, confounding his Notions, he calls Porcia minor the same Woman, whom he calls Martia a little before. We must remember, that Martia, Wife of Cato Uticensis, was with Child (h) when her Husband parted with her in favour of Hortensius. Perhaps, she was delivered of a Daughter, who is indifferently call'd Porcia minor or (i) Martia, tho' it was not usual for Daughters to go by their Mother's Name. Perhaps, St. Jerome, for want of Attention, changed the two Names of one Woman into two Persons. What is certain is, that the Answer he ascribes to Martia is of the same Nature with that which he ascribes to Porcia the younger. It was of some use to him to distinguish 'em; for he was very willing to increase the number of such Examples. He alledges those of Annia, and of Marcella and Valeria. The first answered, that she would not Marry again; for, said she, if I should get a good Husband, I should be afraid of losing him, and if I should get a bad one, I should find it a very hard case, having been so kindly used by my first Spouse. Marcella answered, I am so well satisfied with having been married once, that I don't want to be married again. Valeria was contented to answer, that her first Husband was still alive as to her. (l) Anniam cum propinquus moneret, ut alteri viro nuberet; esse enim ei & ætatem integram, & faciem bonam: nequaquam, inquit, hoc faciam. Si enim virum bonum invenero, nolo timere, ne perdam: si malum, quid necesse est post bonum pessimum sustinere? . . . . Marcella major rogata à matre sua, gauderet ne se nupsisse, respondit; ita valde, ut amplius nolim. Valeria Messalarum soror, amisso Servio viro, nulli volebat nubere. Quæ interrogata cur hoc faceret, ait sibi (m) semper maritum Servium vivere.

'Tis to be observed, that if these Maxims afforded a copious Subject to the Advocates, who pleaded against the Widow concern'd in Mr. du Vair's Decree, she afforded them more Matter still by her hastily marrying again, in the ninth Month of her Widowhood, and without waiting for the end of Lent. " She not only transgresses, said the Advocate (n), her private Mourning, and despises the " Memory of her late Husband and Benefactor, but " she does also defile the Time appointed for a " publick Penitence, she breaks the Laws of the " Church, and scandalizes every Body. But why " so hastily? If you could not stay till the end of " a Year already so far advanced, why didn't you " stay at least till the end of Lent, which was al- " ready half gone. Perhaps, the Heat of Youth " transported you, and as Tertullian says, despumare istis nuptiis sanguinis fervorem oportuit. Such " an Excuse could hardly be admitted from a young " Maid, in the Flower of her Age. Tho' as St. " Jerome says, libido majorem in virginibus patiatur " famem, dum dulcius putat omne quod nescit. And " will an old Woman alledge it, after she has been " twenty five Years married to a Man, who was " seventy Years old when he died? How came " you then to contain yourself during your Hus- " band's Life, when the Title of Wife, and the Co- " ver of Marriage gave you more Liberty, and the " sight of an old Man raised in you a greater " Lust? „ Many Civil Laws were thundered out against her; but she alledged against 'em (o) the Canon Law, and the Indulgence of the Pope's Decrees. 'Tis a scandalous thing, that some Injunctions of the Civil Law should have been enervated by the Canon Law, to countenance the Abuses of Marriage.

(A) Was

---

* See the End of the Rem. D.

† Plut. in Catone Utic. p. 778. F.

‡ See Cicero epist. ad Atticum 47, & 48. l. 13.

(a) Oeuvres du Sieur du Vair p. 859. Edit. of Geneva 1617. in 8.

(b) Oeuvres du Sieur du Vair p. 820.

(c) Such a Daughter of Cato is not mention'd by the Pagan Authors.

(d) This is false: she was Bibulus's Widow.

(e) Plutarch says no such thing.

(f) Hieronym. l. 1. advers. Jovinianum p. m. 36.

(g) [illegible] dict. [illegible] Mat. p. 715.

(h) Plut. in Caton minore p. 771.

(i) The Author of the Scholia upon St. Jerome ad locum supra relatum, is of Opinion, that this Martia was so called because of her Mother.

(l) Hieronymus ub. sup.

(m) Accordingly an Ancient Author says, that vidua luctus pro marito erat. Which Lucan did first transfer to the Wife of Pompey, saying, perfusa lachrymis & habet pro conjuge luctum. Du Vair ubi supra p. 820.

(n) Id. ib. p. 813.

(o) Ibid. p. 820, 854.

at * Tusculum, in the Year of Rome (A) 519. He began to bear Arms at 17 Years of Age, and ſhewed not only much Courage, but alſo a great contempt of Pleaſures, and even of (B) the Conveniencies of Life. He was a Man of an extraordinary Sobriety, and no bodily Exerciſe ſeem'd to him unworthy of him; for at his Return from his Campaigns, he betook himſelf to Plow his Ground, but did not neglect to cultivate his Mind, eſpecially in order to ſpeak well, a Talent neceſſary to him, ſince he pleaded many Cauſes in the Neighbouring Towns; which he did ſo generouſly, that he would never receive any Reward for it. The Diſcourſes of a Pythagorean † Philoſopher, which he heard at Tarentum, when that Town was re-taken by Fabius Maximus, in whoſe Army he ſerv'd, did very much ſtrengthen his Inclination for Temperance. Valerius Flaccus, who had a Country Seat near Cato's, was deſirous to ſee that young Man of whom he was told ſo many remarkable things; and finding that it was a good Plant which wanted only to be cultivated and tranſplanted into better Ground, he perſuaded him to come to Rome. Cato was eſteem'd in that City, and having ſuch an officious Patron as Valerius Flaccus, quickly raiſed himſelf. He was firſt of all elected Military Tribune, afterwards they made him Queſtor, and then by degrees he came to be || Conſul and * Cenſor. No Man was ever better qualified than he for the Office of Cenſor, nor did better diſcharge the Duties of it. He made uſe of his Severity, Eloquence and exemplary Life, to put a ſtop to the Luxury and other Vices of the Romans ‡: which was the Reaſon why it has been ſaid, that he was not leſs ſerviceable to the ‡ Republick of Rome, by ſetting up againſt Immorality, than Scipio by his Victories over the Enemies. It was well known that he would exerciſe the Cenſorſhip with the utmoſt Rigour; which was one of the Reaſons why the Patricians croſs'd him when he ſtood for that Office; but that ſame Reaſon moved the People to prefer him to all his Competitors. This Circumſtance (C) is admirably repreſented by the beſt Latin Hiſtorian, together with

* Frasc. Nep. in fragmento vitæ Catonis, Plut. in Catone majore init. pag. 335.

† His Name was Nearchus.

|| In the Year of Rome 558.

* In the Year of Rome 569.

‡ Taken from Plut. in vita Catonis Majoris.

‡ See the Paſſage of Seneca in the Rem. B.

(A) Was born . . . . . . in the Year of Rome 519.] Here is the Proof of it, (q) Anno poſt conſul primum fuerat (Q. Maximus) quam ego natus ſum. They are Cato's Words in a Book of Cicero. But the Faſti Conſulares place the firſt Conſulſhip of Fabius Maximus in the Year of Rome 520. All the Dates ſpecified in the ſame Book ſhew, that the Latin Words I have quoted ought to be read thus. See Grevius's Edition, where you'll find a Note of Vincent Contarinus, and another of Charles Langius, which clear the Matter. I infer from the Poſition of that Year, that Livy and Plutarch are miſtaken, when (r) they ſay that Cato pleaded his Cauſe at 86 Years of Age, and accuſed Sergius Galba four Years after. He died at 85 Years of Age, for it was in the Year of Rome 604, under the Conſulſhip of Lucius Marcius, and Manius Manilius, which was 85 Years before Cicero's Conſulſhip, as (ſ) Cicero obſerves. Corradus is a little miſtaken upon this Paſſage. He ſays (t), that Cato was born 7 Years after the Conſulſhip of Claudius Cento and Sempronius Tuditanus, which falls in with the Year of Rome 513; and that he was in his 30th Year under the Conſulſhip of Cornelius Cethegus and Sempronius Tuditanus, that is in the Year of Rome 549. This Computation is wrong, any Body may ſee that there are only 29 Years from the Year of Rome 520 to the Year 549. Corradus obſerves a little farther (v), that Cato was born in the Year 521, and that being dead in the Year 604, he lived at leaſt 85 Years; which is a wrong Calculation. Some Pages after (w) he ſays, that Cato died in the Year 605, at 85 Years of Age, being born in the Year 521. Which does not rectifie the Computations. However, we may ſay that he lived to that Age, for Cicero affirms it in expreſs Words. (x) Annos quinque & LXXX. natus exceſſit è vita cum quidem eo ipſo anno contra Ser. Galbam ad populum ſumma contentione dixiſſet, quam etiam orationem ſcriptam reliquit. Cato did not only write down that Pleading againſt Galba, but alſo (y) inſerted it in his Origines. Pliny (z) denotes the time of Cato's Deceaſe too indeterminately: Circa captas, ſays he, Carthaginem & Corinthum . . . . ſupremum is diem obiit. Thoſe two Towns were conquered in the Year 608. I don't find that he ſays in his 19th Book, as Glandorpius (a) will have it, that Cato died at 85 Years of Age: I only find there, that he (b) died a Year after he had perſuaded the Romans to begin the third Punick War. The 29th Book ſhould have been quoted, where theſe Words are to be found, (c) hic Cato DCV. anno urbis noſtræ obiit, LXXXV. ſuo. Paterculus agrees with this as to the Year of Rome, for he (d) ſays, that Cato died three Years before the Deſtruction of Carthage. I will not cenſure Moreri for placing Cato's Deceaſe in the Year of Rome 605, but I think it ſomewhat ſtrange, that the Fault he has committed in ſaying, that it was during the ſecond Punick War, has not been mended (e) hitherto.

(B) A great contempt of Pleaſures, and even of the Conveniencies of Life.] I ſhould be too prolix, ſhould I mention whatever is to be found in Books upon this Subject; and therefore I ſhall only ſet down a Paſſage of Seneca, whereby it appears, that Cato was contented with one Horſe for himſelf and Baggage, and look'd after him himſelf. (f) M. Cato Cenſorius (quem tam reip. hercule profuit naſci quam Scipionem: alter enim cum hoſtibus noſtris bellum, alter cum moribus geſſit) canterio vehebatur, & hippoperis quidem impoſitiis, ut ſecum utilia portaret. . . . . . O quantum erat ſæculi decus, imperatorem triumphalem, cenſorium (& quod ſuper omnia hæc eſt) Catonem, uno caballo eſſe contentum, & ne toto quidem! Partem enim ſarcinæ, ab utroque latere dependentes, occupabant. Ita non omnibus obeſis mannis, & aſturconibus, & tollutariis præferres unicum illum equum, ab ipſo Catone defrictum? He had Slaves enough to do it for him, but he rather choſe to ſave them that trouble. 'Twas his Inclination: he plowed (g) the Ground, dreſs'd like his Slaves, and then ſat down at Table with them, eating of the ſame Bread, and drinking of the ſame Wine. Seneca might have mention'd a thing more remarkable ſtill than what he relates. " (h) When he enter'd " upon the Government of Sardinia, though his " Predeceſſors there uſed to require Tents, Bed- " ding and Cloaths upon the Publick Account, and " to charge them heavily by furniſhing Proviſions " and Entertainments for a great Train of Ser- " vants and Friends: He, on the contrary, by his " Frugality ſhew'd an incredible Difference, for in " nothing wanted he the Contribution of the Pub- " lick; nay, he would walk without a Coach to " viſit the Cities, and with one only of the com- " mon Town-Officers, who carried his Garment, " and a Cup to offer Sacrifice in. „

(C) This Circumſtance is admirably repreſented by the beſt Latin Hiſtorian, together with his Elogy.] This Paſſage of Livy is ſo fine, that I can neither forbear to ſet it down at length, nor be ſo bold as to tranſlate it. (i) In hoc viro (M. Porcio) tanta vis animi ingeniique fuit, ut quocunque loco natus eſſet, fortunam ſibi ipſe facturus fuiſſe videretur: Nulla ars neque privatæ, neque publicæ rei gerendæ ei defuit. Urbanas ruſticaſque res pariter callebat. Ad ſummos honores alios ſcientia juris, alios eloquentia, alios gloria militaris provexit. Huic verſatile ingenium ſic pariter ad omnia fuit, ut natum ad id unum diceres, quodcunque ageret. In bello manu fortiſſimus, multiſque inſignibus clarus pugnis: idem poſteaquam ad magnos honores pervenit, ſummus imperator: idem in pace, ſi jus

(q) Cicero de Senect. c. 4. p. m. 392.

(r) Titus Livius l. 39. p. m. 752. Plut. in Catone Majore p. 341. 345.

(ſ) Cicero in Bruto p. m. 109.

(t) Corradus in Brutum Cicer. p. 109.

(v) Ibid. p. 110.

(w) Ibid. p. 150.

(x) Cicero ibid. p. 349.

(y) Quam rationem in Origi- es ſuas etulit aucis an- e quam ortuus it an di- us an enſibus. . ib. p. 5.

(z) Plin. 14. c. 4. m. 124.

(a) Glan- rp. in nomaſt. 714.

(b) Plin. 9. c. 13. 197.

(c) Id. lib. . c. 1. 658.

(d) Pater. l. 1. 13.

(e) I write this in March 1701.

(f) Seneca epiſt. 87. p. m. 333.

(g) Plut. in Marco Catone p. 337. See alſo Valerius Maximus l. 4. c. 3. n. 12.

(h) Idem Plutarch p. 339.

(i) Livius l. 39. p. m. 762.

with his Elogy. The Inſcription of the Statue (D) erected to him, was a glorious Teſtimony of his Reforming Inclination. He expreſſed a great Indifferency for the Erection (E) of Statues, and in general, for Praiſes †; nevertheleſs, he highly commended himſelf ‡, and was willing that People ſhould ſee in his Books the great Encomiums he beſtowed on himſelf. He made a great many Speeches, and inſerted (F) ſome of 'em in his Roman Hiſtory. That Hiſtory, and the Work he wrote β concerning the Art of War, are not extant. He compoſed ſome Books γ of Agriculture, and was very particular in the Deſcription of that Art *. He wrote alſo ſomething concerning Rhetorick, and 'tis likely he was the jus conſuleres, peritiſſimus: ſi cauſa granda eſſet, eloquentiſſimus: nec ii tantum, cujus lingua vivo eo viguerit, monumentum eloquentiæ nullum extet. Vivit imo, vigetque eloquentia ejus, ſacrata ſcriptis omnis generis. Orationes & pro ſe multæ, & pro aliis, & in alios. Nam non ſolum accuſando, ſed etiam cauſam dicendo fatigavit inimicos, ſimultates nimio plures & exercuerunt eum, & ipſe exercuit eas. Nec facilè dixeris, utrum magis preſſerit eum nobilitas, an ille agitaverit nobilitatem. Aſperi procuIdubio animi, & linguæ acerbæ, & immodicè liberæ fuit, ſed invicti cupiditatibus animi, & rigidæ innocentiæ, contemptor gratiæ, divitiarum: in parſimonia, in patientia laboris periculique ferrei propè corporis, animique, quem ne ſenectus quidem, quæ ſolvit omnia, fregerit: qui ſextum & octogeſimum annum agens cauſam dixerit, ipſe pro ſe oraverit, ſcripſeritque, nonageſimo anno Sergium Galbam ad populi adduxerit judicium. Hunc, ſicut omni vita, ita tum (cenſuram) petentem premebat nobilitas: conſenſerantque, præter L. Flaccum, qui collega in conſulatu fuerat, candidati omnes, ad dejiciendum honore eum, non ſolum ut ipſi potius adipiſcerentur, nec quia indignabantur novum hominem cenſorem videre, ſed etiam quod triſtem cenſuram, periculoſamque multorum famæ, & ab læſo à pleriſque, & lædendi cupido expectabant. Etenim tum quoque minitabundus petebat, refragari ſibi qui liberam & fortem cenſuram timerent, criminando. Et ſimul L. Valerio ſuffragabatur: illo uno collega caſtigare ſe nova flagitia, & priſcos mores revocare poſſe. His accenſi homines, adverſa nobilitate non M. Porcium modo cenſorem fecerunt, ſed etiam collegam ei L. Valerium Flaccum adjecerunt.

(D) The Inſcription of the Statue erected to him.] " (k) The People did like his Cenſorſhip wondrous " well; for ſetting up a Statue for him in the " Temple of the Goddeſs of Health, they put an " Inſcription under it, not of his Warlike Feats " and Triumphs, but ſuch a one as ſignified, That " this was Cato the Cenſor, who by his good Di" ſcipline and Ordinances reclaim'd the Roman " Commonwealth, when it was declining and ſu" pinely tumbling into Vice." Cornelius Nepos obſerves, that Cato's Severity put a ſtop to the Luxury which had already crept into the Commonwealth. (l) Cato Cenſor cum eodem Flacco factus, ſeverè præfuit ei poteſtati. Nam & in complures nobiles animadvertit, & multas res novas in edictum addidit, quare luxuria reprimeretur, quæ jam tum incipiebat pullulare.

(E) A great Indifferency for the Erection of Statues.] The following Words of Plutarch are to be found next to thoſe I have quoted in the Remark D. " Now before this Statue Honour was done to him" ſelf, he us'd to laugh at thoſe who lov'd ſuch " kind of things, ſaying, They were not ſenſible " that they glory'd chiefly in the Workmanſhip of " Engravers and Painters, but that the Citizens " bore about his faireſt Image in their Breaſts. " When any ſeem'd to wonder at him, that he " ſhould have never a Statue, when many ordina" ry Perſons had one; I wou'd, ſaid he, much ra" ther be ask'd why I have not one, than why I " have one." Ammianus Marcellinus (a) mentions this noble Anſwer. Note, that Plutarch in another place (b) of his Works, ſhould not have ſaid abſolutely, that Cato would not ſuffer that a Statue ſhou'd be erected to him.

(F) And inſerted ſome of 'em in his Roman Hiſtory.] He wrote that Hiſtory in his old Age, and divided it into 7 Books. The firſt contain'd the Actions of the Kings of Rome; the ſecond and the third contain'd the Origin of all the Towns of Italy; for which Reaſon 'tis thought he intituled the whole Work Origines. In the fourth he deſcribed the firſt Punick War; and in the fifth he deſcribed the ſecond, which he did ſummarily. He deſcribed in the ſame manner the following Wars, to the Pretorſhip of Sergius Galba, who conquered the Luſitani. He mention'd things without naming thoſe who had done 'em. He took notice of the Rarities that were to be found in Spain and Italy, and ſhewed a great deal of Learning and Exactneſs (c). Obſerve theſe Words of Cornelius Nepos, (d) ab adoleſcentia confecit orationes: Senex hiſtorias ſcribere inſtituit; and at the ſame time remember that Cicero (e) ſays, that Cato went about that Work the very ſame Year that he died. Which affords a very good Reaſon to criticize Livy (f), who ſuppoſes that Lucius Valerius, Tribune of the People, making a Speech againſt Cato in the Year 558, quoted his Origines. Cato was then but 49 Years of Age, from whence it ought to be inferred, that he had not writ that Book yet, and that Livy, who is doubtleſs the Author of the Speeches related by him, forgot to reconcile his Suppoſitions with Chronology. He affords an Argument againſt himſelf, for he obſerves in (g) another place, that Cato's Speech for the Rhodians, made in the Year 587, had been inſerted in the 5th Book of the Origines: which ſhews, that thoſe Origines had not been publiſh'd when the Tribune Valerius made a Speech againſt Cato. It were in vain to ſuppoſe many Editions of that Work, ſome larger than others, ſince no Ancient Author intimates any ſuch thing, and beſides, the firſt was only made when the Author was far (h) advanced in Years. Father Noris (i) found fault with Livy upon this Account: Voſſius (k) had ſaid before that Cardinal, that he believed Livy was miſtaken, in ſuppoſing that the Tribune (l) of the People made an Objection to Cato which he took out of his Origines. Obſerve, that we read in the Epitome of the 49th Book of Livy, that Cato's Speech againſt Galba was to be found in the Origines. But he made it the laſt Year of his Life: See above (m), what I have quoted out of Cicero. He publiſhed above 150 Speeches, very much commended by Cicero (n), tho' he obſerves, that no Body read 'em. Doubtleſs, they were uſed a hundred Years after Cato's Death, as we uſe now a Days the Speeches that were made in the States of the Kingdom of France, or at the opening of the Audiences in the XVI. Century. A Freed Man of Cicero criticiz'd with great ſubtlety, Cato's Speech for the Rhodians; but ſee in Aulus Gellius (o) the Anſwer that was made to his Criticiſms.

Let us conſider theſe Words of Cornelius Nepos, atque horum bellorum duces non nominavit, ſed ſine nominibus res notavit. The Commentators upon Pliny, without excepting Father Hardouin, knew nothing of this Paſſage. Pliny obſerves, that Cato, who had omitted the Names of the Generals in his Annals, mention'd the Name of an Elephant. (p) Certe Cato, cum Imperatorum nomina Annalibus detraxerit, eum (elephantum) qui fortiſſime præliatus eſſet in Punica acie, Surum tradidit vocatum. Read this Note of Father Hardouin. (q) Auctoris mentem aſſequi cum minime poſſent Plinii editores, hanc poſtremam vocem corruptam rati ſcripſere, cum Imperatorum nomina annalibus deſcriberet, contra fidem codicum Reg. 1. 2. cæterorumque melioris notæ, a ſcriptoris mente longiſſime aberrantes, cujus hæc ſententia eſt: Cato, inquit, imperatorum Punicorum nomina annalibus ſuis apponere neglexit: idem tamen, quod nomen elephanti eſſet, qui tunc fortiſſime præliatus, referre operæ pretium duxit. He thought that Cato had only omitted the Names of the Carthaginian Generals; he would not have thought ſo, if he had remembred the Words of Cornelius Nepos.

Note, that the Fragments of Cato's Origines publiſh'd by Annius Viterbienſis, are accounted a ſuppoſititious Piece; but thoſe which have been collected by Riccobonus, and printed at the end of his Treatiſe of Hiſtory, are genuine. They have been inlarged the firſt Roman who writ upon that Subject †. He was accuſed ſeveral times, and always defended himſelf (G) with great Force; he was ſo ſure of his Innocence, that an Action being brought againſt him, he offer'd to ſubmit to the Judgment of one of his Enemies. He was no Friend to the Phyſicians, and did not approve the Studies that (H) were moſt in vogue among the Græcians: nevertheleſs, he ſtudied β Plinius in præf. Vegetius l. 1. c. 8.

---

† Plutarch ibid. p. 347.

‡ Id. ib. & p. 344. B.

γ They are ſtill extant.

* Plut. ib. p. 351.

(k) Plut. ubi ſupra p. 347.

(l) Cornel. Nepos in fragmento vitæ Catonis p. m. 384.

(a) Cenſorius Cato .... interrogatus quamobrem inter multos nobiles ſtatuam non haberet, malo, inquit, ambigere bonos quamobrem id non meruerim, quam, quod eſt gravius, cur impetraverim muſſitare. Amm. Marcell. l. 14. c. 6. p. m. 21.

(b) Plut. in præcept. reip. ger. p. 820. B.

(c) Taken from Cornel. Nepos ub. ſup.

(d) Id. ib.

(e) See the Rem. A lett. z.

(f) Livius l. 34. p. m. 5..

(g) Id. lib. 45. p. ..

(h) Cornel. Nepos ubi ſupra.

(i) Noris Cenotaph. Piſan. p. ..

(k) Voſſius de Hiſt. Lat. l. 1. c. 5. p. 21.

(l) His Name was not Oppius, as Voſſius affirms.

(m) In the Rem. A letter z.

(n) Cicero in Bruto p. m. 11.

(o) Aulus Gellius l. 7. c. 3.

(p) Plin. l. 8. c. 5. p. m. 14.

(q) Hardouin. in Plin. tom. 2. p. 25.

inlarged by Auſonius Popma, and added by him (r) with Notes to the other Writings of Cato.

(G) He was accuſed ſeveral times, and defended himſelf . . . . and offer'd to ſubmit to the Judgment of one of his Enemies.] "(s) But neither did he himſelf 'ſcape ſcot-free in his managery of Affairs; for if he gave his Enemies but the leaſt Hold, he was ſtill in Danger, and ready to be brought to Juſtice: for he is reported to have eſcap'd at leaſt fifty Indictments, and one above the reſt, which was the laſt, when he was fourſcore and ſix Years old, about which time he had this remarkable Saying, That it was hard for him who had liv'd contemporary with others a great while ago, to plead now before a new Race of Men. Neither did he make this the laſt of his Law-Suits; for four Years after, when he was fourſcore and ten, he accus'd Servilius Galba: So that he arriv'd (we ſee, as Neſtor did) to three uſual Ages of Man, and that in continual Action." Theſe Words of Plutarch want to be mended, for 'tis not true that Cato lived ſo long, and it had been better to uſe the preciſe Number 44, as it is in Pliny. Cato primus Porciæ gentis, ſays he (t), tres ſummas in homine res præſtitiſſe exiſtimatur, ut eſſet optimus Orator, optimus Imperator, optimus Senator: quæ mihi omnia, etiamſi non prius, attamen clarius fulſiſſe in Scipione Æmiliano videntur, dempto præterea plurimorum odio, quo Cato laboravit. Itaque ſit proprium Catonis, quater & quadragies cauſam dixiſſe, nec quemquam ſæpius poſtulatum, & ſemper abſolutum. Aurelius Victor (v) made uſe of the ſame Number 44, wherein he is more exact than in what he ſays, that Cato being 80 Years of Age, ſet up for Galba's Accuſer. He ſhould have ſaid, being 85 Years of Age: See the Remark A. Moreri is ſtrangely miſtaken, when he ſays, that Cato's Enemies proſecuted him above four hundred times. I muſt not forget theſe Words of an Ancient Author. (w) Cato ſextum & octogeſimum annum agens, dum in rep. tuenda juvenili animo perſtat, ab inimicis capitali crimine accuſatus, ſuam cauſam egit. Neque aut memoriam ejus quiſquam tardiorem, aut firmitatem lateris ulla ex parte quaſſatam, aut os hæſitatione impeditum animadvertit. Quia omnia iſta in ſtatu ſuo æquali ac perpetua induſtria continebat. Quin etiam in ipſo diutiſſime actæ vitæ fine diſertiſſimi oratoris Galbæ accuſationi defenſionem ſuam pro Hiſpania oppoſuit. There are two Faults in this Paſſage, for Cato was not 86 Years old, when he pleaded the firſt of the two Cauſes mention'd by Valerius Maximus; and he was Galba's Accuſer in the ſecond, and not obliged to clear himſelf of Galba's Accuſations: the latter wanted but little of being condemn'd, and would have undergone that Puniſhment, had he not raiſed the Compaſſion of the People (a).

To make an end of what I am to ſay upon the Text of this Remark, I need only quote Valerius Maximus, whoſe Words run thus. (b) Cato ſuperior ſæpenumero ab inimicis ad cauſæ dictionem vocatus, nec ullo unquam crimine convictus: ad ultimum tantum fiduciæ in ſua innocentia repoſuit, ut ab his in quæſtionem publicam deductus, Ti. Gracchum, à quo in adminiſtratione reip. ad multum odium diſſidebat, judicem depoſceret. Qua quidem animi præſtantia pertinaciam eorum inſectandi ſe inhibuit.

(H) He was no Friend to the Phyſicians, and did not approve the Studies that were moſt in vogue among the Græcians.] I ſhall quote Plutarch, who having ſaid, that Cato was diſpleas'd to ſee the three Philoſophers deputed by the Athenians, ſo well approved at Rome, and that he adviſed the Senate to ſend 'em home immediately, goes on thus. (d) "Yet this he did not out of any Anger (as ſome think) to Carneades; but becauſe he wholly deſpis'd Philoſophy, and out of a kind of Pride, ſcoff'd at the Greek Muſes and Literature: For indeed he wou'd uſe to ſay, That Socrates was a prating ſeditious Fellow. . . . . And to fright his Son from any thing that was Greek, he us'd a much harſher Tone than was uſual with one of his Age, pronouncing, as it were, with the Voice of an Oracle, That the Romans would certainly be deſtroy'd, when they were once to be infected with Greek, tho' Time ſhew'd the Vanity of this his wayward Saying; for in truth, the City of Rome grew never greater than when they entertain'd the Greek Learning; nor had he an Averſion only to the Grecian Philoſophers, but the Phyſicians alſo; for having, it ſeems, heard how Hippocrates ſhould ſay when the King of Perſia ſent for him, and would have fee'd him even with ſeveral Talents, That he would never aſſiſt Barbarians, who were Enemies to the Grecians; he affirm'd, that this was now become a common Oath to be taken by all Phyſicians, and ſo enjoin'd his Son to have a care and avoid them; for that he himſelf had written a little Treatiſe, whereby he gave Preſcriptions, and cur'd thoſe who were ſick in his Family." If you deſire to ſee the very Words of Cato, read this Paſſage of Pliny. (e) Mox à ſævitia ſecandi urendique, tranſiſſe nomen in carnificem, & in tædium artem omneſque Medicos: quod clariſſime intelligi poteſt ex M. Catone, cujus auctoritati triumphus atque Cenſura minimum conferunt: tanto plus in ipſo eſt. Quamobrem verba ejus ipſa ponemus. Dicam de iſtis Græcis ſuo loco, Marce fili: quid Athenis exquiſitum habeam, & quod bonum ſit illorum litteras inſpicere, non perdiſcere, vincam. Nequiſſimum & indocile genus illorum: & hoc puta vatem dixiſſe: Quandocumque iſta gens ſuas litteras dabit, omnia corrumpet. Tum etiam magis, ſi Medicos ſuos huc mittet. Jurarunt inter ſe barbaros necare omnes Medicina. Et hoc ipſum mercede faciunt, ut fides iis ſit, & facile diſperdant. Nos quoque dictitant barbaros, & ſpurcius nos, quam alios opicos, appellatione fœdant. Interdixi tibi de medicis. This may ſerve to confute thoſe who ſay, that Carneades's Speech againſt Juſtice, was the chief Reaſon that moved Cato to adviſe the Senate to ſend away immediately thoſe Athenian Praters. I knew a Man of great Parts, who thought that Cato gave that Advice, becauſe Carneades had undermined the Foundations of the Roman Policy, and diſcovered a Myſtery, which was the Baſis of the Power and Glory of that ambitious Republick. Thoſe who governed it, made People believe that Reaſon and Uprightneſs were the Rule of their Actions; but Carneades ſpeaking againſt Juſtice, alledged this Proof amongſt others, (f) That the Romans would be obliged to return into Huts, if they would be Juſt, that is, reſtore what they had invaded. I believe Cato was diſpleas'd with this Argument, and clearly ſaw the Conſequences of it; but I am perſuaded that more powerful Reaſons incenſed him againſt thoſe Athenian Deputies, &c.

Here I muſt take notice of a Falſity that is to be found in Agrippa and Montagne, and which has been learnedly confuted by Mr. Drelincourt, Doctor of Phyſick. Romani quondam ſub Catone Cenſorio medicos omnes & urbe tota, & tota Italia pepulerunt, eorum funeſta mendacia, crudelitatemque averſati. They are Agrippa's (g) Words: Montagne expreſſes himſelf thus (h), The Romans had been ſix hundred Years without any Phyſicians, and having tried 'em, expell'd 'em from Rome by the help of Cato the Cenſor. Many Modern Writers might be quoted who ſay the ſame. John Langius (i), a German Phyſician, affirms, that Cato the Cenſor cauſed the Greek Phyſicians to be forbidden to come to Rome. Gaſpar à Reies (k), a Spaniſh Phyſician, ſays, that Cato's Opinion that all the Greeks and Egyptians ſhould be turn'd out of Rome, was approved without any Contradiction, and that all the Phyſicians of Rome being Natives of Greece or Egypt, were involved in the Decree pronounced by the Senate purſuant to the Deſires of that ſevere Cenſor. He adds (l), that this Proſcription was made in the Year of Rome 590, and laſted till the Reign of the firſt Emperors. But this is all groundleſs; for it cannot be proved that Cato uſed his Intereſt with the Senate or the People to obtain that Decree, or that there was ſuch a Decree in his Time. On the contrary, we read in Pliny, who of all Ancient Authors may be moſt eaſily quoted to the diſadvantage of the Phyſicians, that the Senate baniſh'd died the Greek Tongue; but 'tis faid he went about it in his (I) Old Age. He lived a * long Life; and preferved a great Strength of Body and Mind to the laft. Being a Man of a ftrong Conftitution, he wanted Women in his Old Age, and becaufe he could not (K) conceal, as much as he defired, his keeping a Concubine, he married again. His fecond Wife was not of the fame Quality with him. We fhall fee what ‡ Anfwer he made to his Son, who complain'd of it. 'Tis faid that this Under-match did not (L) prove fo advantageous to him as he expected. He was a good Husband, and a good † Father, and no lefs exact in keeping his Family in a good Order, than in reforming the Diforders of the Town. Some great Statefmen are not able to put their Domeftick Affairs upon a good Foot, and have a better Succefs and lefs Trouble in the Adminiftration of Publick Affairs, than in the Management of their Families. Cato was not like 'em, he underftood (r) At [illegible] in 8.

---

† See [illegible]

(s) Plut. in Cat. vita p. 345.

(t) Plin. l. 7. c. 27. p. 47.

(v) Galbam octogenarius accuſavit, ipſe quadragies quater accuſatus, glorioſe abſolutus. Aurel. Victor. de vir. illuſtr.

(w) Val. Maximus l. 8. c. 7. [illegible] p. m. [illegible], 678.

(a) Cicero in Bruto p. 165.

(b) Valer. Maximus l. [illegible] c. 7. [illegible] p.

(d) Plut. in Catone [illegible] p.

(e) Plin. l. 29. c. 1. p. 557, 558.

(f) Omnibus populis qui florerent imperio & Romanis quoque ipſis qui totius orbis potiuntur, ſi juſti velint eſſe, hoc eſt ſi aliena reſtituant ad caſas eſſe redeundum, & in neceſſitate ac miſeriis jacendum. Carneades apud Lactant. l. 5. c. 16. p. 341.

(g) Agrippa de vanit. ſcientiar. c. 83. p. m. 196.

(h) Montagne Eſſays Book 2. c. 37. p. m. 788.

(i) Langius epiſt. Medic. 2. l. 2. p. 482.

(k) Gaſpar à Reies in elyſio jucund. quæſt. Campo quæſt. 1. n. 13. p. m. 11.

(l) Id. ib. p. 12, 13.

* See the Rem. A.

‡ In the Rem. K.

† See the Rem. N towards the end.

---

nifh'd 'em a long time after Cato's Deceafe. (m) Et cum Græcos (antiqui) Italia pellerent, fays he, DIU POST CATONEM, excepiffe Medicos. The Meaning of this Paffage feems to be, that all the Greeks, except the Phyficians, were expell'd from Italy. 'Tis the Senfe the learned Mr. Drelincourt (n) puts upon it; but 'tis certain, thofe Words are to be underftood otherwife; they fignifie, that the Phyficians were particularly comprehended in the Expulfion; for had they been excepted, Pliny would have had no occafion to alledge the Reafons fo exactly mention'd by him to juftifie Cato, and the Severity of the Roman Senate. Non deferam Catonem, they are his Words in the following Page, tam ambitiofæ artis invidia à me objectum, aut Senatum illum qui ita cenfebat. It appears from the Dictionaries (o) about the Civil Law, that the Word excipere very often fignifies not to except or to exclude, but namely and exprefly to include. Note, That Pliny fhould not have faid, that the City of Rome was without Phyficians for the fpace of fix hundred Years. Mr. Drelincourt fhews the contrary in a Speech he delivered (p) in July 1671. 'Tis a very good Apology for the Phyficians, and it has been reprinted twice. See alfo Gafpar (q) à Reies.

(I) 'Tis faid he ftudied the Greek Tongue in his Old Age.] I make ufe of thefe Words, 'tis faid, becaufe there are fome Authorities pro and con. Cato, one of the Interlocutors in Cicero's Dialogue de Senectute, declares, that he began to learn the Greek Tongue in his Old Age. (r) Quid, quod etiam addifcunt (Senes) aliquid? ut Solonem verfibus gloriantem videmus, qui fe quotidie aliquid addifcentem fenem fieri dicit: ut ego feci, qui Græcas litteras fenex didici. Quas quidem fic avide arripui, quafi diuturnam fitim explere cupiens. Let us confider this Paffage of Plutarch: (ſ) "He is faid to have learn'd "Greek late, and when he was pretty Old; and "that as to his Rhetorick, he profited a little by "Thucydides, but much more by Demofthenes: And "indeed his Writings are handfomly mix'd both "with Greek Sayings and Hiftories; nay, many of "them tranflated Word for Word, are interwoven "with his own Apophthegms and Sentences." This Paffage does not favour Cicero, and one might infer from it, that Cato was not fo Old when he learn'd the Greek Tongue. What I am going to fay is ftill more proper to fhew that he learn'd it much fooner than 'tis thought. Plutarch confutes thofe who faid, that there was ftill a Speech of Cato deliver'd in Greek before the Athenians. 'Tis not true, fays Plutarch (a), for he fpoke to the Athenians by an Interpreter, tho' he might have made his Harangue in Greek, if he had been willing. Cato was not then 45 Years of Age. Some Hiftorians fay, that being Prætor in Sardinia, he was taught the Greek Tongue by Ennius. (b) In prætura Sardiniam fubegit ubi ab Ennio Græcis literis inftitutus. This fubegit of Aurelius Victor is an Untruth, which Moreri did not perceive. Sardinia was already conquer'd when Cato was fent thither in the Quality of Prætor. Moreri fays, he conquered it in the Year 556. Mrs. le Fevre (c) places that Prætorfhip in the Year 555, and therefore Cato was then but 36 Years of Age, and confequently it cannot be faid that he learn'd the Greek Tongue in his Old Age, or the Teftimony of Aurelius Victor ought to be rejected. I fhall quote (d) hereafter fome Words of Cicero, whereby it appears that our Cato had no Greek Learning.

(K) He could not conceal . . . . his keeping a Concubine, he married again.] The following Paffage out of Plutarch is a good piece of Hiftory. "(e) Having loft his own Wife, he married his "Son to the Daughter of Paulus Æmilius, who was "Sifter to Scipio; fo that being now a Widower "himfelf, he made ufe of a fmall Girl, who came "privately to him; but the Houfe being very lit- "tle, and a Daughter in-Law alfo in it, the In- "trigue was quickly difcovered; for the young "Wench feeming once to pafs by a little too bold- "ly to Cato's Bed-Chamber, the Youth, his Son, "though he faid nothing, feem'd to look a little "grim upon her; the old Man perceiving it a lit- "tle offenfive, without finding any Fault, or fay- "ing a Word, away he goes, as his Cuftom was, "with his ufual Company to the Market: Among "the reft, he call'd aloud to one Salonius, a Clerk "of his, and ask'd him whether he had married "his Daughter?" The Conclufion was, that Cato defired to have that Maid, and the Match was quickly ftruck up. . . . . "Now whilft this fame "Marriage was in hand, Cato's Son, taking fome "of his Friends along with him, went and ask'd "his Father, for what Offence he brought in a "Mother-in-Law upon him; but Cato prefently "cried out, Soft and fair, good Son, what thou "do'ft is agreeable enough to me, nor do I find "any Fault with it; only I defire to have many "Children, and to leave the Commonwealth more "fuch Citizens as thou art. . . . . . Cato had a Son "by this fame fecond Venter, to whom, from his "Mother, he gave the Sir-name of Salonius." This Cato Salonius was the Father of Marcus Cato, the Father of Cato Uticenfis.

(L) This Undermatch did not prove fo advantageous to him as he expected.] St. Jerome being to prove, that thofe who marry a poor Wife to be quiet at Home, don't obtain their end, alledges the Example of Cato. The Severity of that Cenfor could not free him from the ill effects of his Wife's Pride, tho' fhe was a Woman of a mean Extraction. (g) M. Cato Cenforius habuit uxorem Actoriam Paulam, humili loco natam, vinolentam, impotentem, & (quod nemo poffet credere) Catoni fuperbam. Hæc ideo dico; ne quis putet fi pauperem duxerit, fatis fe concordiæ providiffe. I don't find that Cato had above two Wives. But this Paffage of St. Jerome cannot be underftood of the firft, and therefore ought to be underftood of the fecond, tho' Plutarch does not call her Actoria Paula, and fays, fhe was the Daughter of one Salonius. He gives us the following Account of Cato's firft Marriage. "(h) He married a Wife "more Noble than Rich; being of Opinion never- "thelefs, that both of them fo qualified, are ufu- "ally Haughty and Proud: But yet that thofe of "Noble Blood, wou'd be more afham'd of bafe "things, and confequently more obedient to their "Husbands in all that was fit and handfome for "them." From whence we may infer, that he was refolved to bear the Pride of his Wife, whether fhe was Noble or Rich; but that he hoped a Wife of a good Family would make him lefs uneafie than a Rich one: He took other meafures in his fecond Marriage, he pitch'd upon a Wife of no Birth and no Fortune, and yet fhe proved Proud and Paffionate: fo eafie it is to be deceived, and to make a wrong guefs about fuch a thing. See the Remark G in the Article of Aventinus. A famous Author quotes that Paffage of St. Jerome, in one of his Books, wherein he difapproves the Cuftom of requiring from the Students in Divinity and the Minifters, that they fhall Marry the Widows or Daughters of the Paftors whom they are to fucceed. He fays, that fuch a Condition is fomewhat Tyrannical, (i) and that it were better to leave 'em at liberty to chufe a Wife with a pretty good Portion. Ut non probo, fays he (k), illius patris inftitutum, (videatur Plutarch. in Demetr.) qui ut perfuadere poffet filio, vetulam locupletem ſtood Oeconomicks as well as Politicks, and found the way to confine his Servants (M) to the moſt ſtrict Silence. One would think that he was to blame for ſuffering them to lie † with his Maids for a certain ſum of Money which they were to pay him; but he had ſome Reaſons for it. He was more liable to Cenſure upon another Account, I mean for his eagerneſs to improve (N) his Eſtate, and increaſe his Revenues; for he was guilty of the worſt ſort of Uſury. I have mention'd, in * another place, the Speech he made for the preſervation of the Law, whereby Women were forbidden to wear Fineries; I have alſo pointed, in the ſame place, at a Speech which ſhews, that he knew how to briſk-up the majeſty and gravity of his Diſcourſes. We ſhould have a wrong Notion of him, ſhould we think that Auſterity was the only Character of his Speeches and Converſations; for he knew how to intermix 'em with Railleries and

---

(m) Plin. l. 29. c. 1. p. 668, 669.

(n) Drelincurt. Apologia Medica p. 47. edit. 1693.

(o) See Father Hardouin upon this Paffage of Pliny.

(p) In the Univerfity of Leyden.

(q) Ubi fup. n. 17.

(r) Cicero de Senectute c. 8. p. m. 406. See alfo c. 1. p. 386. & Valerius Maximus l. 8. c. 7. n. 1.

(ſ) Plut. in Catone Majore p. 337.

(a) Plut. ub. fup. p. 343.

(b) Aurel. Victor de viris illuft. p. m. 70.

(c) Anna Tanaquilli Fabri filia in Aurel. Victor ib.

(d) In the Rem. V. lett. d.

(e) Plut. ubi fupra p. 350.

† See the Remark M.

* In the Remark B. of the Article Pretextatus.

ſem uxorem ducere, ex Euripidis Phœniſſis occinebat: Ubi lucrum ſuadet, reluctetur licet natura uxorem ducatis: ita neque conſultum paſſuri, ut reſpectu unius miſericordiæ, pauperem uxorem domum ducat. Nam licet poëta Græcus exiſtimet, ſponſam ſine dote non habere loquendi libertatem: talis tamen ſæpe deprehenditur procaciſſima eſſe, atque marito ſuo quam immorigera; imo nec abſimilis Alteriæ Paulæ, quam (teſtis eſt Hieronym. lib. 1. in Jovin.) cum Cenſorius Cato, &c. There may be ſome Reaſon in what he ſays.

(M) Found the way to confine his Servants to the moſt ſtrict ſilence.] The following Paſſage ſhews how he behav'd himſelf towards his Slaves. (m) "He "purchas'd a great many Slaves out of the Captives taken in War, but chiefly he bought up "the young ones, who were capable to be (as it "were) broken and taught like little Whelps and "Colts; but none of theſe ever went into another Man's Houſe, except ſent either by Cato "himſelf, or his Wife. If any one of them were "ask'd what Cato did, they anſwer'd, Nothing "that they knew of. When a Servant was at "home, he was oblig'd either to do ſome Work, "or Sleep; for indeed Cato lov'd thoſe moſt, "who us'd to lie down often to take a Nap, accounting them more docile than thoſe who ſate "up much, and more fit for any thing, when they "were refreſh'd with a little Slumber. Being "alſo of an Opinion, That Servants would take the "greateſt pains imaginable to ſatisfie their Venery, he ſet a certain price to be paid by thoſe "who conſorted with his Bondwomen, but wou'd "ſuffer none to be concern'd with any others abroad. At firſt, when he was but a poor Soldier, he wou'd not be difficult in any thing "which related to his Diet, but look'd upon it "as a pitiful mean thing, to quarrel with a Servant for the ſake of his own Belly; but afterwards, when he grew richer, and made any "Feaſts for his Friends and Comrades, preſently "when Supper was done, would he with a Leathern Thong ſcourge thoſe who had waited and "dreſs'd the Meat careleſly. He always contriv'd "too, that his Servants ſhould have ſome difference one among another, always ſuſpecting "and fearing a good Underſtanding between 'em. "Now thoſe who had committed any thing worthy of Death, he accordingly puniſh'd, if in the "Opinion of their Fellow-Servants they were "found guilty.,, This Paſſage contains ſeveral Particulars, whereby it appears, that Cato was a Man of great Senſe and great Ability. His finding out a way to prevent his Servants divulging what paſs'd in his Houſe, is a greater Exploit than one can think. Such a thing is near as difficult as to find out the Philoſophers Stone: beſides it is of great advantage; for can there be a greater Slavery, than to be afraid of the prattling of one's Servants? 'Tis to be a Slave in one's own Houſe. This is admirably well expreſs'd by Juvenal.

(m) Plut. ubi ſupra pag. 348.

(a) Taceant illi, ſed prodere malunt
Arcanum, quam ſubrepti potare Falerni,
Pro populo faciens quantum Lauſella bibebat.
Vivendum recte cum propter plurima, tunc his Præcipue cauſſis, ut linguas mancipiorum
Contemnas: nam lingua mali pars peſſima ſervi.
Deterior tamen hic, qui liber non erit, illis
Quorum animas & farre ſuo cuſtodit, & ære.

a) Juven. at. 9. . 115.

Cato had not ſo much reaſon as many other Romans to be afraid of the Indiſcretion of his Slaves; but he look'd upon their Silence as a thing that was requiſite in a well order'd Houſe. He is not to blame for hating their Sprightlineſs; for commonly the more lively and ingenious Foot-men are, the greater Knaves they are. When the Miniſters of a Prince don't love one another, ſome keep a watchful Eye over the Conduct of others, they dread one another, and their Maſter is thereby better ſerved, and leſs betrayed. The ſame may be ſaid, in proportion, concerning private Families, where there are a great many Servants; and it may be inferr'd from thence, that Cato acted according to his uſual Prudence, when he cunningly fomented Diſcord among his Domeſticks. He cannot be ſo well excuſed for permitting them to lie with his Maids for a certain Price. It was a natural conſequence of his forbidding them to ſport out of his Houſe; but at preſent ſuch a Regulation would not be approv'd; there is no Houſe of Honour where ſuch a Sport is allow'd; and Maids are turn'd out whether they play their lewd Tricks at home or abroad. As for the Men, 'tis requir'd they ſhould keep themſelves chaſte, at leaſt within Doors.

(N) His eagerneſs to improve his Eſtate . . . . he was guilty of the worſt ſort of Uſury.] "(b) But "being, after all, much given to an extravagant "deſire of Gain, he look'd upon Agriculture rather as a Pleaſure than Profit; reſolving therefore to lay out his Money in laſting and ſolid "things, he purchas'd Ponds, Hot-Baths, Grounds "full of Fullers-earth, Paſtures and Wood, whereby a great Revenue flow'd in unto him, and "ſuch a one (he us'd to ſay) as Jupiter himſelf "could not hurt. He was alſo given to a moſt "blameable Uſury in his Traffick by Sea; and "that thus: He would that thoſe whom he put "out his Money to, ſhou'd have many Partners: "Now when the number of them and their Ships "came to be fifty, he himſelf would put in "but one Share; for which Quintion, whom he "had made a Freeman, and who traded and "ſail'd along with the ſaid Adventurers, was "to be his Factor; ſo that thus there was "no danger of loſing his whole Stock, but "only a little Part, and that with a Proſpect of "great Profit. He likewiſe lent Money to thoſe "of his Slaves who would borrow any, with "which they bought alſo other young ones, "whom, when they had taught and bred up at "his Charges, they wou'd ſell again at the Year's "end; but ſome of them Cato would keep for "himſelf, giving juſt as much for them as another "had offer'd. To incline his Son to be of this "kind of Temper, he wou'd uſe to ſay, That it "was not like a ſolid Man to leſſen an Eſtate, but "rather like a weak Widow. But a farther Argument of Cato's avaricious Humour, was, when "he took the boldneſs to affirm, That he was moſt "wonderful, nay, a Godlike Man, who left more "behind him than he received.,, Theſe are wrong Maxims: His Advice and his Example, in this reſpect, were very pernicious to his Son, and did not anſwer the Care he had taken to bring him up, like a good Father. He himſelf taught him Learning, tho' he had a Slave who taught many others: "(c) But he thought not fit, as he himſelf ſaid, "to have his Son reprimanded by a Servant; or "pull'd, it may be, by the Ears, when found "tardy in his Leſſon: Nor would he have him "owe to a Servant the obligation of ſo great a "thing and agreeable Strokes: He had (O) many witty Sayings; his Converſation might have pleaſed young People; he talk'd freely at Table with his Friends, and had always ſome merry Thoughts. He was then very well pleaſed to hear 'em diſcourſe of the Merit of Illuſtrious Men, but would not ſuffer that the Wicked ſhould be well or ill ſpoken of. I muſt not forget the Judgment he made of Kings, whom he took to be inferior (P) in Merit to the Great Men who had flouriſhed in a Republican State. I muſt alſo take notice of the Opinion he entertain'd of Women (Q) guilty of Adultery: He believed they were all Poiſoners. The Puniſhment he inflicted upon a Roman Senator for * kiſſing his Wife in the preſence of his Daughter, was ſtill more rigid, for he ſtruck him out of the Liſt of the Senators merely upon that Account. 'Tis ſaid (R) that he would not have grown young again; a Thought very worthy of his great Senſe.

(b) Plut. ubi ſupra pag. 349.

(c) Plut. ibid. pag. 348.

* See the Remark O. towards the end.

" thing as his Learning; wherefore he himſelf " (as we were ſaying) taught him his Grammar, " Law, and Fencing: Nor did he only ſhew him " too how to throw a Dart, to fight with other " Arms, and to Ride; but even to play at Fiſty-" Cuffs, to endure both Heat and Cold, and to " ſwim over the moſt rapid and rough Rivers. " He ſays likewiſe, That he wrote Hiſtories in " great Characters, with his own Hand, that ſo " his Son, without ſtirring out of the Houſe, " might learn the Experience and Virtuous Ex-" ploits of his Forefathers: Nor did he leſs ab-" ſtain from ſpeaking any thing obſcene before " his Son, than if it had been in the preſence of " thoſe ſacred Virgins which we call Veſtals." See the Margin (d).

(O) He had many witty Sayings.] (e) Plutarch has collected many of 'em: I ſhall only mention one, uſing Balzac's Paraphraſe and Prologue. " The very Cenſors, Madam, tho' Sadneſs ſeem'd " to be one of the Functions of their Office, did " not altogether lay aſide all manner of Raillery. " They were not always bent upon Severity; and " the firſt Cato, that troubleſome and intolerable " honeſt Man, ceaſed ſometimes to be trouble-" ſome and intolerable. He had ſome glimpſes " of Mirth, and ſome intervals of good Humour. " He dropt now and then ſome Words that were " not unpleaſant; and you may, Madam, judge " of the reſt by this. He had married a very " handſome Wife, and Hiſtory tells us, That ſhe " was extremely afraid of the Thunder, and lo-" ved her Husband very well. Thoſe two Paſſi-" ons prompting her to the ſame thing, ſhe al-" ways pitch'd upon her Husband as a Sanctuary " againſt Thunder, and threw herſelf into his " Arms, at the firſt noiſe ſhe fancied ſhe heard " in the Sky. Cato, who was well pleaſed with " the Storm, and very willing to be careſs'd more " than uſually, could not conceal his Joy: He " revealed that domeſtick Secret to his Friends, " and told 'em one Day, ſpeaking of his Wife, " that ſhe had found out a way to make him love " bad Weather, and that he never was ſo happy " as when Jupiter was angry (a)."

It will not be improper to obſerve at what time he ſaid this; it was during his Cenſorſhip, when he degraded the Senator Manlius, who, 'tis likely, would have been made Conſul the Year following, and was only degraded for giving a Kiſs (b) to his Wife in the Day time, and in the preſence of his Daughter. Some are of Opinion, That at Rome, and in ſome other Countries, 'tis neither becoming nor prudent, for a Husband to careſs his Wife in the ſight of his Children; nevertheleſs, they believe that Cato was too rigid, and that he made the Education of Children too difficult: They take it to be a piece of Injuſtice, that the Senator Manlius ſhould have paid ſo dear for ſuch a Kiſs. Plutarch taxes Cato with too great a Severity, but at the ſame time he blames Manlius. Theſe are his Words. (c) " Cato de-" priv'd a Roman Senator of the Senatorial Dig-" nity, becauſe he kiſs'd his Wife in his Daugh-" ter's preſence, wherein he was a little too rigid. " But if it be (d) a ſhameful thing, as certainly " it is, to kiſs and embrace one another in the " preſence of others; it is more ſhameful ſtill to " abuſe and chide one another, to ſport with a " Wife in private, and then to reprove and give " her hard Words before every body."

(P) The Judgment he made of Kings, whom he took to be inferior in merit, &c.] (e) " King Eu-" menes being come to Rome, the Senate gave " him a very good Reception, and the greateſt " Men of the Town ſtriv'd to make much of him. " But Cato appear'd unwilling to do the ſame, " and did not care to ſee him. Whereupon a " Friend of his told him, I wonder you ſhun " King Eumenes, who is a very good Prince, and " a great Friend to the Romans. To which he " anſwer'd, I have nothing to ſay againſt it: " however, this I muſt needs ſay, that a King is " by his Nature a Ravenous Beaſt; and there ne-" ver was a King, tho' never ſo commendable, " that deſerv'd to be compar'd with Epaminondas, " Pericles, Themiſtocles, Manius Curius, or Amilcar, " ſurnamed Barca." Which puts me in mind of what I have heard ſome Engliſh Gentlemen ſay, that Royalty is a very chargeable thing, and that many Soldiers and Ships would be maintain'd with what is neceſſary for the Maintenance of a King. 'Tis certain that a King's Expences, merely for the Civil Liſt, are prodigious. How many Guards and Officers muſt be kept in Pay? One Volume would not be ſufficient to explain all the Offices belonging to the Court of the Emperor of Conſtantinople; and any one who reads the State † of France, and finds ſo many uſeleſs Men in it, the twentieth part whereof would be ſufficient to ſerve the King, muſt needs own, that that very thing would be a burthen upon the People. The ſame Superfluities are to be ſeen, in proportion, in all Monarchical Governments; and if it had been ſaid, that they may be of uſe to imprint a reſpect in the Inferiors, and to give Foreigners a great Notion of the Power of a Prince, Cato would have anſwer'd, That that very thing ſhewed that Kings are ſuch as he deſcribed them.

(Q) The Opinion he entertain'd of Women guilty of Adultery: He believed they were all Poiſoners.] Quintilian ſays, This Judgment was an Authority that might be alledged by an Advocate pleading againſt an Adultereſs, who is accuſed of being a Poiſoner. (f) Si cauſſam veneficii dicat adultera, non Marci Catonis judicio damnata videatur, qui nullam adulteram non eandem eſſe veneficam dixit? Quintilian is in the right to think that this Sentence of Cato was of ſome weight in the Cauſes ſpecified by him; but, generally ſpeaking, it is not to be admitted. If it be true, that a Husband has been poiſoned, and that his Wife had committed Adultery, thoſe who think ſhe is guilty of her Husband's Death, go upon ſtrong Preſumptions, and may lay great ſtreſs upon her Adultery; but it would be wrong to infer, without any Exception, that ſince a Wife is not faithful to her Husband ſhe will poyſon him. Many ſuch Women are kind to their Husbands, and take care of them when they are Sick. In a word, they would by no means poyſon 'em, tho' they were of a Croſs Humour: and therefore Cato's Maxim is overſtrained.

(R) That he would not have grown young again.] The Words aſcribed to him by Cicero, upon this Subject are admirable. (g) Quo quidem me (h) proficiſcentem haud ſane quis facile retraxerit, neque tam-

(d) Cato practis'd a very fine Maxim, which Juvenal deſcribes thus Nil dictu fœdum viſuque hæc limina tangat, Intra quæ puer eſt. Procul hinc, procul inde puellæ Lenonum, & cantus pernoctantis paraſiti. Maxima debetur puero reverentia: ſi quid Turpe paras, nec tu pueri contempſeris annos, Sed peccaturo obſiſtat tibi filius infans. Juven. ſat. 14. v. 44. See alſo Plato in the 5 Book de legibus.

(e) Plut. ubi ſupra pag. 340. & in apophth. pag. 198.

(a) Balzac, Diſcours à Madame la Marquiſe de Rambouillet, pag. m. 49, 50. of his Oeuvres diverſes. (b) Plut. ibid. pag. 345. (c) Id. in præceptis conjugalibus, pag. 139. D. E. (d) Εἰ δὲ αἰσχρὸν ἐστὶν (ὥσπερ ἐστὶν) ἑτέρων παρόντων ἀσπάζεσθαι καὶ περιβάλλειν ἀλλήλους. Sed tamen ſi eſt (ut profecto eſt) turpe conjuges in præſentia aliorum blandiri, oſculari, & amplecti ſeſe invicem. Id. ib.

(e) Plut. in Caton. pag. 34.

† 'Tis a Book reprinted very often. ' Codinus (they are Vigneul-Marville's words, p. 70. of the 3 Volume of his Melanges) ' in his Account of ' the Ceremonies ' obſerved ' at the ' Table of ' the Emperors of ' Conſtantinople, ' makes ' me ſweat ' at the ' ſight of ' ſo many ' Myſteries.

(f) Quintil. inſt. orat. lib. 5. cap. 11. p. m. 244.

(g) Cicero de ſenect. cap. ult. p. m. 452.

(h) That is, to the place whither the Souls repair when they leave their Bodies.

Senſe. What he told a Nobleman, whom he ſaw coming out of a Bawdy-Houſe, favours (S) of a looſe Morality; but he might have excuſed himſelf by alledging this Axiom, that out of two Evils the worſt ought to be avoided. 'Tis a Miſtake to ſay, that he introduced (T) among the Romans the Cuſtom of kiſſing their Kinſwomen, to know whether they had drunk Wine. He was both tamquam (i) Pellam recoxerit, & ſi quis Deus mihi largiatur, ut ex hac ætate repueriſcam, & in cunis vagiam, valde recuſem: nec vero velim, quaſi decurſo ſpatio, ad carceres à calce revocari: quid enim habet vita commodi? quid non potius laboris? ſed habeat ſane; habet certe tamen aut ſatietatem, aut modum; non lubet enim mihi deplorare vitam, quod multi & ii docti ſæpe fecerunt, neque me vixiſſe pœnitet: quoniam ita vixi, ut non fruſtra me natum exiſtimem: & ex vita ita diſcedo, tamquam ex hoſpitio, non tamquam ex domo: commorandi enim natura diverſorium nobis, non habitandi dedit. Obſerve the Coherence of the Maxims of that Great Man. He was not ſorry that he had lived, he believ'd he had acted a glorious Part upon the Stage of the World, and yet he would not go through it again, (k) if a God ſhould offer it him; and he does not inſiſt upon a Reaſon, which he took to be a true one, viz. That this Life is liable to a thouſand Inconveniencies, and has very few Conveniencies.

(S) What he told a Nobleman whom he ſaw coming out of a Bawdy-Houſe, ſavours of a looſe Morality; but he.] I think Horace is the only Perſon who mentions this Particular,

Nil (l) medium eſt. Sunt, qui nolint tetigiſſe, niſi illas,
Quarum ſubſutâ talos tegat inſtita veſte:
Contrà, alius nullam, niſi olenti in fornice ſtantem.
Quidam notus homo cùm exiret fornice, Macte
Virtute eſto, inquit ſententia dia Catonis.
Nam ſimul ac venas inflavit tetra libido,
Huc juvenes æquum eſt deſcendere, non alienas
Permolere uxores.

That is, as M. Dacier renders it, "People don't "know how to keep a Medium. Some don't "care to meddle with any Women, but ſuch La-"dies as wear Long Robes trim'd with Purple. "Others are only for Common Women. Where-"upon 'tis ſaid, that the Divine Cato ſeeing a "Man of Quality coming out of a Bawdy-Houſe, "told him: Well done, dear Sir, go on; thi-"ther you ought to go, when you are inflam'd "with Love, inſtead of debauching your Neigh-"bour's Wife." Here follows Mr. Dacier's Note upon Macte virtute eſto: (m) "They are the "Words of Cato the Cenſor, who ſeeing a Man "of Quality coming out of a Bawdy-Houſe, prai-"ſed him, and exhorted him to do always ſo; "but obſerving afterwards that he kept there "continually, he told him, Friend, I praiſed you "for going thither ſometimes, but not for making "your conſtant abode in that place. Adoleſcens, ego "te laudavi quòd interdùm huc venires; non quod "hic habitares."

(T) 'Tis a Miſtake to ſay that he introduced among the Romans the Cuſtom of kiſſing their Kinſwomen, to know.] There is no doubt that the Romans (a) forbad Women the uſe of Wine, and that to prevent their drinking of it in private, they introduced the Cuſtom for Men to kiſs their Kinſwomen; but 'tis not true that Cato eſtabliſh'd that Law or that Cuſtom. We read in Pliny (b) that one Egnatius Mecenius, who kill'd his Wife, becauſe ſhe had drank Wine, was acquitted by Romulus. VVe read the ſame thing in Servius, upon the 737 Verſe of the 1ſt Book of the Æneid. The Abſolution of that Husband ought not to be look'd upon as a ſtrange thing, ſince by the Law of Romulus the Puniſhment of a Wife for her Crimes was left to the Diſcretion of the Husband and Relations; and the two greateſt Crimes ſhe could be guilty of, were to be unfaithful to her Husband, and to drink Wine. Romulus, when he eſtabliſh'd that Law, was perſuaded that a Woman guilty of Adultery would attempt any thing; and that the drinking of Wine was the beginning of Adultery. This you may ſee in (c) Dionyſius Halicarnaſſeus. 'Tis highly probable, that the firſt King of Rome followed therein the old Laws of Italy, among which none was more ancient than that whereby Women were forbidden to drink Wine; for we find that King Faunus whipt his Wife to death, becauſe ſhe drank ſome, contrary to Cuſtom. (d) Sex. Clodius in eo libro quem Græcè ſcripſit, refert Fauni hanc uxorem fuiſſe: quæ quia CONTRA MOREM, decuſque regium clam vini ollam ebiberat, & ebria facta erat, virgis myrteis à viro uſque ad mortem cæſa. Plutarch mentions this, as you'll ſee hereafter, in a Place where I correct a Fault, which, as far as I can remember, the Criticks have taken no notice of.

From what has been ſaid, it ought to be infer'd, That Cato the Cenſor was not the Author of that Law I have been ſpeaking of; and therefore there is a great Miſtake in theſe Words of Lomeierus: (e) Apud Romanos mulieres paſſim oſculo ſalutabantur à propinquis, quo explorarent, an contra legem temetum olerent. Inſtitutum hoc erat Catonis teſte Plinio, lib. 14. cap. 13. This he ſays in his Diſſertation concerning Kiſſes. He has quoted Pliny, without giving himſelf the trouble to conſult him; for if he had conſulted him, he would have found that Pliny cites Cato, not as having introduced thoſe Cuſtoms, but only as a Writer, who mention'd them. (f) Cato (ſcripſit) ideo propinquos feminis oſculum dare, ut ſcirent an temetum olerent. Hoc tum nomen vino erat, unde & temulentia appellatur. I think Lomeierus took what he ſays from Kempius, whoſe Words he read with little Attention. He has vented a Falſity for want of underſtanding the Words of that Writer; and another, tho' he underſtood 'em. Kempius affirms, That Women were forbidden the uſe of Wine by Cato's Authority; and that afterwards the Men began to kiſs their Kinſwomen, to know whether they acted contrary to the Law. (g) Poſtmodum Succeſſu (h) temporis cum ex auctoritate M. Catonis vinum mulieribus interdictum eſſet, primùm viri cognatarum os cœperunt oſculari, ut odor indicium faceret, ſi bibiſſent. Affinibus & propinquis oſculari eas jus eſt, ut ſobrias comprobent, inquit Arnobius Lib. II. adverſus gentes. Vinum enim mulierem bibiſſe perindè erat, ac ſi in adulterio ac gravi crimine deprehenſa, capitali ſupplicio plectenda eſſet, ceu Plinius habet Libro XIV. Hiſtor. Nat. cap. 13. 'Tis plain that the Quotation out of Pliny, at the End of this Paſſage, does not concern the beginning of it; and yet Lomeierus made uſe of it to prove what he tranſcribed from Kempius, at the beginning of the Latin Words I kave juſt now quoted.

Here is the Fault, which, as I have ſaid, has not been obſerved in Plutarch's Text. That Hiſtorian having ask'd why the Roman Ladies carried no Myrtle into the Chappel of the Good Goddeſs, tho' they uſed all other ſorts of leaved Branches, anſwers, that the Reaſon of it was, becauſe that Goddeſs had been married to a Man, who whipp'd her with a Rod of Myrtle, when he came to know that ſhe had drunk ſome Wine. (i) Πότερον (ὡς οἱ μυθολογοῦντες ἱστοροῦσι) Φαυλίου μὲν ἦν γυνὴ τοῦ μάντεως, οἴνῳ δὲ χρησαμένη κρύφα, καὶ μὴ λαθοῦσα, ῥάβδοις ὑπὸ τοῦ ἀνδρὸς ἐκολάσθη μυρσίνης. That is, as Xylander renders it, An credendum eſt fabulæ, quæ perhibet Faulii cujuſdam aruſpicis uxorem cùm clàm poto vino non feſelliſſet, à marito virgis myrteis fuiſſe caſtigatam. The Greek Word φαυλίου, ought to be changed into φαύνου; for not only the Author quoted by Lactantius (k) affirms, that the Good Goddeſs had been married to Faunus, &c. but Plutarch (l) obſerves it alſo in the Life of Cæſar. The Latin Tranſlator might have boldly corrected that Paſſage, but inſtead of rectifying it, he ſpoils it, and tranſlates it wrong. He ſuppoſes that Plutarch anſwer'd, that Myrtle was not carried into the Chappel of the Goddeſs, becauſe the Wife of one Phaulius had been whipp'd, &c. This is not the ſenſe of the Original; Plutarch does not de-both a great Orator and a profound (F) Civilian; two Qualities which ſeldom meet together, as well as thoſe of Eloquent Preacher and * Learned Divine. You'll ſee in one of the Remarks †, in what Degree Cato Uticenſis deſcended from him.

(i) See the Remark C. in the Article Pelias, concerning the Miſtake that is here.

(k) See the end of the Remark K. in the Article Tullia.

(l) Horat. ſat. 2. lib. 1. v. 28.

(m) Dacier upon this Paſſage of Horace, tom. 6. pag. 130, 131 Dutch Edition.

(a) See Aulus Gellius, lib. 10. cap. 23. & Tertullian in apologet. cap. 6.

(b) Plin. lib. 14. cap. 13.

(c) In the 2d Book of the Roman Antiquities cap. 26. p. m. 93.

(d) Lact. lib. 1. cap. 22. See alſo Arnobius lib. 5. pag. 155. & Plutarch ubi infra.

(e) Lomeier genial. dierum parte 1. p. 357.

(f) Id. ib.

(g) Martinus Kempius diſſert. 16. de oſculis pag. m. 637.

(h) The Author had quoted the Canon-Law, and menion'd ſeveral things that happen'd after Cato: judge therefore whether his Poſtmodum, &c. is rightly placed.

(i) Plut. in quæſt. Romanis p. 268. D.

(k) See above Letter d.

(l) Ῥωμαῖοι δὲ νύμφην δρυάδα Φαύνῳ συνοικήσασαν. Romanam nympham Dryada Fauno nuptam. Plut. in Cæſare pag. 711.

 See the Remark V.*
† At the end of the Remark R.

POR-

note a Man who may be call'd ſlightingly, quidam, a certain Man; he ſays, That the Woman whip'd by her Huſband was the ſame that was worſhip'd at Rome by the Name of Good Goddeſs. Amyot avoided this laſt Miſtake, which is the moſt conſiderable. Boxhornius (m) made no Obſervation upon Xylander's Tranſlation of thoſe Words.

What I have ſaid concerning the Cuſtom of the Romans, who kiſs'd their Kinſwomen, wants a further Explanation. Plutarch explains it very well, and it appears from the Account he gives of it, that the Women went and kiſs'd their Kinſmen, when they met 'em. This is a remarkable Circumſtance, which the other Writers have wholly omitted. “Why, ſays he, (n) do Women kiſs the Mouth of their Kinſmen? Is it becauſe, as moſt think, Women being forbidden to drink Wine, a Cuſtom was introduced, that they ſhould kiſs the Mouth of their Kinſmen, when they met 'em, that thoſe who had drunk ſome might be convicted of it? or for the Reaſon (o) alledged by Ariſtotle the Philoſopher . . . . or rather, that Privilege was granted to the Ladies, as a thing that redounded to their Honour, when it appear'd that they were related to many honeſt Men: or becauſe Men were not allow'd to marry their Kinſwomen, the latter were permitted to make much of 'em, ſo far as to kiſs 'em, which was the only Sign of Kindred amongſt 'em; for heretofore they did not marry Women related to them, as now 'tis not lawful for them to marry their Aunts and Siſters, and 'twas a long time before they were allow'd to marry their Couſins.”

I need not examine whether the Reaſons alledged by Plutarch are very ſolid; I ſhall only conſider the Facts mention'd by him, which are worth knowing. It plainly appears from his Words, that the Women kiſs'd the Men publikly, as they met 'em either in the Streets, or elſewhere. Civility requir'd that the Men ſhould not begin firſt, for it would have look'd as if they had ſome Suſpicion that their Kinſwomen had drunk Wine. The Women were to preſent their Mouths, and that very thing was a ſign they were not guilty. Their Innocence had been doubtful, had they not boldly and readily offered to kiſs the Men. Such a Cuſtom at this Day would occaſion many new Thoughts, and a world of witty Conceits and ſorry Jeſts. A wiſe Mother would not be very willing that the Couſins of her Daughters ſhould have the Privilege of knowing whether they ſmell of Wine. 'Tis to be obſerv'd, that Propertius told his unfaithful (p) Miſtreſs, in a reproachful manner, that ſhe pretended to have more Kinſmen than ſhe had, that ſhe might not want Kiſſes,

Quin (q) etiam falſos fingis tibi ſæpe propinquos
Oſcula ne (r) deſint qui tibi jure ferant.

I ſhall conclude this Remark, as I have begun it, that is, with cenſuring a Fault concerning Cato. Kempius ſays, that he publiſh'd a Law whereby married People were forbidden to kiſs one another in the preſence of their Daughters, and he quotes Plutarch for it. But Plutarch ſays no ſuch thing: we have ſeen above (ſ) what he ſays upon that Subject. (t) Nihilominus tamen parcè inter veteres maritale oſculum, & non niſi admodum circumſpectè, ac remotis arbitris, ne liberi ſcilicet inde furtivis amorum illecebris ſtimularentur, M. Catonem (u) Cenſorinum Stoicæ diſciplinæ addictum, edicto prohibuiſſe, ne Maritus conjugem deoſcularetur in præſentia filiæ, Manliumque, quem omnium opinio Conſulem deſignabat, Senatu ejeciſſe, quod uxorem coram filia nubili exoſculatus eſſet, Auctor eſt Plutarchus in Catonis vitâ pag. 346. 'Tis not true, that Cato enacted any Law, or cauſed it to be enacted on that Account. He puniſh'd Manlius by the ſole Authority of his Office, which could not ſerve for a Precedent: the Cenſors who ſucceeded him were not obliged to imitate him. I find no other Example of ſuch a Puniſhment, and 'tis very likely a great many People uſed the ſame Liberty that Manlius took. The Laws can hardly extend to ſuch Prohibitions; all that can be done, is to give good Advice, and make People afraid of being Cenſur'd. I think Clemens Alexandrinus did not blame Cato's Severity. See how he adviſes (a) married People to forbear kiſſing one another in the preſence of their Servants.

(F) He was both a great Orator and a profound Civilian.] See (b) Valerius Maximus, and (c) Quintilian, or rather, this fine Paſſage of Cicero, whereby it appears, that Cato excell'd in many things. (d) Quid Marco Catoni præter hanc politiſſimam doctrinam tranſmarinam, atque adventitiam defuit? num quia jus civile didicerat, cauſas non dicebat? aut quia poterat dicere, juris ſcientiam negligebat? at utroque in genere & laboravit, & præſtitit: num propter hanc ex privatorum negociis collectam gratiam tardior in republica capeſſenda fuit? nemo apud populum fortior, nemo melior ſenator, idem facile optimus imperator: denique nihil in hac civitate temporibus illis ſciri, diſcive potuit, quod ille non tum inveſtigarit, & ſcierit, tum etiam conſcripſerit. Thoſe who have been endowed with the nobleſt Talents of Rhetorick, and the moſt profound Knowledge of the Laws have been ſo few, that ſuch a Conjunction may well be look'd upon as one of the moſt eminent and extraordinary Qualities of our Cato. I am not ignorant that Cicero (e) endeavours to prove, that none can be a great Orator without being an univerſal Man. Illud eſt, ſays he (f), hujus inſtitutæ ſcriptionis, ac temporis, neminem eloquentia, non modo ſine dicendi doctrina, ſed ne ſine omni quidem ſapientia florere unquam, & præſtare potuiſſe. Etenim cætera ferè artes ſe ipſæ per ſe tuentur ſingulæ: bene dicere autem, quod eſt ſcienter, & perite, & ornate dicere, non habet definitam aliquam regionem, cujus terminis ſepta teneatur. Omnia quæcunque in hominum diſceptationem cadere poſſunt, bene ſunt ei dicenda, qui hoc ſe poſſe profitetur, aut eloquentiæ nomen relinquendum eſt. I know likewiſe that he maintains, that Lucius Craſſus and Marc Antony the Orator, two of the moſt Eloquent Perſons of their Time, were not ignorant Men, as ſome (g) believed; and, on the contrary, that they had a great deal of Learning: but he himſelf owns (h) that Experience is againſt him; and if he had not confeſs'd it, he might have been eaſily convicted of his Error by ſome Examples. Would he have ſaid, that Demoſthenes might be accounted a Learned Man, if compared with Ariſtotle? Would he have ſaid, that Ariſtotle might have compoſed as good Orations as thoſe of Demoſthenes? To ſpeak the truth, the Talents of Eloquence, and a vaſt Erudition, do ſeldom meet together. This may be obſerved now, as it was in former Times. The moſt famous Preachers, generally ſpeaking, have no great Skill in the Oriental Languages and critical Learning, and are not very profound Divines. See the new (i) Letters againſt Maimbourg's Hiſtory of Calviniſm, where you'll find what ſome Perſons, well qualified to judge of this Matter, have ſaid about it. To which I add the Teſtimony of the Abbot of Saint Cyran: You have ſhewed me by Experience, ſays he (k) to a Jeſuit, what I have heard ſay ſeveral times, that it is a very difficult thing to be both a good Preacher and a very Learned Man. Dr. Huarte maintains, that Learning and Eloquence do not belong to the ſame Faculty of the Soul; that the firſt belongs to the Underſtanding, and the ſecond to the Imagination. See the ninth and tenth Chapters of his Examen de Ingenios. Imperialis (l) confutes him as well as he can, and does not prove his Aſſertion. 'Tis certain, that the Divine Providence diſtributes its Gifts in ſuch a manner, that they are commonly ſeparated. Thoſe who have receiv'd the Gift of obtaining Victories don't know how to improve them; and thoſe who might improve a Victory, are not qualified to obtain it. Thoſe who excel in the Knowledge of Languages, and Matters of Fact, are not Maſters of Reaſoning.

It

(m) He publiſh'd, with Notes Plutarch's Tract de quæſtionibus Romanis, in Greek and Latin, in the Year 1637. in 4.

(n) Plut. in quæſt. Romanis, p. 265.

(o) Viz. That the Trojan Ladies having burnt Æneas's Fleet, pacified the Men by their Embraces and Kiſſes.

(p) Cynthia and not Phryne, as Kempius, ubi ſupra pag. 635. falſly ſuppoſes.

(q) Propert. eleg. 6. lib. 2.

(r) There is in the printed Copies nec deſunt: I follow Gebhardus's Correction.

(ſ) In the Remark O.

(t) Kempius ubi ſup. diſſert. 15. pag. 615.

(u) It ſhould be Cenſorium. 'Tis not true that this Cato was addicted to the Sect of the Stoicks. Kempius confounds him with Cato Uticenſis his Great Grandſon.

(a) Clemens Alexandr. Pædagog. lib. [illegible] p. m. [illegible]

(b) Val. Maxim. lib. [illegible]

(c) Quintil. Inſtit. lib. 12. cap. [illegible] p. m. [illegible]

(d) Cic. de Orat. lib. [illegible] He had been ſaying that the [illegible] fol. 55. A. Quid vero ille M. Cato? nonne & eloquentia tanta fuit quantam illa tempora, & quæ illa ætas in hac civitate ferre maximam potuit, & juris civilis omnium peritiſſimus?

(e) In libris de Oratore.

(f) Cicero de Oratore lib. 2. init. fol. m. 71. B.

(g) Id. ib.

(h) Et in noſtra civitate, & in ipſa Græcia quæ ſemper hæc ſumma duxit, multos & ingenio, & magna laude dicendi ſine ſumma rerum omnium ſcientia fuiſſe fateor. Id. ibid. C.

(i) Pag. 224. & ſeq.

(k) St. Cyran in his Cenſure [illegible] Pere Garaſſe.

(l) Jo. Imperialis in Muſeo Phyſico lib. 2. cap. 7.

PORSENA (Christopher) Look for PERSONA.

PORTUGAL (Alfonso VI. of that Name, King of) was born the 28th of August 1643. He was hardly Seven Years of Age when he discovered some grains of Folly. The disorder of his Mind did not lessen his Ambition, only it shewed itself more openly; for Prince Dom Theodosio, Eldest Brother of Alfonso, dying the 15th of May 1653, Alfonso did not dissemble his Joy. He made it appear that he spoke in earnest when the very first Day of his Brother's Illness, he said, he wish'd it would prove Mortal, since he would get a Crown by it. He took Possession of that Crown under his Mother's Regency * the 15th Day of November, 1656. He discover'd more and more his ill Qualities: He made no account of his Governour's Advice: He drew his Sword against any Body that came first in his way, and if he did not kill 'em 'twas not his fault: He ran about the Streets in the Night with a parcel of Rakes: He committed a thousand Violences (A), and played a thousand Mad Tricks in Bawdy-Houses, and boasted of it the next Day, as of a Glorious Action. All the Means that were used to bring him off from those ill Courses proving ineffectual, 'twas resolv'd to remove from him the Persons who spoil'd him, and they were carried away by main force out of his Apartment. He was very angry at it, and left Lisbon to go to Alcantara. To prevent the ill Consequences of this Retreat, the Queen was obliged to put the Government of the State into his Hands; which was done at Lisbon with the requisite Ceremonies, the 23d of June 1662. From that time three or four great Lords, who had engrossed that young Prince, used their utmost endeavours to bring the Queen (B) into disgrace, and succeeded so well in it, that she was forced to execute, in March 1663, a Design which perhaps was not so deeply rooted in her Heart, as she pretended, I mean, her Design of leaving the World to mind only her Salvation. After she had retir'd into a Country-Seat, the King indulg'd his bad Inclinations more than ever, so far as to make no Account of the Outside (C) of Religion; which shews, that his very

It cannot be denied, that if Bochart did very much exceed M. Claude in Learning, he was much inferior to him in urging Difficulties, resolving Controversial Objections, and diving into the bottom of a Theological or Philosophical Dispute. Balzac was a little surpriz'd when he saw a solid Discourse published by Father Faure, a great Preacher (o).

(A) Committed a thousand Violences, &c.] The Relation (p) which affords me this Article, informs me, (q) that he ran about the Streets with those Rakes; that they got into Scandalous Places, where they did a thousand Violences to Women; that he never went out with them in the Night, but the next Day one might hear many tragical Stories; that he was dreaded every where as a wild Beast; that tho' he saw Prostituted Women in their own Houses, some were brought to his Palace; and that he boasted of such mighty Doings with them, that he was not believ'd. After the Queen Mother's Retreat he formed two (r) Companies, one of Foot, and the other of Horse, which he call'd, The little and great Patrol, consisting of the most profligate Men in the Kingdom. He went out every Night with them, and attack'd every Body he met in his way. His Attendants had generally their Swords drawn, to be more ready to obey his Orders; and the better to surprise People, they blacken'd them, lest the brightness of the Steel should discover their Design. Those who came back with bloody Swords, were highly commended by the King. (ſ) "His Debauchery was as exorbitant "as his Fury; either he went to Lewd Women, "or they were brought to him in a Country-House "near Alcantara; and his Favourites indulg'd "him in it, because there was a Report that he "was Impotent.„

(B) Used their utmost Endeavours to bring the Queen into Disgrace.] They were not in the wrong to believe, that the Queen design'd to set the Crown on the Head of her Second Son; for in the Reasons alledg'd to shew the Nullity of the Marriage, which are printed at the end of the Relation, 'tis said, "That considering the Incapacity and Impotency of King Alfonso, the "Queen his Mother, who was fully perswaded of "it by a private Consultation of her Physicians "about it . . . . resolved, during her Regency, "to put the Scepter into the Hands of the Infant "her Second Son.„ Alfonso revenged himself: "He (a) was well pleased to hear all the Queen's "Actions reflected upon in his Presence.„ Some People met at Night under the Queen's Window, "at a time when she used to shut up herself, in "order to say her Prayers, and broke her Windows, and gave her such injurious Words, that "'tis not fit to write 'em down.„ Upon a Day of the Conception of the Holy Virgin, the King, (b) in the Presence of the whole Court, "went "by the Queen, who sate in her Gallery, "without paying her the usual Civility.„ On the Day that she left the Court, the King seem'd to be very well pleas'd, and (c) having accompany'd her to the Country-Seat she had pitch'd upon, he left her at the Door of the first Room, without shewing her any Civility. "He return'd "to Lisbon in the Night on Horseback, being "very chearful, and coming up to the Coaches "of the Ladies he met, he told them many undecent things.„ Not long before she died, she acquainted her two Sons with the Condition she was in: the Infant wept, (d) "but the King "was so far from being mov'd with it, that he "banter'd his Brother for his Tenderness, and "opposed his Design of setting out immediately.„ 'Tis certain that Queen had a great many Vexations on account of her Son Alfonso. 'Tis the Fate of most Sovereigns, and 'tis not the least Misery that attends them. Of all Men Sovereigns stand most in need of Children, and no Men are more vexed by them than they are. When they have no Children, they see many Intrigues carried on, to give 'em a Successor, or excessive Honours paid to another Family. When they have Children, they are tormented with Jealousy, when they see the Rising-Sun adored. They are sometimes very happy, if they are suffer'd to reign till they die of a Natural Death: the Saying (e) Filius ante diem patrios inquirit in annos, may be particularly applied to them.

(C) To make no Account of the Outside of Religion.] (ſ) "He had so little respect for Religion, "that without any Reason he heard Mass in his "own Chamber upon the Week Days, whilst he "was in Bed, and at an unseasonable Hour. Upon "Holy-Days he never went to his Chappel till he "had din'd, which was the reason that Mass was "never ended in his Chappel, but when they "were singing Vespers in the other Churches: "And because he could not dispense himself from "hearing Sermons, he order'd the Preachers to "make 'em short. Some, refusing to obey, were "banish'd, and others would not preach. However, some were so bold as to exclaim against such very (D) Favourites could not govern him. They were, for ſome time, three or four; but at laſt the Count de Caſtelmelhor ſupplanted the reſt, and ſecured his Intereſt, by alledging the Diſcovery (E) of a horrid Conſpiracy. The Infant * Dom Pedro was ſuſpected of a Deſign to make himſelf King, and was ſo vexed that he left the Court, after the King had made his Publick Entry at Liſbon, with his Spouſe, the 29th of Auguſt 1666. The Queen-Mother died the 28th of February in the ſame Year. The New Queen was a French Princeſs †, but of the Houſe of Savoy. She prevailed with the Infant, by her Intreaties, to return to Liſbon, where he had a great deal of Vexation. The King gave her alſo a great deal of trouble, upon many occaſions; and from that time there was nothing but Complaints and Broils. The Removal of the Count de Caſtelmelhor, upon the repeated Solicitations of the Infant, did not advance the Affairs of that Prince. The recalling of Antonio de Souſa de Macedo, Secretary of State, proved ſuch a terrible Blow to the Queen, that ſhe reſolved to ſee no Body but the King, who ſaid nothing to her but what was offenſive and undecent. That Secretary of State had very much offended the Queen, and had been deprived of his Office at her Solicitation; but he was reſtored in an inſulting manner. The Infant reſolved to turn him out at any rate, and went to the ‡ Palace with ſuch a ſtrong Guard, that the Secretary relying no longer upon the King's Protection, left the Court. Afterwards the King was prevail'd upon to order that the States ſhould meet the firſt of January 1668; but before the Day came on, the Queen made uſe of a terrible Expedient: ſhe retired into a Convent the 21ſt of November 1667, and acquainted the King that ſhe deſign'd to return into France; and declared to the Ladies who accompanied her, that her Marriage had never been conſummated: She mention'd it in her Letter to her Husband. Thus an Action for Impotency (*E*Δ) was brought againſt Dom Alfonſo, a Prince who ſo much boaſted of his || Amorous Exploits. Aſſoon as he had read the Queen's Letter he went to the Convent, and would have cauſed the Gates to be broke open, if the Infant had not prevented it. The next Day he told his Brother, in a great Paſſion, and in very undecent Words, that he was more a Man than People thought. The Queen declared before ſeveral Counſellors of State and Officers of the Crown, the Reaſon of her Retreat, and that ſhe deſign'd to get her Marriage declar'd null. She writ

---

* Her Name was Louise Frances de Gusman. Her Husband, who being Duke of Braganza, became King of Portugal in 1640. died the 6th of Nov. 1656. See concerning this Revolution an Anonymous Book printed at Paris in 1689, with this Title, Histoire de la Conjuration de Portugal. It was written by the Abbot Vertot, and is as much esteem'd as the History of the Revolutions of Sweden publish'd by him in 1695.

(o) See the Dissertation printed at the end of the Socrate Chretien p. m. 11. & seq.

(p) The Title of it may be seen in the Margin of the Text of this Article.

(q) Pag. 19.

(r) Ibid. pag. 91, 92.

(ſ) Ibid. pag. 95.

(a) Ibid. pag. 85.

(b) Ibid. pag. 86.

(c) Ibid. pag. 90.

(d) Ibid. pag. 110.

(e) Ovid. Metam. lib. 1.

(ſ) Relat. pag. 97.

* He was the King's only Brother.

† Her Name was Mary-Frances-Elizabeth, and ſhe was born the 21 of June 1646, from the Marriage of Charles Amadeus of Savoy, Duke of Nemours, with Iſabella de Vendome, Daughter to the Duke of that Name, natural Son of Henry IV.

‡ In October 1667.

|| See the Remark A.

" ſuch Diſorders; but it was to no purpoſe, be" cauſe others made their Zeal inſignificant by " their baſe Flatteries.„

(D) His Favourites could not govern him.] Doubtleſs they had ſenſe enough to know on the one ſide, that nothing could more endanger his Crown than his Contempt of Holy Ceremonies; and, on the other, that an outward Devotion was the beſt way to conceal his Irregularities. It was therefore their Intereſt to inſpire him with ſuch a Policy; and therefore ſince they did not make him a conſtant Attendant upon the publick Exerciſes of Devotion, and did not teach him to put on a devout Countenance at ſuch Hours, we may very well believe that they could not do it. They had been certainly very ſtupid, had they permitted a young Prince, ready to comply with their Will, to draw upon himſelf the hatred of the Preachers, by ſuch an unpleaſant and mortifying Order, as that of making ſhort Sermons. Was it not to wound them in the moſt ſenſible Part? Some choſe rather (g) to be Baniſh'd, or not to preach at all, than to obey that Order. There is another thing wherein that Prince had no regard for the Preachers. He laugh'd at Comets in the moſt extravagant manner. Here is a Paſſage out of the abovemention'd Relation. " At that " time there appeared a Comet: the King being " told that it foretold the Death of Kings, or " a change in their States, gave it a thouſand hard " Words from his Terraſs, call'd it a thouſand " Names, and fired a Piſtol at it.„ It was an eaſy thing to draw his Horoſcope, conſidering what ſort of Men he exaſperated, and the great Follies he committed.

(g) See the foregoing Remark.

(E) And ſecured his Intereſt, by alledging the Diſcovery of a horrid Conſpiracy.] The pretended Diſcovery of a great Plot, is a piece of Craft frequently neceſſary to prevent Conſpiracies, or to get one'sſelf rid of ſuſpected Perſons. 'Tis no matter tho' no body be Convicted: An Alarm has been rais'd, and due Meaſures have been taken to keep People in awe. The Count de Caſtelmelhor (h) " made the King believe, that there " was a Deſign to take away his Crown, and at " the ſame time ſpread a Report, that he had " diſcovered that Conſpiracy by a Divine Reve" lation.„ He accuſed the Queen, the Duke of Cadaval, and ſeveral other Perſons, who were out of Favour. " It was therefore reſolved, that " an Enquiry ſhould be made into the pretended " Conſpiracy .... That Enquiry laſted a long " time, either to ſhew that they proceeded im" partially in the Matter, or to ſtrike a greater " Terror into the accuſed Perſons, by exaggera" ting the pretended Diſcoveries that were made " every Day..... Tho' the Information laid " no Charge upon the Accuſed, ſome pretended " that they were not Innocent; but the Judges " ſhewed an unſhaken Integrity, and moſt of 'em " acquitted the Innocent. The Accuſed deſired " to know what they were accuſed of, but a Copy " of their Accuſations was denied them. And " tho' that Information ſhould have been declared " null, as containing no Proofs againſt thoſe that " were accuſed, yet it was preſerved, by the In" tereſt of the Favourites, as a Hand ready to " ſtrike a Blow upon another occaſion on the " Heads of the Perſons accuſed.„ It was a nice Piece of Policy.

(h) Relat. p. 100.

(*E*Δ) An Action for Impotency was brought againſt Dom Alfonſo.] The Queen's Confeſſor had begun to carry on an Intrigue ſome Months before with M. de Schomberg, and confeſs'd to him the perplexity that Princeſs was in. The King's Impotency was one of the firſt things that were revealed to him. (a) " The Queen being no longer " able to live under the Conſtraint which the " King's Brutality and the Favourite's Cruelty re" duc'd her to, diſcover'd to Father de Ville, her " Confeſſor, that ſhe was extremely deſirous to " acquaint the Count de Schomberg with all her " Misfortunes, and the Apprehenſion ſhe was in " of ſomething worſe; that the Duke of Beaufort " and the Biſhop of Laon had recommended to " her to repoſe an entire Confidence in him; ſo " that ſhe was perſwaded he was the only Man " that could allay her Grief, and afford her the " means of getting glorioully out of the ſad Con" dition ſhe was in. That Jeſuit, who was very " faithful to his Miſtreſs, and behav'd himſelf " with great Diſcretion and Prudence in the midſt " of writ to the * Chapter of the Cathedral Church of [illegible], and desir'd them to take Congnizance of that Affair. It was immediately propos'd to marry her to the Infant. The Brief for a Dispensation was not long a coming. In a word, They made such dispatch, in all respects, that on the 23d of November 1667, Dom Pedro took Possession of the Royal Palace, and the 2d of April following married Mademoiselle d'Aumale, for so she was to be call'd still. The Chapter had declar'd (F) the Marriage null the 28th of March foregoing. I have forgot to say, that when Dom Pedro took Possession of the Palace, he secur'd the King's Person, who, on the same Day, sign'd a Writing, whereby he acknowledged that he resign'd the Kingdom to his Brother, of his own Motion. The States of the Kingdom declared Dom Pedro Regent of the Kingdom. He might have been proclaim'd King, and have added to the Royal Authority wherewith he was Invested, a Title which is of great use, even when another Man is possess'd of the whole Monarchical Power. Spain made a prudent use of this Revolution, to conclude † a Treaty of Peace, which the League concluded in 1667, between France and Portugal might have prevented, had not a Peace been necessary to a Kingdom which had lately got another Master by such Proceedings. This is what I have taken from a Book || printed at Amsterdam. I don't pretend (G) to warrant the truth of it; and if I had some authentick and private Memoirs of the contrary Party, I would produce them without any partiality, for or against Dom Alfonso, that the Readers might be the better able

(a) Memoires de Mr. Fremont d'Ablancourt pag. 319, 320.

* The Archbishoprick was then vacant.

† It was concluded the 13th of Febr. [illegible] de l'[illegible] Bassed. [illegible] t. p. 467.

|| Intituled, Relation des troubles arrivez dans la Cour de Portugal, en l'année 1667, & 1668.

"of so many Dangers, approv'd the Queen's Design, and imparted it to the Count de Schomberg; "and because they had a mutual Esteem one for "another, he gave him a particular Account of "the Queen's Trouble, according to the Order he "had receiv'd, and his own Inclination. He also "told him, that the Report about the King's Impotency was but too true; and that it was to be "feared the Consequences of it would prove dismal; that a private Door had been lately contriv'd "in the Queen's Chamber; and that the Bed had "been placed in such a manner, that one might "get into it through that Door, without being "seen by those that were in the Chamber, and "that it was to be feared some Body would come "in that way, to supply the King's Weakness." This is what I find in the (b) Memoirs of M. Fremont d'Ablancourt, who was very well acquainted with the Affairs of the Court of Portugal. The Queen's Confessor, and that (c) of the Infant Dom Pedro did very much contribute to the Revolutions of that Country (d).

It must be confess'd, that few Persons have been in a more deplorable Condition than that Queen before the Revolution: for (e) "the next "Day after she married King Alfonso . . . . it "appear'd that things did not go on so pleasantly between two Persons of their Age as one "might have hoped. At first this was only perceived by those who had the nearest access to "them; but by degrees the thing went farther, "and began to lay the foundation of a third "Cabal in that Court, whereof the two weakest, "as it commonly happens, sided against the "strongest, and at last triumph'd over it . . . . "(f) The king was not more kind than he had "been before his Marriage, he went on in his "old way, and gave every Day new Vexations "to the Queen, so far as to declare he was in "love with the first Lady of her Chamber. . . . "The Count de Castel Melhor, his Favourite, having (g) gained one of the Queen's Women, "whom she trusted most, had only an outward "respect for that Princess; so that the King and "his Favourite, abating some Civilities they "shewed her in publick, made it appear that "they cared little for her in private. Such an "odd Conduct gave the Queen occasion to mistrust them, and to suspect that they were contriving pernicious Designs against her; but the "more she had reason to complain, the more she "was cautious in expressing her Resentment, "not knowing whom to trust . . . . France, "from whence she was lately come, was still in "her Mind; and the Desire she had of doing "what was expected from her took up all her "Thoughts, and therefore she was more willing "to dissemble her Grief, than to seek a Remedy "for it. But tho' her Unhappiness was very "great, she was uneasie upon another account; "for she could not bear the Injustice that was "done to the Infant, and, upon all occasions she "endeavour'd to restore him to the King's Favour." How unhappy was this Queen! she was both a Wife and a Maid, she had an impotent and a brutish Husband, she was afraid of his ill Designs, she mistrusted every body, she saw a Prince whom she esteem'd, and who (h) loved her, cruelly Persecuted. The King of Portugal had some particular Reasons to be Civil and Complaisant to his Spouse; he was obliged to act like an Insolvent Debtor, who endeavours to pacify his Creditors by his Humility and great Civility: Qui nummos non gestat in bursa, mel saltem habeat in bucca. He should at least have given good Words; but, on the contrary, he abused his Spouse, not considering that he could not make amends for his abusive Language. Most Husbands, in a like case, are humble and complaisant, they endeavour to shew the falsity of the Proverb, That one Misfortune is always attended with another Misfortune. This is also the usual Practice of unfaithful Wives; they do whatever they can, by their Flatteries and Submission, to make their Husbands easy with their Horns.

(F) Had declared the Marriage null.] Their Sentence imports, That the two Parties had done their best to consummate the Marriage, without being able to succeed in it, and that the whole Fault was to be ascribed to the Husband. I shall set down their own Words somewhat at length. "(i) It appears, that during that (k) time, having endeavour'd both of 'em to consummate "the Marriage they could not effect it, tho' they "used their endeavours towards it, by reason of "the Prince's Impotency, which proceeds from "an Infirmity which he had when he was a Child, "and which is now altogether incurable. Which "may be sufficiently made out by means approv'd "of in Law; so that the Impotency is at least "morally certain: and therefore there is no "need of an Inspection or a better Proof, such as "that of three Years, or any other time. This "whole Matter having been examin'd with some "other Acts in conformity to the Laws, we judge "the Marriage between the said Most Serene Prince "and Princess, to be contracted de facto, and not "de jure, and we declare it to be void, and that the "said Prince and Princess may dispose of themselves as they shall think fit, and divide their "Estates according to the Tenor of their Contracts."

(G) I don't pretend to warrant the truth of it.] Who hears but one Side hears nothing: I should be very glad to see an Answer of the Count de Castelmelhor to the Author of the Relation. There is one thing which I don't understand: If the Follies of Dom Alfonso had been such as they are represented by that Author, they could not have been unknown to the Ambassadors or Envoys of the Most Christian King; and if they knew them, they could not be ignorant that this Prince was in-

(b) They were printed in 1701.

(c) He was also a Jesuit.

(d) See the same Memoirs, pag. 322. & seq.

(e) Fremont d'Ablancourt ubi supra pag. 294.

(f) Ibid. pag. 295.

(g) Ibid. pag. 296, 297.

(h) The Infant considered, that if the project of the Queen-Mother had been executed, he would be now in possession of a thing which he valued more than the Crown, and that he would not have the vexation to see so beautiful a Princess (the Queen married to Dom Alfonso) so unworthily used. Ibid. pag. 254.

(i) Relat. pag. 218.

(k) That is the space of sixteen Months.

able to judge of the whole Matter. That Prince was ſo far from appealing from the Sentence, whereby he was declared Impotent, that he acquieſced in it viva voce, and by Writing. The new married Couple having lived together for ſome time, demanded the Pope's Diſpenſation, out of Precaution, to confirm that which the Cardinal de Vendoſme, Legate à Latere in France, ſent 'em before they married. The Pope granted their Requeſt. 'Tis certain that the Queen alledg'd great Motives (H) of Conſcience to get her Marriage diſſolved *; and that it were an unreaſonable thing to put a malicious Conſtruction upon the in a Condition wherein private Men are not allowed to diſpoſe of their Eſtates. Thoſe who are guilty of ſuch Follies, uſe to be ſhut up, or at leaſt they are put under the Guardianſhip of their Relations. How comes it then that the Miniſters of France did not acquaint the King their Maſter, when the Marriage of Dom Alfonſo was on foot, that he was a Madman, and, beſides, ſuſpected of Impotency? It has been ſaid, that Princeſſes are Victims ſacrificed to the Intereſt of the State; which was never truer than with reſpect to Mademoiſelle d'Aumale. The Favourites of (a) Dom Alfonſo ſuborned a Woman to make her ſay, that the King had got her with Child: but ſhe ſwore afterwards that it was falſe. The Author of the Relation (b) lays a great ſtreſs upon that Woman's Oath; but he had no reaſon for it: what ſhe ſaid ought not to be minded; for ſince ſhe could tell a Lye at the ſollicitation of a Favourite, ſhe might as well tell a Lye againſt a Prince who was a Priſoner, and near to be depoſed. Such Retractations ſhould not be admitted as an Evidence: whoever will be (c) ſuborned to ſay a thing, may as well be ſuborned to deny it.

* Taken from the ſame Relation.

(a) Relation p. 96.

(b) Pag. 248.

(c) Confer quæ ſupra in the Article Calvin Remark R.

(H) Alledged great Motives of Conſcience to get her Marriage diſſolved.] This wants to be explain'd; otherwiſe one would be apt to think, that the Queen miſtruſting her Temper, and not being able to oppoſe the Inclinations of Nature, had a Mind to make uſe of the lawful Remedy, which ſhe did not find in the Perſon of Dom Alfonſo. In a word, one would be apt to think, that ſhe had not the Gift of Continence; and that ſhe wanted a Husband for fear of tranſgreſſing the Laws of Chaſtity. But it would be a wrong Interpretation of the Motives of Conſcience alledged by her. 'Tis therefore neceſſary to explain the Matter, in order to prevent the falſe Judgments of the Readers.

1. Dom Alfonſo, notwithſtanding his Impotency, was a very unchaſte and lewd Man; and therefore he was guilty of Sin in that reſpect, and brought the ſame Guilt upon the Queen; for the looſeſt Caſuiſts are agreed, that without certain Conditions, which were wanting in Alfonſo, 'tis a piece of Lewdneſs in a Husband to come near his Wife, and in a Wife to permit it. This cannot be more particularly explain'd: 'Tis not likely that a Perſon of her Rank, whoſe Steps are expoſed to the publick View, would have engaged, without an extreme neceſſity, in a Suit wherein an hundred things, contrary to Modeſty, were to be diſcuſs'd.

2. The Queen knew that the King and his Favourite would never conſent to Dom Pedro's Marriage; and therefore ſince the King was not in a Capacity to get Children, ſhe could no longer diſſemble, without expoſing the Kingdom of Portugal to diſmal Revolutions, which ſhe thought herſelf obliged to prevent, not only out of love for that Kingdom, but alſo out of Conſcience.

3. Whenever the King had a Mind to Sport with a Young Woman, he made uſe of a Forerunner; one of his Favourites broke the Ice, and then the Prince did his beſt to get in through the Breach. He deſign'd to uſe the Queen in the ſame manner; and therefore the Queen was obliged in Honour and Conſcience to get herſelf rid of ſuch a Husband.

Thoſe three things want to be proved, and therefore I ſhall ſet down what I find in (d) the Reaſons alledged for the Invalidity of that Marriage.

(d) Relat. pag. 251.

What follows concerns the firſt Point. “Conſcience continually dictated to Her Majeſty, that after a tedious Experience of ſixteen Months, ſhe was obliged to part with the King, without deſiring to make a longer tryal, eſpecially conſidering that being fully ſenſible of his incurable Impotency, and having frequently conſulted her Confeſſor about it, to manage that important Affair with greater Secrecy, the ſame Confeſſor having maturely conſidered the thing, and what he was to ſay about it, declared before God, that he believed Her Majeſty was no longer obliged to do Violence to her Conſcience, by cohabiting with the King.” As to the ſecond Head, I refer the Reader to the 252 Page of the Relation.

What concerns the third Head is contain'd in the following Words. The Queen ſaw her Honour, (e) which was always dearer to her than the Crown and her own Life, “expoſed to great dangers, and had very good Reaſons to think ſo. Tho' it be never ſo neceſſary to mention them, yet Virtue and Modeſty will not allow me to ſay more of the Matter than what is abſolutely neceſſary to give a right Judgment of it. One of thoſe Reaſons was, that tho' the King knew he would never be able to get any Children, yet he expreſs'd a very great deſire of getting ſome, to be (f) reſtor'd to the Throne by that means, and to put an end to the common Report of his Impotency, which made him more uneaſy than his own Weakneſs. And therefore the more he was ſenſible of his Impotency, the more he endeavour'd to ſhew the contrary, by proſtituting himſelf to all ſorts of Women, hoping to maintain himſelf by that means, and to vex his Brother to Death, whom he mortally hated, becauſe he ſaid, and was ſure, that His Majeſty would never get any Children, by reaſon of his Impotency. The other reaſon is, That the Queen was not ignorant of what was then kept ſecret, and which the Judges came to know ſince, by the Declaration of the Perſons concern'd, viz. That when the King had a mind to lie with a Maid, not being able to do it himſelf, by reaſon of his Impotency, he cauſed her to lie in his Chamber, and in his own Preſence, with one of his Favourites, to make the thing more eaſy to him; tho', after all, he did not ſhow himſelf more a Man than before, as it appears from the Depoſitions of thoſe concern'd in it, who have ſworn it upon the Holy Goſpel. And what made the Queen moſt apprehenſive, that the King, without any regard to his Honour and Conſcience, had ſuch a Deſign upon her, was her being continually ſollicited, in the King's Name, towards the latter end of April, 1667, by his moſt intimate Favourites Enrigo Enriguez de Miranda, and the Count de Caſtelmeglior, with the Marchioneſs his Mother, Lady of Honour to Her Majeſty, to remove in the Night from her Appartment, (where the King had made hitherto no difficulty to come to her) into that of His Majeſty to lie with him, (a) contrary to the ancient Form, and the uſual Cuſtoms of the Palace, and without any apparent neceſſity. And becauſe the Queen declin'd it ſeveral times, with all poſſible gentleneſs, alledging for her Reaſon, not that which made her moſt apprehenſive, (for notwithſtanding this new Uneaſineſs ſhe would have complied with the King's Will, having always been very ſubmiſſive to him) but Modeſty, which will not allow a Woman of Honour, much leſs a Princeſs and a Queen, to make, without any neceſſity, ſuch an extraordinary Alteration, which doubtleſs would have occaſion'd ſeveral Reflections upon Her's and the King's Reputation; the King fell into ſuch a Paſſion, that in the Night of the ſame Day he had a mind to drag her out of her Bed into his Apartment. But after many Threatnings and hard Words, holding the (I) deep Melancholy which appear'd in her Face, aſſoon as ſhe was ſenſible of her Huſband's Weakneſs. Dom Alfonſo was ſent into the Iſle of Terceira, where he continued many Years: But there being ſome Reaſon to fear that the Enemies of the State would reſcue him from that Place, in order to raiſe Troubles in the Kingdom, he was removed to the Caſtle of Cintra, ſeven Leagues from Lisbon, where he died of an Apoplexy, the 12th of September 1683 ι.

(e) Ibid. pag. 252.

(f) This a very improper Word for King Alfonſo had not been dethron'd yet.

(a) Compare with this the Rem. E towards the end, where mention is made of another device, which made the Queen uneaſy.

The Queen of Portugal, formerly his Wife, followed him ſoon after; for ſhe died θ at Palhavam, the 27th of December 1683, being in the 38th Year of her Age. Her only Daughter the Infanta of Portugal was born the 6th of June 1669, and contracted to the Duke of Savoy in 1679. That Marriage was made publick in the Council of State of Portugal, on the 5th of September γ. The States of the Kingdom were aſſembled to ratify it, and to derogate from a Law, whereby the Princeſſes of the Royal Family, who marry Foreign Princes, are (K) excluded from the Crown γ. Notwithſtanding which, this Marriage was broke before the Duke of Savoy ſaw the Infanta: ſhe died without having been married. The Queen her Mother took great Care of her Education: δ ſhe wrote with her own Hand ſome Advices for the Infanta, which were found after her Death, and are very fine. They may be ſeen at length in the Mercure Galant ζ for the Month of May 1684. King Dom Pedro married in 1687, a Daughter of the Elector Palatin, who died * in the Year 1699, aged 33 Years. Many Particulars are to be found in the Memoirs of M. Fremont d'Ablancourt, printed in 1701, concerning Dom Alfonſo's Reign, the Diſſolution of his Marriage, his Depoſition, &c.

POZZUOLO, in Latin Puteoli, a Town in the Kingdom of Naples, has now but ſome few inconſiderable Remains of its ancient Luſtre. It was § built by the Samians, in the fourth Year of the 64th Olympiad, which was the 232 Year of Rome. It was call'd Dicæarchia κ. It did belong, for ſome time, to the Inhabitants of Cumæ λ, who made it their Harbour. The Romans conquer'd it θ, during the ſecond Punick War, in the Year of Rome 538, and put a ſtrong Gariſon in it. They made it ‡ a Colony twenty Years after, and changed its Name into that (A) of Puteoli. 'Twas one of the beſt (B) Ports they had upon that Sea. It became very conſiderable ¼ for the beauty of the publick Structures that were raiſed in it, I mean its Temples, Circus's, Theaters, and Amphitheaters. The Country-Houſes which the moſt wealthy Citizens of Rome, and Cicero, among the reſt, built near that Town, contributed more ſtill to make it famous †. Some ſay its (C) Purple was more valued than that of Tyre. I ſhall ι Taken from the Mercure Galant for Oct. 1683.

θ Mercure Galant for Feb. 1684. pag. 124.

γ Taken from the Paris Gazette.

δ Mercure Galant for May 1684. pag. 24, &c.

ζ Pag. 25, &c.

* See l'Eſprit des Cours de l'Europe, for Sept. 1699. pag. 480.

§ Euſeb. in Chron.

κ By contraction Dicarchia. The Latin Poets made uſe of that Word, even when it was call'd Puteoli.

λ Strabo, lib. 5.

θ Livius, lib. 24.

‡ Id. lib. 32. & 34. See alſo the Inſcription mention'd by Andreas Schottus, in itinerario Italiæ parte 3.

¼ See the Antiquities of Pozzuolo, written by Scipio Mazzella.

† Id. ib.

"holding a Dagger in his Hand, he told her, that "ſhe muſt reſolve upon it in 24 Hours; and then "if ſhe refuſed to comply with his Deſires he "ſwore he would drag her, or get her drag'd by "four Footmen. The Queen was ſenſibly afflicted at it; and therefore the next Day ſhe "order'd her Confeſſor to complain of it to the "Count, and to deſire him to prevent it, proteſting, that ſhe had rather die than do what "the King deſir'd, or any thing unworthy of her. "This, together with the Fear that was imprinted "in the Queen's Mind, is the reaſon why ſhe "never thought herſelf ſafe ever ſince, whilſt ſhe "remain'd expos'd to a danger which ſhe could "not ſo well avoid at another time as ſhe did "then; eſpecially conſidering, that the Woman "whom Her Majeſty ſhould have truſted moſt "upon ſuch an occaſion, viz. her Lady of Honour, was the ſame whom ſhe had moſt reaſon "to miſtruſt, by reaſon of the Advice ſhe had "given her, becauſe ſhe was the Mother of the "King's Favourite, and openly expreſs'd a great "deſire that the Queen ſhould get Children by "any means whatſoever, in order to make hers "and her Son's Fortune, having ſaid, in expreſs "Words, to the Confeſſor, in a Conference they "had together upon that Subject, to perſuade "him to prevail with the Queen to change her "Bed and Apartment, that it would be only for "five or ſix Nights, and then ſhe aſſured him, "that the King would go to the Queen as he did "before."

(I) The deep Melancholy which appeared in her Face.] If any one asks how I come to know that the Queen was melancholy, he needs but read the following Paſſage that is to be found among the Reaſons alledged for the Invalidity of that Marriage. "(c) The firſt time the King lay with the "Queen, which was three or four Days after ſhe "arrived in Portugal, that Princeſs was ſo ſenſible "of his Impotency, tho' ſhe was ignorant of "things of that nature, that her Confeſſor, who "perceiv'd ſhe was very melancholy, and ſuſpected the truth of what was ſaid, having taken "the liberty to ask her, out of Confeſſion, with "all due Modeſty and Civility, whether there was "any ground for what was reported, or whether "ſhe might quickly expect to ſee ſome Fruits of "her Marriage; She anſwer'd him (as may be "ſeen in the Writings) in ſuch a manner as made "him ſenſible of what ſhe thought already of the "ſtate of her Marriage, and of the King's Inability to get Children." I have a mind to ſee a Book (d) lately come out.

(K) And to derogate from a Law whereby the Princeſſes . . . . . are excluded.] 'Tis call'd, The Law of Lamego. It was made by Dom Alfonſo Henriquez, the firſt King of Portugal, in the States General aſſembled at Lamego, after the Victory he obtain'd over five Mooriſh Kings at the Battle of Urica, in the Year 1139. 'Tis enacted by that Law, that the Princeſſes of the Royal Blood, who marry Foreigners, cannot ſucceed to the Crown. 'Tis by virtue of that Law, that the Dukes of Parma were excluded from the Crown of Portugal, tho' they are deſcended from the Princeſs Mary, eldeſt Siſter of Catherine, Grandmother to King Dom Pedro (e).

(A) Into that of Puteoli.] Either becauſe of the great number of Wells, or by reaſon of the ill Smell of the hot Waters (f).

(B) One of the beſt Ports.] The Merchantmen of Alexandria had their Storehouſe there, as it appears from theſe Words of Seneca. (g) Subito hodie nobis Alexandrinæ naves apparuerunt, quæ præmitti ſolent & nunciare ſecuturæ claſſis adventum; tabellarias vocant. Gratus illorum Campaniæ adſpectus eſt: omnis in pilis Puteolorum turba conſiſtit . . . . In hoc omnium diſcurſu properantium ad litus, magnam ex pigritia mea ſenſi voluptatem.

(C) Some ſay its Purple was more valued than that of Tyre.] Scipio Mazzella ſays ſo, and quotes Pliny for it: 'Tis certain that Pliny does not ſpeak of the Purple, but of a kind of Vermilion

(c) Relat. pag. 25.

(d) I have been told juſt now, that the Hiſtory of that Princeſs, written by Father d'Orleans a Jeſuit, has been publiſh'd at Paris in May 1696. Thus I ſaid in the 1ſt Edition; and now I hear that this Hiſtory has been reprinted at Amſterdam, and yet I have not been able to ſee it.

(e) I have taken this from a Paris Gazette of the Year 1679.

(f) Strabo lib. 5.

(g) Seneca epiſt. 77. init. Compare what Suetonius ſays in Auguſt. c. 98.

I shall say nothing of its Baths; every Body knows they (D) were very famous, and they are so to this Day. Augustus § and Nero + sent new Colonies thither. It was ‡ burnt down by Alaric, in the 410th Year of the Christian Æra, and by Genseric in the Year 455. Totila took it 90 Years after, or thereabouts; and it was then dismantl'd, and so furiously ransack'd, that it remain'd uninhabited for the space of sixteen Years. The Greeks having rebuilt it, it recover'd itself by degrees, so that it was a good Place when Romuald II, Duke of Benevento, made himself Master of it in the Year 715, and destroy'd it with Fire and Sword. It was plunder'd by the Hungri in the X. Century. After several Revolutions, it fell at last into the Power of Alfonso of Arragon, King of Naples, in the XV. Century. Earthquakes made strange Devastations in that Town, at several times, especially in the Year 1538 *. The Place wherein Gassendus mentions them, will give me occasion to observe a (E) Mistake of his Abbreviator. I shall also take notice of an Oversight of (F) Benjamin Tudelensis.

§ Frontin. de Colon.

+ Tacit. Annal. lib. 14.

‡ Scip. Mazzella ibid.

* Taken from the same Scipione Mazzella.

PRAT (Antony du) Chancellor of France, and then Cardinal, in the Reign of Francis I, was born at Issoire in Auvergne. 'Tis agreed, that he was a Man of great Abilities, but not that he was a Good Man. He is blamed, among other things, for the Concordate that was made between Leo X and Francis I, in the Year 1516. 'Tis said, that by that means he introduced into the Kingdom a (A) pernicious Usage, whereby the Choice of Bishops was transferr'd to the Court; which tion with some Purple in it. These are Mazzella's Words: (a) E da gli antichi tenuta in gran stima la purpura, che si faceva in Pozzuolo, che per la bontà & eccellenza sua avanzava quelle di Tiro, de Getulico, e dil Laconico, ch' erano purpure pretiosissime. Di che Plin. nel 35. lib. al 6. capo della purpura parlando così scrive. Quare Puteolanum potius laudatur, quam Tyrium aut Getulicum, unde pretiosissima purpura. He should have considered, that the Word Puteolanum is to be referr'd to Purpurissum e creta argentaria, which Pliny had been speaking of: Women (b) used it for a Paint.

(D) Its Baths . . . . were very famous.] See the Treatise of John Elisius, a Physician, de Balneis Puteolanis, corrected and enlarged by Scipione Mazzella; it is printed at the end of the Antiquities of Pozzuolo. There are in it some Latin Verses written by Alcadinus in Praise of those Baths. Alcadinus was born at Syracusa, and his Father sent him to Salerno to Study there, where he made so great a Progress in Philosophy and Physick, that he was quickly made Professor of those two Sciences. He acquired so great a Reputation in Physick, that several Princes desired to have him. He cured the Emperor Henry VI. who fell dangerously Sick in the Kingdom of Naples, and ever since he was very well beloved by that Emperor, who bestowed many Presents upon him. After Henry's Decease he was Physician to the Emperor Frederick II. and made, at his request, the Verses I speak of. He flourish'd in the Year 1191, and lived 52 Years (c). He does not appear in Thomas Bartholinus's Catalogue of Physicians, who have been Poets.

(E) A Mistake of his Abbreviator.] Gassendus says, that Earthquakes do sometimes produce Mountains in the Continents, and Islands in the Sea. As to the Mountains, he alledges what happen'd near Pozzuolo, in the Year 1538. Mirabilius videri potest, says he (d), enasci ex opposito non modo in Continentibus montes, sed etiam in medio mari Insulas. Nam de Montibus quidem facit fidem Puteolanus ille, quem Simon Portius (1) ita describit, ut fuerit una nocte ad plusquam M. passuum altitudinem, ex pumicibus, cineribusque congestus; id nempe sub finem Septembris, anni M. D. XXXVIII. Tho' Bernier was a Man of Learning, he mistook a Word in this Passage, the sense of which is very plain. He did not consider that Puteolanus ought to be referr'd to terræ motus, but he made an Author of it. What is no less surprising, says he (e), is to see some Mountains of Pumice-stones and Ashes come out in one Night in the middle of a Continent, as Puteolanus relates. Which puts me in mind of the Hexameron rustique, wherein la Mothe le Vayer observes, that du Pinet (f) . . . . made two Roman Gentlemen of two pieces of Marble, and that Coeffeteau (g) says Captain Corfinius, instead of the Town of Corfinium.

(F) The Oversight of Benjamin Tudelensis.] He says not only that the Town Puteoli was call'd Surrentum in former times, but also that it was built by Tsinsan Hadar Ezer, who betook himself to flight for fear of King David. (h) Ulterius profectus sui Puteolos quondam Surrentum dictam, urbem magnam, quam olim condidit Tsinsan Hadar-Ezer, quum metu Davidis regis (in pace quiescentem) aufugisset. Those two Falsities have been taken notice of by Mazzella (i), and (k) Constantin l'Empereur, and afterwards by (l) Pineda, who observes, that this Tsinsan Hader is mention'd in the second Book of Samuel chap. 8. v. 3. and that the Suppositious Joseph, Son of Gorion, tells the same fabulous Story in the third Chapter of his first Book. This shews the Spirit of the Jewish Nation, and even of all others. Every one of 'em fancies, that their Great Men have performed many things in the remotest Countries. David, whose Name was unknown in Italy till the Romans read Josephus, and who lived about 300 Years before the Foundation of Rome, did so fright Romulus, if Benjamin may be credited, that this Founder of Rome dug out a Way of fifteen Miles under the Mountains near Puteoli to hide himself. (m) Hinc per milliaria quindecim sub montibus iter conficitur. Operis author est Romulus, qui Romam condidit, atque hæc omnia fecit cum sibi à Davide Israelitarum rege & Joabo exercitus duce metueret. Alia etiam cum supra, tum infra montes urbis Neapolis extruxit. Here follows the Note of Constantin l'Empereur: it contains an Exclamation, which is not too vehement considering the Impertinence of that Rabbin. (n) Quis ad tantum stuporem non obstupescat? coætaneos facit Davidem & Romulum, quum trecentis circiter annis post Davidem regnare cœperit. Quod in dubium vocari non potest; sed ex diversis historicis constat, & passim à Chronologis observatum, quorum verba repetere necesse non est in tanta luce. Huic parallelum est, quum Romulum talparum more in terram ac longissimas specus se recepisse fingit, sive eas metu Davidis, qui ante aliquot secula mortem obierat, excavasse scribit. Quis ad hujusmodi non stomachetur? si nos ita aberraremus, quam superbe nobis Judæi insultarent.

(A) That he introduced, by the Concordate, a pernicious usage.] I design to quote some Authors upon this Subject, and I begin with the Words of a Jansenist: (o) "Chancellor Antony du Prat, Cardinal, Archbishop of Sens, Bishop of Alby, Valence, Die, and Gap, and Abbot of Fleury, assembled (p) in the Convent of the Great Augustins at Paris, the Bishops of his Province, who attended the Court, and caused some Ordinances to be read, which he had made for the Explanation of the Christian Doctrine, and for the Discipline of the Church, against the Errors of Luther, which made a great Noise in Europe at that time. . . . That Prelate (q) never resided in any of his Dioceses, and never performed any Episcopal Function, except that Ordinance against Martin Luther, Philip Melanchthon, Oecolampadius, and Zuinglius; for Calvin and Beza were not yet talk'd of. This good Prelate is said to have abolish'd the Pragmatick Sanction, that is, the pure

(a) Scipione Mazzella Antichità di Pozzuolo pag. 6. &c. edit. Napol. 1595. in 8.

(b) Quinque istas buccas tam belle purpurissatas habes. Plautus in Truculent. act. 2. sc. 2. v. 35. See also the same Plautus in Mostell. act. 1. sc. 3. v. 101.

(c) Taken from Scipione Mazzella de balneis puteolanis pag. 260.

(d) Gassendus Physicæ sect. 3. membro 1. lib. 1. c. 6. pag. 50. oper. tom. 2.

(1) Epist. de cons. agri Put.

(e) Bernier, Abregé de la Philosophie de Gassendi tom. 5. pag. 127. Lyons 1684.

(f) See the Article of du Pinet.

(g) In the 12 Chapter of the 2d Book of his Translation of Florus.

which was the right way to beſtow Mitres upon Men more Worldly and Vain, than Learned and Virtuous. But it may be anſwer'd, That the

" pure Obſervation of the ancient Canons in the " Church of France, and to be the Author of the " Concordate between King Francis I. and Leo X. " whereby the Apoſtolical Diſcipline has been de- " ſtroy'd in France, Canonical Elections have been " aboliſh'd, and the Gallican Church brought un- " der a deplorable Slavery." The Archbiſhop of Ambrun took that Chancellor's Part, and endeavour'd to make the Janſeniſts odious to the Court; as if by diſapproving the Concordate they envied the advantages that accrue to His Majeſty from it: They endeavour, ſays he (a), to deprive his Crown of a great advantage: they exclaim in the tenth Page of the firſt Libel againſt the Concordate that was made between Francis I. and Pope Leo X. That good Prelate, ſay they, ſpeaking of Chancellor du Prat, Cardinal and Archbiſhop of Sens, is ſaid to have aboliſh'd the Pragmatick Sanction, that is, the pure Obſervation of the ancient Canons, &c. . . . . They bear an ill will to that Great Man, becauſe in a Council he held in his Province of Sens, in the Year 1528, he forbad the Tranſlations of the Bible into the Vulgar Language. Theſe Words were criticized by a Perſon, who wonder'd (b) he ſpoke of the Concordate in a manner ſo unbecoming his Chancellor. "He ſhould have learn'd from the moſt " famous Hiſtorians, and the verbal Proceſſes of " the Clergy of France, what Opinion the Biſhops, " the Parliaments, and good Men have always had " of that Treaty. He ſhould not have been igno- " rant, that for a long time publick Prayers were " made in many Churches, to beg of God that it " ſhould be aboliſh'd, by the Reſtoration of Cano- " nical Elections, as it appears from ſeveral Ri- " tuals, ſuch as that of Vannes, printed at Lyons, " and another of Clermont, printed in 1608, by " order of the late Cardinal de la Rochefoucaut. " Laſtly, ſince he ſets a great Value upon the Au- " thority of the Archbiſhop of Paris, he ſhould " at leaſt have ſpoke of it as that Prelate does in " the Life of Henry IV. wherein he ſays, pag. 229. " that the General Aſſembly of the Clergy, held " at Paris in 1599, made a long Remonſtrance to the " King, whereby the Prelates intreated him not to " take upon him to nominate to the Biſhopricks, Ab- " bies, and other Benefices, with Cure of Souls. " And he ſhould not have appeared leſs knowing " than a Prince like Henry IV, bred up in Hereſy, " and in the War, who notwithſtanding anſwer'd " the Clergy, as the Archb. of Paris tells us, that " he acknowledged the truth of what they had told " him concerning the nomination to Benefices, but that " he was not the Author of that Abuſe." I ſhall add another Paſſage. (d) 'Tis not true, that the Writers of Port-Royal have reaſon to bear an ill-will to Chancellor du Prat, becauſe he forbad the Tranſlations of the Bible into the Vulgar Language in the Council of Sens, of the Year 1528. "for he " never made ſuch a Prohibition, being contented " to forbid only the Printing of the Sacred Books, " without the Authority of the Ordinary: which " does not concern the Verſion of Mons, that " was approved by the Ordinary of the Place " where it was printed. 'Tis not true neither, " that 'tis a Fault not to ſpeak of Cardinal du Prat " as of a Great Man, and that the Author of the " Dialogue is to blame for ſpeaking of him as he " does, ſince none that is never ſo little acquain- " ted with our Hiſtory, can deny that no Man was " more cried down than he was by the Writers of " his Time. Belcarius, Biſhop of Metz, calls him " Bipedum nequiſſimum, and accuſes him of having " bribed ſome Judges to condemn to Death the " Sieur de Semblance. Probably 'tis upon him that " Budæus beſtows the ſtrange Encomium that is at " the beginning of the 260 Page (1) of his Book " Intituled Forenſia."

'Tis certain that the Concordate was attended with many Abuſes in the Collation of Benefices: hence it is, that upon the Complaints of the three States of the Kingdom aſſembled at Orleans, in the Year 1560, a Regulation was made, which might have put things in a very good way, if it had been obſerved. It runs thus, "All Archbiſhops " and Biſhops ſhall be, for the time to come, up- " on a Vacancy, elected and nominated, viz. the " Archbiſhops, by the Biſhops of the Province, " and the Chapter of the Archiepiſcopal Church; " the Biſhops, by the Archbiſhop and Biſhops of " the Province, and the Canons of the Epiſcopal " Church, together with twelve notable Gentle- " men elected by the Gentry of the Dioceſe, and " twelve notable Citizens, who ſhall be likewiſe " elected in the Town-Houſe of the Archiepiſco- " pal or Epiſcopal City. All which being con- " vened upon a certain Day, by the Chapter of " the vacant See, and aſſembled in the foreſaid " manner, ſhall agree in the Choice of three Per- " ſons duly qualified according to the Holy Ca- " nons and Councils, and of thirty Years of Age " at leaſt, whom they ſhall preſent to us, that we " may elect one of the three for the vacant Arch- " biſhoprick or Biſhoprick." I ſhall ſet down the Words of a Commentator, to give the Reader a Notion of the Evils which 'twas thought that Ordinance would remedy. "(e) If the Divine " and Humane Laws had been obſerved by thoſe " who profeſs them, or whoſe buſineſs it is to " put 'em in execution, this Article would cer- " tainly be needleſs; for the things mention'd " in it were regulated by the ancient Laws and " holy Ordinances, as they are here. But the " Calamities of the Time, the Boldneſs, Avarice, " and the Credit of Great Men had corrupted " and altered every thing; and the Miſchief " would have daily encreaſed, had not our ju- " dicious Prince, or thoſe who aſſiſt him, pre- " vented it. Ignorant and fooliſh Men were " poſſeſs'd of the beſt Benefices and the nobleſt " Dignities and Prelatures, by Favour, Friendſhip, " and Money; and becauſe, for want of Capacity " and Experience they were not able to diſcern " Good from Evil, and knew not how to diſtin- " guiſh Virtue from Vice, they acted exactly ac- " cording to their mean Knowledge. Nay, ſome- " times they were appointed Biſhops before they " were intirely form'd in their Mother's Womb; " the ill Effects of which have been felt in all Chri- " ſtendom. The poor afflicted People could not " forbear murmuring, being govern'd by ſuch " Men, or their Lieutenants and Vicars of the " ſame Stamp with their Maſters, who laid into- " lerable Burdens upon them, tho' they themſelves " did not care to touch 'em with one of their Fin- " gers; 'till the Lord open'd the Eyes, the Heart, " and the Mouths of the People to ſee and com- " plain, and of Princes to hear, and of the King " to judge with Equity and Uprightneſs. I think " we have reaſon to hope from Charles IX, our " King, what the Augurs or Soothſayers ſaid of " Auguſtus, in whoſe Reign the whole Monarchy " was ſo well govern'd, and enjoy'd all manner " of Proſperity and Happineſs. It appears by " this Article, that good and honeſt Men, well " skill'd in Learning, ſhall receive a Reward for " their Labours; the Ignorant ſhall be rejected and " laid aſide, and young People will be encourag'd " to appear on the noble Stage of Virtue; Suck- " ing Children will be no longer rais'd to Eccleſi- " aſtical Dignities, a Burden too heavy for their " weak Shoulders, eſpecially in what concerns Re- " ligion, which requires that none ſhould be ap- " pointed to teach it but ſuch as are Honeſt, " Chaſte, and Holy, and whoſe fleſhly Luſts are " extinguiſh'd thro' Age, or the Love of God. " For to appoint for the Government of the Church " ignorant Men and Children, who are not able to " govern themſelves, is a ſtrange and extravagant " thing, and no leſs contrary to all Divine and " Humane Laws, than if one ſhould appoint a Pupil " to be Guardian of another Pupil, and a Blind- " Man to lead another Blind-Man. . . . . The " good King Lewis XII perceiving ſuch a Fault " among his Clergy ſaid, that Aſſes had a better " Time than Horſes; for Horſes, added he, gallop " to Rome in queſt of Benefices, but many Aſſes " are provided with them. Which is the reaſon " why they have been expoſed by ſeveral Paſ- " quinades and famous Libels; and the following " Verſes have been made upon the loſs of the E-

(a) Requête préſentée au Roi par l'Archevêque d'Ambrun pag. [illegible] of the ſame Volume.

(b) Remarques ſur la Requête de l'Archevêque d'Ambrun, pag. [illegible] of the ſame Tome.

(c) Quintin, in his Speech to the Clergy, in the general Aſſembly of the States of the Kingdom in 1561 ſpoke with great Vigour for the reſtoration of the Elections. See Preſident de la Place, Hiſt. de l'Etat de la Religion & Republique, fol. m. 143. verſo & ſeq.

(d) Ibid.

(e) Joachim du Chalard, Advocate in the great Council, Sommaire expoſition des Ordonnances du Roi Charles IX fol. 7. verſo, Paris 1558

(1) Lib. 3.

ſwer'd, that the (B) Church was not better ſerved in the time of the Elections, than it was under the Concordate. I can hardly believe what is ſaid by ſome Hiſtorians, that Cardinal du Prat (C) expreſs'd a deſire of being made Pope. Some Authors lections againſt thoſe who have uſurp'd them, and thoſe who are unworthily poſſeſs'd of Church-Preferments.

“ Au temps paſſé l'Eſprit Saint eſliſoit “ Ceux, dont faiſoit l'Egliſe eſtre ſervie.
“ En ce temps-là, vertu fruit produiſoit;
“ Car les eleus eſtoyent de ſainte vie.
“ Mais maintenant les mondains par envie
“ Ont uſurpé la ſainte election,
“ Dont s'en enſuy humaine affection:
“ Et par ainſi tous vices proceder
“ Sont des Paſteurs, qui nous ſont concedez “ Par les chevaux, par la pille, & par dons.
“ Trop mieux vauldroit les elire à trois dez;
“ Car à l'hazard ils pourroyent eſtre bons.

If I write the Article of Genebrard, as I hope I ſhall, I'll mention the Book (a) he publiſh'd, to ſhew the neceſſity of reſtoring Canonical Elections. He call'd the Concordate a Myſtery of Iniquity.

(B) The Church was not better ſerv'd in the time of the Elections.] It appears from the jeſt of Lewis XII, mention'd in the foregoing Remarks, that there were many Abuſes under the Pragmatick Sanction, and before the Concordate. The Archbiſhop of Ambrun maintains, (b) that the Concordate has remov'd the Abuſes, the Simony, and the Cabals which formerly prevailed in the Elections. An Abbot Commendatory does very much enlarge upon thoſe Diſorders. “(c) A great Lady was ſaying one Day, in my hearing, that ſhe heard King Francis ſay, that the chief Reaſon which moved him to make the Concordate with Pope Leo, in order to aboliſh the Elections of Biſhops and Abbots, and of ſome Priors, was becauſe thoſe Elections were attended with many Abuſes among the Monks; for without any regard to a Man's Abilities and Learning, which were then very rare in Monaſteries . . . they elected, moſt times, the Merrieſt Fellows, the greateſt Whoremongers and Tiplers, the greateſt Lovers of Dogs and Hawks, in a word, the greateſt Debauchees, that they might have the Liberty to live a looſe and diſorderly Life, under ſuch Abbots and Priors, who were bound by an Oath to indulge them in their Debaucheries. The worſt of all was, that when they could not agree in their Elections they frequently fought and wounded one another; nay, ſometimes their Quarrels were attended with Murder: in ſhort, they made a greater Noiſe, and formed more Cabals and Factions, than there are at the creation of the Rector of the Univerſity of Paris, which I have ſeen formerly; I don't know whether it be ſo ſtill. Beſides, ſome elected a ſilly Monk, who wanted Courage and Reſolution to keep 'em to their Duty, and threaten'd him, when he pretended to Severity. Others elected a poor Wretch, who ſtole their Money and ſtarved his Monks, which occaſion'd great Complaints, and the impoveriſhing of the Abby. . . . In a word, there were many other Abuſes in thoſe Elections, which I paſs over in Silence. Beſides, that great King conſidering the many Services of his Nobility, and not being able to Reward them with the Revenues of his Demeſns, and the Money ariſing from Taxes, (for the whole was neceſſary to carry on his long Wars) he thought it more proper to beſtow upon them ſome Abbies, and other Church-Preferments, than to leave 'em in the hands of the Monks, a ſort of Men, ſaid he, good for nothing but Eating and Drinking, Gaming, making Bow-ſtrings and Ferret-Bags, catching Rabbets, whiſtling to Linets, and living an idle and diſorderly Life; and therefore it was then a common Saying, As Idle as a Prieſt or a Monk; and likewiſe, As Covetous and as great a Whoremonger as a Prieſt or a Monk, as the Italians ſay, Pretri; fratri Monachi & pulli, mai non ſon ſatulli. . . . (d) 'Tis to be obſerved, that if the Elections have been attended with Abuſes among Monks, thoſe of Biſhops have not been more regular; for when a Man had a mind to be made a Biſhop, he bribed the Canons and other Dignified Men with Money or great Promiſes: ſo that it was rather a downright Simony, than a lawful and Holy Election, in imitation of many Popes of thoſe Times, who bribed the Cardinals in order to get their Votes. There were alſo great Tumults and Factions in the Chapters, ſo far as to beat and kill one another, as it was formerly practiſed in Germany; for the Canons were fighting Men, as they are ſtill, and made uſe of Swords, as well as of the Breviary. The Biſhops lived a very diſorderly Life in thoſe Times, they reſided in their Dioceſes more than they do now, for they never left 'em; but then they minded nothing but Dogs, Hawks, Feaſts, and Whores, of whom they had a Seraglio, as I have been told of one, who pick'd up young and handſome Girls of Ten Years of Age, and had 'em bred up and down in ſeveral Villages (as Gentlemen do with Dogs) in order to make uſe of 'em when grown up. They were allow'd to live ſuch a ſcandalous Life; for they were ſo much dreaded that none would have been ſo bold as to Cenſure 'em for it. I might ſay a great deal more upon this Subject, but I will not raiſe a Scandal. Our preſent Biſhops (ſaid a Great Man to me) are more diſcreet, or at leaſt more cunning Hypocrites, and know better how to conceal their Vices. God forbid that what I have ſaid of the ancient and modern Biſhops ſhould be underſtood of all; for in former Times many of 'em were Good and Holy Men, as there are ſtill, and there will be many, with God's Bleſſing, who loves and never forſakes his People.”

(C) That Cardinal du Prat expreſs'd a deſire of being made Pope.] The Gentlemen of Port-Royal took care to repreſent to the Archbiſhop of Ambrun what Laurence Capelloni relates concerning the Death of Antony du Prat. “(e) Clement VII. ſays that Author, being dead, Cardinal du Prat had ſuch an extravagant deſire of being made Pope, that he made bold to tell the King, that it was in his Power to raiſe him to the Holy See. The King being willing to ſee how far his Ambition would carry him, gave him leave to go on. The Cardinal added, That if His Majeſty would be pleaſed to uſe his Intereſt with the College of Cardinals, in order to make him Pope, he would be contented with the Name, and the King ſhould have the Power. The King perceiving the exceſſive Ambition of that Man, and conſidering the great difficulties of ſuch an Enterprize, which could not be executed without vaſt Sums of Money, anſwer'd him, Faith, Mr Chancellor, the Cardinals are ſo greedy, that I have no mind to ſatisfy their Greedineſs. The Cardinal replied, That if the King approv'd of the Deſign, he would find Four hundred thouſand Crowns to put it in execution. The King told him, For what I know, Sir, you have the Sum you mention; but I have no mind to concern myſelf with ſuch a Project. This Anſwer made the Cardinal ſenſible that he was to blame not ſo much for having expreſſed his Ambition, as for having diſcover'd his great Riches. He grew ſo Melancholy upon it, that he fell Sick, and his Illneſs, which was inconſiderable at firſt, increaſed very much, when he was told, that the King knowing that he kept his Bed, had order'd his Goods and Money to be ſeiz'd, telling thoſe who complain'd of it in the Cardinal's Name, that he dealt with him as he had adviſed him to deal with others: So that, ſays that Hiſtorian, the Cardinal died, God knows how, (Dio ſa come) very uneaſy about it.” It will not be improper to add, that thoſe Gentlemen intimated to that Prelate, that he could not doubt of the truth of that Story, ſince he had approved the Book wherein it is to be found. Such was, ſay they (f), the Death of that Great Man, of whom one cannot give an ill Character, without offending the Archbiſhop of Ambrun. And yet 'tis obſervable, that this Story is mention'd in the Lives of the Cardinals, written by Aubery, and printed for Soly, in 1645, with an authentick Approbation of

MES-

(a) It was burnt by the Hangman. See the 11 Diſſertation of Natalis Alexander in Selecta hiſtoriæ Eccleſiaſticæ capita, Seculi 15 & 16.

(b) In his Petition to the King againſt the Verſion of Mons, pag. 272, 274. of the 4*th Vol. of the Pieces relating to that Verſion.*

(c) Brantome's *Memoirs Tom.*1. in his Diſcourſe upon Francis I. pag. 251. & ſeq.

(d) Brantome, ibid. pag. 255.

(e) Remarques ſur la Requeſte à l'Archevêque d'Ambrun pag. 272.

(f) Ib

Authors ſay, that he pretended to be Sick of a Retention (D) of Urine, in order to get out of a danger. 'Tis not likely that his Ignorance of the Latin Tongue (E) ſhould have been ſo great as Jonſton will have it. It has been obſerved, that he was a great Lover of young Aſſes (F) Fleſh, and that others loved it in his Imitation.

He

MESSIRE GEORGE D'AUBUSSON, wherein he declares, that the Truth of Hiſtory is exactly repreſented in that Book; and therefore 'tis ſomewhat ſtrange that his great Employments ſhould ſo quickly make him forget his firſt Studies.

Varillas (a) gives us Capelloni's Narrative, without citing him, and obſerves that du Prat grew ſo big, that his Table was cut hollow to make room for his Belly. He adds, that this Cardinal, “(a) after he had been in a languiſhing Condition for half a Year, died the 9th of July 1535, (b) and to make a kind of Satiſfaction to his Cathedral Church of Sens, into which he never went, tho' he had been a long time Archbiſhop of that Place, he deſir'd to be buried in it.„ We are told another Story, which is more diſadvantageous to Francis I. than that of Capelloni. I ſhall ſet it down to ſhew how little ſuch Narratives ought to be minded; for there is hardly any greater Sign of Falſity, than when a thing is differently related, and applied to different Times and Perſons. “(c) It was a Peccadillo of the Court, like that of King Francis I. to trick Cardinal Marcellus out of his Money. Melanchthon, who ſays he was very well acquainted with that Cardinal, relates the thing in the following manner: The King having receiv'd ſome Letters from Rome, ſpread a Report that Pope Paul was dead. He ſent for that Cardinal, whom he knew to be an Ambitious Man, and very deſirous to be made Pope, and told him that piece of falſe News. The Cardinal repreſented to the King how much it concern'd him and his Kingdom that the next Pope ſhould be a good Friend to him. 'Tis certainly ſo, replied the King; what if we ſhould make you Pope? The Cardinal approved the Motion. This cannot be done without Money, ſaid the King, and I have not the neceſſary Sums to carry on ſuch a Project. The Cardinal offer'd him Two Tuns of Gold. That's enough, ſaid the King, I'll add to it ſomething of my own. The next Letters that came from Rome, brought Advice that the Pope was ſtill living, and had not been Sick. The Cardinal told the King of it, and demanded his Money. The King's Anſwer was, I'll chide my Ambaſſador for writing to me falſe News: as for the Money, he ſaid, If the Pope be not dead, he will die.„ The Author who relates this Story, quotes a Book of (d) Melanchthon, which I have not, and therefore I cannot tell whether he is exact; but I find in another Work of Melanchthon, a thing that ſeems to keep a Medium between this Story and that of Capelloni. (e) Rex Galliæ, pater Franciſci, indigebat ſubito pecunia. Itaque per alium quendam ad ſuum Cancellarium ex Roma, & per poſtam mittit ei literas, ſignificans Papam eſſe mortuum. Lectis literis, mox properat Cancellarius ad Regem, ei nunciaturus tanquam aliquid novi. Rex legit literas, ſimulans ſe neſcire, & interrogat quid ſibi ſit faciendum? Reſpondit Cancellarius, conſultiſſimum eſſe mittere Romam Legatum, & aliquem conſtituere Papam, qui ſit à partibus regis Galliæ. At Rex: ad eam rem opus eſt pecunia, ſicut dicitur: Nulla pecunia eſt ſatis magna, aſpiranti ad Pontificatum. Cancellarius dicit, ſe adhuc habere duas thonnas auri; utrum ſufficerent? Reſpondit Rex: Bene eſt, & ego aliquid pecuniæ addam. Cura igitur unam thonnam auri perferri ad me. Poſtquam eam Rex acceperat, ſubornat alium nuntium afferentem ei literas, Papam adhuc vivere, & non eſſe mortuum. Egregium ſanè inventum, quo quaſi cornicum oculos confixit, & avarum per ſuam avaritiam decepit. According to this Paſſage 'twas not Francis I. who trick'd his Chancellor out of his Money, but another King of France, Father to Francis. But becauſe the Father of Francis I. was no King, it ſhould be ſaid that Melanchthon means Henry II, Father to Francis II; but can Francis II be rightly denoted by the bare Name of Francis? Manlius did no Honour to his Maſter, by publiſhing a Narrative, wherein the Perſons are ſo ill denoted. Let the Reader obſerve how differently the three Stories mention'd by me have been related.

(D) That he pretended to be Sick of a Retention of Urine.] “(f) How many Perſons could I name, whoſe Sickneſs ſaved their Lives, as formerly Auguſtus's? How many have avoided Death, only becauſe their great Infirmity made every body believe that they were near their Grave! (1) Multis mortem diſtulit morbus, & ſaluti illis fuit videri perire. Cardinal du Prat was releaſed out of Priſon in the Reign of Francis I, for fear he ſhould die of a Retention of Urine, having impoſed upon his Phyſicians by drinking privately the Water he made. And we have ſeen a Favourite of Henry III, who did ſo well ſucceed in pretending to be a dying Man, in order to let ſome hard Time ſlip away under the Reign of Henry IV, that he liv'd thirty Years under the late K. in perfect Health.„ I fancy La Mothe le Vayer took one Man for another. If I am not miſtaken, no Author ſays, that our du Prat was impriſon'd; but 'tis reported that (g) Cardinal de la Balue bethought himſelf of drinking his Urine that he might be ſet at liberty, as if he had been ſick of a Strangury. They are La Mothe le Vayer's Words: He quotes the Life of Lewis XI. written by Peter Matthieu, his Quotation is right (h). And tho' it is not impoſſible that two Miniſters of State ſhould make uſe of the ſame Device in different Times, I dont think that the two Stories related by that Author are true: 'twas ſtill an eaſier thing for him to confound the Time and the Perſons he ſpeaks of. Many others have done it, and will do it for the time to come.

(E) His Ignorance of the Latin Tongue ſhould have been ſo great as Jonſton will have it.] That Author wrote a little Book, intitl'd, Naturæ conſtantia, wherein he pretends to prove, that the World does not grow worſe and worſe. Among other Inſtances of the Ignorance of former Ages, he alledges our du Prat, who thought that Moloſſus ſignified a Mule, and that the Latin Word for a Mule was Muletus. Placet hic adjicere, ſays he (i), & exemplum du Prat Epiſcopi & Cancellarii Galliæ; qui cum in literis ab Henrico VIII, Angliæ Rege ad Franciſcum I, Gallarum Regem ſcriptis, iſta verba, Mitto tibi duodecim moloſſos, offendiſſet, mulos per moloſſos intelligi exiſtimavit, & poſt animadverſo errore, moloſſos ſe pro muletis accepiſſe, duplicata inſcitia ſubjunxit. 'Tis to be obſerved, that Jonſton cites no body for this, tho' in other places he very carefully quotes his Authors for the moſt trifling things. Some aſcribe this Slander to Beza, as it appears by the following Words. “(k) Perhaps it will be with Cardinal de Birague's Ignorance, as it was with that of Cardinal du Prat, who, according to Beza, when King Francis I. had receiv'd twelve Engliſh Bull-Dogs from Henry VIII. (the Letter imported duodecim Moloſſos) ask'd the King one of the Mules ſent to him from England; and being told by the King that they were Bull-Dogs, he excuſed himſelf ſaying, he thought there was in the Letter duodecim Muletos. But, after all M. (2) Aubery, who has writ a very faithful Hiſtory of the Cardinals, ſhews that this Ignorance which Beza aſcribes to Cardinal du Prat, is a meer Calumny; and he proves it by the Teſtimony of Feron, who calls him a very Learned and Famous Civilian; of Sadolet, who pitch'd upon him to cenſure his Latin Works, and of Auton, who praiſes him for his eloquent Speech which he made in Latin before the Emperor Maximilian.„

I don't know whether Beza has this Story in any of his Works; but I know that it is to be found in (l) a Book of Henry Stephens.

(F) That he was a great lover of young Aſſes-fleſh.] He was like Mecænas, in this reſpect, who was the firſt that brought Aſſe's fleſh into vogue. (m) Pullos earum (aſinarum) epulari primus Mecænas inſtituit, multum eo tempore prælatos onagris: poſt eum

interiit

(a) Hiſt. de François premier, B. 7. pag. 241 of the 2d Dutch Edition.

(a) Id. ib. pag. 242, 244.

(b) It appears from the Epitaph of that Chancellor mention'd by Frizon, pag. 574. 575. of the Gallia purpurata, that he died the 9. of July 1535, aged 72 Years.

(c) Jeremiah de Pours, Divine Melodie du Saint Pſalmiſte B. 5. pag. 1030.

(d) He quotes Dom. p. 3. fol. 171.

(e) Joannes Manlius in locorum communium Collectaneis ex lectionibus Philippi Melanchthonis excerptis pag. 575. edit. Francof. 1568. That Book might be intitled Melanchthoniana.

(f) La Mothe le Vayer, Diſcours de la Santé pendant la maladie in the 8*th Vol. of his Works pag.* 154, 156.

(1) Sen. epiſt. 78.

(g) La Mothe le Vayer Letter 42. in the 10*th Vol. of his Works, pag.* 310.

(h) These are Peter Matthieu's Words, l. 10. n. 3. p. m. 424. He drank his Urine ſo privately that 'twas thought he would die of a Strangury. The King order'd him to be viſited, the Phyſicians gave him over, &c.

(i) Jo. Jonſtonus de Naturæ conſtantia p. 73. edit. Amſtel. 1632.

(k) Naudé Dialogue de Maſcurat p. 426. See alſo Father Garaſſe, p. 641. of his Doctrine curieuſe.

(2) Tom. 3. pag. 355.

(l) In the 29. Chapt. of his Apology for Herodotus p. m. 334.

(m) Plinius lib. 8. cap. 43.

He was a great Perſecutor of the Proteſtants: Some of 'em ſay, that for a Puniſhment he died in Deſpair. A famous Hiſtoriographer * ſuppoſes, that he was cruelly tormented by the Remorſes of his Conſcience, becauſe he remembred that he had introduced ſeveral Innovations, whereby the People were oppreſſed. I ſhall ſet down † Beza's Epitaph upon him.

PRETEXTATUS (Papyrius) made himſelf famous at Rome from his younger Years for concealing a Secret which his Mother had a mind to know. This Story is mention'd in the Supplement to Moreri's Dictionary, but all the Wit of it has been left out; and therefore I ſhall give a more faithful (A) Account of the thing. I ſhall alſo direct the Reader to the firſt Author of the Story, better than interiit aſſertitas saporis. After the Death of that Favourite People grew weary of that Fleſh. Meibomius obſerves, that the ſame thing was ſeen in the Time of Antony du Prat. (n) Simile quid de Antonio Pratenſe, Galliæ Cancellario, refert Johannes Bruyerinus lib. xxiii. de re cibaria cap. xx. Ætate noſtra, inquit, Antonius Pratenſis, Galliæ Cancellarius, imitator extitit Mæcenatis in eo genere eſcæ (carnis nempe aſininæ) quam aviditſimus, verum & cum ipſo gratia quoque illius carnis ſepulta eſt (o). That Book of Meibomius being ſomewhat ſcarce, I hope the Reader will not be diſpleas'd to find here ſeveral particular Facts mention'd by that Author, whereby it will appear, that Men bring their Taſte into Slavery, out of Flattery, and that a Favourite can bring into Faſhion not only ſuch Cloaths as he likes, but alſo ſuch Meats as ſuit with his Palate. (p) Potuit vero (Mæcenas) & gulæ tantum aut peculiaris ſibi appetitus gratia cibo illo veſci cœpiſſe familiarius: quem deinde ob ipſius auctoritatem alii, quaſi aſſentatione quadam, cariorem & in pretio habuere, donec ab obitu Mæcenatis rurſum viluſceret, quod uſu venire in ejuſmodi rebus fere ſolet. Sic acipenſerem Plinius refert lib. ix. cap. xvii. nullo in honore fuiſſe ſuo, id eſt, Trajani tempore: quem tamen Serenus Sammonicus apud Macrobium Saturn. lib. iii. cap. xvi. docet, tum apud antiquos fuiſſe in pretio, tum poſt Plinium ſuo ævo gratiam ejus ad epulas quaſi poſtliminio rediiſſe. Sic Horatius rhombum & ciconiam nullo in cibis uſu fuiſſe ſcribit, antequam id docuiſſet vir prætorius, ſive is fuerit, dubitantibus Acrone & Porphyrione, Aſellius, ſive Rufus, aut Sempronius. Et addit, mergos, vile alias cibi genus, ſi quis aſſos dixerit futuros ſuaves, juventutem Romanam pravi docilem id facile credituram. Verſus ſunt Serm. lib. ii. Sat. ii.

Tutus erat rhombus, tutoque ciconia nido,
Donec vos auctor docuit prætorius. Ergo
Si quis nunc mergos ſuaveis edixerit aſſos, Parebit pravi docilis Romana juventus.

Nec diſſimile quid contigit ſuperiori ſeculo Romæ. De Hadriano VI. enim Pontiſ. Max. narrat Paulus Jovius (a) &c.

(G) That for a Puniſhment he died in Deſpair.] Henry Stephens having mention'd a Lieutenant-Criminal, (who died diſtracted, after he had uttered ſeveral Blaſphemies againſt God) adds, (b) "Chancellor du Prat died alſo a miſerable Death, "notwithſtanding his fine Hoſtel-Dieu (of which "King Francis I. ſaid, that it was not large enough "to contain all thoſe whom he had reduced to "Beggary); for he died at Nantouillet, his Country-Seat, having his Stomach eaten up with "Worms, and uttering Blaſphemies againſt God, "with great Impatience, occaſion'd by the violent "Pain he felt, and (as ſome ſay) by the Vexation "he had to ſee his Trunks ſealed up, ſo that he "ſaid, See what it is to ſerve a King with Body, "and Soul. This du Prat was the firſt who "thought fit that the Parliament ſhould take cognizance of Hereſies, becauſe he ſaid, they are "attended with Blaſphemy. 'Twas he likewiſe "who gave the firſt Commiſſions to put to Death, "thoſe who oppos'd the Church of Rome, being "weary of the long Proceedings in Berquin's Trial.

(A) Give a more faithful Account of the thing.] The Senate not being able to put an end to a matter of great Moment, that was under Debate, put it off till the next Day, and ordered that the thing ſhould be kept ſecret, till they had made a Decree about it. Young Papyrius, who had followed his Father into the Senate, according to the Cuſtom of that Time, being aſk'd by his Mother what had been done in the Aſſembly, anſwer'd, that every body was order'd to be ſilent about it, and that therefore he would ſay nothing of it. This Anſwer increaſed the Lady's Curioſity. The young Boy being more importun'd than before, was oblig'd to tell her a Lye, in order to make himſelf eaſy, without diſobeying the Senate. He told his Mother, that this Queſtion had been debated, Whether it would be more advantageous to the Republick, to allow a Huſband to have two Wives, or a Wife to have two Huſbands. The Lady being amazed at his Diſcourſe, went out haſtily to acquaint the other Women with it; ſo that the next Day a whole Crowd of 'em appear'd at the Gate of the Senate-Houſe, intreating the Aſſembly, with Tears in their Eyes, that they would rather ordain, that a Woman ſhould have two Huſbands, than that a Man ſhould have two Wives. The Senators were ſurpris'd to ſee thoſe Women make ſuch an uproar; but young Papyrius explain'd the thing to 'em, telling 'em what Device he had made uſe of to ſatisfy his Mother's Curioſity. The Senate admir'd him for it, and order'd, that for the time to come he ſhould be the only Boy allowed to be preſent in the Aſſembly. This is the Origin (c) of the Surname Prætextatus. We find this Story in Aulus Gellius: I ſhall ſet down the following Words of that Author. (d) Secretum rei & ſilentium deberi puer affirmans animum ejus ad inquirendum everberat. Quærit igitur compreſſius violentiuſque. Tum puer, matre urgente, lepidi atque feſtivi mendacii conſilium capit. Actum in ſenatu dixit, utrum videretur utilius magiſque è republica eſſe, unuſne ut duas uxores haberet, an ut una apud duos nupta eſſet. Hoc illa ut audivit, animo compaveſcit: domo trepidans egreditur: ad ceteras matronas deſert quod audierat. Perveniunt ad ſenatum poſtera die matrumfamilias caterva, lacrymantes atque obſecrantes orant una potius ut duobus nupta fieret, quàm ut uni duæ. Senatores ingredientes in curiam, quæ illa mulierum intemperies & quid ſibi poſtulatio iſthæc vellet, mirabantur. Puer Papyrius in medium curiæ progreſſus, quid mater audire inſtitiſſet, quid ipſe matri dixiſſet, rem, ſicuti fuerat, denarrat. Senatus fidem atque ingenium pueri deoſculatus conſultum facit, ut poſthac pueri cum patribus in curiam ne introeant, niſi ille unus Papyrius. Macrobius tranſcrib'd this almoſt Word for Word; but he added to it a Circumſtance that is not to be found in Aulus Gellius: He ſays, that the Senators (e) look'd upon the boldneſs of thoſe Women as an ill-boding Prodigy, at which they were amazed.

The Author of the Supplement to Moreri's Dictionary has committed two Faults. 1. He ſuppoſes (f) that Papyrius told his Mother, that the Senate had ordered that a Man ſhould have two Wives. That Author ſhould have ſaid, that he made her believe it had been debated, whether this would be more advantageous to the Republick, than to order that a Woman ſhould have two Huſbands. 2. He ſuppoſes, that thoſe Women begg'd of the Senate that Women ſhould have the ſame Advantage that was granted to Men the Day before, and that each of 'em might be allow'd to have two Huſbands. This Account makes the Story inſipid, and deprives it of its Pleaſantneſs: nay, it repreſents thoſe Ladies as altogether ignorant of their true Intereſt; for what could they get by asking ſuch a thing? Is it not manifeſt, that, all things duly conſider'd, they had been rather in a worſe than in a better Condition, if each Man might have had two Wives, and each Woman two Huſbands? The beſt thing they could hope for was, to be upon the ſame Terms; for if each of them might have ſaid, I have two Huſbands, ſhe might alſo have ſaid, I have 'em with another. Are two Halves than has been done by the Writer of that Supplement: the thing is (B) somewhat important.

---

* Mezeray, Abr. Chronol. tom. 4. p. m. 584. ad ann. 1535.

† Antonio Pratenſi, Cancellario Galliarum, inter obeſos obeſiſſimo. Ampliſſimus vir hic jacet. Beza Poemat. pag. 94. edit. tertiæ.

(n) Joh. Henricus Meibomius in vita Mæcenatis c.26.p.155

(o) I have verified that Quotation out of Bruyerinus: it is right, only inſtead of lib. xxiii. it ſhould be lib. xiii.

(p) Idem pag. 155, 155.

(a) Meibomius mentions here what I have quoted in the Remark L of the Art. Hadrian VI

(b) Henry Stephens's Apology for Herodotus chap. 26. p. m. 310.

(c) Ei puero poſtea cognomentum honoris gratia inditum prætextatus, ob loquendi tacendique in ætate prætextata prudentiam. Aulus Gellius lib. i. c. 23.

(d) Lib.

(e) Utna parva re prodigium illam verecundi ſexus impudicam inſaniam paveſcebant. Macrob. Saturn. lib. i. c. 6. p. m. [illegible]

(f) At the word Papyrius.

PRICE (John) flourish'd in the XVII. Century. † He was a Native of England, and a very Learned and Judicious Man. After he had travel'd a long time, he retir'd to Florence, where he turn'd Catholick. . . . He ‖ died at Rome in the Year 1676. He publish'd (A) several Learned Books, and ‡ left behind him a Commentary upon the Halves more than a Whole? I know one may think of several Cases wherein it would be an advantage to them; but upon other Accounts, and in several other Cases, which one may easily think of, the disadvantage would counterbalance, and perhaps exceed the Advantage.

(B) 'Tis somewhat important to direct the Readers to the first Author.] Notwithstanding the Authority of Aulus Gellius, I should be apt to think that it is an idle Story; but I cannot believe it, when I consider that the Grave Cato the Censor mention'd it in a Speech. And therefore the better to inable the Readers to pass a right Judgment upon this Matter of Fact, 'tis not sufficient (a) to acquaint 'em that Macrobius mentions it, for such a Compiler of Witty Sayings and Stories as he is, does not deserve to be much credited. Witty Sayings and Stories are frequently forged in one's Closet. Those who invent 'em, being unwilling to lose their Labour, publish 'em, and ascribe them to certain Persons who lived at such a time, omitting none of the Circumstances that may perswade the truth of 'em. When those Inventions are diverting, and afford Matter for Slander, they take Root in one's Memory, and go from Mouth to Mouth. They are collected, and often reprinted; but good Judges will only commend the Wit that is in them, without taking them for true Matter of Fact. This is the Judgment that ought to be made of several Stories and Witty Conceits, mention'd by Macrobius; and therefore his Authority is very inconsiderable, as to that Uproar of the Roman Ladies. Aulus Gellius, whom he transcribes, is a more credible Writer, for he lived nearer the time when the thing is said to have happen'd; and yet all those who quote no other Author but him upon this occasion, are no discerning Men. Cato should be quoted for this Story, since Aulus Gellius had it from him: He does not quote the very Words of that Censor, because he had not then the Original, but he gives the Sense of 'em. Historia, says he (b), de Papirio Prætextato dicta scriptaque est à M. Catone in oratione, qua usus est ad milites contra Galbam, cum multa quidem venustate atque luce atque munditia verborum. Ea Catonis verba huic prorsus commentario indidissem, si libri copia fuisset id temporis, quum hæc dictavi. Quod si non virtutes dignitatesque verborum, sed rem ipsam scire quæris, fermè ad hunc modum est. There is some probability that this Story is true, since the Grave Cato mention'd it in a Speech that was publish'd. I am not ignorant that this Censor jested now and then (a); but it was neither a proper Time, nor a fit Place for a Man of his Character to tell a Jest. Perhaps it will be objected to me, that Livy, who mentions another Commotion of the Roman Ladies, says nothing of this; but it may be answer'd, that perhaps he gave an account of it in the Books of his History that are not extant. I shall observe, by the bye, that the other Commotion was occasion'd by the Law, whereby Women were forbidden to wear any Ornaments. There was a Design to suppress it. Some Tribunes desir'd it should be kept up; others were against it. Our Cato, who was Consul that Year (b), made a vigorous Speech (c) for the Preservation of that Law, and against the liberty Women took of running in Crowds, and making a great uproar in the Streets. Nevertheless the Law was repeal'd: the Tribunes who opposed it were oblig'd to consent to it, when they saw their Houses beset by those mutinous Women. (d) Capitolium turba hominum faventium adversantiumque legi complebatur. Matronæ, nulla nec auctoritate, nec verecundia, nec imperio virorum, contineri limine poterant: omnes vias urbis, aditusque in forum obsidebant: viros descendentes ad forum orantes, ut florente republica, crescente indies privata omnium fortuna, matronis quoque pristinum ornatum reddi paterentur. Augebatur hæc frequentia mulierum indies; nam etiam ex oppidis conciliabulisque conveniebant. Jam & consules prætoresque, & alios magistratus adire & rogare audebant. Ceterum minime exorabilem alterum utique consulem M. Porcium Catonem habebant, qui pro lege, quæ abrogabatur, ita disseruit. . . . . . . (e) Hæc quum contra legem proque lege dicta essent, aliquanto major frequentia mulierum postero die sese in publicum effudit, unoque agmine omnes tribunorum (f) januas obsederunt, qui collegarum rogationi intercedebant; nec ante abstiterunt, quam remissa intercessio ab tribunis esset. Nulla deinde dubitatio fuit, quin omnes tribus legem abrogarent, anno vigesimo post abrogata est, quam lata.

AN OBSERVATION upon the manner of citing Authors.

I shall observe, by the bye, that the way of quoting Authors is so faulty, that it were to be wish'd some Rules were laid down for it. The most inconsiderable things may be brought into a Method; and if there was a Method for the manner of quoting Authors, it would prevent several Abuses. If any one undertook to lay down such Rules, he should tell us how far a Writer may be allowed to add something of his own to the Matters of Fact related by him. We have seen that Macrobius amplified the Story we read in Aulus Gellius. A Spanish Jesuit has added more to it, for he affirms, that on that Day the Senators came later than usually from the Assembly, and that it was the reason why Papyrius's Mother ask'd him what Business took 'em up so long. (g) Como el negocio era pesado, y los votos no se concertavan, salieron aquel dia los Senadores algo mas tarde de su consejo de lo que solian: lo qual fue occasion para que la madre del Papyrio le preguntasse, porque causa se havian detenido tanto en el Senado. He supposes the Boy answer'd, that the thing under Debate was to be kept Secret till it should be determin'd. These Circumstances are not to be found in Aulus Gellius, nor in Macrobius: However, I think that if there is any fault in advancing them, 'tis but a small one; and the Spanish Author seems to me more inexcusable for quoting not only those two ancient Writers, but also Alexander ab Alexandro, Volaterranus, and Charles Stephens.

(A) Publish'd several Learned Books.] He put out at Paris, in 1635, Apuleius's Apology, with Notes in 4to, and in 1646, Annotationes in Evangelium Matthei, in 4to, and annotationes ad Epistolam Jacobi, in 8vo, and in 1647, Acta Apostolorum ex scriptura, Patribus, Græcisque ac Latinis scriptoribus illustrata, in 8vo. His Notes in Psalmos & in plerosque alios libros Novi Testamenti, were printed at London in 1660 in Folio. His Commentary upon Apuleius's Metamorphosis was printed at Tergow in the Year 1650 in 8vo. " (h) He intended to re-" print Apuleius's Apology, with many new Notes " of his own, and to publish Aulus Gellius, upon " whom he had writ many Observations, Avienus " de oris maritimis, and several Corrections upon " Hesychius, whose Index he inserted at the end " of Apuleius's Metamorphosis; I mean the Index " of the Authors alledged by Hesychius. But his " Sight being grown very weak, he says, in one of " his Notes, that he thinks he will not be able to " perform his Designs.„ The Notes of that Writer upon Apuleius's Metamorphosis are so long, that whereas the Text contains only 262 Pages, they take up 734 Pages, and are printed in a smaller Letter than that of the Text. The Author declares (i) his Design was to fill his Notes with new and good Things; which was no easy Task, since he wrote after so many other Commentators. He adds, that he observes what Apuleius took from Tacitus, Suetonius, and Sallust, and particularly from Virgil, and some other Writers, and what Ammianus Marcellinus, Sidonius, St. Jerom, and St. Augustin took from him; that, above all things, he has endeavour'd to print the Text as like the Original as ever he could, and that he has corrected about 300 Places, only by way of Conjecture.

---

* Colomiés, Bibl. choisie pag. 142. Amsterdam 1699.

† Id. ib. pag. 141.

‡ Id. ib.

(a) Macrobius is the only Author quoted in the Supplement to Moreri's Dictionary.

(b) Aulus Gellius ubi supra.

(a) See Balzac, Oeuvres diverses, in his dissertation de la conversation des Romains, p. m. 35.

(b) That is, the Year of Rome 558.

(c) See his Oration in the 34th Book of Livy, at the beginning.

(d) Titus Livius lib. 34. init. p. m. 621.

(e) Id. ib. pag. 625.

(f) That is, of Marcus and Publius Brutus Tribunes of the People, who opposed their Colleagues, who design'd to prevent that the Lex Oppia should be abrogated.

(g) Juan de Torres, primera parte de la Philosophia moral de principes, lib. 1. pag. 59. edit. of Barcelona 1598.

(h) Colomiés, Bibl. choisie pag. 142. Amst. 1699.

(i) Dedimus operam ut & apposita & nova afferremus: rem post tot alios haud adeo in proclivi sitam. Jo. Priceus in præfat.

the Epiſtles of Pliny the Younger, that will be ſhortly Printed. He has been praiſed by very (B) Learned Men. He made a conſiderable ſtay at Paris, and publiſh'd ſome Books in that City; but he * left it in 1646, and return'd into England. Sarravius ſays †, he had reaſon to be angry with France, and that he was a Man ‡ who deſerved to be admired on account of his Learning and great Conſtancy in Adverſity.

PRIDEAUX (John) Biſhop of Winchester, and a very eminent Divine, was born in 1578, at Stafford in Devonſhire. He was admitted into Exeter-College at Oxford, in the Year 1596, where he made a great Progreſs in a very little time. His ſtrong Conſtitution enabled him to apply himſelf very much to ſtudy; and having an excellent Memory he quickly reaped the Fruits of his Labours. He diſtinguiſh'd himſelf by his Subtilty in Diſputing, and was made Fellow of Exeter-College in 1601. He ſucceeded Dr. Holland in the Rectorſhip of that College, and was admitted Doctor of Divinity. He was made Regius Profeſſor of Divinity when Dr. Abbot was promoted to the Biſhoprick of Saliſbury. He diſcharged the Duties of his Rectorſhip with ſo much Prudence and Politeneſs, that many Students reſorted to Exeter-College, where they made ſo great a Progreſs by his wiſe Remonſtrances, and the good choice of their Tutors, that many of 'em proved an Ornament to the Church and State. He continued in that Imployment 11 Years, or thereabouts. He was no leſs careful in diſcharging the Duties of his Profeſſorſhip; which he did with great Learning, expreſſing an inviolable Fidelity to the King and the Church of England. He exerciſed that Profeſſorſhip ſomewhat above 27 Years. He was five times Vice-Chancellor of the Univerſity of Oxford, and was made Biſhop of Winchester in the Year 1641. He died the 29th of July 1650, being 72 Years of Age ||. He publiſh'd (A) ſeveral Books. I need not ſay, that he ought not to be confounded with (B) another PRIDEAUX, who put out a Second Edition of the Marmora Arundelliana.

PRIEZAC

jecture, having but one Manuſcript in his Hands. 'Twas the ſame Manuſcript which he gave to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and that Prelate beſtow'd it upon the Bodleian Library. He had Colvius's Edition with Caſaubon's Notes written with his own Hand, and the Edition of Vicenza, of the Year 1488. He takes it to be the moſt ancient, next to that of Rome in 1472. and follows it in many Places preferably to the later Editions. Here are two Editions of Apuleius omitted by M. Fabricius (k); the moſt ancient Edition mention'd by him is that of Venice 1493.

(B) He has been praiſed by very Learned Men.] " (l) Price is praiſed by Sarravius in his Letters, " by Archbiſhop Uſher upon St. Ignatius's Epiſtles, " by Heinſius in an Epiſtle to Charles Dati, by " Mr. Selden more than once in the ſecond Book " de Synedriis Ebræorum, by Voſſius in his Harmonia " Evangelica, by Morus in his Notes upon the New-" Teſtament, by Redi in his Tracts of the Genera-" tion of Inſects, but particularly by Axenius upon " Phedrus." Sarravius obſerves, that Price complain'd that Salmaſius had treated him with Contempt. In order to pacify him Sarravius preſented him with a Book of Salmaſius. (m) Unicum quod ſupererat (exemplar) donavi doctiſſimo viro tuique ſtudioſiſſimo Jo. Priceo, ut eum placarem aliquo modo conquerentem, quod in Miſcellis Defenſionibus contemptim à te eſſet habitus.

(A) He publiſh'd ſeveral Books.] He wrote an Apology for Caſaubon contra Andream Eudæmon-Johannem, printed at Oxford in 8. in the Year 1614. His Hypomnemata Logica, Rhetorica, Phyſica, tyrocinium ad ſyllogiſmum legitimum contexendum, &c. Heptades Logicæ, &c. came out in the ſame Town; as alſo Lectiones decem in totidem Religionis capita: lectiones 22. Orationes 13. conciones 6. & oratio ad Jacobum Regem: orationes 9. inaugurales in promotione Doctorum: Faſciculus controverſiarum Theologicarum: Theologiæ Scholaſticæ Syntagma, & Conciliorum Synopſis: Manuductio ad Theologiam Polemicam: Iſagoge ad omnigenæ hyſtoriæ lectionem, and ſeveral others. I omit the Books he wrote in his Mother-Tongue.

(B) Another PRIDEAUX, who put out a ſecond Edit. of the Marmora Arundelliana.] His Chriſtian Name was Humphrey, and he was Student of Chriſt-Church in Oxford. He ſhews a great deal of Learning in the Book he publiſh'd in that Town, in the Year 1676, with this Title, Marmora Oxonienſia ex Arundellianis, Seldenianis aliiſque conflata. 'Tis a Book in Folio. He inſerted in that Work what Mr. Selden had publiſh'd at London in 1628, with this Title, Marmora Arundelliana. This Book of Mr. Selden contain'd an Explication of part of the Marbles which the Earl of Arundel cauſed to be brought from the Levant. Prideaux inſerted alſo in his Work Lydiat's Notes upon ſome of thoſe Marbles: but what he wrote of his own is the moſt conſiderable part of that Book; for he Reviſed and Commented upon, recenſuit & perpetuo commentario explicavit, not only the Inſcriptions of the Marbles of the Earl of Arundel, but alſo thoſe of ſeveral other Monuments of the ſame Nature beſtowed upon the Univerſity of Oxford. 'Tis to be obſerved, that Mr. Selden explained only the Inſcriptions of 29 Greek and 10 Latin Marbles. He pitch'd upon thoſe which ſeem'd to him moſt conſiderable among many others; for the Arundelian Marbles amounted to about 250. They were brought to London in 1627, and placed in the Garden of Arundel-Houſe. Thomas Howard, Earl of Arundel, had been at great Pains and Charges to get 'em, and ſent a very Learned Man into the Levant for that end. (a) Ea (marmora) illuſtriſſimus Comes, dum in Italia degeret, (quæ ei altera patria erat,) ex antiquarum Aſiæ, Græciæ, & Italiæ urbium ruinis, operâ Doctiſſimi viri Gulielmi Pettai in hac re uſus, ſummis impenſis conquiſivit. Græcorum pleraque è Smyrna habuit, ea ibi (1) Gaſſendus (ſi fides ipſi hac in re habenda ſit) narrat operâ Peireskii ſui primo detecta erutaque fuiſſe, perſolutis quinquaginta Aureis per Sampſonem quendam illius negotia Smyrnæ procurantem; ſed cum inde convehenda eſſent, Turcarum fraude Sampſone in carcerem conjecto, ibi detenta erant, donec ea illuſtriſſimus Arundelliæ Comes majori pretio per Pettæum redempta cum aliis, quæ per eundem procuratorem collegerat, Londinum in hortum Palatii Arundelliani, anno Dom. noſtri 1627. curavit tranferenda. Henry Howard, Earl of Arundel, his Grandſon, beſtowed them upon the Univerſity of Oxford; and thoſe who had the like Monuments did the ſame in his Imitation. (b) Quæcunque Vir immortalitate digniſſimus Thomas Arundeliæ Comes, legatione quaſi ſolenni eam ob rem inſtitutâ, infinitis impenſis, & repetito ſæpius capitis periculo eruditiſſimi Viri Gulielmi Pettæi, cui procuratio ea demandabatur, Europâ, Aſiâque excuſſis, in Britannias noſtras deduxerat, Nepos ejuſdem, tanto Avo non inficiandus, æternitati & Muſis hic loci demum conſecrabat: reliquiſque quotquot fuere eruditæ antiquitatis Patronis autor extitit, ut ad tanti Auſpicis morem, quæcunque apud ſe laterent ex temporum naufragio Tabulæ, ibidem appenderent. The firſt Word of this Paſſage ſignifies that the Grandſon beſtowed upon the Univerſity of Oxford, all the Marbles that his Grandfather got; but it is not true: he only gave one half of 'em, and ſome few more, the reſt being loſt when the Earls of

* Sarrav. epiſt. 169. pag. 172.

† Ille in Angliam heri repatriavit ergaGalliam noſtram peſſime, nec immerito, animatus. Id. ibid.

‡ Idem epiſt. 157. pag. 162.

|| Taken from Freherus's Theatrum, pag. 550. He quotes Antony Wood's Hiſtoria & Antiquitates Univerſitatis Oxonienſis.

(k) Joh. Albertus Fabricius in biblioth. Latina pag. 137.

(l) Colomiés ubi ſupra pag. 143, 144.

(m) Sarravius epiſt. 144 pag. 150.

(a) Humphridus Prideaux præf. ad Marmora Oxonienſia.

(1) In vita Peireskii lib. 4. ad an. 1627.

(b) Idem dedicat. init.

PRIEZAC (Daniel de) * Counſellor of State in Ordinary, born in the Caſtle of Priezac in Limoſin, was choſen, in the Year 1639, † to fill up the only Place that was left among the Forty Members of the French Academy. He wrote ſeveral (Z) Books, and died in the Year 1662.

PRYNN (William) an Engliſh Civilian, made himſelf very much talk'd of during the Civil Wars of Charles I. and the Parliament. He was a very inconſtant and fiery Man. He declared ſo violently againſt the Epiſcopal Clergy, that he expoſed himſelf to an ignominious Puniſhment; for he was condemn'd to have (A) his Ears cut off: which was executed, and proved advantageous to him, when the War broke out between the King and the Parliament. He was look'd upon as a glorious Confeſſor of the Good Cauſe, who had ſuffer'd for the pure Goſpel. He was Member of the Houſe of Commons, and expreſs'd a great Animoſity againſt the Royaliſts; nevertheleſs, either thro' Inconſtancy, or a private Diſcontent, he grew Milder afterwards, and was Impriſon'd. He wrote a ſmall Piece in (B) his Confinement, wherein he repreſented to the Parliament, that they ought not to bring the King to his Trial; and that the Army which oppreſs'd the Liberty of the Parliament, was directed by the Counſels of the Jeſuits. He had before publiſh'd a Book, wherein he exhorted the Parliament to exterminate (C) all the Independants. If it be true that he ſaid what is aſcribed to him, concerning the Perſon of Arundel left their Houſe in the time of the Civil Wars. Mr. Prideaux ſays ſo in his Preface; and therefore his wrong Account may be rectified by himſelf. (c) Arundelliana (marmora) plura quam centum & triginta numerantur; Hæc tamen vix ultra dimidiam partem eorum conficiunt, quæ inſigniſſimus Arundelliæ Comes collegerat; cætera, cum tempore nuperrimi belli civilis incendii in hortis Arundellianis Londini, pulſis inde dominis, diu neglecta jacuerint, aut furtim ſurrepta, aut ſervorum negligentiâ corrupta, aut à (d) Lapicidis ad reficiendas ædes adhibita in magnum rei literariæ damnum amittuntur. This ſhews that M. Vigneul Marville does not go upon a falſe Report, when having mention'd thoſe Marbles he adds: " (e) 'Tis a deplorable thing, that " during the Civil Wars of England, moſt of thoſe " Marbles were made uſe of for the repairing of " Doors and Chimneys. This will not encourage the " Curious to be at ſuch great Charges.,, I would inlarge upon the Importance of thoſe Marbles, were it not that they make up an Article in the Supplement to Moreri's Dictionary, and in the Journal des Savans of the 25. of April 1678. Note that Humphrey Prideaux tranſlated into Latin a Tract of Maimonides de jure pauperis & Peregrini apud Judæos, printed with his Notes at Oxford in the Year 1679, in 4*to*.

(Z) He wrote ſeveral Books.] " (f) His printed " Books are, Les Obſervations contre le livre de " Melroſe, intitulé, Philippe le Prudent. Vindiciæ " Gallicæ. Three Volumes concerning the Privi-" leges of the H. Virgin. Diſceptatio legitima, in " controverſia mota inter Apoſtolicæ Cameræ cognitorem, " Actorem; & Eminentiſſimos Cardinales Barberinos, " excellentiſſimumque urbis Romæ Præfectum; Defen- " ſores. One Volume in 4*to* of Political Diſcourſes. " He is now (g) writing a ſecond Volume.,, Note, That the Vindiciæ Gallicæ is an Anſwer to the Mars Gallicus of Janſenius.

(A) Condemn'd to have his Ears cut off.] A Miniſter of Baſil ſeems to ſay, that he was alſo condemn'd to be tranſported into America; but 'tis more likely he meant, that he was condemn'd to ſpend the remaining part of his Life in a Dungeon. Theſe are his Words: (h) Author noſter Prynnus, Baſtwicus & Burtonus, trium Facultatum Doctores, quod contra iſtam tyrannidem hiſcere auſi fuiſſent auribus mutilati, extra anni ſoliſque viam expulſi ſunt quo longa tabe perimerentur. Here follows a Paſſage of M. Baillet, wherein we find at what Time, and in what Place William Prynn had his Ears cut off. It contains alſo ſome other Particulars, and therefore I ſhall ſet it down at length. " (a) There is " indeed an Anti-Arminianiſm of William Prynn; but " the Title does not ſo much concern the Arminians " themſelves, as the nature of their Doctrines. The " Deſign of his Work is only to ſhew, that the " Doctrine of abſolute Predeſtination, ſuch as the " Calviniſts teach it, has been conſtantly believed " by the Chriſtian Church. This Prynn ſeems to be " the ſame with that famous Enemy of the Biſhops " of England, and particularly of the unfortunate " William Laud, (b) Archbiſhop of Canterbury. He " had his Ears cut off by the common Executioner, " in the Palace-Yard of Weſtminſter the 30 of June " 1637, for his Tragedy concerning the breaking " of the Sabbath, and the State of the Biſhops; and " being fined Five thouſand Pounds, with a Phy-" ſician named Baſtwick, and a London Miniſter " named Burton, was clap'd up in a Priſon, where " he was to remain the reſt of his Days. But he " was ſet at liberty (c) when Charles I. was put to " Death, and even was a Parliament-Man. He " wrote ſince a prodigious number of Books, moſt " of 'em in his Mother-Tongue; and was made " Keeper of the Records in the Tower of London. " He died about eighteen or nineteen Years ago.,, (B) A ſmall Piece in his Confinement.] It is to be found in a Collection of ſeveral Pieces, publiſh'd by a Royaliſt in the Year 1649, with this Title, Sylloge variorum Tractatuum, Anglico quidem idiomate & ab Auctoribus Anglis conſcriptorum, ſed in linguam Latinam tranſlatorum; quibus Caroli Magnæ Britan. Franciæ & Hiberniæ Regis innocentia illuſtratur, & parricidium injuſtiſſimè & immaniſſimè in illum perpetratum, à Pſeudo-Parliamento & perduelli exercitu luce clarius declaratur. Acceſſit Reſponſum pernéceſſarium ad declamationem ſeu provocationem M. Joannis Cooke: Auctore I. V. A. R. That Piece of William Prynn is Intituled, Breve Memento ad præſens Non-Parliamentarium conventiculum, tangens ipſorum præſentes intentiones & proceſſus ad deponendum & ſupplicio afficiendum Carolum Stewardum legitimum ſuum Regem: per Guilielmum Prynnium, Armigerum, membrum Domus Communium, & captivum ſub exercitus Tyrannide: qui, ut apparet, arma fert contra Domos Parlamenti, ſuos quondam Dominos: quarum membra nunc violenter capit & detinet captiva, durante ipſorum illegali licentia. He who tranſlated it into Latin obſerves, that 'tis the Work of a Man not (d) well-affected towards the King.

(C) To exterminate all the Independants.] He dedicated that Book to the Houſe of Commons. I have it tranſlated into Latin, and printed in 1649. The Author of that Tranſlation was a Swiſs Miniſter, named Wolfgang Meyer. The Title runs thus: Guilielmi Prynn Angli Armigeri Aulæ Lincolnienſis, Fulcimentum Gladii Chriſtianorum Regum, Principum & Magiſtratuum: Quo ipſorum Hæreticos, Idololatras, Schiſmaticos, Sectarum Authores, & Blaſphemos, pro criminis gravitate puniendi authoritas, jus ac poteſtas teſtimoniis Veteris ac Novi Teſtamenti, edictis & praxi Chriſtianorum Imperatorum, Regum, Statuum & Magiſtratuum: ſanctionibus item & ſtatutis Regni Angliæ: conſenſu denique optimorum tam veteris, quàm recentioris Eccleſiæ Doctorum, & Politicorum, contra hodiernos Eccleſiæ Anglicanæ turbatores, veterum Donatiſtarum, & Monaſterienſium Anabaptiſtarum æmulos, ſolidiſſimè vindicatur. Prynn alledges in that Book all that can be ſaid for the Power of the Sword againſt Errors; he brings in Arguments, Authorities, Cuſtom, the Deciſions of Doctors, the Confeſſions of Faith, &c. Father de Sainte Marthe, a French Benedictin, made no ſmall uſe of that Book, to ſhew that the Edict of Nantes was lawfully repeal'd. See his Anſwer to the Complaints of the Proteſtants, or the Extract which

* Pelliſſon Hiſt. de l'Academie Françoiſe p. m. 151.

† Ibid. pag. 219.

(c) Id. in præfat.

(d) The Author ſays, two Pages after, that he has read all the Inſcriptions but one, viz. that of a Marble, one half of which was made uſe of by a Maſon, and the Letters of the other half are defaced. Alterâ à Lapicida quodam ad reficiendum locum in Palatio Arundelliano adhibitâ.

(e) Vigneul Marville Mêlanges tom. 2. pag. 301, 302. Dutch Ed.

(f) Pelliſſon Hiſt. de l'Academie Franc. pag. 354.

(g) Mr. Pelliſſon wrote this in the Year 1652.

(h) Wolfgangus Meyerus S. Th. D. & Verbi divini in Eccleſia Baſil. Miniſt. Senior, epiſtola dedicator. Fulcimenti Gladii.

(a) Baillet. in the 1 Tome of the Anti. pag. 426.

(b) Here is a Paſſage of Dr. Smith, in vita Camdeni, p. 50. Illo (Archiepiſcopo Laudo) in carcerem detruſo, Gulielmus Prinnius, ob ſeditioſos libellos ſtigmate inuſtus, in D. Archiepiſcopi ſcrinia, tum ut ſi quicquam, quod ſceleri criminibuſque objectis aliqualem induceret colorem, occurriſſet, inde excerperet, tum ut quantum erat documentorum quod Viro innocentiſſimo iiſdem diluendis, cum pro Tribunali ſiſtendus eſſet, de capite dicturus, uſui eſſe potuerit, quoque auferret, animo malevolo involavit. See the Article Camden, Remark M

(c) He had been releaſed before, and was a Member of the Houſe of Commons

(d) Quam injuſtè, perfidè, perjurè, crudeliter hæc geſta ſint in Unctum Domini, auctor hujus ſcripti quamquam omnium minime Regi obnoxius liberrimè & fideliſſimè exponit.

Person who set London on (D) Fire, he was a great Visionary. He wrote a vast number of Books, (E) that shew his great Reading. He * died the 24th of October 1669, aged 69 Years.

PRIOLO (Benjamin) in Latin Priolus, Author of an History of France, from the Death of Lewis XIII, to the Year 1664, was Born at Saint Jean d' Angeli, the first of January 1602. He descended from the (A) Priuli or Prioli, an Illustrious Family, which has afforded some Doges to the Republick of Venice. He was but fifteen Years of Age when he lost his Father and Mother, which doubtless encreased the Obstacles he met with in the Course of his Studies: those Obstacles did not abate, in the least, his eager Desire of being a Learned Man. His Inclination for Learning was * so great, that he spent whole Days and Nights in Reading without any Interuption. He Studied first at Orthez, and then at Montauban, and afterwards at Leyden. He improved himself by Heinsius's and Vossius's Lectures in this last Town, and bestow'd three Years in Reading all the Greek and Latin Poets and Historians. Being desirous to see and consult Grotius, he took a Journey to Paris, and then went to Padua, by reason of the great Reputation of Cremoninus and Licetus, of whom he throughly learned the Opinions of Aristotle, and of the other ancient Philosophers. He returned into France, from whence he went again into Italy, which M. Cousin (e) has given of it. In the Year 1643, Prynn began to oppose the Independants, who thought that the Suppression of Episcopacy would prove insignificant, and even prejudicial, if People were to submit to the Synodal Government of the Puritans. Vossius wrote the following Words to Grotius in September 1644. (f) Unum est in quo non satis conveniat illis, qui se Episcopis opponunt. Multi omnem regendæ Ecclesiæ potestatem penes presbyterale collegium esse volunt. Alii vero ajunt hoc jugum gravius Episcopali. Quare contendunt, singulis id committendum Ecclesiastis, ut secundum Dei verbum, populum doceant, & gubernent. Atque sic ab Episcopalibus & Presbyteralibus (sicuti vocant) distincti, independentes nuncupantur. Vinius, cujus magna adeo in Parlamento est authoritas, prioris esse sententiæ dicitur; sed multi hac parte ei adversantur, qui cætera convenire videntur. Estque plurimorum id judicium, utcunque infracta omni Regis potestate, & abolito Episcopatu, geminum agerent triumphum, eos inter sese mox commissum iri; quia multi non à Presbyterii potestate minus, quam Episcoporum abhorreant. Here is an Instance of Mens Inclination to run into Extreams. Part of those who hated Episcopacy were against the Presbyterian Synods, and pretended that it was a more intolerable Yoke than that of the Hierarchy. Prynn stoutly opposed them, and was for inflicting a corporal Punishment upon them. See his Fulcimentum gladii.

(D) Concerning the Person who set London on Fire.] If the following Words had not been printed, I would not insert 'em in this Place. " (b) This Thought . . . . . puts me in mind of " William Prynn's Extravagance . . . . That Mad" man maintain'd to a Gentleman of my Acquain" tance, from whom I have it, that Pope Alexan" der VII had set London on Fire in the Year 1666, " and that he came into England in the disguise " of a Coal-man. „

(E) A vast number of Books that shew his great Reading.] I find the following Passage in Witte's Diarium. (i) GUIL. PRYNNE, Anglus, Swainswica-Somersetensis, Collegii Orielensis Oxoniæ Commensalis, Artium Baccalaureus. . . . . . Libri quos varii admodum, Theologici nimirum, Historici, Politici & Polemici argumenti conscripsit ad 170; adversaria potius quam opera nuncupari merentur, adeoque (k) ipsum pene Tostatum æquasse videtur. . . . . Libros à se conscriptos moriens Hospitio Lincolniensi quod Londini est, legavit, qui voluminibus XXXVII. in fol. & 4. continentur. I shall set down a Passage of Schoockius, whereby it appears that Prynn was praised for his great Reading, and that he was a rigid Puritan, who could not so much as endure the drinking of Healths. (l) Is est qui augusto elogio ab eodem (D. Voetio) condecoratur in disput. de ebrietate, & quidem secundum hanc formulam: Diffusæ eruditionis Jurisconsultus Gul. Prynne, (m) cum generis nobilitate tum rara pietate conspicuus, in Tract. Anglico, adversus Salutes conscripto. Liber hic Prynnii (de quo viro ante aliquot annos tam amplus rumor per Britanniam & Belgium fuit) si respondeat ejusdem Tractatui de Spectaculis, (nam hunc solum vidi) dixerim, diffusam eruditionem Authoris (licet hic ipse à D. Voetio ostentetur ut nobilis) respondere scopis dissolutis, atque servire confirmando dicto vulgato, quod eam solam vim fortem esse agnoscit, quæ fuerit unita. Fueritne vero Prynnius pius solus Deus novit, quum D. Voetius quando favet, nimis quam liberalis sit in titulo illo concedendo. Certe, hoc non possum cognoscere ex ejusdem libro de Spectaculis, nisi pariter Pharisæi pii fuerint agnoscendi, eo, quod cuminum & anethum decimarent.

(A) He descended from the Priuli or Prioli, an Illustrious Family, which has afforded some Doges to the Republick of Venice.] Antony PRIOLI, Nephew to Laurence and Jerom Prioli, Brothers, and Doges of Venice one after another, came very young into France, under the Reign of Henry II, with an Ambassador of the Family Lauredano, his Uncle by the Mother's Side. He fell in Love with a Daughter of a Gentleman of Saintonge, who was at Paris about a considerable Law-Suit. He married her, and having carried her to Venice, they were both so unkindly received by the Republick, and their Relations, that the Dissolution of their Marriage was a thing resolved upon. It would have been declar'd Void according to the Laws, had not the Ambassador, who represented in France the Body of the Republick, sign'd the Contract; for which he was Censur'd by a Decree of the Year 1554: and it was Voted, That Antony and his Posterity should be excluded from all Offices in the Senate. This ill Success moved him to leave Venice, and having secur'd his Effects he return'd to France, and settled in his Wife's Country, at Saint Jean d' Angeli. He got many Children: Mark, the Eldest, was the Father of Julian, and Julian was the Father of Benjamin, who makes the Subject of this Article. Julian ruin'd himself by his Four Marriages, and the Expences he was at in the War, being the first Officer of the Regiment de la Force. Benjamin was his Son by his fourth Wife. He put his Father's Name under the Cut engrav'd by the Famous Pitau, and prefix'd to his History of France: That Cut may be had still at the Image-Sellers. The Inscription runs thus, Benjaminus Priolus Santo. Juliani F. Eques Venetus, Rerum Gallicarum Scriptor florentissimus. Which shews Sorbiere's Mistakes concerning the Father of Benjamin Priolo.

That Family did very much encrease, and was Naturalized in the Reign of Charles IX. They entirely embrac'd the Reformed Religion under Henry IV, and there has been several (a) eminent Ministers of that Family. They were sollicited by a Letter (b) from the Doge Leonard Donato to return to Venice, but did not care to do it, being well settled in France. They troubled themselves no more about Venice; but it may be proved by a Passage out of the Book Intit'led, Recherches de la Noblesse, printed at Montauban in 1616, that they always pretended to be originally come from Venice. The Author of that Book, who was a Gentleman of Bearn, call'd la Roque, says, that the Prioleau's (so he (c) writes their Name) of Saintonge and Aunix did not come from Venice, as several of 'em pretended, in several Records under the Reign of Henry III, but that they are ancient Gentlemen, who had a mind to derive their Pedigree from the Venetians,

---

* Witte in Diario Biographico.

* Tanta fuit in illo discendi intemperies, ut noctes diebus continuaret evolvendo quidquid voluminum edidit Romana aut Græca vetustas. Joannes Rhodius de vita Benjamini Prioli p. 3.

(e) In the Journal des Savans of the 26. of April 1688. See also the Hist. des Ouvrages des Savans for March 1688. pag. 384.

(f) Vossius, epist. 462. p. m. 409. col. 1.

(b) Le Grand Hist. du divorce de Henri VIII. Roi d'Anglet. pag. 82. of the Continuation of the 2 Part.

(i) Ad 24. Oct. 1669.

(k) This adeo does not make a right conclusion; for Tostatus's Works are not like Adversaria.

(l) *Martin. Schoockius exercitat. variarum p.*302. edit. 1663. in 4.

(m) The Edition of that Dispute de ebrietate which I make use of ('tis that of 1667. in the 4. Vol. disput. selectar. pag. 503.) has only, Diffusæ lectionis Jurisconsult. Gul. Prynn in tractatu &c.

(a) A Nephew of Benjamin was Minister of the Church of Niort.

(b) Dated the 15 of Apr. 1608.

(c) I have it from very good hands, that some Ministers in those Parts writ their Name Prioleau. But it ought to be observed that the Pronunciation being the same in the greatest part of France, whether that Name be written Priolo or Prioleau, and it being a hard matter in the French to be very nice and exact, 'tis no wonder that the Name of that Family should have been differently spelt.

Italy, to get himſelf acknowledged (BΔ) by the Prioli as one of their Relations. He applied himſelf to the Duke of (CΔ) Rohan, who was then in the Service of the Venetians, and ſo inſinuated himſelf into his Favour, that he became one of his moſt intimate Confidents. The Duke ſent him twice into Spain upon important Negotiations, and left to his Diſcretion the Management of † all particular Affairs, whilſt he commanded the Troops of France in the Valteline, and in the Country of the Griſons. M. Priolo was in all the Battles, and ſhewed his Courage both on Foot and on Horſeback. Being uncertain of his Fate after the Death of that Duke, he retired to Geneva, being lately married to * Elizabeth Micheli of a very Noble Family. He bought a Country-Seat at Saconne near Geneva, where he reſted after the Toils and Fatigues of his foregoing Life. The Duke of Longueville being named Plenipotentiary of France for the Treaty of Munſter, and being deſirous ans, becauſe their Name was like that of the Noble Prioli of Venice. Tho' this Paſſage contains a Falſity, it does irrefragably confute the Sorberiana. The Falſity I ſpeak of does manifeſtly appear by the good Succeſs of Benjamin Priolo, in making out his Extraction from the Prioli of Venice. The Genealogical Memorial preſented by him having been examin'd, the Republick order'd that a Patent ſhould be drawn up, which he receiv'd from M. Grimani, Ambaſſador in France in the Year 1660, with a Gold Chain and Medal worth three hundred Piſtoles. By that Patent the Senate acknowledged him to be a Noble Venetian Knight. The Arms of the Prioli are blazon'd and added to the Seal, and round about, Non data, non conceſſa, ſed adnata, ſenatus decreto. The Title is alſo in Latin, and the reſt in Italian. M. Priolo receiv'd at the ſame time a congratulatory Letter from Lawrence Prioli, Proveditor of the Sea, who was then the Head of the Family.

† In Rhætia & Tellina valle, cùm Gallicis armis præeſſet Rohanius, Priolus omnia pro nutu verſavit. Præliis variis illic cum Germanis & Iberis certatum ubique interfuit; pugnavit eques, & pedes. Id. ib. pag. 4.

* Cùm ante trimeſtre uxorem duxiſſet Elizabetham Michelium, illuſtri genere, ſcilicet atavis editam princi[illegible] & [illegible] Venetis, unde Principes non pauci. Id. ibid.

---

It ought to be obſerv'd, that the Republick of Venice take no notice of the Baſtards of Noblemen. Their very Fathers will not own them, and even forſake them; for 'tis not the Cuſtom of the Noble Venetians to have private Miſtreſſes: they apply themſelves to Curtezans, and club for the keeping of one; by which means they avoid being Jealous one of another. But if the Curtezan gets a Child none of 'em owns it (d).

(BΔ) He went again into Italy to get himſelf acknowledged by the Prioli, as one of their Relations.] So I Paraphraſe the Latin Words of John Rhodius, (e) In Italiam reverſus eſt, quærendis apud Venetos originis ſuæ primordiis. The Author adds, That the Senate of Venice gave him a very kind Reception, and made him a Knight, but without admitting him to the Prerogatives of his Family, the Laws of the Republick not permitting it, becauſe he deſcended from one Antony Prioli, who had married a Foreigner out of Venice. (f) Blandè acceptus à Senatu, factus eques, ſed excluſus generis ſui prærogativa, quoniam Antonius Priolus ejus avus paternus, qui Princeps fuit Reip. Venetorum, non potuit legitimum matrimonium extra urbem & cum extera contraxiſſe ſalvis patriæ legibus. That Author is in the wrong to ſay, that Antony Prioli was a Doge; and he ſhould not have ſaid, that he was Benjamin's Grandfather, but his Great-Grandfather. He is alſo miſtaken as to the Time; the Patent whereby the Senate own'd Benjamin to be related to the Prioli of Venice, was not granted before the Year 1660. What he ſays in the Concluſion of his Elogy, that M. Priolo (g) took Orders after the Death of his Wife, is a great Falſity.

The two following Paſſages will confirm what I have ſaid in the foregoing Remark. M. Priolo, ſpeaking of the Town of Saint Jean d'Angeli, makes this ſmall Digreſſion: (h) Ibi mea infantia vagiit, hic aerem primum hauſi. Hæc terra, mihi atavis Venetis, iiſque illuſtribus, neſcio quo caſu, primum tacta. Si decora meæ gentis à me intermiſſa ſunt, forſan nepotibus inſtaurabuntur; & Sant-Angelium olim me alumno gaudebit. You ſee that he publickly boaſts of his Venetian Extraction, as he does alſo in the Epiſtle Dedicatory of his Work to the Republick of Venice, O Patria, ſays he, ô vaſti pelagi dominatrix! agnoſce tuum civem, vel ſolo nomine Prioli tibi dilectum.

ADVERTISEMENT to the Readers once for all.

I beſeech the Readers to mind what I am going to ſay. There is a very remarkable Difference between other Hiſtorical Dictionaries and mine. I am not contented, as 'tis commonly practis'd in thoſe Dictionaries, to give a general Account of a Man's Life; but I collect, as much as the few Books I have can permit me, the moſt curious and remarkable Paſſages, the Judgments that have been made of thoſe I ſpeak of, and the Faults that have been committed on their Account. I Examine, I Prove, I Confute, as there is occaſion. But when I have no Proofs to confute a Falſity, I am forced to leave it without a Confutation; and my Silence in that reſpect, is not a Sign that I warrant the Truth of the Facts mention'd by me. The Authors whom I quote, ought to be anſwerable for what they advance. It is enough for me to confute the Falſities that are known to me, and to be always diſpoſed to confute thoſe I ſhall diſcover by the help of others, and by my own Enquiries. None can do me a greater Pleaſure than to impart to me the Proofs and Explanations that are neceſſary to rectify (i) the Miſtakes inſerted in this Work, upon the Credit of Authors. I ſhall always be ready to do whatever Juſtice and Truth require. I can be poſitive about it: I know my own Thoughts, and I have given ſome Inſtances of it. For example, I have been very glad to be put in a Capacity of ſhewing the Impoſture or Illuſion of the Author of the Sorberiana, in what he ſays concerning the Father of Benjamin Priolo, &c. I muſt make another Obſervation: A Falſity diſadvantageous to an Honourable Family would be ſlighted, if it were only to be found in a ſmall Inconſiderable Piece of no long Continuance; but if it be inſerted in a large Volume, eſpecially in a Folio Book call'd a Dictionary, it makes one more uneaſy. For the Alphabetical Order of this ſort of Books does ſo ſhorten the Enquiries of the Curious, that every Body will have 'em in ſmall Libraries, as well as in great ones, even tho' they are not good; and therefore 'tis to be feared, that what is contain'd in them will be believ'd every where and laſt for ever. But it ought to be conſider'd, at leaſt as to this Work, that my bare relating what has been ſaid by another, does not multiply the Number of Authorities. Should I relate a Thing without quoting any body for it, I ſhould ſet up for a new Evidence; but ſince I quote the very Words of the Authors, whoſe Names I put in the Margin, what I ſay is only grounded upon their Authority. A tranſient Piece, a ſmall Book, whoſe Title ends with ana, a heap of ſeveral undigeſted Collections found in Sorbiere's Cloſet, and containing looſe Diſcourſes of Converſation, do not become more weighty and conſiderable becauſe they are quoted in a large Volume. They are ſtill what they were before, and nothing elſe. 'Tis to be obſerv'd, that of all things that make the Subject of common Converſations, there is none that is leſs to be depended upon than what is ſaid about the Origin of Families. For when a Man raiſes himſelf, Envy on the one hand, or Flattery on the other, do quickly forge obliging or diſobliging Falſities, which ſpread up and down; but with this difference, that ſatyrical Falſities ſpread more and are ſooner credited than flattering Lies.

(CΔ) He applied himſelf to the Duke of Rohan.] John Rhodius's Expreſſion, (a) Incidit illic in infelicem Rohanii Ducem, ought to be rectified. It ſeems to ſignify, that M. Priolo was beholden to Chance for his firſt Acquaintance with the Duke. The truth is, that his Family had been in the Duke of Rohan's Intereſt, and that the Duke of Soubiſe, Brother to the Duke of Rohan, was his Godfather. Take notice, that he was not admitted into the Duke's

(d) Taken from a Manuſcript Memorial.

(e) Johannes Rhodius de vita Benjamini Prioli p. 4.

(f) Id. ib.

(g) Ipſe pater ſe [illegible] adduxit, rerum humanarum & ſeculi pertæſus, pervicacis ingrati. Id. ib. pag. 7.

(h) Priolus de rebus Gallicis lib. 2. n. 37. pag. 284.

(i) This muſt be likewiſe underſtood of my own Miſtakes.

(a) Joh. Rhodius ubi ſupra pag. 4.

ſirous to carry him thither, as a Man whoſe Parts and Counſels would be of great uſe to him, M. Priolo reſolved to (D∆) leave Geneva and to ſettle at Paris. He ſtaid half a Year at Lyons, where he had ſeveral Conferences with Cardinal Barberini about Controverted Doctrines; the Reſult of which was, that he, his Wife, Children and Domeſticks abjured the Proteſtant Religion, and immediately received the Communion from the Cardinal's Hands. He did not enjoy a long reſt at Paris, for the Civil War quickly broke out, and he engaged in the Faction of the Malecontents, which occaſion'd the Ruin of his Fortune †. This is what I find in a Latin Piece written by John Rhodius, and printed at Padua in 1662. The following Particulars come from another Hand. Being dazzled with the Prince's Glory, with whom he had ſided, he neither minded the many Favours which the Queen-Mother beſtowed upon him, nor the great Promiſes of Cardinal Mazarin, which was the Cauſe of his Misfortune: He was forced to retire into Flanders, his Eſtate was Confiſcated, and his Family Baniſh'd. Having regain'd the King's Favour, he reſolv'd to live a Retir'd Life, and to follow his Study. It was then, (A) and to drive away his Melancholy, that he wrote with great (B) Impartiality, a Hiſtory which has been reprinted ſeveral times: The beſt (C) Edition is that of Leipſick 1686. He was put again upon Negotiations;

† Taken from Rhodius, ubi ſupra.

Duke's Family, as his Phyſician, and that he was not afterwards his (b) Secretary, as we are told in the Sorberiana. I have been informed, that all the time he was in that Poſt he was only very great with the Duke, and never had any Skill in Phyſick, but ſuch as one may get by a general Study of Philoſophy.

(D∆) M. Priolo reſolved to leave Geneva, and to ſettle at Paris.] The attentive Reader will eaſily perceive the Incoherency of this Narrative: 'Tis a Fault of Rhodius, which I will mend. That Author has made it appear, that 'tis an eaſier thing to write the Hiſtory of an Illuſtrious Man in good Latin, than to prevent great Gaps and Omiſſions. Is it not a very incoherent Narrative to ſay, that a Man went and ſettled at Paris, because the Duke of Longueville had a Mind to carry him to Munſter, without informing his Reader whether or no he accepted his Propoſal? (c) Longavillanus Dux ad conventum Monaſterienſem cum ſumma poteſtate de pace Legatus iturus, et Priolum invitavit, eius operâ & conſiliis uſurus in tam arduo negotio. Hinc illi decretum Geneva relicta irrevocabilem pedem Lutetiæ figere, quò totam familiam . . . . deduxit. Lugduni ſex menſes remanſit. . . . . . Non diu tranquille Lutetiæ egit, cùm derepentè ſtudia partium exarſere, & bella civilia cæpta. To fill up that Gap I muſt obſerve that M. Priolo ſet out from Geneva to go to Munſter, according to the Duke's Deſire. He was there about a Year, and then he return'd to Geneva, from whence he went into France, in order to ſettle at Paris. Being at Munſter he contracted a ſtrict Friendſhip with the Nuncio Chigi, who was afterwards Pope Alexander VII. He wrote to him a Congratulatory Letter in Latin, when he heard that he had been made Pope, and received from him a very devout Anſwer, with ſome Medals, &c. The Duke of Longueville was ſo well ſatisfied with his Services, that he aſſign'd him a Penſion (d) of 1200 Livres upon the Principality of Neufchatel; and not long before he died he preſented him with 1200 Crowns, as the laſt Token of his Affection (e).

(A) It was . . . to drive away his Grief that he wrote . . . the Hiſtory of France.] He repreſents himſelf as a Man perſecuted by Fortune, and declares that he went about that Hiſtory to drive away his Melancholy. (f) Inter maximas ærumnas natus eſt hic fœtus, quem linēturus eram, ſi licuiſſet. Paſſim notabuntur veſtigia minus alacris animi. Quid reſpondeam, non habeo. Humanæ imbecillitatis ingens patrocinium neceſſitas. Non fama, ſed requies mihi quæſita, fallendis innumeris tædiis, ipſe me damnavi in hanc arenam. If his Life written by himſelf was to be Printed, we ſhould find in it a very particular Account of his great Troubles. 'Tis one of the Books he promiſed to publiſh, as we ſhall ſee hereafter (g).

(B) He wrote with great impartiality, a Hiſtory.] What I have quoted out of it in the Article of the Marſhal de Guebriant's Widow, is ſufficient to ſhew, that the Author made bold to publiſh Things that might offend Great Perſons. Any one who reads what he ſays of the Dutcheſs of Longueville, will be convinced of his boldneſs. Patin went upon a fallacious Probability, when he wrote theſe Words: (a) M. Frioleau, who was formerly Secretary to the Duke of Rohan, has writ the Hiſtory of France in Latin, from the Death of the late King, in gratiam Mazarini. His Book is entitled Conatus Hiſtorici: it will be full of Flattery, but it is a material thing in the Age we live in.

Sorel did not paſs the ſame Judgment upon that Hiſtory, but rather had a contrary Opinion of it (b). The Author was ſo far from being a Flatterer, that having obtain'd the King's Licenſe, he thought it neceſſary, before he made uſe of it for the Impreſſion of the whole Work, to ſee how the chief Perſons of the Court would like the Liberty he took: and therefore he publiſh'd firſt (c) the Subſtance of his Hiſtory in one Book, keeping the freedom of his Pen under ſome Reſtraint; and yet ſome Miniſters thought he was too free, and declared that they would oppoſe the Impreſſion of his Work, unleſs it was caſtrated by ſuch Examiners as they ſhould appoint. M. Priolo made his Remonſtrances to the King, who gave him leave to get his Hiſtory Printed at (d) Charleville: which was performed in the Year 1665, and the Book was publickly ſold in France (e). That Edition is a Quarto Book, and is not entitled Conatus Hiſtorici, but *Benjamini Prioli ab exceſſu Ludovici XIII. de rebus Gallicis Hiſtoriarum libri XII. It was Reprinted once at Utrecht, and twice at Leipſick.

I muſt obſerve, that this Hiſtory is quoted in the Life of Cardinal Mazarin, written by Aubery; in the Life of the Prince of Conde, and in ſome other Pieces. I am ſure that if it had been written in French with the ſame Sprightlineſs and Strength, it would have been printed above ten times. It would very much pleaſe thoſe who are for the modern Taſte; for it is full of thoſe Characters and Deſcriptions which are now ſo much in vogue: The Phraſes of Tacitus are very frequent in it, and ſeem to come in of themſelves. I ſhall ſay nothing of ſeveral private Intrigues, mention'd by the Author, who had 'em from the firſt Hand. It appears by the Works of Count Galeazzo Gualdo Priorato, and by the Memoirs of the Regency, that he was employed in ſome Negotiations.

(C) The beſt Edition is that of Leipſick 1686. (f)] For there are ſome Letters in it which the Author ſuppreſs'd in the Edition of Charleville; and very good Alphabetical Tables, and beſides, very curious and inſtructive Notes. There is alſo in that Edition a Latin Tranſlation of what was ſaid of that Work in the (h) Journal des Savans. M. Gallois took ſuch an ingenious Turn to expreſs his Thoughts about it, that tho' the Author had ſome Reaſon to be Diſſatisfied, he had no good pretence to Complain: ſo true it is, that ſome Railleries are offenſive, and yet one dares not appear to be offended at 'em. The Latin Tranſlator has not preſerv'd the Niceneſs of the Raillery in every part of his Verſion; and I dare ſay, he has not only enervated but alſo falſified the laſt Period. Let the Reader judge of it. The Words of the Journaliſt run thus: (i) Had I not purpoſed to forbear giving my Opinion about the Books mention'd in this Journal, perhaps the Style of this Hiſtory would be the thing I ſhould

(b) Patin ſays, he was.

(c) Rhodius ubi ſupra pag. 4, & 5.

(d) It was paid him till that Prince died.

(e) Taken from the abovemention'd Memorial.

(f) Benjamin. Priolus, lectori ad calcem hiſtoriæ.

(g) In the Remark D.

(a) Patin, Lett. [illegible] pag. [illegible] of the II Vol. It is dated the 14 of Sep. 1655.

(b) See Sorel's Bibliotheque Françoiſe, pag. [illegible] 35[illegible] Par. 16[illegible].

(c) At Paris by Cramoiſi 1662.

(d) A Town belonging to the Duke of Mantua, ſituate on the Maeſe, between Sedan and Charlemont.

(e) Taken from the Memorial abovemention'd.

(f) It is in 8. and the [illegible] of that Town.

(h) Of the 22. of Feb. 1666.

(i) Journal des Savans of the 22. of Febr. 1666. pag. 159, 1[illegible].

ons; for in the Year 1667 he was order'd to go to Venice upon a private Buſineſs, as it appears from a Credential Letter that was found among his Papers, drawn up by M. de Lionne. He could not make an end of that Journey, for he died of an Apoplexy at Lyons in the Archbiſhop's Palace. I advanced upon a Hear-ſay, in the firſt Edition, that he died in the Hoſpital of Lyons; but I mend that Fault in this Second Edition; and I do ſincerely proteſt, that I ſaid ſo only according to the Thoughts of thoſe from whom I had it at Geneva. I had no reaſon to believe that they were not rightly informed; and as they expreſs'd their Eſteem for that Author, they alledg'd that Particular only as an Inſtance of the Miſfortune of Men of Letters. It was out of Pity to him, and to ſhew the Injuſtice of the Time, that they alledg'd it upon occaſion of Pierius Valerianus's Book de Infelicitate Litteratorum, which ſome Body in the Company had mention'd. I do alſo leave out the Paſſage I had quoted out of the Sorberiana. I have been fully inform'd, that Sorbiere was groſly miſtaken, as it will appear from the Remarks * I point at. I would have Confuted him in the firſt Edition †, had I had then the neceſſary Informations. M. Priolo left behind him Seven Children, who (CΔΔ) loſt, by his Death, the Penſions he enjoyed; but his Name kept 'em up, and they kept it up in their Turn, and have been well ſettled for a long time. I can't tell whether the Books he (D) deſign'd to publiſh will ever be printed. 'Tis pity they have not been publiſh'd. I ſhall ſet down ſome (DΔΔ) of his Maxims, and the Judgment he made

I ſhould leaſt find fault with. Compare this with the Latin: Ita ut niſi omnino propoſitum eſſet abſtinere à librorum judiciis, de quibus in his Ephemeridibus nonnullæ (k) ſolent proferri, diceretur fortaſſe, ſtylum hujus hiſtoriæ ejus eſſe generis, in quo vix quicquam occurrat quod correctionem mereatur. According to the Tranſlator, M. Gallois ſays, that Prioli's Style is of ſuch a nature, that there is hardly any thing in it that deſerves to be mended. But he is far from ſaying ſo: his Meaning is, that the Hiſtory he ſpeaks of does not ſo much deſerve to be cenſur'd on account of the Style, as upon other Accounts: And therefore his Words ſhould have been rendred thus; In ſtylo hujus hiſtoriæ pauciora quam in cæteris omnibus fortaſſe reprehenderem. The Author was not ſurpriſed, that ſome ſevere and even devout Perſons were diſpleaſed with the Specimen of his Work; he took it to be a ſign of the Merit of his Performance: Procul tetrici & moroſi, ſays he (l), immo devoti. Tales me carpſerunt lectio primo meo libro. Eorum flagello patientiam induiſi, Boni argumentum talibus diſplicere. He owns (m) that he never was in a School, or in an Academy. Why then, will ſome ſay, does he acknowledge in his Epiſtle Dedicatory to the Doge and Senate of Venice, that he is beholden to the Univerſity of Padua for his beſt Inſtructions? Illa veſtra Antenorea altrix mei, dulcis Artium parens .... me ſuis præceptis imbuit .... hæc me docuit à celſa mentis arce deſpicere errantes, & ex veris cauſis ſcire, ſub quantis tenebris jaceret mortalium dies. I anſwer, that he does not contradict himſelf; his Meaning is, that he learn'd all his Latin of himſelf, without the help of any School-maſter; but he does not ſay ſo as to the Sciences; he acknowledges that the Profeſſors of Padua have been his Maſters.

There ſeems to be a more real Contradiction between him and Rhodius; and yet they may be reconciled, by ſuppoſing (n) that Priolo was ſent to Orthez, and to Montauban, to go through his Claſſical Learning; but that he never minded the Rules of his Maſters, and learned Latin by another Method.

(CΔΔ) Left behind him Seven Children, who loſt .... the Penſions he enjoyed .... and have been well ſettled.] Cardinal Mazarin left him, by his Laſt-Will, an Annuity of 1500 Livres, aſſign'd upon the whole Legacy of Duke Mazarin; and when the King granted him a Licenſe to print his Hiſtory in 1661, he gave him a Penſion of 2000 Livres. Which appears from the State of France, publiſh'd at that time, in the Liſt of Men of Letters. Tho' his Family loſt this noble Income, they found ſome other Helps. The Court took care of 'em. The eldeſt Son was placed in the Finances by M. Colbert, and raiſed himſelf very much. The younger Brother was made a Life-Guard, not being yet twenty Years of Age. He is (p) now an Exempt in the firſt Troop. Of the five Daughters three are Nuns, and the two others keep the firſt Rank among the Gentlewomen belonging to two of the moſt conſiderable Dutcheſſes of the Court. The eldeſt Nun was a Prioreſs in the Royal Monaſtery of Chaillot, and was named by the King in 1692 to eſtabliſh the Rule that is now among the Ladies of the Royal Houſe of Saint Cir near Verſailles. She is the Spiritual Founder of it (q).

(D) The Books he deſign'd to publiſh.] The following Words are to be found in the laſt Page of his Hiſtory: Opera Benjamini Prioli brevi edenda. Vitanda in vita, ſeu de ſtultitia humanæ gentis, Lib. IV. Quæſtionum naturalium, ſeu de re plantaria veterum & recentiorum, Lib. III. Opus Emunctum, triginta annorum Meditatio, quod jam celebratur ſub apertiori titulo, & falſo nonnulli ſibi aſſcripſerunt. De Vita & Geſtis Henrici Rohannii Ducis. De Vita & Moribus Cæſaris Cremonini. Vita Benjamini Prioli. Judicium de Scriptoribus Græcis & Latinis. Epiſtolarum Senilium ad Maximos Europæ Proceres centuria ſingularis.

'Tis very likely the Life of that Author will be prefix'd to a Book made (a) according to the Maxims that have been found among his Papers, which form a natural Image of the Heart of Man according to the various Events of Humane Life.

(DΔΔ) I ſhall ſet down ſome of his Maxims.] Man, ſaid he, is only poſſeſs'd of three things, the Soul, the Body, and Wealth; which are continually expos'd to three ſorts of Snares: the Soul is expos'd to the Snares of Divines, the Body to the Snares of Phyſicians, and Wealth to thoſe of Lawyers and Attorneys. Rhodius expreſſes it thus: (b) Cùm tribus tantùm homo conſtet, anima, corpore, & bonis: tres inſidiatores illis perpetuo imminere: adulterinos Theologos animæ per laqueos conſcientiæ injectos, nihil ad bonos mores, & ſolidam pietatem: medicos corpori, per pharmaca noxia, cùm ruſticatio, diæta, & mens hilaris, ſola morbis opitulentur: bonis rabulas forenſes, per litium articulos & formulas, cùm per arbitros idoneos amputandæ ſint radices, creſcentibus ſine fine familiarum malis. A Wiſe-man ought not to be too forward, if he has a mind to ſucceed at Court: a good Judgment and Submiſſion are the only Means of obtaining one's Deſires. (c) A Man ought not to make himſelf too familiar with any Body; that is, he ought to reveal nothing but what he deſigns to make publick: for can any Thing be more abſurd than to pretend that others will be more faithful to you than you have been to yourſelf? A Man who frequents the Court, ought particularly to avoid falling into the Snares of the Fair Sex. (d) Cavendum præſertim in aulâ à fallacibus feminarum vinclis: omnes nugaces eſſe, infidas, & judicii modicas, nunquam eodem tenore mentis & animi. Lewdneſs is the Fulneſs of all Evils: it hurts the Soul, the Body, and one's Reputation; and what is moſt made of Cicero, and Livy, and the (D△△) moſt celebrated Writers of ancient Rome.

---

* Viz. The Remarks AΔ and BΔ of this Article.

† See the Remark BΔ towards the end.

(k) One does not know what that Adjective rejects, and whatever ſenſe be put upon it, it cannot be that of the Original.

(l) In his Advertiſement to the Reader at the end of the Book.

(m) Etſi ullas Scholas nec Academias unquam viderim, & nullo niſi me præceptore uſus ſim, nemo tamen me temere debet arbitrari niſi Latini ſermonis beneperitus. Ibid.

(n) I have been aſſur'd that it was ſo.

(o) It has been printed.

(p) I write this in r.1701.

(q) Taken from the abovemention'd Memorial.

(a) By his Son.

(b) Jo. Rhodius ubi ſupra pag. 6.

(c) Nulli ſe facere nimis ſodalem oportere, id eſt, nihil revelare, niſi quod publici juris eſſe velis. Nam quid ineptius quàm putare aliquem tibi magis fidum, quàm tibi ipſe fuiſti. Id. ibid.

(d) Id. ib.

PRISCILLIAN, a Spaniſh Hereſiarch, lived in the Fourth Century. He was endowed with very fine (A) Qualities; he had a quick Wit, and a great deal of Eloquence and Learning: He was Laborious, Sober, and free from Avarice. A greedy deſire of Knowledge, which prompted him in his Youth to ſtudy † Magick, made him hearken to the Rhetor Helpidius, and to a Lady who * had embraced ſome Errors of the Gnosticks. He was infected with them, and uſed his utmoſt Skill (B) to ſpread them. He drew in moſt ſenſible to debauch'd Men, it affects their Purſe. 'Tis a Piece of Folly to marry, unleſs a Man be bound in a ſpecial manner to prevent the Extinction of his Family: We have much ado to govern ourſelves, why then ſhould we undertake to govern what is moſt ungovernable. Rhodius expreſſes thoſe Maxims better than I do. (e) Scortationem ultimum malorum, indecoram, noxiam, probroſam; animum, corpus, famam, & quod magis diſſolutum hominem afficit, crumenam lædentem. Quæcunque uni venditat ſui corporis jura, cuilibet ſine diſcrimine ſui copiam facit. Uxorem ducere, inſanum; ſi eos excipias, qui propagando ſanguini hoc debent ſuis penatibus: vix potens humana vis ſe regere, adſciſcit difficillimum quod regat, ut qui remigiis vix lembum ſubigit, remulcum adjungit. He abhorred Lying to ſuch a degree, that he could not hear of it without falling into a great Paſſion, and he exhorted his Children, above all things, to avoid that Fault, and to live a Pious Life. Every Chriſtian, ſaid he, ought to hate Lying; and a Gentleman ought to be free from it, tho' he be not a Chriſtian. He mortally hated thoſe who laugh'd at the Scripture. (f) Mendacium ita averſabatur, ut ad ſolam mentionem excandeſceret, nihil prius veritate & pietate in Deum, liberis commendans. Omnem Chriſtianum à mendacio alienum eſſe debere; nobilem autem, etiamſi Chriſtianus non ſit. In deriſores Scripturæ Sacræ, quorum hoc ſeculum feraciſſimum, inexpiabili odio flagrabat. He was a great obſerver of Juſtice, but little minded the outſide of Religion (g). Which puts me in mind of Montagne, who, tho' no very Devout Man, proteſts, that he (h) had naturally an averſion for a Lye.

(D△△) I ſhall ſet down . . . . the Judgment he made of Cicero and Livy, and the moſt celebrated.] He was no great Admirer of Cicero: he admired Livy, and found him ſo inimitable that he reſolved to imitate Tacitus. He was extremely fond of Seneca, and preferr'd Lucan to Virgil, and the Tenderneſs of Catullus to the Majeſty of Horace. Rhodius, his good Friend, and his Panegyriſt, wonders at the Oddneſs of his Taſte. (i) Senecam deperibat: neſcio quo malo genio M. Tullium ingentem virum, Romanæ eloquentiæ patrem, non admiratus eſt: cæteros ad unguem tenebat. Tit. Livium inimitabilem prædicabat, ideoque deſperans, nobis poſteriſque Tacitum repræſentavit. Lucanum præferebat Virgilio: quis hoc credat? & teneras Catulli amationes Horatianæ majeſtati. 'Tis certain that this Judgment is wrong; for a Man who prefers Livy to Tacitus, ſhould place Cicero above Seneca, and Virgil above Lucan. The Eloquence and Character of Cicero, Livy, and Virgil, are much of the ſame (‡) kind. Thoſe Authors don't affect to be bright; they caſt, without any Affectation, a Light which adorns the whole Work, without dazling the Reader, as that of ſome other Writers do, who, inſtead of letting every Ray paſs through its proper Medium, have recourſe to a kind of Dioptrick, in order to reunite an infinite number of Rays, that they may caſt a greater Light. 'Tis their chief Study: 'Twas the Method of Seneca, the two Pliny's and Tacitus. Lucan, in like manner, toils and labours hard to expreſs himſelf extraordinarily, and to appear great and lofty. It muſt be confeſs'd, that they were Men of vaſt Parts, and perhaps they would have taken a more natural Courſe, if they had lived in the time of Cicero, Livy, and Virgil; but they began to Study when the true Taſte began to be depraved. It was with the Romans as it is with thoſe who are uſed to drink excellent Wines; their Taſte grows dull, nothing will ſerve their turn but Brandy, or the ſtrongeſt Liquors. A majeſtick, natural, and uniform Eloquence grew inſipid when People were uſed to it: they were for witty Strokes and Flights; the Day-light was not ſufficient for them, they wanted Flaſhes of Lightening. The French begin to be Sick of the ſame Diſtemper. Seneca and Tacitus complied with the common Taſte: they were afraid of being ſlighted if they ſhould write as the Authors of the Golden Age. However it be, their Style is quite different from that of Livy. How comes it then that Priolo did ſo much admire that Hiſtorian and Seneca at the ſame time? How could he prefer Lucan to Virgil, and Seneca to Cicero? There is no Uniformity in ſuch a Judgment: But one muſt not diſpute about Taſtes. We muſt be contented with the Matter of Fact. I ſhall ſet down M. Priolo's Words relating to Livy; (k) De me equidem dixero, ſi quis ævi priſci inflexit ſenſus, fuit ille Livius, quem unicum ſcriptorem Romanum imperium tulit majeſtate ſuâ dignum. Ita ſpiritus & quaſi voces repræſentabat, ut & agere eadem & loqui credas dicendi genere non anxio, ſed limpido, & quod me torquet, non imitabili. . . . . Ego deſperatione (l) Livianæ imitationis nulli me addicere decrevi. What follows concerns his Admiration for Seneca. (m) Ego M. Tullium magni ſemper feci; ſed ſi hodie viveret, ſtylum immutaret. Seneca, qui eum ingenio & judicio longiſſime ſuperavit, uſus eſt dicendi genere auribus ſui temporis accommodato, nec de imitatione Tulliana unquam cogitavit, jactatæ puritati arenam ſuam ſine calce præferens. Certè mirari ſatis non poſſum eorum ingenia, qui quicquid altum ſpirat, inflatum & tumidum appellant. Tales Lucanum, tales Statium ſuæ cenſuræ ſubjiciunt. I ſhall likewiſe ſet down what he ſays concerning his Imitation of Tacitus. (n) Profiteor me furem eſſe notæ rapacitatis, habeo piceatas manus, omnia rapio. Taciti & aliorum audax prædo, crudas ejus paginas in opus meum propello. Poteram adſcito fuco diſſimulare, non curavi. Niſi centonibus ſtylum animes in deſita lingua, quid niſi languidum & emortuum expectandum? His Style was criticiſed by the Jeſuit Coſſard; and, if I am not miſtaken, this ſharp Reply was levell'd at him. (o) Meum ſtylum abruptum, inæqualem, immo, (ut verbis ejuſdem ſcioli utar) nullum; ſcatere paginam centonibus & furtis. Scias, ô blenne, quiſquis es, familiares mihi à puero antiquos ſcriptores, in aula & in caſtris aliquando lectos, nunc ſeſe offerre non vocatos, & abhinc quadraginta annis nequidem eos libaſſe, & dictaſſe totam hanc Hiſtoriam inter ambulandum, ne litura quidem imperata: tantum abeſt, ut bis aliquid unquam ſcripſerim. We learn from the laſt Words of this Paſſage, how that Hiſtory of France was compoſed. The Author dictated it, as he was walking, and made no Raſures in it: Which is a very extraordinary Thing.

(A) He was endowed with very fine Qualities.] Sulpicius Severus expreſſes it thus: (a) Ab his (Agape quadam non ignobili muliere, & rhetore Helpidio) Priſcillianus eſt inſtitutus, familia nobilis, prædives opibus, acer, inquietus, facundus, multa lectione eruditus, diſſerendi ac diſputandi promptiſſimus: felix profecto, ſi non pravo ſtudio corrupiſſet optimum ingenium, prorſus multa in eo animi & corporis bona cerneres. Vigilare multum, famem, ſitim ferre poterat, habendi minime cupidus, utendi parciſſimus.

(B) He uſed all his Skill to ſpread them. He drew in . . . . . Women.] I ſhall quote again

Sul-

---

† Idem vaniſſimus & plus juſto inflatior profanarum rerum ſcientia, quin & Magicas artes ab adoleſcentia eum exercuiſſe creditum eſt. Sulpicius Severus ſacræ hiſt. lib. 2. p. m. 153.

* That Rhetor and that Lady were inſtructed by one Mark an Egyptian. 'Tis falſly ſaid in Moreri's Dictionary, that this Mark inſtructed Priſcillian.

(e) Id. ib.

(f) Id. ib. pag. 7.

(g) Juſti & æqui ſervantiſſimus, religionis parum, quæ quidem in externis actibus verſatur. Id. ibid. pag. 5.

(h) See the 17 Chapt. of the 2d Book of his Eſſays, pag. m. 579, 580.

(i) Jo. Rhodius ubi ſupra pag. 7.

(‡) Setting aſide the difference which depends 1. on the Characters of the Subjects treated by them. 2. on Proſe and Verſe.

(k) Priolus ad lectorem in limine hiſtoriæ fol. m. c 4 verſo.

(l) He ſays that he endeavour'd in vain to imitate Livy. Buchananus Titum Livium præſtare nobis conatus eſt; certè vigeſies à capite ad calcem antequam ad ſuum opus ſe accingeret, lectitaſſe perhibetur. . . . . Buchananus, illius equidem ſimia eſt, tantum ab eo diſtans, quantum ſimia ab homine. Id. ibid.

(m) Id. ib. fol. c 4.

(n) Id. ib. fol. c 4.

(o) Id. ib. in præf. C c 4

(a) Sulpicius Severus ſacr. hiſtor. lib. 2. pag. 15.. 15 in many People, eſpecially Women, who flocked to him: Nay, ſome Biſhops followed his Sect. That Poyſon having crept into many Towns, great Endeavours were uſed to put a Stop to it. A Synod met * at Sarragoſſa, at which the Biſhops of Aquitain ‡ aſſiſted. Priſcillian and all his Adherents were condemn'd for refuſing to appear in it, and the Secular Power was made uſe of to expel them from all the Towns. Thoſe Hereticks were ſo little concern'd at it, that they made Priſcillian a Biſhop. He left Spain with Inſtantius and Salvianus, two Prelates of his Party, in order to go to Rome and juſtify himſelf to the Pope. As they went through Aquitain, they got many Diſciples. Euchrocia, the Wife (C) of the Rhetor Delphidius ‖, received them into her Country-Houſe, and was ſo charm'd with Priſcillian that ſhe follow'd him every where. Many other Women were ſeduced by thoſe Hereticks, and left all to accompany them in their Journey. The Pope refuſed to hear them, and ſo did St. Ambroſe; but the Imperial Court was more Indulgent, and granted them a Reſcript, importing, that their Churches ſhould be reſtored to them. They return'd into Spain, where they had ſo great an Intereſt, that Ithacius, their Accuſer, being ſummon'd to give an Account of his Conduct, as a Diſturber of the Peace of the Church, fled into Gaul. He ſo exaſperated the Tyrant Maximus againſt thoſe Sectaries, that they were ordered to repair to the Council of Bourdeaux. Inſtantius was condemn'd in it. Priſcillian deſir'd to be referr'd to Maximus,

* In the Year 381.

‡ Among others Delphinus Biſhop of Bourdeaux. Vide Alteſerram, rerum Aquitanicarum l. 3. c. 5. pag. 224.

‖ De quo vide Alteſerram ib. c. 2. p. 215, 217. & Auſonium in Profeſſor. n. 5.

Sulpicius Severus for it. (b) Is ubi doctrinam exitiabilem aggreſſus eſt, multos nobilium, pluresque populares authoritate perſuadendi & arte blandiendi allicuit in ſocietatem. Ad hoc mulieres novarum rerum cupidæ, fluxa fide, & ad omnia curioſo ingenio, catervatim ad eum confluebant. Quippe humilitatis ſpeciem ore & habitu prætendens, honorem ſui & reverentiam cunctis injecerat. Jamque paulatim perfidiæ iſtius tabes, pleraque Hiſpaniæ pervaſerat: quin & nonnulli epiſcoporum depravati, inter quos Inſtantius & Salvianus, Priſcillianum non ſolum conſenſione, ſed ſub quadam etiam conjuratione ſuſceperunt. I ſhall further ſet down Maimbourg's Paraphraſe upon thoſe Latin Words. " (c) That " Hereſiarch being ſenſible on the one hand, " and knowing by his own Experience, that " Men are naturally very much enclined to " Voluptuouſneſs, which occaſion'd a general " Corruption of Mankind before the Flood; " and knowing, on the other hand, the weak " ſide of People, eſpecially of Women, who " are eaſily impoſed upon by a ſhew of Piety, " pretended to ſo much Holineſs that there " never was a greater Hypocrite than that Impoſtor. And indeed no Man did ever appear " leſs fond of the World, for which he affected " to expreſs a great Contempt in all things, by " his mean Cloaths, his Behaviour, and his Converſation, by his modeſt and humble Look, " the Auſterity of his Life, and his great Charity to the Poor, talking of nothing but Penitence, Faſting, Watchings, Prayers, and the " Contempt of all worldly Things, in order to " be perfectly united to God. So that he was " quickly accounted, all over Spain, a great Servant of God, and a Man of a wonderful Holineſs, and admired upon that Account. Women who are more eaſily deluded by ſuch " deceitful Appearances, and whoſe natural Curioſity makes 'em fond of Novelty, and extraordinary Things, eſpecially in Point of Religion, flock'd to him to be directed by him, " tho' he was as yet but a Lay-man. Being, " moreover, Learned, and having the Talent of " Perſuading, and inſinuating himſelf into Mens " Minds, by his nice and ingenious Flatteries, " he quickly found himſelf the Head of a great " Party in moſt Provinces of Spain, not only " among Women, and the common People, but " alſo among Perſons of Quality and Eccleſiaſticks, ſome of whom were Biſhops, who, " like others, adhered to him as a Saint."

(C) Euchrocia, the Wife of the Rhetor ..... and many other Women .... left all.] We are told that they began with the Spirit, and ended with the Fleſh. Euchrocia was at firſt charmed with the outward Devotion and pious Diſcourſes of that Heretick; but by degrees he charm'd her with ſomething elſe, he lay with her and got her with Child. If it be ſaid that the Latin Words, which I ſhall quote by and by, ſignify that he lay with Procula, Euchrocia's Daughter, I will not obſtinately deny it: perhaps 'tis the beſt Senſe that can be put upon thoſe Words. The outward Devotion which Priſcillian had affected for a long time, did not make him forget that young Procula was preferable to her Mother. (d) Iter eis præter interiorem Aquitaniam fuit: ubi tum ab imperitis magnifice ſuſcepti, ſparſere perfidiæ ſemina, maximeque Eluſanam plebem, ſane tum bonam & religioni ſtudentem, pravis prædicationibus pervertere: à Burdigala per Delphinum repulſi, tamen in agro Euchrociæ aliquantiſper morati, infecere nonnullos ſuis erroribus. Inde iter cæptum ingreſſi, turpi ſane pudibundoque comitatu, cum uxoribus atque alienis etiam fœminis, in quis erat Euchrocia, ac filia ejus Procula: de qua fuit in ſermone hominum, Priſcilliani ſtupro gravidam, partum ſibi graminibus abegiſſe. It was well (e) for Delphidius that he died Young; for he had not the Misfortune to ſee the Debauchery of his Daughter, and the Execution of his Wife. Every Body knows that Euchrocia and Priſcillian were put to Death at the ſame time (f). A Panegyriſt of Theodoſius inveighed againſt that Cruelty in an eloquent manner: he did not ſpare Maximus, who had condemn'd to Death the Wife of an illuſtrious Poet, becauſe ſhe was accuſed of being too Devout. (g) De virorum mortibus loquor, cum deſcenſum recorder ad ſanguinem feminarum, & in ſexum cui bella parcunt non parcè ſævitum? Sed nimirum graves ſuberant, invidioſæque cauſæ ut unco ad pœnam clari vatis matrona raperetur. Objiciebatur enim, atque etiam exprobrabatur mulieri viduæ nimia religio, & diligentius culta divinitas. Some wonder how Priſcillian could draw in ſo many Devout Women, ſince his pretended Devotion was attended with ſuch an offenſive Lewdneſs. He confeſt (h) at his Trial that he had ſome Lewd Meetings with Women in the Night-time, and that he was ſtark Naked when he pray'd. But others ſay, that he drew in the Fair-Sex by that very thing: 'tis Maimbourg's Opinion. I ſhall ſet down again his Paraphraſe upon the Words of Sulpicius Severus. " (i) When People are prepoſſeſt with an Opinion of a Man's Holineſs, they will blindly ſubmit to all his Orders, and look upon all his " Deciſions as ſo many Oracles, eſpecially when " they indulge the Inclinations of corrupt Nature: and therefore that Profligate Wretch " found it no difficult thing to perſuade his Followers, that when the Spirit, which comes " from God, was perfectly united to them by a " certain Form of Prayer which he taught them, " they might lawfully give a full Scope to the " Luſts of the Fleſh; and that God was not offended at it, ſince the Fleſh does not proceed " from him, but from the ill Principle, as well " as Marriage. By virtue of that abominable " Doctrine, the Women who did not love their " Husbands left 'em againſt their Will (1), and " Husbands did likewiſe leave their Wives, of " whom they were weary; and all of 'em, and in

(b) Id. ib. pag. 163.

(c) Maimbourg, Hiſtoire du Pontificat de St. Leon lib. 1. pag. 44, 45. Dutch Edit. He quotes the Words of Sulpicius Severus in the Margin.

(d) Sulp. Severus ubi ſupra pag. 165.

(e) Minus malorum munere expertus Dei, Medio quod ævi raptus es, Errore quod non deviantis filiæ, Pœnaque læſus conjugis. Auſonius in Profeſſor. n. 5. p. m. 160.

(f) Sulpic. Severus ubi ſupra pag. 170.

(g) Latinus Pacatus in Panegyrico Theodoſio dicto, c. 29. p. m. 509.

(h) Nec diffitentem obſcœnis ſe ſtuduiſſe doctrinis, nocturnos etiam turpium fœminarum egiſſe conventus, nudumque orare ſolitum, nocentem pronunciavit. Sulpic. Severus ib. pag. 170.

(i) Maimbourg, ubi ſupra pag. 45, 46.

(1) Sever. l. 2.

Maximus, which was granted him. His Enemies followed him to the Court, and proſecuted him ſo warmly, that he was condemn'd * to Death †. I ſhall mention the Character of Ithacius, (D) the chief Promoter of Priſcillian's Death, and the Conſequences (E) of that Severity. St. Martin, Biſhop of Tours, refuſed to Communicate with the Biſhops who put Maximus upon ſuch violent Proceedings; and becauſe he ſuffered, at laſt, that an Act of Communion with them ſhould be extorted from him, he was very ſorry for it the remaining part of his Life; and believed that it was the Reaſon why he did no longer exert the Gift of Miracles ſo powerfully as he had done before. Some (F) other Biſhops imitated him, in not admitting Ithacius and his Adherents to their Com-

“ in general all his Followers, pray'd together as he did, as if they had been in the State of Innocency, and then defiled themſelves with all ſorts of Pollutions. Such is commonly the End of new Doctrines, Enthuſiaſms, and new ways of Praying, more Fanatical than Myſterious, of ſome Men who pretend to be extraordinarily enlighten'd, and who, beginning with the Spirit to deceive the World, do ſeldom fail to end with the Fleſh. ”

(D) The Character of Ithacius, the chief Promoter of Priſcillian's Death.] That Spaniſh Biſhop was a looſe and impudent Man, and ſacrificed every thing to his Paſſions. He plainly ſhewed that he was not acted by the Love of Truth, and that his violent Perſecution of thoſe Hereticks proceeded only from a Principle of Vanity. The firſt Steps he made engag'd him to go through it: he was fond of obtaining a compleat Victory, and of ſhewing his great Intereſt and Authority; the loſs of his Cauſe would have been intolerable to him: he left nothing unattempted in order to Triumph by the favour of the Secular Power. And becauſe he was afraid of being thwarted in his Deſign by wiſe and judicious Men, he was ſo impudent and malicious as to accuſe of Priſcillianiſm thoſe whom he did not like. Whoever Faſted, or applied himſelf to the reading of pious Books, was cried down by that violent Perſecutor as an Accomplice of that Sect. He was ſo bold as to accuſe St. Martin of favouring thoſe Hereticks, becauſe he exhorted him to leave off his Proſecution, and entreated Maximus not to ſhed the Blood of thoſe Sectaries. Such are the Devices of moſt of thoſe who charge others with Hereſy: they are renewed in every Age, and yet the World is impoſed upon by them to this very Day, as if they had never been practiſed before. Sulpicius Severus deſerves to be highly commended for ſaying that the Priſcillianiſts were not more unacceptable to him than their Accuſers. (a) Secuti etiam accuſatores Idacius & Ithacius Epiſcopi: quorum ſtudium in expugnandis hæretici non reprehenderem, ſi non ſtudio vincendi plus quam oportuit certaſſent. Ac mea quidem ſententia eſt, mihi tam reos quam accuſatores diſplicere. Certe Ithacium nihil penſi, nihil ſancti habuiſſe definio. Fuit enim audax, loquax, impudens, ſumptuoſus, ventri & gulæ plurimum impertiens. Hic ſtultitiæ eo uſque proceſſerat, ut omnes etiam ſanctos viros, quibus aut ſtudium inerat lectionis, aut propoſitum erat certare jejuniis, tanquam Priſcilliani ſocios aut diſcipulos, in crimen arceſſeret. Auſus etiam miſer eſt, ea tempeſtate Martino epiſcopo, viro plane Apoſtolis conferendo, palam objectare hæreſis infamiam. Namque tum Martinus apud Treveros conſtitutus, non deſinebat increpare Ithacium, ut ab accuſatione deſiſteret: Maximum orare, ut ſanguine infelicium abſtineret: ſatis ſuperque ſufficere, ut epiſcopali ſententia hæretici judicati eccleſiis pellerentur. St. Martin's Interceſſion proved ſo powerful, that whilſt he was at Triers, thoſe Hereticks were not brought to their Trial (b); but aſſoon as he went away, ſome Biſhops gain'd Maximus, and prevail'd with him to break his Word to him. Priſcillian was condemn'd to Death, and then Ithacius being fully ſatisfied, deſiſted from his Accuſation, that is, he did not appear againſt him before the Judges, when the Sentence came to be confirm'd. A groſs Artifice, which Sulpicius Severus does juſtly laugh at. (c) Ceterum Ithacius videns quam invidioſum ſibi apud epiſcopos foret, ſi accuſato, etiam poſtremis rerum capitalium judiciis aſtitiſſet (etenim iterari judicium neceſſe erat) ſubtrahit ſe cognitioni fruſtra callida jam ſcelere perfecto. Latinus Pacatus uſes thoſe bloody Biſhops as they deſerved, and ſhews the Scandal they occaſion'd by laying their unclean and bloody Hands upon Sacred things. He cries down the Iniquity of the Tyrant Maximus, who cheriſh'd and ſupported ſuch Prelates. (d) Quid hoc majus poterat intendere accuſator ſacerdos? fuit enim, fuit & hoc delatorum genus, qui nominibus antiſtites, revera autem ſatellites, atque adeo carnifices, non contenti miſeros avitis evolviſſe patrimoniis, calumniabantur in ſanguinem, & vitas premebant reorum jam pauperum. Quin etiam cum judiciis capitalibus aſtitiſſent, cum gemitus & tormenta miſerorum auribus ac luminibus hauſiſſent, cum lictorum arma, cum damnatorum frena tractaſſent, pollutas pœnali manus contactu ad ſacra referebant, & cæremonias quas inceſtaverant mentibus, etiam corporibus impiabant. Hos ille (e) Phalaris in amicis habebat, hi in oculis ejus, atque etiam in oculis erant: nec injuria, à quibus tot ſimul votiva veniebant, avaro divitum bona, cruento innocentium pœna, impio religionis injuria.

There is another thing to be obſerved in Ithacius, wherein the moſt violent Accuſers are like him. No Biſhop would have found it a more difficult thing than he, to give an Account of his Conduct, and yet he was the warmeſt in defaming and proſecuting others. This is a prodigious Diſorder, as it has been obſerv'd by the Heathens, who ſay (f) that Innocence is the moſt neceſſary Qualification of an Accuſer. But thoſe who ſet up for Accuſers are generally the leaſt concern'd for it. There is a Man whoſe Books are full of Abſurdities, Contradictions, Profanations, and dangerous Paradoxes and Hereſies, and yet he has charged many People with Hereſy; and had he had a Maximus at his Diſpoſal, we ſhould have heard of nothing but of Men Depoſed, Proſcribed, Anathematized, to ſay no worſe. 'Tis likely thoſe irregular and unjuſt Proceedings will laſt as long as the World.

(E) The Conſequences of that Severity.] “That Execution occaſion'd many Diſorders; for the Capital Puniſhment of that Hereſiarch gave a new Strength to his Hereſy. He was magnificently Buried by his Followers, and honour'd like a Martyr; and thoſe who had him condemn'd, making an ill uſe of their Intereſt at Court, perſecuted Good Men with Impunity. Whoever (1) Faſted and loved a retir'd Life was immediately ſuſpected by them; whoever was more Sober and Regular than they, was a Guilty Perſon. Thoſe who did not pleaſe them were immediately accounted Priſcillianiſts, eſpecially when their Death was like to be acceptable to the Prince, or to fill his Treaſure with their (2) Spoils; for they deprived Men of their Lives and Eſtates according to their Fancy, and preſerv'd the Tyrant's Friendſhip by Calumnies, and Cruelties, and other Actions like his (g). ”

(F) Some other Biſhops imitated him.] “(h) What was moſt deplorable, was a kind of a dangerous Schiſm occaſion'd in Gaul by this Action of Ithacius. For, on the one hand, a Biſhop of great Authority, call'd Theognoſtus, having highly condemn'd it, and afterwards ſeparated from his Communion, was follow'd therein by moſt Biſhops, who thought, as well as he, that they could not Communicate with a Man who had diſhonour'd his Character and the Church, by defiling himſelf with the Blood of thoſe whoſe Death he had procured. But, on the other hand, many Biſhops, prevail'd upon by Ithacius, whoſe Accomplices they were, or

“ who

---

* In the Year 385.

† Taken from Sulpicius Severus, Hiſtor. Sacr. lib. 2.

(a) Sulpicius Severus ubi ſupra pag. 168, 169.

(b) Quoad uſque Martinus Treveris fuit, dilata cognitio eſt: & mox diſceſſurus egregia authoritate à Maximo elicuit ſponſionem, nihil cruentum in reos conſtituendum. Sed poſtea Imperator per Magnum & Rufum epiſcopos depravatus, & à mitioribus conſiliis deflexus, cauſam præfecto Evodio permiſit, viro acri & ſevero. Id. p. 169.

(c) Id. ib. pag. 170.

(d) Lat. Pacat. ubi ſ

(e) That is, the Ty Maximus overcome by Theodoſius.

(f) Cognoſce quam multa e oportet in eo alterum accuſet. Primum integritatem atque innocentiam ſingularem. Nihil eſt enim quod minus ferendum ſit, quam rationem ab altero vitæ repoſcere eum, qui non poſſit ſuæ reddere. Cicero in Verrem 1 fol.

(1) Sulp. Sever. in vita S. Mart.

(2) Pacat. in Panegyric.

(g) Flechier, Hiſtoire de Theodoſe, B. 3. p. 303. ad ann. 384. Paris in 12. 16

(h) Maimbourg ubi ſupra, pag.

Communion. Ithacius was not uneaſy at it during the Life of Maximus his Protector; but when he loſt that Support, he was puniſh'd for his Fault. Pope (G) Leo was not ſo nice as St. Martin, for he approved Priſcillian's Execution. Maimbourg makes uſe of a Diſtinction, which is not very far from being * ridiculous. I don't examine whether thoſe † Hereticks believ'd and practis'd whatever is imputed to them; I ſhall only ſay, that it ſeems one of their Opinions has been condemn'd, which has been approved (H) in St. Auguſtin.

PRO-

* See the Remark G.

† See Moreri's Dictionary of the Dutch Edition, in the Addition to the Article of Priſcillian.

" who approved what he had done, ſided with " him, and finding themſelves powerfully ſupported by the Prince, who favoured Ithacius, " met at Triers in a kind of a Council, or rather " in a Conventicle, where he was abſolved, and " declared Innocent by a formal Sentence." We are told afterwards how St. Martin refuſed to Communicate with them, till he was made ſenſible, that by complying he ſhould obtain from Maximus a Revocation of the (a) Order, whereby all the Priſcillianiſts, that ſhould be found, were to be put to the Sword. St. Martin (b) did not approve that Hereticks ſhould be put to Death, and was afraid that many of the beſt Catholicks would be involved in that Slaughter, becauſe thoſe who, by reaſon of their modeſt and mortified Look, ſeem'd to be more regular than others, were accounted Priſcillianiſts, without making any diſtinction between Hypocrites and true devout Men. And therefore being of Opinion, that of two Evils he was to chuſe the leaſt, he (c) yielded for a ſhort time to the violence offered to him, and aſſiſted with thoſe Biſhops at the Ordination of Felix Biſhop of Triers .... The very next Day he went away very Melancholy, and very ſorry that ſuch an Ordination had been made; and perceiving that the Gift of Miracles, which (1) God had beſtowed upon him, did not exert itſelf ſo often as it did before, he endeavour'd to make up that Loſs by his Penitence. As for the Schiſm occaſion'd by Ithacius, it did not laſt long, becauſe Maximus his Protector having been defeated ſome time after by the (2) great Theodoſius, and kill'd by the Soldiers at Aquileia, he was forſaken by all the Biſhops of his Party, and Baniſh'd: he died in his Baniſhment.

(G) Pope Leo .... approved Priſcillian's Execution.] Maimbourg (d) acknowledges, that Hereticks had not been puniſh'd with Death till then; but he maintains, that they may be juſtly treated with that Severity, as it has been frequently practiſed ſince. And not to mention, ſays he, " thoſe who have proved in their Writings, " that it is not only Lawful, but very Proper to " uſe them ſo; one needs only read what St. Leo " wrote upon this Subject, when giving the neceſſary Orders to proceed in Spain againſt " Priſcillian's Hereſy, he Praiſes Maximus for " that Action, and ſays: (3) That the Rigour " and Severity of his Juſtice againſt that Hereſiarch " and his Followers, whom that Prince put to " Death, has been very ſerviceable to the Clemency " of the Church. For tho' ſhe is contented with " the mild Judgment pronounced by the Biſhops a" gainſt obſtinate Hereticks, according to the Canons, " and tho' ſhe is not for bloody Executions, yet ſhe " is very much aſſiſted and ſupported by the ſevere " Conſtitutions of the Emperors, ſince the fear of " ſo ſevere a Puniſhment moves ſometimes the Here" ticks to have recourſe to the Spiritual Remedy, in " order to cure the mortal Diſtemper of their Hereſy " by a true Converſion." Maimbourg ſays, (e) that the greateſt Fault of Ithacius was to apply himſelf to a Secular Court in a Cauſe merely Eccleſiaſtical, and to procure the Death of thoſe Hereticks to the utmoſt of their Power, which is contrary to the Laws of the Church; and therefore, ſays he, when the Clergy implore the Aſſiſtance of Princes and Magiſtrates againſt 'em, they always proteſt they do ſo earneſtly wiſh for their Amendment, that they don't deſire they ſhould be puniſh'd with Death, but rather that they ſhould find Mercy, leaving it however to the Judges to act according to the Laws, for the good of the Church and State. This is a fallacious and comical Diſtinction; 'tis at leaſt a thing ſo contrary to the Gravity of a Tribunal, which acts ſeriouſly, that none can think it ſtrange that the Inquiſition ſhould be ridiculed upon that Account. You require of Princes that they ſhould make Laws againſt Hereticks; you highly commend them when they appoint a Capital Puniſhment for them; you deliver up to them thoſe whom you declare to be Hereticks: You therefore, properly ſpeaking, are the Cauſe of their Death. When you tell the Magiſtrates, that you are not for their being put to Death, you act a Comical Part (f). Why don't you aſk the ſame Favour for Aſſaſſins? For you ſay, that a Heretick is worſe than a Poiſoner and a Murderer. Ariſtotle's Maxim, Poſito uno abſurdo multa ſequuntur, was never truer than in the preſent Caſe. The Abſurdity of maintaining that Men ought to be puniſh'd with the Sword for their Opinions, is attended with a thouſand Abſurdities; and thoſe who advance it fall into a thouſand Contradictions. 'Tis to be obſerved that the Inquiſitors condemn People to Death, and are not contented to declare that a Man is a Heretick (g).

(H) One of their Opinions .... which has been approved in St. Auguſtin.] Theſe three Things are certain, 1. St. Auguſtin believes that Man is invincibly determin'd to Evil by his natural Corruption, or to Good by the Holy Spirit. 2. That Doctrine deprives Man of Free-will, taking this Word for the Liberty of Indifference. 3. St. Auguſtin's Doctrine has been ſolemnly approv'd by the Church. Now we ſhall ſee that the Priſcillianiſts were condemn'd becauſe they deſtroy'd Free-will, (h) by ſubmitting Man's Will to a fatal neceſſity, which it cannot oppoſe. That is to ſay, they were condemn'd becauſe they deſtroy'd Free-will, taking that Word not (i) for the Faculty of acting Voluntarily, and with an agreeable Propenſity, but for the Power of chuſing between two Contraries: and therefore they were condemn'd for a Doctrine that was approv'd in St. Auguſtin. Let us conſider how Pope Leo confutes them. " (4) If it be lawful to believe and " teach that Doctrine, Virtue ought no longer to " be rewarded, nor ought Vice to be puniſh'd; " and all Humane and Divine Laws may be violated with Impunity, becauſe it will never be " poſſible to give Judgment in favour of good " Actions, or againſt Wickedneſs, if the Will is " overcome by a fatal neceſſity." (k) Now can any body doubt, I uſe (l) ſtill Maimbourg's Words, without adopting all that he ſays, Whether St. Leo believed what we are obliged to believe, viz. that Grace does ſo influence our Minds as to lay no neceſſity upon us, and that it does not in the leaſt deprive us of our Free-will or Liberty of Indifference, by virtue of which we may chuſe one of two things that are contrary, and do good by Grace, or Evil of our ſelves. I eaſily believe that they differ'd from St. Auguſtin in explaining the Cauſes which determine the Will; but they muſt needs have agreed with him in this Point, that the Principle which moves it does not allow it to ſtop or go back, or turn aſide. But the Reaſons alledg'd by Pope Leo to confute thoſe Hereticks are grounded upon that very thing: 'tis therefore certain, that when he condemn'd their Doctrine he refuted St. Auguſtin, and that he could not approve the Doctrine of that Father, without adopting what he had rejected in the Priſcillianiſts. I don't examine whether he argues right; I only ſay, that all the Proofs he builds upon Rewards and Puniſhments, Laws and Judgments, would be wrong againſt that Sect, if they were not good againſt St. Auguſtin's Syſtem. Take notice that St. Leo argues from the Conſequences of the Doctrine of a fatal Neceſſity; and that he does not ſay that thoſe Hereticks acknowledged thoſe Conſequences: which ſhews, that he argued againſt the Doctrine itſelf, independently of the Principle on which they grounded it, and of the Conſequences they actually drew from it. I make this Obſervation, becauſe it confirms the Text of this Remark.

(a) Maimbourg ubi ſupra pag. 50.

(b) Id. ib.

(c) Id. ib. pag. 50. where he quotes the words of Sulpicius Severus Dial. 3. Satius æſtimans ad horam cedere, quam his non conſulere quorum cervicibus gladius imminebat.

(1) Sever. ibid.

(2) Iſid. de vir. ill. c. 2.

(d) Maimb. ib. pag. 55.

(3) Profuit diu iſta diſtrictio Eccleſiaſticæ lenitati, quæ etſi ſacerdotali contenta judicio cruentas refugit ultiones, ſeveris tamen Chriſtianorum Principum Conſtitutionibus adjuvatur, dum ad ſpirituale nonnunquam recurrunt remedium qui timent corporale ſupplicium. S. Leo Ep. 93. ad Turib.

(e) Ibid. pag. 57.

(f) See Jurieu, Apologie pour la reformation, tom. 2. pag. 251, 257. edit. in 4.

(g) See Jurieu ib.

(h) Maimbourg ubi ſupra p. 55.

(i) It cannot be ſuppoſed that any Heretick did ever deprive Men of that Faculty.

(4) Quod ſi id credi liceat, & doceri, nec virtutibus præmium, nec vitiis pœna debebitur. Omniaque non ſolum humanarum Legum, ſed etiam divinarum Conſtitutionum decreta ſolventur: Quia neque de bonis, neque de malis actibus ullum poterit eſſe judicium, ſi in utramque partem fatalis neceſſitas motum mentis impellit. S. Leo, epiſt. 93.

(k) Idem Maimb. ib. pag. 66.

(l) I made uſe of his Tranſlation of the words of St. Leo ib. p. 65, 66.

In

PRODICUS, a Native α of Julis in the Isle (A) of Cea, one of the Cyclades, Contemporary with Democritus and Gorgias Leontinus, and Disciple of Protagoras, was one of the most celebrated Sophists of Greece. He flourish'd in † the 86th Olympiad, and had, among other Scholars, Euripides, Socrates β, Theramenes γ, and Isocrates δ. He did not scruple to teach in private at Athens, tho' he was sent thither with the Character of an Ambassador by his Countrymen, who ζ had before confer'd several other Publick Employments upon him; and tho' one would have thought that the Glory he had got by Haranguing the Athenians on the Day of his Publick Audience, should have made him keep his Talent for the like Occasions. Plato, who frequently mentions, and even praises him, tho' not without * Irony, the darling Figure of Socrates, his great Interlocutor, intimates, that the Desire of getting Money moved Prodicus to keep School; and 'tis certain he got a great deal by that Trade. Philostratus || seems to be of Plato's Opinion; for he says, that Prodicus loved Money, and spent it for his Diversion. He went from Town to Town making a shew of his Eloquence; and tho' he did it in a (B) mercenary manner he received great Honours at Thebes, and greater still at Lacedæmon. His Declamation of fifty (C) Drachms, πεντηκοντάδραχμος, was very much talk'd of: Some Learned Men say it was so call'd, because each Hearer was oblig'd to give him ‡ fifty Drachms, which make above four French Crowns.

Prodicus

(A) In the Isle of Cea.] Suidas says in express Words that Prodicus was born in that Island, ἀπὸ Κέω τῆς νήσου, and calls him Κεῖον, as he had been call'd by (m) Plato, (n) Dionysius Halicarnasseus, (o) Plutarch, (p) Diogenes Laertius, &c. From Κέως comes (q) Κεῖος, and by Contraction Κῖος, which the Latins have express'd Ceus, Ceius, or Cius. Menage (r) censures Marsilius Ficinus with great Reason, for rendring Πρόδικος Κεῖος in Plato, Prodicus Chius. Amyot has done the same in his Translation of the Life of Isocrates. The Latin Translator of Philostratus has committed the same Fault; for he calls Prodicum Chium the same Person whom (a) Philostratus calls Πρόδικον Κεῖον. The French Translator was doubtless more careful to consult the Latin Translation of Philostratus, than to examine the Greek Text; for he renders it, Prodicus, a Native of Chio. Caseneuve (b), who blames him for it, and censures him for some other Mistakes, takes no notice of two, for which he deserves to be reproved. The Greek Words run thus: Προδίκου δὲ τοῦ Κίου ὄνομα τοσοῦτον ἐπὶ σοφίᾳ ἐγένετο ὡς καὶ τὸν Γρύλλου Ξενοφῶντα ἐν Βοιωτοῖς δεδεμένον ἀκροᾶσθαι διαλεγομένου, καθιστάντα ἐγγυητὴν τοῦ σώματος. The French Translator renders those Words in the following manner. Prodicus a Native of Chio, and Son of Grillus, was so much esteem'd, that being a Prisoner in Bœotia, Xenophon was Bail for him that he might hear him. 1. Xenophon and not Prodicus should have been call'd the Son of Gryllus. Caseneuve says so himself, page 43; and yet when he censures the Version, page 42, he says the Translator should have said, Prodicus, a Native of Chio, and Son of Gryllus, &c. 2. 'Twas Xenophon and not Prodicus who was a Prisoner; and yet any body who reads that Translation, will think that Xenophon was Bail for the Prisoner Prodicus. Tho' Caseneuve was not ignorant that this Sophist was not a Native of the Isle of Chio, he knew not what Countryman he was; for he says he was born in the Isle of Cio, now call'd Standia. Which is not true; for he was born in the Isle of Cea, or Ceos, now call'd Zea. Moreri, who makes him a Native of the Isle of Cos, was led into that Mistake by some Writers, who had more Learning than he. Erasmus calls him Coum, page 394, of his Adages. Charles Stephens does the same in his Dictionary, which has not been mended by Lloyd nor Hofman. They have not mended neither what he falsly ascribes to Suidas, viz. that he made Prodicus a Native of the Isle of Chio. Menage (d) thinks that a Fault has crept into the first Chapter of the third Book of Quintilian, where Prodicus is call'd Chius. I have not found that Fault in the Editions I have consulted. Maucroix in his Translation of the great Hippias, printed at Paris in 1685, says, that Prodicus was born in the Isle of Cos. Father Goulu committed the same Fault in the French (e) Translation of Socrates's Apology.

(B) In a mercenary manner.] See Philostratus (f) and Plato. The latter says, (g) that Young-Men of the Richest and Noblest Families being inticed by Prodicus, Gorgias, Polus, and Hippias, gave 'em a great deal of Money, and besides promised them to be very thankful, whilst they neglected to be Instructed by their Fellow-Citizens, who would have taught 'em for nothing.

(C) The Declamation of fifty Drachms.] I make use of the Word Declamation, without depriving myself of the Liberty of using another Term, if there is occasion for it. The Word ἐπίδειξις in Plato and Suidas seems to signify a Harangue, wherein the Author displays all his Rhetorick, intending to signalize himself both on Account of the Importance of the Matter, and by reason of the great Concourse of Hearers. Those who render ἐπίδειξιν ποιεῖν, specimen edere, have not a wrong Notion of the thing; for they give us to understand, that an Orator makes a shew of all his Strength, as if he was to produce a Master-piece. I think this is the Reason why the brightest Orations, viz. those that contain a Panegyrick or an Invective, have been ascribed by the Rhetoricians to the Demonstrative kind, ἐπιδεικτικόν. However it be, there is some difficulty about the ἐπίδειξις πεντηκοντάδραχμος of Prodicus. Suidas says, that Prodicus is the first who made it, and does not tell us what it was: nevertheless Vossius (h) makes him say, that all those who had a mind to hear that Orator gave him fifty Drachms, that is, four French Crowns, and two Spanish Reals. 'Tis very likely that Vossius depended upon (i) Cresollius, and went no farther. He makes use of the same valuation of Money as that Jesuit does; but whereas in the Book of the Jesuit the Sum of four Crowns and two Reals paid to Prodicus by each Hearer, is only an Explication of Suidas's Words, or a Consequence drawn from them, 'tis in Vossius a formal Testimony of Suidas. Judge how Cautious one ought to be in reading ordinary Authors, since such a Man as Vossius takes such a Liberty. Let us see what he had said in (k) another Book. He had related as a Matter of Fact taken from Aristotle, that when Prodicus perceiv'd that his Hearers did not mind what he said, he us'd to propose to them something relating to his Art, which he would not teach for less than fifty Drachms. The Passage of (l) Aristotle seems capable of two Senses; one is, that Prodicus had an Oration full of such lively Strokes, that some of 'em were sufficient to drive away the Drowsiness of the Hearers; the other is, that he had a Treatise of Rhetorick, which contain'd many Secrets fit to excite the Attention of the Hearers, tho' they were never so weary. According to the first Sense he had made an Oration which he kept for such Hearers as gave him fifty Drachms; and according to the second Sense he had a Collection of good Remedies to keep his Hearers from Sleeping, which he imparted to none but those who gave him that Price. Which puts me in mind of a (m) famous Professor of Philosophy among the Protestants of France, who would not teach certain Sophisms unless he was paid according to the Price he set on them. Vossius keeps to the first Sense in one of his Books, and to the second in another. It were no easy thing

α Suidas.

† Euseb. in Chron.

β Plato in Menone pag. 425.

γ Suidas.

δ Plutarch & Dionysius Halicarnassens, in the Life of Isocrates.

ζ Plato in Hippia maj. pag. 1245.

* Dionysius Halicarnasseus in his Letter to Pompey blames Plato for speaking ill of Prodicus, and of several others.

|| In vita Sophist. l. 1. pag. 500.

‡ Hofman in Prodico says only 5 Drachms.

(m) In Protagora & passim alibi. He says in Hippia Majore pag. 1245. that Prodicus came ἐκ Κέω ex Cea Insula.

(n) In vita Isocr.

(o) In vita Isocr.

(p) In Protagora.

(q) See Wolfius in Isocrat. vitam, & Menage in Diog. Laert. pag. 419.

(r) Ibid.

(a) In vit. Sophist. pag. 449.

(b) Caseneuve, commentaire sur les epistres de Philostrate, pag. 42.

(d) Menag. in Laert. pag. 419.

(e) It is in the 2 part of Phyllarchus's Letters. See pag. 581.

(f) In vit. Sophist. pag. 483.

(g) Plato in Apolog. Socr. pag. 15, 16. & in Theage pag. 93.

(h) Quam orationes ejus fieri solerent, illud arguit, quod qui audire eum vellet, is, Suida teste, quinquaginta drachmas persolveret, hoc est quatuor coronatos Gallicos, ac duos super regales Hispanicos. Vossius de Rhetor. natura pag. 63.

(i) Cressoll. theatr. Rhetorum l. 3. c. 5. pag. 178.

(k) Vossius institut. Orator. l. 3. c. 2.

(l) Τὸ δ' ἐστὶν, ὅπερ ἔφη Πρόδικος, ὅτε νυστάζοιεν οἱ ἀκροαταί, ἐμβάλλειν τῆς πεντηκονταδράχμου αὐτοῖς. Hoc autem est, ut dixit Prodicus, cum dormitant auditores, inferre aliquid demonstrationis quinquaginta drachmarum ipsis. Aristot. Rhetor. l. 3. c. 14.

(m) David Derodon.

Prodicus must needs have had a very Eloquent (D) Stile, since he was so much followed, tho' he had a † disagreeable Voice. 'Tis said that Xenophon (E) being a Prisoner in Bœotia, and desiring to hear him β, satisfied his Curiosity, having found a Man who was Bail for him. Few Harangues have been so much quoted, or have occasion'd so many Applications, as that wherein our Sophist feign'd (F) that Virtue and Voluptuousness, disguised like Women, came to Hercules and strove to gain him. The Athenians put him * to Death as a Corrupter of Youth. Had it been no other Corruption than that mention'd by Aristophanes γ in one of his Comedies, when he said, That Man has been spoiled by reading of Books, or by Prodicus, or by the Conversation of great Talkers, the Punishment would have been too severe; but 'tis somewhat likely he was accused of teaching his Scholars (G) Atheism. I don't know whether any Author besides Plutarch says, that he was a Man of a (H) weak and sickly Constitution.

PRODICUS, a Heretick of the Second Century δ, the Founder of the Sect of the Adamites, followed the abominable Opinions of Carpocrates, to which he added (A) the publick Copulation of both Sexes; for he order'd that Women should be thing to determine which of the two is the truest, considering that Aristotle and Suidas have affected to be very short upon that Subject: but Plato acquaints us, that Prodicus's ἐπίδειξις πεντηκοντάδραχμος was rather a Lecture than an Oration. Socrates complains, in a Bantering way, that he is not able to discourse well of the nature of Names, because he had not heard the ἐπίδειξις of fifty Drachms, which, according to Prodicus, discover'd the whole Mystery, he (n) had only heard that of one Drachm, τὴν δραχμιαίαν. Cresollius did not understand this last Word: He took it to be the same thing in Plato with what was call'd before πεντηκοντάδραχμος. (o) Plato qui rem eamdem memorat, ea causa δραχμιαίαν ἐπίδειξιν nominavit. Mrs. le Fevre, in her Notes upon Aristophanes's Comedy, Intitled The Clouds, pag. 235, had a better Notion of the thing. Prodicus, says she, was an extraordinary vain Man, and had so good an Opinion of his own Learning, that he never taught any thing gratis. He had some Discourses ready made of all Prices, from an Obole to a Drachm.

(D) A very Eloquent Stile.] This may be prov'd by the Testimony of many grave Authors. Maximus Tyrius (a) says, that the Beauty of Expression, καλλιλογίαν, was Prodicus's true Character. According to Marcellinus (b), he made an exact choice of his Words. Themistius says, that his Orations were full of Ornaments and Charms, πολυειδεῖς τε καὶ χάριτας ἡδονῆς. I think Naudæus (c) had no good reason to place him among the Sophists, who made Speeches upon any Subject proposed to them, without any Preparation. The quite contrary may be inferr'd from what we read in the Lives of the Sophists written by Philostratus, pag. 487, that Gorgias was the first who went thro' that Trial, and that he did it to drown the Glory Prodicus had acquired by going from Town to Town, where he spoke elaborate Speeches. Being willing to go farther than that Orator, whom he (d) laugh'd at on account of his frequent repeating the same Pieces, he resolved to try what he could do without Preparation. We need not doubt that the beautiful Stile of Prodicus's Speeches was attended with subtil Thoughts, and that he contributed, at least as much as any body else, to the Athenians forbidding the Sophists to plead Causes. They could no longer bear (e) that the Subtilties of those Men should make that appear Just which was Unjust: See the Proverb, Προδίκου σοφώτερος, more Knowing than Prodicus. Erasmus was mistaken in believing that this Proverb was not meant of Prodicus the Sophist, but of another. See how he is censur'd for it in Caseneuve's Notes upon Philostratus's Letters, pag. 42, 43. See also Aristophanes in Nubibus. Notwithstanding the Railleries of that Poet it may be inferred from what he says, that our Sophist was accounted a Man of a great deal of Wit and Learning.

(E) Xenophon being a Prisoner.] Charles Stephens did not understand that Passage of Philostratus. He explains it as if that Author had said, that Prodicus was so considerable a Man, that Xenophon being apprehended in Bœotia, obtain'd leave to go home, because Prodicus was Bail for him. Lloyd and Hofman have kept in that Mistake of Charles Stephens Word for Word.

(F) Than that wherein Prodicus feign'd that Virtue.] I make use of the Word Harangue, not only because Philostratus gives me that Notion of it, but also because Prodicus's Profession leads one to it. 'Tis likely that such a Fiction was the Subject of his Declamations. However, 'tis true that Xenophon (f), who gives us the Substance of it, speaks of it as of a Piece written concerning Hercules, ἐν τῷ συγγράμματι τῷ περὶ τοῦ Ἡρακλέους. What Mr. Charpentier says of it is more particular, In the Book, says he, which the Learned Prodicus wrote concerning the Life of Hercules. Suidas tells us, that it was a Book Intitled ὧραι, the Hours: nevertheless, that Work of Prodicus may be call'd a Harangue. I have said that this Fiction has been frequently quoted, and has occasion'd many Explications; and I have good Reasons to say so. Cicero (g), Quintilian (h), and Maximus Tyrius (i) speak of it; but Silius Italicus, quoted by Moreri, says nothing of it. He feigns something like it in Honour of Scipio Africanus. (k) Lucian also has imitated that Fiction. Among the Moderns I shall only quote Henry Stephens, who mentions it in his Exhortation prefixed to the (l) Greek Translation of the Catechism of Geneva.

(G) Of teaching his Scholars Atheism.] Sextus Empiricus (m) places him among Atheists. Cicero does the same, tho' not so directly; for he says that Prodicus affirm'd that humane Gratitude had occasion'd the Belief of the Existence of the Gods. Which is no less contrary to sound Theology, than if one should say, as some have done, Primus in orbe Deos fecit timor, Fear has brought Religion into the World: or, as others would have it, Religion was invented by wise Politicians to keep People in awe. Cicero shews, that Prodicus's Opinion is destructive of Religion. (n) Quid? ii qui dixerunt totam de Diis immortalibus opinionem fictam esse ab hominibus sapientibus Reipub. causâ, ut quos ratio non posset, eos ad officium religio duceret, nonne omnem religionem funditus sustulerunt? Quid Prodicus Chius? qui ea quæ prodessent hominum vitæ Deorum in numero habita esse dixit, quam tandem religionem reliquit?

(H) Of a weak and sickly Constitution.] Plutarch observes, that when a Publick Imployment is to be conferr'd, the Vigour of a Man should be consider'd, and not his Age; and that therefore a stout old Man ought not to be dispensed with it, as it was reasonable to excuse Prodicus in his Youth. 'Tis upon this occasion that he acquaints us with that Man's Infirmity. He joins him with a Man (o) so lean and so weak, that the Passage deserves to be set down. (p) And therefore as he who would advise the Sophist Prodicus, or the Poet Philetas, who were both young, but thin, lean, and sickly (q), and kept their Bed the greatest part of the time, to concern themselves with publick Affairs, would be a senseless Brute; so would those be, who should forbid such Old Men as Phocion, Massinissa an African, and Cato a Roman to exercise Publick Offices.

(A) To which he added the publick Copulation of both Sexes.] Here are Theodoret's Words. (r) Οὗτος προφανῶς λαγνεύειν τοῖς Καρποκράτους προσέθηκε δόγμασι. Hic ad decreta Carpocratis adjecit palam & publicè scortari. The only Proof Theodoret alledges for it is, that Prodicus order'd the Community of Women, that is to say, that in the Meals which † [illegible] Philostr. pag. 496. See also Vitis in Prolog. pag. 230.

---

β Philostr. pag. 496.

* [illegible] Athenis hausta cicuta mortuus est, quod juvenes corrumperet. Suid.

γ Id. ibid.

δ See the Remark A in the Art. Adamites.

(n) Νῦν δ᾽ οὐκ ἀκήκοα, ἀλλὰ τὴν δραχμιαίαν. Plato in Cratylo pag. 255.

(o) Cresollius ubi supra.

(a) Dissertat. 7. init.

(b) In the Life of Thucydides, who says that he imitated, τὴν τοῦ Προδίκου ἐπὶ τοῖς ὀνόμασιν ἀκριβολογίαν.

(c) Syntag. de studio liber. p. 87. In the Collection of Dissertations de studiis instituendis printed in 1645. where there is Prodicum Chium. The last Fault is, without doubt, Naudæus's.

(d) Ἐμπίπτων τῷ Προδίκῳ ἑωλά τε καὶ πολλάκις εἰρημένα ἀγγέλλοντι ἐπαφῆκεν ἑαυτὸν τῷ καιρῷ. Philostr. p. 482.

(e) Id. ib.

(f) Lib. 2. de memor. Socratis.

(g) Cicero, officior. l. 1. c. 32. epistol. 12. ad famil. l. 5.

(h) Quintil. lib. 9. cap. 2.

(i) Maxim. Tyr. Orat. 4. init.

(k) Lucian. in Somnio.

(l) Berchet in his Scholia upon that Passage of Henry Stephens, makes Prodicus a Native of the Isle of Cos, or of the Isle of Chios, & since he says that he was a Man summæ auctoritatis, he shews that he ran into the Mistake of Charles Stephens's Dictionary.

(m) Sext. Empir. advers. Mathem.

(n) Cicero de natura Deorum lib. 1. circa fin. p.m. 170

(o) See the Article Philetas.

(p) Plut. an seni sit gerenda respublica p. 791. E.

(q) Νέος μὲν, ἰσχνὸς δὲ καὶ νοσώδης καὶ τὰ πολλὰ κλινοπετὴς δι᾽ ἀῤῥωστίαν ὄντως. Integra quidem ætate verum graciles & ob infirmitatem valetudinis crebro decumbentes. Id. ib.

(r) Theod. hæret. fabul. l. 1. c. 6.

be common: so that at a Publick Feast every Man took the first Woman he lighted upon after the Candles had been removed; and that α Lewdness was accounted the Mystical Ceremony of the Initiation. Those that are not the most Pious are struck with Horror, when they see that so soon after the Death of the Apostles, the Doctrine of the Mystical Union, which ought to be among the Faithful, was understood of the carnal Copulation of Men and Women, and that those Hereticks durst affirm, that the true Participation of Mysteries consisted in that. What could be expected from such a Man as Prodicus, who believed that Humane Souls were β sent into Bodies, not in order to be punish'd, but to pay Homage to the Angels, who had created the World, by all manner of Sensuality? Prodicus's Followers boasted α that they had the secret Books of Zoroaster, and maintain'd ‡ that God was not to be pray'd to, and that no Man should expose himself ‖ to Martyrdom by confessing the Truth.

PRUDENTIUS (Aurelius Prudentius Clemens) a Christian Poet (A) was born in the Year 348. It was in Spain; but 'tis disputed (B) whether it was at Calahorra, or Saragoza, or in another Town of that Country. Those who say that he was made (C) Consul, are grosly mistaken: they should only have said, that he had a very which the ancient Christians call'd Ἀγάπαι, every Man should enjoy a Woman, as Chance should bring 'em together in the darkness of the Room. This they call'd Communicating, and being initiated into the Mystery. I don't find that Theodoret had any reason to ascribe this additional Doctrine to Prodicus, since Clemens Alexandrinus, on whose Credit he speaks, imputes (a) the whole Matter to Carpocrates; for having mention'd upon a meer Hear-say, and not as a thing to be found in their Writings, the infamous Custom of removing the Candles and lying one with another, he says that Carpocrates should have establish'd those Laws for Dogs, Hogs, and Goats: and therefore he did not believe that Carpocrates had left 'em to the Care of some of his Successors; for instance, to Prodicus. Thus Theodoret alledges an Author who is against him. That Author observes, that the Men, before they went to those Feasts, (b) acquainted the Women, whom they had a Mind to lie with, that they made choice of 'em. Which is likely enough: The Passions are too ingenious to be unactive on such occasions, and to refer the whole Matter to Chance. The Carpocratians knew therefore, pretty near, who should fall to their share, and were not wholly in the Case mention'd by a Roman Poet.

Mox (c) juniores quærit adulteros
Inter mariti vina: neque eligit
Cui donet impermissa raptim
Gaudia luminibus remotis:
Sed jussa coram non sine conscio
Surgit marito: seu vocat institor,
Seu navis Hispanæ magister,
Dedecorum pretiosus emtor.

I must add, that Theodoret is not so exact as he should have been in quoting Clemens Alexandrinus about another Circumstance. He makes him say of Prodicus, what is properly and directly said of some others, and cannot be applied to Prodicus but in general, and with several indirect Arguments.

(A) Was born in the Year 348.] Which appears from these Words:

Hæc (d) dum vita volans agit
Inrepsit subito canities seni,
Oblitum veteris me Saliæ Consulis arguens
Sub quo prima dies mihi.

The meaning of which is, that he was born under Salia's Consulship; but we find that the Consuls of the Year 348, were Flavius Philippus, and Flavius Sallia, or (e) Salles. Those who make him flourish (f) in the Year 380, are as much mistaken as those who make him flourish (g) in the Year 430.

(B) 'Tis disputed whether it was at Calahorra, or at Saragoza, or in another Town of that Country.] Aldus Manutius, Sixtus Senensis, Possevin, and some others, make him a Native of Saragoza; but Mariana (h) maintains that he was born at Calahorra. They alledge for the first Opinion (i) the Hymn in honorem sanctorum decem & octo Martyrum Cæsaraugustanorum, which begins thus:

Bis novem NOSTER populus sub uno
Martyrum servat cineres sepulchro:
Cæsaraugustam vocitamus urbem
Res cui tanta est.

We read the following Passage in the same Hymn:

NOSTER (k) est quamvis procul hinc in urbe
Passus ignota dederit sepulchri
Gloriam victor, prope litus altæ
Forte Sagunti.
NOSTER, & NOSTRA puer in palæstra,
Arte virtutis, fideique olivo
Unctus, horrendum didicit domare
Viribus hostem.

Prudentius speaks of St. Vincent, who was born at Saragoza. A like Proof is alledged for the second Opinion; for these two Verses are to be found in the Hymn (l) in honorem sanctorum Martyrum Hemiterii & Chelidonii Calagurritanorum:

Hoc (m) bonum salvator ipse, quo fruamur, præstitit
Martyrum cum membra NOSTRO consecravit oppido.

And in the very Hymn for the Martyrs of Saragoza we read this:

NOSTRA (n) gestabit Calagurris ambos
Quos veneramur.

Mariana made use of those two Passages; but the (o) Author who wrote against him, shews, that if they afforded a good Proof, they would be insignificant for that very reason, because they cannot be solid, but the Passages brought for the contrary Opinion must be so too. In a word, Those Reasons prove too much, and consequently prove nothing. He confutes Mariana's and Aldus Manutius's Arguments reciprocally one by another, and says, that tho' Prudentius was not born at Saragoza, nor at Calahorra, he might call 'em nostra, because they were situated in Hispania Tarraconensis, his Native Country. He confirms his Opinion by two Remarks, (p) One is taken from these words concerning Tarragona:

O (q) triplex honor, o triforme culmen
Quo NOSTRÆ caput excitatur urbis
Cunctis urbibus eminens Hiberis.

The other is grounded upon this, that Prudentius, who says many things of Merida, where St. Eulalia was born, does not call it nostra; because, says he, it was not in Hispania Tarraconensis, but in Hispania Lusitanica. He is mistaken about those Words, nostra puer in palæstra: he (r) understood them of Valencia, (s) where St. Vincent suffer'd Martyrdom; but 'tis plain they are meant of Saragoza, where he was born and bred up.

This Critick is better at pulling down than at building; for when he goes about to prove that Salia in the Asturias, is Prudentius's Birth-place, he alledges no good Reason for it, tho' he shows a great deal of ingenious Learning. His chief Argument is built upon these Words, (t) oblitum veteris me Saliæ Consulis. He (v) pretends, that if veteris refers to consulis, there would have been two Consuls call'd Salia, one before the other, and Prudentius must have been born under the Consulship of the first. But 'tis not true that there was one Salia major and one Salia minor, as there was one Scipio Africanus major, and one Scipio Africanus minor. This Objection would have some Force, if Prudentius was very exact in the choice of his Words. But, after all, if we referr veteris to a Town, as Pedro Mantuano will have it, what will become of the Word Consulis? His saying (w) that it signifies a Year, will never be a satisfactory Explication.

(C) That he was made Consul, are grosly mistaken.] Aldus Manutius (x) calls him Vir Consularis, and Massalia

α Theodor. Hæret. fab. l.1.c.6. & l.5.c.27.

β Id. l.5.c.19, & 20.

α Clem. Alexand. Strom. l.3. pag. 434.

‡ I shall observe in the Remark H of the Art. Zoroaster, that the Words of Clemens Alexandrinus are equivocal.

(a) Stromat. l.3. pag. 430.

(b) Μεμελετηκότας δὲ ἐς τὴν τοιαύτην ἀγάπην τὴν κοινωνίαν, μεθ' ἡμέραν ἤδη παρ' ὧν ἂν ἐθέλωσι γυναικῶν ἀπαιτεῖν τὴν τῆς Καρποκρατείου (οὐ γὰρ θεμιτὸν εἰπεῖν θείου) νόμου ὑπακοήν. Meditatos autem in ejusmodi agape communionem, interdiu jam, à quibus velint mulieribus exigere Carpocrateæ (divinæ enim nefas est dicere) legis obedientiam. Ibid.

(c) Horace Od. 6. l. 3.

(d) Prudentius in prologo operum.

(e) Onuphrius in the 3. Book of the Fasti shews by an Inscription that his Name was Sallea.

(f) Sixtus Senensis is censur'd for it by Father Labbe de script. Eccl. to. 2. p. 794.

(g) Bibliot. Hisp. p. 205

(h) Marian. Hist. Hisp. lib. 4. c. 17.

(i) Tis the 4. of the Book Περὶ στεφάνων.

(k) Prudent. ib. hym. 4. v. 57.

(l) Tis the 1. of the Book Περὶ στεφάνων.

(m) Id. ib. hym. 1. v. 115.

(n) Id. ib. hym. 4. v. 31.

(o) Petro Mantuano, advertencias à la historia de Juan de Mariana pag. 82. & seq.

(p) Id. ib. pag. 85.

(q) Prudent. hym. 6. v. 142.

(r) Petro Mantuano ubi supra p. 84, 85.

(s) A Town in Hispania Tarraconensis.

(t) See the Remark A.

(v) Id. ib. pag. 87.

(w) Id. ib. pag. 90.

(x) Aldus in vita Prudentii.

a very conſiderable * Office. He was 57 Years of Age when he betook (D) himſelf to write Poems upon Matters of Religion. He had been an Advocate, and then a Judge, afterwards a Soldier, and at laſt he had a noble Employment at Court. He does not deny that he was a looſe Man in his Youth †. There is more Zeal for Religion ‡ than Poetical Ornaments in his Works. He did not always obſerve the Rules of Quantity; beſides, he does not appear (E) Orthodox in all his Opinions: the Liberty he took in ſaying, that few People are damn'd, would not be born with at this Day. It might be of ſome uſe to him to anſwer the Maſſalia Conſul. His Miſtake proceeds from his wrong underſtanding of the Letters V. C. added to the Names of Prudentius, and from reading in his Manuſcript oblitum veteris Meſſalia conſulis arguens, whereas it ſhould be me Saliæ. The two Letters V. C. ſignify Vir Clariſſimus, as Alciatus (y) obſerves, and not Vir Conſularis, a Title that was grown out (z) of uſe at that time. Here follows a Paſſage of M. du Pin. " (aa) moſt Authors have " not underſtood this (bb) Paſſage, and ſome, as " Aldus Manutius, Sixtus Senenſis, Poſſevin, and " even Father Labbe thought he had been Con" ſul of a Town call'd Meſſalia, which Father " Labbe (cc) Fancies to be Marſeilles. 'Tis an " overſight. They took the Name of the Conſul " Salia, who was Conſul with Philippus in 348, " for the Name of a Town, and aſcribed to Pru" dentius the Title of Conſul, which belongs to " Salia, under whoſe Conſulſhip Prudentius came " into the World." The Author who Criticizes Mariana, (dd) confutes Antonius Nebriſſenſis, who thinks that Prudentius was born under Meſſalia's Conſulſhip: he ſhews there was no Conſul of that Name, from the beginning of Dioclesian's Reign till the Empire of Anaſtaſius. He confutes Aldus, who believed that Prudentius had been Conſul of (ee) Meſſalia: he ſhews there is no ſuch Conſul in the Faſti Conſulares, and that the ancient Authors never mention'd a Town call'd Meſſalia. There was indeed a Town call'd Maſſilia, and now Marſeilles. But, ſays he, ever ſince the Diviſion of the Empire under Conſtantin, it was an uſual thing to elect a Conſul at Rome, and another at Conſtantinople, or both at Rome, and then both at Conſtantinople; and ſometimes two at Rome, and two at Conſtantinople at the ſame time; but it does not appear that any of the Weſtern Conſuls did ever reſide at Marſeilles. 'Tis ſufficient to ſay, that if Prudentius had been Conſul he would have ſaid ſo in the Paſſage that may be ſeen at the beginning of the following Remark.

(D) He was 57 Years of Age when he betook himſelf, &c. He had been an Advocate, &c.] He himſelf gives us an Abridgment of his Life, without forgetting the Lewdneſs of his Youth.

Per (a) quinquennia jam decem,
Ni fallor fuimus; ſeptimus inſuper
Annum cardo rotat, dum fruimur ſole volubili.
Inſtat terminus, & diem Vicinum ſenio jam Deus adplicat.
Quid nos utile tanti ſpatio temporis egimus?
Ætas prima crepantibus
Flevit ſub ferulis: mox docuit toga
Infectam vitiis falſa loqui, non ſine crimine:
Tum laſciva protervitas,
Et luxus petulans (heu pudet ac piget!)
Fœdavit juvenem nequitiæ ſordibus ac luto.
Exin jurgia turbidos
Armarunt animos, & male pertinax
Vincendi ſtudium ſubjacuit caſibus aſperis.
Bis legum moderamine
Frenos nobilium reximus urbium:
Jus civile bonis reddidimus, terruimus reos.
Tandem militiæ gradu
Evectum pietas Principis extulit,
Adſumptum propius ſtare jubens ordine proximo.

He bethought himſelf ſomewhat late, tho' not (b) too late, of renouncing the Vanities of the World, and making pious Verſes. It may be a Queſtion, whether his publiſhing the Debaucheries of his Youth will be advantageous to all his Readers. A young Debauchee, who may anſwer thoſe that reprove him, Prudentius, that pious and devout Poet, did as I do when he was young, I'll do as he did when I come to be 57 Years, makes a very bad Anſwer, and yet it appears to him ſolid, and lulls him aſleep in his Sins.

(E) He does not appear Orthodox in all his Opinions,] He poſitively ſays, that the Damn'd have a Reſting-Day every Year, and that it is the Day on which our Saviour came out of Hell. How came he to know that?

Sunt (c) & ſpiritibus ſæpe nocentibus
Pœnarum celebres ſub Styge feriæ,
Illa nocte, ſacer qua rediit Deus
Stagnis ad ſuperos ex Acheronticis:
. . . .
Marcent (d) ſuppliciis Tartara mitibus,
Exſultatque ſui carceris otio
Umbrarum populus liber ab ignibus:
Nec fervent ſolito flumina ſulphure.

He affirms in another place, that God damns few People.

Quæſitor (e) ille ſolus
Animæque corporiſque,
Enſiſque bis timendus
Prima ac ſecunda mors eſt.
Idem tamen benignus
Ultor retundit iram,
Pauciſque non piorum
Patitur perire in ævum.

He is very much blam'd for deſiring not the Glory of Heaven, but the State of a Man, whoſe Sufferings are not exceſſive. He ſays he will be contented, provided his Soul be not caſt into the deepeſt Dungeon of Hell; and deſires no better Fate (f) after the Reſurrection.

Multa (g) in theſauris Patris eſt habitatio, Chriſte,
Diſparibus diſcreta locis. non poſco beatâ
In regione domum: ſint illic caſta virorum
Agmina, pulvereum quæ dedignantia cenſum
Divitias petiere tuas: ſit flore perenni
Candida virginitas, animum caſtrata reciſum.
At mihi Tartarei ſatis eſt ſi nulla miniſtri
Occurrat facies, avidæ nec flamma Gehennæ
Devoret hanc animam, merſam fornacibus imis.
Eſto: cavernoſo, quia ſic pro labe neceſſe eſt
Corporeâ, triſtis me ſorbeat ignis Averno:
Saltem mitificos incendia lenta vapores
Exhalent, æſtuque calor languente tepeſcat.
Lux immenſa alios, & tempora vincta coronis
Glorificent: me pœna levis clementer adurat.

Dr. Perkins, a Proteſtant Divine, ſays 'tis an (h) impious Prayer, and that it ought not to be aſcrib'd to Prudentius. He is not the only one who thinks that 'tis a Piece added to his Hamartigenia. However it be, Victor Giſelinus, a Catholick Writer, does very much diſapprove that Prayer in a (i) Work that is very much commended by Poſſevin (k). 'Tis to be found as a genuine Piece in the moſt exact (l) Editions; whereas ſome Verſes that are accounted Suppoſititious have been left out. You will not find in Heinſius's Edition as in that of Sichardus, the third Strophe of the Hymn (m) falſly entitled, Ad incenſum cerei Paſchalis. That Title and that Strophe not being in the beſt Manuſcripts have been left out as ſuppoſititious Pieces. The Prayer that is at the end of the Hamartigenia would likewiſe have been expunged, if there had been any Reaſons to believe that it was not genuine. But here is a Hereſy of which he cannot be cleared by denying the thing: He believed the Materiality of the Soul.

Reſciſſa (n) ſed iſta (o) ſeorſum
Solvunt hominem perimuntque:
Humus excipit arida corpus,
Animæ rapit aura LIQUOREM.

The following Verſes make it plain that he means a Material Subſtance by Animæ liquorem.

(p) Non occidet, inquit,
Interior qui ſpirat homo: luet ille perenne
Supplicium, quod ſubjectos male rexerit artus.
Nec mihi difficile eſt LIQUIDAM circumdare flammis
Naturam, quamvis PERFLABILIS illa feratur
Inſtar Noti: capiam tamen, & tormenta adhibebo.

Mr.

---

* See the Remark D.

† See Ibid.

‡ Melior omnino Chriſtianus quam poeta meo judicio. Lilius Gregor. Gyraldus Dialogiſmo 25. pag. 905. See alſo the ſame Gyraldus in poet. hiſtoria pag. 290.

(y) See Father Chamillard upon Prudentius, pag. 1.

(z) Ibid.

(aa) Du Pin, Biblioth. des Auteurs Eccleſiaſt. tom. 4. p. 6. of the Dutch Ed.

(bb) That is, oblitum veteris me Saliæ, &c.

(cc) See his Diſſertat. de ſcriptor. Eccleſ. tom. 2. p. 793.

(dd) Pedro Mantuano ubi ſupra p. 86, 87.

(ee) It ſhould be Maſſalia.

(a) Prudent. in prologo operum.

(b) Nam ra numquam eſt bonos ores via, Quem eniter ccaſſe ne eſt nocens. neca in amemn. 2. v. 2. p. m. 2.

(c) Prudent. hymn. 5. Cathemer. v. 125. p. m. 21.

(d) Id. ib. v. 133.

(e) Id. ib. hymn. 6. v. 89. p. 24

(f) See the Bibliothequ. Univerſelle tom. 12. p. 186, 187.

(g) Id. in hamartigenia ſub fin. p. 227.

(h) Dictum impium & non tribuendum Prudentio ait noſter Perkinſius Rivet. crit. ſacri l. 3. c. 26. p. 1123. tom. 2. operum.

(i) In his Notes upon Prudentius

(k) See Rivet ubi ſupra.

(l) For inſtance, that of Nicolas Heinſius.

(m) 'Tis the 5. of the Cathemerinon.

(n) Prudent. hymn. 10. Cathemerin. v. 9.

(o) That is the Body and the Soul.

(p) Id. contra Symmach. lib. 2. v. 184.

the Objections of the Marcionites concerning (F) the Origin of Evil. There are many Editions (G) of his Works. His Books againſt Symmachus were written before the Victory obtain'd over Radagaiſus in the Year 405, and after that which Stilicon obtain'd over Alaric near Pollentia in the Year 402. He mentions † the latter, and ſays nothing of the other, tho' his Subject requir'd it.

PSAM-

M. le Clerc (q) obſerves, that theſe Words of Prudentius, Animâ rapit aura liquentem, do naturally ſignify the Materiality of the Soul, and that an Epicurean would not expreſs himſelf better. It is certain, that this Verſe and the three foregoing explain a Doctrine (r) which is to be found in the Books of ſeveral Pagan Authors concerning the Characters of Death. It is, ſaid they, the Reſolution of a Compound into its Principles, each of which returns to the Place from which it came, the Body into the Earth, the Soul into the Air or the Æther. If we conſider how Lucretius expreſſes himſelf on this Head, it will appear that Prudentius might be look'd upon as his Abridger.

Denique (ſ) cœleſti ſumus omnes ſemine oriundi,
Omnibus ille idem Pater eſt, unde alma liquentes
Humorum guttas Mater cum Terra recepit
Fœta parit nitidas fruges, arbuſtaque læta,
Et genus humanum
. . . .
. . . .
. . . .
Cedit item retro de Terra quod fuit ante,
In terras: & quod miſſum 'ſt ex Ætheris oris,
Id rurſum Cœli rellatum templa receptant:
Nec ſic interimit mors res, ut Materiai
Corpora conficiat, ſed cœtum diſſupat ollis.

But tho' thoſe two Poets agree in their Expreſſions, their Notions are quite different. The Return of the Soul to its Principle was a true Death, according to Lucretius, but not according to all other Heathens, and leſs ſtill according to Prudentius, who ſoon after (w) explains himſelf ſo poſitively that one cannot doubt of his believing the Immortality of the Soul.

I deſire I may be allowed to ſay, that Dr. Perkins's Judgment ſeems too ſevere to thoſe who have a regard to Equity and Charity. They think that this Poet was willing to be deprived of Happineſs in Heaven, and to ſuffer a moderate Puniſhment after this Life, becauſe he look'd upon himſelf as a Man unworthy of the ſupream Beatitude. Is ſuch an Humility impious? May not one call it a Sacrifice of himſelf to the Divine Juſtice?

(F) The Objections of the Marcionites concerning the Origin of Evil.] In order to ſhew that the Philoſophers are not the only Men who mention thoſe Objections, I ſhall ſet down a long Paſſage of a Learned Divine. "(y) The Manichees and the "Marcionites raiſed an Objection againſt the Orthodox mention'd by (z) Prudentius in its full "Strength, viz. That if the God who Governs the "World was not pleaſed with Vice he would pre"vent it, ſince he is not ignorant of the Corrupti"on of Men, and is able to prevent it. They pre"tended that 'tis one and the ſame thing, to do "Evil or to ſuffer it if one can hinder it. Pru"dentius anſwers, in the firſt place, that God is "not pleaſed with Vice, ſince he has appointed a "Remedy for it, and ſaves thoſe who abſtain from "it. But, replied thoſe Hereticks, a Man cannot "Sin againſt God's Will, ſince He is the Maſter of "his Heart, and enclines it as he thinks fit. Our "Poet, in order to reſolve this Difficulty, has only "recourſe to Free-Will, without which there can "be neither Vice nor Virtue. He very much en"larges upon it, and proves his Aſſertion by the "Example of our firſt Parents, of Loth and his "Wife, of Noemi's Daughters in Law, and of Bro"thers, one of whom, as we daily ſee, loves Vir"tue, and the other gives up himſelf to Vice. To "which he adds this general Maxim:

"Omnibus una ſubeſt natura; ſed exitus omnes
"Non unus peragit, placitorum ſegrege formâ.

"All Men are of the ſame Nature, but all of 'em "have not the ſame Fate, becauſe all of 'em have "not the ſame Will. It appears from what has "been ſaid above, that Prudentius believed that "Men are born Corrupt; but what he ſays here "ſhews, he did not believe that ſuch a Corruption "did neceſſarily determine them to Evil. He adds, "that God has appointed Rewards and Puniſh"ments, becauſe Men may be Good or Bad as they "pleaſe. If the Manichees had further objected "to him, that it had been better if there had been "no Free-Will, and no Happineſs beſtowed as a "Reward; and if Men had been neceſſarily Happy, "by being neceſſarily determin'd to the Love of "Virtue, than to make 'em ſuch a diſmal Preſent "as Liberty, whereby moſt of 'em become un"happy for ever? I ſay, if the Manichees had ob"jected ſuch a thing to him, perhaps he would "have made uſe of the Principle abovemention'd, "viz. that few People are damn'd. How do we "know but Prudentius came to have ſuch a Thought "by reaſon of that Objection, which might eaſily "come into his Mind?"

(G) Many Editions of his Works.] That of Aldus at Venice 1502, in 4. is not the firſt, as he pretended. That of Deventer went before it (e). Some ſay he put out two Editions, but there is ſome Reaſon to believe, that they ſay ſo without any Ground for it (f). M. du Pin (g) mentions the Antwerp Edition 1540 in 8. which contains the Notes of Antonius Nebriſſenſis, and Sichardus. I have an Edition of Antwerp in 8. with the Notes of thoſe two Authors, but it is of the Year 1546. The Epiſtle Dedicatory written by Sichardus, is dated from Baſil in March 1537. Geſner in his Bibliotheque (h) mentions an Edition of Baſil by Cratander 1527, with Sichardus's Scholia, and another Edition of Baſil by Henricus Petrus. Father Labbe (i) follow'd the Antwerp Edition of Plantin 1564, with Theodorus (k) Pulmannus's Notes and Corrections, and Victor Giſelinus's Commentary. The two Books againſt Symmachus were printed at Paris in 1614, with Grangæus's Notes: Mr. du Pin calls him wrong, Gangræus. He ſays the laſt Edition of Prudentius is that of Amſterdam 1667, with Heinſius's Notes and Corrections. He ſhould have ſaid Nicolas Heinſius, leſt the Work of the Son ſhould be aſcribed to the Father. I think he might have mention'd the Edition in uſum Delphini by Father Chamillard at Paris 1687. Moreri ſays there is an Amſterdam Edition of Prudentius 1670, with the Notes of Nicolas Heinſius, and the Author's Life: I have not been able yet to know whether it be true. I have only the Edition of the Year 1667, in 12, printed by Daniel Elzevier, without the Life of Prudentius: It (l) is in Sichardus's Edition. As for the Edition Variorum, publiſh'd by Weitzius, it was printed at Francfort or Hanaw, and not at Hannover, as M. du Pin ſays.

The Reader will not be diſpleaſed to find here Father Chamillard's Judgment about thoſe who have writ upon that Author. (m) Giſelinus ſectatus eſt tantum ea quæ omnium erant facillima & minime ſcitu neceſſaria, lapſus in multis etiam & hallucinatus. Nebriſſenſis hæret in Prudentio magis, ſed eſt brevior & ſingula delibare ſatis habet, quæ ad fabulam, hiſtoriam & penitiorem ſcriptoris cognitionem requiruntur, omittit. Quid quod Apotheoſim, Hamartigeniam, duos contra Symmachum libros qui ſunt præ cæteris tamen digniſſimi qui legantur non attigit . . . . *Heinſii va*riæ lectiones in Prudentium adſperſis interdum lectiſſimis notulis perquam eruditæ ſunt & accuratæ ut ab Heinſio profectas facile noris . . . . . Weitzius qui cum editas hactenus in Prudentium notas collegiſſet, addidit etiam ſuas, eaſque minime contemnendas, hoc uno cæteris ſuperior quod veterum autorum locos indicet, ac eos præcipue ſacræ ſcripturæ quos Prudentius operi ſuo intexuit. Mitto Jacobum Spiegelium qui commentariolum edidit in oden Prudentii inſcriptam omnis hora, ejus enim in illam notæ non ſolum ſunt propter nimiam prolixitatem moleſtæ, verum etiam minutis quibuſdam ac pene puerilibus nugis ab ipſa grammatica repetitis refertæ. Mitto etiam Adamum Siberum, Georgium Remum, Adamum Theodorum Siberum, Andream Wilkium: quorum alii verba ſex interdum aut ſeptem protulerunt, in hymnos tres aut quatuor totos, alii in unum duntaxat, ut merito ab interpretum Prudentii numero ſint expungendi. Aliter ſentiendum de Scholiis Iſonis quæ quamvis admodum bre-

via

---

† Prudent. in Symmach. lib. 2. v. 695. & ſeq.

(q) Le Clerc, Biblioth. Univerſelle tom. 12. pag. 155.

(r) See in the Article Amphiaraus what I have quoted out of Epicharmus.

(ſ) Lucret. l. 2. v. 990.

(w) And alſo in ſome other Books See Mr. Le Clerc, ubi ſupra.

(y) Bibliotheque Univerſelle tom. 12. pag. 182. & ſeq.

(z) Theſe are his words: Si non vult Deus eſſe malum, cur non vetat? inquit. Nil refert auctor fuerit factorque malorum. Anne opera in vitium ſceleris pulcherrima verti, Cùm poſſit prohibere, ſinat? quòd ſi velit omnes Innocuos agere Omnipotens, nec ſancta voluntas Degeneret, facto nec ſe manus inquinet ullo. Condidit ergo malum Dominus, quod ſpectat ab alto, Et patitur, fierique probat, tamquam ipſe crearit. Ipſe creavit enim, quod, cùm diſcludere poſſit, Non abolet, longoque ſinit graſſarier uſu. Prudent. in hamartig. v. 540. p. m. 217.

(e) Nicolas Heinſius in præfat. Prudentii.

(f) Ibid.

(g) Du Pin ubi ſupra pag. 5.

(h) Fol. 125.

(i) Labbe de ſcript. eccleſ. tom. 2. p. 252.

(k) He calls him Pulmanius Cranenburgius. Mr. du Pin calls him Pulman Graffenbourg. He has committed two Faults, for beſides that he ſhou'd have ſaid Cranenbourg, ('tis a ſmall Town in the Dutchy of Cleves, where Theodorus Pulmannus was born) he ſhould not have expreſs'd himſelf ſo as to make one think that it was the Author's Surname.

(l) Written by Aldus Manutius.

(m) Stephanus Chamillard è Societate Jeſu, præfat. ad Prudentium in uſum Delphini.

PSAMMITICHUS, King of Egypt, 640 Years before the Birth of CHRIST, was the Son of Necus whom Sabacus, King of Æthiopia, cauſed to be put to Death when he invaded Egypt. The Son would have had the ſame Fate, had he not made his eſcape into Syria. He was recall'd when Sabacus retir'd into his Country, and was one of the Twelve Great Lords who govern'd Egypt λ. Each of 'em had his Portion, but they acted in Concert, or rather like Partners, or Collegues, than like Neighbouring Princes ‡. Pſammitichus drew upon himſelf the Envy of all the reſt, either becauſe the μ Wealth he got by the Duties laid upon Merchandizes, enabl'd him to make Alliances with Foreigners, or becauſe they were afraid he wou'd be King of the whole Country, as it had been foretold by an (A) Oracle. Wherefore they confin'd him into Marſhy Places, where perhaps he had remain'd all his Life-time, had he not been inform'd that many Foreigners, who had made a Deſcent into Egypt, deſtroy'd all the flat Country. They were Ionians and Carians. Being told that they were Men (B) of Braſs, he conceiv'd great hopes by reaſon of an Oracle deliver'd to him. He went to ſee what it was, and having engag'd thoſe Foreigners to ſtay with him, he made himſelf Maſter of all Egypt by their means. He ſhewed himſelf very thankful, and * gave 'em ſome Lands near the Nile, below the Town of Bubaſtus. From that time he always had Foreigners in his Pay, and even † gave 'em the Precedency above the Soldiers of his own Nation in the War he made againſt Syria; at which the Egyptians were ſo incenſed, that Two hundred thouſand Men left him. They went (C) and ſettled in Æthiopia, and made a briſk Anſwer (D) to the Reaſons he alledg'd to perſuade 'em to return into their Country. He left nothing unattempted to make up that Loſs, and particularly applied himſelf to make Trade flouriſh: he was kind to Foreigners, and granted 'em all manner of Protection, putting a ſtop to the Barbarity exerciſed upon them in the foregoing Reigns. He made an Alliance with the Athenians, and ſome other Greek Nations, and would have his Children learn their Diſcipline ||. He cauſed alſo β many Children to be Inſtructed by the Carians and Ionians, whom he had placed on the Banks of the Nile; and it was the firſt time that Men ſpeaking a different Language from that of Egypt ſettled in that Country. By which means, as γ Herodotus ſays, the Curious who, in proceſs of Time, travell'd in Egypt, found there ſeveral People who underſtood them, and were their Interpreters. I have examin'd, in another δ Place, whether the Town of Naucratis was built under the Reign λ Herodot. l. 2. c. 152.

‡ Ibid. c. 147.

μ Diodor. Sicul. l. 1. c. 66.

* Herod. l. 2. c. 154.

† Diodor. Sicul. ib. c. 67.

|| Id. ib.

β Herodot. l. 2. c. 154.

γ Ibid.

δ In the Article Naucratis.

via ſint quidquid eſt tamen gravioris modi ſolvunt. He commends very much Fabricius's Notes upon five Hymns of Prudentius, and thoſe of Eraſmus upon the two laſt Hymns of the CATHEMERINON.

(A) As it had been foretold by an Oracle.] The Oracle told 'em, that he who ſhould make his Libations in a Braſs Cup ſhould have the whole Kingdom to himſelf. It happen'd on the laſt Day of a ſolemn Feſtival, the Twelve Kings being in the Temple of Vulcan ready to make their Libations, that the Prieſt who was to give 'em the Golden-Cup which they uſed for that Ceremony, miſtook the Number, and brought only eleven Cups. Pſammitichus being the laſt of all, and having no Cup, pull'd off his Cask, and us'd it for the Libations. The other Kings remembring the Oracle would have kill'd him, to prevent the Effect of it, had they not certainly known that he had no hand in the Prieſt's Miſtake (a). I don't know how to excuſe Athenæus; he (b) makes Herodotus to ſay, that the Egyptian Prieſts drank out of Braſs Cups, and that it does not appear that the Kings themſelves, when they ſacrificed in Publick, made uſe of a Silver Cup; ſo that Pſammitichus, who was the youngeſt King, made his Libations with a Braſs Cup, whilſt the others made 'em with Silver Cups. If you read the 151 Chapter of the ſecond Book of Herodotus, you'll ſee that Athenæus relates the Matter very unfaithfully. His Tranſlator is no leſs unfaithful in the tranſlation of his Words: here is the Greek, Ψαμμήτιχον δ᾽ ὖν νεώτερον ὄντα τῶν ἄλλων βασιλέων χαλκῇ φιάλῃ σπεῖσαι, τῶν ἄλλων ἀργυρέαις σπενδόντων. The Tranſlator renders it thus, Itaque Pſammetichum aliis regibus poſteriorem libaſſe argentea phiala, ſuperiores autem ænea.

(B) That they were Men of Braſs.] Pſammitichus being reduced to a low Condition by the Envy of the other Kings, conſulted an Oracle of Latona in the Town of Butis, which was accounted the beſt in all Egypt. He was anſwer'd that Revenge would come to him by the Sea, when Men of Braſs ſhould be ſeen. The Pirates who had Landed in Egypt were arm'd from Head to Foot: ſuch arm'd Men had never been ſeen in that Country; and therefore 'twas thought they were Men of Braſs, and Pſammitichus was informed of it. He began then to have a good Opinion of the Oracle, to which he had given (c) no Credit. 'Tis pity Herodotus, whoſe Relations are ſo charming, did not live in another Age, or was not ſenſible of the difference between a Hiſtory and a Piece of Poetry. In the latter, things muſt not be unfolded without a Miracle; the Reader muſt be ſtruck with Admiration at any rate: but Hiſtorical Events ought to be attended with Simplicity; and if a judicious Reader does not find it in an Hiſtorian, he may very well believe that the Author has inſerted wonderful Fictions in the room of it. I wonder Herodotus left any Gleanings after him. He knew nothing of the Oracle mention'd by Polyænus (d). The God Hamon adviſed King Tementhes to beware of Cocks. A Carian informed Pſammitichus that no Nation before the Carians had ſet Creſts upon their Helmets. This was ſufficient to make Pſammitichus raiſe a great many Carians.

(C) They went and ſettled in Æthiopia.] Strabo (e) ſays they were under the Dominion of a Queen, to whom the Iſle of Meroe did belong, and that they inhabited near that Iſland the Province of Teneſis, and an Iſland above that of Meroe. Pliny (f) quoting Ariſtocreon mentions the ſame Fugitives, and a Town call'd Eſar, which they inhabited for the ſpace of Three hundred Years. What he ſays of its Situation does not agree with Ptolemy nor with Strabo's Account.

(D) And made a briſk Anſwer to the Reaſons.] At firſt Pſammitichus ſent to them their Captains to perſuade 'em to return into their Country; and then he himſelf went to them: he exhorted them to conſider, that they forſook their Country, their Wives and Children. They unanimouſly anſwer'd him, ſtriking their Shields with their Lances, We ſhall never want a Country as long as we are able to handle theſe Arms, and we ſhall never want Wives and Children, as long as we can make uſe of theſe things. When they ſpoke the laſt Words they were ſo impudent as to ſhew their Nakedneſs. (g) Precibus ad ſententiæ mutationem eos ſolicitans, templa, patriam, uxores, liberos, recordari jubet. Tum univerſi haſtas clypeoſque pulſantes, contentâ voce reſpondent, quoad arma in poteſtate habeant facilè ſibi patriam reperturos; reductis quoque tunicis genitalia oſtentant, nunquam ſibi uxores aut liberos defore, quamdiu his ſint inſtructi, dictitantes.

(E) Reign'd

(a) Herod. l. 2. c. 151.

(b) Athen. lib. 6. pag. 231.

(c) Herod. ib. c. 152.

(d) Polyænus Stratag. l. 7. n. 3.

(e) Lib. 15. pag. 530. l. 17. pag. 541.

(f) Lib. 6. c. 30.

(g) Diodor. Sicul. lib. 1. c. 67. p. m. 59.

Reign of Psammitichus by some Inhabitants of Miletus. That Prince reign'd (E) 54 Years, and died ζ in the third Year of the 40 Olympiad, leaving η his Kingdom to his Son Necus. He was buried at Sais, where he was born, the chief Town of the lower Egypt, θ in the Temple of Minerva, where ι the Saitans buried all their Kings. He was the λ first King of Egypt who drank Wine: he order'd that the μ Springs of the Nile should be look'd for; and in order to know which was the most ancient People in the World, he caused two Children to be brought up, so as to hear no Body speak; and because when they came to be two Years old they spoke a Word which signified Bread, in the Phrygian Language, the Egyptians were obliged to give over their Pretension to the greatest Antiquity, and to yield, in that respect, to the Phrygians ν. No Siege did ever last a longer time than that which Psammitichus laid to the Town of Azotus ξ, for it held out 29 Years. The taking of that Town was not so glorious to him, as the Dexterity wherewith he stopt a Torrent that was like to overflow his Kingdom. The Scythians having defeated the Medes ruled in Asia, and were marching towards Egypt. Psammitichus met 'em in Palestine, and by his Presents and Entreaties persuaded them to go back; and it was then that some of 'em plunder'd the Temple of Venus Urania at Ascalon ο. Moreri and the Continuators of his Dictionary made but little Account of that King, since instead of inserting in his Article such things as belong to him, which, as we have seen, are neither few nor common, they have only fill'd it with things that concern his Successors.

PTOLEMY, King of Egypt, the Eleventh of that Name, was surnamed Auletes, by reason of his great Inclination to play on the Flute. He succeeded his σ Father towards the beginning ‡ of the 175 Olympiad, and in the Year of Rome 673. He laid heavy Taxes upon Egypt, in order to pay the vast Sums he wanted, to get and preserve the Friendship of the Roman People; which made him odious: and besides being despised by his Subjects, by reason of his suffering the Isle of Cyprus to be subdued by the Romans, he was expell'd from the Kingdom. He went to Rome, and demanded, for a long time, that the Publick would Protect him, and enable him to recover his Dominions. He met with many Oppositions in his Negotiation, and at last having no hopes he left Rome, and went to Ephesus, where he obtain'd some Letters, whereby Gabinius was order'd to restore him to his Kingdom, wherein he happily succeeded *. I have said, in another † Place what became of Berenice the eldest Daughter of that King; and here I shall observe, that Arsinoe (Z) his younger Daughter reign'd for some time: but, properly speaking, 'twas the famous Cleopatra, his other Daughter, who succeeded him. If any one desires a more particular Account of the Life of that King, he may read his History publish'd at Paris in 1698, by M. Baudelot de Dairval.

PUCCIUS (Francis) born at Florence of an Illustrious Family, forsook the Church of Rome when he came to examine the Disputes about Religion, which arose in France in Calvin's Time: He was then at Lyons. He went into England and studied Divinity at Oxford, and then at London: afterwards he removed into Swisserland, where he had a Dispute with Socinus about the State of the First Man. One would infer from thence, that he was accounted an Orthodox Man by the Protestants; but it was not so: the Magistrates of Basil expell'd him for his Opinions. He return'd to London, where he was Imprison'd on account of his Doctrine. Being set at liberty he removed into the Netherlands, and challeng'd Socinus to a Verbal Dispute. They disputed several times in Poland in the Presence of the Church of Cracow, but could not agree. Whereupon Puccius breaking with the Sectaries of that Country, followed some Persons who (A) studied Magick, and went with them to Prague, where he return'd into the (E) Reign'd 54 Years.] Herodotus (a) says so: Eusebius makes him Reign only 44 Years, and Moreri 58 Years.

Roman

(Z) Arsinoe his younger Daughter reign'd for some time.] Here I perform the Promise I made (b) to supply Moreri's Brevity. I say then that ARSINOE (c) stole away from the Palace, whilst the necessary Preparations were making to attack Julius Cæsar, who had the young King in his Power. She went to the Egyptian Army, and commanded jointly with Achillas; and a Quarrel quickly arising between her and Achillas, each of 'em being willing to have the whole Command, she had him kill'd by the Eunuch Ganymede (d). But Cæsar having set the young Prince at liberty, Arsinoe was oblig'd to yield to her Brother. After the Victory of Cæsar and the Death of young Ptolemy, Cæsar, (e) for the Security of Cleopatra, order'd that Arsinoe should leave Egypt. Appian (f) informs us, that Megabyzus a Priest of Diana received her into his House as a Queen; and he was like to be punish'd with Death upon that Account, when Mark Antony, out of Complaisance to Cleopatra, caused Arsinoe to be kill'd at Miletus. Cleopatra released him at the Request of the Ephesians.

(A) Who studied Magick.] The Author I have quoted uses these Words: (g) In comitatum se dedit aliquorum magis studiosorum quibuscum Pragam pervenit. 'Tis best to consult Socinus, who speaks of it more at large (h). He says that Puccius being condemn'd by the Arbitrators of the Dispute he had with him at Cracow, would not confess that he had been worsted; but no Body would hear him: the Synod of the Unitarians did not vouchsafe to read his new Writing. Socinus adds, that he receiv'd from him an Italian Book concerning (i) the Seal set to the Scripture. Puccius said, that every thing was Incomprehensible in that Divine Book, and that the only way was to wait for the coming of the Two Men mention'd in the eleventh Chapter of St. John's Revelation; that they would explain all the Mysteries of the Bible, and that no Disputation was to be made use of before their coming to compose Differences about Matters of Religion. He believ'd those two Men would quickly appear, because he reckon'd the 1260 Days of the Reign of the Beast for so many Years, and because, according to his Computation, that Reign began with the Council of Nice. He expected (k) a considerable Employment under the Ministry or Mission of those Two Men; and whilst he flatter'd himself with those Hopes, he grew acquainted with two Englishmen in the Retinue of the Palatin Laski, who was returning from an

ζ Calvisius, Helvicus, &c.

η Herod. l.2.c.158.

θ Strabo l.17.p.551.

ι Herod. l.2.c.169.

λ Plutar. de Isid. pag. 353.

μ Athen. l.1.p.345.

ν Herod. l.2.c.2.

ξ Ibid. c.157.

ο Id. l.1.c.105.

σ His Name was Ptolemy Lathurus.

‡ See Calvisius ad hunc annum.

* See the Article Berenice.

† Ibid.

(a) Herod. l.2.c.157.

(b) In the Article Arsinoe.

(c) Cæsar de Bello civili l.3. sub fin. Lucanus l.10. sub fin.

(d) Hirtius de Bello Alexandr. circa init. p.m. 378.

(e) Ibid. p.m. 395.

(f) Appian. de bell. civil. lib. 5.

(g) Hoornbeek, Apparat. ad controvers. Socinianas pag. 52.

Roman * Communion. This doth not prevent faying, that he was (B) burnt at Rome. He was Mafter of no Science, (C) and gave himfelf up to Fanaticifm. But the Principal Doctrine that he was fond of, was that good People (D) fhould be fav'd, even tho' they were Pagans. Mr. (E) Baillet fpeaks of him.

PUTEANUS (Erycius) Author of a (A) vaft Number of Books, was born at Venlo in Guelderland the 4th of November, 1574. He ftudy'd firft at Dort, from whence he went to Cologne to learn Rhetorick, and to go thro' a Courfe of Philofophy in the College of the Jefuits: After which he was a Student of the Law at Louvain. He took his Batchelor's Degree in June 1597, and profited much by the Lectures of Juftus Lipfius, who conceiv'd a great Efteem and particular Friendfhip for him. He went into Italy in the Year 1597, and ftaid an Embaffy into England. One of them was a Phyfician, the other had been a Magician, and they were both Catholicks; but they promis'd a fpeedy and general Reformation, which God would make in Chriftendom by their Means. They boafted of a familiar Converfe with the Angels. The Phyfician neither faw nor heard any thing, but wrote down punctually what his Companion faid that he faw and heard. Socinus, and feveral others, advis'd Puccius not to follow thofe two Perfons; but they could not diffuade him. He went to Prague with them, and reunited himfelf to the Romifh Church, on which Occafion he wrote a long Letter to Socinus, wherein he affured him, That an Angel, who us'd to appear to one of thofe Gentlemen, apply'd himfelf directly to him, and pufh'd him on to abjure his Errors. (a) Statim autem fere ut Pragam pervenit, factus eft Papifta, & miniftros pontificios adiens, fua ab Ecclefia Romana olim defectionis veniam, convenienti fatisfactione exhibita, impetravit. Ac mox hue ad amicos & præfertim ad me, ad quem hac de re bene longas literas dedit, de fuo, ut ipfe loquitur, ad Catholicæ Sanctæque Dei Ecclefiæ gremium reditu diligenter fcripfit, afferens, fe verbis unius ex illis Dei Angelis, qui fociis illis fuis refponfa dare folent, ad fe nominatim loquentis, monitum atque impulfum id feciffe, diuturnumque errorem fuum tandem agnoviffe. Socinus's Letter, in which thefe Words are found, was written in the Year 1586, not long after Puccius was return'd to Popery. As for what remains, he was a Merchant at Lyons when he began firft to relifh the Proteftant Doctrines: His Nobility admitted of that Profeffion without any Difgrace, according to the Principles of the Italians. I fay, his Nobility, for 'tis affirm'd that he was of the Family of the Pucci, which has afforded three Cardinals. (b) Seias eum ante plures annos, cum Lugduni, quamvis ex nobili admodum familia, quæ etiam tres Cardinales habuit natus, ut patriæ ipfius adeoque totius noftræ Etruriæ mos fert, mercaturam exerceret, exorientibus illis de religione in Gallia diffidiis, quæ necdum fopita funt, ftatuit, mercatura relicta, fe totum ftudio Sacrarum Literarum tradere, ut quid fentiendum in noftra religione effet, dilucide cognofcere poffet.

(B) That he was burnt at Rome.] 'Tis faid (c) the Archbifhop of Saltzburg caus'd him to be feiz'd and fent to Rome. This Man might have been fupported by the Inquifitors, becaufe he furnifh'd them with a Pretence to declaim againft the Principles of the Proteftants. Puccius returning into the Bofom of the Catholick Church, may the Controverfifts fay, after he had endeavour'd to fix among thofe who were feparated from it, in France, Switzerland, England and Poland, is a convincing Proof, That when any one has abandon'd the Principle of Authority, and put himfelf on that of Examination, he can find no Ground to rely on any where; he skips from one Party to another, and not being able to find any fure footing, he is oblig'd, like Noah's Dove, to return to the Ark again. This is a Topick which two (d) Modern Authors have lately infifted upon (†), when they return'd into the Roman Communion; but 'tis only a meer Blaze, for the way of Authority neceffarily leads every particular Man to be a Mahometan in Turky, a Heathen in China, and always of the National Religion.

(C) He was Mafter of no Science, and gave himfelf up to Fanaticifm.] This is the Character that Voetius gives of him. (e) Fr. Puccius natione Italus Filidinus inftar cothurni omnium aut nullius religionis, nullus eruditionis literariæ, philofophiæ, fcripturariæ, molitus eft libellum Goudæ in Hollandia anno 1592. editum & Clementi VIII. dedicatum, quo afferit univerfalem reftitutionem, & fidem naturalem in Deum, per quam omnes falvari poffint. Fanatico illi errori (jactat enim revelationes rat. 120. pag. 94.) mox publica fcripta oppofuerunt, ex Reformatis Francifcus Junius, ex Lutheranis Lucas Ofiander, ex Pontificiis Nicolaus Serrarius. De hominis iftius univerfali ἀπαιδευσίᾳ ex fcriptis, de ingenio & moribus ex epiftolis Socini judicare poteris Epift. 5. quæ eft ad Matth. Radecum Secret. Gedanenf. Puccius prior Socinum fatis farcaftice perftrinxerat in collatione de Mortalitate, quæ poftea typis edita fuit in 4.

(D) That good People fhould be fav'd.] Tobias Pfannerus attributes this Opinion to him, on the Credit of two Perfons whom he quotes. (g) Francifcus Puccius Filidinus, Romæ quidem poftea nefcio qua de caufa combuftus, ignorantiam & incredulitatem Evangelii, vel defectum Baptifmi ad falutem nulli obeffe (ftatuit) modo ftudeat vitæ inculpatæ, quoad externos mores, nec præfracte quicquam neget: ineffe omnibus naturaliter hanc facultatem, ut poffint & velint falvi fieri, etiam abfque ferutinio quæftionum Theologicarum; ut Ofiander (1), & poft hunc Joh. Ludovicus Hartmannus (2), teftantur.

(E) Mr. Baillet fpeaks of him.] He tells us, that Luke Ofiander publifh'd a Book in the Year 1593, againft one Francis Puccius, and that it may be the fame Book which is Entituled, Anti-Puccius. He adds thefe Words: " (h) Francis Puccius feems to me to be the Author of " Puccianifm; that is to fay, of a new Sect which lafted " but a little while, and remains bury'd under the Stones " which were caft at it by the Calvinifts, Lutherans, " and Catholicks. Going a little farther back, I find " that this Puccius may be the fame with Francefco " Pucci of Florence, who retir'd to Bafil, and had fome " Difpute with the Arch-Heretick Socinus, in the Year " 1577, concerning the State of the firft Man before " his Fall, and who maintain'd the Immortality of all " Creatures, and confequently of Man by the Creation. " But I won't fay that this Florentine (i), is the fame " with Francis Puccius Filidinus, of whom Mention is " made in the firft Clafs of the Index of Authors, and " Books, condemn'd under the Name of the Council of Trent; wherein 'tis remark'd, that this Man " falfely took on him the Name of Pucci." Note, that there is an Anti-Puccius quoted, which was writ by Fauftus Socinus; but that is not the Title of the Book, 'tis only quoted fo for Brevity's fake. That Work confifts of four Parts; it contains, 1. A Difcourfe of Puccius concerning the Immortality of all Creatures before Sin. There are ten Thefes in it, each of which contains one of the ten Arguments, on which he grounded his Paradox. 2. Socinus's Anfwer to thofe Thefes. 3. The Rejoinder of Puccius to the Anfwer. 4. The Reply (k) of Socinus; 'tis very long and elaborate. All this is under the Title De ftatu primi hominis ante lapfum difputatio, in the fecond Volume of the Bibliotheca Fratrum Polonorum.

(A) Author of a vaft Number of Books.] See the Catalogue of them in Valerius Andreas's Bibliotheque, and in the Theatre of Ghilini; but 'tis more compleat in Mr. (l) Witte. They moft of them fmall Tracts, and never any Man feem'd more perfuaded of the Truth of the Maxim of a Greek Poet. (m) That a great Volume is a great Evil. 'Tis eafie to multiply the Number of ones Books, if we will publifh all that we write. Our Puteanus was guilty of this Fault, he printed even the Collection (n) of the Teftimonies, which he gave to his Scholars. Mr. Colomies has publifh'd a thing which cannot be better plac'd than here. " (o) Dr. Voffius " told me, That Moret, a famous Printer at Antwerp, " reproaching Erycius Puteanus, Lipfius's Succeffor, that he " writ only fmall Books, the latter anfwer'd him, That " Plutarch, and feveral others among the Ancients, did fo " as well as he. Moret immediately reply'd, Do you " believe that your Books, which I can't fell, are as " good as Plutarch's? This made Puteanus angry, and " immediately he went out of Moret's Shop." See Mr. Baillet in the firft Tome of the Judgments of the Learned, p. 447. Read alfo thefe Words of the fecond Tome. (p) 'Tis true that this Puteanus pafs'd for a Tattler, and a great Writer of little Books, but he was otherwife a very learned Man.

* Idem [illegible] pag. 11.

(a) Socin. Ibid.

(b) Ibid. p. 379.

(c) Ab Archiepifcopo Salifburgenti captus tandem & Romam miffus, in rogo periit. Micrælius, Syntagm. Hift. Eccle. pag. 860.

(d) Mr. Pa- n & M. de Ferfe.

(†) I write this in 1696.

(e) Gisb. Voetius Difputat. Theolog. tom. 2. p. 234, 235.

(g) Tob. Pfannerus, Syft. Theolog. Gentilis p. 495.

(1) Ofiand. Cent. XVI. lib. II. cap. 46. cit. ib.

(2) J. L. Hartman. Hift. Conc. Tom. IV. Period. 6. Peric. 16. Exerc. 67. (pag. 701.)

(h) In the firft Tome of the Anti, n. 33. p. 233. See alfo p. 371.

(i) 'Tis certain that he is the fame.

(k) intitl'd ad Defenf. Fr. Pucci Refponfio.

(l) Witte, Memoriæ Philofophorum p. 567, & feq.

(m) See Mr. le Fevre in the Lives of the Greek Poets, p. 141, 142. He attributes this Thought to the Poet Callimachus. Here are the Words of Callimachus, as they are related by Athenæus, in the Beginning of the third Book. Τὸ μέγα βιβλίον ἴσον ἔλεγεν εἶναι τῷ μεγάλῳ κακῷ. Magnum librum parem effe dicebat magno malo.

(n) See the little Book call'd Erycii Puteani Martyremata Academica five doctrinæ & probitatis teftimonia. It was printed at Leyden, 1618.

(o) Colomies Opufcules, p. 124, 125. Utrecht Edition, 1669.

(p) P. 272.

ſtaid ſome time with Juan Fernando de Velaſco, Governor of the Milaneſe; after that he went to Padua, and lodg'd at the famous † Pinelli. They took him from thence in 1601, to make him Profeſſor of Eloquence at Milan. He gain'd a great deal of Reputation in that Employ, inſomuch that he was honour'd with the Office of Hiſtoriographer to his Catholick Majeſty; and in 1603 the City of Rome admitted him and his Poſterity into the Number of their Freemen and Patricians. He took his Degree of Doctor of Law at Milan, more ritùque majorum §. He took a Wife alſo there in the Year *, 1604, and had a great many Children. He prais'd (B) her, and them, very much in his Letters. He remov'd to Louvain in 1606, to ſucceed to the Chair of the Profeſſorſhip, which Juſtus Lipſius had fill'd with ſo much Glory. He was very much conſidered in the Low-Countries, and had the Titles of Hiſtoriographer to the King of Spain, and Counſellor to the Arch-duke Albert. He was alſo Governor of the Caſtle of Louvain *. He (C) dy'd in 1646, and was bury'd in a Chappel where none had been bury'd before him: 'Twas that of St. Charles Borromeo, in the Church of St. Peter at Louvain ‡. He was a Man of Merit and Learning, and had a great (D) Commerce of Letters. He affected to ſcatter in his Works what we call Flaſhes of Wit; this ſucceeded ſometimes, but on many Occaſions his Witticiſms were not natural, but a meer playing upon Words. He publiſh'd a Book intitl'd (E) Statera Belli & Pacis, which made a great † Moreri falſely ſuppoſes that Pinelli liv'd at Milan.

§ That is to ſay, according to the ancient Ceremonies.

* [illegible] call'd Mary Magdalen Catherine de la Tour, Taverna.

* Taken from Valerius Andreas Bibl. Belgic. p. 206, 207.

‡ Vita Erycii Puteani in [illegible] Epiſt. Poſthum.

(B) He prais'd his Wife and Children very much.] There is nothing more agreeable than a good Wife, ſays he in a Letter, to a Friend. I ſpeak by Experience, mine always appears to me Young and Fair; for altho' ſhe has had ſeveral Children, ſhe keeps the Charms of her Face. (a) Illa mihi ſemper juvencula, ſemper pulchra; quia & ætatis florem, & formæ decus, toties jam puerpera ſervat. Imo illa mea bona eſt, & qualem ex Apiculâ naſci Simonides voluit. Opportunè hic igitur illud Theognidis uſurpem:

Οὐδὲν Κύρν' ἀγαθῆς γλυκερώτερόν ἐστι γυναικός.
Μάρτυς ἐγώ, σὺ δ' ἐμοὶ γίγνου ἀληθοσύνης.

Vin' & Latinè dicam?

Nil uxore bona, Cyrne, eſt jucundius: hujus
Cum tibi ſim teſtis, tu mihi teſtis eris.

This is what he wrote in 1626. This would not have ſatisfy'd the Deſire of a Roman Poet. Puteanus's Wife appear'd ſtill Young and Handſome, becauſe ſhe was ſo ſtill: the Buſineſs is to appear ſo, when one is no more ſo. The Poet's Wiſh was thus:

Candida (b) perpetuo reſide, Concordia, lecto, Tamque pari ſemper ſit Venus æqua jugo.
Diligat illa ſenem quondam: ſed & ipſa marito,
Tunc quoque cum fuerit, non videatur anus.

He writes in another (c) Letter, in 1617, that ſhe had brought him four Sons and four Daughters, and that he had loſt three Boys. He ſeems ſatisfy'd with his having Daughters (d), and gives a Reaſon for it. He had Male Children after that. His Son Fauſtus (e) bore Arms, which did not laſt long; for he became a Bare-footed Carmelite (f) at the end of two Years, that he might imitate his Brother John Stephen, who had taken the Habit of the Jeſuits. Puteanus ſpeaks alſo of two other Sons, of which one called Juſtus, was Secretary to the Arch-biſhop of Compſa, Apoſtolical Nuncio; the other, nam'd Maximilian, ſtudy'd at home (g).

(C) He dy'd in the Year 1646.] Mr. Bullart doth not ſuppoſe this, for (h) he ſays that Puteanus, born on the fourth of November, 1574. Dy'd, aged ſeventy Years, after he had been Profeſſor of Hiſtory at Louvain near forty Years. This is to ſay downright, that he dy'd in 1644. Lorenzo Craſſo (i) is much in the wrong in placing his Death in 1624; he is miſtaken for want of giving ſufficient Attention to theſe Words of Ghilini; (k) L'anno M. DC. XXIV. fù il Puteani da malattia oppreſſo, percio ſcriſſe queſto Epitaffio da metterſi ſopra la ſua ſepoltura. 'Tis plain that this only ſignifies, that he was very ill then. The Sieur Witt (l) places Puteanus's Death in the Year 1646, and the ſeventy firſt of his Life; he ſhould have ſaid the ſeventy ſecond. He places it in the ſame Year, 1646, in the (m) Abridgment which he gives us of this Profeſſor's Life. Valerius Andreas is the Author of that Abridgment, and therefore we may depend upon it.

Since the firſt Edition of this Dictionary, I have conſulted the Life of Puteanus prefix'd to his Poſthumous Letters, publiſh'd by his Son-in-Law, and I find there that he dy'd the ſeventeenth of September, 1646, in the Caſtle of Louvain.

(D) And of a great Commerce of Letters.] This appears by the Letters which he has publiſh'd, and yet more by this Paſſage of Mr. Bullart. (n) To conclude, 'twas this Learning that made him conſiderable in the chief Courts of Europe, and which oblig'd almoſt all Princes, Learned Men, Ambaſſadors of Kings, and Generals of Armies, to give him ſome Tokens of their Friendſhip and Eſteem by their Letters, of which there were found above ſixteen thouſand in his Study, put in Order.

This Diviſion of his (o) Works into five Tomes ſhews us that the ſecond Tome comprehends his Letters, that is to ſay, Epiſtolarum Atticarum apparatus, nimirum promiſſi. This comprehends three hundred Letters. Miſſus ſecundus, three hundred alſo. Bellaria, as many. Deliciæ adoptivæ, one hundred. Epiſtolarum Atticarum Centuria ſingularis & nova. Epiſtolarum Atticarum apparatus novus, this contains four hundred Letters Apparatus Poſthumus in quattuor Centurias diſtributus. A Collection of Letters which he writ to Mr. de Zuylichem, and Daniel Heinſius, publiſh'd at Leyden by Boxhornius in the Year 1647. Add to them the fifth, ſixth and ſeventh Centuries of Poſthumous Letters, printed at Louvain, 1662, by the Care of Xiſtus Antonius Milſer (p) his Son in Law, who had alſo printed, in the ſame Place and Year, the four preceding Centuries. See Mr. de Vigneul Marville (†).

(E) A Book call'd Statera Belli & Pacis, which, &c.] This Book was publiſh'd during the Negotiation of a Treaty between his Catholick Majeſty and the United Provinces in 1633. The Author adviſ'd to Peace, and ſhew'd that the Continuation of the War would be very prejudicial to the Spaniſh Netherlands. He ſpoke very clearly of the Advantages which the Enemies had already gain'd, and of the Victories which they might expect. Voſſius, his good Friend, and the moſt Pacifick Man in the World; I mean, the fartheſt from certain Authors, who to animate the People to a War, ſet before them a thouſand artificial Deſcriptions of their Forces, and of the Enemies Weakneſs, was troubled that Puteanus ſhould bring himſelf into trouble by publiſhing a Work of a quite contrary Nature. (q) His diebus haud lætus accepi, optimum, & diſertiſſimum virum Erycium Puteanum, in periculum, aut certè moleſtias aliquas incidiſſe. Scripſit Stateram Belli, & Pacis, quo nonnullis de partium ſuarum impotentia prelatis, complures offendit. Noſti factum Hiſpanorum, & Principum aures, quorum nec hi, neque illi veritatem accipere ſuſtinent. Itaque niſi noſſem multos ei in aula Bruxellenſi, quo vocatus eſt, amicos eſſe; niſi quoque ingenium, & eruditionem illius æſtimari ſcirem, ſiniſtri aliquid vererer. Nunc optima non omnino deſpero. Utinam non aliud audire cogatur, quam quod olim in ſimili ferè negotio, a Phalaride ajunt fuiſſe dictum (‡) Simonidi. Μέλλει σοι Μ [illegible]. He communicated his Uneaſineſs to a Phyſician of Dort, who anſwer'd him, that Puteanus had acted imprudently, and that ſuch a Fault would not be pardon'd in Holland. (r) De Cl. Puteano quod ſcribis, valde me percuſſit, quamvis tale quid metuerem, cùm legiſſem ſtateram, doctè magis quam prudenter ſcriptam. Accepi ab eo literas, ſtatera jam edita, quam tamen præter morem ſuum non miſit. Eam Catzius Hagæ (ubi impreſſam (ſ) quoque noſti, nec hoc noſtro melius) ex conventu ordinum, ubi cum plauſu excepta, attulit, & mihi legendum tradidit. Deus bone! quàm bonus ille Belga, tam malus Politicus. Non hic ferremus, qui talia de nobis, quæ ille de Rege, de importuna Archid. legatione, & ſimilia. Ac niſi amici omnia pro illo, eſt quod metuamus vicem optimi, & elegantiſſimi ingenii. He adds, That he was ſummon'd to Bruſſels, and that he continu'd under Examination; that the Preſident Roſe was his Enemy, but that ſome other conſiderable People protected him, and that it was hop'd that their Protection would ſave him. Without doubt every body will be glad to ſee the Names of thoſe Protectors. 'Tis a Part of the Hiſtory of Puteanus.

Ob

(a) Eryc. Puteanus. Epiſtolar. ſelectarum apparatus. Epiſt. 10. Centuriæ 4. p. m. 10.

(b) Martial. Epigr. 13. lib. 4.

(c) 'Tis the 65th of the firſt Century. p. 26.

(d) Ibid. p. 27, 28.

(e) See the 28th Letter of the 4th Century. 'Twas writ in the Year 1626.

(f) See the 55th Letter of the ſame Century. 'Twas writ in 1628.

(g) See the ſame Letter.

(h) Bullart, as below.

(i) Lor. Craſſo, Iſtoria de Poeti Greci, p. 193.

(k) Ghilini, Teatro d'huomini letterati, Vol. 2. p. 73.

(l) In Diario Biographico.

(m) In Memoriis Philoſoph. p. 565. Konig quotes this Book, and yet places it in 1644.

(n) Bullart Academie des Scienc. Tom. 2. p. 220.

(o) Before his poſthumous Letters printed at Louvain, 1662.

(p) He was Knight of the Order of Chriſt, and Governor of the Caſtle of Louvain.

(†) In the 2d Tome of his Miſcellanies, p. 368. Rotterdam Edition.

(q) Voſſii Epiſt. 199. p. m. 218. This Letter is dated in July 1633.

(‡) It ſhould be Steſichoro.

(r) Joh. Beverwyck. Epiſt. ad Voſſium. 'Tis [illegible] p. m. 111, 112. 'Tis dated the 8th of July 1633.

(ſ) This was not the firſt Edition; for 'twas printed firſt in the Spaniſh Netherlands in 4to.

great Noiſe, and 'twas thought 'twould ruin him. Nevertheleſs, 'tis a Work which evidences that he underſtood the true Intereſts of his Catholick Majeſty better than thoſe who medled only with Affairs of State. They falſely attributed to him a Satyr againſt (F) King James. 'Tis affirm'd that he did very great Service to the King of Poland *. Thoſe who Ob amicos quos plurimos habet, nihil illi periculi fore putabat. Sibi addictiſſimum habet, Varambonum Archiepiſcopum Cæſarienſem Infanti à ſacris, Chiffletium Medicum, qui plurimùm apud Ser. Inf. poſſunt, & alios, ſed infeſtum Roſam Præſidem Hiſpanis obnoxium, & pauci ut dicitur, adverſum, qui etiam cauſa eſſe putatur, cur decem jam menſibus, nulla ex Hiſp. litera ad me venerit. Infans quoque Cardinalis, qui jam in Burgundia, non minùs quàm Eugenia, illi benè volunt. Deum rogo, & benè faciant, neque ob [illegible] hanc gravius animadvertant in virum candoris melle penitus imbutum. The Buſineſs terminated according to the Deſires of this Phyſician. I muſt not forget to tell you that an anonymous Author writ againſt this Work of Puteanus: That Anſwer was entitul'd (a) Anti-Puteanus, ſive Politico-Catholicus ſtateram Puteani induciis expendentis alia ſtatera expendens. I have a little Book (b) which contains Puteanus's Statera, and the anonymous Anſwer, with two Letters that contain the Judgment of an Hollander on that Anſwer. The Author of theſe Letters ſuppoſes that the anonymous Author was a (c) Church-man, and even a Monk (d), and laughs at him for ſaying, That (e) Courage and Prudence were only to be found in the Catholick Church; that the Revenues of Holland were drain'd; that its People groan'd under the heavy Taxes; that its Troops were Cowardly; that its Victories had been rather prejudicial than advantageous; that the King of Spain could well enough ſpare thoſe Towns he had loſt; that the Dutch got their Victories by Treachery, and that they had given much more for them than they were worth. To morrow, ſays his Critick, he'll tell us that 'tis advantageous for Spain, to have our Troops encamp in the Heart of Brabant, for the Fields will become more fruitful by the Dung our Horſes will leave behind. (f) Nec minus ridiculus eſt, cum tributis & exactionibus ſupra quam fas eſt Batavos premi queritur, qui iſtos cenſus ſe Dominis ſuis debere, & felicitatis ſuæ ac fortunarum non niſi ſpicilegium eſſe credunt .... Verum enimvero, quam lepide fatuus eſt hic ſcriptor, cum milites Federatorum timidos lepores vocat, cum Batavos pugnam ſemper declinare ſcribit: victorias nobis magis nocuiſſe, quam profuiſſe. Illane ſcribere non veretur poſt cladem Turnhautanam & Flandricam? An & tunc Henrici Bergii culpa terga vertit Hiſpanus? Et quando quæſo Regi Hiſpaniarum ac ſuis perſuadebit, Sylvam Ducis, Veſaliam, Venloam, Ruræmundam, Trajectum ad Moſam, expugnata ad Scaldim & alibi caſtella, victam Bercam nobis nocere? Regem vero ſuo commodo iis carere? quia non ſine magnis impenſis ea vicimus. Dicet propediem, utile eſſe Brabantis, exercitus noſtros in ipſo pene Brabantiæ meditullio ſtare & in hoſtico ali, ut ab equorum multitudine ſtercorati agri uberiorem ſegetem ferant. (g) The Author of that Anſwer has been known a long time to be Barlæus. I have alſo another little (h) Book, which beſides the Statera Belli & Pacis, and the Anti-Puteanus, contains a Politick Diſſertation of Puteanus De induciis Belgicis, a Letter of Lipſius, with Notes (i) on that Letter, and ſome other little Treatiſes. Lipſius's Letter was writ from Louvain the third of January, 1595, to a great Lord, who ask'd him, Bellumne an potius induciæ expediant Regi Hiſpaniarum cum Gallo, Anglo, Batavo? 'Tis full of Malice againſt Holland, and of Maxims of refin'd Politicks (k). The Author of the Notes refutes them ſolidly, and calls himſelf Juſtinus Bonafidius Mont. He treats Lipſius very hardly. See the Complaints the (l) Jeſuit Petra Sancta made of him.

The Event ſhew'd that Puteanus was in the right; for if Spain had concluded a Peace, or a Truce, with the United Provinces, in 1633, it would have avoided a great many Uneaſineſſes and Loſſes, and would have been perhaps in a more flouriſhing Condition at this time. I don't pretend to excuſe this Profeſſor, he had better have kept within his own Sphere; 'tis imprudent to publiſh all ſorts of Truths; but we muſt not imagine that his Book brought any thing new to Holland, they knew well enough the ill Condition of the Spaniſh Low-Countries. 'Tis the firſt thing that the Politicians inform themſelves of, in Relation to their Enemies; and the People generally believe more than is true.

However that be, this Profeſſor did not ſufficiently conſider the Words of Salluſt, which he put at the Beginning of his Book, and which ſhew'd him ſo plainly the Reaſons why 'tis dangerous to adviſe Princes. They have other People enough to conſult; the Future is unknown to the wiſeſt Heads; and bad Advice is very often follow'd with good Succeſs; ſo true is it, that Fortune diſpoſes of all things according to her Fancy. 'Tis Salluſt who ſpeaks thus: Scio ego, ſays (m) he, quam difficile atque aſperum factu ſit, conſilium dare regi, aut imperatori; poſtremo cuiquam mortali, cujus opes in excelſo ſunt: quippe cum & illis conſultorum copiæ adſint; neque de futuro quiſquam ſatis callidus, ſatiſque prudens ſit. Quinetiam ſæpe prava magis, quam bona conſilia proſpere eveniunt: quia pleraſque res fortuna ex lubidine ſua agitat. Princes repent a thouſand times of having follow'd the Advice of good Heads; becauſe things often fall out, which make them judge, that if they had taken another Courſe, they would have done ſome very notable thing. Thoſe they have to do with commit Faults that one would not think them capable of. A good Counſellor does not rely upon thoſe Faults, and therefore he diſſuades from thoſe Enterprizes which a Fool or a raſh Fellow propoſe; but it falls out that thoſe unforeſeen Faults, or ſome unexpected Accidents, would have render'd the Enterprize infallibly ſucceſsful, if they had engag'd in it. The ſureſt way is not to be forward in giving Advice about the publick Affairs, of which Salluſt knew the Reaſons very well.

(F) A Satyr againſt King James.] The Title is Iſaaci Caſauboni Corona Regia, id eſt, Panegyrici cujuſdam verè aurei, quem Jacobo I. Magnæ Britanniæ, &c. Regi, fidei defenſori delinearat, fragmenta ab Euphormione inter ſchedas τυ μακαριτυ inventa, collecta, & in lucem edita 1615. pro officina regia Jo. Bill Londini. Mr. Almeloveen lent me the Book (n) in 1693. 'Twas then very ſcarce, but Mr. Thomaſius has printed it ſince in his Hiſtoria Sapientiæ & ſtultitiæ Humanæ. Nothing can be more Satyrical; the worſt of Princes was never worſe treated by an ill-natur'd Writer, than the good King James was by the fierce Scioppius; for we muſt not doubt that Scioppius was the Author of that bloody Piece. I ſhall quote one who tells us that Puteanus publickly denied that he was the Author of it. (o) Non potuit ſatyricorum manus effugere Jacobus Britanniæ Rex, utut doctiſſimus & laudatiſſimus Princeps: cui ſub ſpecie Panegyrici Poſtumi à Caſaubono ſcripti, cujus quaſi fragmenta inter ſchedas ejus reperta, per inſignem nequitiam, continuo myc̄teriſmo horrenda flagitia objiciuntur. Lepide alioquin ſcriptus liber eſt; cui titulus, Caſauboni Corona Regia, &c. ..... Refertur in Georgii Richteri vitâ Epiſtolis ejus præfixâ pag. 21. è Colloquio cum Erycio Puteano accepiſſe Richterum, quod Puteanus ejus libelli autor habitus fuerit: cujus rei verò famam ille invixè declinans velut Apologiæ loco ſcriptum quoddam exhibuerit, cui nomen, Perjurium RUFFI & GIBBOSI, præfatus, quo delatorum ſuorum virulentiæ ac ſiniſteritati ſatis fuiſſe obviatum exiſtimaverit. Theſe Words of Mr. Morhoff were not rightly underſtood in the Extract that was given of his Book. (p) "We may put into this Claſs alſo, "the Satyrs which attack the Honour of the moſt virtuous Perſons, as that which is called Caſauboni Corona Regia, &c. which was attributed without any Reaſon to Mr. Du Puy, and which lays enormous Crimes to the Charge of James the Firſt, King of England, from which Mr. Du Puy has ſufficiently clear'd him in his Perjurium Ruffi & Gibboſi." Here are two Faults. I. Without doubt the Author of this Extract thought that Erycius Puteanus was the famous Peter du Puy, whoſe Life was written by Mr. Rigault. When one ſays Mr. Du Puy, without any Addition, ſpeaking of Books and Learned Men, he ought to mean him who was the King of France's Librarian, that wonderful Man who, together with his Brother, afforded ſuch Aſſiſtance to Men of Letters, and who held ſuch learned Conferences. II. 'Tis not true that the Author, of whom Morhoff ſpeaks, juſtifies King James from thoſe egregious Crimes which are imputed to him in that Satyr; he only juſtified himſelf from having writ that wicked Libel, and ſhew'd the Malice of thoſe that ſlander'd him. We will quote a curious Paſſage. (q) They attribute to John Barclay a very biting Satyr writ againſt James, King of Great Britain, call'd Corona Regia; in which, under the ſpecious Title of Panegyrick, he very briskly attacks the Reign of Henry VIII. the Birth and Celibacy of Queen Elizabeth, but eſpecially the Birth and Actions of James, whom

---

(a) See the Anti of Mr. Baillet, tom. 2. p. 156.

(b) Printed Cosmopoli, apud Bravium patriæ veritatis & pacis amantissimum, in 12mo.

(c) Impense cavet, ne alius esse videatur quam ex sacrorum ordine. Barlæus Epist. 514. p. 458. Tom. 1.

(d) Videtur cucullus galeam induisse, aut galea cucullum, ita amice conjurant, & ex eodem ore jam Theologo jam milite digna audis. Idem Ep. 212. p. 451.

(e) In Principe Auriaco nec fortitudinem, nec prudentiam agnoscit, hac fretus ratione, quia Catholicus non est. Audi verba: Ad. num 90. In sola Ecclesia Catholica vera est fortitudo & prudentia. Id. Ib. p. 452.

(f) Id. Ib. p. 454.

(g) These two Letters are the 213, and the 214*th of* Barlæus.

(h) Printed at Leyden. Elzevir, 1633. in 12*mo.*

(i) Notæ [illegible] politicæ [illegible] Justi Lipsii Epistolam.

This Letter of Lipsius had been answer'd before in the year 1618, by John Gael, Advocate at the Hague. (l) In the Remark B of the Article Lipsius.

* See the Remark H.

(m) Sallust. Orat. 2. ad Cæsarem de republ. ordinanda, init. p. m. 55.

(n) 'Tis a Book in 12mo of 127 Pages.

(o) Morhofii Polyhist. l. 1. c. 8. p. 78.

(p) Bibliotheque universelle, tom. 13. p. 23.

(q) Bullart, Academy of Sciences, tom. 1. p. 198.

who would ſee the Praiſes which ſeveral learned Men have given him, and the Honours which ſome Princes did him, need only read the Cenſura of (G) Sir Thomas Pope Blount, and the Academy (H) of Bullart *. One of the principal Friends he had at Milan was Secretary of the Council, whoſe Name was John Baptiſt Saccus. I ſhall ſpeak ſomething of the manner after which Puteanus educated (I) a young Girl in whom that Friend had ſome Intereſt. As ſhe was an Italian, he did not permit her to follow the Flemiſh Cuſtoms, whom he mauls by a Diſcourſe as ingenious as it is injurious. Curioſity has carry'd that Book over all Europe, and that Prince finding himſelf Painted in ſuch black Colours, got all his Allies to make a ſtrict Enquiry after the Author. And there being ſome Suſpicion of Erycius Puteanus, Profeſſor of Eloquence in the Univerſity of Louvain, the Arch-Duke Albert cauſ'd an Information to be brought againſt him, but he was found innocent.

* See alſo Mr. Baillet, Jugemens des Savans, tom. 3. n. 653. p. 26.

(G) The Cenſure of Sir Thomas Pope Blount.] But blot out theſe Words. (a) Inter præcipua Galliæ ornamenta dum viveret, merito ſuo ſemper habitus eſt Erycius Puteanus. They are quoted from Caſaubon's Preface to the Hiſtoria Auguſta; but 1. our Puteanus was not a Frenchman. 2. He was not very much known when Caſaubon publiſh'd that Book (b). 3. He lived more than forty Years ſince that Book of Caſaubon's was publiſh'd.

(H) And the Academy of Bullart.] You'll find this there. (c) "'Twas this great Learning which having " gain'd the Heart of Urbane VIII. inclin'd him to " ſend him his Picture, in a Gold Medal of great " weight, and ſome Copies of his Works. 'Twas the " ſame Learning that oblig'd the Cardinal Frederic Borromeo to receive him into his Palace when he re" turn'd to Milan, and to give him part of the Re" licks of his Uncle St. Charles Borromeo, which that " learned Man gave to the Collegiate Church of St. Peter in Louvain. 'Twas this Learning that made him " be tenderly belov'd by the Count de Fuentes, Gover" nor of Milan, and after that by the Arch-duke Albert, who when he had plac'd him in the Chair of " Juſtus Lipſius, receiv'd him alſo with Honour into the " Number of his Counſellors. To conclude, 'twas " his Learning that made him conſiderable in ſeveral " Courts of Europe (d)...... He had the Honour to " ſave the King of Poland's Life, by the explaining of " an Enigmatical Writing form'd in unknown Cha" racters, which no body could either read or under" ſtand, and which contain'd a deteſtable and horrid " Conſpiracy againſt that Prince.

We find the following Words relating to this laſt Head, at the beginning of his Poſthumous Letters. (e) Ejus ingenio ac ſolertia conjurationem Polonicam detectam & ſic impeditam fuiſſe tanti momenti fuit ut omne præmium ſuperarit. Verba Patris HERMANNI HUGONIS qui Marchioni SPINOLÆ à ſacris confeſſionibus erat, æſtimanda hic ſunt: mea cautio erit, ut REX POLONIÆ ſciat, cui ſalutem debeat ſuam, ut PHARAONIS liberalitatem imitetur in JOSEPHUM aut ASSUERI gratitudinem in MARDOCHÆUM. POLONIA quidem recepit hoc ab illo beneficium, ſed in univerſum orbem Chriſtianum extenſum eſt, quod quale quantumque ſit BOHEMIA & turbæ inde natæ ſatis declararunt.

(I) After which Puteanus educated a young Girl.] He writ to his Friend that he would not ſuffer her to let her ſelf be kiſs'd; that, ſays he, is dangerous for Italian Girls. Our Flemiſh ones may do it without any hazard or detriment; they don't underſtand that there are any Love-Leſſons in Ogling and Kiſſes; but thoſe of your Country know very well the Conſequences of it, and for this Reaſon I have taught her our Language, and all our Cuſtoms, except that of kiſſing. Perhaps you might think that I magnifie this, unleſs I ſhould quote his own Words. I therefore do it, and you'll find that I have contracted his Meaning. (f) De puella veſtra quid ſcribam? Valet, viget, jam matura viro, jam plenis nubilis annis. Mores & linguam quoque noſtram diſcit, tamen oſcula non libat. Sic eam habeo, uti educata eſt. Scis tu, ut confringi vas cito Samium ſolet. Pudica quidem Belgarum oſcula, ſed tamen oſcula: & inſinuentur multo honeſtius, quam figantur. Abhorrere illa ab hoc ritu debet, & ſi pudicitiæ alumna eſſe velit, illæſum uſque quoque verecundiæ florem ſervare. Neſciunt noſtræ virgines ullum libidinis rudimentum oculis aut oſculis ineſſe, ideoque fruuntur. Veſtræ ſciunt. Si noſtra eſſe hæc quoque incipiet, particeps candoris noſtri erit, & caſtæ immunitatis capax. Kempius quotes this Paſſage in his learned and curious Compilation de Oſculis, and refers us to a Profeſſor of Philoſophy at Leyden. This Profeſſor treating of Temperance, one of the four Cardinal Virtues, propoſes this among other Queſtions; (g) Is the Cuſtom which is allow'd to Strangers in the Low-Countries, and elſewhere, to kiſs other Peoples Wives, Widows and Maidens, when they pay them a formal Viſit, conformable to the Laws of Chaſtity? He anſwers, That that Cuſtom is very ancient; but that ſeveral Wiſe Men among the Ancients look'd on it as a little Unchaſte. He quotes Socrates, who would have People abſolutely abſtain from it, there being nothing which ſtirs up the Fire of Love ſo much as Kiſſes. He quotes Seneca, (h) as ſaying that a Maiden was accuſed of Impudence, becauſe ſhe receiv'd a Kiſs. He ſays, That the Ancients were perſuaded that kiſſing made a (i) briſk Attack on Chaſtity, and proves it by theſe Words of Ovid,

> Oſcula qui ſumpſit, ſi non & cætera ſumpſit,
> Hæc quoque quæ data ſunt perdere dignus erat.

His Concluſion is, That Ceremonial Kiſſes are not contrary to Chaſtity, provided they are given without any further Deſire, and that we muſt not think that every body is ſo eaſily mov'd, that Civil Kiſſes may not be altogether honeſt. (k) Neque exiſtimandum eſt, omnium eſſe tam pronam & irritabilem ad libidines naturam, quin citra violationem caſtitatis, ac citra libidinem ullam, id genus mediorum, officii teſtandi cauſa, adhiberi poſſit. This Determination, and the Reaſon on which 'tis grounded, are ſolid and good; but what can be more fooliſh than the Quotation out of Ovid, for the Verſes of that Poet concern only the Kiſſes of Lovers? This Profeſſor is to be blam'd for quoting them on ſuch a Subject. He ſhould have laid aſide the Learning that is in his Theſis, and kept to the Difference of Climates, like Puteanus. Thoſe Familiarities which are dangerous in Italy, are very little or not at all ſo in the Northern Countries. This is certainly the Meaning of the Louvain Profeſſor; for he had no thoughts of a Farewel Kiſs, or of a Kiſs upon the Return of a long Journey. There is no probability that on ſuch Occaſions he would have excepted his young Italian Maid. There were other Occaſions enough, in which he might preſcribe her a particular Rule, and in which ſhe might have experienc'd what Horace (l) ſays, according to the Knowledge (m) of her Nation.

The Leyden Profeſſor hath not ſtrain'd what he ſays of Socrates, (n) Socrates apud Xenophontem abſtinendum eſſe in totum ab iſta oſculandi conſuetudine cenſet: quia nihil, inquit, ad amorem incendendum acrius eſt oſculo; for that ancient Philoſopher has expreſs'd himſelf on that in the livelieſt manner imaginable. Critobulus, ſaid he (o), is more raſh than if he had flung himſelf on the Point of a Sword, or leap'd into the Fire, for he had the Boldneſs to kiſs a fine Face. Is that ſo great a Raſhneſs? ſays Xenophon to him. "Truly " I fancy I could very eaſily expoſe my ſelf to the " ſame Danger. Ah unfortunate! ſays Socrates, Do " you know what follows after kiſſing a fine Face? " Don't you loſe your Liberty? Don't you become a " Slave? Don't you engage in exceſſive Expences to " obtain a deſtructive Pleaſure? Don't you find your " ſelf unable to do good, and conſtrain'd to follow thoſe " things which you would deſpiſe if your Reaſon was " not corrupted? O God! ſaid Xenophon, this is to " attribute a ſtrange Power to kiſſing. Are you aſto" niſh'd at it? ſays Socrates. Don't you ſee little Spi" ders whoſe Bite is ſo venomous, that it cauſes " ſtrange Pains, and makes People loſe their Sen" ſes? I know it very well ſaid Xenophon; but thoſe " Creatures ſpit out their Poiſon when they bite. " Do you think, added Socrates, that Love-Kiſſes " are not venomous, becauſe you don't ſee the Poi" ſon? Know that a fair Woman is an Animal " more dangerous than Scorpions, becauſe they can't " hurt unleſs they touch us; but Beauty wounds " us without coming near us. What way ſoever we " perceive it, it ſhoots out its Venom, and perverts " our Underſtandings. Perhaps 'tis for this Reaſon " that the Cupids are repreſented with Bows and Ar" rows, becauſe a fair Face wounds us from afar. I " adviſe you then, Xenophon, when you ſee any Beau" ty ſtom, which he would not have thought dangerous if ſhe had been born at Louvain.

(a) Pope Blount, Cenſura Authorum, p. 689. Edit. Lon. 1690.

(b) 'Twas printed at Paris, 1603.

(c) Bullart Academie des Scienc. tom. 2. p. 220.

(d) What I ſuppreſs here is found in the Remark D.

(e) Vita Erycii Puteani in limine Epiſt. poſthum.

(f) Erycius Puteanus, Epiſt. ad Joh. Baptiſtam Saccum, apud Martinum Kempium Diſſertat. 16. de oſculis, n. 6. p. 626.

(g) Quæritur an Adven gibus ditatis, quæ ſem peram eſt ſpecie, bene conveniat cepta ſit apud noſtrates Belgas, que matronæ, conſuetudo, qua peregrini oſcula figunt alienis uxoribus, viduis, & virginibus quando humanitatis cauſa ſalutant? Adrianus Heereboord, Exercitat. Ethic. 43. p. m. 173.

(h) Apud ſapientiſſimum Senecam, Virginis ſacerdotem ſiccitatis ſaid Sacerdotium petentis, de arguitur impudentia (it ſhould be impudicitia) quod oſculo ſit tata fuiſſet. lib. II. That is the State of the Queſtion. See Seneca's Controverſ. 2. lib. 1.

(i) Oſculo pudicitiam virginis delibari cenſebant veteres, unde illud Ovidii. Id. Ibid.

(k) Id. Ib.

(l) Oſcula quæ Venus quinta parte ſui Nectaris imbuit. Hor. lib. 1. Ode 13.

(m) Neſciunt noſtræ virgines... veſtræ ſciunt. See above, Letter f.

(n) Heereboord, ubi before.

(o) Xenophon de Memorab. Socratis. lib.

"ry to fly without looking behind you: and as for you, " Critobulus, I think it would be proper for you to " be abſent a whole Year, for that will be time little " enough to heal your Wound." Can any Morality be more worthy of a great Philoſopher than this? Our good Caſuiſts would not judge it too ſevere, nor find any Hyperbole in the (a) Compariſons of Socrates. The Maxims of an ancient Roman had no leſs Rigour. He had a Freed-man whom he lov'd very much, and a Maid who began to grow marriageable. He knew that this Freed-man had kiſs'd her, and puniſh'd him ſeverely, tho' there was ſomething which might be urg'd as an Excuſe in the Circumſtances of that Fault; but he had no regard to that, nor to the Friendſhip which he had for the Criminal, he conſider'd only the Conſequences of the Puniſhment. It is not ſaid whether he was ſatisfy'd with the ordinary Puniſhment of a Kiſs, which was (b) whipping; there is a probability that he was not: However it be, we know that his chief Motive was to let the Damſel underſtand, that even in reſpect of kiſſing ſhe ſhould keep her ſelf a Virgin for her Husband, and preſerve the firſt Flower for him. Valerius Maximus expreſſes himſelf finely on this Subject. (c) Quid P. Mænius? quam ſeverum pudicitiæ cuſtodem egit! In libertum namque gratum admodum ſibi animadvertit, quia eum nubilis jam ætatis filiæ ſuæ oſculum dediſſe cognoverat, cùm præſertim non libidine, ſed errore lapſus videri poſſet. Ceterùm amaritudine pœnæ, teneris adhuc puellæ ſenſibus, caſtitatis diſciplinam ingenerari magni æſtimavit. Eique tam triſti exemplo præcepit, ut non ſolum virginitatem illibatam, ſed etiam oſcula ad virum ſincera perferret. Penelope would not have thought this Morality too ſevere: See the Remark K of her Article. We have ſpoken of a Florentine Lady who manag'd her ſelf after this Rule, and of a Law which ſuppos'd the ſame Maxim. This Law is no longer in France, but 'tis not abrogated at Naples. Half the Donations of the Man who is contracted, and dies before the Conſummation, belongs to the Woman if ſhe gave him a Kiſs, but otherwiſe ſhe has nothing. This ſhews that ſhe has no longer any Firſt-Fruits (d) to beſtow, and that therefore ſhe ought to be indemnify'd? Theſe are Maxims unknown to a great many Nations, that judge of Things quite otherwiſe, and don't ſet them at ſo high a Rate. We'll quote the Author of the Saint-Evremoniana. A Kiſs, which in Turky, Italy and Spain, is the Beginning of Adultery, at Paris is only a ſimple Civility; and if that Perſian Gentleman, who made ſo many myſterious Voyages to get three Kiſſes of the Fair Cyrus, had been at Paris, he would not have valu'd that Pleaſure ſo much as he did. There are no Viſits now in which there are not Kiſſes, but they are like Mony, which we value juſt as we pleaſe; and as Kiſſes are a Merchandiſe which coſts nothing, and does not wear out, and is always plentiful, no body is ſparing of 'em, and few are greedy of them (e). What I am going to quote out of Montagne is not of the ſame ſort, for that Author conſider'd only Kiſſes of Civility; but as what he ſays is an Evidence of the Cuſtom of his Time, I may join it to the Words of the Saint-Evremoniana. The Reader will diſtinguiſh where there is Occaſion. (f) " Scarcity gives a Reliſh to Meat. " Thus the Manner of Salutations, which is particular to our Nation, takes off by its facility the Pleaſantneſs of Kiſſes, which Socrates ſays, are ſo powerful and dangerous to ſteal our Hearts. 'Tis a diſagreeable Cuſtom, and injurious to the Ladies, to " hold out their Lips to every one who has three " Footmen in his Retinue, how odd ſoever he be.

" Cujus (1) livida naribus caninis,
" Dependet glacies, rigétque barba:
" Centum occurrere malo culilingis.

" and we our ſelves don't get much by it; for as the " World is at preſent, we muſt kiſs fifty ugly Ones for " three that are handſome; and for a tender Stomach, as " ſuch of my Age have, one bad Kiſs is too much for a " good one". We have ſeen before, in a Paſſage of Eraſmus, what concerns the Cuſtom of England. We'll ſee here what Kornmannus ſays concerning ſome Towns in Germany: (g) Apud Germanos in multis locis oſculatum vidi Coloniæ Agrippinæ, Tubingæ (h), &c. Ubi nefas grande creditur ſi juvenis ad puellam veniens ipſam non oſculetur, & amplexetur: at in aliis locis contrarium obtinet: ſi enim quis apud nos in choreis puellam oſculetur indignata prorumperet. Quam vice? &c. at in occultis & ubi nemo videt bene patiuntur, imo per totam noctem non ſemel ferre recuſant: nam poſt factum oſculum nihil reliqui manet, quod cernatur: tantum de abſterſione agitur.

The Remark of the Author of the Saint-Evremoniana, That in ſome Countries a Kiſs paſſes for the Beginning of Adultery, would make ſome Commentators quote an hundred Paſſages. They would not forget the Words of Achilles Tatius, where Kiſſes are call'd fine Preludes, nor thoſe wherein they are conſider'd as ſuch a powerful Bait, that People are more aſtoniſh'd that they are not follow'd by the whole Game, than that the other Advances were in vain. (i) Μέχρι τινὸς ἐπὶ τῶν φιλημάτων ἑστήξομεν, φιλτάτη; καλὰ τὰ προοίμια. προσθῶμεν ἤδη τι καὶ ἐρωτικόν. Quousque tandem chariſſima Leucippe, baſiis inſiſtemus? Specioſa quidem certe initia hæc ſunt, verum aliquid etiam ex iis quæ ab amantibus expetuntur, addamus. (k) Οὐδέν σε ἠδυνήθην εἰς ἀφροδίτην κἂν μίαν, οὐ δέησις, οὐ χρόνος, οὐχ ἡ τῶν σωμάτων συμπλοκή. ἀλλὰ, τὸ πάντων ὑβριστικώτατον, περιπλεκόμενος, καταφιλῶν, ἀνέστης ὡς ἄλλη γυνή. Quid, quod animum tuum non modo non pellexerunt preces meæ, ut ſemel ſaltem mihi morem gereres: ſed ne ullum quidem idonei temporis opportunitas, aut mutuus complexus, aut aliud quidpiam apud te pondus habuerunt. Quinimo, quod omnium contumelioſiſſimum eſt, e complexu meo, EX IPSIS DISSUAVIATIONIBUS æque diſcedis atque alia mulier. But I may very well be allow'd to Comment on theſe Words of the Saint-Evremoniana, That a Kiſs is a Merchandiſe which does not wear out. A Man who had not run thro' a Courſe of Philoſophy, and yet was us'd to inform himſelf of the Reaſons of every thing, ask'd a Phyſician one Day, why certain Statues of Braſs bear the Marks of (l) the Kiſſes which are given them, and that no ſuch thing was ever perceiv'd on the Face of the moſt famous Curteſans? The Phyſician told him, That the Statues were expos'd for many Ages to the Devotion of a prodigious number of People, but that the Duration of Beauty is very ſhort. He was not ſatisfy'd with this, but ſaid, That the Difference between the Hardneſs of the Braſs and the Softneſs of the Fleſh ought to make a Compenſation, and ſo much the more, becauſe the Kiſſes of Reſpect which are given to the Idols are very ſuperficial, and don't come near the forcible Impreſſion of the others. The Phyſician was ſenſible of theſe two Diſparities, and gave another Reaſon; which was, That whatever the Rubbing takes off from the Statue, is loſt for ever, whereas what is loſt in living Bodies is reſtor'd by their Nouriſhment: That Man was very well ſatisfy'd with this ſecond Anſwer. The rigid Readers may ſay theſe are Trifles, but muſt there be no Trifles in ſuch Volumes as theſe? Muſt not the Reader find from time to time a Place, where he may reſt, I mean, ſome things that are not ſerious.

To conclude, I muſt needs ſay, That Puteanus was much in the right, not to breed an Italian Girl as they did the Flemiſh ones. All muſt act, in ſuch an Affair, according to Cuſtom; neither the Law of Nature nor that of Nations include this Part of Education: The Diverſity of Climates and Opinions is the beſt Rule here. We ſhall ſee in another Place (m) what a Profeſſor of Groningen has remark'd in a Work, in which he has drawn the Parallel of ſome Cuſtoms, which the (n) Rigoriſts condemn'd, and of ſome others which they allowed of.

QUEL-

(a) Confer cum Achille Tatium lib. 2. pag. 79.

(b) Si aliene feminæ oſculum infuſum rationis ſe verere vindicare, nonne quit illud puncto temporis fecerit, incomparabili horarum ſpatio verberatur, & ſuavitas voluptatis exiguæ diuturno dolore punitur? Auguſt. de Civit. Dei lib. 21. cap. 11.

(c) Valer. Maximus, lib. 6. cap. 1. n. 4. p. m. 513.

(d) Quia ex oſculo vir capit gaudium, & ſponſa verecundiam, & quod Sponſus oſculando videtur quaſi cœpiſſe caſtrum. Alii eam aſſignant rationem, quia oſculum eſt actus carnis, & pro medietate eſt quaſi corrupta caro. Kempius, diſſert. 15. de oſculis pag. 607.

(e) Saint Evremoniana, pag. 271. Dutch Edition, 1701.

(f) Montagne's Eſſays, B. 3. Chap. 5. p. m. 171. (1) Mart. Epig. 7.

(g) Kornmannus de linea Amoris, p. m. 180. 190.

(h) Thom. Lanſius apud Kempium Diſſert. 16. p. 654. has given the Lie to Kornmannus about Tubingen.

(i) Achilles Tatius lib. 2. pag. 107.

(k) Id. lib. 5. p. 347.

(l) Lucret. l. 1. v. 317. Tum portas propter ahena Signa manus dextras oſtendunt attenuari Sæpe ſalutantum tactu, præterque meantum.

(m) In one the Remarks of the Article Saint Aldegonde.

(n) Note that this Name is not that which is given them by the Proteſtants of Holland; for they call them Preciſians.

Q.

QUELLENEC (Charles de) Baron of Pont in Bretagne, made a great Figure, under the Name of Soubiſe, among the Proteſtants, in the Reign of Charles IX. He took the Name of Soubiſe in 1568, when he marry'd Catherine de Parthenai, the only Daughter of John de Parthenai, Lord of Soubiſe. We ſhew * in another Place ſome of the Conjunctures in which he evidenc'd a great deal of Courage, and how he defended himſelf againſt thoſe who committed the Paris Maſſacre, under whom he was forc'd to fall at laſt. The Curioſity of ſome of the Court Ladies, in reſpect to his naked Body, which was laid, with the others, before the Louvre, has already been taken notice of. The Proceſs of Impotency (A) which was enter'd againſt him, and which will

* In the Article Soubiſe (John de Parthenai.)

(A) The Proceſs of Impotency enter'd againſt him.] Thuanus ſays expreſly, That 'twas his Mother-in-Law, and not his Wife, who enter'd the Proceſs. Mr. Varillas ſays the ſame thing in his two Editions of Charles the Ninth. Mezeray, not conſidering the Conſequences, has ſaid of the Wife what Thuanus ſaid of the Mother-in-Law. I have taken him up for it, (a) for the Honour and Glory of Catherine de Parthenai; for altho' a Woman may enter ſuch a Proceſs without blemiſhing her Honour, yet 'tis better not to do it, eſpecially conſidering the Youth of the Heireſs of Soubiſe. There are certain Actions (b) which are no Sin, and don't imprint any Note of Infamy. However, becauſe 'tis better to let them alone than to do them, they have ſomething which tarniſhes the Reputation; ſo that an Hiſtorian ought to take great Care not to impute them to thoſe who did them not. He is not allow'd to be unexact, and to confound the Mother with the Daughter, or one Siſter with another. Beſides a celebrated Hiſtorian ought to be very exact, he is a Publick Source; he is like an Archive, and has a great many Tranſcribers all the World over. How many wiſe People (c) are there that won't think themſelves deceiv'd if they follow Mezeray.

I have ſaid ſomething in another Place which may ſerve as an Excuſe to the Lady Soubiſe; and certainly what ſhe did againſt her Son-in-Law needs an Apology. A time of Perſecution, ſuch as ſhe liv'd in, was not proper for ſuch Proceedings. A Church under Trouble and Arms at the ſame time, and which is in that Condition, in Order to maintain the Reformation of Doctrine and Manners, ought not, under pretence of Impotency, to draw a young Husband before Judges of a contrary Religion. 'Tis certain, that in all times and Places, Proceſſes of this Nature bring very little Honour to thoſe that enter them; and whether they arrive to the getting a new Husband, or not, they are always an Object of Raillery and Contempt as long as they live, and not without Reaſon; for the Steps they take are ſo contrary to Modeſty, a Virtue which is the Crown and Ornament of that Sex, and without which they can't ſhare in Human Glory, that no body can have any Reſpect for a Woman who takes ſuch a Courſe.

Without going out of the Bounds of Indulgence, we may ſay here of thoſe Women, what was ſaid, tho' a little too rigorouſly, againſt the Widows which marry. I ſhall uſe Mr. de Vair's own Terms. (d) St. Jerome ad Marcellam, ſays that ſecundas nuptias non appetimus, ſed concedimus, by a certain Indulgence, which is not altogether exempt from Blemiſh, as if he ſhould ſay with the Law, indulgentia quos liberat notat...... (e) In what Terms ſoever the Saying of the Apoſtle be expreſs'd, juniores viduæ nubant, we muſt conceive that 'twas ſaid by way of Indulgence to the Incontinence of ſome Women, ut maritum potius accipiant quam diabolum, & ſciant ſibi non tam maritos datos quam adulteros imputatos, as St. Jerome ſays, ad Salvinam. Now as St. Cyprian ſays, aliud eſt ad veniam ſtare, aliud eſt ad gloriam pervenire. There is a great deal of difference between ſaying, That their Incontinence ſhall not be imputed to them for a Sin, and to ſay that it ſhall be imputed to them for Grace. This is the moſt favourable Judgment that can be made of theſe Pleaders in Matters of Impotency, conſidering the Manner of proceeding they muſt follow.

I. 'Tis much to confeſs publickly, That one cannot contain ones ſelf. Now every Woman who enters ſuch a Proceſs, declares before all the World, That ſhe has this Defect: She delivers an Act (f) which remains with the Publick Notaries, and which affords a Subject of Raillery to thoſe who are inclin'd to be pleaſant, and of Fear to a new Husband. For if he be oblig'd to take long Voyages, or has a long Sickneſs, how ſhall he rely on the Virtue of a Wife who has confeſs'd her Incontinence to the whole World?

II. The Interrogatories they muſt anſwer before the Judges, are ſo nice and troubleſome for a Woman of Honour, that none can have a good Opinion of a Maid who can paſs thoſe Bounds, and anſwer to ſuch Queſtions. I ſay a Maid, becauſe thoſe who accuſe their Husbands generally pretend to be ſuch; and they muſt needs do it when it is their firſt Marriage, as 'tis generally. An Advocate ſtrangely puzzled ſuch a Complainant once: He ask'd her, in the Preſence of ſeveral People, whether her Husband had careſs'd, kiſs'd and embrac'd her. She anſwer'd Yes. And you ſay, quoth he, That this is not enough; what would you have more? If you have your Maidenhead, as you pretend, you ought not to know that your Husband is Impotent; and if you do know it, 'tis a ſign that you have try'd what another Man can do? He put her ſo hard that ſhe bluſh'd, and ſaid ſhe could not anſwer to ſuch puzzling Queſtions. (g) Erumpit interdum inverecunda intemperies mulierum . . . Erumpit inquam impudens, & in facie erubeſcentium populorum, genialis tori revelat & denudat arcana, & de mariti frigiditate conqueritur, allegans hanc ſufficientem & evidentem repudii vel divortii cauſam, quod ſemivir eſt, & inutilis matrimonio, qui non eſt promptus ad coitum. Eleganter quidem Gaufridus de Heroum villa, familiaris meus, unius talium in cauſa hujuſmodi confudit audaciam. Cum enim ei patronus datus eſſet à judice celebraturo ut putabatur divortium, & mulier generoſa audientibus amicis & ſuffragatoribus, advocato ut ſit diligentius merita cauſa ſua exponeret, ſcrutatus eſt ab ea vir prudens, an alium maritum quandoque habuerit. Quod cum illa negaſſet, quæſivit iterum an adhuc virgo eſſet, dicens: hoc ſibi inquiſitu, & ſcitu perneceſſarium, ne à diſcreto judice caperetur occaſione aliqua in ſermone. Illa vero hoc (verecunde tamen, eo quod ſibi non bene credebatur) aſſeruit. Et ille, an ſimul de noctu dormire conſueverint, & ſe invicem oſculari & amplexari maritus & ipſa, inquiſivit. Quæ omnia cum illa fateretur: unde ergo, inquit patronus, noſti virgo pudiciſſima, prudentiſſima, pudoratiſſima, quod efficacem tecum virum non impleverit, & totius matrimonii jura non perſolvit? Quis te docuit, quid ſit coitus, ut eum tecum coiſſe neges, inter tot oſcula, tot amplexus, qui te pro libitu quoties voluit pertractavit licentia maritali? Nam & quædam animantia certum eſt ſe invicem oſculando miſceri. Alia ſe tenuiter tangendo concipiunt. Et ſunt qui ſuo gravidante calore, ab aere temperato impragnantur, & pariunt. Hic illa tandem erubuit, hoc ſolum dicens, ſe quid ad hujuſmodi captiones hiſceret, non habere.

III. They muſt reſolve to ſuffer an Inſpection of the Secret Parts. Other Proofs are too weak, for this Reaſon the Judges have Recourſe to this, and order an Inſpection; they cauſe the Woman to be inſpected, to ſee whether ſhe be deflour'd. Where is the Shame of thoſe who dare begin a Proceſs which has ſuch Conſequences? With what Impudence muſt they be arm'd? There was an Advocate of the Parliament of Paris, in the Reign of Lewis XIII. who wrote ſtrenuouſly againſt the inſpection, and uſed two Arguments, one is, that it is Immodeſt, the other, that it is Uncertain. This is, ſays he, (h) the firſt thing that is now order'd in ſuch Caſes, when the Marriage has been contracted with a Maid, who being inſpected, and reported to be an undefil'd Virgin, all the Proof of the Husband's Impotency, and his Condemnation

(a) In the Remark C of the Article Parthenai (Catherine de)

(b) Certain Qualities are nam'd in the Schools, perfectio ſimpliciter ſimplex Ev'ry Quality melior ipſa quam non ipſa, is of that Species.

(c) Franciſcus Quelletrius Dux è Britannia, cui ab uxore Catharina Parthenia Subizia impotentiæ accuſato divortium intentabatur. Huber, Hiſt. Civil. tom. 2. p. 353.

(d) Du Vair p. 820. of his Works, Geneva Edit. 1617.

(e) Id. Ib. p. 824, 825.

(f) Note, that I do not mean that they make ſuch a Confeſſion in proper Terms; we know that they generally ſpeak only of the commendable Deſire they have of getting Children, but the Publick is not ſatisfy'd with that, they generally put another Conſtruction upon it.

(g) Joan. Sareſ-enſis in Policratico, ſive de nugis curialium, & veſtigiis Philoſophorum, lib. 8. cap. 11. pm. 504, 505.

(h) Vincent Tagereau, Diſcourſe of the Impotency of Men and Women, Ch. 4. p. 57. Edit. of Paris 1612.

will give me occaſion to quote ſome Paſſages of a Book publiſh'd in the Year 1615, was the tion are grounded upon it . . . . . (a) Such an Inſpection is very indecent, and not becoming the Modeſty which a Woman ought to have, and therefore 'tis odious, and ſhe ought to avoid it, there being nothing more commendable in a Woman than Modeſty. Gratia verecundiæ mulieris ſuper aurum, Eccleſ. 7. eſpecially in her who calls her ſelf a Virgin, quæ ſeipſam debet erubeſcere, & nudam videre non poſſe, ſays St Jerome Epiſtola citata ad Lætam. De Inſtitutione filiæ; and St. Ambroſe in his 64th Epiſtle, Nihil ſanctius in virgine quam verecundia, and in the firſt Book of Offices, Eſt pudicitiæ comes verecundia, and again, in the firſt Chapter of the Book of the Inſtitution of a Virgin. In virgine eſt dos quædam verecundia, taciturnitate cognoſcitur, ſo that ſhe who complains of her Huſband's Impotency, and, in order to a Separation, ſuffers Men to ſee, pry into, and handle thoſe Parts which Nature would have to be hid, ought to be look'd on as impudent, and without Shame . . . . (b) A Woman (ſays Herodotus at the Beginning of his Hiſtory) puts off Shame with her Smock. And St. Cyprian, De habitu virginum, tract. 2. Simul cum amictu corporis pudor ponitur. Pliny, in the ſeventeenth Chapter of the ſeventh Book of his Natural Hiſtory, ſays, that the Bodies of drown'd Men always float on their Backs, with their Faces upwards; but Women with their Bellies and Faces downwards, as if Nature, careful of their Honour, would hide that which could not modeſtly be ſeen. Quaſi pudori defunctarum parcente Natura. Nay, this putting off of Cloaths, and Denudation, was formerly a Puniſhment, as Nicephorus ſays, in the eighth Chapter of the ſeventh Book of his Hiſtory; and Tacitus, libro de Moribus Germanorum, ſpeaking of the Puniſhment of Adulterous Women. For this only Reaſon ſeveral have look'd on theſe Inſpections as evil, and reprov'd them. St. Ambroſe in the ſame Epiſtle 64, reproving Syragrius, Biſhop of Verona, for ordering that a Nun, who was accus'd of Unchaſtity, ſhould be ſearch'd, uſes theſe Words: Quid ſibi velit, & quò ſpectet quod Obſtetricem adhibendam credideris non poſſum advertere; itane ergo liberum erit accuſare omnibus, & cùm probatione deſtiterint, petere genitalium ſecretorum inſpectionem? & addicentur ſemper ſacræ virgines ad hujuſmodi ludibria, quæ & viſu & auditu horrori & pudori ſunt? Quæque in alienis auribus ſine damno pudoris reſonari non queunt, ea poſſunt ſine ejus tentari veredia (c)? By which it appears, That this great Man abhorr'd to hear theſe things only ſpoken of; ſo far was he from approving them, adding, That he had never read that Maids uſed to be inſpected. We don't find that the Romans, who were ignorant of nothing that belong'd to good Manners, us'd this means to convict their Veſtals who were accus'd of Inceſt, tho' they were very ſevere in their Enquiries after and in the Puniſhment of that Crime . . . . (d) From whence we may conclude, That the Romans did not in thoſe doubtful Caſes inſpect the Women to be ſatisfy'd, and draw Proofs of their Virginity or Corruption, as is done now adays; whether they judg'd that ſuch a Proof was uncertain, and not ſufficient to rely upon, or whether they rejected it as undecent, and contrary to a Woman's Modeſty; which was ſo much in eſteem with them, that the ſame Valerius, in the firſt Chapter of the ſecond Book, ſpeaking of Spurius Carvilius, who put away his Wife becauſe ſhe was barren, ſays, that they would not let her be touch'd or ſearch'd. Quò matronale decus, munimento verecundiæ tutius eſſet, in jus vocanti corpus ejus attingere non permiſerunt, ut inviolata manus alienæ tactu relinqueretur. In which they were not like thoſe, who immediately, upon a Proceſs of Separation, order that the Woman ſhall be inſpected, tho' they might begin in a more decent manner with the Inſpection of the Huſband, and the Wife might be ſearch'd, if there was Occaſion for it, without going ſo faſt, or cauſing them to be ſearch'd at the ſame time, and without any Interval, that they may the ſooner be Separated; as if it was a thing that requir'd great haſte, and that it could not be deferr'd without the Publick being very much concern'd at it.

IV. The Congreſs muſt be reſolv'd upon, for almoſt all other means of diſcovering Impotency are inſufficient. Now no body can comprehend, that a Woman, who hath not loſt all Shame, can think without Horror on the Circumſtances of ſuch a Congreſs; for after the Parties have taken an Oath, (e) that they will endeavour ſincerely, and without Diſſimulation, to Conſummate the Marriage, without any Let or Hindrance on either ſide, and after the Viewers have ſworn, That they will make a faithful Relation of what ſhall paſs at the Congreſs, they retire into a Chamber, where the Man and the Woman are ſearch'd again, the Man to know whether he hath no Ailing . . . . . the Woman, to conſider the Condition of her privy Parts, and by that means to know the difference, before and after the Congreſs . . . . In (e) ſome Proceſſes, as that of De (f) Bray) the Parties are view'd naked, even from the Crowns of their Heads to the Soles of their Feet, etiam in podice, to know whether they have any thing about them that may advance or hinder the Copulation. The privy Parts of the Man are waſh'd with warm Water (to what purpoſe?) and the Woman put for ſome time into an half Bath. This done, the Man and the Woman go into one Bed in the Day time, the Men-Viewers being preſent, who remain in the Chamber, or retire (if both or one of the Parties require it) into ſome Wardrobe or adjacent Gallery, the Door being half open. As for the Matrons, they keep about the Bed, and the Curtains being drawn, 'tis the Man's Buſineſs to do his Duty, and prove his Power, by carnally knowing his Wife, &c. . . . . . To conclude, the Parties having been ſome time in Bed, as an Hour or two, the Viewers being call'd, or coming of their own accord, and opening the Curtains, inform themſelves of what has paſs'd between them, and viſit the Woman again, to know an facta ſit emiſſio ubi, quid, & quale emiſſum. This is not done without a Candle, and Spectacles for thoſe who uſe them, nor without very naſty and abominable Enquiries; and then they make their Verbal Proceſs of what was done at the Congreſs, or rather of what they would have, which they deliver to the Judge, who is in the Hall, or ſome other Chamber of the Houſe, with the Proctors and Practitioners of the Eccleſiaſtical Court, waiting the End of this Action. This is not all, the Huſband is permitted to call the Viewers if he ſucceeds. Here is another Paſſage of this Pariſian Advocate. (g) De Bray, who is ſo much talk'd of, and whoſe Caſe has been printed, ſiniſtrum tantum habebat teſticulum ex defectu naturali, and at the firſt Congreſs (having gone thither twice in ſeveral Days) arrexerat ſufficienter ad coeundum, ac ſubſtantiam ſeroſam & aquoſam extra vas emiſerat, quæ non poterat dici verum ſemen, ſed non intromiſerat, according to the Report of (2) three Phyſicians, three Chirurgeons, and three Matrons, who were preſent. The Judges, without minding the natural Defect, order'd that De (3) Bray ſhould come to the Congreſs again, before they came to a definitive Sentence, if he thought fit to do it; which was as much as to ſay, that he had not done enough; and having declar'd that he would not go, and that his Wife had hinder'd him twice when he was there, he was ſeparated for want of a perfect Conſummation, there being no Proof in the Proceſs of the Virginity of his Wife. And 'tis remarkable, that when he went to the Congreſs (4) the ſecond time, the Judges adviſ'd him, if he could perfect the Work, to call the Viewers, that they might ſee and teſtify it. By which 'tis plain, that they don't conſider in theſe Caſes whether the Man arrigit ſufficienter ad coeundum; but they require a viſible Performance (a moſt indecent thing!) Had not this Lawyer Reaſon to maintain (i) That the Congreſs is not only more proper to ſuppreſs the Truth, than to bring it to light, but alſo that 'tis Immodeſt and Brutiſh? Has he not Reaſon to oppoſe to the Impudence of thoſe who demand it, the Remainder of Shame which is ſeen in Bawdy-Houſes? The common Women themſelves, ſays he, (k) ſhut and hide themſelves. Eſt aliqua etiam proſtitutis modeſtia (ſays the ſame Seneca) & illa corpora publico objecta ludibrio aliquid, quo infelix patientia lateat, obtendunt, adeo quodam modo lupanar verecundum eſt: and Ovid.

Ignoto Meretrix corpus junctura Quiriti,
Oppoſita populum ſubmovet ante ſera.

He quotes (l) alſo theſe fine Words of St. Auguſtin, Opus ipſum quod libidine peragitur, non ſolum in quibuſque ſtupris ubi latebra ad ſubterfugienda hominum judicia requiruntur, verùm etiam in uſu ſcortorum (quam terrena Civitas licitam turpitudinem fecit) quamvis id agatur quod ejus Civitatis nulla lex vindicat, devitat tamen publicum etiam permiſſa & impunita libido conſpectum: & verecundia naturali, habent proviſum Lupanaria ipſa ſecretum, faciliuſque potuit impudicitia non habere vincula prohibitionis, quam impudentia removere latibula illius fœditatis. Quid concubitus conjugalis qui ſecundum matrimonialium præſcripta tabularum procreandorum fit cauſa liberorum? nonnè & ipſe, quamvis ſit licitus & honeſtus, remotum ab arbitris cubile conquirit? nonnè omnes famulos, atque etiam Paranymphos, & quoſcumque ingredi qualibet neceſſitudo permiſerat, antè mittit foras quam vel blandiri conjux conjugi poſſit? Nec ipſi filii, ſi qui jam inde nati ſunt, teſtes fieri permittuntur.

These

(a) Ibid. p. 58.

(b) Ibid. p. 60.

(c) You'll find in Mr. Du Pin's Biblioth. tom. 2. p. 378. Dutch Edition, an exact and true Abridgement of this Letter of St. Ambroſe to Syagrius.

(d) Ibid. p. 63.

(e) Ibid. p. 123.

(e) This appears by the Report of the firſt Congreſs, dated April 21, 1578.

(f) Then a Treaſurer. See Brantome's Vol. of the Gallant Ladies, p. m. 97, 98.

(g) Tagereau. Ibid. p. 30, 31, 32.

(2) This Report is on the 5th of Apr. 1578.

(3) In the Ordinance of the 14th May following.

(4) This appears by the Report and Verbal Proceſs of the laſt Congreſs.

(i) See the 7th Chap. of his Treatiſe.

(k) Ibid. p. 153, he quotes p. 157, theſe Verſes of Martial, Epig. 35, (and not 91ſt as he takes it.) Et meretrix abigit teſtem veloque ſeraque, Raraque Summenii fornice rima patet.

(l) Id. p. 154, 155, quoting the 18th Chap. of the 14th Book de Civitate Dei.

the true Cauſe why they were ſo curious. Thuanus doth not tell us that the Queen Mother would ſee, by the naked Body of this Baron, whether the Proceſs was well or ill grounded. Our other famous Hiſtorians do not ſay ſo neither. However, it might be true that Theſe are the Proceedings which the Heireſs of Soubiſe was to undergo, when ſhe was at Law with the Baron du Pont. They would wrong the Memory of the illuſtrious Mother of the Duke de Rohan, that Heroine who ſignaliz'd her ſelf at the Siege of Rochelle; if it were true, that in the prime of Youth, Modeſty did not prevent her entering ſuch an Action againſt her Husband, as oblig'd her to act ſuch a Part. 'Tis for this Reaſon I took great pains to excuſe her, by laying all this Contrivance upon her Mother. I have endeavour'd alſo to excuſe her Mother. When I ſaid, that in thoſe times they were to undergo ſuch Proceedings, I had regard to the Arreſt of the Parliament of Paris, which (a) forbad, on the 18th of Feb. 1677 the Judges Eccleſiaſtical and Civil to order, for the time to come, any Proof of Congreſs, in the Cauſes of Marriage. 'Tis ſtrange that ſo many wiſe Heads ſhould be ſo long before they thought of aboliſhing this Law. “(b) There are more Diſſolutions of Marriages within theſe hundred Years, ſince the introducing of the Congreſs into France, than were ever ſeen before. 'Tis for this Reaſon that the Parliament of Paris, at laſt judging that the Congreſs was an Enemy to Chaſtity, and that 'twas not a true Sign of a Man's Virility, abrogated it the 18th of Febr. 1677, by a ſolemn Decree.” Theſe are the Words of an able Phyſician, who had ſaid before, (c) “That the Congreſs, which had been formerly aboliſh'd by the Emperor Juſtinian, as contrary to Chriſtian Purity, was re-eſtabliſh'd by ſome curious People of our Age: For 'tis the Infamy of our Sexes, and the Diſhonour of our Times: I don't believe that we can find in Hiſtory any Examples of it but what are ridiculous. 'Tis a Law which offends Modeſty; 'tis too hard and ſevere on the Man. It expoſes to the publick View thoſe Parts which Nature deſign'd to hide with a great deal of Care; and a Man muſt have ſome Witneſſes, which he avoids when he follows the Laws of Nature; for what a Shame is it to ſhew that at Mid-day, which we have a care to hide in the very Night? 'Tis only a Pretence for a Divorce, and an Effect of the Laſciviouſneſs and Impudence of Women. They have produc'd in the Minds of the Judges the Thought of a Trial as uncertain as 'tis immodeſt: Perhaps there is not one Man of a thouſand, who could come off victorious from this publick Congreſs.” There has been a Complaint of this Abuſe a long time. The Advocate I have quoted, and who liv'd at the Beginning of the ſeventeenth Century, ſets forth very pathetically the Injuſtice of this Cuſtom; and ſeeing the Diſorder encreaſe, he endeavour'd to oppoſe it. And foraſmuch, ſays he, (d) as the Separations for Impotency are more frequent now than they ever have been, altho there are not more Men impotent now than formerly, which have been always rare (thoſe at leaſt in whom one may perceive any Token by the Search, whether the Defect be natural or accidental) and of ten Separations we ſhall hardly find one, where they have been able to diſcern an Impotency in the Man by Inſpection; which makes a World of People admire and grumble at it: I have enquir'd with the greateſt Diligence from whence this can proceed. He obſerves that very few People favour'd thoſe Diſſolutions of Marriages. (e) Not being able to believe that there can be ſo much Impudence, and ſo little Conſcience in him, or her who complains, that they ſhould demand a Separation without any Reaſon; as ſoon as ſuch Proceſſes are enter'd, they haſten to the Condemnation of the Party who is accus'd of Impotency. And if 'tis a Man, and he refuſes out of Shame, or for ſome other Reaſon, to accept of the Congreſs, or does not ſucceed in it, they declare him Impotent; ſaying, that if they were in the ſame Caſe, they would exert their Strength and Vigour. But, perhaps they would find it a difficult thing, if they ſhould happen to be under the ſame Circumſtances, by reaſon of the Fear, Vexation, Hatred and other Difficulties which neceſſarily attend ſuch an Act, and hinder the Execution of it. He gives us a great many Particulars on this Head, which are very curious and rational, and which I ſhall ſet down, without fearing that Wiſe Men will take it amiſs; for can any one be offended to find here what a grave Author publiſh'd by Authority at Paris (f) above eighty Years ago, and the only Deſign of which is to inſpire Horror for theſe unlawful and immodeſt Cuſtoms. (g) “'Tis a ſtrange and almoſt incredible thing, that ſuch an Act that was blam'd by the Pagans for its Filthineſs, and for being againſt Nature (that is to ſay, againſt Modeſty, which, according to St. Auguſtin, is naturally in all Men) ſhould be receiv'd amongſt Chriſtians, and by Churchmen, who ſhould have more Modeſty than other People. 'Tis true, 'tis not long ſince they began to uſe this Method, being firſt introduc'd, as may be ſuppos'd, by ſome impudent Man, who being proſecuted for a Separation, demanded a Congreſs, (boaſting that he would there ſhew his Vigor) which was permitted, there being more Appearance than Reaſon for it. Perhaps it was allow'd alſo, to prevent Women from undertaking ſuch Proceſſes, leſt they ſhould be oblig'd to perform ſuch an unſeemly Act. But it has ſerv'd neither to diſcover the Truth concerning Men, nor to prevent Women from their Proſecutions. On the contrary, they are become bolder, knowing very well that the Performance requir'd at the Congreſs, to prevent a Separation, depends on them, no Man whatſoever being able to do it without their Conſent, either voluntary or forc'd; and that 'tis a ſure and infallible way of gaining their Cauſe and being ſeparated: And which is worſe, they have introduc'd the Cuſtom of ordering a Congreſs, when a Man is ſu'd for Impotency, omitting or neglecting the ancient Forms, inſomuch that Men are compell'd by Impriſonment to ſubmit to a Congreſs, if they refuſe to do it freely, or do not conſent to a Separation; a thing ſo abſurd, that one would hardly believe it, if one did not ſee it. Now this Cuſtom being introduc'd without any good Reaſon, ought neither to be follow'd nor continu'd. Quod enim non ratione introductum eſt, ſed errore primum, deinde conſuetudine obtentum eſt, in aliis ſimilibus obtinere non debet. l. Quod non ratione. De legibus & ſenatus-conſultis. Beſides the Shame which accompanies the Congreſs, ſufficient to hinder the Execution, its Circumſtances render it impoſſible, viz. The Fear which a Man has of ſo many People that ſee, ſearch and handle him, on whoſe Report his Reputation depends, nay his Ruin or Preſervation; as alſo of failing in that which he has undertaken, and which is of ſo great Importance to him. The Vexation of being proſecuted upon ſuch an account, which renders him the Town-talk, and Laughing-ſtock of every body. The Hatred alſo which he has for his Wife, for bringing him to that, inſtead of procuring his Honour and Quiet. Add to this the Conſtraint put upon him, by confining him into a Priſon if he won't go to the Congreſs, or conſent to the Separation. All theſe things are true Remedies of Love, and formally contrary to its principal Work and Action, which requires Secrecy, Aſſurance, Friendſhip, and a Mind not ruffled by Shame, Fear, Hatred, and Vexation, which infallibly render the Effect and Execution of the Congreſs very difficult, and even impoſſible; as Ambroſe Pare obſerves in his Works, Book 28, of the ſixth Edition, where he treats of the Report of the Impotency of Men and Women: 'Tis not in the firſt Editions. And a Man muſt be without Shame and Apprehenſion of any thing, and worſe than a Beaſt, who can perform the Congreſs, notwithſtanding all theſe Hindrances; conſidering alſo (as St. Auguſtin ſays, in the XIVth Book De Civitate Dei, the XXIIId Chap.) that Copulation doth not depend only on our Will, &c.

Mr. Venette is too much a Gentleman to take it ill, if I believe that what he ſays of Juſtinian is falſe. I have heard very learned Lawyers ſay, That there is no Signs of the Congreſs in the old Civil Law, and that 'tis an Abomination invented in the laſt Ages. We'll quote Vincent Tagereau again. (h) “Now altho' Marriage, in its firſt Inſtitution, and by the Evangelical Law, be inſeparable, unleſs one of the Parties dyes, or at leaſt ſo as that the Parties ſeparated may marry again; and 'tis not found that the Jews, Greeks or Romans, with whom Divorces were uſual, had any Laws concerning the Marriages of the Impotent; except the Athenians, who had one made by Solon, by which 'twas allow'd. That a Woman who was marry'd to an impotent Husband might cohabit with any one of her Husband's Relations; and the Romans another, made by the Emperor Juſtinian, near 1300 Years after the Foundation of Rome (there being none before) by which he firſt of all allow'd the Women, rather by Favour, than Reaſon, and contrary to the Divine Law, to be divorc'd from their impotent Husbands, and to put them away; as he

(a) Venette as below. p. 579. See the Journal des Savans of the 9th of July, 1677. p. 508. Dutch Ed.

(b) Nicolas Venette, Doctor of Phyſick, Royal Profeſſor of Anatomy and Surgery, and Dean of the College of Phyſicians at Rochelle. p. 578, 579, of his Tableau de l'amour conjugal. 7th Edit. 1696. This Edition is larger and more Correct than the preceding ones. The Author has added a Preface to it, which deſerves reading. I have quoted him in the Article Joubert, Remark C.

(c) Id. p. 577.

(d) Tagereau as above. p. 7, 8.

(e) Ib. p. 9, 10.

(f) The ſecond Edition of Tagereau's Book, which I uſe of, is the Year 1612, the firſt is of the Year 1611.

(g) Id. Ib. p. 159, &c.

(h) Tagereau p. 4 and 5.

that she cast her Eyes on those naked Bodies with the same Intent; and there are (B) some Books wherein she is accus'd of it, and even of having order'd the Body of the Baron du Pont to be look'd for among all the (B A) rest. I shall say, in one of the Remarks, why I give that Gentleman the (C) Name of Quellenec.

The

" he made many other Laws in Favour of the Women, by the Persuasion of the Empress Theodora, who " rul'd him, and made him do what she pleas'd, as the " same Bodin says in that Place of his Republick, which has " been quoted (a), and in the second Chapter of the " fifth Book. However, the Canonists, in imitation " of Justinian, have allow'd the same Liberty to the " Women, if their Husbands should prove Impotent; " so that they may be marry'd to another after their " Separation, permitting the same also to those Hus- " bands whose Wives are too strait, which Justinian " had not done, there being hardly any such Women to " be found.

The Advocates, who pleaded for .... in 1677, maintain'd (b) That the Congress has no Foundation neither in the Authority of the Laws, nor in the Opinions of the Doctors; that neither in the Civil nor in the Canon Law, there is no mention made of the Inspection or Congress; that 'tis only practis'd in France, and not above sixscore Years ago; that the ancient Books afford us only two ridiculous Precedents for it.

'Tis likely Mr. Venette's Error proceeds from a Transposition of Ideas, which has confounded the Knowledge of Justinian's Law. He would no longer permit that the Ripeness of Males should be decided by an Inspection of their Privy-Parts. He fix'd it to the Age of fourteen Years, whether they were vigorous or not, and look'd on what had been practis'd 'till that time as a very immodest thing. He thought himself (c) oblig'd to exceed the Modesty of the Romans, who forbad the Regulation of the Ripeness of the Girls by Inspection; but they made no such Prohibition with respect to the Boys.

Theodoret did very much inveigh against the Laws of Plato, which ordain'd (d) not only that young Girls and Women advanc'd in Years should practise naked all the Exercises proper for Men, but also that some Inspectors, in order to judge whether the Persons of either Sex were Marriageable, should make them strip themselves. (e) Τὴν δὲ τὸ τῶν γάμων χρόνου ξυμμετρίαν δικαστὴς σκοπῶν κείσθω, γυμνοὺς μὲ τοὺς ἄῤῥενας, γυμνὰς δὲ ὀμφαλοῦ μέχει θεώμενος τὰς γυναῖκας. Judex vero inspiciens judicet quænam ætas celebrandis nuptiis conveniat: eamque ob rem nudos mares, nudasque umbilico tenus feminas inspiciat. Equity requir'd from Theodoret that he should not pass over in silence the Caution of the Legislator, with respect to the Girls, who were only to be naked to the Navel. Theodoret, I say, should have oppos'd Plato's Law, as it was thus limited; whereas he exclaims against it, as if there had been no Limitation in it. He alledges out of hand the Saying of King Candaules's Wife, That a Woman puts off Modesty at the same time she puts off her Shift; from whence he concludes that this Philosophical Legislator taught the Women who were contracted to be void of all Shame. (f) Τοιγαροῦν ὁ φιλόσοφος τὰς νυμφευομένας γυμνοῖ τῆς αἰδοῦς, καὶ ἀναίδειαν ἐκδιδάσκει. Quare Philosophus pudore sponsas exuit, & impudentiam docet. Theodoret's way of reasoning on this Occasion has not all the Exactness or Preciseness of a strict Logician; but what he says against Plato's Institution concerning Dances and Shews, at which both Sexes might assist naked, is just: he pretends that it was the Ruin of Modesty, and a School of Lasciviousness. Οὐ γὰρ τῷ μόνον εἰς ἀναίδειαν ἐπαιδοτριβοῦντο γυμνούμεναι καὶ γυμνουμένους ἄνδρας θεώμεναι, ἀλλὰ καὶ πολλὰς ἀλλήλαις ἀφορμὰς προεξένουν ἀκολασίας, ἡ γὰρ δὴ γυμνῶν σωμάτων ἡ θεωρία, καὶ τοὺς ἄνδρας, καὶ τὰς γυναῖκας εἰς ἔρωτας ἐκθέσμους ἐρεθίζειν (g). Non modo enim ad impudentiam erudiebantur nudatæ, nudosque viros spectantes, sed multas invicem incontinentiæ occasiones præbebant; Nudorum enim corporum aspectus ad nefarios amores & viros & feminas provocabat. This confirms the Remarks I made in another Place (h) against the Custom of the Lacedemonians. But we must say that Plato's Laws were not put into Execution like those of Lycurgus; they were mere notional Laws, which, as Theodoret observes (i), were not so much as receiv'd in the Country of that Philosopher; and therefore it can't be said that Justinian was oblig'd to suppress the Abuses which this Father of the Church condemn'd.

We'll end this Digression with a Passage of the Menagiana, which informs us that this Abuse of the Congress was not then so frequent. Those who are pleas'd with the Suppression of Scandals, will read this with Edification. " (k) An Official, in the Time of Mr. de " Gondy, whose Name I don't well remember, told me, " that during forty Years that he had been in that Post, " he had only order'd the Congress but once; 'twas to " a Miller, and as he perform'd his Duty very well, " his Wife told him, Jacob, why did not you do " as well at home, and then we should not have had the " trouble to come here?

(B) There are some Books wherein she is accus'd of it.] John Lætus Professor at Franeker (l) says, that the Queen gave Orders that the Body of Soubize should be look'd out, a Gentleman who was thought to be Impotent, and that when it was found, she gaz'd upon his Privy-Parts and laugh'd very heartily in the Presence of many Ladies. " Subisii nobilis qui frigidæ & minimè " ad procreandum sobolem aptæ naturæ esse dicebatur " cadaver jussit investigari Regina, inventum (m) pudenda illius, cum suarum pedissequarum numeroso comitatu, " non sine magno & effuso risu inspexit". Could a thing of this Nature be unknown to d'Aubigné? and if he had known it, would he have omitted it in his History? His Silence will certainly decide the Business so much the more, because he observes that (n) The Ladies view'd Soubise, to see whether he was uncapable of Marriage, because there was a Process against him upon that account. Mr. Varillas would not have conceal'd this Action of the Queen Mother, for he doth not spare her in things of lesser or greater Importance. Speaking of the Siege of Rouen, he says, (o) That the Queen Regent was blam'd for carrying the King her Son into the Forts as soon as they were taken, as if she had a Design to use the Eyes of that Prince to slaughter; and that People found Fault with her for having too curiously view'd the Body of a young Woman who had dress'd her self in Man's Cloaths, to encrease the Number of the Defenders: which shews that People will forgive nothing to the great ones. Another Professor of Franeker (p) maintains, that the Queen search'd Soubise's Impotency very curiously.

(B A) And even of having order'd the Body of the Baron du Pont to be look'd for among all the rest.] This is an aggravating Circumstance which I won't warrant; let him who vents it answer for it: 'Tis a Protestant Writer. (q) Rex, Regina, fratres & Regius comitatus frequens sub vesperam Lupara egrediuntur, stragis illius per urbem effusa conspicienda causa. Subizius vir nobilis, frigida & minimè ad procreandam sobolem apta natura esse dicebatur: illius cadaver jussit investigari Regina, & pudenda illius, cum suarum pedissequarum numeroso comitatu, inspicit, non sine magno & effuso risu.

(C) The Name of Quellenec.] So Mr. Varillas calls him in the second Edition of his History of Charles IX. Now as that Edition was rectify'd, according to the Remarks of (r) Mr. d'Hosier, one of the greatest Genealogists in France, there is no doubt but that the Baron du Pont, who marry'd the Heiress of Soubise, must be call'd so. This Name is very much disfigur'd in most Historians, which probably has been occasion'd by a Fault in the Impression. They who printed Thuanus's History, put Quellevetum Pontium instead of Quellenecum Pontium; hence it is, that Mezeray calls this Baron Quelleve-Pontivy: which contains two Faults; for Pontivy was a Lord of the House of Rohan. This last Fault is not to be found in Mezeray's Chronological Abridgment, but only in his large History. I must observe by the by, that he whom he call'd Charles in his large History, is call'd Francis in the Abridgment. Thuanus and the second Edition of Varillas, give the Name of Charles to the Baron du Pont, and therefore it seems to me to be his right Name. Varillas in the first Edition us'd the Word Knellevé. It was still the Fault of Thuanus's Printers: If Varillas made some Alteration in the Orthography of the Word, 'tis likely he did it because he remember'd that several noble Families of Bretagne put a K to their Names. A famous Author (s) has not long since call'd him Franciscus Quelletrus, dux è Britannia.

(D) And

(a) That is in the third Chapter of the first Book.

(b) Journal des Savans, as above.

(c) Pubertatem autem veteres quidem non solum ex annis, sed etiam ex habitu Corporis in masculis æstimari volebant. Nostra autem Majestas dignum esse castitate nostrorum temporum existimans, bene putavit: quod in feminis etiam antiquis impudicum esse visum est, id est, inspectionem habitudinis corporis, hoc etiam in masculos extendere. Et i... nostra ...fta Con...tione ...mulga... pubertatem in masculis ... deci... quartum an... com... ...um illico initium accipere disposuimus: antiquitatis normam in feminis bene positam, in suo ordine relinquentes, ut post duodecim annos completos viripotentes esse credantur.

(d) Theodor. Græc. affect. l 9. p. m. 615. (e) Id. Ib. p. 616. (f) Id. Ib. Id. Ib. (h) In the Article Lycurgus. (i) As above, p. 615.

(k) Menagiana, p. 191, 192, of the first Dutch Edition.

(l) Compend. Hist. univers. p. m. 424. He quotes de statu Religionis in Gallia. We shall see in the following Remark the Words of the Author whom he quotes.

(m) This Word plac'd there makes a Solecism.

(n) D'Aubigné, Hist. Tom. 2. p. 545.

(o) Varillas's Hist. of Charles IX l. 4. ad ann. 1562.

(p) Cujus cadaver cum reliquis ante Regiam projectum a Regina ejusq; puellis diligenter, si nota impotentiæ appareret, inspectabatur.

(q) Commentar. de statu religionis & Reipubl. in regno Galliæ, part 4. Fol. m. 39. verso.

(r) See the Letter publish'd by Mr. Larroque in his Animadversions upon Varillas.

(s) Huber. Hist. Civil. Tom. 2. p. 353. printed at Franeker in 1692.

The Paſſages which I have ſet down in the firſt Remark of this Article, have diſpleas'd ſeveral People. Tho' I was always perſuaded that they took the thing wrong, yet I was almoſt reſolv'd to leave out thoſe Paſſages in this ſecond Edition; and it was the Advice of ſome Perſons, for whom I have a very great Eſteem: but ſome other Perſons, of no leſs Merit than they, diſſuaded me from it, and told me that the Reaſons I have given of my Conduct are a ſufficient Excuſe. I'll follow their Advice, and I'll ſet down (D) thoſe Reaſons; to which I ſhall add one Inſtance, taken from the Approbation which Juſtus Lipſius gave to the Book of an Advocate, who in a Cauſe (E) concerning the Diſſolution of a Marriage ſee'd himſelf oblig'd to relate ſeveral obſcene things, and even ſported more than the Neceſſity of the Subject requir'd. If any one is not ſatisfy'd with what I alledge for my Juſtifica-

(D) And I'll ſet down thoſe Reaſons.] I don't know whether any body remembers ſtill the two ſmall Pieces that came out in 1697: one was entitl'd The Judgment of the Publick . . . . . . upon the Critical Dictionary, and the other Reflexions upon . . . . . . the Judgment of the Publick, &c. 'Tis in the laſt of theſe two Pieces that the Apology, which I was advis'd to inſert here, is to be found. Here follows what I anſwer'd to the Animadverter. “(a) We may add to the three Inſtances which he alledges, what he has ſaid againſt the Article, wherein I have ſet down ſome Paſſages out of a Book of Tagereau. He could not chuſe a worſe Subject of Complaint; for I'll ſhew, in a proper time, that I had very good Reaſons to inſert in my Work what I have ſaid of the Congreſs. I might ſay as an Hiſtorian, that Quellenec was accus'd of Impotency, and that it was his Mother-in-Law, and not his Wife, who enter'd the Action againſt him. Truth oblig'd me to make that Remark in Favour of an Heroine of our Party. As a faithful Hiſtorian, it was my Duty to Criticiſe thoſe who caſt a Blot upon that Lady, ſuppoſing that ſhe ſu'd her Husband upon ſuch an Account in the Flower of her Age. This is to declare that I don't think it a commendable thing for a Woman to engage in ſuch Proceedings. Every Author has the Privilege of ſhewing the Reaſons of his Opinion; and therefore as a Commentator on my own Text, I might, nay I ought to ſet forth the Proofs of the Opinion which I had advanc'd, and conſequently relate what Tagereau had publiſh'd againſt the Practice of thoſe Times: We would appear wiſer than our Forefathers, but we are not ſo wiſe. That Advocate, in the Parliament at Paris, eaſily obtain'd a Licence to publiſh a Book, in which he laid open all the Filthineſs of the Congreſs: But great Clamours are rais'd in Holland againſt an Author who only tranſcribes ſome Paſſages out of that Book. Is not this a Reſpect of Perſons, which betrays an ill turn of the Mind, or a corrupt Heart? But will ſome ſay, this Advocate ſet forth thoſe things only to oblige the Judges to ſuppreſs ſuch a Practice, which was contrary to Modeſty and ſubject to Iniquity. But don't I declare with the utmoſt Indignation that this Practice was infamous, becauſe it deſtroy'd the Principles of Shame, the moſt pretious Cauſe of Chaſtity? Can any one take the right ſide with more Zeal than I have done in this Article? Beſides, as an Hiſtorian, have not I the Right to relate a Cuſtom which was a long time practis'd in the Diſtrict of the Parliament of Paris, and which is not aboliſh'd every where elſe? Certainly the manner of proceeding in Civil and Criminal Cauſes belongs to Hiſtorical Facts; and if there be any thing ſingular in it, many Travellers and Writers of Relations are very careful to be inform'd of it. What a Pleaſure had it not been for Pietro della Valle to find a Book in Perſia which might have inform'd him of a very odd Cuſtom, as well as Tagereau could inform him of the Ceremonial of the Congreſs? I ask whether the verbal Proceſſes of the Viewers and Matrons in certain Cauſes, are things to be rejected when one goes about to make an exact Collection of all the Uſages and Cuſtoms of a Nation? Furetiere, who did not write an Hiſtorical Dictionary with Comments, but a Grammatical one, made uſe of thoſe Proceſſes. Did any body find fault with him upon that account? Dr. Menjot . . . . who was a true honeſt Man, has put a great many laſcivious things in his Diſcourſe concerning the Furor uterinus, and Barrenneſs. 'Twould be a ridiculous thing to Cenſure him for it, ſince, as a Phyſician, he had a privilege to do it; his Subject requir'd or allow'd of it. Now, I ſay, that a Compiler, who Relates and Comments, has all the Privileges of a Phyſician and of an Advocate, &c. according as there is Occaſion; he may uſe their verbal Proceſſes, and the Terms of their Profeſſion. If he relates the Divorce of Lotharius and Tetberga, he may give an Abſtract of Hincmar, Archbiſhop of Rheims, who writ down all the Impurities which were prov'd whilſt the Proceedings laſted. One ought never to judge of a commenting Hiſtorian before one be well acquainted with the Laws of Hiſtory, and the Privileges of a Commentator. If thoſe Gentlemen had read the Commentary which Andrew Tiraquellus writ on the Laws of Marriage, they would have ſeen there a great many Obſcenities. Yet he was a Counſellor in the Parliament of Paris, and one of the moſt illuſtrious Men of the laſt Century, as well for his Knowledge as for his Virtue.”

(a) Reflexions ſur un imprimé qui a pour titre Jugement du public, &c. pag. 3 & 4.

(E) The Approbation which Juſtus Lipſius gave to the Book of an Advocate, who in a Cauſe concerning the Diſſolution of a Marriage] Sebaſtian Roulliard, one of the moſt learned Advocates of the Parliament of Paris, pleaded in the Year 1600 for a Gentleman, who had been accuſed of Impotency by his Wife. She had gain'd her Cauſe before the Official of Sens, and afterwards before the Delegates of the Primacy of Lyons. The Husband appeal'd from their Sentence, and obtain'd ſome Commiſſaries from the Apoſtolical See to give a final Determination in the Matter. Roulliard, his Advocate, publiſh'd A Capitulary, ſhewing That a Man born without any viſible Teſticles, but having all the other Marks of Virility, is capable of matrimonial Duties. The Gentleman was born ſo, and 'twas on this Imperfection that his Wife grounded her Suit for Impotency. He maintain'd that he had conſummated the Marriage, (b) not by the ridiculous Means which ſhe ſuppoſed, but by the natural Effort of his Sex. He demanded that ſhe might be inſpected, (c) and for a convincing Proof, and the moſt frequent that can be practis'd on ſuch Occaſions, he offer'd to accept the Congreſs, to ſhew, &c. The Judges had neither order'd a Congreſs nor an Inſpection, the Woman having declar'd that (d) either of them offended her Modeſty. From theſe Offers of the Husband Roulliard drew what Conſequences he thought moſt proper, and diſcourſed at large of the Uſe of the Teſticles, according to the Doctrine of the Philoſophers, and the Obſervations of the Anatomiſts. He did not trouble himſelf with Paraphraſes and cover'd Speeches, but he us'd the Terms of Art with the greateſt Liberty; and ſometimes mix'd with his Diſcourſe ſome Latin Verſes which were very obſcene; but the Application he made of 'em was very ingenious. He ſeems to be all along upon a ſerious Tone, and yet the whole Book is full of Drolleries and merry Thoughts. He ſent a Copy of it to Juſtus Lipſius, who anſwer'd him thus. (e) Ita, ita, venit ad nos libellus tuus, Deum immortalem, venuſtus, lepidus, & pro ipſâ re libellus . . . . (f) Sed ò te (auſim dicere?) nequam! Novios, Pomponios, Titinnios, Petronios, quidquid hoc genus Atellanas, Mimos, Satyras ſcripſit, vincis aut aquas. Imo uno vincis, quòd Salvo pudore & probitate jocaris. Quid jocaris? ſeriò loqueris, & de illo quod Græci Neceſſarium vocant, neceſſariò, atque id apud judices, agis. Meum & meorum riſum! quâ fronte, quàm ſubſtrictâ aure, Caſſii & Catones veſtri hæc audiunt? . . . . Extra jocum, argutus tuus libellus & in re ſeriâ, nec ſeriâ, ſeriò doctus. In another Letter he proteſts that he has prais'd Roulliard's Capitulary without any Irony, that he had not the leaſt Thought of reflecting on the Author's Morals, and that he knew well enough that they were unblameable, and of the greateſt Purity. (g) Ego te, cum Varrone hoc dicam, modo ſcænatili totigerim! ἀδ' ὡς ὄναρ. Joci fuerunt innoxii, puri, & niveos dicam, quia & frigus, credo, habuerunt. De moribus tuis ne mihi verbum, ſcio ſanctos eſſe: aut ſcripta tua mihi mentiuntur, character ille interioris mentis. Note that Lipſius had already begun to ſet up for a Bigot, and yet he judg'd very well and charitably of Roulliard's Capitulary. I don't know whether the Wife's Advocate publiſh'd his Writings; but had he been never ſo grave, he could not have avoided a thouſand groſs Obſcenities: his Caſe, or his Anſwer to Roulliard, would inform us of ſeveral Circumſtances of that Proceſs. I know very little of it. See the Margin. (h).

(b) Roulliard Capitulare, p.

(c) Ibid. p. 9.

(d) Ibid. p. 40.

(e) Lipſius Epiſt. 66. Centur. ad Germanos & Gallos p. m. 697.

(f) Id. Ib. p. 698.

(g) Id. Ep. 75. ejuſd. Centur. p. 707.

(h) It ap- pears f- thoſe Letters of Lipſius, that Roulliard pleaded for a Baron, and wa Cauſe. I gueſs that it was on that Occaſion that Julian P Advocate in the Parliament of Paris, publiſh'd his Treatiſe de ſolu matrimonii ob defectum teſtium non apparentium. See the laſt Pa- ragraph of this Remark E.

ſtification, he is deſir'd to conſider that it would have been very needleſs to have omitted theſe Paſſages of Tagereau in my ſecond Edition; for his Book is not ſcarce, and is to be found entire in an alphabetical Collection, and conſequently in a Work which is extremely like my Dictionary. Lawrence Bochel, Advocate in the Parliament of Paris, has inſerted it at length † in the third Tome of his Bibliotheque of the French Law, at the Letter S. under the

† I came [illegible] of this by Mr. Marais, Advocate in the Parliament of Paris.

I muſt take notice, that Roulliard and Tagereau were not of the ſame Principles. The Intereſt of the Cauſe which Roulliard had in Hand, mov'd him to maintain, that the Practice of the Congreſs and Inſpection was lawful; ſo that, ſays he, (a) "all thoſe concurring Circumſtances were a ſufficient Motive for the Judges to order the Congreſs, which the ſaid Appellant offer'd to ſubmit to, ſince he affirm'd to have had Carnally to do with his ſaid Wife, and in ſuch a Caſe, ſtandum eſt verbo viri, qui dicit ſe uxorem cognoviſſe cap. continebatur de deſponſat. impub. conſidering that the Man is the Head of the Woman, and ought to have that Prerogative over her; beſides, if he has a legal Preſumption for him that he has known his Wife, gloſſ. cap. inſpicimus de regul. in 6. cap. literas è de preſumpt. …… At leaſt to make that Preſumption void, the Midwives muſt depoſe the contrary, and that by the Inſpection of the Wife, they have found her a Virgin, cap. propoſuit è de probat. Now this is ſo far from being mention'd in the Proceſs, that on the contrary, after ſeveral Shiftings, ſhe has acknowledg'd ſhe has been deflour'd by her Husband; and, becauſe ſhe pretended it had not been done by a Manly Effort, which an Inſpection would have decided, ſhe would never conſent to it, nor the Judges order it, notwithſtanding the preſſing Inſtances of the Appellant. …… (b) As for the Congreſs, which the ſaid Lady pretends to reject on account of Modeſty.

> " Ah ſi cubitum locus exigit, omnibus illum > " Deliciis imple, & ſit procul inde pudor.

"For Duelling is, indeed, forbidden to prevent Revenge by Offenſive Weapons; but not between a Husband and his Wife, whoſe half-ſweet and half-ſow'r Trial tends only to renew Peace and Love. However, in the preſent Caſe bellum juſtum, as Livy ſays, quia neceſſarium, and Neceſſity renders that lawful, which would be unlawful in it ſelf. …… (c) The Congreſs is the moſt uſual and certain proof that can be us'd in a Caſe of Impotency, witneſs Lucian in his Eunuch. Nec inimicum videri debet probationis genus quod ſolum eſt, ſays Quintilian in his ſeventh Declamation; at leaſt the Biſhops Courts in France have admitted it, and the Court has Authoriz'd it by ſeveral Decrees, particularly that of the 20th of January, 1597. made againſt one, who being accus'd of wanting Teſticles, would not ſubmit to it …… (d) Certainly the beſt Precaution that can be uſed is to come to an actual Trial: enim de veritate dubitari poteſt, quoties cum incertis experimenta conveniunt, æquumque eſt non ſemper auribus ſed & oculis credere: eſpecially when we are induc'd to it by a deſire of Peace, which will better excuſe a lawful Copulation, though made in Publick, than all Clandeſtine Doings can juſtify an unlawful Divorce. Otherwiſe 'twould be an abſurd thing to admit, for the Verification of Adultery, the Evidence of one who ſhould ſay that he has ſeen, ἄρθρα ἐν ἄρθροις, and likewiſe that in order to avoid the ſuppoſition of a Child, the Civil Laws ſhould permit the Inſpection of a Woman; and yet, that to juſtifie the Validity of a Marriage (which is a thing much more important) one ſhould be unwilling to ſee, impactum Thyrſum horto in cupidinis.

Theſe Reaſons, and ſeveral others which he produces, are far from being ſo good as Tagereau's Arguments. I fancy, that if Roulliard had been ſome Months after to plead for a Woman, who had refus'd to ſubmit to the Inſpection and Congreſs upon a Motive of Modeſty, he would have us'd the ſame Arguments and Maxims as Tagereau, and refuted himſelf very well. 'Tis the Fate of Advocates, they muſt Reaſon ſometimes after one manner, and ſometimes after another, according to the variety of the Cauſes which they are to Defend; and note, that they quote the ſame Authorities upon quite contrary Subjects. You have ſeen how Tagereau oppoſes St. Cyprian's Authority, and that of St. Ambroſe, againſt the Practice of Inſpection, and you'll ſee that Roulliard cites the ſame Authors to maintain it. (e) "'Tis to no purpoſe to ſay, that his Wife, pretending to Modeſty when 'tis too late, and upon an occaſion when it is not neceſſary, objects that ſhe would be aſham'd to have her ſecret parts inſpected, and to go to the Congreſs, for ſhe muſt be forc'd to it, ſince ſhe has brought things to ſuch a Paſs.

> " Quam bene diſpoſitum terris ut dignus iniqui
> " Fructus conſilii, primis autoribus inſtet.

"I add, that in ſuch Caſes the Inſpection is uſed, ſo that it cannot be ſaid that there is any Injuſtice in requiring that which is practis'd by the common Law: For we learn from St. Cyprian in his Epiſtles, and from St. Auguſtin and St. Ambroſe, that in Caſes relating to the Defloration of Virgins, Inſpection has been always made uſe of. Roulliard us'd a Trick of his Profeſſion. The Fathers he quotes condemn the Practice of the Inſpection, and therefore it was practis'd: He quotes them to prove that Cuſtom, and ſuppreſſes the reſt; that is not fair: The Authority of an Evidence ought not to be cut into two; ſo that here we may apply the Maxim of the Civilian Celſus, (f) Incivile eſt niſi tota lege perſpecta, una aliqua particula ejus propoſita judicare vel reſpondere.

There is one thing in which theſe two Lawyers agree, that is to deplore the multitude of Proceſſes which were enter'd againſt Husbands on account of Impotency. (g) Her Relations …….. have unjuſtly …….. "prompted her to ſue for a Diſſolution of her Marriage, by reaſon of his pretended Impotency, and other falſe Stories which it had been better for her to conceal,

> " Quam protinus urbi
> " Pandere res alta ſylvâ & caligine merſas.

"'Twas the Misfortune of the Appellant, that the Corruption of the Age has given a free Courſe to theſe Proceedings, dedit hanc contagio labem, & dabit in plures; whereas for the ſpace of 1200 Years, in which Modeſty appear'd in the Faces, and was rooted in the Souls of the Women of France, there were ſcarce ſo many Suits upon ſuch an account as there are now …… (h) The Appellant, deploring the Misfortune of this Age, in which the Women on very ſlight pretences get themſelves divorc'd and ſeparated from their Husbands, repreſents to you this Complaint of Tertullian, Ubi eſt illa felicitas matrimoniorum quæ per ſexcentos ferme annos nulla repudium domus ſcripſit? at nunc in fœminis præ auro nullum eſt leve memorum, præ vino nullum eſt liberum oſculum, repudium vero quaſi votum eſt, & matrimonii fructus; a thing of very pernicious Conſequence, as well to the publick as to private Perſons. This is what Roulliard ſays; compare it with Tagereau's Words which you have ſeen above.

If any Body asks me to what purpoſe are all theſe Paſſages of Roulliard? I Anſwer, 1. That they prove that the moſt venerable Tribunals have permitted the Advocates to expreſs themſelves plainly on obſcene Matters. 2. That they ſhew how far the approbation of a great (i) Critick, which I have alledg'd as an Example, extended. 3. That they confirm ſome of Tagereau's Obſervations, or ſerve to give ſome light to the Matter, by the conflict of the Arguments pro and con. If any one replies, that I have not the ſame Liberty as the Advocates; I reply in my turn, that I ought to be allow'd to mention the Reaſons which an Advocate has alledg'd. The Nature of my Work, which is made up of Hiſtory, and of a critical Commentary, requires it. If any one would now a Days give us a Collection of Cauſes, and go back ſo far as thoſe which were pleaded in the beginning of the XVII Century, he might very well publiſh the Subſtance of Roulliard's Capitulary, and in the very Terms of the Author. He might perhaps think it more proper to ſubſtitute the Modern Language in the room of the old French; but no body can juſtly blame thoſe who alledge for a Proof the very Words of an Original, rather than a Verſion. This is the method I have preſcrib'd to my ſelf.

Since the Impreſſion of this, a Gentleman (k) of Worth hath inform'd me, 1. That the Baron d' Argenton, (l) who Married Magdalen de la Chatre, was the Perſon for whom Roulliard publiſh'd his Capitulary. One may know by that, what theſe Words of Lipſius's Letter to that Advocate ſignifie. Quid autem ille Baro? te patrono vir erit, aut fiet? …… Unum tamen etiam quæro, vel te augure (m) Cominæos nobis radicula hæc propagabit? Cui tamen favere me fateor, ob ſacrum illud nobis nomen. Illius autem miſereor, quæ tua opera fortaſſe Tantali aliquo fato contabeſcet. 2. That there is an Edition of Roulliard's Capitulary larger than that which I made uſe of. Mine is an 8vo. and only of 47 Pages; the other is a large Book in 12s, and contains 139 Pages. There is in Page

(a) Roulliard, ut ſupra, p. 39.

(b) Ib. p. 41.

(c) Ibid. p. 43.

(d) Ibid. p. 44.

(e) Roul- [illegible] a- [illegible] p. 42.

(f) Leg. incivile 24. D. de legibus.

(g) Roulliard, Ibid. p. 5, 6.

(h) Ibid. p. 46.

(i) Juſtus Lipſius.

(k) Mr. Marais Advocate in the Parliament of Paris.

(l) Lipſius ubi ſupra. p. 698.

(m) Every one knows Philip de Comines was Baron d' Argenton.

the Word Separation. No body found fault with him for having adopted the whole Book of Tagereau; why then ſhould I be blam'd for quoting only ſome Paſſages out of it? If it be ſaid that People are more nice now than they were then, I ſhall refute this Objection in an Explication at the End of this Work, and in the mean time I ſhall obſerve, that I have acquainted my Readers, that the Book I have quoted was printed in the Year 1612. Ought any one to be ſurpriz'd or offended becauſe the Style of ſuch a Work is not faſhionable? I add, that Obſcenities take Place even now in Cauſes of this Nature (F) in a full Court; and that the Judges, tho' they are Divines, don't reform that Uſage: they cannot do it. See the Margin β.

As the Epoch of Cuſtoms that have ſomething particular and extravagant in them, is a thing that the Curious are glad to know, I thought it not improper to ſet down here what Authors have told us (G) concerning the Epoch of the Congreſs.

QUETIF

139 a Sonnet by the Author, and in another Page without any number this Epigram.

Ad Lectorem.

Hæc ſi ſcripta putes parum ſeverè
Fruſtra te mihi præbeas ſeverum.
Nam quis ſchemate ni Thalaſſionis
Innumerare queat Thalaſſionem?
Ergo quamlibet obſtrepente Momo
Fas ſit porrigier manu pudica
Quod ſolum datur auribus pudicis.

(F) Obſcenities take Place in Cauſes of this Nature in a full Court.] Here is a Paſſage of a Letter written by Mr. Bourſault to the Biſhop of Langres. (a) "I have "often wonder'd, that my Lords the Biſhops ſhould "ſuffer the Judges of their Courts to be Prieſts, or that "the Doors are not ſhut up when a Cauſe is pleaded, "by reaſon of the plain things that are ſpoken there, "which generally dwindle into Obſcenities. I never "had the Curioſity to go thither, but I have heard it "ſpoken of by ſo many different Perſons, and all that they "have told me ſeem'd ſo free, that probably Modeſty is "baniſh'd from thoſe Tribunals. I deſire no other E"vidence for it than the Subject which gave occaſion "to theſe Verſes:

" Dans une Officialité
" Ces jours paſſez une Soubrette,
" Paſſablement belle & bien faite,
" Et d'une robuſte Santé;
" Avec la Bienſéance ayant fait plein Divorce,
" Dit qu'un vieux Médecin l'avoit priſe par force,
" Qu'il falloit ou le pendre, ou qu'il fût ſon Mary:
" Et comment, dit le Juge, a-t-il pû vous y prendre?
" Vous êtes vigoureuſe, il falloit vous deffendre;
" L'avoir égratigné, déviſagé, meurtry:
" J'ay, Monſieur, luy répondit-elle,
" De la force quand je querelle;
" Mais je n'en ay point quand je ry.

" Within theſe few Days an Abigail
" To th' Biſhop's Court was brought.
" Handſome enough, and pretty tall;
" And ſtrong, as all there thought:
" Having with Modeſty made a full Divorce,
" She ſaid an old Doctor had ta'en her by force;
" And I will have him Hang'd, ſaid ſhe,
" Unleſs my Husband he will be.
" How could he take you? ſays the Judge; my Friend,
" You're ſtrong enough, and could your ſelf defend.
" You ſhould have ſcratch'd and claw'd him too;
" Yes, Sir, quoth ſhe, that I can do
" In Quarrels well enough;
" But truly, Sir, not when I laugh.

All that can be done is only to prevent the Exceſs: But as long as there are any Law Suits about Adultery, Impotency, keeping of Baſtards, or the Reparation of Womens Honour, the Judges muſt neceſſarily hear ſome Obſcenities. (b) An Advocate of Paris did very much exclaim againſt the Cuſtom of Pleading, at the time of the Carnaval, the merry Cauſe, as they call it. But if that Abuſe was taken away, there would ſtill remain many Cauſes, which only differ from it more or leſs.

(G) What Authors have told us concerning the Epoch of the Congreſs.] We have ſeen that of its Abolition in the Diſtrict of the Parliament of Paris. It may be certainly fix'd on the 18th of February 1677; but that of its Original is uncertain. There are ſome Authors who ſay that it did not begin 'till the Middle of the 16th Century, and that the Ancients did not make uſe of it. I have refuted the Phyſician who thought that Juſtinian had aboliſh'd it. That Emperor (c) "in the Code (1) "de repudiis, ſays, that if a Husband and his Wife have "lived two Years together, (c) without conſummating "the Marriage, it ought to be diſſolv'd. In the twen"ty ſecond Novel (d) he prolongs the Time of two "Years to three, reckoning from the Day of the Celebra"tion of the Marriage. That Novel adds a remarkable "Reaſon; from which we may learn, that we ought "not to force Nature, by a trial that is not only ſhame"ful but ſometimes too haſty: edocti namque ſumus ex "iis quæ ante hoc provenerunt, quoſdam amplius quam "biennium temporis non valentes, poſtea potentes oſtenſos "miniſtrare filiorum procreationi. This is all that we "find in the Civil Law concerning the Accuſation of "Impotency; neither the Inſpection nor the Congreſs "appear in it. The Canon Law agrees with the "Civil, and all its Deciſions in that Matter are con"tain'd in two different Kinds...... (e) Nevertheleſs "it has introduc'd another ſort of Proof, which is the "Inſpection; it has been receiv'd by ſeveral Conſtitu"tions, and particularly by the Chapter, litteras de fri"gidis; but two conſiderable Reflections ought to be "made on it. The firſt...... the ſecond..... that "after the Inſpection, if it be favourable to the State of "Marriage, there is no occaſion to confirm it by any "other Proof. This is the Determination of the Gloſs "on the Chapter propoſuiſti de probationibus; and as for "the Inſpection they proceed in it in this manner: The "Husband is inſpected firſt; if he appears to be potent "they go no farther, and the Woman is oblig'd to be "ſilent, and they ſpare her Modeſty againſt her Will, "which ſhe has already too much blemiſh'd. But "when, after the Inſpection of the Husband, there is "ſome doubt about his Ability, the Woman is inſpect"ed, provided ſhe has not been marry'd before. The "Canon (2) Requiſiſti goes further, and ſays, that af"ter an Inſpection favourable to the Husband, he can"not be unmarry'd tho' he ſhould confeſs his Impo"tency..... Theſe are all the Proofs that we find in "the Civil and Canon Laws concerning the Accuſations "of Impotency. In the Civil Law the Triennium; in "the Canon Law the Affirmation of the Parties, with "that of ſeven of their Relations, and at the utmoſt "Extremity the Inſpection of the Parties; the Laws "require no more, do not in the leaſt mention the "Congreſs....... (f) The Congreſs, without doubt, "owes its Original to ſome raſh young Fellow, who "demanding it, the Judges being ſurpriz'd at the No"velty of the thing, thought at firſt that he ought not "to be refus'd; ſo that as one Precedent gives occaſion "for another, the Error of the Congreſs was inſenſibly "eſtabliſh'd. Thus all the Authors (3) who have treat"ed of this Matter ſpeak of it, and among the reſt An"tony Hotman a famous Advocate in the Parliament "of Paris, towards the end of the laſt Century. He "ſays that that Practice was not eſtabliſh'd when he "writ, but forty Years before...... The Books of the "Ancients furniſh us but with two Examples to ſup"port it, and they are both equally Ridiculous; one is "in Lucian, who tells us that one Bagoas deſiring to "be admitted into an Aſſembly of Philoſophers, as "ſome doubted whether he was a Man, ſome body ſaid "that he ſhould make ſuch a Trial: a Propoſal be"coming the Impudence with which that Author ſo "often reproaches the falſe Philoſophers. The other "Example is in Peter Ancharanus, on the Chapter Litteræ "(4) where he ſays, that a certain Official of Venice, to "try an impotent Man, ſhut him up with a debauch'd "Woman, on whoſe Report he unmarry'd him. An"charanus does not ſay that this is an Example to be "imitated; neither was it follow'd in his Country, nor "in any other Parts of Italy no more than in Spain or "the Netherlands. All Nations allow only of Inſpecti"on in a Cauſe about Impotency; and we don't find by "the Writings of their Lawyers that the Congreſs is in "uſe among them".

The

β The Bibliotheque of the French Law, written by Bouchel, was reprinted at Paris in 1667. See the Journal des Savans of the 16th of May 1667, p.m. 196.

(a) Bourſault, Lettres nouvelles, p. 173, 174. Dutch Edition.

(b) Call'd Martin Huſſon. See his Book de Advocato, printed at Paris in 1666: the Journal des Savans of the 25th of Apr. 1666, ſpeaks of it, p. 178. Dutch Edition.

(c) [illegible]

(d) [illegible]

(e) Journal du Palais, Ib. p. 24.

(2) [illegible] 33.

(f) Ib. p. 25.

(3) Vincent Tagereau. Antony Hotman. Peleus. Anne Robert.

(4) [illegible]

(c) Journal du Palais, 5th Part, p. 23. (1) L. 10.

QUETIF (JAMES) a Pariſian, and a Monk of the Order of St. Dominick, was accounted a learned Man. He publiſh'd (Z) ſome Books, and had ſpent a great deal of time in compoſing the Bibliotheque of the Writers of his Order, when he dy'd at Paris in the Convent of the Reforme, in St. Honore Street, the 2d of March 1698, being 80 Years of Age*.

QUILLET (CLAUDIUS) a Native of Chinon in Touraine, was one of the good Latin Poets of the XVII. Century. I have mention'd in another †a Place the Occaſion which oblig'd him to retire into Italy. I now add *a, that being at Rome, and frequenting the Houſe of the French Ambaſſador, who was the Mareſchal d'Eſtrées, he was made Secretary (A) of the Embaſſy. I don't know for what Reaſon he was angry with Cardinal Mazarin; but 'tis certain that he ſpoke (B) very ill of that Eminence in a Poem which he publiſh'd in the Year 1655. The Cardinal receiv'd the Inſult with a great deal of Mildneſs, and was ſo eaſily ſatisfy'd with (C) the Excuſes of the Author, that he promiſed him an Abby. The Poem I ſpeak of contains ſome things (D) which Mr. Baillet condemns very

The Chronological Calculation that we have juſt now ſeen, as taken from a Book of Antony Hotman, is more indeterminate than 'tis reported to be. Theſe are the Words of that Author. (a) The Argument which is taken from the Practice of times paſt, to Authorize the Congreſs, cannot be trac'd up farther than thirty or thirty five Years. And there is a great deal of Probability that it was introduc'd not ſo much by an Order of the Judges, as by the Conſent of the Parties offering to do it; in which Caſe 'tis ſaid, nullas eſſe judicis partes. l. ſi convenerit. De jud. And this Practice (with Submiſſion to better Judgments) ought not to be authoriz'd by Cuſtom; on the contrary, if it has been tolerated in former times, 'tis better to amend it, as has been done in ſeveral like Caſes. As for the Congreſs, ſays he, in another Place (b), "Introduced about 35 or 40 Years ago, altho' it ſeems at "firſt ſight that it may ſerve for the clearing up the "Truth, in a Cauſe of a Man's Impotency, and (as we "may ſay) rectifie the Fault which might have been "made in the Inſpection; nevertheleſs the Action being "duly conſider'd, is not only Immodeſt and Brutiſh, but "alſo Uſeleſs, by reaſon of its Circumſtances, which "render the effecting and Execution of it impoſſible". The Author who ſpeaks thus dy'd in 1596; but I don't know the true Date of his Book: (c) I have only the Paris Edition 1610, and therefore I cannot fix the Epoch which I look for. All that I can ſay is, that admitting the Evidence of this Advocate, we cannot carry it up higher than the Year 1540. You ſee that he maintains the ſame thing as Tagereau did, he declares plainly againſt the Congreſs, and alledges a great many things which are to be found in Tagereau's Treatiſe. He ſurpaſſes him alſo with reſpect to Obſcenities; ſo that we have here a new and illuſtrious Example of the Liberty of expreſſing ones ſelf ſmuttily when the Subject requires it, and when one endeavours to ſuppreſs an Abuſe that is very contrary to publick Modeſty. 'Tis ſaid that Hotman writ that Book (d) to ſerve a Kinſman who had appeal'd from the Congreſs, and who loſt his Cauſe. Roulliard Reproaches him with it in the Edition of his Capitulary in Twelves. The loſs of that Cauſe ſhould have been imputed to the Judges and not to the Advocate, who brought ſo many Arguments againſt that new Cuſtom that he deſerv'd the Judges ſhould give it for him. He did not forget to ſay that the Proceedings at the Congreſs afford Matter for a thouſand fooliſh Diſcourſes in all ſorts of Company. (e) "The "wiſeſt Men have always been for the mildeſt and "leaſt ſhameful Remedies; whereas they ſeem now a "Days to have forgot all Honour and Modeſty, in or"der to favour a brutiſh Impudence; and what is more "ſhameful ſtill, the Men have in ſome Trials inſpected "the Women, and the Women have been admitted to "inſpect the Men, which has been the Reaſon of ſo "much Deriſion and Mockery, that ſuch Proceedings "have ſerv'd for pleaſant Stories and merry Diſcourſes "in many Places; whereas what belongs to Juſtice "ought to be treated ſeriouſly, and with Fear and Re"verence". Among ſeveral other Reaſons he alledges this, (f) that the Inſpectors have never reported, mulierem fuiſſe carnaliter à viro cognitam, at a Congreſs; but 'tis ſaid that once or twice the Woman cry'd out as if her Husband hurted her, which the Aſſiſtants hearing, adviſ'd the Parties to agree and go home together, which they did, and the Woman never complain'd afterwards: which is as much as to ſay, that the Parties being agreed after the Proceſs was begun, and the Inſpection made, they were told of this Expedient, by means of which it appear'd that the Woman did not complain without Reaſon, being yet a Virgin, and reported to be ſuch, and that the Husband was not in the wrong for maintaining alſo that he was not Impotent; and the Report of the Integrity of the Woman was look'd upon as Truth, and ſo both were ſatisfy'd. He condemns the Inſpection as much as the Congreſs, without making any mention (g) of the many Alterations that were made afterwards in the Edict of the Pretor de ventre inſpiciendo.

(Z) He publiſh'd ſome Books.] Theſe are the Titles of them. Concilii Tridentini Canones, editio aucta, cui acceſſit index accuratus Legatorum, Patrum, & Oratorum, item index librorum prohibitorum, à Paris 1666, in 12. Hieronymi Savonarolæ Epiſtolæ ſpirituales & aſceticæ ex Italico in Latinum verſæ. Item vita Savonarolæ à Joanne Franciſco Pico cum notis. Compendium revelationum Savonarolæ & additiones quibus varia ad hanc vitam acta, Epiſtolæ, diplomata, inſtrumenta publica, ſcriptorumque monumenta, Apologiæ, &c. referuntur (h), at Paris in three Volumes in Twelves. Petri Morini Pariſienſis opuſcula & Epiſtolæ primum edita, at Paris 1675, 3 Volumes in Twelves. See the Choice (i) Letters of Mr. Simon, about Peter Morin, and this Edition of his Opuſcula.

(A) Was made Secretary of the Embaſſy.] (k) "This "Place was contended for by Mr. de Lionne; but Quillet "carry'd it, and de Lionne put himſelf into the Service of "Cardinal Mazarin, for want of a better Employment, "and at Quillet's refuſal, who choſe the worſt, as the "Event has verify'd it: for one dy'd without raiſing "himſelf higher, and the other has been promoted to "the chiefeſt Places in the State". Theſe Particularities are Curious if they be true.

(B) That he ſpoke very Ill of that Eminence.] You'll find in the Continuation of the Menagiana (l) what he ſaid againſt that Cardinal.

(C) Was ſo eaſily ſatisfy'd with the Excuſes.] This deſerves to be ſet down at length, out of the Continuation of the Menagiana. "The Callipidia (m) of Mr. Quil"let, diſguis'd under the Name of Calvidius Lætus, is "a very fine Latin Poem. Being ſomewhat Diſcon"tented he inſerted in it ſome Verſes againſt Cardinal "Mazarin, and his Family. He printed that Book in "Holland. The Cardinal being inform'd of it, ſent to "Mr. Quillet to come and ſpeak to him, and inſtead of "ſhewing any Reſentment, he only complain'd very "mildly of the little Regard he had for him in that "Poem. You know, added he, that I have had an "Eſteem for you a long time, and if I have done no"thing for you, 'tis becauſe importunate People get all "my Favours; but I promiſe you that the firſt Abby "which ſhall be vacant ſhall be for you. Mr. Quillet, "affected with the Cardinal's Goodneſs, threw himſelf "at his Feet, ask'd his Pardon, and promis'd to cor"rect his Poem in ſuch a manner as would pleaſe him; "praying at the ſame time, that he might dedicate it "to him, which the Cardinal granted. Accordingly he "printed the ſecond Edition corrected, in 8vo, at Paris "1656, and dedicated it to the Cardinal, who a little "while before had given him a conſiderable Abby; but "Death prevented his enjoying of it long. The firſt E"dition, which is the moſt ſcarce, was Printed at Ley"den in Quarto 1655, that of Paris is larger.

(D) Contains ſome things which Mr. Baillet condemns very much] (n) "This Abbot being deſirous to teach "the Art of getting fine Children, has endeavour'd to "reduce all the Precepts of his new Art into four Books "in Latin Verſe, Entituled Callipædia. Tho he does "not tell the Publick from whence he had ſo many Ra"rities, yet it appears, that for (o) an Abbot he knew "more of the Matter than the moſt experienc'd Laymen, "and that he was able to teach Nature it ſelf. . . . . "(p) 'Tis ſaid, that there are ſome things in it finely "touch'd; but that it contains ſome Deſcriptions con"cerning Generation, which are very infamous, and "unbecoming a Man who has any Senſe of Modeſty,

SINCE

---

* Taken from a Letter of Mr. [illegible].

†a In the Article of Grandier.

*a Sorberiana p. 173. Dutch Edition.

(a) Antony Hotman's firſt Treatiſe on the Diſſolution of Marriage for the Impotency and Frigidity of the Man or the Woman, p. 59.

(b) Id. in the ſecond Treatiſe, p. 58.

(c) See the Remark B of the Article Robert.

(d) Journal of the Palace, as before, p. 20.

(e) Antony Hotman's firſt Treatiſe, p. 63.

(f) Id. in the 2d Treatiſe, p. 63.

(g) Journal of the Palace, as above, p. 20.

(h) See the Journal des Savans of the 20th of January, 1676, p. 23. Dutch Edition.

(i) At the 241. p. & ſeq.

(k) Sorberiana at the Word Quillet. p. m. 173.

(l) Page 131, 132 Dutch Edition.

(m) Page 130, 131.

(n) Judgement on the Poets, Tom. 5. p. 61.

(o) According to the Menagiana above, Letter m, he was not an Abbot when he made that Poem.

(p) Ibid. p. 62.

very much. The Abbot Quillet wrote ſome (E) other Books, which have not been publiſh'd.

QUINTUS CURTIUS RUFUS, compos'd an Hiſtory of Alexander. It is ſo fine, and ſo well written, that thoſe are in the wrong who take it to be the Work of an Author that liv'd (A) in the middle Ages; but there is ſome Reaſon to wonder that no body

“ and that he ſeems thro' the whole Work to make a “ Pride of his reading of Petronius, and therefore the “ Praiſes which Coſtar beſtowed on the Callipædia, in a “ Letter to the Author (1), muſt be look'd upon as “ meer compliments of Civility.

SINCE the firſt Edition of this Dictionary I have read the (a) Callipædia Printed at Paris in the Year 1656. This is the Title of it, Cl. Quilleti Callipædia ſeu de pulchra prolis habendæ ratione poema didacticon. Cum uno & (b) altero ejuſdem Authoris carmine. The Preface mentions the things that were added to the Paris Edition, which are more in number than thoſe that were left out. 'Tis a very fine Piece as to the Verſification; The reading of Lucretius appears much more in it than that of Petronius. Thoſe, who told Mr. Baillet that the Author ſpeaks very freely of what concerns Generation, were not miſtaken; but it is not true, that this is unbecoming a Man who has any Senſe of Modeſty; for the Abbot Quillet ſays nothing but what is to be found in many Books of Phyſick written by grave Authors. I don't know whether he had any other Maſters, but I am ſure that the Reading of the moſt ſerious Writers is ſufficient to teach one all the Precepts that he preſcribes. He is call'd Abbas Dudavillanus at the end of the Licence, and Abbas, D. S. in the Epiſtle Dedicatory.

(E) Some other Books, which have not been publiſh'd.] The Abbot de Marolles having mention'd (c) the Callipædia, and ſome other French and Latin Verſes which Quillet had preſented to him, goes on thus. He had compos'd another large Poem in Latin, Entituled Henricias, in Honour of King Henry IV. but I don't know whether that Work, and his Tranſlation of all the Satyrs of Juvenal into French Verſe, will ever appear in Print; ſince the Editions of the beſt Poems, written by the moſt excellent Poets, muſt be paid for now-a-days; and thoſe that have been Printed, which are very many even in Latin, are ſcarce read now. I ſhall forbear making an enumeration of 'em; the Reader would be ſurpriz'd at it. I believe the following Paſſage of Coſtar is to be underſtood of the Henricias. (d) “ I am ſorry you have taken from me the “ Words Convoiter (to Covet) and Convoitiſe (Covetouſneſs or Deſire;) for I would make uſe of 'em “ very much to the purpoſe, in order to expreſs the “ great Deſire I have to ſee the continuation of your “ Divine Latin Poem, the beginning of which you have “ been pleas'd to ſend me. If the remaining part is “ like the beginning, that Poem is as much beyond the “ fine Callipædia, as the fine Callipædia is beyond all the “ Works of that Nature which our Age has produc'd. “ What a pleaſure will it be for me, Sir, if you keep “ your Word, and bring me four thouſand Verſes as “ fine as thoſe which I have juſt now read.

(A) Who take it to be the Work of an Author that lived in the middle Ages,] Here is a Paſſage of Guy Patin. (e) “ Are you ſure that Quintus Curtius lived “ under the Empire of Tiberius? Some ſay it was under “ that of Auguſtus, by reaſon of his fine Latin Style, “ and others place him in the Reign of Veſpaſian, for “ which they have ſome reaſon. I had heretofore a “ Maſter, who pretended that his Hiſtory was but a “ Romance: He acknowledged the Beauty of his Style; “ but he ſaid there were groſs Miſtakes in it about “ Geography ...... That ſame Maſter told us, that the “ Author of that Book was a Learned Italian, who “ wrote it about 300 Years ago. That Quintus Curtius was never quoted by any Author, and that it was “ a Fictitious Name. That the River Indus, the River “ Ganges, and ſome other parts of the Indies, are mention'd in that Hiſtory, tho' they were unknown to the “ Ancients who lived before Ptolemy, who is the firſt “ and the oldeſt Author that ſpoke of China under the “ Name of Sina .... This is a Controverſie .... “ which I hope will be determin'd in the fine Book of “ the late Mr. Voſſius concerning the Latin Hiſtorians, “ which is now Printing in Holland”. I ſhall make ſome Animadverſions upon thoſe Words. 1. It is not true that the Indus, the Ganges, and ſome other parts of the Indies were unknown before Ptolemy. Strabo, who lived under the Empire of Auguſtus, and Pliny, who lived under that of Veſpaſian, ſpeak of thoſe two Rivers; now Ptolemey lived in the Reign of Marcus Aurelius. 2. What ſort of Argument is this? Quintus Curtius mentions ſome Rivers unknown to the Ancients who lived before Ptolemy; therefore his Hiſtory was forged about the middle of the XIV. Century. Can it be denied, that in the very Age of Ptolemy one might have ſpoke of the Rivers and Provinces mention'd by him? 3. Since Quintus Curtius did not uſe the Word Sina to denote China, there was no reaſon to obſerve that no body had made uſe of that Word before Ptolemy. Take notice that Patin's Letter is dated the 15th of September, 1650, and that in a Letter of the 13th of June in the ſame Year, he ſpeaks like a Man who had read Voſſius's Book. How comes it then that he ſpeaks of it here as of a Book that is in the Preſs? For the reſt, Guy Patin's Maſter was not miſtaken, when he ſaid that Quintus Curtius had not been quoted by any of the Antients. Such a Silence cannot be ſufficiently wonder'd at; 'tis a very ſingular misfortune. That Hiſtorian has this common with ſeveral others, that we know not where he was born, and where he lived, and that his Book has been lamed and corrupted; but perhaps he is the only Author of great Merit, who has not been quoted (f) by any body during ſo many Ages. Acidalius was ſomewhat Angry at it. Illa autem, ſays he (g), vix omnino quemquam calamitas extra Curtium afflixit, ut reliquorum ſcriptorum nemo mentionem ejus uſquam, vel uno verbo, certam dico mentionem, & indubitatam faciat, ad unum omnibus tacentibus, quaſi de compacto ut conſpiraſſe videantur ad ſupprimendum hominis nomen, ad famam prorſus opprimendam. In hoc quis non indoleat? quis non miretur & indignetur? Father le Tellier wonders at that Silence, and takes it to be the Reaſon why ſome have been of Opinion, that this Hiſtory is the Work of a Modern Author. (h) Hic mirari cum Acidalio licet ſingulare Curtii fatum quod ſcriptor Nobiliſſimus, & nihilo primis inferior, non ſolum communi illa temporum injuria duobus truncatus libris, aliis quoque locis mutilus, plurimis depravatus ad nos pervenerit: verum etiam, quod nulli forte præterea contigit, tam multis ætatibus ignotus latuerit, ſic ut ante ſæculum à Chriſto nato decimum nemo omnium repertus ſit qui vel per tranſennam Curtii hiſtorici, ſcriptave ab illo hiſtoriæ mentionem injecerit. Quæ res, opinor, nonnullos adduxit ut ſuſpicarentur non genuinum Curtii ac vetuſtum, ſed ſuppoſititium recentioris cujuſquam ſcriptoris fœtum eſſe, qui poſt renatas litteras, felici veterum imitatione eximiam ſcribendi facultatem adeptus, opus hoc ſuum Romano ſub nomine prodire voluerit. It might be inferr'd from thoſe Words that they begun to quote that Hiſtorian in the X. Century; and yet that Commentator in uſum Delphini names no body that mentions him before the XV. Century; for Antony Panormita is the moſt ancient Author that he alledges in the Catalogue of the Teſtimonia, that concern Quintus Curtius. That Catalogue is much larger in Freinſhemius; yet it contains no Author that lived before Panormita. I don't know why the Abbot de la Roque, in his Journal des Savans of the 18th of April, 1678, makes (i) Father le Tellier ſay, That Quintus Curtius has not been placed among the Hiſtorians by any Body before the XV. Century. It is certain, that this Jeſuit does not mention the XV. Century, but the X. I have ſet down his Words. The Argument he makes uſe of againſt thoſe, who pretend that this Hiſtory of Alexander was forged ſince the Reſtoration of Learning, is not a convincing one. He ſays that Gaultier wrote a Poem, Intituled, Alexandreis, which in many places is only made up of Quintus Curtius's Words put into Verſe, and that this Poet lived in the XII. Century. (k) Quorum conjecturam vel una refellit Gualteri Belgæ Alexandreis, jam inde uſque à duodecimo æræ Chriſtianæ ſæculo condita, ex unius ſæpe Curtii vocibus in verſum redactis. But it might be anſwer'd, that a Modern Author, deſigning to write a Hiſtory of Alexander, and to publiſh it as the Work of Quintus Curtius, made uſe of Gaultier's Poem, and put into Proſe all the Paſſages that he liked. As for me, who cannot believe that any learned Man of the XV. Century has been able to write in ſo good a Style, and ſo like the Ancient way of Writing, as that of Quintus Curtius, I need no other reaſon to convince me, that the Author of that Hiſtory liv'd before Suetonius; and therefore I approve of thoſe, who blame Angelus Decembrius for ſaying, that Quintus Curtius took (l) many things from Arrianus. I know that body ſhould have mention'd it before ‡ the XV Century. One ought to be leſs ſurpriz'd to find ſome incredible things in it, than not to find more of them. Nay, the Author was ſo cautious as to prevent the Reproach of Credulity (B), which he had reaſon to be afraid of. It had been better ſtill, if he had related fewer Prodigies, and if he had oftner intimated that he did not believe all the Stories mention'd by him. I have ſaid in another Place that the reading of his Book recover'd a King of Naples from his Illneſs. We have an excellent French Tranſlation * of his Work. The learned Freinſhemius wrote a fine Commentary upon that Hiſtorian, and a Supplement to the two firſt Books, and to ſome other Places that are loſt. Father Michael le Tellier, a Jeſuit, ſhews in his Preface ‖ that 'tis more likely he liv'd in the Reign of the Emperor Claudius than in that of Veſpaſian. In taking notice of Moreri's (C) Miſtakes, I ſhall have occaſion to mention ſome other things. Cardinal du Perron was too great an Admirer (D) of Quintus Curtius.

---

(1) 'Tis the 250th Letter of Coſtar's ſecond Tome, p. 598, 599.

(a) Mr. Bourdelot has been pleas'd to ſend it me.

(b) Thoſe 2 Poems are an Epiſtle ad Eudoxum in Hexameter Verſes, and an Elegy in obitum Petri Gaſſendi.

(c) In the enumeration of thoſe who preſented him with Books.

(d) Coſtar Lettre à l'Abbé Quillet: 'tis the 250th of the ſecond Tome, p. 598.

(e) Patin, Letter 44. 186, 187. of the firſt Tome.

(f) This is more than what I have ſaid of Petronius and Quintus Calaber in their Articles.

(g) Valens Acidalius Animadv. ad L. 4 Curtii.

(h) Michael le Tellier, in præfat. ad Q. Curtium in uſum Delphini.

(i) The Abbot de la Roque having ſaid what I have quoted, and ſome other things, goes on thus. After this Remark, Father le Tellier examins, &c. Which ſhews that he imputes to him all that he had been ſaying.

(k) Michael le Tellier ubi ſupra.

(l) Græcorum & Arriani conſtat Hiſtoria, ex quorum fontibus hic ſcriptor .... opus [illegible] excudit. Ang. Decembrius de politia literaria.

Nothing

that Iſaac Pontanus, a Learned Man, did very much approve Decembrius's Opinion; but he was not infallible. Nos quoque, ſays he, (a) poſt Decembrium aliquot ad varios datis epiſtolis .... idem adſtruximus ac demonſtravimus poſt ævum Trajani & Adriani claruiſſe, & Taciti inſuper maximi Authoris imitatorem eſſe, ejuſque non ſemel verba ac dictionem expreſſiſſe, & uſum ſubinde in vocibus quæ non niſi ab authoribus ejus ævi uſurpantur. Pontanus ſays that Quintus Curtius flouriſh'd after the Emperor Hadrian: How comes it then that in two other (b) Letters he endeavours to ſhew that the Paſſages of that Author, which ſome apply to Auguſtus, and others to Claudius or Veſpaſian, ought to be underſtood of Trajan?

I ſhall conclude this Remark with a Paſſage of Vigneul-Marville. Some Criticks, ſays he (c), “ are of Opinion, that the Name of Quintus Curtius was forged by an Italian Wit, who compos'd that Hiſtory, or that Romance about 300 Years ago. I don't know what Proof they have for it; that which is certain is, that none of the Ancients mention it: But granting this to be true, is it not a wonderful thing, that a Man, who was a good Latin Writer, and who had Writ a Book, that was able to Immortalize his Name, if he had made himſelf known, ſhould have been willing to Sacrifice his Glory to that of an imaginary Quintus Curtius, who could not enjoy it? A Learned Man would make me believe heretofore, that the Name of that Author, who was an Italian, is to be found Latiniz'd in that of Quintus Curtius. It may be ſo, but who will explain that Emblem? 'Tis too late now to do it.

(B) The reproach of Credulity, which he had reaſon to be afraid of.] I take this from la Mothe le Vayer in his Judgment about the Chief Hiſtorians, pag. 204. of the 3d Tome of his Works in Twelves. He ſays that Arrianus is one of the moſt cautious Hiſtorians in relating Prodigies; but that Quintus Curtius “ is more cautious ſtill. We need no other Proof for it, than what they ſay of one or two miraculous Fountains, which ſprung up as ſoon as Alexander had incamped near the River Oxus. Arrianus tells us, that one was a Fountain of Oil, and the other of clear Water, without raiſing any ſcruple about the Truth of ſuch a Story in the Minds of his Readers. (1) Quintus Curtius, who ſays nothing of the Spring of Oil, relates, that as they were digging ſome Wells, they found a Spring in the King's Tent, which having been obſerv'd ſomewhat late, occaſion'd a Report that it was a new one: Alexander (d) himſelf being not unwilling that People ſhould believe it was a Divine Favour, and a Gift from Heaven. That I may clearly ſhew with what Circumſpection that Hiſtorian uſed to relate things, the Truth of which might be queſtion'd, I ſhall ſet down the Words which follow the Account he gives of a Dog, who ſuffer'd all his Limbs to be cut to pieces, rather than to let go his hold of a Lion. (2) Equidem, ſays he, plura tranſcribo, quàm credo. Nam nec affirmare ſuſtineo de quibus dubito, nec ſubducere quæ accepi. Theſe Words muſt be applied to that Paſſage of the ſame Book, wherein 'tis ſaid, that during Ptolemy's Sickneſs, a Serpent ſhew'd Alexander in his ſoundeſt Sleep the Herb that might cure him. For when an Hiſtorian makes it appear that he does not deſign to impoſe upon the Credulity of his Readers, he may write any thing, as I have already ſaid, ſpeaking of Livy.

(C) In taking notice of Moreri's Miſtakes, I ſhall have occaſion] I. He had no good reaſon to repreſent Quintus Curtius as a Roman Knight. That Title is not given to Quintus Curtius mention'd by Cicero, nor to Quintus Curtius mention'd by Tacitus, nor to Quintus Curtius ſpoken of by Suetonius, who are three Perſons, one of whom was our Hiſtorian, as ſome Learned Men will have it. II. The Excellency of his Style is not a good reaſon to doubt whether he is not more ancient than Livy; on the contrary it may move one to think that he did not live before Livy, but at the ſame time. It is an eaſier thing to find a harſh Style beyond Livy's time, than in the Age wherein he lived. Is it not the Golden Age of the Latin Style? III. 'Tis not true, that Quintus Curtius, in the 10th Book, or elſewhere, makes a Digreſſion about the Facility of his Age. Moreri ſhould have ſaid about the Felicity. I take notice of this only to ſhew his Careleſſneſs: He tranſcrib'd without any Judgment even the Faults of Impreſſion. This had crept (e) into a Paſſage of la Mothe le Vayer, and he faithfully tranſcrib'd it, tho' it was an eaſie thing to perceive how it was to be mended. IV. Suetonius does not ſay that Quintus Curtius Rufus, a great Rhetor, liv'd in Tiberius's time. What he ſaid concerning that Rhetor is not extant, and 'tis only by a Liſt which was found in a Manuſcript that we came to know that he ſpoke of him. Perhaps (f) Voſſius is not miſtaken in conjecturing, from the Age of thoſe who precede and follow that Rhetor in that Liſt, that he liv'd in Tiberius's time; but this does not prove that Suetonius plac'd him in the Reign of that Emperor. V. Moreri ſhould not have aſſerted that Quintus Curtius Rufus, mention'd by Suetonius, is the ſame Curtius Rufus ſpoken of by (g) Tacitus. The latter was the Son of a Gladiator, and attain'd to the Conſulſhip, without having (h) taught Rhetorick. VI. Moreri is very much in the wrong to wonder that Quintilian, who mentions all the conſiderable Hiſtorians in the tenth Book of his Inſtitutions, written under the Empire of Domitian, ſhould ſay nothing of Quintus Curtius's Hiſtory. What Moreri aſcribes to Quintilian is falſe; he ſpeaks but of four Hiſtorians at moſt, and therefore his Silence is of no uſe to thoſe who alledge it as a Proof, that Quintus Curtius had not yet publiſh'd his Book. (i) Quod argumentum .... validius ſemper mihi viſum eſt, quam quod à Quintiliani ſilentio petunt adverſarii. Quaſi vero hiſtoricorum catalogum Fabius texuerit, qui quatuor admodum ex iis appellavit: ſuperſtites autem, in quibus eſſe potuit Curtius conſulto prætermiſerit. VII. We may therefore reckon as a new Fault what is ſaid in theſe Words, (k) which cannot be excus'd but by ſuppoſing that this Work had not yet been publiſh'd in his time. All theſe Faults are to be found in (l) la Mothe le Vayer. VIII. Raderus did not write a Supplement to Quintus Curtius, but a Commentary. I ſhall ſay nothing of Moreri's wrong (m) Quotations. I muſt obſerve by the by, that the Supplements of Chriſtopher Bruno came out in the Year 1545. That Author taught Philological Learning at Munich, and Dedicated his Quintus Curtius to the Duke of Bavaria. Poſſevin (n) and James Gourdon (o) affirm, that Quintianus Stoa had ſupplied what is wanting in Quintus Curtius; but Freinſhemius (p) never ſaw that Supplement. Others (q) maintain, that Quintianus Stoa made none. I add what Colomies obſerves about the Edition of Quintus Curtius, Lugduni apud Paulum Frellon, 1615, in 12. That Edition, ſays he, “ (r) Which is little known, has this peculiar to it; beſides the common Supplements aſcribed to Chriſtopher Bruno, a Monk of Bavaria, it contains ſome others tranſcribed from a Manuſcript of the Library of St. Victor, by John Maſſon, Archdeacon of Bayeux, Brother to Papyrius Maſſon, who is well known to the Learned. Thoſe Supplements, the Author whereof could not be found out by the two Maſſons, were written by Francis Petrarch, if we believe Scaliger in the ſecond Scaligerana: In Bibliotheca S. Victoris, ſays he, primus liber Q. Curtii erat, ſed deprehendi eſſe compoſitum à Petrarcha.” I further add, that Vaſſan writ one Day to Goldaſtus, that the firſt Book of Quintus Curtius would quickly come out. (ſ) Eſt in manibus, Pap. Maſſonii liber ille 1. Quinti Curtii hactenus deſideratus, quem ubi primum publicaverit tibi exhibebo.

(D) Cardinal du Perron was too great an Admirer of Quintus Curtius.] “ (t) One Page of Quintus Curtius is “ worth

---

‡ See in the Remark A Father le Tellier's Words, and the Reflection I made upon them.

* Made by Vaugelas.

‖ Ad Q. Curtium, in uſum Delphini.

(a) Joh. Iſacius Pontanus, epiſt. ad Wicquefortium. To the 55th of those that Mr. Matthæus publiſh'd at Leyden in the Year 1695.

(b) Written to Voſſius, viz. the 58th and 59th of the ſame Collection of Mr. Matthæus.

(c) Vigneul Marville Melang. to. 2. pag. 301. Dutch Edit.

(d) The Words of Quintus Curtius, lib. 7. c. … are remarkable. … ipſo …rnacu- …regis …ſpectus fons …m quia …de no- …erant …ito …ſtiſſe …erunt, …que …credi …it do- …n Dei …fuiſſe.

(e) It is in my Edition in 12 of la Mothe le Vayer's Works, Paris 1681. page 197. of the 3d Tome.

(f) Voſſius de hiſtor. Latinis pag. 152.

(g) Tacitus Annal. l. 11.

(h) Before he was promoted to any Dignity he was in the Service of the Governor of Africa. Tenuis adhuc & obſcurus obtinenti Africam comes hæſerat. Plin. epiſt. 27. l. 7.

(i) Mich. le Telier ubi ſupra.

(k) That is Quintilian's ſilence.

(l) Ubi ſupra, pag. 197, 198.

(m) Moreri quotes Pliny epiſt. 7. it ſhould be epiſt. 27. & Voſſius lib. 2. it ſhould be lib. 1.

(n) In Biblioth. Selecta.

(o) In Chronol. Cap. 20 n. 31. apud Freinſhem Proleg. c. 3.

(p) Freinſhem. Ibid.

(q) La Mothe le Vayer ubi ſupra, p. 199.

(r) Colomies Bibliotheque choiſie, p. 184, 185.

(ſ) See the 31ſt Letter in the Collection of the Letters written to Goldaſtus, and publiſh'd in 1688.

(t) Perroniana at the Word Stiles, p.m. 307.

(1) Lib. 7.

(2) Lib. 9.

Nothing can more effectually bring a Man off from the exceſſive Admiration he might have for him, than the Remarks which Monſieur le Clerc publiſh'd, and Entitul'd, Judicium de Quinto Curtio. They are at the end of his Book de Arte Critica, and they do manifeſtly ſhew ſeveral great Faults of that great Hiſtorian, his Ignorance of Aſtronomy and Geography, his Contradictions, his wrong Deſcriptions, his ill Taſte in the choice of Matters, his Careleſneſs in dating the Events, &c. The greateſt part of thoſe Faults might be found in moſt Ancient Hiſtorians, if one would take the Pains, or was ſufficiently qualified to Criticize them ſeverely. I don't know but it might be ſaid, that his Ignorance of certain things, is a Proof that he did not live in theſe latter Times; for if a Man of the XIVth or XVth Century had been able to write that Hiſtory of Alexander, he muſt have had more Talents than were neceſſary to compoſe it in the firſt Century: He muſt have had eminent Qualities, and he muſt have ſpent his Life in Study. Could ſuch a Man be ignorant of what every body knew then, that the Moon is not eclips'd both when it is new and full? But this * is one of Quintus Curtius's Ignorances.

QUINTILIAN (MARCUS FABIUS) was Born at β Calagurris in Spain. 'Tis ſaid, that he was brought to Rome γ by Galba, and it is certain that he taught Rhetorick in that City with great Reputation. He was the firſt δ who taught it there publickly, being paid for it by the State. He was ε diſcharg'd from that laborious Profeſſion, after he had exercis'd it for the ſpace of twenty Years. He had (A) ſeveral Domeſtick Afflictions, which had like to have exhauſted his Conſtancy, and which forc'd him to complain of his cruel Fate. He lamented above all things the Death of a Son of ten Years of Age, who was a very hopeful Child †. He was not contented to give Rules to ſpeak well; but he alſo ſhew'd his Eloquence at the Bar: He †‡ pleaded for Queen Berenice in her Preſence, and was accounted ſo good an Advocate, that ſome Perſons writ down his Pleas (B) to ſell 'em to the Bookſellers. Some are of Opinion, (C) that he was made Conſul: It is more certain, that

---

" worth 30 pages of Tacitus. ..... Quintus Curtius is " the beſt Latin Author; he is ſo polite, and ſo neat; " and what is admirable, is, that notwithſtanding his " Subtilties he is clear, eaſie and intelligible. I place " Florus next to him, he is ſo florid, and ſo elegant. Mr. " de Tyron, who was an excellent Man to judge of an Au" thor's Style, gave the firſt Rank to Quintus Curtius ". I had rather praiſe that Hiſtorian with ſome Reſtriction, as Famianus Strada did. At Q. Curtio, ſays he, (a) quamquam iis virtutibus exornato, quibus conſtat aut heroicis eum temporibus vixiſſe, aut dignum fuiſſe qui viveret, non defuère, qui objicerent quaſiti interdum medicamenta candoris, & numerorum uſum paulo intemperantiorem. Balzac (b) taxes a Modern Author with the ſame fault, and uſes the very ſame Words of that Jeſuit. I mention this by the by, to diſcover a ſmall piece of Thievery.

(a) Famian. Strada, proluſion. Academ. lib. 2. proluſ. 3. p. m. 266.

(b) In a Latin Letter to Mr. Silhon. p. m. 194.

(A) He had ſeveral Domeſtick Afflictions, which ..... forced him to complain.] The Death of his Wife, who was but nineteen Years of Age, made him inconſolable. He praiſes her very much. (c) Omni virtute quæ in fœminas cadit functa, inſanabilem attulit marito dolorem ..... illi dolori quem ex matre optima atque laudem omnem ſupergreſſa, paucos ante menſes ceperam gratulor. She left him two Sons, whereof one died at five Years of Age, and the other at ten. The latter was the Eldeſt, and had extraordinary Gifts: beſides Fortune begun already to put him in the way to Dignities; a Man who had been Conſul had adopted him; and another, who was Prætor and his Uncle by his Mother's ſide, deſign'd to make him his Son-in-Law. Tene conſulari nuper adoptione ad omnium ſpes bonorum patris admotum, te avunculo prætori generum deſtinatum, te omnium ſpe Atticæ eloquentiæ candidatum ſuperſtes parens tantum ad pœnas amiſi? Quintilian's Affliction was very great by reaſon of ſo many Loſſes; he reſolv'd to leave off Writing, and to throw into the Fire what he had already compos'd; he was afraid of being taxed with little Affection and Tenderneſs, if he ſhould make uſe of his Tongue to any other purpoſe, than to inveigh againſt Heaven. He did not forget to ſay, that there is a malicious and jealous Being, who will not ſuffer hopeful Children to live long. I muſt ſet down his own Words, that the Reader may ſee how far the wiſeſt Heathens let looſe their Impatience. (d) Tunc igitur optimum fuit, infauſtum opus, & quicquid hoc eſt in me infelicium literarum, ſuper immaturum funus conſumpturis viſcera mea flammis injicere, neque hanc impiam vivacitatem novis inſuper curis fatigare. Quis enim mihi bonus parens ignoſcat, ſi ſtudere amplius poſſum? ac non oderit hanc animi mei firmitatem, ſi quis in me eſt alius uſus vocis, quàm, ut incuſem deos, ſuperſtes omnium meorum? nullam terras deſpicere providentiam teſter? ſi non meo caſu, cui tamen nihil objici, niſi quod vivam, poteſt: at illorum certè, quos utique immeritos mors acerba damnavit. ...... (e) Juro per mala mea, per infelicem conſcientiam, per illos manes numina doloris mei; has me in illo vidiſſe virtutes ingenii, non modò ad perſpiciendas diſciplinas, quo nihil præſtantius cognovi, plurima expertus, ſtudiique jam tum non coacti, (ſciunt præceptores.) ſed probitatis, pietatis, humanitatis, liberalitatis; ut prorſus poſſit hinc eſſe tanti fulminis metus; quòd obſervatum ferè eſt, celerius occidere feſtinatam maturitatem; & eſſe neſcio quam, quæ ſpes tantas decerpat, invidiam; ne videlicet ultra quàm homini datum eſt, noſtra provehantur. Neverthele ſs he chang'd his Mind as to his Work; he went on with it, and made an end of it.

(c) Quintil. præfat. l. 6. p. m. 267.

(d) Id. Ib.

(e) Quintil. præfat. l. 6. p. m. 268.

(B) Some Perſons writ down his Pleas, to ſell 'em to the Bookſellers.] There were at that time ſome Men at Rome, who could write a whole Speech with a Short-Hand, tho' the Orator ſpoke never ſo faſt. That Art is, at preſent, better known and practiſed in England than in any other Country. Thoſe who took the pains to write in that manner what they heard at the Bar, did not always do it out of Curioſity, but ſometimes out of Avarice. They were willing to get ſome good Pieces to ſell them to the Bookſellers. The Authors were ſometimes the worſe for it; for they obſerv'd, that the Writer had forgot ſome good things, and the Works, that were thus handed about under their Names, were but imperfect Pieces. This was our Quintilian's Caſe, as he himſelf tells us, having mention'd a Plea, which a youthful Ambition prompted him to impart to the Publick. (f) Id eſt in cauſa Nævii Aprun iani ſolùm quæſitum, præcipitatane eſſet ab eo uxor; an ſe ipſa ſua ſponte jeciſſet. Quam actionem equidem ſolam in hoc tempus emiſeram, quod me ipſum feciſſe ſeductum juvenili cupiditate gloriæ fateor. Nam cætera, quæ ſub nomine meo feruntur, negligentia excipientium in quæſtum notariorum corrupta, minimam partem mei habent.

(C) Some are of Opinion that he was made Conſul.] They ground their Opinion upon theſe Words of Auſonius. (g) Quintilianus conſularia per Clementem ornamenta ſortitus, honeſtamenta nominis potius videtur quam inſignia poteſtatis habuiſſe. Vinetus ſays hereupon, that Marcus Arricinius Clemens, and Titus Flavius Clemens having had for ſome time a great Share in Domitian's Favour, loſt it to ſuch a Degree, that he caus'd them to be put to Death. He does not know which of thoſe two Clemens's procur'd to Quintilian the Honour ſpoken of by Auſonius; but, ſays he, it was not the Ordinary Conſulſhip; for the Faſti make no mention of it, and therefore it was but a ſubrogated Conſulſhip (h). Vinetus might have conjectur'd, that it was Flavius Clemens, as it will appear hereafter. The Paſſage of Auſonius is confirm'd by theſe Verſes of Juvenal.

(i) Unde igitur tot
Quintilianus habet ſaltus? exempla novorum
Fatorum tranſi: felix, & pulcher, & acer,
Felix, & ſapiens, & nobilis, & generoſus
Appoſitam nigræ lunam ſubtexit alutæ:
Felix, orator quoque maximus & jaculator,
Et ſi perfrixit, cantat bene. diſtat enim, quæ that he was Preceptor to the (D) Grand-Sons of Domitian's Siſter. It is not certainly known whether he was the Son, or (E) the Grand-Son of the Orator mention'd by Seneca the Father. Seve-

Sidera

Sidera te excipiant modo primos incipientem
Edere vagitus, & adhuc à matre rubentem.
Si fortuna volet, fies de rhetore conſul,
Si volet hæc eadem, fies de conſule rhetor.

We learn at leaſt from this Paſſage, that Quintilian got Riches and Honours; but Juvenal intimates, that luck contributed to it as much or more than his Merit. If the 32d Letter of the 6th Book of Pliny was written to our Quintilian, there is no reaſon to think that Juvenal was in the right, when he repreſented that Teacher of Rhetorick as an Opulent Man. Pliny ſays, that the Perſon, to whom he writes (a), had no great Eſtate; he does not believe that he can equip his Daughter as ſhe ſhould be, ſince ſhe was to be Married to a Man of Note; and therefore he preſents her (b) with a conſiderable Sum, that ſhe may go to her Huſband in a good Equipage. (c) Cum tamen ſit nuptura honeſtiſſimo viro, Nonio Celeri, cui ratio civilium officiorum neceſſitatem quandam nitoris imponit, debet ſecundum conditiones mariti, veſte, comitatu augeri: quibus non quidem augetur dignitas, ornatur tamen, & inſtruitur. It might be ſaid, that the Father of that Maid is not our Quintilian; for, it ſeems, that Pliny would have mention'd the Advantage of having been his Diſciple, if he had writ to his Profeſſor. Beſides, it might be ſaid, that Quintilian (d) having loſt his Wife, and two Sons, repreſents himſelf as a Man, whom the Gods had depriv'd of all his Family. Nay, he ſays (e) that his Wife died at 19 Years of Age, and left him two Sons. Would he have expreſs'd himſelf thus, if he had had alſo a Daughter by her? But theſe Reaſons are not demonſtrative. Perhaps Quintilian married a ſecond Wife, and had by her the Daughter that Pliny ſpeaks of. Perhaps his Eſtate decreas'd after the 7th Satyr of Juvenal. Beſides, that Poet might look upon him as a rich Man, if compar'd with the other Rhetors; and Pliny might think that he had but an indifferent Eſtate with reſpect to the Family, into which young Quintiliana was going to be Married. It is certain that he had been (f) one of Quintilian's Scholars; but he might very well write to him without mentioning ſuch a thing.

(D) Preceptor to the Grand-Sons of Domitian's Siſters.] He ſays ſo himſelf: (g) Cum mihi Domitianus Auguſtus ſororis ſuæ nepotum delegaverit curam, non ſatis honorem judiciorum cæleſtium intelligam, niſi ex hoc quoque oneris magnitudinem metiar. Moreri does not tranſlate theſe Words right, when he ſays, that Domitian intruſted Quintilian with the Education of his Nephews. Barthius (h) would be guilty of the ſame Fault, if by the Word Nepotes he did not underſtand Grand-ſons, as 'tis very likely he does: Nevertheleſs he is miſtaken. He, who wrote the Contents of the Chapters of Quintilian's Works, ſays that that Rhetorician taught the Sons of Domitian's Siſter; which is to pretend to know more of the matter than Quintilian himſelf: But, will ſome ſay, where ſhall we find thoſe Grand-ſons of Domitian's Siſter? I anſwer, that 'tis very likely they were the two Sons of Flavius Clemens, Couſin-German to that Prince. He deſign'd (i) them publickly to be his Succeſſors from their Infancy, and gave one of them the Name of Veſpaſian, and to the other that of Domitian. 'Tis therefore probable, that he gave them the beſt Maſter that was then at Rome, I mean Quintilian. If it be objected to me, that Flavius Clemens married Domitian's Siſter, and conſequently that his Sons were not the Grand-ſons of that Emperor's Siſter: If Philoſtratus be alledg'd againſt me, who ſays, that the Wife of Flavius Clemens was (k) Domitian's Siſter: I anſwer, that Philoſtratus is leſs to be credited than Dion, who only ſays, that ſhe was related to that Prince. (l) Τὸν Φλάβιον Κλήμεντα ὑπατεύοντα καίπερ ἀνεψιὸν ὄντα καὶ γυναῖκα καὶ αὐτὴν συγγενῆ ἑαυτοῦ Φλαβίαν Δομιτίλλαν ἔχοντα κατέσφαξεν ὁ Δομιτιανός. Fabium Clementem conſulem (etſi patruelis ejus erat & Flaviam Domitillam Domitiani conſanguineam uxorem habebat) morte affecit. Moreover, I ſay that Domitilla, Domitian's Siſter, was not alive when Flavius Clemens was put to Death; and yet Philoſtratus tells us, that the Wife of that Flavius was Baniſh'd after the Death of her Huſband. He is therefore miſtaken, when he ſays ſhe was Domitian's Siſter. We read in Suetonius (m) that Veſpaſian had but three Children by his Wife Flavia Domitilla, viz. Titus, Domitian and Domitilla, and that he loſt his Wife and Daughter before he was Emperor. I ſuppoſe that Domitilla, Veſpaſian's Daughter, left a Daughter who was Married to Flavius Clemens. According to this ſuppoſition the Sons of Flavius Clemens, who had Quintilian for their Tutor, are the Grand-ſons of Domitian's Siſter, as Quintilian ſays it in expreſs Words. The time that paſſed between the Death of Domitilla, and the Empire of Domitian, was long enough to maintain, that the Grand-ſons of Domitilla were of a ſufficient Age to be taught by Quintilian under that Empire, for I may very well be allow'd to ſay, that Veſpaſian loſt his Daughter a long time before he came to be an Emperor, which happen'd when he was 60 Years of Age. (n) The Inſcription Flavia Domitilla Imp. Cæſaris Neptis ought to be underſtood, as Triſtan obſerves, not of a Daughter of Veſpaſian, but of a Daughter of Domitilla, Titus's Siſter. Laſtly, I ſay that he, who beſtow'd the Conſulſhip upon Quintilian, was call'd Clemens: But he did it to reward Quintilian for his Tutorſhip, which appears from Auſonius's deſign in mentioning this. Therefore either the Father of Quintilian's Pupils, or one of thoſe Pupils, muſt needs have beſtow'd that Reward upon him; from whence I conclude, that the Pupils of that Rhetorician were the Sons of Flavius Clemens, and conſequently that this Flavius was married to a Daughter of Domitian's Siſter. I wonder that neither (o) Caſaubon, nor Marcilius (p), who Criticis'd him, took no notice of Philoſtratus's miſtake; both of 'em approve what he ſays, that the Wife of Flavius Clemens was Veſpaſian's Daughter, and that ſhe was alive when that Flavius was kill'd. This is plainly contradicted by (q) Suetonius.

(E) Whether he was the Son or the Grand-ſon of the Orator mention'd by Seneca.] That Orator muſt have lived under the Empire of Auguſtus, for (r) Seneca the Father ſpeaks of him as of a Man, who was already Dead, and whoſe Reputation was extinct. But Quintilian was very young, when Domitius Afer, who died under Nero's Empire, was already (s) an old Man: It is therefore an unreaſonable thing to make him the Son of a Man, who flouriſh'd in the Reign of Auguſtus. It were better to ſay, that he was his Grand-ſon; but perhaps one might fear an Objection grounded upon his mentioning (t) his Father as being an Orator, without ever ſpeaking one Word of his Grandfather. There are ſome Criticks (u), who don't aſcribe the Declamations Publiſh'd by Pithœus to the Grandfather of Quintilian, nor to his Father. Thoſe Declamations, ſay they, do not ſavour of the Age of Auguſtus; and 'tis not at all likely, that the productions of Quintilian, mention'd by Seneca, ſhould be ſtill extant, when ſome others Works of the ſame time, and much more elaborate, have been loſt. They obſerve that, according to Seneca, the Reputation of the Orator Quintilian (w) died with him. If they infer from thence, that he Publiſh'd no Books, they don't argue right; for there are many Authors, whoſe Glory dies before them, or, at leaſt, with them. I muſt not forget to make this Obſervation: Quintilian's Father pleaded ſome Cauſes, and therefore he liv'd at Rome, ſay ſome; why then is it ſaid in Euſebius's Chronicle, that Galba brought him to Rome from Spain? Was it an uſual thing for a Man ſettled at Rome to leave his Children in a Province? Mr. de Tillemont (x) ſhews, that this is not a convincing Objection; but he acknowledges the miſtake of Euſebius's Chronicle. He ſays, that it is not true, that Galba brought Quintilian to Rome in the Year 69; and he alledges this Reaſon for it, viz. that Quintilian heard Domitius Afer at Rome, who died in the Year 59. Note, that Mr. de Tillemont does not make uſe of a good Argument; for he quotes a (y) Paſſage, which imports not that Quintilian heard Domitius Afer plead, but that a certain Plea of that Author was very much eſteem'd. He ſhould have quoted (z) another Paſſage. He will not have Martial's omiſſion to be urg'd, and I confeſs it cannot be look'd upon as a demonſtrative Proof; however, it affords a very ſtrong Objection againſt thoſe, who ſay, that Quintilian was a Spaniard. Martial took great delight in mentioning the Illuſtrious Men of Spain, and in obſerving that they were born in Spain. Would he have forgot to make the ſame Obſervation concerning ſo famous a Man as Quintilian was? Would he have expreſs'd himſelf ſo as to make one believe that Quintilian was born at Rome, rather than that he was not?

---

deſierat occidiſſet. Philoſtr. in vita Apollonii lib. 8. (l) Xi- in Domitiano pag. m. 236. (m) Sueton. in Veſpaſ. c. 3.

(n) It is in Gruterus, pag. 355.

(o) Caſaub. in Sueton. Domit. c. 15.

(p) Theodorus Marcilius in Sueton. lib.

(q) In Veſpaſiano cap. 3.

(r) Seneca controv. lib. 5. in præf.

(s) Domitio Afro quem adoleſcentulus ſenem colui. Quintil. lib. 5. c. 7. pag. 212.

(t) Id. lib. 9. c. 3. pag. 432.

(u) See Faber's Notes on Seneca's Controverſies ubi ſupra.

(w) Quorum fama cum ipſis extincta eſt. Seneca ubi ſupra.

(x) Tillem. hiſt. des Emp. tom. 2 p. 873. 874. edit. of Bruſſels.

(y) He quotes the 1ſt Chapter of the 10th Book of Quintilian, where theſe Words are to be found. nobis pueris inſignes pro Voluſeno Catulo Domitii Afri, Criſpi Paſſieni, Decimi Lælii orationes ferebantur.

(z) That which I have ſet down above, Letter t.

Several Criticks aſcribe to that Orator the (F) Declamations publiſh'd by Ugolinus Parmenſis, and afterwards by Petrus Pithoeus; but the Inſtitutiones Oratoriæ are generally look'd upon as a Work of Quintilian. Poggius (G) found out the Manuſcript in a manner that is worth relating. It had been a great loſs for the Commonwealth of Learning, if Quintilian's Works had been deſtroy'd, for he is an Excellent Author; and it were to be wiſh'd, that all thoſe who write Books, would firſt of all read him with great Attention. I am ſorry I have been too late ſenſible of the uſefulneſs of ſuch a Reading. Mr. de la Fontaine, who was a very good Judge, commended very much that Rhetorician. See in his Poſthumous * Works, the Verſes he ſent to the Biſhop of Avranches, when he preſented him with Quintilian's Works Tranſlated by Horatio Toſcanella. Mr. Nicolle the Father, and the Abbot de Pure, have given us a French Tranſlation of that Author. The moſt correct Edition (H) of Quintilian is that of Mr. Obrecht. The Dialogue de cauſis corruptæ eloquentiæ is to be found in it, as in all the other Editions, tho' all the Criticks don't believe that Quintilian is the Author of it; many aſcribe it to Tacitus, and it is commonly Printed with the Works of that Hiſtorian. That which is certain is, that our Author wrote a Book † de cauſis corruptæ eloquentiæ. I think it is loſt, and I make no doubt that it was as excellent in its kind, as the other Pieces that are extant. I have not given a full account of his Merit. I muſt further add, that he appears a very honeſt Man by his Works, and that there is a great deal of good Morality in them. Some blame him for praiſing too much the Emperor Domitian, and tho' he did it only by the by, †† and very nicely, they will not forgive him that Fault, which ſeems, without doubt, to be very great to thoſe, who have read the Hiſtory of that wicked Prince. Had I had Mr. Dodwell's *⁎ Annales Quintilianei, this Article had been better; but thro' a misfortune of which I often complain, I mean that I am depriv'd of the moſt neceſſary Books, I have not been able to Peruſe that Work.

QUINTIN (John) Profeſſor of the Canon Law at Paris in the Sixteenth Century, was a Native of Autun. He neither wanted Learning nor Genius. At firſt he liked the new Opinions, as they were call'd, and declar'd his Mind ſo plainly about it, that he was forc'd to run away (A) from Poitiers; but his Temporary (B) Faith

---

Quintiliane (a) vagæ moderator ſummæ juventæ,
Gloria Romanæ Quintiliane togæ.

Let the Readers judge of it: but I muſt obſerve, that this Paſſage of Martial does not prove that Quintilian was a Native of Rome; and that thoſe, who (b) inferr'd from a Paſſage of Trebellius Pollio that he was a Citizen of Rome, argu'd wrong. (c) Fuit autem, viz. Poſthumius the Younger, (quod ſolum memoratu dignum eſt) ita in declamationibus diſertus, ut ejus controverſiæ Quintiliano dicantur inſertæ, quem declamatorem Romani generis acutiſſimum, vel unius capitis lectio prima ſtatim fronte demonſtrat. Theſe Words of Trebellius Pollio ſignify only, that Quintilian was a Latin Rhetor. He is there mention'd not in oppoſition to the Provincial Writers, † but to the Greeks.

(F) The Declamations publiſh'd by Ugolinus Parmenſis.] He only publiſh'd 136. Pithoeus made a new Edition of 'em in 1580. which was more correct, and inlarg'd with nine Declamations, which had never been Printed. Voſſius obſerves this in (d) one of his Books; but in another he makes no diſtinction at all. (e) cujus declamationes (XLV à Tideo Ugolino primum editas, ex veteri codice reſtituit P. (f) Pythæus. Moreri tranſcribes the wrong Paſſage of Voſſius. I muſt not forget to ſay, that Voſſius is to blame for not taking notice of the time wherein Ugolinus Parmenſis (g) lived, and for omitting that Peter Ayrault publiſh'd (h) Quintilian's Declamations, before they were publiſh'd by Peter Pithoeus. He boaſts of it in his Treatiſe concerning the Paternal Power. Quintilian, ſays he, (i) whom I have publiſh'd again firſt, and the Learned Pithoeus after me.

(G) Poggius found out the Manuſcript in a manner] 'Twas in the Abby of St. Gall, during the Council of Conſtance. Quintilian's Works, which were at that time in Italy, were horribly lam'd: Ita lacerum, ita circumciſum, ut nulla forma, nullus habitus hominis in eo recognoſceretur. You may judge, that the News of this Diſcovery occaſion'd a great Joy. Poggius gave immediately Notice of it: the Letter that he writ on that occaſion was never Printed; it is at the end of a Manuſcript of Quintilian in the Library of Milan, as we are inform'd by Father Mabillon, who gave us this curious Fragment of that Letter. (k) Fortuna quædam fuit, cum ſua, tum maxime noſtra, ut cum eſſemus Conſtantiæ otioſi, cupido inceſſerit viſendi ejus loci, quo ille recluſus tenebatur. Eſt autem monaſterium ſancti Galli, prope urbem hanc millibus paſſuum viginti. Itaque nonnulli animi laxandi, & ſimul perquirendorum librorum, quorum numerus maximus ibi eſſe dicebatur, gratia eo perreximus. Ibi inter confertiſſimam librorum copiam, quos longum eſſet recenſere, Quintilianum reperimus, adhuc ſalvum & incolumem, plenum tamen ſitu, & pulvere refertum. Erant enim in bibliotheca libri illi, non ut eorum dignitas poſtulabat, ſed in teterrimo quodam & obſcuro carcere, fundo ſcilicet unius turris, quo ne vitæ quidem damnati detruderentur . . . . . Reperimus præterea libros tres primos & dimidiatum quarti C. Valerii Flacci Argonauticôn; & expoſitiones, tanquam thema quoddam, ſuper octo Ciceronis orationibus Q. Aſconii Pediani eloquentiſſimi viri, de quibus ipſe meminit Quintilianus. Hæc mea manu tranſcripſi, & quidem velociter, ut ea mitterem ad Leonardum Aretinum & Nicolaum Florentinum; qui cum à me hujus theſauri adinventionem cognoviſſent, multis à me verbis Quintilianum per ſuas litteras quam primum ad eos mitti contenderunt. In order to know the ſad condition that Quintilian was in before that Diſcovery, we need only read one (l) of Petrarch's Letters. One Gaſparinus of Bergamo, who taught Philological Learning at Milan, was very much to be pitied; (m) for he took a great deal of Pains about that wretched Manuſcript, before a better one could be found out. I muſt take notice of a miſtake in Varillas. " Poggio, ſays he, (n) " had the good Fortune to light upon the Inſtitutions, " and the nineteen firſt Declamations of Quintilian, as " he was ferreting in a Shop of a German Grocer, who " was going to (†) make Cornets of 'em. They who " know that it was the only Copy extant, will be for " ever indebted to Poggio for that Diſcovery". Mr. de Larreque has made it appear, that it is not true that this was the only Copy extant. Theſe are his Words, " (o) How great ſoever that (p) loſs might have been, it " had not been irrecoverable. A fine Manuſcript of that " Roman Rhetor, above 500 Years old, which is to be " found in the large Library of Oxford, would have " made up that Loſs, as well as many others of a conſiderable Antiquity, that are at Cologne, and at Berne, " as I have been lately inform'd by the Learned Mr. " Grævius; and ſuppoſe thoſe had met likewiſe with an " unmerciful Grocer, that Loſs might have been ſupplied ſtill by thoſe that are to be found in the Library " of the moſt Chriſtian King; there are fourteen or fifteen of them, if the Catalogue that I have ſeen is not " falſe".

(H) The moſt correct Edition . . . . . . is that of Mr. Obrecht.] It was publiſh'd in two Volumes in Quarto at Strasburg in the Year 1698. He has mended the Text (q) in many places with the help of Manuſcripts, or by his own Conjectures. He has not done like other Criticks, who place in their Notes, or at the end of the Book, the various Readings which they like beſt, and leave in the Text thoſe which they believe to be falſe; but he gives the Text as he thinks it ought to be read. Mr. Salo, in the Year 1665, adviſed thoſe who publiſh the Ancient Authors, to do the ſame. See his Journal (r) des Savans of the 16th of March 1665.

(A) To run away from Poitiers.] Preſident la Place informs us of it in this manner: " (ſ) Many having " heard the Speech of the ſaid Quintin, were amaz'd at it, " expecting no ſuch thing from him, becauſe he had been formerly

---

(a) Martial epigr. 90. lib. 2.

(b) Cittanæ in Plinium epiſt. 54. lib. 2. pag. m. 150, 151. n one of them

(c) Trebellius Pollio in Poſthumio juniore pag. 160. tom. 2. hiſtor. Aug. ſcriptor.

(†) As in theſe Words of Pliny Chap. 12. Book 2. Rationum quidem defectus utriuſque (Solis ac Lunæ) primus Romani generis in vulgus extulit Sulpicius Gallus. . . . . Apud Græcos autem inveſtigavit primus omnium Thales.

(d) Voſſius in inſtitutionibus oratoriis lib. 1. c. 11. p. m. 198, 199.

(e) Idem de Rhetorices natura pag. 105.

(f) It ſhould be Pithœus.

(g) He lived in the XVth Century. Philelphus ſpeaks of him. See Reineſius epiſt. 63. ad Daumium pag. 167.

(h) At Paris in the Year 1563.

(i) Ayrault p. m. 271. See alſo his Diſſertation de la nature & mutation des loix, pag. m. 189.

(k) Mabillon in Muſeo Italico, tom. 1. parte 1. p. 211.

Faith (B) was not proof againſt a long Perſecution. He quickly accepted of a good Benefice, that was given him in the Order of the Knights of *Malta; and when he return'd from that Iſland, where he had been a Domeſtick to the Great Maſter, he was made Profeſſor of the Canon Law at Paris in the Year 1536. That which made him moſt ſpoken of, was the Speech he made in the Name of the Clergy during the Aſſembly of the States at Orleans in December 1650. He demanded that thoſe of the new Religion ſhould be proceeded againſt with the utmoſt Severity; which would be more ſurprizing, if it had not been a thing practis'd for many Ages: But tho' that bloody Spirit had prevail'd never ſo long, many could not forbear wondering that a Clergyman ſhould have taken upon himſelf to demand (C) ſuch a thing. Quintin did not foreſee, that the Leaders of the Proteſtants would ſhew a great deal of vigour in that Aſſembly; much leſs did he foreſee, that he would be extremely ſenſible to the Animadverſions that ſhould be made upon his Speech. Had he foreſeen thoſe things, he would without doubt have kept at Paris, and had rather choſen to explain ſome Decretals to his Scholars, than to give ſome Leſſons of Cruelty to the King, his Maſter, in the preſence of the three States of the Kingdom. Admiral Chatillon (D) complain'd ſo openly of Quintin's Speech, that the King, and the Queen Mother, ſent for that Orator, to call him to an account for what he had ſaid. His Anſwer was, that he had only followed the Orders and Memoirs of the Body, whoſe Spokeſman he had been. The Proteſtants were not ſatisfy'd with that Anſwer †; he was oblig'd to declare before the Aſſembly of the States, that he did not deſign to reflect on Admiral Chatillon: but he was much more vex'd at the (E) Railleries and Cenſures, that were diſpers'd againſt his Declamation. He could not bear that

" formerly ſuſpected, and even proſecuted on account " of Religion, and forc'd to retire from Poitiers, for having made a Speech in publick quite different from " that which he had juſt then made". Beza (a) ſays the ſame thing.

(B) His Temporary Faith.] Beza (b) ſpeaks of him thus: " Some Years before, another Scholar, whoſe " Name was Quintin, a Native of Autun, had likewiſe " kept great ado; but being forc'd to retire, he was ſo " far from perſevering, that on the contrary he took " quite another way: and, at laſt, being a famous " Doctor of the Canon Law in the Univerſity of Paris, " and having got a ſubſtantial Benefice of the Order " of the Knights of Rhodes, he ſet up for a Perſecutor". That Hiſtorian mentions many other Perſons whom he look'd upon as Men, who had receiv'd the Seed into Stony (c) places, and among the Thorns: they had heard the Word, and anon with Joy receiv'd it; but they had no Root in themſelves, they laſted but for a while, ſo that Tribulation or Perſecution ariſing becauſe of the Word, by and by they were offended; the care of this World, and the deceitfulneſs of Riches choaked the Word, and they became unfruitful.

(C) To demand ſuch a thing] Quintin having demanded that all the Inhabitants of the Kingdom ſhould be oblig'd to be Catholicks; that the Non-Chriſtians, that is, the Hereticks ſhould not be (d) admitted into the Converſation and Company of the Chriſtian Subjects; and that (e) for the time to come, all Hereticks ſhould be forbidden to deal in any Commodity (whether it were Books, or any other thing,) added theſe dreadful Words. (f) " And therefore our Requeſt is Juſt, Reaſonable, Holy " and Catholick, and grounded upon the expreſs Command of God, who injoins you, Sir, to grant it us, " repeating the ſaid Command in ſeveral Places, and at " ſeveral times. He ſpeaks of the Idolaters and Gentiles, " Strangers to the Law: Hereticks among Chriſtians " are accounted to be ſuch. Theſe are the Words of " the ſaid Law of God; Be ſure not to contract any " Friendſhip, Confederacy or Marriage with them; don't " ſuffer them to inhabit the Country; take no pity on " them, beat them, ſtrike 'em to Death. Here follows the Reaſon of that Command, leſt they ſhould " make thee Sin againſt me, if thou believeſt their Opinions; which will be an Offence and a Scandal, that " will raiſe my Fury againſt thee, and ſoon after I ſhall " deſtroy thee. Sir, and you Madam, avoid thoſe " horrible and dreadful Threatnings, for the Salvation " of your Souls, and the Preſervation of your Scepter. " This is, Sir, what your Clergy of France propoſe, " and repreſent to your Majeſty in all Simplicity, Obedience, Humility and Submiſſion, concerning the Honour and Service of God in your Kingdom, and for " the Extirpation and Abolition of what is contrary to " it, to wit, of Sects and Hereticks. The whole Matter " is more fully and particularly diſcuſs'd and handled in " their Memorial, to which we expect an Anſwer". Quintin's Speech is to be found intire in the Hiſtory of Preſident la Place. 'Tis plain, that the (g) moſt humble and devout Orators of the Clergy were for ſhedding Blood, if it was neceſſary, ſince they minded the King of Moſes's Order and Threatnings; beſides, Quintin had already ſaid in expreſs Words, that his (h) Majeſty being ſtrong, and Arm'd with Iron, ought to oppoſe the Hereticks, that in order to it, and for no other end, God had put the Sword into his Hands, to protect the Good, and puniſh the Wicked; and that none can deny that a Heretick is capitally Wicked, and conſequently ought to be puniſh'd capitally, being liable to the Sword of the Magiſtrate.

The French Clergy were more cunning 125 Years after; for in a Speech they made to the King ſome Months before the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes, they declar'd that they did not deſire his Majeſty ſhould make uſe of his Power for the Extirpation of the Hereticks. After all, this is no very cunning Artifice, and I don't know whether the too ingenuous plainneſs of the Year 1560, ought not to be preferr'd to the Diſſimulation of the Year 1685. Read theſe Words of Mr. Claude. " (i) " Whilſt the thing was only preparing, the true Authors of the Perſecution did not conceal themſelves, " but us'd their endeavours to make the King appear in it. ... ... (k) When things came to the laſt " Extremity, and to open Force, they conceal'd themſelves as much as they could, and made the King appear in his whole extent. There was nothing to be " heard then, but this ſort of Diſcourſes, The King will " have it ſo, the King is reſolv'd upon it, the King goes " farther than the Clergy deſire. By theſe two means " they have been ſo cunning as to aſcribe to themſelves " the leaſt violent part of that Perſecution, and to charge " the King with the moſt odious part.

(D) Admiral Chatillon complain'd ſo openly.] He had been ſo plainly pointed at in ſome Paſſages of that Speech, that every body caſt his Eyes upon him: beſides, he had been deſcrib'd in a very offenſive manner; and it was plain enough, that there was a deſign to load him with Infamy, and to undo him. Here is one of thoſe Paſſages. " (l) In the firſt " place, we beſeech you, Sir, that if any broacher " of old Hereſies would impiouſly bring in and renew any Sect already condemn'd (as are in univerſum all thoſe of this deplorable and ſeditious " Time,) and in order to it petitions for a Church, and " permiſſion of Inhabiting this Kingdom, (as ſome of " your Provinces have lately done, with great Impudence, in the particular States) that ſuch a Petitioner " be accounted and declared a Heretick, as being a favourer of Hereticks; and that he be proceeded againſt " as ſuch, according to the rigour of the Canonical and " Civil Conſtitutions, ut auferatur malum de medio noſtri". Here is another Paſſage, " (m) Gainas, Captain-General of the Emperor Arcadius's Forces in the " Year 410, or 412, plotting againſt the Crown of his " King, and deſigning to dethrone him, found no better " way to conceal his ill Will, and to hide his Treaſon, " than to demand of him a Church in the City of Conſtantinople, to pray, as he ſaid, and to Sing with his " Brethren, who were all Hereticks, as are now a-days " thoſe Petitioners for Churches".

(E) Vexed at the Railleries and Cenſures, &c] The Author of the Commentaries De ſtatu Religionis & Reipublica in regno Gallia, does not poſitively ſay, that thoſe Railleries, and the Paſquinades that were poſted up in ſeveral Places againſt Quintin, occaſion'd his Death (n); he aſcribes it to that, or to the uneaſineſs of his Conſcience. Preſident la Place and Varillas don't uſe ſuch an Alternative, and the former has not omitted the Rea-that Mortification, and his Affliction was ſo great, that he fell Sick, and died of Grief about the beginning of April, 1561. He was buried at Paris in the Church (F) of St. John of Lateran. I ſhall ſet down the Titles (G) of his Works. Peter Ramus choſe him to be one of the Judges of his Diſputation againſt Govea in the Year 1543. but Quintin, and the other * Judge choſen by Ramus, would not concern themſelves in that Affair, when they ſhould have pronounc'd the Sentence †.

---

* Thuan. ... lib. ... cap. 9. pag. 610.

† Commentaires de l'Etat de la Relig. & Republique B 4. fol. 152. Thuanus lib. 27.

(a) Beza ...

(b) Id. ib. pag. 63.

(c) Matth. ... 20.

(d) La Place ubi ſupra fol. 139. verſo.

(e) Ibid. ... 140.

(f) Ibid. ... 141.

(g) They ... Quintin's Words, ... fol.

(h) Ibid.

(i) Plaintes des Proteſtants, pag. 130.

(k) Ibid. pag. 131.

(l) La Place ubi ſupra fol. 135. verſo.

(m) Ibid. fol. 136. verſo.

(n) Paſſim vero in eum dicteria jactari, libellos affigi: ille denique palam irrideri: tandemque ſeu contumeliarum illarum impatiens, ſeu malè geſtæ rei conſcientia in morbum delapſus vitam cum morte commutavit. Fol. 87.

QUINTUS (CALABER) a Greek Poet, liv'd (A) in the fifth Century, if we may rely on the Conjectures of ſome Learned Men. He compos'd a large Supplement to the Iliads, which contains the Hiſtory of the Trojan War from Hector's Death, 'till the Deſtruction of Troy. Cardinal Beſſarion was the firſt who made (B) that Poem known. He found it in the Church of St. Nicolas near Otranto; and this is the reaſon why the Author was call'd Quintus Calaber. Others being more exact, call him Quintus, or rather Cointus Smyrnæus; for they think he was of Smyrna. Thoſe, who ſay he taught (C) the Youth there, ſeem to me to have no

Reaſons that were alledged in Quintin's Vindication. Theſe are his Words: " (a) Some ſaid, that thoſe who " blamed him upon that account, did not conſider that " his Leſſon was written down for him, which he read " all along, without any Geſtures or Motions uſual to " thoſe who make Speeches; and that the chief Pre- " lates, ſome Cardinals, and others, were Witneſſes and " Comptrollers of what he read. However he died " four Days after, being vexed to ſee ſeveral Pieces pub- " liſh'd againſt him". Now, let us ſee what Varillas ſays. The zealous Calviniſts " (b) were not ſo mode- " rate; for they publiſh'd ſuch a bloody Libel againſt " Quintin, divided into three Parts; the firſt of which " contained the groſs Ignorances, the ſecond the mani- " feſt Calumnies, and the third the malicious Omiſſions " of that Speech; that the Doctor being more touchy " than he ſhould have been, went to Bed after he had " read that Libel, and roſe no more". If Varillas had read that Libel, he would not have call'd it a bloody one: 'Tis a Writing of three Pages by way of Remonſtrance to the Queen, which was not preſented to her, and which came but into few hands. It is to be ſeen at length in Beza's (c) Hiſtory of the Reformed Churches of France, and it does not at all look like a Libel or a Satyr, but rather like a Writing belonging to a Proceſs, that is brought before the Judges, according to the uſual Style and Formalities. There is ſcarce any thing in it beſides the Heads of the Complaints, and theſe Words were added under the Calumnies: We deſire that theſe Accuſations ſhould be proved againſt us, being ready to undergo Puniſhment, upon Condition that the Accuſers, for want of Proof, ſhall be puniſh'd according to the heinouſneſs of the Crimes falſly imputed to us. 'Tis very likely, that the mortal Grief of that Author proceeded from ſome other Writings. Thuanus uſes the Plural Number, (d) and obſerves that Quintin was otherwiſe a good Man, and had formerly been zealous for the Reformation of the Church. There was no medling then with the Proteſtants; they had too many good Writers on their ſide. Here's a Man, who loſt his Life for having raſhly declaimed againſt them. He may be added to thoſe whom I have mention'd in the Article of Hipponax.

(F) Of St. John of Lateran,] His Epitaph is to be ſeen there (e) in theſe Words:

Quintinus Doctor, librorumque Helluo ſummus,
Dum nulla dapis alterius tentatur orexi,
Dumque fidem pro qua calamo pugnavit & ore
Fortiter, affligi videt, acrius & dolet, ex hoc Orbe, invitus, non invitis, migrat amicis.
Obiit nona Aprilis 1561.

Obſerve, that whereas others aſcribe his Death to the Grief he conceiv'd for the abuſive Reflections that were made upon him; the Author of his Epitaph aſcribes it to his being ſenſibly affected with the Affliction of the Church. This is a Subterfuge which a falſe Zeal has made long ago very common.

(G) The Titles of his Books.] Melita Inſulæ deſcriptio. Tractatus de ventis, & nautica buxula ventorum indice. Scholia in Tertulliani librum de præſcriptionibus hæreticorum (e). Repetitæ Prælectiones Capituli de multa providentia, de præbendis & dignitatibus, & Cap. novit. de judiciis. The Plurality of Benefices, and the Ariſtocracy of the Chriſtian Religion, are the Subject of this laſt Book. Octoginta quinque Regulæ ſeu Canones Apoſtolorum, cum vetuſtis Joannis Monachi Zonaræ ſcholiis Latine modo verſis. Speculum Sacerdotii. Synodus Gangrenſis explicata commentariolis ex Gratiani diſtinctione trigeſima. Hæreticorum Catalogus & Hiſtoria ex Gratiano. He tranſlated into Latin the Syntagma Canonum Græcorum, written by Matthew Blaſtares, a Monk. That Tranſlation was never printed, it is in the Library of the French King (g).

(A) Lived in the fifth Century, if we may rely upon the Conjectures.] Rhodomanus (h) is in the right to ſay, that he did not live before the great Conqueſt of the Roman People: for he brings in the Sooth-ſayer Calchas, foretelling that Æneas ſhould reign in Italy, and that his Poſterity ſhould extend their Empire from the Eaſt to the Weſt.

(i) Ἐκ τοῦ δ᾽ αὖ γένος μετόπισθεν ἀνάξειν,
Ἄχρις ἐπ᾽ ἀντολίην τε καὶ ἀκάματον δύσιν ἐλθεῖν.
. . . . . Ejuſque exinde progenies regnet,
Donec ad ortum & occaſum inſuperabilem imperii fines extendat.

Beſides he mentions (k) the Exerciſes of the Circus, as they were uſed under the Roman Emperors. One may be therefore perſuaded, that he did not live before the firſt Cæſars: But this being too general to ſatisfie an Inquiſitive Perſon, a more limited Conjecture has been drawn from his Style: Rhodomanus thinks, that the Character of his Muſe is ſo like that of Tryphiodorus, and Coluthus, &c. that 'tis very likely they lived at the ſame time. (l) Character ipſe carminis γραμματικώτερον elaboratus oſtendit, eum Coluthi (qui ad quintum Chriſti nati ſeculum poëma lepidiſſimum de Helenes raptu conſcripſit) aliorumque illa ætate vigentium, æqualem aut vicinum fuiſſe. Enimvero ſi dictionem Cointi, Coluthi, Tryphiodori, Muſæi, (illum dico, qui Leandri Heruſque amores cecinit) & Nonni, ad examen Criticum vocaris, ſimillimam & ferè eandem ſermonis ideam ſtructuræque rationem deprehendes: unde ætate quoque propinquos inter ſe fuiſſe ratiocineris. What Rhodomanus adds, that the Name Cointus, of a Latin Original, ſhews, that this Poet was made a Roman Citizen, is but a weak Confirmation of what he had ſaid juſt before; for, tho' that Poet had lived before Cicero, he might have been honoured with the Freedom of Rome. Reineſius (m) has a good Reaſon to laugh at thoſe, who pretend that he lived under one of the Emperors of the Family Julia. They ground their Opinion on the Oracle of Calchas, and they pretend that Nero being the laſt of the Family of the firſt Cæſar, that Poet muſt have lived at fartheſt under the Empire of Nero. This is a wrong way of drawing Conſequences. At this very Day our Poets might bring in Calchas, foretelling ſuch a thing, tho' the Roman Empire has been diſmembred long ſince. Cointus needed not conſider the Emperors, who pretended to be deſcended from Æneas: It was enough for him, that the City built by Romulus, who was deſcended from Æneas, did rule or had ruled from Eaſt to Weſt.

(B) Is the firſt, who made that Poem known.] Here is a Paſſage of Conſtantin Laſcaris. Poeſis autem Homericiſſimi Quinti jam multo tempore omnibus ignota fuit, & tanquam extincta: ſed propius Beſſarion Nicænus Cardinalis Tuſculani, ille ſane quam bonus & vere doctus, & ut Homericè dixerim, ſimilis Deo vir, aliaque plurima in nos, & hanc ex Apulia cum ſervaſſet, volentibus tradidit, quam & ipſe olim deſiderabam (n). Very few Authors had mention'd that Poem (o): And therefore we ought the leſs to be ſurpriz'd that Quintus Curtius has not been mention'd for ſo many Ages. The firſt Edition of our Cointus is that of Aldus Manutius: It was full of Faults (p).

(C) That he taught the Youth at Smyrna.] Here is Rhodomanus's Argument. Since our Cointus ſays, that he fed the Muſes Sheep in the fine Garden of Smyrna, it ought to be inferr'd from it, that he was Maſter of a famous School on that Coaſt of Ionia. It was no mean School; for he ſays that his Scholars were illuſtrious: He was therefore one of thoſe Profeſſors of Philoſophy and Eloquence, who were call'd Sophiſts. This is the Subſtance of Rhodomanus's Argument. I ſhall ſet down his own Words at length. (q) Ex indicio iſto, quod de ſe ipſe facit, Muſarum oves in liberali Smyrnæ horto ſe paviſſe teſtatus ſcholam in Ionia littore iſto nec infrequentem nec incelebrem habuiſſe Poetam noſtrum, colligere eſt. Nec triviale magiſterium id fuiſſe apparet inde, quod oves ſuas, id eſt diſcipulos, nobiles ſeu fama illuſtres, (περικλυτὰ) epitheto ſatis emphatico, appellat, unde ſi divinare licet, id tandem elicimus, Cointum fuiſſe ex profeſſione illorum, quos Sophiſtas, id eſt philoſophiæ & eloquentiæ

---

* A Diſciple of Ramus, Named John à Beaumont.

† See Joan. de Launoy De varia Ariſtotelis fortuna, cap. 15. p. m. 72. and the Remark Y of the Article Ramus.

(a) La Place ubi ſupra fol. 151. verſo.

(b) Varillas Charles IX. tom. 1. pag. 18. Dutch Edit.

(c) Tom. 1. pag. 137.

(d) Sane ob id mordacibus libellis ac dicteriis peritus tantum dolorem cepit, ut contracto inde morbo paulo poſt deceſſerit, homo alioqui minime malus, ſed Decretalis Juriſquam verum agendarum peritia clarior, & qui ſerio de emendanda Eccleſia aliquando cogitaverat. Thuanus lib. 27.

(e) Vide Doujat. ubi ſupra.

(f) Epit. Biblioth. Geſneri.

(g) Doujat. Prænot. Canon. lib. 5. cap. 8.

(h) Laurent. Rhodomannus, in præfat. ad Cointum Smyrnæum.

(i) Cointus Smyrnæus lib. 13. pag. 195. m. 6.

(k) Ibid.

(l) Rhodomannus, fol. verſo.

(m) Tom. Reineſius, epiſt. 67. ad Rupert. pag. 553.

(n) Conſtant. Laſcaris in Grammatica, apud Lorenzo Craſſo, Iſtoria de' poeti Greci, pag. 456.

(o) Hujus præter unum atque alterum è Græcis, & quidem recentioribus, nemo in ſcriptis ſuis mentionem facit. Rhodoman. in præfat.

(p) Geſner in Bibliotheca, fol. 575.

(q) Rhodom. ubi ſupra fol. †† 2. verſo.

no good grounds for it. The Learned Reinesius pretends he ought not to be diſtinguiſh'd from a (D) Grammarian call'd Corintus, of whom there is a Book concerning the Dialects. The beſt Edition of (E) Quintus Calaber's Poem is that of Rhodomannus. Some Criticks admire Cointus; others ſpeak of him with great Contempt. See the Paſſages quoted by Lorenzo Craſſo *, and Mr. Baillet's † Jugemens des Savans. One Udenus Niſielius praiſes him for ſome things, and blames him for ſome others. See his Progymnaſmata; 'tis an Italian Book.

QUIRINUS (PUBLIUS SULPICIUS) Conſul * in the Year of Rome 742, was born at Lanuvium, † and was not of the Patrician Family Sulpicia. The Services he did Auguſtus with great Zeal and Application, eſpecially in the War, were the only cauſe of his Advancement. After his Conſulſhip he had the Command of an Army in Cilicia β, in order to ſubdue a γ Nation, which δ was accounted the moſt unconquerable of that Country. He ζ overcame them by Famine, for which he had η the Honour of a Triumph. Some place this in the time wherein our Saviour was born, and believe, that tho' there was then another Governor in Syria, yet Auguſtus, in conſideration of the Glory which Quirinus had acquir'd, gave him a ſpecial Commiſſion for the Taxation mention'd by St. Luke θ; for 'tis not queſtion'd, that he who is call'd Cyrenius in the κ Scripture, is the ſame with our Quirinus. The Eſteem Auguſtus had for him, did eminently appear when he made him Governor to Caius Cæſar his Grandſon after the Death of Lollius, who had been in that Poſt. We have ſeen in another λ Place what difference Tiberius made between thoſe two Governors of Caius Cæſar. Quirinus's Marriage with Æmilia Lepida, is a very good proof of the conſideration he was in; for ſhe was at firſt deſign'd μ for Lucius Cæſar, Auguſtus's Grandſon.

quentia magiſtros, Grammaticos, qui Poëtarum interpretes erant, & juventutis ſcholaſticæ doctores; florens adhuc Græcia magnificabat. Quid enim aliud per Muſarum hortum & oves, præter quam ſcholam, & diſcipulos in ea doctrina & eloquentiæ ſtudiis addictos, intelligi exiſtimemus? He had ſaid a little before: (a) Cum tota ejus vita ignorantiæ tenebris involuta ſit, patria tamen ſola vindiciis inde aſſerta eſt. Nam libro XIV. & hanc & vitæ quodam modo genus exprimit; ubi ſe Muſarum ovibus paſcendis Smyrnæ operam dediſſe profitetur. Here is a ſurprizing Inſtance of Diſtraction. I muſt firſt ſet down the Greek Works of Cointus: They are not in the 14th Book, as Rhodomannus ſays, but in the 12th; and they contain an Invocation of the Muſes, occaſion'd by the Ennumeration of thoſe, who were ſo courageous as to get into the wooden Horſe.

Τούς (b) μοι νῦν καθ᾽ ἕκαστον ἀνειρομένῳ σάφα μοῦσαι
Ἔσπεθ᾽, ὅσοι κατέβησαν ἔσω πολυχανδέος ἵππου.
Ὑμεῖς γὰρ πᾶσάν μοι ἐνὶ φρεσὶ θῆκατ᾽ ἀοιδὴν,
Πρίν μοι ἀμφὶ παρειὰ κατασκίδνασθαι ἴουλον,
Σμύρνης ἐν δαπέδοισι περικλυτὰ μῆλα νέμοντι.

Quos mihi nunc ſingulatim exquirenti, Muſæ perſpicuè
Recenſete quotquot in multicapacem equum conſcenderunt.
Nam vos omnigenum animo meo carmen indidiſtis,
Antequam mihi circa genas lanugo ſpargeretur,
In campis Smyrnæ inclytas oves paſcenti.

'Tis plain, the Author tells the Muſes that they made him a Poet, when being as yet beardleſs, he fed Sheep in the Fields of Smyrna. How can this ſignifie, that he taught the Youth, that he had a famous School, and illuſtrious Scholars? How could a Boy, who had as yet no Beard, exerciſe ſuch a Profeſſion? How could Rhodomannus be ſo heedleſs, tho' he ſpent many Years upon that Poem, tho' he tranſlated it into Latin, and made an Abridgment of it in Greek and Latin Verſe? Where did he find that Cointus boaſts of having fed (c) the Muſes Sheep? Now let us ſee the Lazineſs of another Learned Man. (d) Nunc veriſimilius Smyrnæum nuncupant: quia ipſe lib. xiv. dicat, ſe περικλυτοῖς ſive illuſtribus Muſarum ovibus Smyrnæ paſcendis operam dediſſe: ex quo ſi de patria haud certo colligitur, ſaltem videmus ſcholam non infrequentem præſtantium diſcipulorum habuiſſe Smyrnæ. Voſſius, without taking the Pains to conſult Cointus, tranſcribed what he found in Rhodomannus's Preface: He took out of it the wrong Quotation of the 14th Book, and the falſe Gloſs of the Muſes Sheep, with the whole Conſequence which that Tranſlator drew from it. He, and other Learned Men, have done the like a thouſand times. I wonder that Reineſius ſhould approve ſuch an Explication of thoſe Verſes of Cointus: He will have it alſo, that it appears from them that this Poet was a School-maſter at Smyrna. Convenit autem, ſays he (e), ut quod maximè, Grammatico, qualis fuit Corintus, ludimagiſtri officio fungi & docere pueros, quod noſter de ſe profitetur (f) l. 11. verſibus dulciſſimis: neque falſi ſunt viri docti imprimis Parrhaſius, & diligentiſſimus ejus recenſitor ac interpres Laur. Rhodomannus, qui eos de inſtitutione ſcholaſtica apud Smyrnenſes interpretati ſunt. What he ſays in the next Words is better grounded: He rejects the Opinion of thoſe, who pretend that Cointus deſign'd only, by thoſe Verſes, to boaſt of his following Homer. (g) Dubitoque igitur quenquam ita ſimplicem eſſe, qui Smyrnæ oves paſcere idem eſſe ac Homerum ſequi, quem bona pars Smyrnæum cenſuit, credere velit, aut ita perſpicacem qui duo iſta eadem eſſe videre poſſit. Mihi quidem tam beato eſſe nondum contigit, & habeo pro violenta & à ſenſu Poëtæ alieniſſima eam expoſitionem. As for me, I believe the whole Myſtery lyes in an Imitation of Heſiod. Read theſe Words of Tanaquillus Faber. (h) Heſiod became a Poet, as he was feeding his Sheep: I hope you'll believe him; for he ſaies ſo himſelf: And thoſe, who ſaid it after him, ſaid it only upon the Credit of that Poet, or upon the Report of the Shepherds of Bœotia, to whom that Adventure appear'd ſo wonderful, that they made a Song about it, which is loſt. Cointus, if I am not miſtaken, meant that the Muſes had done him the ſame Favour, as they had done to Heſiod (i). To conclude, I ſhall obſerve, that Volaterran, and ſome others, make him a Roman, without any ſhew of Reaſon; and that Geſner (k) was in the wrong to fancy that Volaterran does not ſpeak of the ſame Poet, whoſe 14 Books derelictorum ab Homero were publiſh'd by Aldus. That Fault has not been mended by thoſe, who abridged Geſner's Bibliotheque. Like him, they made two Articles of Quintus Poeta Romanus, mention'd by Volaterran, and of Quintus Calaber, printed by Aldus.

(D) From a Grammarian call'd Corintus.] Theſe are Reineſius's Words: (l) Fuit Corintus Grammaticus, cujus libellum de dialectis ad Studioſum quendam juvenem ſcriptum habemus editum cum adpendice H. Stephani, eumque citat Joh. Petrus Nunneſ. not. ad Phrynichum Sylburg. ſpicil. ad Herod. Betuleius not. ad Lact. l. 1. c. 6. Joh. Talenton. l. 2. rer. recondit. cap. 19. è cujus vero nomine κόριντος amiſſa una literula vel prætervisa à primo deſcriptore exiit κόϊντος. It muſt be confeſs'd, that the Word κόριντος might eaſily have been changed into κόϊντος; and that (m) a Grammatical Genius does very much appear in this Author's Poem. Reineſius does fully prove it. He obſerves, that the Grammarian Corintus lived after John Philoponus, in the VI or VII Century; and that he cannot be later, ſince he was quoted by Tzetzes. I am amazed at this; for there is a vaſt ſpace of Time between the VII Century, and that wherein (n) Tzetzes lived. (o) Fuit autem poſt Johannem Gramm. Alexandrinum, d. Philoponum, teſte ipſo in proœm. l. de dial. inter mediæ ætatis Græcos ſeculo ſexto ſeptimove, quibus Græcia etſi à politia degeneraſſet plurimum, viros tamen doctos & memorandos aliquos aluit. . . . Pauci ſunt, quos nominare poſſumus iſtorum temporum: Johannes Stobæus, Georgius Piſides, Theophyl. Simocates, Thomas & Coprogenius magiſtri, Euphronius, Moſchopulus, Chœroboſcus, Demetrius Triclinius, Georg. Syncellus, Euſtathius, & extremo octavi Photius, & qui ex ejus doctiſſimis epiſtolis noti ſunt: prioribus inter memoratos etiam adcenſeri debet Corintus iſte. Fuiſſe in æſtimio & non inferiorem tempore quàm determinavi inde apparet, quod laudantur a γραμματικωτάτῳ Tzetze in Chiliad. & comm. ad Lycophr. ubi de Machaone.

(E) The beſt Edition . . . . is that of Rhodomanus.] I have not that of Hanaw 1604, mention'd in the Catalogue of the Bodleian Library; but I have that of 1614, ex officina Aubriana. It contains the whole Performance of Rhodomanus upon that Author, and Claudius Dauſquejus's Notes in Quintum Calabrum, Tryphiodorum & Colu-

(h) Tanaq. Faber, Vie des poëtes Grecs, pag. m. 10.

(i) Confer quæ ſupra in the Article Æſchylus, Remark C.

(k) In Bibliotb. fol. 575. where he ſets down Volaterran's Words.

(l) Reineſius ubi ſupra pag. 591.

(m) Non autem niſi τρίβωνα quendam Grammaticum & conſummatæ peritiæ literatorem iſta Paraleipomena ſcripſiſſe patet inprimis ex accurata & curioſa valde locorum deſcriptione, quæ diligentius multo enarrat, quam aliquis de vulgo Poëta taceret, ut cum &c. Reineſius ibid.

(n) Tzetzes lived at the end of the XII. Century. See Nicolas Gerbelius's Preface upon Tzetzes.

(o) Id. ib. pag. 592.

ſon. She was unfortunate in her Marriage; Quirinus divorced her, and (A) many Years after he accuſed her of ſeveral Crimes for which ſhe was condemn'd to Baniſhment. This Proceeding of Quirinus appeared ſo ſtrange, that People begun to pity (B) Lepida, tho' ſhe was infamous and guilty. The Victory he obtain'd over her was publickly abhorred, and they did not fail, on that Occaſion, to compare his mean Birth with the noble Extraction of that Lady. He had alſo render'd himſelf odious by his ſordid way of ſpending his old Age in the midſt of a plentiful Eſtate. He died in the Year of Rome 774; and at Tiberius's Deſire they made him a publick Funeral χ. If any one deſires to know whether he ought to be call'd Quirinus, or †† Quirinius, he needs only read Ryckius's Notes on Tacitus's Annals, pag. 57. Joſephus calls † him Κυρήνιος, Cyrenius, and ſays that he was a Man, who had gone thro' all Employments, and one of the moſt illuſtrious of thoſe Times.

χ Sueton. [illegible] cap. [illegible]

†† He is call'd in moſt Editions of Tacitus.

† Joſeph. Antiq. Judaic. lib. 18. cap. 1. pag. 616.

Coluthum. One Jodocus Valarans made a Tranſlation of Cointus in Proſe, which was printed at Lyons in 1541. Bernardin Baldus made another.

(A) He divorc'd her, and many years after he accuſed her of ſeveral Crimes.] He accuſed her of having ſuppoſed that ſhe had had a Child by him. She might have had a great Motive for ſuch a Suppoſition; for he was very rich, and had no Children. The other Accuſations were about Adultery, poiſoning, and conſulting the Diviners concerning the Imperial Family. (a) At Romæ Lepida, cui ſuper Æmiliorum decus L. Sulla ac Cn. Pompeius proavi erant, defertur ſimulaviſſe partum ex P. Quirino divite, atque orbo. adjiciebantur adulteria, venena, quæſitumque per Chaldæos in domum Cæſaris, defendente ream Manio Lepido fratre. Quirinus poſt dictum repudium adhuc infenſus, quamvis infami ac nocenti miſerationem addiderat. It appears from the beginning of this Paſſage, that Æmilia Lepida was great Grand-daughter of Sylla and Pompey. She was not the better for it. I wonder that Suetonius, who wrote after Tacitus, ſhould mention but one Accuſation: He only ſays, that Lepida was accuſed of attempting to poyſon her Husband. (b) Condemnatam & generoſiſſimam fœminam Lepidam, in gratiam Quirini conſularis praedivitis, & orbi, qui dimiſſam eam e matrimonio poſt vigeſimum annum veneni olim in ſe comparati arguebat. This Omiſſion of Suetonius is attended with another Fault; for he ſays, that ſhe was condemned 20 years after ſhe had been divorc'd. He is not exact in his Chronology. I prove it thus: That Lady was condemn'd in the Year 773. There had been a Deſign to marry her to Lucius Cæſar, Auguſtus's Grand-Son, and therefore it muſt be ſaid, that ſhe did not marry Quirinus 'till after the Death of that young Prince. But he died in the Year 755, according to Arch-biſhop Uſher's, and Father (c) Noris's Calculation; or in the Year 756, according to Petavius; or in the Year 757, according to (d) Valeſius. 'Tis not likely that Quirinus ſhould have divorc'd her before he had lived a year with her; and therefore it is not true, that in 773 ſhe had been divorc'd 20 Years. The Commentators on Suetonius take no notice of this Difficulty, tho' it deſerved to be clear'd. Father Noris (e) had Reaſon to find fault with Arch-biſhop Uſher for ſaying, on the one hand, that Lucius Cæſar died in the Year 755; and on the other, that Lepida was married to Quirinus in the Year 753. Theſe two things are inconſiſtent, ſince it is undeniable that Quirinus married after the Death of Lucius Cæſar: Will any Body ſay, that there was a Deſign to marry a Woman to the Emperor's Grand-Son, who had been left, or put away by Quirinus? The Learned Uſher fell into this Miſtake, becauſe he truſted Suetonius, that is, becauſe he thought Suetonius had exactly computed the Years between Lepida's Divorce, and her Trial. He ſhould not have had ſo good an Opinion of him. I muſt not forget, that Tiberius, after the Condemnation of this Woman, declared at laſt that he was certainly inform'd by Quirinus's Servants, that ſhe had endeavour'd to poiſon her Husband. (f) Dein tormentis ſervorum patefacta ſunt flagitia, itumque in ſententiam Rubellii Blandi, a quo aqua atque igni arcebatur: huic Druſus adſenſit, quamquam alii mitius conſuiſſent, mox Scauro qui filiam ex ea genuerat, datum, ne bona publicarentur. Tum demum aperuit Tiberius, compertum ſibi etiam ex P. Quirini ſervis, veneno eum à Lepida petitum. We ſhall ſee, that in all likelyhood Lepida was juſtly condemn'd.

(B) People began to pity Lepida, tho' ſhe was infamous and guilty.] If it cannot be ſaid, that Tacitus reflected too much upon Tiberius, much leſs can it be affirm'd, that he was willing to ſpare him. Seeing therefore he acknowledges, that Lepida (g) was guilty, and had loſt her Reputation, we may very well believe that the thing was notorious. He does not deny, that Tiberius made ſome Steps during that Tryal, whereby it appear'd, that he was deſirous that Lepida ſhould be puniſh'd; but he owns, that one might ſuſpect from ſome other Steps, that he had a mind ſhe ſhould go unpuniſh'd. (h) Haud facile quis diſpexerit illa in cognitione mentem Principis, adeo vertit ac miſcuit iræ & clementiæ ſigna. The worſt that can be ſaid is, That Tiberius promoted under hand the Verification of the Crimes of which Lepida was accuſed. This cannot be call'd an Oppreſſion of Innocence, an Unjuſtice, a Tyranny, &c. Let us conclude, that the Lady deſerv'd the Puniſhment ſhe ſuffer'd. Nevertheleſs the People expreſs'd their Indignation againſt the Authors of the Tryal, and openly complain'd, with horrid Imprecations, that ſo illuſtrious a Lady was ſacrificed to Quirinus. She had moved the People with the Complaints ſhe made during the Celebration of the publick Games; and beſides, Quirinus had render'd himſelf odious. This was the great Point; for they who draw upon themſelves the hatred of the People, prompt 'em to favour and cheriſh the Perſons whom they attack, tho' they have no Merit, and even tho' they be very guilty. (i) Quirinus quamvis infami ac nocenti miſerationem addiderat. . . . . . (k) Lepida ludorum diebus, qui cognitionem intervenerant, theatrum cum claris feminis ingreſſa, lamentatione flebili majores ſuos ciens, ipſumque Pompeium, cujus ea monumenta, & adſtantes imagines viſebantur, tantum miſericordiæ permovit, ut effuſi in lacrymas, ſæva & deteſtanda Quirino clamarent, cujus ſenectæ atque orbitati, & obſcuriſſimæ domui, deſtinata quondam uxor L. Cæſari, ac divo Auguſto nurus, dederetur. The Puniſhment inflicted upon Lepida did but increaſe (l) the hatred of the People againſt Quirinus.

(a) Tacitus Annal. lib. 3. cap. 22.

(b) Sueton. in Tiberio cap. 49.

(c) See Father Noris's Cenotaphia Piſana, page 258, & 260.

(d) In notis ad excerpta Dionis page 90. See Noris ibid. pag. 259.

(e) Noris ibid. pag. 258.

(f) Tacit. Ann. lib. 3, cap. 23.

(g) Quamvis infami ac nocenti. Id. ib. cap. 22.

(h) Id. ib.

(i) Id. ib.

(k) Id. ib. cap. 23.

(l) Sed ceteris haud læta memoria Quirini erat, ob intenta, ut memoravi, Lepidæ pericula ſordidamque & præpotentem ſenectam. Id. ibid. cap. 48.

RACAN

R.

RACAN (HONORAT DE BEUIL, MARQUIS DE) the Son of a Knight of the King's Orders, was born at la Roche Racan in Touraine † in the Year * 1589. He was the King's § Page in the Year 1605. and as he begun then to make Verſes, he got himſelf acquainted with Malherbe, of whom he learn'd whatever he knew of the French Poetry . . . . This Acquaintance and Friendſhip with Malherbe laſted 'till he died, which happen'd in 1628 ‡. He was admitted into the French Academy, when it was founded, in which he caus'd a Diſcourſe § againſt Learning to be read the 9th of July, 1635. If he had been at Paris, he would have ſpoken it himſelf; but he was in his Province. He publiſh'd that Diſcourſe with ſome of his Poems ††. He died in the Year 1670. and was ſucceeded in the Academy by Mr. de la Chambre, Rector of St. Bartholomew's. He happen'd one Day to make a Quatrain exactly like that of a Poet (Z) whom he thought he had never read. I ſhall ſay in another ‡ place, that he was extreamly ſenſible to the Favours of the Ladies.

RADZIWIL (NICOLAS) IV. of that (A) Name, Palatin of Vilna, Great Marſhal and Chancellor of Lithuania in the XVI Century, was a very illuſtrious Man. He travell'd almoſt all over Europe, and was ſo expert in bodily Exerciſes, that no Gentleman of his

(Z) Like that of a Poet, whom he thought he had never read.] Mr. Menage tells us a great many Particulars, which deſerve to be ſet down in this place. " (a) I " have often heard Mr. Chapelain ſay, That he and Mr. " d'Andilli had made that ſame (b) Verſe, without " knowing that it was Malherbe's. And whilſt I am " writing this Remark, I underſtand by Mr. Furetiere, " that the ſame thing has happen'd to him. I have " likewiſe heard often Mr. Corneille ſay, That he had " made, in his Polyeuctes, theſe two famous Verſes con- " cerning Fortune,

" Et comme elle a l'éclat du verre,
" Elle en a la fragilité.

That is,

" And as ſhe has the Luſtre of bright Glaſs,
" So ſhe the Brittleneſs has too,

" without knowing that they were Mr. Godeau's; for " they were made firſt of all by Mr. Godeau, Biſhop of " Vence, in his Ode to Cardinal Richelieu, fifteen Years " before Mr. Corneille made 'em in his Polyeuctes. It is " no uncommon thing thus to hit on the Thoughts and " Expreſſions of others. Porphyrius in a Fragment of " his Book concerning Philology, quoted by Euſebius in " the third Chapter of the tenth Book of his Præparatio Evangelica, mentions one Aretades, who had writ- " ten a whole Treatiſe of ſuch Hits. . . . . . I ſay, " it is a pretty common thing thus to hit upon the " ſame Thought and Expreſſion of another Man; eſpe- " cially when one has formerly ſeen the ſame Thought " and the ſame Expreſſion, as Mr. d'Andilli, Mr. Cha- " pelain, and Mr Furetiere, had certainly ſeen that Verſe " of Malherbe, and Mr. Corneille thoſe two Verſes of " Mr. Godeau; for it often falls out, that a thing re- " mains in our Mind, when the Author of it is forgot- " ten. But what happen'd to Mr. de Racan is very ex- " traordinary. In the Year 1608, being in Garriſon at " Calais, he made theſe four Verſes at 19 Years of " Age:

" Eſtime qui voudra la mort épouventable,
" Et la face l'horreur de tous les animaux;
" Quant à moy je la tiens pour le poinct deſirable
" Où commencent nos biens, & finiſſent nos maux.

" Some time after being at Paris, and repeating thoſe " Verſes as his own to his Friend Ivrante, his Friend " told him, that he ſhould not impoſe upon him, that " he knew very well thoſe Verſes were the firſt " Quatrain of Mathieu's Book, intitled, Les Tablettes " de la vie & de la mort. Mr. de Racan, who had ne- " ver ſeen that Book, denied obſtinately, and for a con- " ſiderable time, that Mathieu had made thoſe Verſes, " 'till Ivrante brought Mathieu's Book, and ſhew'd " him the Verſes, at which Mr. de Racan was not a " little amazed. I don't queſtion the Truth of this Sto- " ry, being fully perſuaded that Mr. de Racan, who " told it me often in the Preſence of ſeveral People, is " a very ſincere Man. But I doubt very much of what " Leonardo Salviati ſays, in the firſt Book of his Avver- " timenti della Lingua Italiana, that a Poet of his time, " who had never ſeen Cardinal Bembo's Sonnets, had " made ſome exactly like them". You ſee that Mr. Menage makes a great difference between Racan's Adventure, and thoſe of the other Poets, whom he names: He finds ſomething in the firſt that is more extraordinary. I ſhould judge otherwiſe of it, if I was to ſay what I think of it. Few People are ignorant, that well bred Children are taught ſome Moral and Pious Maxims; and that Care is taken, even before they can read, to make 'em get by heart ſome Sententious Staffs of Verſes. The Proteſtants pitch upon ſome Paſſages of David's Pſalms; or, as the Catholicks do, upon ſome Quatrains of Pibrac, or of another (c) Poet of the ſame Nature, which are never wanting in any Country. Without doubt little Racan, when he was but 5 or 6 Years of Age, heard his Governeſs, or his Mother, repeat ſome of thoſe fine Quatrains, or ſome of Mathieu's, which are generally bound up with Pibrac. The Traces that were imprinted on his Brain, ſunk in, and remain'd ſo ſeveral Years; afterwards they appear'd again, and ſeem'd to him an Object intirely new, without rouſing up the Remembrance of the Author, or of the Book, which had occaſion'd them. He therefore thought himſelf to be the Author of thoſe four Verſes, tho' at the bottom they were only an imperfect Reminiſcence. If a Man would carefully examine himſelf, he would find, upon a thouſand Occaſions, that what he takes to be his own Invention, is a thing that he has heard or read; but he did not remember that Circumſtance. Here follow ſome Verſes of Moliere, which confirm what I have ſaid concerning the Education of Children: 'Tis a Cenſure of a Cocquet: A Father ſpeaks to his Daughter:

Voilà (d), voilà le fruit de ces empreſſemens,
Qu'on vous voit nuit & jour à lire vos Romans:
De colibets d'amour vôtre tête eſt remplie,
Et vous parlez de Dieu bien moins que de Clelie.
Jettez moi dans le feu tous ces méchans écrits,
Qui gâtent tous les jours tant de jeunes eſprits:
Liſez moi comme il faut, au lieu de ces ſornettes,
Les quatrains de Pibrac, & les doctes Tablettes
Du Conſeiller Matthieu, ouvrage de valeur,
Et plein de beaux dictons à reciter par cœur:
La guide des pécheurs eſt encor un bon livre,
C'eſt là qu'en peu de tems on apprend à bien vivre,
Et ſi vous n'aviez leu que ces moralitez,
Vous ſçauriez un peu mieux ſuivre mes volontez.

That is,

See, ſee the Fruit of having in your hands,
And reading Day and Night naughty Romances.
Your Head is fill'd with nothing but Amours,
And Clelia, than your God, takes up more hours.
Burn all thoſe wicked Books, caſt them away;
For they ſpoil ſeveral young Folks every Day.
Inſtead of Trifles, pray, read, as you ſhould do Pibrac's Quatrains, the learned Tablettes too
Of Councellor Matthieu; a Book of Worth,
Full of good Sayings, fit to be brought forth.
The Guide of Sinners, a good Book likewiſe,
By which you'll learn to live well, if you're wiſe.
If you had read thoſe Moral Things, I ſay,
You'd better know my Will how to obey.

(A) IV. of that Name] Jagello being converted to Chriſtianity, and having united Lithuania his Country to the Crown of Poland, which had been conferr'd upon him, created a Lord, called Radziwil, Palatin of Vilna, who, after his Example, was become a Chriſtian. This Palatin took the Name of Nicolas at his Baptiſm, and order'd that for the time to come, all the eldeſt Sons

---

§ Peliſſon Hiſt. de l'Academie Franç. pag.
* Speaking in the Remark that he was 19 Years of Age in the Year 1608.
† Vie de Malherbe pag.
‡ Ibid. pag. 6.
§ Peliſſon ubi ſupra pag. 103.
†† Ibid.
‡ In the Remark F. of the Article Termes.

(a) Menage, obſervations ſur Malherbe, pag. He has inſerted all this in the Anti-Baillet, tom. 2. p.

(b) That is, d'arbitre de la paix, de foudres de la guerre, which is in Malherbe's Paraphraſe upon the 145 Pſalm.

(c) There is a Book intituled, Le miroir de vertu & le chemin de bien vivre. 'Tis a Collection of Chriſtian and moral Quatrains by Peter Habert, Counſellor and Secretary to the King.

(d) Moliere, Sganarelle ou le cocu imaginaire ſcene 1.

Age equall'd him in it. He had a great ſhare in the Love and Eſteem of King Sigiſmund Auguſtus; he was made Captain of his Guards, and Commanded his Armies three times in Livonia, where he obtain'd a ſignal Victory over the Germans, whereby they loſt that Province, which was ſubjected to Poland. He brought the Archbiſhop of Riga, and the Great Maſter of the Knights of Livonia to the King, and deliver'd to him in a full Senate the Seal of that Order, and the Croſs which the Great Maſter wore about his Neck. That noble Expedition crown'd him with Glory. When he was ſent Ambaſſador to the Court of Charles V. and of Ferdinand King of the Romans, he was Godfather to the Arch-Duke Erneſtus. He died in the Year 1567. and was carried to his Grave upon the (B) Shoulders of his four Sons †. I muſt not forget that he embrac'd the Proteſtant Religion, and that he caus'd the Bible to be Printed in the Poliſh Language. He made a very (D) briſk Anſwer to Lippoman the Apoſtolical Nuncio, who had given him ſome reproachful Words. The Clergy of Vilna being not willing to permit the Miniſters to preach in the Churches, he made 'em preach in the Court of his Houſe, over againſt St. John's Church *. The firſt Synod of the Reformed was held under his Protection at Vilna in December 1557 ‡. He had a ° Wife, who was no leſs zealous than he to ſettle the Reformation §. There was at that time one Chriſtopher RADZIWIL, who embrac'd the Proteſtant Religion; and, 'tis ſaid, that the Diſcovery of ſome Monkiſh (E) Impoſtures occaſion'd his Change. Others call ‖ him Nicolas, and ſay he was Couſin-German to him, who makes the ſubject of this Article, and Brother of Barbara Radziwil, who Married Sigiſmund Auguſtus, King of Poland, and who died the 12th of May, 1551. They obſerve, that the Church which he caus'd to be built for the Reformed in the City of Vilna, of which he was Palatin, was honour'd with a fine Privilege by King Stephen Battori in the Year 1579. and that he died the

‖ See the Remark E at the end.

Sons of his Family ſhould be call'd Nicolas. He liv'd above a hundred Years (a). Nicolas the IId. his only Son, Palatin of Vilna, ſerv'd the Republick gloriouſly under ſix Kings ſucceſſively. He died being 99 Years old (b). Nicolas III, the eldeſt of his four Sons, Palatin of Vilna, was made a Prince of the Empire, by the Emperor Maximilian I. and died full of Glory, being above 70 Years of Age (c). George Radziwil his Brother, Palatin of Kiovia, Marſhal of the Court, Caſtellan of Vilna, and great General of Lithuania, was the Father of Barbara Radziwil, the ſecond Wife of King Sigiſmund Auguſtus. He died in the Year 1565 (d). John Radziwil his Brother, the youngeſt of the four Sons of Nicolas II. was made a Senator of the Kingdom by King Sigiſmund I. He was afterwards Caſtellan of Troci, and at laſt Great Marſhal of Lithuania. He took a Journey to Rome under the Pontificate of Julius II. (e) He left an only Son, who is Nicolas Radziwil IV, of that Name (f), who makes the Subject of this Article.

(B) And was carried to his Grave (g) upon the Shoulders of his four Sons.] You'll ſee their Names and Dignities in theſe Latin Words; (h) Quatuor filios, itidem bello inclytos, nec deteriores ingeniis (qui, ut inquit Valerius Maximus patriæ rem non ſuam augere properabant) reliquit. Nicolaum Hieroſolymitana peregrinatione clarum; Georgium, Vilnenſem primò, deinde Cracovienſem Epiſcopum, & S. R. E. Cardinalem; Albertum ſupremum M. D. L. Marſaleum, & Staniſlaum Samogitiæ Toparcham: qui cum plurimis lachrymis, patre pro concione laudato funerateque ampliſſime, propriis manibus Urnam Mauſoleo inferre non erubuerunt. Thuanus (i) obſerves, that thoſe four Sons return'd into the Communion of the Church of Rome, and that Albert Married a Daughter of the Duke of Curland. He places the Death of Nicolas Radziwil on the 28th of May 1565. Bucholcerus does the ſame in his Index Chronologicus. Note, that David Chytraus (k) ſays the ſame thing as Thuanus. The Paſſage which I have quoted out of Simon Staravolſcius, informs us, that Nicolas Radziwil, the Eldeſt Son of our Nicolas Radziwil, made himſelf famous by his Voyage to Jeruſalem. Which obliges me to ſay, that the ſame Author obſerves in another Book, (l) that Thomas Treterus a Canon of Warmia, tranſlated into Latin the Relation of † Nicolas Chriſtopher Radziwil's Voyage to Jeruſalem. That Voyage was made in the Year 1584. This Nicolas Chriſtopher Radziwil gave a Relation of it in four Letters in the Poliſh Language. I have ſeen the Latin Tranſlation Printed at Antwerp in the Year 1614. in Folio. The Epiſtle Dedicatory of Treterus the Tranſlator is dated in the Year 1601. He who made that Journey, * died in the Month of February 1616. and was buried in a Pilgrim's Habit in the College of the Jeſuits at Nieſwiez. He was made a Prince of the Empire, and left four Sons ††, from one of which, if I am not miſtaken, Prince Staniſlaus Albert Radziwil deſcended, who was  Duke of Olyka and Nieſwiez, Chancellor of the Great Dutchy of Lithuania, and the Author of a Panegyrick upon Our Lady of Czeſtochovia. He flouriſh'd when Mr. le Laboureur publiſh'd a Relation of a Journey into Poland, that is, in the Year 1647.

(C) He cauſed the Bible to be printed in the Poliſh Language.] Nicolas Oleſnicki, as I have ſaid (m) elſewhere, eſtabliſh'd the Reformed Religion in Pinczovia at Stancarus's Inſtigation. A School was likewiſe ſet up in the ſame Place, which prov'd a Nurſery of learned Men. John Laſcus, George Blandrata, Francis Liſmanin, Martin Crovicius, Peter Statorius, George Schoman, Gregory Pauli, Brelius, Triceſſius, and ſome others, made it flouriſh to ſuch a degree, that (n) Pinczovia was look'd upon as a new Athens in Poland. There it was that thoſe learned Men tranſlated the Bible into the vulgar Tongue. Their Tranſlation was printed at Breſte in Lithuania, at the Charges of our Nicolas Radziwil. He was Governor of that Royal City, and ſet up a Printing-houſe in it. The Pſalms of David, a Collection of Canticles, and ſome other Works of the ſame Nature, were printed in the ſame Town, and contributed very much to the Converſion of the People. Here are the Words of my Author: (o) Ibi (Pinczoviæ) à Viris illis piis & doctis univerſa Biblia Sacra in Linguam vernaculam tranſlata, ſumptibus Nicolai Radzivilii Palatini Vilnenſis Principis Magnificentiſſimi & Fortiſſimi renaſcentis veritatis vindicis impreſſa ſunt Breſtia Lithuanorum. Huic enim urbi Regia Præfectus datus erat, in qua comparatam privato ære officinam typographicam condiderat, & illi Wojewoda Cracoviâ evocato commiſerat. Ibidem exſcriptus fuit liber Pſalmorum & hymnorum aliique ejus notæ, quorum lectione populus a Romanis ſuperſtitionibus ad veram Dei colendi rationem revocabatur. That Author obſerves (p) that this Bible was printed off in the Year 1563, and that it was the firſt Poliſh Tranſlation of the Scripture. He adds, that another Tranſlation came out in the Year 1572, made by Simon Budnaus; and that a Verſion of the New Teſtament by Martin Czechovicius was printed five Years after. Note, That if we believe (q) John Latus, the Tranſlators of the Bible printed at Nicolas Radziwil's (r) Charges, were but five, viz. Orſacius, Zazius, Triceſius, James Lubelſcius, and Statorius.

(D) He made a very briſk Anſwer to Lippoman.] I am ſure my Readers will be glad to find here part of that Anſwer. (ſ) Apoſtaſia cum ei non ſine convicio à Lippomano Pontificis Legato exprobraretur, eidem docta Apologia reſpondit, fidei ſuæ rationem dedit, inter alia vero: Certum tibi eſſe volo, ſic me nunc doctiſſimorum virorum videndorum deſiderio teneri, ut ſi ſcirem me eos, aut alios etiam ex præcipuis illis qui ſunt in Germania, Melanchthones, Brentios, poſſe in mea poſtulata aliquomodo pertrahere, in eo vel præcipuè, non ſervitoris tantum mittendi laborem conferendum, ſed etiam omnes opes facultateſque meas eſſe mihi experiendas putarem quos quia per inſignem malitiam hæreticos appellas, omnium Hæreticorum, quos orbis terrarum habet, maxime Hæreticus es. The Letter he receiv'd from Lippoman, and his Anſwer to it (††) were printed at Koningsberg, in the Year 1556.

(E) That the Diſcovery of ſome Monkiſh Impoſtures occaſion'd his Change.] When the Reformation began to be eſtabliſh'd in Lithuania, this Chriſtopher Radziwil being very ſorry (t) that a Prince of his Houſe had embrac'd it, went to Rome, and paid all imaginable Honours

(a) Simon Starovolſcius in Sarmatiæ bellatoribus, pag. 163, 164.

(b) Id. ib. pag. 165, 166.

(c) Id. ib. pag. 167. & ſeq.

(d) Id. ib. pag. 169, 170.

(e) Id. ib. pag. 171, 172.

(f) Id. id.

(g) Filiorum humeris elatus fuit. Id. ibid. pag. 174.

(h) Id. ib. pag. 173.

(i) Thuan. lib. 38. pag. 709.

(k) David Chytræus in Saxonia lib. 21. ad ann. 1565. pag. 558. edit. Lipſ. 1602.

(l) Starovolſc. in centum Polonorum elogiis pag. 70, 71.

(†) The ſame with the eldeſt Son of our Radziwil.

(*) Staravolſc. in bellator. Sarmatiæ pag. 176.

(††) Id. ib.

() Le Laboureur, Relation de Pologne part 3. pag. 25.

the 27th of April 1584, that Nicolas and Christopher Radzivil, his two Sons, persever'd in the Religion in which he had bred them up, and that their Posterity (F) carefully preserved that Sacred Depositum *.

RAIMARUS (NICOLAS) an Astronomer of the XVIth Century. See URSUS.

RAYNAUD (THEOPHILUS) one of the most famous and learned Jesuits of the XVIIth Century, was born at Sospello † in the County of Nice; but because he lived in France the greatest part of the time, he went (A) for a Frenchman. His Life was very long, and attended with several Disgraces; (B) nevertheless he would never be persuaded to leave his Society, and to associate himself with another Commonalty, tho' he was offer'd great Advantages elsewhere. He was extremely Laborious, and lost but little time either in Eating, or mage to the Pope. The Pope being likewise willing to gratify him, presented him with a Box full of Relicks when he went away. Being return'd home, and the News of these Relicks being spread Abroad, some Monks came to him some Months after, and told him that there was a Man possess'd with the Devil, that the wicked Spirit had been conjured in vain, and that hitherto all the Exorcisms had proved ineffectual. They begg'd of him that he would lend the precious Relicks he had brought from Rome, for the Relief of that poor Man. The Prince readily granted their Request. The Relicks were carried into that Church with a solemn Pomp, and a Procession of all the Monks. At last they were placed upon the Altar, and on the day appointed an innumerable multitude of People crowded in to see the Show, and after the usual Exorcisms the Relicks were made use of. At that very moment the pretended Devil went out of the Body of that Man, with the usual Gestures and Grimaces. Every Body cry'd out a Miracle; and the Prince lifted up his Hands and Eyes to Heaven, to return Thanks that he had brought a thing so holy, and which could do such Wonders. But some few days after, as he was full of Admiration, and transported with Joy, extolling the virtue of his Relicks, he perceived that a young Gentleman of his House, who had the keeping of that rich Treasure, smiled, and made some Gestures, whereby it appear'd that he derided his Discourse. The Prince grew angry, and would know the reason of his Derision. The Gentleman being assured that no harm should come to him, told the Prince in private, (a) "That "upon his return from Rome, he lost the Box of Relicks, which he had the keeping of, and that not daring to speak of it, for fear of being punish'd, he got "one like it, and fill'd it with little Bones of Beasts, and "such Trifles as he could get that were like the Relicks "which he had lost. So that seeing so much Honour "paid to that vile heap of Filth, and even that they ascribed to it the virtue of driving away the Devil, he "had a good reason to wonder at it. The Prince gave "Credit to what he said, but being willing to be more "particularly inform'd of the Cheat, he sent for the "Monks the next day, and desired them to enquire, whether there was any other Demoniack who wanted the "assistance of his Relicks. Some few days after they "brought him another Man possess'd with the Devil, "who acted the same part with the first. The Prince "order'd him to be exorcized in his Presence; but because all the Exorcisms, that are commonly made use "of on such an occasion, prov'd ineffectual, he told the "Monks, that he would have that Man to stay in his Palace 'till the next day, and that they should retire. "After they were gone, he put the pretended Demoniack "into the hands of his Tartarian Grooms; who at first "exhorted him to confess the Cheat, as they were order'd to do: but because he obstinately persisted in it "with horrid and furious Gestures, six of 'em laid on "him with Whips and Scourges, and put him into such "a Condition, that he was forc'd to implore the Prince's "Mercy, who forgave him, as soon as he had confess'd "the truth. When the Night was over, the Prince sent "for the Monks, in whose Presence the poor Fellow "threw himself at his Feet, and protested that he neither was, nor ever had been possess'd with the Devil; "but that those Monks had persuaded him to counterfeit a Demoniack. Immediately the Monks desired "the Prince not to believe what he said, and told him "that it was a Trick of the Devil, who spoke through "that Man's mouth. But the Prince answer'd, that if "his Tartars had been able to force the Devil to tell the "Truth, they would be able to extort it from the Mouth "of the Monks. So that the Monks finding themselves "press'd so hard, confess'd the Imposture, and said, "that they had done it with a good Intention, and to prevent the Progress of Heresie. But the Prince thanked "God with all his Heart, that he had been graciously "pleased to discover such an Imposture to him, and suspecting a Religion, that was supported with such "diabolical Devices, tho' they went by the name of pious "Frauds, he declared, that he would no longer depend "upon any Body for his Salvation, and betook himself to "the Reading of the holy Scriptures with a wonderful "assiduity; and having spent half a Year in Reading "and Praying, he made a wonderful Progress in Piety, "and in the Knowledge of the Mysteries of the Gospel: "And then he and all his Family made an open Profession of our Religion, in the Year 1564." These are the Words of Mr. Drelincourt, Minister of the Church of Paris, in the Answer he publish'd in the Year 1662, to the Letter which Prince Ernestus, Landgrave of Hesse, had writ to the five Ministers of Paris. Mr. Drelincourt adds, (b) Your Highness may think of it, as he pleases; but I protest, as if I was before the Throne of God, that this Story was told me in this manner by the Minister of Prince Janusius Radziwil: Nay, he gave me in Writing part of what he told me, and explained to me viva voce.

Regenvolscius (c) calls him Nicolas Radziwil, whom the discovery of a Monkish Imposture fully determin'd to forsake the Popish Religion in the Year 1564; but he says nothing neither of the Journey to Rome, nor of the Relicks. He only says, That the Monks of (d) Czenstechowit had suborn'd a pretended Demoniack, whilst Nicolas Radziwil was on his Pilgrimage, which he had vowed after a great Victory obtain'd over the Moscovites.

(F) Their Posterity carefully preserved that sacred Depositum.] Nicolas RADZIWIL, Palatin of Novogrod, was the Father of George, who died Castellan of Troki in the Year 1614, and left no Children. Christopher RADZIWIL, Brother to this Nicolas, was Palatin of Vilna, and died in the Year 1604. He left two Sons, Janussius and Christopher. Janussius, Duke of Bierze, and Castellan of Vilna, died in the Year 1621, being forty two Years of Age. He left by his Wife, who was the Elector of Brandenburg's Daughter, a Son call'd Bogeslaus. His Brother Christopher, Palatin of Vilna, and Great Marshal of Lithuania, died the 19th of September, 1640, at fifty five Years of Age, and left an only Son, whose Name was Janussius, and who was Great Chamberlain of Lithuania. This Bogeslaus and this Janussius RADZIWIL, first-Cousins, were both alive, and made profession of the Protestant Religion, when the Author, (e) whom I quote, was writing this Book, about the Year 1650. The Gazettes, in the beginning of the Year 1681, told us, That the Princess Ludovica RADZIWIL, at fourteen Years of Age, married Prince Lewis, second Son of the Elector of Brandenburg, at Koningsberg, the 7th of January, 1681; that she was the only Daughter of the late Prince Bogeslaus, and that she was possess'd of a Dutchy in Lithuania, which contains above forty Leagues on the Frontiers of Livonia, and two strong Places. She was a Protestant, but after the Death of Prince Lewis of Brandenburg, she married again in 1688, to a Son of the Elector Palatin, and turned a Roman Catholick. There had been some Discourse of marrying her to Prince James, Son of John Sobieski, King of Poland.

(A) He went for a Frenchman.] Alegambe says positively, that he was a Frenchman; (f) Natione Gallus, patria Cespitellensis. These Latin words contain what is called in the Schools contradictio in adjecto; for Cespitellum or Sospitellum is undeniably in Italy. See Baudrand on those two Words. Father Oldoini censures Alegambe for this Fault, and places our Theophilus among the Writers born in Liguria. Soprani places him amongst 'em likewise (g). They are more in the right than Sotuel, who expresses himself doubtfully. Natione Gallus, says he (h), an potius Italus? patria Cespitellensis in Comitatu Nicaensi.

(B) Attended with several Disgraces; nevertheless he would never be persuaded.] Here are Sotuel's words: (i) Vocationis suæ religiosæ tenacissimus, quamvis & utilia & honorifica extra societatem ei promitterentur à Principibus, si hanc inter aspera quæ subinde patiebatur, deserere vellet, nunquam eos auscultare voluit. See hereafter (k) the Passage of Monconys, and that (l) of a Jansenist.

(b) Id. ib. pag. 362.

(c) Regenvolsc. ibid. pag. 145.

(d) See le Laboureur's Relation of Poland, part 3. pag. 18. & seq. concerning the miraculous Image of the holy Virgin, which is honoured in that place.

(e) Regensvolsc. ubi supra, pag. 145, 146.

(f) Alegambe, Biblioth. Script. Societ. Jesu pag. 431.

(g) Oldoinus and Soprani have publish'd the Catalogue of the Authors of that part of Italy.

(h) Natan. Sotuel. Biblioth. Script. Societ. pag. 757.

(i) Id. ib. pag. 758.

(k) In the Remark I.

(l) In the Remark H.

or hearing (G) devout Women. His great pleasure was to write Books, and carefully to perform the Functions of his Character. He compoſed a prodigious number of Books: Some of 'em were cenſured by (D) the Inquiſition; which ſenſibly afflicted him. He diſcharged his Anger upon the Dominicans, in a Book * wherein he gather'd a vaſt number of Things out of their Writings, which had not been cenſured, tho' they deſerved it. The Quarrels he had with the Dominicans, and other People, produced many injurious and biting Pieces; for it cannot be denied that he had a very ſatyrical Wit. The Jeſuits themſelves (DD) confeſs ſomething of it. He died † of an Apoplexy at Lyons, the laſt of October, 1663. The Writers of the Bibliotheque of the Jeſuits don't agree about (E) his Age; and therefore I ſhall not determine whether he lived 79 Years, as Mr. Gallois aſſerts, in a Work that will afford me ſome Paſſages concerning the (F) Character of that Jeſuit. He was very

(C) Either in Eating, or hearing devout Women.] He was a very ſober Man, and did not ſit at Table above a quarter of an Hour; and when, by reaſon of his great Age, he might have converſed with Women without any danger and ſuſpicion, he would not hearken to them, but in caſes of Neceſſity, and told them in a few words what he had to ſay. I only tranſlate Sotuel's words. In victu valde abſtinens, ſays he (a), paucis & communibus ſemper uſus cibis, vix amplius uno quadrante babat menſæ. Puritatis amator ſummus mulierum colloquia cum erant neceſſaria, etiam ſenex, paucis verbis definiebat. He wiſh'd that all other Eccleſiaſticks would imitate him in that, as he teſtifies in his Book De ſobria alterius ſexus frequentatione. But, generally ſpeaking, the Directors of Conſciences don't like that Morality; they are ſeldom weary of the Company of devout Women, if one may judge of it by their long and frequent Converſations with them.

(D) Some of them were cenſured by the Inquiſition.] He took ſo much Pains to have the Cenſure taken off, that he at laſt obtained leave to reprint them, provided they ſhould be Corrected (b). The Inquiſition cenſur'd three of his Treatiſes, viz. (c) de Martyrio per peſtem; de Communione pro mortuis; and de confixione librorum. As Men have different Notions of Things, 'tis no wonder that this Jeſuit took ſuch a Diſgrace to Heart, tho' other Writers are ſo little afraid of it, that ſometimes they are glad to hear that their Works have been put into the Index, or that the Inquiſitors are diſpleaſed with them. 'Tis very often a ſign that a Book is good. See what an ingenious (d) Man hath lately ſaid upon occaſion of the Cenſure paſt upon the Acta Sanctorum.

(DD) The Jeſuits themſelves confeſs ſomething of it.] They ſay he could not bear any thing, and that he did not ſpare Father Bollandus his Fellow-Jeſuit, and his good Friend, who had done him good Services, and had only made him angry for maintaining a different Opinion about a Biſhop of Lyons. If all the angry and paſſionate Expreſſions of our Theophilus had not been ſuppreſſed, Bollandus would have been very ill treated in the ſecond Edition of the Indiculus ſanctorum Lugdunenſium. Father Papebroch has reveal'd this little Myſtery. Ita factus erat Theophilus, ſays he (e), ut neminem contradicentem ſibi patienter ferret, & niſi præſentes adfuiſſemus, cum prælo iterum pararetur Indiculus ſanctorum Lugdunenſium, neque mature aliquis admonuiſſet, inveniretur ibi acriter perſtrictus P. Joannes Bollandus in S. Anemundo Lugdunenſi Epiſcopo, ſub regimine S. Bathildis occiſo, quia ad 26 Januarii eundem ſtatuerat cum S. Delfino contra Theophili ſententiam, cui alias Bollandus amiciſſimus erat, & in curanda operum ipſius impreſſione Antverpiæ meritus de illo optime.

(E) Don't agree about his Age.] Alegambe ſays (f), That Father Theophilus was admitted into their Order in the Year 1602, at 16 Years of Age; but, according to (g) Father Sotuel, it was in 1592, and at the ſame Age. And therefore, ſince he died in 1663, he lived 77 Years, according to Father Alegambe, and 87 according to Father Sotuel. But if he had lived 87 Years, this Expreſſion of Father Sotuel would be wrong, Octogenario major . . . . migravit ad Dominum: it is only proper for thoſe, whoſe Life did not much exceed 80 Years. Mr. Gallois ſeems to me more credible than thoſe two Jeſuits, when he ſays (h), that Father Theophilus lived 79 Years. 'Tis a ſtrange thing that the Jeſuits themſelves, who made it their buſineſs to write Elogies upon the Writers of their Society, ſhould not be able to tell us how long one of the moſt famous of 'em lived.

(F) Concerning the Character of that Jeſuit.] It was not poſſible to ſpeak more pertinently of the Edition of all the Works of that Author, than the Abbot Gallois has done in the Journal des Savans, of the 14th of March, 1667. That Edition conſiſts of 19 Volumes in Folio, and it came out at Lyons in the Year, 1665. That ingenious Journaliſt having ſhewn in a few Words the Contents of each Volume, gives his Judgment about them in the following manner. "(i) It appears by the "Works of this Author, that he was bold and peremptory, and that he had a quick Imagination, and a prodigious Memory. Thoſe natural Endowments, together with an undefatigable Application to ſtudy from his younger Years, 'till he was 79 Years old, at which Age he died, had made him one of the moſt learned Men of his time. But he was too biting and too Satyrical; for which Reaſon many People hated him. His Style, tho' otherwiſe very neat, ſeems to be obſcure, becauſe he affects to uſe hard Words and Terms taken from the Greek. He has alſo ſometimes ſome odd Thoughts, as when being to treat of the Goodneſs of our Saviour in a Chapter of the IId Volume, he intitles it Chriſtus bonus, bona, bonum. His great reading affording him a vaſt number of things on all ſorts of Matters, he often rambles from the Subject in hand; as in his Treatiſe de Roſa benedicta, a conſiderable part of which is taken up in examining after what manner Lent was kept in the Primitive Church. One may alſo obſerve that he did not give a free Scope to his Genius, being contented to mention what he had read in the ancient Authors and often uſing their own Words to expreſs what he might perhaps have ſaid better than they. Nevertheleſs his Works are worthy of Eſteem, and very uſeful to thoſe who apply themſelves to Divinity and Preaching". The following Words of the ſame Abbot concern particularly the 15th and 16th Volumes, intitled Heteroclita Spiritualia "(k) This Author ſpeaks of ſeveral ſuſpected Cuſtoms, which, thro' an exceſſive Zeal or thro' Remiſneſs, have been introduc'd into the Worſhip of God, and of the Saints, into the good Works that are done to relieve the Souls in Purgatory, into the uſe of the Sacraments, and into all other pious Exerciſes. He examines all thoſe doubtful Acts of Devotion with great Severity: He condemns ſome, and approves others; and what he ſays is attended with many learned Obſervations taken from the Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory and the Fathers. He did particularly excel in treating ſuch Matters; for, being ſharp and ſatyrical, he never had a better Succeſs than when he exercis'd his critical Wit". Let us further ſee what he ſays concerning the Pieces that have not been inſerted in the 19 Volumes. (l) They have been left out for ſome particular Reaſons. The Apologies againſt Hurtado, which he intitled Depilationes, becauſe that Monk belongs to an Order, call'd in Italy Peloſi, are not to be found in this Collection: Nor the Book, wherein he inquires whether a Man may confeſs his Sins by Letters; nor that which is intitled Hipparchus, wherein he examines whether it be a lawful thing for a Monk to trade. They have alſo left out the Treatiſe de Immunitate Cyriacorum a cenſuris, againſt the Jacobins, and that which is intitled Religio Beſtiarum, wherein the Predetermination of the Thomiſts is confuted, and another written againſt Father Combefis. There are ſome other Treatiſes of this Author wanting in this Collection, which may eaſily be known by the Catalogue of his Works, which he printed ſeveral times. He deſign'd to make one Volume of all thoſe Pieces, and intitle it Apopompæus, a Name which the Jews gave to the Victim which they loaded with Curſes, and ſent into the Wilderneſs; but Death prevented his Deſign. Father Sotuel ſays, that the 20th Volume, intitled Apopompæus, was actually printed after the Author's Death (m).

I muſt further add another Paſſage of the Abbot Gallois (n) The moſt remarkable pieces of the 7th Volume, intitled (o) Marialia, is the ſecond Treatiſe, wherein the Author vindicates the Devotion of the Scapulary; and the fifth, which is ſufficient to ſhew his great Learning, and the Fruitfulneſs of his Wit. For being to preach upon the ſeven ſolemn Anthems, which the Church ſings before Chriſtmas, and which begin with an O; he took only that Letter for the Subject of his Sermon; and that Subject, tho' never ſo barren, afforded him a thouſand fine things, of which that Treatiſe is made up.

---

* Intitled De immunitate Cyriacorum a cenſuris.

† [illegible] Sotuel, Bibliotheca Script. Societ. Jeſ. pag. [illegible] This does not ſeem to agree with the Paſſage of Alegambe, in the Remark (E).

(a) Sotuel ibid.

(b) Poſtea ab auctore emendata, ab eadem ſacra congregatione anno 1659. recudi permiſſa ſunt & libere diſtrahi. Id. ib pag. 759.

(c) Id. ib.

(d) The Author of the Lettres hiſtoriques, March 1696. pag. 245.

(e) Papebroch elucidat. hiſt. actorum in controverſia Armeniaca cap 7. in fine pag. 110.

(f) Alegambe ubi ſupra.

(g) Sotuel ubi ſupra, pag. 757.

(h) Gallois, Journal des Savans of the 14th of March, 1667. pag. m. 127.

(i) Gallois, ibid.

(k) Gallois, ib. pag. 125, 126.

(l) Id. ib. pag. 126.

(m) Tomum [illegible] quem Apopompæum vocari [illegible] derunt [illegible] poſt obitum Theophili, ſine approbatione ſuperiorum Societatis, unde illum tanquam partum legitimum non agnoſcit. Sotuel ubi ſupra pag. 759. I have a Copy of that Apopompæus, and there in the Title Page, Tomus vigeſimus & poſthumus per Antonium de[illegible]geſtus, nunc primum in lucem prodit [illegible] ſumptibus Annibalis Sangoyski [illegible] 1669.

(n) Gallois, ibid. pag. 118, 119.

(o) Beſides all the Treatiſes it contains concerning the Perfections or the Worſhip of the Virgin. Id. ibid. pag. 118.

very much Esteem'd by (G) Dr. Patin, and some are of Opinion that he praises him too much, and that the Censure he passes (G 2) upon his Style is not well grounded; for 'tis not true

(G) Very much esteem'd by Dr. Patin.] "(a) Martinus Schookius, who has writ many books . . . . is as learned as those ancient Sophists, who used to write and dispute about every thing that can be known. He and Conringius in Germany are the most learned Men in Europe in that sort of Learning and Composures. Father Theophilus Raynaud exceeded them both; for he was a Jesuit, and understood his Romish and Loyolitical Theology extraordinarily well; but had it not been for that, and the Respect he had for his Superiors, he would have broke loose, and might have done more than three others, upon any Subject whatsoever: For besides his great Learning and wonderful Memory, he gave to all his Books a Character of Perfection, which none but a great Master could give". Here is another Passage. (b) If you see Father Theophilus, pray give him my Service, and ask him when we shall see his Answer to a Book printed against him at Amsterdam, in 8vo, and intitled, Antidotus duplex contra duplex venenum &c. 8°. Hispali, 1667. The Printer has suppress'd or disguis'd the Name of the Town; for it has been printed in Holland, and not at Seville. I have sent him a Copy, for which he thanked me, and inform'd me that he would quickly answer it. I have many Letters of that honest Father, and am one of his Friends, and I am proud of it; for he is a very learned Man, in genere multiplici. I wish he would publish several Pieces that he has by him: There is a great deal of Learning in all his Books. These Praises are the more considerable, because they are bestow'd by a Man, who was more inclin'd to dispraise than to commend, and who spoke freely of the Faults which he thought he had found in the Writings of that Jesuit. I must quote him again. (c) The Author of the Sanctus Georgius Cappadox is an extraordinary and most learned Man; only he sits up for a Fishmonger on Easter-Eve, and affects to write in a manner that is out of use: Nevertheless all his Books are good, est enim vir multijugæ eruditionis ac infinitæ lectionis, as Grotius said of the late Salmasius. Father Raynaud's Style redolet Lipsianum, quo tamen est multo deterior: There is no body now that writes so, except it be Dr. Blondel, our Dean; who, tho' one of the most learned Men in the World, affects that kind of Barbarousness, & eadem scabie laborat cum Tertulliano Lipsianus seu Lipsiomimus vel Lipsio minus, qualis aliquando fuit Erycius Puteanus, Petrus Gruterus, Theophylus Raynaudus, & pauci alii quos fama obscura recondit. I confess I cannot apprehend upon what Grounds Patin taxes that Jesuit with affecting a broken and obscure Style, and using many of those obsolete Expressions call'd Archaisms. I have read several of his Books, and I find that his Style is rather prolix than short, and that it is free from the Faults that are observed in Lipsius's Style, and in that of his Imitators. It is true, that Father Raynaud does not write politely; but if his Style is rough and barbarous, 'tis not because he affects old Latin Phrases, like those of Plautus, or Grecisms (d), which make the Delight of some learned Men; 'tis rather because he uses a great many Words borrow'd from the Schoolmen. Nay, I observe that he blamed one of his Adversaries for having used some Greek Words: he was answer'd that 'twas not for him to speak of Greek, since he was ignorant of that Language. (e) Mira hominis Buccafatidi audacia, cæcus cum sit, vult de coloribus judicare, & cum prorsus idiota sit Græci idiomatis, judicare de vocibus Græcis . . . . . quid vis apparere ferularius Mag. in utraque lingua? etsi enim Latinam bene calleas, at Græcam prorsus ignoras. His Antagonist confesses that he understands the Latin Tongue very well; but such a Confession is of no (f) great weight, since it was made by a Man, who was Guilty of Solecisms in every Page. (g) Barbararum lexeon, & solæcismorum tanta ubertas est in Hurtadi opere, ut si tenui diligentia adhibita, notare grammaticas ejus stribiligines liberet, totum pene ejus volumen esset exscribendum. Vix tres lineas exarat, quin solæcismis adeo pinguibus contaminet, ut miserationem moveat. (h) Thomas Hurtado . . . . . vix unquam emisit periodum qui non sordeat stribiligine aliqua grammatica, & indigna colaphizatione Prisciani. Four Examples of it are to be found in the same Page. Deus expavescit nos: opus bene executum: debet populus magis exhortari ad communionem: agendum esse de tactis. There is at the (i) end of the Book a List of his Solecisms. Father Raynaud's Adversary made but a weak Answer. I imitate the Fathers, said he, (k) Nonne in multis patribus inveniuntur similes non ita vigorosæ in latinitate locutiones? And he says (l) that John Bojani drew up a List of above 545 Barbarisms of Petrus Blesensis.

(G 2) Some are of Opinion that Dr. Patin Praises him too much, and that the Censure he passes upon his Style is not well grounded.] "(m) Theophilus Raynaud gave to all his Works a Character of Perfection, which none but great Masters can give. This Judgment of Dr. Patin is not altogether true. The Character of Perfection, which none but great Masters, (such as Petavius and Sirmondus) can give, was wanting in Theophilus Raynaud. His designs were odd, his Learning without choice, and his Style, tho' good in it self, was often spoil'd with Childish Affectations. Besides, the Author was an unpolite Man, and had no Urbanity."

I have already (n) refuted Dr. Patin's Opinion of Father Raynaud's Style; but I have something else to say upon this Subject. That Jesuit observes that few People complained of the Coarseness of his Style. The only Censurer he names is one Camerarius, who blamed him for using a harsh and bumbastick Style, intermix'd with barbarous Words, and for imitating Petronius and Apuleius rather than the Ciceronians. (o) Non defuit, qui mei styli squalorem opponeret. Arguebat sanè Gulielmus Camerarius præfatione ad suam (ut inscripsit) Antiquitatis de novitate victoriam, quod stylus scriptionum mearum scaber esset ac tumens: quod voces passim barbaras, & a nitore & lenitate Tullij alienas adhiberem: Et quod Petronio potius ac Apulejo, tumidis & inflatis scriptoribus, quam probatæ latinitatis, stylique puri ac nativi Magistris, inter scribendum inhæserim. I shall not mention what he answer'd in his Vindication, but only point at the Book which he wrote in his defence. (p) Dissertatio hujus & aliarum Camerarij calumniarum depulsoria, edita est hoc titulo, Non causa ut causa, subjuncta vera causa; Elenchus sophismatis Gulielmi Camerarij Scoti. In lucubratione à pag. 16. quam ridicula sit hæc criminatio, & quam absurdum sit voces è Nizolij Ciceroniana pinacotheca anxie sublegere, in Didacticis præsertim scriptionibus, (cujusmodi ferè sunt omnes nostræ, eæque nominatim, adversus quam Camerarij æstus inferbuit,) plenè & accuratè demonstratur. I add that he continues to refute his Adversary in the same place, out of which I have taken this Passage. His main Argument consists in the Quotations of several Fathers of the Church, who did not much trouble themselves about the Elegancy of their Style. He says (q) that St. Augustin was very careless of it, and he refers us to Bernard Vindinus's Prolegomena ad Criticum Augustinianum castigatum, where there is a Chapter concerning St. Augustin's Solecisms and Barbarisms. After all he does not own that Camerarius's Censure is well grounded, and leaves it to the Judgment of unprejudic'd Readers. (r) Videor vanissimam & ineptissimam criminationem obtrivisse multo pluribus quam necessitas postulabat. An verò Stylus scriptionum mearum, adeò vel jaceat, vel horreat, quam sibi fingit Camerarius cujus fuit hæc criminatio, pronuncient alij, affectu quo ille ducebatur liberi. If any one should say that I have unjustly censur'd Dr. Patin, I appeal likewise to all the Readers duly qualify'd, who will peruse the Works of this Jesuit with an unprejudic'd Mind. If they look into them, and read some Pages here and there, I am sure they will not say that he imitated Lipsius, and that he may be compar'd with Peter Gruterus, and Erycius Puteanus, as Patin will have it. I believe they will say that his Style is neither polite nor agreeable; but they'll deny that it is concise, full of dark Ellipses, and obsolete Phrases, and very much affected. Any Reader well skill'd in the Critical Art, will easily perceive that the Author I speak of wrote hastily, that he was very careless of his Style, that he did not correct his Works, and consequently that his printed Words and Phrases may be look'd upon as a faithful Copy of his Minutes; and that the first Effusions of his Pen were also the first Effusions of his Mind: So that his bad Latin, whether it be too ancient or too new, ought not to be accounted an Affectation, or an Artifice, but a natural Production. He was a Man of a vast Memory; he had read in his Youth the Classical Authors, and afterwards, with greater Application, the Ecclesiastical Writers, the Philosophers, and the Modern Divines. His Memory being full of the Phrases of all those Authors, readily supplied his Pen; so that without much thinking, sometimes a Word of Plautus came out, or an Expression of Lucretius, Petronius, Aulus Gellius, Apuleius or Macrobius; sometimes an Expression of Tertullian, Arnobius, St. Hilary, or Sidonius Apollinaris, sometimes

---

(a) [illegible] Letter [illegible] of the [illegible] Volume.

(b) Id. Letter 100. pag. 12[illegible] of the same Volume. See also the 3[illegible] Letter, pag. 2[illegible] of the same Volume.

(c) Idem Letter 155. pag. [illegible] of the same Volume.

(d) Mr. Gilles [illegible] taxes him with affecting to use words derived from the Greek.

(e) Thomas Hurtado [illegible] pag. 453.

(f) See Hurtado, ib. pag. 10.

(g) Leodeg. Quintinus apud Hurtado ibid. pag. 437.

(h) Idem apud eundem p. 10.

(i) Stellar. [illegible] pag. 437.

(k) Ibid. pag. 439.

(l) Ibid.

(m) Vigneul Marvile, Melanges d'Histoire, tom. 1. pag. 303. Rotterd. Edition, 1700.

(n) In the foregoing Remark.

(o) Theoph. Raynaud. Syntagm. de libris propriis p. 6. Apopompæi col. 2.

(p) Id. ib.

(q) Id. ib. pag. 8. col. 2.

(r) Id. ib. pag. 10. col. 1.

true that he imitated Lipſius, that he hunted after old Words, and that he was fond of dark and antiquated Phraſes; which has been the fault of ſome Authors, for which they have been juſtly Cenſured by Men of Judgment. I give * ſome Inſtances of it. *In...
He

times an Expreſſion of St. Bernard, or of the Commentators upon Lombard, or of the Angelical Doctor, &c. But the common and moſt uſual Words offer'd themſelves more frequently, and he took what came out firſt; and conſequently his Style is not affected; old Words and barbarous Expreſſions came into it naturally, but not in great Numbers, and the Author took no Care to correct and poliſh his Style: He left it ſuch as he found it, when he read over his Writings. But if I was miſtaken in this, at leaſt the main part of my Cenſure would be unqueſtionable; for there were never two Authors more unlike in point of Style, than Theophilus Raynaud and Juſtus Lipſius. The latter affected to end his Periods at every Line, and to leave out ſeveral Words, which the Reader was to ſupply and gueſs at. But the Jeſuit is rather diffuſe than conciſe, and not at all obſcure for want of Words: His Periods are long and full.

A Cenſure upon thoſe who affect to make uſe of old Words.

'Tis ſtill a greater piece of Injuſtice to compare him with Peter Gruterus; for this Gruterus was not a Man who dropp'd obſolete Words but now and then: He heaped them up upon one another with a ridiculous Affectation, and took as much Pains to gather thoſe old Rags as Bembus and Manutius did to write politely. I cannot tell whether ſuch an Affectation betrays more Vanity than want of Judgment; but it is certain that thoſe who affect ſuch a Style, fancy that their Readers will have a great Opinion of their Learning, and admire 'em the more for it. Men of Senſe have always condemn'd this Humour. The Jeſts which Phavorinus made uſe of againſt a young Man, who was a great Lover of old Words, are admirable. If you will not be underſtood, ſaid he to him, why don't you hold your Tongue? And if you love Antiquity, pleaſe your ſelf by living a good Life as our Anceſtors did; but ſpeak as Men do now. (a) Favorinus philoſophus adoleſcenti veterum verborum cupidiſſimo, & pleraſque voces nimis priſcas & ignotiſſimas in quotidianis communibuſque ſermonibus expromenti, Curius, inquit, & Fabricius, & Coruncanius antiquiſſimi viri noſtri, & his antiquiores Horatii illi trigemini, plane ac dilucide cum ſuis fabulati ſunt: neque Auruncorum, aut Sicanorum, aut Pelaſgorum, qui primi incoluiſſe Italiam dicuntur, ſed ætatis ſuæ verbis locuti ſunt. tu autem proinde quaſi cum matre Evandri nunc loquare, ſermone abhinc multis annis jam deſito uteris, quod ſcire atque intelligere neminem vis, quæ dicas. Nonne, homo inepte, ut quod vis abunde conſequaris, taceres? ſed antiquitatem tibi placere ais, quod honeſta & bona & ſobria & modeſta ſit, vive ergo moribus præteritis; loquere verbis præſentibus. He concludes with a Precept of Julius Cæſar, (b) that obſolete Words ought to be ſhun'd as a Rock. The Emperor Auguſtus was much of the ſame Mind; (c) he could not bear that Tiberius ſhould uſe any old Words, and he call'd Mark Antony a mad Man (d) becauſe he affected to be rather admir'd than underſtood. We read in Aulus Gellius (e) that an Advocate of his time was hiſs'd, becauſe he uſed unintelligible Words. There aroſe in the XVIth Century a certain Faction of Grammarian Antiquarians, whom the moſt Learned Men oppos'd with all their Might, to prevent their Growth, and the Corruption of the Latin Tongue. Paſſeratius made a Speech on purpoſe againſt that Faction. (f) Exorti ſunt, ſays he, his annis viginti proximis, non diſſimili laborantes inſania, novi quidam Antonii, utinam minus multi, quorum cauſſa, ne quid diſſimulem, hanc præfatiunculam inſtitui. Si quidem me facturum operæ pretium putavi, ſi iſtum animi morbum vel arte aliqua perſanarem, quod in iis difficillimum eſt, qui ſic ægrotare malunt quam valere, vel aliqua ex parte imminuerem: idque ſaltem aſſequerer ne hac apud noſtros latius ſerpat contagio. Afterwards he ſays, that nothing appear'd too ancient to thoſe, whom he had a mind to reclaim; and that they endeavour'd to find out ſome Words older than the Verſes of the Salii. (g) Sordent nobis Tullius, Cæſar, Terentius: Valerii Antiatis, Cincii, Cælii, Piſonis, Fabii Pictoris, Quadrigarii, Siſennæ annales requirimus. Unde tam delicatum faſtidium? Cato, & Varro, vix ad ſtomachum faciunt: vix aviditatem noſtram explent primi Conſulum faſces, & faſtorum incunabula: Decemvirales tabulas, leges regias, Saliare carmen, icta cum Sabinis fœdera, Fecialium jura formulaſque tranſcendimus, ut penetremus in ſermonem Aboriginum, tanquam ſimus cum Egeria Numa, aut cum Evandri Carmenta loquuturi. Thoſe Men had willingly blotted out a Ciceronian Phraſe in their Compoſures, to put in the room of it an Expreſſion taken from Pacuvius's Fragments, or found in

Verſibus (i) quos olim Fauni vateſque canebant,
Cum neque Muſarum ſcopulos quiſquam ſuperarat
Nec dicti ſtudioſus erat.

They deſerv'd to be call'd (h) mortuaria gloſſaria. Horace complain'd (i) of ſuch a Humour; which I obſerve to ſhew, that the Depravations of Taſte revive from time to time. Paſſeratius was not the only Man who exclaim'd againſt thoſe falſe Antiquarians: I have mention'd in another Place of this Dictionary a Satyrical Piece, wherein they were ridiculed, and their Condemnation may be found in Father Cauſſin's Rhetorick (k). I could name many (l) other Learned Men, who could not bear that fondneſs for old Words, and who revived the Complaints made againſt Salluſt. If they did not ſpare that Ancient Hiſtorian, they muſt needs have been more incens'd againſt the Moderns. (m) Quid, quod à quibuſdam Salluſtianis verbis tanta ſollicitudine inter priſci ſermonis maceriem & ruinas conquiſitis, & in illa ipſa tam laudata compoſitione nonnulla prolatu & intellectu ſunt nota, quædam putidinſcula & pumicata, quædam ita ſcrupea, ut in ea vox impingat ſe tanquam in ſaxea fragmina vetuſtatis. They are the Words of a very Polite Writer. He had already declar'd, that Words grown out of date ought to be avoided. (n) Pertimeſcunt (verba humilis dicendi generis) ſociari verbis rubiginoſis, ſpinoſis, nimium reconditis & abſtruſis, tum intermortuis & conclamatis,

Quæ (o) priſcis memorata Catonibus, atque Cethegis
Nunc ſitus informis premit, & deſerta vetuſtas.

But take notice that this Polite Author is too rigid a Cenſurer of the Hiſtorian Salluſt, and truſt rather to Paſſeratius, who has very well diſtinguiſh'd the exceſſive Affectation of the Moderns (p) from Salluſt's Licence. I am not ignorant that Aſinius Pollio found fault with Salluſt (q) for uſing too many old Words, but perhaps, inſtead of being ſo ſevere a Critick, he ſhould have thanked him for the pains he had been at to revive ſome Words, and prevent their Loſs in the Roman Language. We ſhould wiſh that our great Authors would do the ſame Office to many obſolete French Words. If they vouchſafed to make uſe of them, they would put a ſtop to Preſcription, young Writers would be encourag'd to uſe them, and it would preſerve the Copiouſneſs of the Language. Virgil did ſo, and Horace adviſ'd to do the ſame:

Obſcurata (r) diu populo bonus eruet atque
Proferet in lucem ſpecioſa vocabula rerum
Quæ priſcis memorata Catonibus.

That is, "He'll revive ſome Words that have been Dead "long ago, and he'll bring into Light again thoſe expreſſive and energical Terms that were in uſe in the "time of Cato and Cethegus, and which lye at preſent "buried under the Ruins of Antiquity". See the Margin (ſ).

I don't believe, that there are now many People in France like thoſe whom Paſſeratius had a mind to reclaim. However, I have read the following Words in a Book Printed in the Year 1685. "(t) There is a ſort "of Learned Men, whom I ſhould ſuſpect, as thoſe "who interven'd in the Petition of the late Dr. Blondell. Thoſe Men ſpend their Lives upon Seneca and "Plautus, to find out ſome Archaiſms, in order to make "ſome Moral Theſes that are unintelligible, and proof "againſt all Vocabularies". This Dr. Blondel is one of the Authors whom Dr. Patin compared with Theophilus Raynaud, which is an unjuſt compariſon; for the Books of

---

(a) Aulus Gellius lib. 1. cap. 10.

(b) Id. quod à C. Cæſare excellentis ingenii ac prudentiæ viro, in primo de Analogia libro, ſcriptum eſt, habe ſemper in memoria atque in pectore, ut tamquam ſcopulum, ſic fugias inſolens verbum. Id ib.

(c) Sueton. in Auguſto cap 86.

(d) M. quidem Antonium ut inſanum increpat; quaſi ea ſcribentem quæ mirentur potius homines quam intelligant. Id. ibid.

(e) Aulus Gellius lib. 11. cap. 7.

(f) Paſſerat. præfat. in Cicer. epiſtolam ad Hirtium & Cæſarem pag. m. 171.

(g) Id. ib. pag. 175.

... lib. 2. epiſt. 2. (p) Paſſerat. præf. in Catilinam Salluſtii pag. 1... (q) Aſinius Pollio in libro quo Salluſtii ſcripta reprehendit, ut nimis priſcorum verborum affectatione oblita. Sueton. de illuſtr. Gram. cap. 10. (r) Horat. epiſt. 2. lib. 2. v. 115. (ſ) Propriis (verbis) dignitatem dat antiquitas, namque & ſanctiorem & magis admirabilem faciunt orationem quibus non quilibet fuerat uſurus: eoque ornamento acerrimi judicii P. Virgilius unicè eſt uſus . . . . . utendum modo nec ex ultimis tenebris repetenda. Quintil. lib. 8. cap. 3. pag. m. 364, 365. (t) Factum pour Maiſtre Nicolas Pol... . . . ou diſſertation ſur les Peripneumonies pag. 203. See the Nouvelles de la Rep. des lettres, January 1686. pag. 34.

He vex'd the Janſeniſts, and they did not (H) ſpare him in their turn. His Enemies ſpread abroad ſtrange Reports about the manner of his Death; which (I) are mention'd and refuted by Monconys. I have ſomething to ſay (K) againſt Moreri. To conclude, of that Jeſuit may be very well underſtood without the help of Nonnius Marcellus, or Lauremberguis's Antiquarius, or even Calepinus. Neither is it true, that he ſtuff'd his Books with Greek Words. It was an uſual thing among the moſt Learn'd Philologers. Caſaubon is an inſtance of it in his Letters. Balzac (a) did not approve that Cuſtom.

(H) The Janſeniſts did not ſpare him in their turn.] His Eighteenth Volume (b) contains the pieces which he wrote againſt Father Gibieuf, M. Arnauld, M. de Launoi, and ſome other Authors. It cannot be denied that he often expreſs'd too much bitterneſs againſt them. Wherefore it is ſaid, that he had reſolved to leave out many things in thoſe Works, if Death had not prevented it. These laſt Words of the Journaliſt are only an officious Lye; for 'tis not at all likely, that the laſt Edition of Father Raynaud's Works ſhould not be conformable to his Intention. Read the following Paſſage of a Janſeniſt, who obſerves that our Jeſuit died without giving any Satiſfaction to thoſe whom he had ſo much abus'd. (c) " Father Theophilus Raynaud was a (d) Savoyard, who " having been admitted into the Order of the Jeſuits at " 16 Years of Age, died in their Society, being above " 80 Years old. He was like once to leave them, be" cauſe he had been very ill us'd, inter opera quæ ſubinde patiebatur, &c. ſay the Jeſuits themſelves in the " Catalogue of their Writers. He could not expect it " ſhould be otherwiſe, ſince he had written ſeveral " Books againſt the irregular Life of the Society, ſuch " as that which is Intituled, Theopoli Eugenii Protocataſtaſis ſeu primi Societatis Jeſu ſtatus reſtauranda, " wherein he gives a Plan of a Reformation, to reſtore " his Order to their firſt Purity; and another Intituled, " Hipparchus, &c. againſt the Trading Humour which " prevailed every where in his Society. They diſown like" wiſe a Treatiſe, de exſolutione a voto, which, ſay they, " was not approv'd by his Superiors, and contains ſome" thing concerning St. Ignatius, which is not true; as " alſo what he writ in his Book againſt Julius Clemens Scotus, an Italian, who had left the Order of the Je" ſuits, that the Declarations upon the Conſtitutions of " the Jeſuits were not made by St. Ignatius, but by Fa" ther Lainez, the ſecond General. 'Tis likely that one " of the two firſt Books occaſion'd his being impriſon'd " by the Jeſuits for a conſiderable time. He was free " and bold in his Opinions, biting and ſatyrical in his " way of Writing, and had a great conceit of himſelf; " as it appears from what he ſaid, when he mention'd " the commendation that an Heretical Writer had given " him, That it was the only truth that Man had ever " ſpoke. What he did in the Year of his Jubilee is alſo " a ſingular thing. He celebrated a very pompous Maſs, " and a Jeſuit getting into the Pulpit, made his Pane" gyrick in his Preſence. That Father was certainly a " Man of prodigious reading. Twenty Volumes in Fo" lio of his Printed Works ſhew how eaſily he could " write. It were to be wiſh'd he had writ with Judg" ment, Prudence, Modeſty and Charity, and only out " of Love for Truth. The World had not ſeen ſo ma" ny Books full of Invectives and extravagant Calumnies " againſt many private Perſons, ſuch as the infamous " Libel, Intituled, Arnaud de Breſſe reſuſcité dans Arnauld de Paris, nor the Book full of falſities and bitterneſs, " which he publiſh'd againſt the whole Order of St. Dominick, with this Title, De immunitate Autorum Cyriacorum a Cenſura: Diatriba Petri a valle Clauſa S. T. D. " This Work was condemn'd at Rome, and many others, " as thoſe, De Communione pro Mortuis: De Martyrio per peſtem: De cenſura bonorum & malorum librorum; and " the 20th Volume, which his Friends Printed after his " Death..... This Father died at Lyons of an Apoplexy " the laſt Day of October, 1663, without ever giving " any Satiſfaction for the Slanders, injurious Words and " Calumnies that are ſo frequent in many of his Books.

(I) His Enemies ſpread abroad ſtrange Reports ...... which are ...... refuted by Monconys.] The following Paſſage is ſomewhat long; but 'tis no matter: There are ſome things in it which perhaps the Relator did not believe. (e) " When I told (f) him that I was a Native " of Lyons, he immediately ask'd me ſome News about " the Death of Father Theophilus Raynaud. I told him " that I happen'd to be at Lyons when he died, and " that my Brother, who was come from Paris, when " he was cut for the Stone, had often Diſcours'd with " me about him. He then ſhew'd me a Letter of Fa" ther Henſchenius, whoſe Library I had ſeen at Antwerp, wherein he acquainted him, that the Jacobins " had ſpread a Report in Flanders and at Rome, that " Father Theophilus ſaid a mad Maſs; that the Jeſuits had " depriv'd him of the Sacraments; that he run up and " down their Convent of Lyons, crying out like a " damn'd Man, Phlegiton ſuper me; and that having been " buried Sepulturâ aſini, he had been found unburied " the next Day, his Body being livid all over, becauſe " the Devils had beat him all Night. I told him that it " was a groſs Calumny and a ſilly Report; for the good " Man had left off ſaying Maſs for a Fortnight out of " Weakneſs, and communicated every Day. He had " made three general Confeſſions to Father du Lieu the " Week that he died. Nay, the very Morning of the " Day that he departed this Life, which happen'd laſt " Year on All Saints Eve, having had ſeveral Warnings " of it, he took his leave thrice of the Brother who " helped him to dreſs himſelf, aſſuring him that he " would give him no more trouble; and returning from " the Chappel, where he had heard Maſs and Com" municated, he told a Brother whom he met, that he " had begg'd of God that he might be in Heaven on " All Saints Day, and a Moment after, about half an " Hour after the Communion, as he was going into his " Chamber, he expir'd into the Arms of another good " Brother. Thus he fulfill'd his Prophecy, that he " ſhould Die in his Caſſock, and in his Chamber, which " he lov'd ſo well, that no Perſecution could bring him " off from the State of Life he had pitch'd upon in his " younger Years, having never left the Solitude of his " Cell for the ſpace of ſixty Years, but to do ſome cha" ritable Works, as for inſtance to confeſs the meaneſt " Peaſant at any time. I told him that the Church of " Lyons had perform'd a ſolemn Service for him in St. " Juſtus's Chapter, where a Council was held; that the " Carmelites and Carthuſians had done the like at Lyons, " and that the Congregation of the Gentlemen of Lyons " had ſaid the Office in their Chappel, and had aſſiſted " at his Obſequies in a Body. I told him, that my Bro" ther himſelf, who did not eaſily believe Revelations, " had often told me, that when Father Theophilus was " in great trouble at Avignon, on account of his Book " de Negotiatore Religioſo, a barefooted Carmelite having " recommended him to the Prayers of a Carmelite Nun, " who is accounted a Holy Woman at Avignon, with" out telling her his Name; that Nun anſwer'd him, " that the Perſon for whom he deſir'd her Prayers, " was one of the moſt Learned Men of the Church, and " very acceptable to God; but that in order to exerciſe " his Virtue, and increaſe his Merit, our Lord had mor" tified him in that very thing, of which he was moſt " fond, viz. in his Books, whereof the whole Glory " and Reward were reſerv'd for him after his Death; " and that then all the Provinces of the World would " eagerly ſeek for them. As I perceiv'd that he heard " me with a great deal of Pleaſure, I added what the " Prior Jugeact of Lyons had told me of Father Theophilus's Modeſty, which his Adverſaries ſhould imi" tate, viz. that he had refus'd the Biſhoprick of " Geneva, when the Nephew of the Bleſſed (Francis de Sales) came to die; that Don Felix of Savoy, and " the whole Senate of Chambery, having obtain'd the " conſent of Duke Charles Emanuel, Father Theophilus " was the only Man that oppos'd it, which he did ſo " earneſtly that they were forced to deſiſt. This the " ſaid Prior told me he was certainly inform'd of; and " that he himſelf was a Witneſs of an Act of a moſt " heroical Vertue; for having orders from the late Arch" biſhop of Bourdeaux, and ſome others, to offer ſome " Benefices and a Yearly Penſion of two thouſand Li" vres to Father Theophilus, with a City Security at Lyons, if he would but write in favour of a certain " Doctrine; Father Theophilus kiſſing his Caſſock, an" ſwer'd Mr. Jugeact in theſe fine Words, that he had " rather die under Perſecution in that Habit, than " live an eaſy Life and be wanting in the Fidelity he " had vowed to God". If the Monks don't ſcruple to ſpread ſuch Reports againſt a Jeſuit, 'tis no wonder if they have publiſh'd ſo many falſe Stories concerning the Death of Luther, Calvin, &c.

(K) I have ſomething to ſay againſt Moreri.] I. The beſt part of what he ſays being taken Word for Word from the Journal (g) des Savans, he ſhould have acquainted the Readers with it. It is an omiſſion for which he deſerves to be call'd a Plagiary, and theſe Words of Pliny may be applied to him: (h) Obnoxii profecto

(a) [illegible]

(b) [illegible]

(c) [illegible]

(d) [illegible]

(e) [illegible]

(f) [illegible]

(g) The ſame which I have quoted in the Remark F.

(h) Plinius in præfat.

clude, Father Theophilus Raynaud has often disguis'd (L) his Name in the Titles of his Books.

The Carmelites praise him very much, and made * a Funeral Solemnity for him, in all the Convents of their Order, in the Year 1663. by reason of the Book he had written concerning the Scapulary, which one of 'em publish'd (M) with many Alterations. He put out a Catalogue of his Works, which was very acceptable to the Curious. It is a very good Piece in its kind: It was printed by it self; but it was since prefix'd to the 20th Volume of his Works, which is entituled Apopompæus. One may find in that Catalogue the Occasion and Subject of each Book of that Writer, and the Names of those who writ against them, what was replied by Father Theophilus, and such like particulars, very pleasing to those who love the History of Books and Authors. It were to be wish'd that a Chronological Order had been more carefully observ'd in it. We find in that Catalogue, that such a Book is the first that the Author publish'd; another the second, the third, and so on; but neither the Year, nor the Place of the Impression, nor the Number and the Dates of the several Editions appear in it. Those, who thought that the Bookseller, who undertook to Print all the Works of that Jesuit in 20 Volumes in Folio, would (N) be ruined by it, were very much mistaken.

RAMUS

perfecto animi & infelicis ingenii est deprehendi in furto malle, quam mutuum reddere. II. It is not true that Father Theophilus intended to Intitle the Collection of his Books Apopompæus, which is the Name the Jews gave to the Victim, which they loaded with Curses, and sent into the Wilderness; but it was not thought proper to make use of such a Title. The Title Apopompæus was only intended for the Collection of some Pieces, which the Author did not insert in his 19 Volumes. We have seen above Mr. Gallois's Words, which are so plain, that I cannot apprehend how Moreri could mistake the Sense of 'em. That Jesuit should have lost his Wits, if he had been willing that all his Works should be thus Intitu'ed. He kept that Title for some forbidden Pieces, as Father Sotuel informs us; which shews that Moreri is Guilty of a new Omission. III. The Works of Theophilus Raynaud have not been Printed in the Year 1667, the Edition of 'em was finish'd in 1665. Moreri fell into this mistake, because that Collection is mention'd in the Journal des Savans of the 14th of March 1667. This should oblige the Journalists always to set down the Year of the Impression. They did not do it at first, especially when they were afraid of discovering thereby that they spoke of a Book which had lost the Grace of Novelty. IV. It is not true, that our Jesuit lived in the XVIth Century. This Fault is only to be found in the second Edition made in Holland.

(L) Has often disguis'd his Name in the Titles of his Book.] This will afford matter to Mr. Baillet in the fine Collection we expect from him, about the Authors who have appear'd in Print under false Names. He doubts (a) whether our Jesuit took the Name of Anselmus Solerius in the Book de pileo, cæterisque capitis tegminibus; but since that Book is to be found in the 13th Volume (b) of the Works of that Father, we may be sure that he is the Author of it. Placcius (c) is in the wrong to believe that it came out at first without any Name, in the Lyons Edition 1655. in Quarto, dedicated ad Petrum de Macerat; but that in the Amsterdam Edition 1671. in Twelves, it was Printed with the Name of Anselmus Solerius Cimmeliensis. It is certain that in the Lyons Edition of 1655. the Author call'd himself Anselmus Solerius Cemeliensis, dedicating his Book ad Petrum de Maridat. So that it appears that Placcius was ignorant of several things upon this Head: He did not know the Names that appear'd in the first Edition: Macerat is a meer Chimera; Maridat is the true Name of a Councellor in the great Council: Anselmus Solerius (d) Cemeliensis was a false Name under which our Theophilus conceal'd himself. The same Placcius charges him, without any Reason, with a kind of contradiction (this I observe by the by) about the Chronicle of Flavius Dexter. (e) Illud (Chronicon) ab ipso (f) BIVARIO, vel VIVARIO confictum credidere Gabriel Pennottus & Matthæus Raderus, contra quos ipse tamen Apologiis sese binis defendit quas approbant Carolus Visch Bibl. Cisterciensis, p. 114. & Th. Raynaud. de mal. & bon. lib. pag. 139. sibi fere contrarius pag. 164. They are Placcius's Words: he pretends that our Jesuit having approv'd, pag. 139. the Apologies of the Spanish Monk, disapproves them, pag. 164. But there is no such thing: he despises them plainly enough, pag. 164. and more clearly still, pag. 139. (g) Flavii Dextri Chronicon nuper vulgatum, suppositum fuisse Dextro, latè contendit Gabriel Pennotus in Canonicorum Regularium historia. Quamvis enim, ipso S. Hieronymo teste, ratum sit, Flavium Dextrum scripsisse Chronicon quod eidem D. Hieronymo inscripserit; tamen hoc Chronicon nuper vulgatum, illud ipsum esse genuinum, cujus S. Hieronymus meminit, multa sunt quæ dissuadent. Nec quæ adversùs libri illius suppositionem proferunt Bivarius commentator ac defensor, & Melchior Inchofer lib. pro epistola Deiparæ ad Messanenses à cap. 41. ad 46. explent revera legentis animum. This is what he says, pag. 139; and the following Words are to be found, pag. 164. (h) Flavii Dextri Chronicon quod nuper prodiit, magna excitavit dissidia. Aliquod Chronicon verè fuisse à Dextro conscriptum, constat, cùm S. Hieronymus ejus sibi à Dextro inscripti meminerit; sed an id quod nuper prodiit, sit verum illud Dextri Chronicon, controversia est. Multi hoc Chronicon esse suppositum ab aliquo, cui honor gentis suæ cordi esset, contendunt, & acriter Pennotus in Canonicorum Regularium historia. This Jesuit took the Name of Stephanus Emonerius (i) when he wrote against Barnes in favour of Equivocations; and that of J. Heribertus Cemeliensis in his Latin (k) Treatise concerning Eunuchs; and that of Leodegarius Quintinus Heduus writing against Hurtado, &c. This Hurtado was a Spanish Monk, who got the Book that is mention'd (l) by Patin, printed at Amsterdam: There are (m) some Jests in it upon the Titles of Father Raynaud's Books. But, by his Favour, those Titles were sometimes ingenious: Who would not read a Work intitled, Heteroclita Spiritualia, & anomalia pietatis? which is the Title of the 15th and 16th Volumes of the Works of that Jesuit. What! will some say, are there Heteroclites in Religion as well as in Grammar? are there Anomalies in it as well as in the Moon?

Some have been of Opinion that Amadæus Guimenius, whose Works have made so great a Noise on account of their loose Morality, was no other than Father Theophilus. Father Baron went upon that Supposition (n) in all the second Part of his Manuductio ad moralem Theologiam; but having since understood that the Book of Amadæus, which he refuted, was written by a Spanish Author he retracted in his Preface. And certainly, adds Mr. Gallois, Guimenius's Book has but little Affinity with Father Raynaud's Style. Note, that it was by other Means that it came to be known that this Piece was written by the Jesuit Moya, Confessor to the Queen of Spain.

(M) Publish'd with many Alterations] How can one trust posthumous Works, and Manuscripts that come from remote Countries? How can we be sure that nothing has been added to or cut off from them, since a Manuscript of Father Raynaud was so much alter'd by a Carmelite during the Author's Life, and very near him? This Jesuit had displaid all his Learning to maintain the Scapulary of Simon Stock; but the chief of those concerned, were not satisfied with his Performance: for which Reason they mangled some parts of his Book most wretchedly, and made some Additions to it. He express'd his Indignation for it in the following Words. (o) Hoc opusculum (Scapulare Stochianum illustratum & defensum) quale Parisiis è meo M. S. prodiit anno 1654. apud Antonium Padelore, abjudico tanquam spurium & alienum; Irruit enim in illud Leo, à quo miserè deformatum est, dicam discerptum & laceratum. Recisa plerisque locis, me inconsulto, multa; addita ex mente interpolatoris alia, quæ planè improbo. Titulus ipse libri, (ut ab ipso limine fieret perversionis exordium,) immutatus est; ita ut quod Hincmarus senior juniori exprobrabat, admissa in ipso aditu cespitatione, non potuerit expectari progressio felicior. Hiat passim oratio, ob prætermissionem vel recisionem unius aut alterius voculæ, menda ubique densa. Sic rependitur gratia.

(N) Would be ruin'd by it, were very much mistaken.] For that Edition sold very well, and when it is to be found compleat in the Auctions of Holland and Germany, they commonly bid high for it. So that the Printer did not deserve to be placed in a certain List mention'd

(a) In the List placed at the end of his Book, intituled, Auteurs deguisez.

(b) See Sotuel. ubi supra pag. 758.

(c) Placcius de anonymis n. 1214. pag. 120.

(d) Note that this Word signifies a Native of Cemelia. It was an Episcopal City, which has been ruin'd long ago. The Episcopal See has been united to that of Nice. See Theophilus Raynaud de [illegible] propriis pag. m. 20.

(e) Placcius in Pseudonymorum Catalogo n. 294. pag. 185.

(f) A Spanish Monk of the Order of Citeaux. He publish'd the Chronicle of Flavius Dexter with a Commentary at Lyons, in 1627.

(g) Theoph. Raynaudus de malis ac bonis libris n. 220. p. m. 139.

(h) Ibid. n. 296. pag. 164.

(i) In the Article Barnes. [illegible]

(k) [illegible] at Dijon [illegible] 4to. [illegible]

(l) [illegible]

(m) [illegible] Preface [illegible] Amsterdam [illegible]

(n) Gallois, Journal des Savans of the [illegible] of April 1680. pag. m. 93.

(o) Tom. [illegible] Raynaud [illegible] pag. [illegible] m. 72. [illegible] m. 73.

RAMUS (PETER) in French de la Ramée, was one of the moſt famous Profeſſors of the XVIth Century. He * was born in a Village of Vermandois in Picardy, in the Year 1515. His Grand-father retir'd into thoſe Parts, having loſt all he had, when the Place of his Birth was burnt, in the (A) Territory of Liege, by the Duke of Burgundy. He was forc'd to make and ſell Coals all the reſt of his Life, in order to get his Livelihood. He left a Son, who got his by being a Labourer †, and who was the Father of our Ramus: A Man who proved the Sport of Fortune; for his Life was a perpetual riſing and falling. Being ‡ but eight Years of Age he went to Paris out of a deſire of learning ſomething, and being forc'd to leave that City by reaſon of his Poverty, he went thither again as ſoon as he could; and finding no way to ſubſiſt, he left it a ſecond time: but his paſſion for Study was ſo great, that, tho' he had been unfortunate in thoſe two Journeys, he went a third time to Paris with deſign to look for a Place. He was maintain'd there for ſome Months by one of his Uncles; after which he was forc'd (B) to be a Servant in the College of Navarre. He ſerved his Maſters in the Day time, and ſpent the greateſt part of the Night in his Study §; and the progreſs he made in it was ſo conſiderable, that when he took his Maſter of Arts degree, he ‖ engaged to maintain a Doctrine quite contrary to Ariſtotle, about any thing that (C) ſhould be objected to him. But I muſt obſerve ¶, that before this he had gone through a Courſe of Philoſophy, which laſted three Years and a half. He very well anſwer'd the Objections that were made againſt him for a whole Day: Which Succeſs made him reſolve to examine more narrowly Ariſtotle's Doctrine, and to oppoſe it more vigorouſly. But the perfecting of Logick was almoſt the only thing he minded; and he made his Reading, and even tion'd by Mr. Catherinot. As I was ending this Article, ſays he (a) "the Reverend Father de Foucroy, a "Paris Jeſuit, but an Inhabitant of Bourges, where he "has been near 50 years teaching and writing Books, "told me that one might make a pretty large Volume "of the Catalogue of thoſe, who have intirely ruin'd "their Bookſellers by their Books. I ſhall ſpeak of this "another time". Which puts me in mind of this Paſſage of Stephen Paſquier. "(b) I cannot forbear complaining at this time of the Calamity of this Age "which has produc'd ſuch a Plenty of reputed or untimely Authors. Any pitiful Scribler will have his firſt "Thoughts to come to Light; leſt, being too long ſhut "up, they ſhould grow muſty. I think theſe Verſes of "Jodelle are very pat to the purpoſe:

---

"Et tant ceux d'aujourd'huy me faſchent,
"Qui dès lors que leurs plumes laſchent
"Quelque trait ſoit mauvais ou bon,
"En lumiere le vont produire,
"Pour ſouvent avec leur renom,
"Les pauvres Impriments deſtruire."

That is,

I'm plagued now-a-days with Men,
Who have no ſooner laid aſide their Pen,
But what they've writ, be it good or bad,
In hopes of ſome Renown,
Muſt be publiſh'd; and thus, Egad!
The Printer's quite undone.

(A) Burnt in the Territory of Liege.] This neither agrees with Moreri, nor with Mr. Teiſſier. The firſt ſays, that Ramus's Grandfather had been forc'd to leave Burgundy during the Wars, and that he retir'd into Vermandois. The latter ſays, (c) That Peter Ramus was deſcended from a noble Family, originally of the City of Evreux; for his Grandfather being expell'd from his Country, and depriv'd of his Eſtate by the Burgunders, fled into Vermandois. Thus, according to Moreri, Ramus's Grandfather was a Burgunder; but, according to Mr. Teiſſier, he was a Norman. I am ſure he was neither of 'em; he was of the Country of Liege. Here's the Proof of it (d) Parentes Rami agricolæ fuerunt pauperrimi. Avus certe, ut ipſe commemorat in Præfatione Regia ſuæ profeſſionis, in Eburonum gente familia in primis illuſtri fuit: ed patria a Carolo Burgundionum duce capta, & incenſa, in Veromanduorum agrum profugus, ob paupertatem carbonariam artem exercuit. All good Geographers will tell you that the Eburones and the Inhabitants of the Country of Liege are one and the ſame People.

(B) To be a Servant in the College of Navarre.] I follow the account of Banoſius, and not that of Joſeph Scaliger. The latter ſays that Ramus was a Servant when he went to Paris. (e) Ramus ad annum uſque decimum nonum, ne quidem primas notas didicerat, inſerviebatque Dom. de la Broſſe (f) Lutetiam deductus tantum famulus profecit maximo diſcendi deſiderio percitus, at quamvis repugnante ingenio tardo, rudi & ſtupido, repugnante, quod majus eſt, inſtitutione ſera, labore & diligentia in id litterarum decus pervenerit, quò perveniſſe vix credibile ſit, ita ut anno trigeſimo contra Ariſtotelem ſcripſerit meliori ſtylo quam poſterioribus anni. I can ſcarce believe what the great Scaliger tells us: "Tis not at all likely that Ramus was (g) 19 Years of Age before he learn'd to read, nor that he had a dull and heavy Wit. However it be, 'tis not true that he was 30 Years old when he began to write againſt Ariſtotle; for his Book was condemn'd after many Concertations the 10th of May, 1543. He was then but 28 Years of Age; and therefore I am more inclined to believe Banoſius, who ſays that Ramus being eight Years of Age, took a Journey to Paris of his own motion, &c. (h) Anno ætatis ſuæ circiter octavo ſponte Lutetiam venit, & inde bis abductus violentia temporis, bis eodem tamen, quam libet reflantibus ventis reverſus, & ardenti diſcendi ſtudio incenſus, ab Honorato Carpenterio avunculo victum per aliquot menſes perexiguum accepit, ut artes addiſceret: deinceps neceſſitate coactus multos annos duram ſervitutem in collegio Navarræ ſervivit. Sed quum interdiu dominis ſuis fidelem operam præſtitiſſet, nocte, Cleanthis Philoſophi exemplo non diſſimili, oleo & lucerna diſciplinarum lumen brevi tempore tantum ſibi comparavit, ut artium liberalium laurea ſit donatus. But here is a ſtrong Proof againſt Banoſius, which I take from Ramus's own Words, as they are related by John Freigius: (i) Confiteor vitam mihi totam acerbiſſimis fluctibus jactatam eſſe. Puer vix è cunis egreſſus duplici peſte laboravi: juvenis invita modiſque omnibus repugnante fortuna Lutetiam ad capeſſendas artes ingenuas veni, inde bis abductus violentia temporis, bis eodem tamen quamlibet reflantibus ventis reverſus, atque eo ardentiore diſcendi ſtudio incenſus, quò vehementius prohibebar. If Ramus had been but eight Years of Age, when he went to Paris, would he have uſed the Word juvenis? Ought he not to have ſaid puer? and would he have failed in it?

(C) To maintain a Doctrine quite contrary to Ariſtotle, about any thing that ſhould be objected to him.] Taſſoni looks upon it as an intollerable piece of boldneſs: Ma più audace, ſays he (k), fù la prova di Pietro Ramo, autore per altro poco degno d'eſſere nominato. Queſto dovendo ſecondo l'uſo di Parigi ſoſtener concluſioni prima che foſſe creato Maeſtro, per bizzarria d'ingegno, propoſe queſta ſola a qualunque voleſſe argumentare, dando libero campo a tutti. Quæcunque ab Ariſtotele dicta ſint, falſa, & commentitia eſſe. La quale havendo eccitati contra di lui tutti gl'ingegni, tutte le profeſſioni, tutte le ſcuole; egli nondimeno con tanta prontezza, e ſottigliezza di riſpoſte la difeſe, che fe rimaner confuſa, e ſtupita la Città di Parigi: E ben ne' ſuoi libri appariſcono ancora i ſegni della ſua audacia. The beſt of all is, that he owns that the Reſpondent maintain'd his Aſſertion with ſo great Subtilty, that every Body was amaz'd at it. Let us ſee how Freigius relates the Matter. (l) Lutetiæ magiſterii titulum ſuſcepturus, pro more & conſuetudine ſcholarum liberam diſputandi copiam examinatoribus facere cogebatur. Problema igitur ſumpſit: Quæcunque ab Ariſtotele dicta eſſent, commenticia eſſe. Attoniti novitate & inſolentia problematis Magiſtri noſtri, cùm authoritatem Ariſtotelis (qua tanquam ſcuto, ſeſe ad omnes inſultus munire conſueverunt) ſibi ereptam viderent, irrito conatu per diem integrum, Magiſtrandum (ut barbari barbare vocant) oppugnarunt. Ex hoc fortuito ſucceſſu anſam deinceps ſerio & libere in Ariſtotelem animadvertendi & inquirendi arripuit.

(D) Occa-

(g) Mr. Teiſſier ſo quoting Scaligerana 1 lays only nine years.

(h) Banoſius, ubi ſupra p. 3.

(i) Johannes Thomas Freigius, in vita Petri Rami p. 7. ex Schecſiano epilogo Rami.

(k) Aleſſandro Taſſoni, Penſieri diverſi lib. 10. c. 3. p. 375.

(l) Freigius ubi ſupra pag. 9, 10.

even his Lectures of Eloquence, ſubſervient to it *. The two firſt Books he publiſh'd, viz. his Inſtitutiones Dialecticæ, and his Ariſtotelicæ Animadverſiones, occaſion'd great (D) Troubles in the Univerſity of Paris.

It was neceſſary that Francis I. ſhould concern himſelf with it, bringing the Cauſe before him, which was depending in the Parliament of Paris, between Ramus and Govea. Some Judges were aſſign'd to the Parties to pronounce Sentence in the Difference between them,

Govea

(D) Occaſion'd great Troubles in the Univerſity of Paris.] The Profeſſors of Paris, who admir'd Ariſtotle, ſhould have refuted Ramus's Books in their Writings and Lectures; but inſtead of keeping within the Bounds of an Academical War, they proſecuted that Anti-Peripatetick before the Judges, as a Man who undermined the Foundations of Religion. They raiſed ſo many Clamours, that the Cauſe was brought before the Parliament of Paris; but as ſoon as they perceived that it would be examin'd equitably, and according to the uſual Forms, they got it remov'd from that Tribunal by their Intrigues, and brought it before the King's Council. (a) Ubi Ariſtotelicæ Animadverſiones lectæ erant, cum Petrus Ramus repente non ad humanam aliquam, & literis conſtitutam diſputationem ab Academia vocatur, ſed ad Prætoris tribunalis capitalem contentionem per certos homines falſo Academiæ nomine rapitur, novoque & ante hunc diem inaudito crimine accuſatur, quod Ariſtoteli repugnando Theologiam & artes enervaret. Hac enim oratione Ariſtotelica actio inſtituta eſt. Hinc Ariſtotelicorum clamoribus agitatus ad ſummum Pariſienſis Curiæ conſilium traducitur: deinde cum legitimo judicum more res agi, atque apertius inquiſitionis fraudis invidia percipi videretur, novis artibus a Senatu Pariſienſi ad regiam cognitionem disjicitur. The King order'd (b) that Antony Govea, who had offer'd to impugn and refute the ſaid Books, and the ſaid Ramus, who maintain'd and defended them, ſhould chuſe and nominate on both Sides, two worthy Men well skill'd in the Greek and Latin Tongues, and in Philoſophy. Purſuant to this Ordinance, Govea and Ramus choſe each of 'em two Perſons: Peter Danes and Francis Vicomercat were choſen by Govea; and John Quintin, Doctor of the Canon-Law, and John de Beaumont, Doctor of Phyſick, were choſen by Peter Ramus. The King choſe a fifth, who was John de Salignac, Doctor of Divinity. Here are the Contents of the Letters Patents. "(c) Before whom the ſaid Govea and Ramus have been "heard in their Diſputes and Debates, 'till the ſaid Ramus, in order to put a ſtop to the Buſineſs, enter'd an "Appeal; which we being inform'd of, iſſued out our "Letters to our Provoſt of Paris, or his Lieutenant, to "compel the ſaid Govea and Ramus to end their Diſputes, that the ſaid Information might be given us "by the ſaid Cenſors, notwithſtanding the ſaid Appeal, or any other whatſoever. Purſuant to which "Letters the ſaid Govea and Ramus have appeared again before the ſaid Cenſors, and the ſaid Ramus perceiving that he could not defend the ſaid Books, "declared he would diſpute no longer, and ſubmitted "to the Cenſure of the above-mention'd Judges; but "when they would have proceeded in it, the ſaid Quintin and Beaumont declared that they would be no longer "concern'd in the matter. Whereupon the ſaid Ramus "was ſummon'd and requir'd to chuſe and name two "others, which he refus'd to do, and wholly ſubmitted "to the three others; who having examin'd and conſider'd the whole matter, were of Opinion that the "ſaid Ramus was a raſh, arrogant and impudent Man, "for rejecting and condemning the Logick receiv'd by "all Nations, which he himſelf was ignorant of, and "that his Ignorance plainly appear'd from his reproving "Ariſtotle in his Animadverſions. Moreover they added, "that he had an ill Intention, ſince he blamed Ariſtotle "for many things which that Philoſopher never thought "of, and that the ſaid Animadverſions were full of Lies "and Slanders; ſo that the good of Learning requir'd, "that the ſaid Book ſhould be wholly ſuppreſt; and "likewiſe the other above-mention'd Book Intitled, "Dialecticæ Inſtitutiones, as containing in like manner "many Falſities." Here follows the Purvieu of the Ordinance. "(d) We declare that having ſeen the ſaid "Advice, and had other Advices and Deliberations about it "with many learned and notable Men, we have condemn'd, "ſuppreſs'd and aboliſh'd, and do condemn, ſuppreſs "and aboliſh the aforeſaid two Books, the one Intitled Inſtitutiones Dialecticæ, the other Ariſtotelicæ Animadverſiones, and we have forbidden and do forbid all Printers "and Bookſellers of our Kingdom, Countries, Territories "and Lordſhips, and all our other Subjects, whatever "condition they may be of, to Print the ſaid Books, or "cauſe them to be printed, to publiſh, ſell or diſperſe "them in our ſaid Kingdom, Countries, Territories and "Lordſhips, upon pain of Forfeiting the ſaid Books, and "of Corporal Puniſhment, whether they be Printed in "our ſaid Kingdom, Countries, Territories and Lordſhips, or in any other Place not being under our Dominion. We likewiſe forbid the ſaid Ramus to read "the ſaid Books, and to get them written or tranſcrib'd, "publiſh'd or diſpers'd in any manner whatſoever, or "to read any Lectures of Logick or Philoſophy, without expreſs leave from us; as alſo not to uſe ſuch "Slanders and Invectives againſt Ariſtotle, or any other "Ancient Author commonly receiv'd and approv'd, or "againſt our ſaid Daughter the Univerſity, and the Members thereof, upon the above-mention'd Pains; and "therefore we order and command, &c."

He who hears but one ſide, hears nothing; and therefore it will not be improper to hear the Account which a Friend of Ramus publiſh'd of the whole Proceeding. Ramus to obey the King's Command, appear'd before the five Judges, tho' three of 'em were his great Enemies. The Diſpute laſted two Days. He maintain'd that the Logick of Ariſtotle was imperfect, ſince it contain'd no definition nor diviſion. The two Judges he had choſen declared the firſt Day in Writing, that a (e) definition is neceſſary in every regular Diſputation; the three others declared in Writing, (f) that Logick may be perfect without definition. The next Day they acknowledged in Writing, that Diviſion is neceſſary in Logick; but when they ſaw that Ramus inferr'd from thence that he was in the right to condemn Ariſtotle's Logick, becauſe it was not divided, they put off the Buſineſs 'till another time; and perceiving that they had ſo intangled themſelves, that they could not come off with Honour, they declar'd that the Diſputation ought to be renew'd, and that what had been done thoſe two Days, ſhould be look'd upon as nothing. Ne non damnaretur Ramus, novum conſilium initur ut ab initio tota diſputatio retexatur, & adhuc injudicata indiceretur, proque nihilo haberetur (g). Ramus made great complaints of ſuch a Proceeding, wherein the Judges not only made it appear that they intended to condemn him, but alſo diſanull'd their own Judgment; He excepted againſt them, and enter'd an Appeal, which was declared Null by Francis I. who order'd that the five Judges ſhould give a definitive Sentence in that Cauſe. The two Judges choſen by Ramus retired, being unwilling to be preſent at the Judgment (h), as meer Witneſſes to the Injuſtice intended againſt him. The three others gave Sentence as they were led by their Paſſion, and care was taken to prepoſſeſs the King with falſe Reports, that he confirm'd their Judgment. (i) Hæc omnia Regis, licet omnium Regum & humaniſſimi & literarum amantiſſimi, tamen per falſas & improbiſſime conſictas calumnias inducti, auctoritate confirmantur. Note, that the King declared in his Letters Patents, that Ramus did wholly ſubmit to thoſe three Judges, after the other two had deſiſted. Which is falſe, if we may believe the Author whom I quote; for having ſaid that the two Judges gave over the Proceedings, he adds that Ramus did the ſame, and that the three others condemn'd him without hearing him. (k) Idemque Ramus ipſe non ſine ſtomacho, cum a tribus illis contumelioſe illuderetur, fecit, & ſe tempora ſperare dixit, quibus tales judices de ſuo facto nequaquam parem eſſent voluptatem percepturi. Ita vi [illegible] vel certe hominum quorumcunque opinione ad tempus oppreſſa cauſa eſt. Condemnantur igitur triumvirali ſententia, non modo indicta, ſed incognita plane cauſa, animadverſiones Ariſtotelicæ. Take notice that the thing is thus related, not in an Anonymous Book, but in a piece which Omar Talon dedicated to the Cardinal of Lorrain. If we give Credit to it, we muſt look upon what is ſaid by Peter Galland as a meer Fable. He tells us, that Francis I. being informed of the continual invectives of a certain Sophiſt againſt Ariſtotle, Cicero, and Quintilian, was reſolved to ſend him to the Gallies, but that Caſtellan adviſed him to uſe another ſort of Puniſhment; which was to engage that Sophiſt in a Diſpute, wherein the Silence he would be reduced to, would plainly diſcover his Folly. The King approved that Expedient, and when he heard of the Confuſion that Man had been in, he was contented with that Puniſhment. 'Tis Ramus, whom Peter Galland means; but we muſt remember that he was his great Enemy. (l) Cum in hac ſchola

ante

(a) Audomarus Talæus in ſua ad Carolum Lotharingium Cardinalem Academia, apud Launoium de varia Ariſtotelis Fortuna pag. 47, 48. edit. Paris. 1653.

(b) They are the words of the King's Letters Patents, dated the 10th of May 1543. See Launoi de varia Ariſtotelis fortuna, pag. 51, 52. Thoſe Letters are to be found in the Bibliotheque Françoiſe of Du Verdier Vau-Privas at the word Pierre de la Ramée.

(c) That is, before the 5 Judges, viz. he whom the King nominated, and thoſe who were choſen by the Parties.

(d) See Launoi ib.

Govea had all the Advantage he could deſire: Ramus's Books were prohibited all over the Kingdom, and the Author was forbidden to teach Philoſophy. His Enemies expreſs'd an extraordinary (E) Joy for it. This happen'd in the Year 1543. The Year following [*] the Plague raged at Paris, and occaſion'd the diſperſion of the Scholars of the College of Prele: But Ramus being perſuaded by his Friends to teach there, had quickly a great many Hearers. The Sorbonne endeavour'd to have him expell'd from that College, but could not ſucceed in it: He was maintain'd in his place of Principal by a Decree of the Parliament [†]. The Cardinal of Lorrain proved ſo good a Patron to him, that he obtained from Henry II. the liberty [a] of Writing and Speaking in the Year 1547, and the Royal Profeſſorſhip of Philoſophy and Eloquence in July 1551. The Parliament of Paris had before this maintain'd him in the liberty of adding Philoſophical Lectures to thoſe of Eloquence [β]. That Decree had put an end to many Perſecutions, which Ramus and his Scholars had been expoſed to. They had been vexed and proſecuted (F) ſeveral ways, both before the Academical and the Civil Judges [γ], during the Winter [δ] of the Year 1551. He was no ſooner made Regius Profeſſor, but he ſhewed a new deſire of perfecting the Sciences, and went about it with more eagerneſs, notwithſtanding the Hatred of his reſtleſs Enemies, who were ſo mad as to pretend that his manner of pronouncing the Letter Q together with his (G) Collegues, was an Innovation, for which he deſerv'd to be proſecuted. They carried their Attempts ſo far, that he was obliged to abſcond. He went to Fontainebleau, with the King's (H) leave, where he concealed himſelf [ζ], and continued his Geometrical and Aſtronomical Studies ante annos octo Sophiſta famoſus Muſis iratis natus, gloriæ popularis ſiti inexplebili præceps, Ariſtotele, Cicerone & Quintiliano petulanter & ignoranter vexatis, nullum finem in quemvis auctorem claſſicum debacchandi facturus videretur, priuſquam præſentem literarum ſtatum labefactaſſet, & ad ſuam libidinem pervertiſſet, permulti doctrina & virtute conſpicui homines audaciam tam prodigioſam indigniſſime tulerunt. Cumque de eo apud regem ita conqueſti eſſent, ut ille, pro ſua perpetua in literas & literarum Profeſſores benevolentia, hunc indignabundus ad remum damnatum triremibus addicere ſtatueret. Regis animum facetis leporis ſuavitate emollitum, ad mitiorem ſententiam traduxit. Sophiſtam nugantem & inepte philoſophantem ab humaniſſimo Rege nullo capitali ſupplicio puniendum eſſe. Verum cum doctis hominibus coram gravibus diſceptatoribus in diſputationis certamen commiſſum, argumentis convincendum, & ratione aliqua leviore ad ſanitatem reducendum. Quorum ſententia cum illum Rex ineptiis, impudentiæ & temeritatis damnatum, ſilentique pœna multatum vidiſſet, facile acquievit, neque acerbius quicquam in eum ſtatuit.

(E) Expreſs'd an extraordinary Joy for it.] They made a greater noiſe about it in proportion, than the moſt Vain-glorious Princes for the taking of a great Town, or the obtaining a moſt important Victory. The Sentence of the three Judges was publiſh'd in Latin and French in all the Streets of Paris, and in all the Parts of Europe whither they could ſend it. Some Plays were acted with great Pomp, wherein Ramus was abuſed a thouſand ways among the Acclamations and Applauſes of the Ariſtotelians. (a) Triumphus de tam nobili victoria mirificus agitur, triſtis illa & horrenda Triumvirûm ſententia impreſſis & Latina & Gallica oratione libellis, non modo per hujus urbis compita, ſed per orbis terrarum loca omnia, quò expectari (b) potuit, promulgatur. Ludi magno apparatu celebrantur, ubi ſpectantibus & plaudentibus Ariſtotelæis, omni ludibrii & convitii genere Ramus afficitur.

(F) They had been vexed and proſecuted ſeveral ways.] I don't give the Particulars of thoſe Vexations, which you may read in (c) Freigius: I ſhall only ſay, that when Ramus's Enemies came to perceive that the other Complaints made no great impreſſion, they accuſed him of perverting the Youth with the Seeds of Hereſie and Scepticiſm. (d) Unius primum accuſationem graviſſimam audivit, Ramum Academicum nominantis, & inaudita calumnia deſcribentis, humanarum divinarumque rerum hoſtem & inimicum, qui de humanis diviniſque legibus addubitaret, deque iis dubitare diſcipulos ſuos doceret: qui lubricos Divi Auguſtini locos ſuis auditoribus ad effrenatam & impiam libertatem proponeret, qui (quò facilius incautis animis abuteretur) omnes Logicas diſputationes tolleret.

(G) His manner of pronouncing the Letter Q together with his Collegues.] Amongſt other Abuſes, the Royal Profeſſors mended that, which had crept into the Pronunciation of the Latin. Some Eccleſiaſticks complied with that Reform, tho' the Sorboniſts were diſpleaſed with that Innovation. But a benefic'd Man was very ill uſed by them upon that account; for they got him deprived of his Revenues. He made his Application to the Parliament; and the Royal Profeſſors being afraid that he would ſink under the Credit of the Faculty of Divinity, for being ſo bold as to pronounce the Latin Tongue according to their Reform, thought themſelves oblig'd to aſſiſt him: They went to the Court, and repreſented ſo lively the Shamefulneſs of ſuch a Trial, that the accuſed Perſon was acquitted. (e) Quas novas turbas innovata pronunciatio peperit! Sub annum milleſimum quingenteſimum quinquageſimum, cum Profeſſores regii ſinceriorem Latinæ linguæ pronunciationem ſenſim introducere cœpiſſent, moleſtè ferebant cum alii tum præſertim Sorbonici inveteratam loquendi conſuetudinem Gallorum improbari, ut quæ pueri didiciſſent, ſenes perdenda fateri cogerentur: in primis verò de ſono ipſius literæ Q. ambigebatur: regiis ſic, uti debet, cum ſequente u pronunciantibus, Quiſquis, Quamquam: Sorbonicis verò conſuetudine vernacula, Kiskis, Kankam. Jam cum ſacris addictum hominem ob genuinam pronunciationem ampliſſimis proventibus Sorbonici ſpoliandum curaſſent, & lite coram Senatu Pariſienſi conteſtata, ne miſer ille ob grammaticam hæreſin (ut illi vocabant) theologicis fructibus jure excideret, periculum eſſet: profeſſores regii, & inter hos Petrus Ramus facto agmine in Curiam convolant, & judicii inſolentiam præfati, quod Jureconſulti de legibus regiis diſputare ſoliti, ad grammaticorum leges dijudicandas ſeſe demiſiſſent, judices ita commoverunt, ut ſententiis ſuis non modò ſacerdotem abſolverent, ſed & impunitatem de Grammatica pronunciatione diſputandi tacito aſſenſu in perpetuum ſtabilirent. Ergo Kis & Kalis, & Kantus, & Kiki, & ſimiles Gotiſmi & barbariſmi erant in Pariſienſi Academia ante regios profeſſores uſitati: quos barbariſmos ſi collega aliquis imitari nollet, acerbè & contumelioſè accipiebatur, quod collegii conſuetudinem violare diceretur. E ſchola regia tum primum Quis, Qualis, Quantus, Mihi, Latinè & Romanè ſonuerunt, & pudor fuit regiis Profeſſoribus tanquam regis ipſius voci palàm reclamare. This is ſuch a ſtrange and incredible thing, that I did not think fit to omit any one Word of the Author who relates it. He maintains another immediately after, which I am more amazed at, and I would fain ſee the Monuments of it in the Archives; otherwiſe I would not adviſe any Body to give an intire Credit to it, any more than to the Trial about Kankan and Kiskis. The thing is this: The publick Authority was made uſe of to force many Doctors of Paris to renounce this Aſſertion, which they obſtinately maintain'd: Ego amat is as good a Phraſe as Ego amo. I'll quote Freigius for it. (f) Incredibile propè dictu eſt, ſed tamen verum & editis libris proditum, in Pariſienſi Academia Doctores extitiſſe, qui mordicus tuerentur ac defenderent, Ego amat, tam commodam orationem eſſe, quàm Ego amo; ad eamque pertinaciam comprimendam conſilio publico opus fuiſſe. Notwithſtanding my Incredulity, I ſhall obſerve that there happen'd many things in the XVIth Century in the Faculty of Theology at Paris, at which they bluſh now when they think of 'em. They were laugh'd at for it to ſome purpoſe.

(H) He went to Fontainebleau with the King's Leave, &c.] I wiſh Freigius had not omitted the Circumſtances of Ramus's Retreat; I wiſh particularly he had mention'd the time: but perhaps if he had ventur'd to ſet down the Year, he would not have been more ſucceſsful, than when he ſaid that Ramus's Animadverſiones were condemned (g) in the Year 1545; and that the Author was forbidden to meddle with Philoſophy; but that Ramus being reinſtated by King Henry (h) at the Sollicitation of the Cardinal of Lorrain, made a Speech in the Year 1546, De ſtudiis Philoſophiæ & Eloquentiæ conju-

(e) Id. ib. pag. 24.

(f) Id. ib.

(g) Id. ib. pag. 14.

(h) Henri II. did not begin his Reign 'till the Year 1547. Ramus was deprived in 1543.

dies by the help of the Books he found in the King's Library. But when it came to be known that he was there, he did not think himſelf ſafe, and was forced to abſcond in ſeveral other Places *. In the mean time his Library was plunder'd in the College of Prele. But the Peace being concluded between Charles IX. and the Proteſtants, in the Year 1563, he was reſtored to his Place, wherein he maintain'd himſelf with great Vigour, and endeavour'd chiefly to make Mathematical Learning flouriſh; which he did 'till the ſecond Civil War in the Year 1567. He was then obliged to leave Paris, and to put himſelf under the Protection of the Hugonots †. He was in their Army at the Battel of St. Denys. The Peace was made ſome Months after, and here aſſumed his Profeſſorſhip; but foreſeeing that the War would ſoon begin again, and being unwilling to be expoſed to a new Storm, he ask'd the King's leave to go and ſee the German Univerſities, which was granted him. He made that Journey in the Year 1568, and receiv'd great Honours where-ever he came ‡. He return'd into France after the third War §, in the Year 1571, and was cruelly Maſſacred at Paris on St. Bartholomew's Day. He was, without doubt, a great (I) Orator, a Man of univerſal Learning, and endow'd with excellent Moral Qualities, free from (K) Avarice, Sober, Chaſt, Religious, and zealous for the reform'd Religion: But he was ſomewhat obſtinate, and of a contradicting Humour; and ſome will have it that he robbed ‖ Viete of his Inventions. He ſhew'd a (L) great firmneſs in his Misfortunes. He was not well beloved [illegible]. However it be, he clearly intimates that the King not daring to protect Ramus openly, ſent him to Fontainbleau to ſecure him from the Fury of his Enemies. (a) Paucis menſibus per reliqua Geometriæ myſteria perviſſet, niſi curſus induſtriæ per fatalem quandam calamitatem abruptus fuiſſet. Acceptis igitur à rege literis, ad regiam Fontebellaquei bibliothecam profectus, mathematicos ſuperiorum temporum prælectiones ab initio plenius & uberius retractavit & conſideravit. . . . . . . (b) Hæc meditantem ſolitudo cervorum ac ſylva diutius retinere non potuit. In Italiam tum cogitavit, quo ipſum Bononia honorifice invitarat. In Germaniam viſitans ipſis illis mathematum amoribus chariſſimam ſæpe reſpexit, ſed vis omnibus terror mortis intentus ac pavor, rumor etiam Pralei ſui indignis modis direpti, tum bibliotheca chariſſimis quibuſque rebus ſpoliata ac depopulata, ad regiam Vincennarum propius urbem revocarunt: quin alia vis etiam gravior accidit ut e Vincennis per invia itinera profugiendum eſſet, & ſubinde variis in locis deliteſcendum: in fuga tamen & latebris otium lucemque reperit. (c) Baneſius informs us that Ramus retir'd to Fontainebleau during the firſt War of Religion, that is, in the Year 1562.

(I) A great Orator.] I deſire no other Proof for it than this Teſtimony of Brantome, which contains a thing not to be found any where elſe. Here are his words, wherein he mentions the learned Men maintain'd by Henry II. " (d) Galandius Torticolis was a great Man in " Oratory; but Ramus his Enemy exceeded him. Ramus was a moſt eloquent Orator, and there have been " few like him; for his Eloquence was attended with an " extraordinary graceful Delivery. Having turn'd Huguenot ſome Years after, and being in the Prince's and " the Admiral's Retinue, in their Journey to Lorrain, " and the Reiſters, whom they had ſent for, refuſing to go into France, unleſs they had ſome Mony " given 'em; the Huguenots made a gathering for them, " and Ramus a Speech, which affected them ſo much, " that they were prevailed upon to go into the Heart of " France, where they did great Miſchief."

(K) Free from Avarice, Sober, Chaſt.] (e) He refuſed ſome Profeſſorſhips, which might have been very profitable to him, and choſe rather to be a Teacher in the College of Prele, where he had no publick Salary. He would not accept the Preſents that his Pupils were willing to make him (f), and he maintain'd ſome Scholars at his own Charges (g). He refuſed to go into Poland, tho' he was promiſed to be well rewarded for the Encomiums he ſhould beſtow upon the Duke of Anjou. His Anſwer was, that Eloquence ought not to be a mercenary Thing, and that an Orator ought to be a Man of Probity. (h) Inter cætera referam quod cuidam reſpondit, qui in Poloniam legatus, Ramo, ut ſecum proficiſceretur ad Henrici, qui nunc eſt, Galliarum regis laudes decantandas, magno pretio perſuadere conatus eſt. At vero, ait, oportet Oratorem non tantum dicendi peritum, ſed virum bonum eſſe: nec viri boni lingua venalis eſſe debet. We learn from theſe Words a remarkable thing, viz. that Monluc was deſirous to make uſe of Ramus's Eloquence, in order to dazzle the Poliſh Nobility, that they might be the more willing to elect the Duke of Anjou for their King; for it is not to be queſtion'd, that he who made the above-mention'd Propoſal to Ramus, was the ſame Monluc, Biſhop of Valence, who did ſo well ſucceed in his Negotiations about the Election of Henry III. and who, amongſt other means, made uſe of the Eloquence of ſome Perſons, who in their Verſes and Harangues extolled to the Skies the noble Qualities of the Duke of Anjou. He took care to avoid the Snare mention'd in a Maxim of Horace (i).

Ramus was a Man of an exemplary Temperance; he (k) was contented with boiled Meat, and eat but little at Dinner; he was twenty Years without drinking Wine, and began to drink ſome only by the Preſcription of the Phyſicians; he lay upon Straw, and roſe very early; he ſtudied all Day (l); he lived a ſingle Life that was not ſo much as ſuſpected of any Impurity, and took great care to avoid obſcene Converſations. Cœlebs vixit caſtiſſime, ab ſcortationis non tantum crimine, ſed etiam ſuſpicione ſemper immunis: colloquia obſcœna, utpote quæ bonos mores corrumpunt, tanquam toxicum fugiebat (m).

(M) A great firmneſs in his Misfortunes.] Any Body but he would have retired from Paris after the thundering Decree of Francis I. which his Adverſaries did ſo inſultingly boaſt of; but he kept ſtill in the College of Prele, and let 'em bawl as much as they would. He anſwer'd none of the Pieces that were publiſh'd againſt him. If it be ſaid that he durſt not do it, becauſe the King order'd him to be ſilent about Matters relating to Philoſophy; I anſwer, that if he had not been Maſter of his Paſſions, he would have gone out of the Kingdom, to enjoy the liberty of vindicating himſelf. Of all things in the World Silence is perhaps the moſt difficult for an Author, who is attack'd and ſlander'd by every Body; and yet this is a thing which Ramus was capable of. Here are the words of an Author, who has very well expreſs'd it. (n) Adverſus contumelias Doctorum quamlibet & eruditorum hominum perpetuum ſilentium juraverat. Nil Goveano, Gallandio, Perionio, Turnebo reſpondit: nil ingenii & doctrinæ per univerſam Germaniam principi Melanchthoni reſpondit: nil aliis Germanis, nil Italis nonnullis reſpondit. Cumque divulgatus per orbem terrarum Gallica & Latina lingua probris eſſet natatus, publicis ludis ignominioſiſſime traductus: conſtricta lingua, vinctis manibus prohibitus quicquam de philoſophia vel publice vel privatim dicere, ſcribere, cogitare etiam (ſi menti tantum potuiſſet imperari) prohibitus eſſet: adverſus tantas tot acerbitatum plagas, unicum patientiæ remedium adhibuit, in animoque ſemper illud habuit: Grata ſuperveniet, quæ non ſperabitur hora. That Author has forgot a Circumſtance, which would have very much ſet off Ramus's Triumph, I mean the Power he had over himſelf to be ſilent. That Profeſſor recover'd, four Years after, the Liberty of writing and ſpeaking about Philoſophy: He ſays ſo himſelf in the firſt Speech he compoſed after he had been made Regius-Profeſſor. (o) Miſero Rex Henricus, Hercules videlicet Gallicus, adfuit, meque quarto abhinc anno ad poſtulationem Caroli Lotharingi Cardinalis, & manibus & lingua ſolvit, ſolutoque Eloquentiæ & Philoſophiæ docendæ, exercendæ, illuſtrandæ poteſtatem fecit. Here are ſome other Proofs of his Conſtancy. The firſt time he explain'd his Logick in the College of Cambray, the Emiſſaries of his Enemies left no Stone unturn'd to vex him to the higheſt degree, and to force him to leave off reading his Lecture: They hiſs'd and houted at him; they clap'd their hands, and ſtamp'd with their Feet. But all was in vain; he was not daſh'd out of Countenance; he ſtop'd now and then 'till the houting was over, and made an end of his Lecture by Snatches. They were aſtoniſh'd at his Unconcernedneſs, and prov'd afterwards leſs inſolent for that very reaſon. (p) Anno 1552. cùm in Cameracenſi ſcholâ frequentiſſimo audito-

rio

(a) Freigius ibid. pag. 21.

(b) Ibid. pag. 28.

(c) Banoſius in vita Rami pag. 20.

(d) Brantome, Memoires des hommes illuſtres, tom. 2. pag. 55.

(e) Tho. Freigius ubi ſupra pag. 35.

(f) Id. ib.

(g) Solebat in patriam proficiſcens bonæ indolis juvenes pauperes ſuis ſumtibus fovere, eoſque in Academia Prælea bonis informabat diſciplinis: ex quorum numero plerique ſuperſunt viri doctiſſimi. Banoſius ubi ſupra pag. 14.

(h) Id. ib. pag. 13.

beloved by the Miniſters; for he made himſelf in ſome manner the Head of a Party to alter the Diſcipline of the reform'd Churches. His Deſign was fruſtrated, and even defeated (M) in a National Synod. I could mention many other things relating to him, were it not that I avoid repeating what may be found in Moreri's Dictionary, and in the large Collections of Mr. Teiſſier: Beſides, I have not been able to conſult a Book * which I had formerly, and which contains a great many Particulars. I ſhall make ſome ſmall Obſervations upon the Narratives (N) of thoſe two Authors, wherein the Reader will find ſome matters of Fact clear'd.

He

ea ſuam dialecticam auſpicaretur, ab aemulis clamores, ſtrepitus, ſibili ingentes per ſummam petulantiam excitari coepere. Hac inſolentia nihil ipſe permotus, cum ſe oratorem praeſtitit, ut multum diuque licet obſtrepentibus adverſariis, per intervalla tamen clamorum, incredibili conſtantia, nec minore cum gloria peroravit. Qua ejus virtute conterriti inimici, in poſterum minus ei fuere moleſti. He was inſulted in the like manner (a) at Heidelberg, and with no better Succeſs, whilſt he read Lectures there in the Year 1568. Which ſhews that he had made himſelf odious to ſeveral People in Germany as well as in France, for having been ſo bold as to write againſt Ariſtotle. It muſt be confeſs'd that he had done it a little too haughtily, and that he had ſhewed too great an Affectation of depriving that Philoſopher of all his Glory: He took from him, as much as ever he could, the Works that are aſcribed to him; and when he acknowledged him to be the Author of ſome of 'em, he condemn'd the Doctrine contain'd in them, and went ſo far as to inveigh againſt that Philoſopher by the Care he took to make an odious Deſcription of his Vices and Actions (b). See the two Speeches which Perionius publiſh'd in the Year 1544.

His deſign was . . . . defeated in a National Synod.] He deſign'd to introduce a Democratical Government into the Church: He pretended that the Power of the Keys, conferr'd by Jeſus Chriſt upon the People, ought to be committed to the Conſiſtories no farther than as it is expedient, that they ſhould firſt of all deliberate about the things in queſtion, and give their Judgment about 'em; which muſt afterwards be propoſed to the People, and cannot be enacted into a Law, unleſs it be confirm'd by the Votes of the Heads of the Families. He ſaid that this was the only way to preſerve the Church from Oligarchy and Tyranny. His Opinion was examin'd in a National (c) Synod, who rejected it. Beza uſed his utmoſt Endeavours to have that Eccleſiaſtical Democracy condemned, which in Truth would occaſion a World of Confuſion, and a meer Anarchy. He was afraid that if Peter Ramus ſhould refuſe to acquieſce in the Judgment of the Synod, it would cauſe many Broils; for he look'd upon him as a great Shuffler. Here are his Words: (d) Pſeudodialecticus ille, quem [illegible] jampridem docti multi cognominarunt, contentionem non parvam excitavit de tota Eccleſiaſtica [illegible], quam inquit Democraticam eſſe oportere, non Ariſtocraticam, ſola προβουλεύματα *presbyterio relinquens. Synodus ob eam cauſam Nemauſi ineunte Majo coacta, cui etiam interfui, dogma iſtud plane, meo judicio, abſurdum & pernicioſum, refutatis contrariis omnibus argumentis damnavit, cui ſi cum ſuis paucu*l*is ille obſequatur, bene erit: ſin minus, certe turbas dabit homo ad turbanda optima quaeque comparatus.* Ramus was not ſo imprudent as to require that the Diſcipline ſhould be aboliſh'd; he oppoſed (e) only the Juriſdiction of the Conſiſtories and Synods; he pretended that the People were to judge of the Doctrine, chuſe their Miniſters, excommunicate, and abſolve. Some ſuſpect that he inſiſted upon this, to introduce into the Church the Power of the Demagogues of Athens, or of the Tribunes of Rome; for, being a very eloquent Man, he might have excited in the Aſſembly of the People ſuch Paſſions as he would have had 'em poſſeſs'd with. Ille neſcio quem adeò Chriſtianum populum ſomniat ut ſemper à Spiritu ſancto regatur, ſolaque προβουλεύματα presbyterio relinquens, nihil vult ratum haberi, niſi quod praeſens populus rogatis expreſſiſque ſuffragiis decreverit, quod ni fiat, clamitat Oligarchiam ac Tyrannidem invehi in Eccleſiam, nihil interea Ochlocratiam reformidans, in qua nimirum ipſe, & ejus ſimiles dominentur. Contendunt iidem quibuſvis etiam ἰδιώταις prophetandi partes in Eccleſia concedendas, huc detorto Pauli loco ex cap. prioris ad Cor. 14. (f)

(N) Obſervations upon the Narratives of Moreri and Mr. Teiſſier.] I. I have already obſerved (g) their Miſtake concerning the Country of Ramus's Grandfather. II. They take Notice of a Fault of Thuanus without mending it. That great Man ſuppoſes (h) that Peter Ramus having taught Philological Learning, Philoſophy, and the Mathematicks in the College of Preſle, and afterwards in the Royal College, forged (i) at laſt a falſe Philoſophy in oppoſition to Ariſtotle. He is miſtaken; Ramus begun firſt of all to write againſt Ariſtotle, as has been ſaid (k) above. III. What they ſay of the Foundation of a Profeſſorſhip for the Mathematicks is true; but their Narrative would make one think, that Ramus paid five hundred Livres every Year during his Life, to him who fill'd the Mathematical Chair. I don't believe it. 'Tis likely his Intention was, that after his Death that Sum ſhould be taken from his Revenue, to be paid to the Profeſſor, who ſhould be choſen according to the Terms he had preſcribed. His laſt Will was publiſh'd by (l) Banoſius: He made it the (m) firſt of Auguſt, 1568, being ready to travel in order to ſee the foreign Univerſities. He order'd by that Will, that out of the yearly Rent of 700 Livres which he had in the Town-Houſe of Paris, five hundred ſhould be applied for the Salary of a Profeſſor, who ſhould teach, for the ſpace of three Years, Arithmetick, Muſick, Geometry, Opticks, Mechanicks, Aſtronomy and Geography in the Royal College; and he appointed Frederick Reiſnerus to be the firſt Profeſſor who ſhould have that Salary. Paſquier, in his Recherches, has committed ſo childiſh a Fault about this very thing, that I dare not take notice of it. (n) That Learned Man, ſays he, after forty five Year's Labour, had got five hundred Livres a Year, by his good Huſbandry, which he received from the Town Houſe of Paris, out of which he left a hundred Livres to his Uncle by the Mother's Side, a hundred more to a Nephew the Son of his uterin Siſter, and the five hundred Livres that remain'd to him who ſhould be judged the fitteſt Man for the Mathematical Chair. Here is an Inſtance of thoſe Diſtractions, which I have mention'd in (o) another Place: This is worſe than if one ſhould ſay, in caſting up an Account, 3 times 7 make 22. Paſquier ſpeaks of a Sum of 500 Livres; he takes from it one hundred on the one ſide, and one hundred on the other, and yet he finds ſtill 500 Livres: He reads this over and over again without perceiving his Miſtake. If he did not commit that Blunder, it muſt be imputed to the Corrector of the Preſs. I muſt further obſerve, that Ramus was but 53 Years of Age, when he made his Will; how then ſhall we find the 45 Years of his Labour and good Huſbandry? Father du Breul (p) ſays, that Ramus left only fifty Livres by his Will for the Mathematical Profeſſor. IV. Moreri is in the right, when he ſays, that we read in Beza's Letters, that Ramus had a mind to retire to Geneva, where he deſir'd to be Profeſſor of Philoſophy. The two Letters Beza wrote to him are remarkable, and plainly ſhew that there was no great Friendſhip between them. The firſt is dated the 30th of September, 1569. Beza anſwers the Complaints of Ramus, and at the ſame time declares to him, that he condemn'd his Logick, and his inveterate Diſeaſe of cenſuring the greateſt Men, and that he approved his Adverſaries. (q) Illud ego multis ſaepe dixi, & ad teipſum ſcripſi non temere, ut tu putas, neque vel [illegible] vel illo, ita me bene Deus amet, maledicendi ſtudio, ſed quoniam tuum iſtud in ſummis omnibus & extra omnem judiciorum aleam poſitis ſcriptoribus reprehendendis cacoethes probare nunquam potui, ac ne nunc quidem poſſum. . . . . Miror autem a me requiri quod tam multi doctiſſimi viri tam accurate & verbis & ſcriptis praeſtiterant, quibus ſummo conſenſu tuas in Ariſtotelem animadverſiones prorſus diſplicuiſſe non ignoras. Cum iſtis ſi ferre non potes ut à te diſſentiam, tuo ſane judicio fruere. Theſe are the ſweet Things that Beza writ to him. He complains in the other Letter that Ramus did not acquaint him with his deſign of being Profeſſor of Philoſophy in the Academy of Geneva, and he takes it for a ſign of Diſtruſt (r). He gueſs'd right; for certainly Ramus did not expect that Beza would favour him, and he had no reaſon to expect it. However, Beza made him ſome Compliments, and writ to him in a civil manner; but after all, he told him that there was no Profeſſorſhip for him at Geneva; all the Places were fill'd; the Funds appointed for the Salaries of the Profeſſors could not be augmented, and the Academy was reſolved to admit no other Syſtem but that of Ariſtotle. (ſ) Duo tantum ob- ſtant

---

nem, & abſolutionem. Simler. in vita Bullinger. fol. 45. (f) Beza epiſt. 68. of the ſame date as the other. (g) in the Re- rk A. (h) Thuan. lib. 52. pag. 1078. ad ann. 1572. Spondanus commits the ſame fault, ad ann. 1572. n. 15.

(i) [illegible]

(k) In the Remark D.

(l) [illegible]

(m) And not the [illegible] as Paſquier ſays, [illegible] l. 9. c. 19. p. m. [illegible]

(n) Paſq. ibid.

(o) In the Article Caton, Remark C.

(p) Antiquitez de Paris, pag. 568. Paris Edit. 1639 in [illegible]

(q) Beza, epiſt. 34.

(r) Mihi non ex te ipſo tuum hoc de ornanda noſtra ſchola conſilium, quam ex amicis intellexiſſe, minime id quidem quòd aliunde quam alio rogari velim, ut homines ambitioſi ſolent, ſed quòd inde conjiciam te nonnihil de meo in te animo dubitare coepiſſe. Id. epiſt. 36. It is dated the firſt of December, 1570.

(ſ) Id. ib.

He publiſh'd many Books; you may ſee the Catalogue of 'em in Mr. Teiſſier. His Hand was ſcarce legible, and gave a great deal of trouble to the Printers *. His Sect did (O) flouriſh for ſtant quæ minus quàm optat, & noſtrum collegium aliqui vehementer caperet, commode nunc confici poſſe videatur. Unum, quòd nullus nunc ſit in ſchola vacuus locus, noſtrorum vero tenues adeo ac penè nullæ ſint facultates, ut nec augere poſſint profeſſorum numerum, nec conſtitutis antea ſtipendiis, quæ ſane perexigua ſunt, quicquam adjicere; alterum, quòd nobis certum ac conſtitutum ſit & in ipſis tradendis Logicis, & in cæteris explicandis diſciplinis ab Ariſtotelis ſententia ne tantillum quidem deflectere. Hæc ad te ingenuè ſcribo ex vetere formula. Inter bonos bene agier oportet. Here is a remarkable thing. When Ramus might have had an honourable Employment out of the Kingdom, he refuſed it ſeveral times; and when he was deſirous to have one at Geneva, he could not get it. V. Mr. Teiſſier tells us, (a) After the Death of Romulus Amaſæus, the City of Bologna offer'd him a thouſand Ducats, if he would ſucceed him in his Place. The King of Poland endeavour'd to have him at Cracow. John, King of Hungary, ſent him word that he would give him the Management of the Univerſity of Weiſſemburg. Thoſe words of Mr. Teiſſier anſwer the Latin words of Banoſius. (b) Nulla eſt Chriſtiani orbis natio quæ Rami ſapientiam non amaverit, & præmiis invitando redimere ſtuduerit. Amiſſo enim Romulo Amaſæo, qui mille ducatorum ſtipendio in celeberrima Bononienſi Academia docuerat, Aloyſius Papius totius Academiæ conſenſu illum in demortui locum evocavit. Ab Andrea Dudithio Imperatoris legato Cracoviam eſt invitatus. Joannes Rex Pannoniæ Albæ Juliæ adminiſtrandæ magna propoſita mercede præficere voluit, & chirographo Regio obſignavit. The following Cenſure does not therefore concern Mr. Teiſſier, but Banoſius. Romulus Amaſæus died in the Year 1558. many Years after Pope Paul III. had removed him from his Profeſſorſhip of Bologna. Ramus was not therefore invited to come and fill the Place that was vacant by the Death of Romulus, Banoſius ſhould have ſaid that this Profeſſorſhip was offer'd him, when Amaſæus left it to go to Rome in order to teach the Grand Son of Pope Paul III. But if it was not offer'd him till after the death of Amaſæus, it ſhould have been ſaid only, that he was offer'd a very honourable and profitable Employment at Bologna, the very ſame that Amaſæus had had formerly. For the Reader is deceived, when he is told that Ramus refuſed the Chair vacant by the Death of Romulus Amaſæus; the meaning of it is, that Romulus Amaſæus died a Profeſſor at Bologna, which is falſe. VI. Mr. Teiſſier is miſtaken, when he ſays that Ramus was baniſh'd by virtue of the Judgment which the Commiſſioners of Francis I. gave againſt him. He was only forbidden to concern himſelf with Philoſophy; and immediately he betook himſelf to teach Claſſical Learning in the College of Prele. I fancy theſe Latin words of Omer Talon deceived Moreri, or the Authors whom he tranſcribed. (c) Auctori Animadverſionum & Inſtitutionum toto Philoſophiæ regno velut aqua & igni, gravi etiam pœna addita, interdicitur, ne unquam vel ſcribendo, vel docendo in ullam Philoſophiæ partem ingrederetur. Some body fancied, for want of Attention, that Ramus was baniſh'd from the whole Kingdom of France, without minding that he was only baniſh'd from the whole Empire of Philoſophy, toto Philoſophiæ regno. VII. Moreri adds, that he was accuſed of Hereſy, on account of a Book Intituled de Religione Chriſtiana, which was Printed at Francfort ſome time after his Death. That Book was not known during the Author's Life; the Original (d) was preſerv'd, when his Library happen'd to be plunder'd, and it was ſent into Germany, where Banoſius got it Printed (e) in 1576. I think we may challenge all the Friends of Moreri, to prove that Ramus did ever ſuffer any Perſecution on Account of that Book. Ramus's Enemies had ſome other Proofs of his being a Proteſtant: A Publick Speech, an Action of his which favour'd of (f) an Iconoclaſt, and the Anſwer he made to one, who ask'd him, why he went ſo ſeldom to Maſs, were ſufficient to convict him. (g) Hujus zelo inflammatus, publica concione Pariſienſis ſcholæ monachos graviter admonuit, ut puriorem Theologiam ex Evangelio, relictis Sophiſtarum lacunis, diſcerent. Idola gymnaſii Pralei amoveri & recondi juſſit ne conſpicerentur. Miſſæ autem raro intererat. Interrogatus vero hac de re a viro graviſſimo, ſtrenue reſpondit, E toto Vetere Novoque Teſtamento nihil quidquam magis à noviſſimis Chriſtianis depravatum & corruptum eſſe, quam ſecundum mandatum Legis & Cœnæ Sacramentum, ut homo in utroque per ſpeciem religionis in exſecrabilem idololatriam laberetur. He abſconded during the firſt Civil War; he follow'd the Prince of Condé in the ſecond, and made an open Profeſſion of Calvin's Doctrine in Germany during the third. He receiv'd the Communion (h) at Heidelberg with the Reform'd. He ſaid among other things in a Publick Speech at Baſil, that he had been ſo happy as to compoſe it in the ſame place where Calvin had written his Inſtitution. (i) Inter Academiæ Baſilienſis hoſpites Joannes Calvinus præcipue commemorandus eſt lumen Galliæ, lumen Chriſtianæ per orbem terrarum Eccleſiæ, lumen in hoc (in quo hæc meditor commentorque) hoſpitio præcipue perſpectum: hic enim tanti luminis faces (ut Catharina Petita lectiſſima matrona ſanctitate ſingularis ingenii mirifice capta tum Calvini, mox etiam Rami hoſpita ſæpe ac jucunde mihi narravit) primum ſunt incenſæ: hic illuſtres illæ Chriſtianæ Inſtitutionis cœleſteſque vigiliæ ſunt exaratæ & elaboratæ. Laſtly, being return'd into France after the firſt Peace, he obtain'd from Charles IX. a ſpecial permiſſion of profeſſing the new Religion, with a conſiderable Salary. (k) Impetrat ergo à Rege ſtipendia perampla, ut non tantum privato ſtudio artes meditando ſcribendoque illuſtraret, ſed etiam ut, ſublatis impedimentis, reformatæ Religionis ſanctiſſimo exercitio in poſtremum liberius frueretur. VIII. Mr. Teiſſier (*) ſays that Ramus learnt Philoſophy of himſelf, and without a Maſter. But Ramus himſelf acquainted the Publick, that he had gone through a Courſe of Philoſophy in the Colleges, which laſted three Years and a half according to Cuſtom. (l) Cùm tres annos ſexque menſes, inquit, in Philoſophiæ ſcholaſtica ex Academiæ noſtræ legibus poſuiſſem: Logicis Organi libris cognoſcendis, diſputandis, meditandis (ex omnibus enim Ariſtotelicis libris Logici præcipue toto triennii tempore clamantur & reclamantur) cùm, inquam, tempus illud ita tranſegiſſem, & jam ut abſolutus artium ſcilicet magiſter, philoſophica laurea donatus eſſem: ſubducta ætatis meæ ratione, &c. IX. See Num. four of this Remark, and then you may judge (m) whether it appears by two Letters that Beza writ to him in 1570. that he intended to retire to Geneva, and that Beza ſhewed him a great Kindneſs.

(O) His Sect did flouriſh.] It was unknown in Spain and Italy, and it made but a ſmall progreſs in France, but it thrived very much in England and Scotland, and more ſtill in Germany, which appears from the many Books which ſeveral German Peripatetick Philoſophers publiſhed againſt the Ramiſts. Nay, ſome of 'em thought themſelves oblig'd to mention the Reaſons of the Growth of that Sect, for they could not abide that its progreſs ſhould be alledg'd as a mark of its profeſſing the Truth. (n) Et miramur adhuc quid rei ſit, cur. . . . ea (contra quam ſcribimus) philoſophandi ratio locum inveniat hoc ſeculo in pleriſque Germaniæ provinciis, etiam in iis, de quibus id nunquam quiſquam vel metuere vel ſperare potuiſſet? Non eſt ſane cauſa hujus per Germaniam & Angliam etiam ac Scotiam incrementi (nam in Italia, Hiſpania & Gallia etiam ipſa plane obſcura eſt philoſophiæ Rameæ fama) ſed hæc cauſa eſt, quod cauſam optimam commode non agimus. Thoſe Words are taken from a Chapter of Keckerman, wherein (o) he judiciouſly cenſures the method of the Ramiſts. That Author praiſes (p) very much a piece which David Pareus publiſh'd againſt 'em in 1589. I have ſaid in (q) another place that this excellent Divine had no great eſteem for their Founder. Keckerman complains very much of the Ramiſt Henningus Rennemannus, who did furiouſly inveigh againſt Beza and Zacharias Urſinus on Ramus's Account. He mentions likewiſe another Ramiſt, a haughty and paſſionate Writer, whoſe Name was Caſpar Pfaffradius. (r) Scimus Philoſophos Rameos quodam eloquentiæ faſtu plerunque in alios (magiſtri ſui indole) deſpumare: exempla ſunt in luce: ex quibus unum illud proferam, quod & recens eſt, & præ reliquis inſigne, M. Henningi Rennemanni Saxonis, qui pro Ramea Philoſophia Diſſertationem ante annos circiter tres (ſ) ſcribere non potuit, quin maledicam linguam ſtringeret non tantum in Clariſſimum Philoſophum Philippum Scherbium, ſed & eos viros, qui Eccleſiam Chriſti adverſus Papatus furores, & Heterodoxorum ſophiſmata tot, tantis, tam tota Europa ſuſpiciendis ſcriptis juverunt. . . . . . (t) Clariſſimum dico Theodorum Bezam, cujus ille Epiſtolas de P. Ramo ſcriptas, velut anathematicas liviдè exagitat; & item ſummum illum atque admirabilem æque Philoſophum ac Theologum Dominum Zachariam Urſinum, piæ memoriæ cujus de P. Rami Dialectica & Rhetorica ſcriptum ad voluntatem Friderici 3. Electoris Palatini principis, merito certe, ſi quiſquam unquam princeps, cognomentum Pii adepti, judicium, furentem vocat Rami exercitationem. Paſquier ſays, (u) Ariſtotle's Philoſophy has been baniſhed from the Univerſities that are in the Dominions of the Landgrave of Heſſe, and they have imbraced that of Ramus.

* Scripſitam enim litteris pinxerit, ut in legendis ipſius ſcriptis typographis moleſtus. Ferrin a S. Romualdo, Threſor ... in continuatione Chronici Ademari, pag. 344.

(a) Teiſſier, Addit. to the Eloges, tom. 1. pag. 373, 374.

(b) Banoſius in vita Petri Rami pag. 6. See alſo Freigius in vita ejuſdem, pag. 36, & 41.

(c) Audomar Taleus ... apud Launoium de varia Ariſtotelis fortuna, pag. ...

(d) Banoſius ubi ſup. pag. 25.

(e) The Edition I make uſe of is of Francfort 1594. and Ramus his Life prefixed to it, which ſerves for an Epiſtle Dedicatory, to Philip Sidney, is dated the 1ſt of January, 1576.

(f) He removed all the Images from the College of Prele, and hid them. See the following Quotation.

(g) Banoſius ubi ſup. p. 19 & 20.

(h) Con... Heidelber...

(*) Teiſſ... ubi ſupra, pag. ...

(m) Teiſſier ubi ſupra.

(n) Kecker-man. in Præcogn. Logic. tract. 2. c. 3. pag. 133.

(o) See it in the Preface to the Book of Kecker-man.

(p) Ibid. cap. 6. pag. 157.

(q) In the Article Pareus.

(r) Idem Kecker-man ubi ſup. cap. 5. pag. ...

(ſ) This Book of Kecker-man was Printed in 1599.

(t) Ibid. pag. 17...

(u) Paſquier ubi ſupra, pag. ...

for ſome time. I ſhall make a Remark againſt (P) Paſquier, in which you'll ſee ſomething concerning Mercerus.

RANGOUZE, a French Author in the Reign of Lewis XIV. whoſe good Qualities are unknown to me; for ſuch a Name cannot be given to the Induſtry, wherewith an Author knows how to make his Epiſtles Dedicatory and his Flatteries turn to a good account. Not but that ſuch an Induſtry, tho' very bad, morally ſpeaking, may keep a conſiderable Rank among thoſe Qualities (A) which are ſaid to be good, whether they be natural or acquir'd. Rangouze was endow'd with it in (B) an eminent Degree, as it will appear by my Remarks.

RAPHE-

mus, and thoſe who ſtudy Logick call themſelves Ramiſts. Theſe Words of Scaliger ſhall be my laſt Proof, (a) Ramus was a learned Man, but he is too much eſteem'd..... Ramus magnus fuit vir, ſed magni nimis fit. Ramiſm was like to be introduc'd into the Univerſities of Holland, if Scaliger and ſome others had not prevented it. Cujus (Ramiſticæ Philoſophiæ) introductioni in Academias Belgii cordatiores & intelligentiores fortiter obſtiterunt, quos inter Joſephus Scaliger ſui ſæculi Phœnix eminuit (b). I find in a Letter (c) of Iſaac Pontanus, written in 1619. that the Profeſſors of Harderwick adviſ'd the Univerſity of Leyden to permit that Ramus's Logick, or that of du Moulin, ſhould be indifferently taught.

I Have been informed (d) that Ramiſm flouriſhes in Swiſſerland to this Day, and is countenanc'd by the Magiſtrates of Bern; ſo that the Profeſſors of Philoſophy at Bern, and at Lauſanne, are obliged to teach no other Logick but that of Ramus; and if they dictate any thing taken from Claubergius, or from the Art of Thinking, they do it only under Ramus's Auſpices, and as it were to explain his Doctrine.

(P) A Remark againſt Paſquier.] He obſerves (e), that la Fon complains (f) that one Ramus and Mercerus, who had gone aſtray from the Ancient Religion, were at the Head of the Party, which oblig'd the Parliament of Paris, in 1654, to refuſe the Requeſts of the Jeſuits. His Anſwer is, that neither Ramus nor Mercerus were particulary concern'd in it. He adds (g), that Mercerus was ſo far from being a caballing Man, that he underſtood nothing but Hebrew Books, upon which he por'd continually; being a great Man in the Knowledge of that Language, in which he ſurpaſs'd the Jews in the Opinion of the moſt Learned, but a perfect Stranger to the Affairs of the World. Afterwards he goes on thus: The Jeſuits caus'd (h) Verſoris's Plea to be Printed in the Year 1595. That Man intending to render the Univerſity odious, gives out, not that Mercerus, but that Ramus and Gallandius had made themſelves Sollicitors of that Cauſe; but this appear'd ſo unlikely, that it was look'd upon as an incredible thing, by reaſon of the open Enmity which had been between them all along, and which laſted 'till they died. An Enmity, which Rabelais, the Lucian of our Age, in the Preface to his 3d Book, and after him that ingenious Poet Joachim du Bellay, in one of his moſt celebrated Poems, jeſted upon in ſome Places that are thought to be the fineſt Pieces of their Works. Beſides, Gallandius was all along a Roman Catholick. Paſquier forgot the beſt way of refuting that Plea, which is, that (i) Gallandius, Ramus's Adverſary, had been dead five Years, when Verſoris pleaded the Cauſe of the Jeſuits. Rabelais is not well quoted; Paſquier ſhould have quoted the Preface to the 4th Book.

(A) Among thoſe Qualities, which are ſaid to be good, whether they be natural or acquir'd.] All Languages may be ſaid to be more or leſs barren; which does particularly appear with reſpect to ſuch things as are depriv'd of the Perfection that belongs to them. If that Perfection be a moral Virtue, thoſe things are ſaid to be bad, if it be a Phyſical Virtue, they are alſo accounted bad. On the other hand thoſe things are indifferently call'd good, that have the Moral Virtue of their kind, and the Phyſical Virtue that belongs to them. An unjuſt Judge is call'd an ill Judge; and ignorant Painter is call'd a bad Painter; a wiſe and equitable Judge is ſaid to be a good Judge; and he who can make fine Pictures is ſaid to be a good Painter. Here we are ſenſible, that we (k) want Words, ſince we are oblig'd to make uſe of the Words good, and bad, or ill, to denote a thouſand things of a very different Nature. 'Tis therefore no wonder, that I ſhould place the Induſtry of the Sieur Ragouze in the number of good things, tho' I don't allow it to be a Moral Virtue. It is a good thing in the ſame Senſe, as we ſay a good Memory, a good Sight, a good Hearing, a good Smell, &c. when thoſe Faculties have the Perfection which Nature intended for them. Every Science, without excepting that of Tricking and Cheating, is a kind of Perfection: A Subtle Wit is a Natural Advantage, as Stupidity and Fooliſhneſs are great Imperfections. Morally ſpeaking, the Science of Cheating is neither good nor bad, but Phyſically ſpeaking it is a very good Quality, an Advantage, a Perfection. The Simplicity of a Man, who can neither Cheat others, nor avoid being Cheated, is, Phyſically ſpeaking, an Imperfection, and a bad Quality. If the Art of Cheating be reduc'd into Practice, it becomes, Morally ſpeaking, a very ill thing, and a Crime fit to be Puniſh'd; but when ſome Robbers are broke upon the Wheel, whoſe Induſtry, and other Natural Qualities, had attain'd to the higheſt degree of Perfection in their kind, we admire for all that the Phyſical Good that was in them; and we abhor only the ill uſe they made of it. We may therefore ſay in general, that the Art of growing Rich, either in the Finances, or by Trading, is a good thing, and a Natural Advantage, which deſerves to be eſteem'd, when ſeparated from the ill uſe Men may make of it. The ſame ought to be ſaid of a Man's Induſtry, who grows Rich by the productions of his Pen, and by the Art of Dealing in Epiſtles Dedicatory and Books, which he ſends up and down. It cannot be denied that ſuch a Man has a ſort of Wit, and a kind of Sagacity and Diſcerning, which is a natural Perfection, that may be admired in ſome Reſpects, tho' it ought to be deſpiſed and condemned by reaſon of its ill Conſequences. Equitable Men do not equally cenſure that ſort of Authors; they don't pour all the Satyrical Strokes, which Furetiere collected in (l) his Somme dedicatoire, upon thoſe, who having a great Family, and no Eſtate, or Penſion from the Publick, cannot maintain themſelves any other way than with the help of their Pen. This ſerves to excuſe the Multitude of their Dedications, and 'tis not ſo much a Wonder that their Works ſhould be divided into many Tomes dedicated to ſo many different Perſons, and that the ſecond Editions ſhould be dedicated to New Mæcenas's, as 'tis that they ſhould be able to maintain honourably their Wives and Children with their Pen, and that the Subſiſtence of a large Family ſhould depend altogether upon it. A very ingenious Man has laid down a Rule in Vindication of thoſe, who apply themſelves to trifling Things, which reaches the Authors whom I am ſpeaking of. Theſe are his Words: (m) Beſides, it is well known that we have ſometimes very ſolid Reaſons to apply our ſelves to ſome things that don't appear to be ſolid, and that a private and unknown Duty prevails often without any injuſtice upon a publick and notorious one. That Man whom you blame, has perhaps good reaſon to believe, that in order to recover his Health, which is very much impair'd, to ſecure himſelf from Poverty, to maintain his Family, whoſe only ſupport he is, it is better for him to compoſe Songs than Moral and Political Treatiſes. If it be ſo, I make bold to ſay that he is oblig'd to write Songs out of a Moral and Political Principle, and 'tis a great piece of Injuſtice to blame the Occupations of other Men, without knowing their Motives and Circumſtances.

(B) Rangouze was endowed with it in an eminent Degree.] Coſtar ſupplies me with the Proof of it. (n) "I am far from intending to make a Compariſon with "the Sieur de Rangouze, whoſe Eloquence has procur'd "him fifteen or ſixteen hundred Piſtoles within theſe "eight Months, and who may be ſtyled the Cherilus "of our Age in Proſe. Cherilus incultis qui verſibus "& male natis Retulit acceptos regale numiſma Philippos. According to the Goſpel . . . . a Tree is good "that bears ſo good Fruit. The Tree of the Garden "of the Heſperides, ſo much talk'd of by the Poets, "was not ſo valuable, ſince according to a Greek Scholiaſt of great Authority, it bore golden Apples only "in its Seaſon, and not all the Year round". Here is another Witneſs, to wit, Mademoiſelle de Scuderi. She ſpeaks of an Author, (o) who had three Epiſtles ready made for the ſame Book, for three Perſons very different in Quality and Merit; being reſolved to uſe that which would turn to the beſt Account, and imploying a third Perſon to manage the Buſineſs: and accordingly he dedicated the Book to him who paid moſt for it, tho' he was a Man of leſs Merit than the other two. She ſays afterwards, that an

---

(l) It is printed at the end of the Roman Bourgeois. You'll find a kind of a Latin tranſlation of it in the Preface to the 3d Tome. Obſervationum ſelectarum ad rem literariam ſpectantium, printed at Hall in 1701.

(m) Peliſſon, Diſcours ſur les Oeuvres de Mr. Sarrazin, pag m. 39. & 40.

(n) Coſtar, the 50*th Letter of the* 2*d part, pag.* 115.

(o) Mademoiſelle de Scuderi, Converſations ſur divers ſujets, tome 1. in the Dialogue that is at the beginning.

RAPHELENGIUS (FRANCIS) born in [*] Flanders the 27th of February, 1539, made himſelf famous for his great Knowledge of the Oriental Languages. After he had begun his Studies at Ghent [†], he loſt his Father; and his Mother oblig'd him to betake himſelf to Trade: but his Maſters having ſent him to Nuremberg, and thoſe in whoſe Houſe he lived allowing him time enough to ſatisfie his Inclination for Learning, he ſet himſelf again to Study. Being return'd into Flanders he found an opportunity to go to Paris, where he made a great progreſs in the Greek and Hebrew Languages. The Civil Wars of France forc'd him to retire from Paris, and he went into England, and taught Greek for ſome time in the Univerſity of Cambridge. He return'd afterwards into the Low-Countries, and was Corrector of the Preſs at Antwerp, in the Houſe of the famous Christopher Plantin; who was ſo well pleas'd with his Learning and Honeſty, that he made him his Son-in-Law [‡] in the Year 1565. Raphelengius did him great Services as to his Printing, eſpecially with reſpect to the Edition (A) of the famous Bible call'd the Antwerp Bible. Plantin being remov'd to Leyden, to be farther from the Troubles, left his Printing-Preſſes under the direction of his Son-in-Law; but when he return'd to Antwerp, in 1585, Raphelengius on the contrary went to Leyden with all his Family. He took care of the Printing-Houſe that his Father-in-Law had there; and made himſelf ſo recommendable, that the Curators of the Univerſity conferr'd upon him the Hebrew Profeſſorſhip. He diſcharg'd the Duties of it to his Honour, and ſpent part of his time in the Study of the Arabick Tongue, and even compos'd a Dictionary [§] in that Language. He had ſcarce made an end of it when he died, the 20th of July, 1597. He had been wiſhing for Death three Years before; for he ſtruggled with two Domeſtick (B) Enemies that were very troubleſom to him; one was his Grief for the Loſs of his Wife, and the other a Palſie [‖].

RAPIN

an Author, who is dead, having prepared an Epiſtle, which might be look'd upon as a great Panegyrick, ſuppreſs'd it, when he heard that the Perſon, to whom he intended to dedicate his Book, was out of Favour. She adds, that a Man of Dauphine having made a Panegyrick upon Cardinal de Richelieu, and finding him dead at his Arrival, turn'd it into a Panegyrick upon the Queen mother, Anne of Auſtria. I know alſo that an Author, who had very much and very juſtly praiſed a Man that was alive, deprived him of all the Praiſes he had beſtowed upon him, tho' that Man had done nothing that deſerved it; only he died without being able to reward that Author according to his Expectation. All theſe Inſtances are very ſingular. But I have been told a pleaſant Story of one Rangouze, who made a Collection of Letters, and cauſed them to be printed, without numbering the Pages. So that the Binder placed at the beginning of the Book ſuch a Letter as the Author thought fit; and by that Means, all thoſe whom he preſented with his Book, finding their Names at the beginning of it, thought themſelves the more oblig'd to him for it. This ſeems to me a very odd thing, and that Man was as fond of dedicating Books as an eminent Phyſician of Italy, who having writ upon the Aphoriſms of Hippocrates, dedicated each Book of his Commentaries to one of his Friends, and the Table of the Contents to another. Now let us ſee what Sorel ſays: (a) Rangouze's Letters may very well be call'd golden Letters. "Since he "boaſted to write none for leſs than twenty or thirty "Piſtoles; for he ſeldom made any but for Perſons of "the higheſt Quality, and who were able to pay well "for them. They were all a kind of a ſhort Encomium upon thoſe to whom they were directed, con"taining an Account of their fineſt Qualities and moſt "remarkable Actions, and many Compliments for thoſe "who afforded him but little Matter to inlarge upon. "We have ſeen ſome ingenious People wonder how "that Man, who was no Scholar, had been able to "write ſo many different Letters upon Praiſes that "were almoſt alike. I don't ſcruple to take notice of "him; becauſe his Books may however ſerve to inform "thoſe, who are ignorant of the Characters and For"tunes of the great Men of the Kingdom.

(A) With reſpect to the Edition of the famous Bible, call'd the Antwerp Bible.] I ſhall uſe the Words of Meurſius, to ſhew how far Raphelengius contributed to it: (b) In horum editione incredibile quantos labores Raphelengius ſuſtinuerit, dum accuratiſſime ſingula recognoſcit; Annotationibus, ubi opus erat, illuſtrat; verſionem interlinearem adornat; Grammaticam Hebræam, ex optimis quibuſque Grammaticis, cum judicio & cura collectam, addit; Epitomen Theſauri linguæ Hebrææ Santis Pagnini infinitis vocibus auget, & innumeris locis emendat; quod ſatis teſtimonio Benedicti Ariæ Montani, inter Prolegomena præmiſſo, patet. Multa iiſdem annis ad ornamenta librorum, quos ſocer excudebat, præcipue in linguis Orientalibus, corrigendo, illuſtrandoque, præſtitit; quamvis raro nomen ſuum adſcribi pateretur.

(B) He ſtruggled with two domeſtick Enemies.] Moreri is guilty of the Sophiſm call'd à non ſufficienti enumeratione partium; which is the leaſt thing that he can be reproach'd with; for it might be ſaid that he has neither wholly nor partly expreſs'd the Thought of the Author quoted by him. Let us compare his Words with thoſe of Meurſius. He died, ſays he, of Grief for the Loſs of his Wife. Thus he renders theſe Latin Words. (c) Mors quam toto triennio præ tædio amiſſæ uxoris & paralyſi afflictatus ſæpe optaverat, virum optimum humanis exemit. It does not appear by this Paſſage that the Loſs of Raphelengius's Wife created ſuch a Grief in him as occaſion'd his Death; it appears only that the Grief he conceiv'd for her Loſs, together with a Palſie, made him often wiſh for Death for the ſpace of three Years. If it be ſaid, in Moreri's Vindication, that this Grief might have occaſion'd a Palſie, and that therefore he might very well reduce the two Cauſes mention'd by Meurſius into one; I anſwer, that a Copiſt ought never to give his own Thoughts and Conjectures as Matters of Fact that are to be found in the Authors to which he refers us. But not to dwell on theſe trifling Things, I proceed to a more important Obſervation. Raphelengius regretted the Loſs of his Wife, and thought himſelf an unhappy Man becauſe he ſurvived her; which ſhews that he loved her, and that his Marriage had been very comfortable to him: It was therefore a a very happy Marriage. Now mind the conſequences of that happy Marriage, to wit, three Years of a kind of Deſpair. What muſt we think therefore of an unhappy Marriage, ſince a happy one is attended with ſuch a thing? But let us not argue in this manner according to the Law of Contraries. Let us rather ſay, that an unhappy Marriage is attended with great Advantages. The Perſon that ſurvives the other is not afflicted in the leaſt; his Widowhood is a State of Tranquillity and Pleaſure. So that, inſtead of conſidering only the Miſeries of this Life, we muſt conſider the mixture of Good and Evil, which is allotted to Man. We muſt remember the two Casks of Homer, of which I ſpeak (d) in another place. It ought to be ſaid, that what comes down upon Earth is a mixt Liquor; but in ſuch a manner, that the good and bad Drink come in one after another. If you begin with the one, you end with the other. If you have been happy when Married, you are unhappy being a Widower; but if you have been unhappy in your Marriage, your Widowhood is a ſtate of Happineſs for you. I don't deny, that in ſome reſpects the two Liquors are mix'd and confounded together as to their inſenſible parts, ſince there is ſcarce any Pleaſure but what is immediately attended with ſome Trouble; but it is certain, that in other reſpects the Fate of Man is in a Glaſs, wherein the good and bad Liquor are placed as it were in ſeveral Stories. I have inquir'd in (e) another place, whether the quantity of the bad Liquor exceeds the quantity of the good one. I ſhall ſay no more of it; but however I muſt obſerve, that thoſe who ſhould alledge the Marriage of Raphelengius, to ſhew that Good exceeds Evil, might be miſtaken in their Calculation. He enjoy'd the Company of his Wife 29 Years, and felt the Anguiſhes of Widowhood only three Years. He had therefore, will you ſay, a greater ſhare of Happineſs than of Miſery.

(a) Sorel, Biblioth. Franc. pag. m. 119.

(b) Meurſius, Athen. Bat. pag. 140.

RAPIN (Nicolas) was Provoſt-Marſhal and a Poet, two things that are ſeldom to be found in one and the ſame Perſon. He committed but few faults as a Poet; but he committed ſome in the Adminiſtration of Juſtice, which were ſo Enormous, that had it not been for the Credit of his Patrons, he would have been puniſh'd (A) with Death. He was a Man of Parts, and did not ſuffer himſelf to be Corrupted by the Leaguers. He follow'd * Henry III. when that Prince fled from Paris, and wrote many Verſes againſt the Faction of the Sixteen. He had a great ſhare in the ingenious (B) Satyr call'd the Catholicon d'Eſpagne. After the Death of his Son, upon whom he had beſtow'd all his Employments †, he retired to Fontenai-le-Comte, the Place of his Nativity, and died (C) in the Year 1609. I ſhall mention ſome Circumſtances of his Death, which ſeem to me (D) to be very curious. He was buried without any Pomp; but, ſome ſay, it was not according to ſery. This Conſequence will be denied. A Man, who for the ſpace of three Years is ſo tormented with Pains and Sorrows, that he often wiſhes Death would come to his Aſſiſtance, ſwallows a greater quantity of the bad Liquor, than he had ſwallow'd of the good one for the ſpace of 30 Years. For you muſt not fancy, that the Marriage of this Man was Wine without any mixture during 29 Years. Not to mention the Croſſes and Sorrows that proceeded from other Cauſes, let us conſider only the ill ſide of his Marriage. Thoſe, who are extreamly afflicted for the Death of their Wives, did not always live with them without any miſunderſtanding. Beſides, the more they love 'em, the more they are afraid when they fall ſick. Don't tell me, that at this rate it were better for them to hate their Wives; for I ſhall anſwer, that their unconcernedneſs at their Wives being in danger of Death, does not equal the dreadful Evils of conjugal Hatred. Nay, it might be ſaid, that if on the one ſide they are not afraid that they will die, they are afraid on the other ſide that they will not die. Now that Fear is ſufficient to counter-ballance that Good. I wonder we don't find in the Works of the Ancients a Dilemma expreſs'd differently from that of (a) Bias, for inſtance in this manner. Either you'll love your Wife, or you will not love her: If you love her, you'll be always afraid of loſing her; if you don't love her, you'll be always afraid that ſhe will not die. This Dilemma is not better than that of Bias; for, without examining the other Faults, it would be ſufficient to ſay, that, according to the uſual Courſe of all Ages, conjugal Love and Hatred are not carried ſo far. Some few Inſtances ought not to make one afraid of having an uneaſie tenderneſs, or a vexing antipathy. One may very well hope to enjoy the preſent time, as moſt Husbands do, without making one ſelf uneaſie about the Time to come.

(A) Had it not been for the Credit of his Patrons, he would have been puniſh'd with Death.] I have but one Authority for it; the Reader may think of it as he pleaſes. " (b) Thoſe of Fontenai are all naught, and ſo is " Mr. Rapin, whoſe Life I have ſaved: He is the " Son of a Prieſt. He was Mayor of Fontenai, and " cauſed ſome Proteſtants to be maſſacred; ſo that at the " time of the extraordinary Seſſions, he was proſecuted by " all the Inhabitants of his Town, both Catholicks and " Proteſtants, and by all the Nobility of the Lower " Poitou. I was the only one who oppoſed it; he had " corrupted me by his Verſes, and he knew very well " that I was a Man of great Intereſt. He is beholden to " me for his Life, next to Preſident du Harlay, ſo that he " loves the Proteſtants now.

(B) A great ſhare . . . . . . in the Catholicon d'Eſpagne.] We find in Mr. du Puy's Notes, which were publiſh'd with that Satyr, in 1677. that the Speech of the Archbiſhop of Lyons, that of Roze, and that which d'Engoulevent was to deliver, were made by Rapin. If it be ſo, (c) d'Aubigné ſhould not have gone about to undeceive thoſe, who aſcribed the whole Satyre Menippée to that fine Wit; to tell us afterwards, that he made only ſome Verſes that are in it (d): Perhaps he ſaid ſo, becauſe in the Works of Rapin, printed in 4to at Paris, 1610, there are but three Latin Epigrams that make part of the Catholicon. This Reflection of the Author of the Notes is a ſolid one.

Mr. de Vigneul Marville, who has collected many curious Things concerning the Catholicon d'Eſpagne, obſerves that Paſſerat and Rapin made the Verſes of the Second Part, which was intituled, Abregé des Etats de la ligue convoquez à Paris au dixième Fevrier; that the ſame Rapin made the Speech of the Archbiſhop of Lyons, and that of Doctor Roſe; and that he made a Collection of all the other Speeches, which he added to the (e) Catholicon d'Eſpagne, under the Title of Satyre Menippée; and that 'tis upon this Ground that many have aſcribed the whole Catholicon to him (f).

(C) And died in the Year 1609.] (g) Boterius, the (h) French Mercury, and the (i) Continuator of Thuanus, mention his Death on that Year. Father Garaſſe, whom I ſhall quote by and by, ſays, that in the Month of December 1608, he was preſent at Mr. Rapin's Death, who had been for ſome Weeks in a languiſhing Condition. Now, becauſe Moreri ſays, that Rapin died the 15th of February 1608. I fancy Garaſſe meant, that that Ingenious Man fell Sick in December 1608, and died ſome Weeks after. If this be his meaning, what he ſays is a Confutation of Moreri, not as to the Day, but as to the Year of Rapin's Death. However it be, I ſide with thoſe that place his Death in the Year 1609. Nevertheleſs, I ſee that many (k) exact Writers are of Moreri's Opinion.

(D) Some Circumſtances of his Death . . . . . very curious.] Here is a long paſſage of Father Garaſſe, the Reader may judge of it as he thinks fit. " (l) In the " Month of December 1608. I happen'd to be preſent " in (m) Poitiers at Mr. Rapin's Death, who having " lived a pretty looſe Life for the ſpace of 74 Years, " indulging his Youthful Paſſions, and following the Humour of the Times, whereby he got into dangerous " Acquaintance, died in the Hands of four Fathers of " our Society, after he had been for ſome Weeks in a " languiſhing condition; expreſſing a wonderful Joy, " becauſe he was ſo happy as to depart this Life in the " preſence of thoſe whom he had Perſecuted all his Life " time, without knowing them. After he had confeſt, " which he did with a very lively Senſe of his Sins, before " he receiv'd the Holy Sacrament, the Room wherein " he died being full of the moſt eminent Perſons of the " Town, he made the following general Confeſſion of " his paſt Life. 1ſt, That he had never been a Huguenot, and had never waver'd in his Belief, tho' he had " familiarly convers'd with the Huguenots, and very " much hated the Jeſuits. 2dly, That he had lived a very licentious Life, and did not believe that God could " have found him better diſpos'd at any other moment " of his Life. 3dly, That the only good thing he remember'd to have done from his younger Days, was " his preventing the Teaching of Atheiſm at Paris; and " then looking towards our Fathers, he told them the " Story in ſhort. He ſaid there was in his time a Raſcal at Paris, an unknown Man, and of a reſtleſs and " factious Spirit, who having got himſelf familiarly acquainted with thoſe ſeven fine Wits, that made up the " Set, or Pleiad of the Poets, of which Ronſard was " the chief, began to ſpread ſome pernicious and abominable Maxims againſt the Deity, which had already " ſtagger'd ſome of thoſe Wits, foraſmuch as our Souls " are more ſuſceptible of Evil, than of good Impreſſions. When I perceiv'd, ſaid Rapin, that ſome were " charm'd with the Novelty of that Doctrine, four of " us ſtood up againſt that impious Man, and ſettled the " wavering Minds of the other three, and of ſeveral others whom that wretched Fellow had ſpoil'd by his " Converſation. Ronſard was the firſt, ſaid he, who ſiding " with me, exclaim'd againſt him, and wrote that fine " Poem againſt the Atheiſts, which begins thus:

> " O ciel, ô terre, ô mer, ô Dieu Pere commun, &c.

" Turnebus made a fine Speech againſt him, and Sainte " Marthe an excellent Poem in Iambick Verſes, intituled, In Mezentium, without naming him, be" cauſe he was a profligate Raſcal, whoſe Name would " have defiled one's Writings. We did not give over, " ſaid Rapin, 'till we had got that infamous Man condemn'd to Death by a Decreee of Parliament; and accordingly he was hang'd and burnt in the Place " of Greve. Had it not been for us, ſaid he, perhaps France would be a Sink of Atheiſm at this preſent time; eſpecially if he had been countenanc'd by " us to introduce his Maxims. Such were the laſt " words of Rapin."

(E) That

(a) See the Article Bias.

(b) Scaliger, in Scaligeran. Rapin. pag. 201.

(c) Notes on the Catholicon pag. 385. Edit. 1696.

(d) D'Aubigné, tom. 3. l. 3. ch.

(e) In the Title of the part of the Work written by le Roy, Canon of Rouen.

(f) Vigneul Marville, Melanges d'Hiſtoire et de littérature, tom. 1. pag. 201.

(g) Rodolph. Boterius de rebus in Galliâ geſtis Commentar. lib. 15. pag. 567. 568.

(h) Tom. 1. pag. 408.

(i) Lib. 2. in fine.

(k) Baillet, Jugem. ſur les poëtes, tom. 4. pag. 192. The Author of the Notes upon the Catholicon ubi ſupra.

(l) Garaſſe, Doctrine curieuſe, B. 2. pag. 124. & ſeq.

(m) Moreri is therefore miſtaken, when he ſays that Rapin died at Tours.

to his last (E) Intention. He had been a great Enemy to the (F) Protestants, and afterwards to the * Jesuits. His † Friends bestowed this Elogy upon him, that he was the most Learned Soldier, and the most Valiant Counsellor in the World. You'll find some other things in Moreri.

RAPIN (RENATUS) a famous Jesuit, who profess'd the fourth Vow, was born at Tours, in the Year 1621, and was admitted into the Society in the Year 1639. He taught Classical Learning for the space of nine Years ‡. He shew'd by some Latin (A) Pieces, that he was able to treat the finest Subjects with a great deal of Art and Eloquence. He excell'd in the Latin (B) Poetry; and having at last ventur'd to write in French, he succeeded in it to Admiration. He composed in that Language several Treatises of Literature, and several pious Books, which met with a good Reception. The Treatises of Literature having been publish'd at several times, were collected into one Body, and printed at Paris in 1684, in two Volumes in 4to, and at Amsterdam in two Volumes in 12mo, in the Year 1686. There are very long Extracts of 'em in the Bibliotheque Universelle, and in the Acta Eruditorum, pag. 192 and 261, & seq. of the Year 1686. The pious Treatises were most of 'em printed together at Amsterdam in 1695. Some are of Opinion that he is too peremptory, for a Man who seems to have more Judgment and Delicacy than * Learning. He died at Paris the 27th of October, 1687. His Elogy † came out the Month following: It is short and well turn'd, and it was written by Father Bonhours. He is represented there as being endowed with all the best Qualifications that an honest Man and a Christian can have. We find there, among other things, that his Zeal for Religion, and for the Honour of his Society, prompted him above twenty Years ago to undertake a great Work, to which he applied himself constantly, tho' he could not expect to see it publish'd, and that God enabled him to finish before he died. That great Work is the History of Jansenism. Father Rapin was one of the most dangerous Adversaries of that Party: He attack'd them in their weak (C) side in a Latin Book which he publish'd

* See the Remark D.

† Garasse, Doctrine curieuse, pag. 1010.

‡ See Nathanael Sotuellus, Biblioth. Script. Societ. p. 717.

* See the Passage of the Menagiana in the Remark F.

† His Article in the Supplement to Moreri's Dictionary is taken from thence. See an Abstract of that Elogy in the Histoire des Ouvrages des Savans, Novemb. 1687. pag. 412. See also Rabutin's 13th and 32d Letters of the 2d Part, and the 128th Lett. of the 3d Part.

(E) That it was not according to his last Intention.] I shall quote again Father Garasse. The late Mr. Gaucher de Sainte Marthe, says he (a) "made a glorious, and "true Encomium upon Mr. Rapin his good Friend, in "which he says, that Delatus est Fontenaium, & modico funeris apparatu, quemadmodum Testamento præscripserat, sepultus; but it is necessary for Rapin's Honour to know the Story exactly, as it happen'd, and "I have been an Eye-witness of it. It is therefore "true that the late Mr. Rapin, being upon his Death-Bed, in the extraordinary cold Winter of the Year "1608. had made his Will, before he confess'd to Father James de Money, wherein he order'd, that his "Body should be carried from Poitiers to Fontenai, in the "same manner as that of Budæus was carried from Sainte Avoye street, to the Convent of the Celestins, viz. without Torches, without any Pomp, and without any "Company, upon a Waggon cover'd with black Cloth, "only with a Boy walking before it with a Bell and "a Lanthorn in his Hands. But having been told that "such a Burial might be ill construed, and would confirm several People in the Opinion they had entertain'd of his being a Libertine in point of Religion, "he changed his Mind, and made a Codicil, wherein "he revok'd his first Intention, and instead of his Cook, "whom he had appointed the Executor of his Will, he "desired Father Francis Solier, who was present, and "who was to preach all the Lent at Fontenai, in the "Year 1609. to order Matters so that he might have "a decent Burial, as 'tis practis'd among the Catholicks, with the usual Prayers and Suffrages, upon "which he seem'd to put a great Trust. 'Tis true, that "by the Fault of his Heirs, his Codicil was not exactly executed according to his Desires; but his Death, "his Confession, his Tears, and the Story which I have "related in the second Book, shew that he died a very "good Catholick.

(F) A great Enemy to the Protestants.] We have already seen what Joseph Scaliger says of it: but the following Words contain a more formal Proof; for we find there that the Protestants having made themselves Masters of Fontenai, in the Year 1570, refused to comprehend the Mayor Rapin in the Capitulation: however they suffer'd him to make his Escape. The Besieged (b) "being summon'd to surrender, had no sooner demanded that their Lives should be saved, and that they "should come out with Arms and Baggage; but it was "granted them by Soubize, who commanded in the "absence of la Nouë, 'till they should know what was "resolved in the Council of Rochelle; and the Capitulation was faithfully observed by the Protestants, who "permitted them to go to Niort, whither they brought "the News of the Surrender, which happen'd the 28th "of June, without consulting the Mayor Rapin. He "was so much hated by the Protestants, either because "he had formerly declared against them, or because at "his Persuasion Landereau had sided with the contrary "Party, that every Body look'd for him to put him to "Death. When the Town had surrendred, and his "Friends had left it, he disguised himself in the Habit "of a Servant, and lurk'd in the House of a poor Woman; from thence he sent to Cressonniere, and desired "of him that he might come out of it. Cressonniere "got him safely conducted out of Town, and then he "retir'd to Niort.

(A) By some Latin Pieces.] Here are the Titles of some of 'em: Serenissimæ Reipublicæ Venetæ trophæum ob debellatum Turcam & restitutam Societatem Jesu. Paris 1657, in fol. Trophæum famæ Eminentissimo Cardinali Mazarino, ib. 1657, in fol. Lacrymæ (c) in alumni sui Alphonsi Mancini tumulum nepotis ejusdem Cardinalis, ibid. 1658, in fol. Pacis triumphalia ad Em. Cardinalem Mazarinum, ibid 1659, in fol. Pax Themidis cum Musis, ib. 1659, in fol. Pacifer Delphinus, ibid. in fol. To which may be added his Elogium Francisci Foucquet defuncti, ib. 1669.

(B) He excell'd in the Latin Poetry.] Besides the Pieces mention'd in the foregoing Remark, see his Ecloga Sacra cum dissertatione de carmine pastorali, printed at Paris, 1659, in 4to. and his Christus patiens carmine heroico, printed in the same Place, in 1674, in 12mo. But above all, see his Hortorum libri IV. quibus addita est disputatio de universa hortensis cultura disciplina. That Work printed in 4to at Paris (d) in 1665, was reprinted there in 12mo, in 1666. It was very much (e) praised in the Journal des Savans. Consult Mr. Baillet (f), who has collected a great many curious Remarks relating to Father Rapin, consider'd as a Poet, most of which are glorious to that Jesuit. See also the 9th Journal des Savans, of the Year 1682, which mentions the Collection (g) of all the Poems of Father Rapin.

THERE are some People, who say that he has been too much flatter'd in Mr. Baillet's Jugements, and that the Jesuits pretend that his Verses do not come up to the Delicacy and Purity of those of Father Commire, nor to the Loftiness and Majesty of those of Father de la Rue, nor to the Easiness and Neatness of those of Father Cossart, to say nothing of Father Hoschius and Father Vallius; and that his Gardens are the best of his Poems. They were Reprinted at Naples, and translated into English by J. Evelyn: That Translation was dedicated to my Lord Arlington, and printed at London in 8vo. 1673.

(C) He attack'd the Jansenists in their weak (h) side.] His Book (i) is intituled Dissertatio de nova doctrina, seu Evangelium Jansenistarum. I confess I have not read it, and I think the most Learned Men in foreign Countries may say the same; but a Learned Man told me which way Father Rapin went about it. He supposes a Jansenist, who goes into the Country of the Infidels to preach the Gospel to them, and who does sincerely teach his System about Grace, viz. that the greatest part of Mankind have been predestinated to everlasting Punishments from all Eternity, and the rest to the Glory of Heaven; that God, the Author of that absolute Predestination, being not willing to want some Pretences to colour his Decrees of Damnation, declares to Men that 'tis in their Power to obtain Salvation; that in order to it they need only obey his Commands: He threatens them, he exhorts them; but at the same time he publish'd in 1658. The Jansenists raised many Clamours against an Anonymous Letter which he put (D) out since the Peace of the Church, as they call it. It is a pleasant thing to find that Jesuit plac'd among the (E) Physicians in some Bibliotheques. The Circumstances of his Quarrel with (F) his Fellow Jesuit, Francis Vavasseur, have not been well related in the Menagiana. His Enemies endeavour'd to expose him to the Indignation of the late Prince of Condé, by the malicious Turn they gave to his Traité du Sublime *.

(a) Garasse ubi supra, Book 7. p. 922, 923.

(b) La vraie & entiere histoire des troubles, Book 13. fol. 387. edit. of Rochelle, 1573.

R E C K-

he knows very well that 'tis impossible for them to do what he commands, that they cannot obey him for want of that efficacious Grace, which he refuses to all Men, excepting his Elect, and without which they cannot mend their Lives, and even have a good Thought. Father Rapin supposes that the Infidels hearing such a Gospel, are strangely surpriz'd at such a Description of God, and ask why he sends Preachers to those, whom he knows to be uncapable of converting themselves, unless he bestows upon 'em a Grace, which he is obliged to refuse 'em, by reason of his eternal Decrees. Father Rapin's Jansenist answers, that God uses such a Method, to render Men more inexcusable, and more obnoxious to Hell Torments. He is answer'd that such a Motive is not worthy of an infinitely good Being; that it may be said still that none is bound to do an impossible thing, and that a Lawgiver inflicts no Punishments, but by supposing that the Transgressors of the Laws might have observed them: Hence it is, that Franticks are not punish'd. One may easily guess what a Molinist, who knows how to turn a Thought to his Advantage, may say pro and con, having began the thing as I have related it. But besides many other good Answers, he might be told, that if a Jansenist was to preach to the Infidels of Japan or China for the first time, he would not be such a Fool as to begin with the Doctrine that denies Man's Free Will, or with that of absolute Predestination. He would preach as the Pelagians do, (which is approved by one of our most rigid (a) Predestinarians) and he would put by his Jansenism till his Neophytes stand no longer in need of Milk, and are capable of a solid Nourishment. They are Mysteries which ought to be discover'd to none but those that are initiated.

(D) An Anonymous Letter which he put out.] It is written to Cardinal Cibo, and dated (b) in July, 1680. A French Translation of it came out in Holland, in 1684 dated the 30th of August, 1683. See what the Author (c) of the Nouvelles de la Republique des Lettres says of it. As for what concerns the Complaints of the Jansenists against that little Book, see among other Works the 8th Volume of the Morale pratique. You will find there also, (d) that Father Estrix, a Flemish Jesuit, is the Author of the Book intituled, De fraudibus Hæreticorum, which came out under the false Name of Francis Simonis; and that (e) Father Rapin is so well pleased with that Book that he has translated it into French, and that, to give it more Authority, he has dedicated it to the Archbishops and Bishops of France, with a Preface, wherein he acknowledges that the Works of Francis Simonis, written in Latin, and printed at Cologne, have given him occasion to write his Book, and served him as Memoirs for the Composing of it. That Work of Father Rapin is intituled, Artifices des Heretiques: It was printed at Paris in 1681, and re-printed the same Year in the Low-Countries. See the Critique generale (f) de l'Histoire du Calvinisme.

(E) That Jesuit plac'd among the Physicians.] He is not call'd a Physician in the new Edition of Vander Linden's de Scriptis Medicis (g); but his Hortorum libri, and then in general all his Works, Opera omnia. Lugduni Batavorum, 1672, in 12*mo* are placed in it. I shall say nothing of Bartholinus, who has inserted that Jesuit in his Catalogue (h) of such Physicians as have been Poets; for he does not say that he was not a Jesuit: But I cannot pass over in silence what has been already observed by Mr. Baillet. These are his words: "(i) Mr. Koni-
"gius . . . . divides Father Rapin into two, and says,
" 1. Henricus Rapinus quatuor libros hortorum, anno 1671.
" edi curavit. Afterwards he speaks of Nicolas Rapin
" of Poitou, the Great Provost of the Constable's Ju" risdiction, whom I have mention'd in another place;
" and then he adds, 2. Renatus Rapinus Medicus anno
" 1659. claruit. Opera ejus Medica prodierunt anno
" 1672. Extant ejusdem Ecloga sacra, item, Hortus E- " pigrammatum. See the 678th Page. What he calls
" Books of Physick, is nothing else but the four Books " about Gardens, whose Title he had only seen in the " Utrecht Edition, that came out in the Year mark'd
" by him. One may easily find out the cause of his o" ther Mistakes. Some other Foreign Authors, as Mr.
" Beughem in Holland, and Mr. Lipenius in Germany, have " also placed Father Rapin among the Physicians. But " they cannot be taxed with any Error, as long as they " are not mistaken about the Name, the Person, and the " Work of the Author, and don't explain themselves a" bout his Profession. My intent was not to censure Mr.
" Konigius for a fault of exactness; he has done nothing " on this occasion, but what is usual with the Writers of " Bibliotheques, who speak of Foreign Books which they " have not seen. On the contrary, I design'd to shew
" by this Instance, that those, who undertake such Works,
" are very excusable, because they cannot avoid falling
" into such like mistakes."

(F) The Circumstances of his Quarrel with . . . . . . Vavasseur.] I shall set down the whole Passage of the Menagiana, because it confirms a thing, which I have touch'd upon in the Text of this Article. "(k) Father
" Rapin was not sufficiently qualify'd to make a Parallel
" of Virgil and Homer. Tanaquellus Faber, whom he " intended to convert at that time, supplied him with " the Greek Passages quoted by him. After he had read
" his Parallel of Aristotle and Plato, at the first President
" de la Moignon's, I told him I had found but one fault
" in it, to wit, that speaking of the Colophonian Woman,
" whom Plato loved, he had said that she was young;
" whereas 'tis said in the Greek Epigram, wherein men" tion is made of her, that the God of Love had plac'd " himself in her Wrinkles. Whereupon the Abbot Tale-
" mant said, That the Father was very excusable, because " he did not believe that so wise a Man as Plato
" would have been in Love with an old Woman. Father
" Rapin made very good Latin Verses, but he had no " great Learning. He had a great Quarrel with Father
" Vavasseur, and bought off the whole Impression of " that Father's Book de Epigrammate, by the Authority " of the first President, in order to suppress it, so that it
" is grown very scarce." What is said here of Vavasseur's Book de Epigrammate is false, and has been rectified in the 2d Edition, thus: (l) He fell out with Father Vavasseur on account of his Reflections on Aristotle's Poetick, which he caused to be printed by Muguet, without putting his Name to that Book. Father Vavasseur, who was not well pleased with him, publish'd soon after some Remarks upon those Reflections, in which he treats very ill the Author of the Reflections, pretending not to know him. Father Rapin made a great noise about it, and openly complain'd of the Proceeding of his fellow Jesuit, who answered that it was his own fault, and that if he had declared himself to be the Author of the Reflections, he had never writ against him. It was found expedient, in order to reconcile those Fathers, to suppress the Remarks of Father Vavasseur, which was done by the Authority of the first President de la Moignon; so that that Book, which was printed by Billaine, in 1675, and which contains but 141 Pages, is grown very scarce. See the Critique generale (m) of Maimbourg's History of Calvinism, where you will find something about that Conflict, and about another (n) Quarrel of Father Rapin. I shall further observe two things. (o) Because Father Vavasseur had made two large (p) Books of Epigrams, he was not well pleased with these Words of Father Rapin in his Reflections upon Aristotle's Poetick, that (q) it is so rare a thing to make admirable Epigrams, that it is enough to have made some few in one's Life time; and this is it which prompted him to write against that Book of Father Rapin. I had this particularity from him. They are Mr. Menage's words. The second thing I am to observe is, that Father Rapin, in the new Edition of his Reflexions, did not correct all the Faults censured by his Fellow-Jesuit: he was contented to correct some few, and retain'd some that are not tolerable. He affirms in the First Edition (r), that Homer never said any impious thing; he affirms it still in the other Editions, tho' his Censurer had proved to him that Homer has written (s) many prophane Falsities, and many infamous Impostures against the Respect and Veneration he owed to his Gods: Nay, he had quoted Father Rapin himself (t), as witnessing the same. I shall observe by the bye, that the Critick did not take notice of all the Faults that are to be found in the Reflections on Aristotle's Poetick, and that if he had been willing to Criticize the other Works of that Writer, he would have found many things in them that were liable to Censure. See the Remarks A and T of Aristotle's Article.

* You'll find something in the relation in the Nouvelles de la Republique des Lettres, March 1686 pag. 356. This Work had been mention'd in the Nouvelles of February 1686, pag. 237.

(a) See Mr. Jurieu's Book, Intituled, Jugement sur les methodes d'expliquer la grace.

(b) See the Morale pratique des Jesuites tom. 8. pag. 97.

(c) In January 1686 pag. 97. & seq.

(d) Page 90.

(e) Ibid. pag. 51.

(f) Letter 3. pag. 302. of the 2d Edition.

(g) See Lindenius renovatus p. 938. It is said there that the Hortorum libri have been reprinted in 4to. at Paris in 1661. and 1666. and at Leyden in 12mo. in 1666, and 1668. and Utrecht in 12mo. in 1672.

(h) Thom. Bartholin. de Medicis Poetis pag. 6.

(i) Baillet, Jugemens sur les poetes, tom. 4. pag. 293. n. 1554.

(k) Menagiana pag. 60, 61. of the 1st Edit. of Holland.

(l) Menagiana pag. 83 of the edition of Holland.

(m) In the 4th Letter.

(n) That which he had with Father Maimbourg.

(o) Menage. Anti-Baillet tom. 1. p. 338.

(p) You'll find at the end of the Book de Epigrammate of the Paris Edit. 1672. three pretty small Books of Vavasseur's Epigrams. He published, in 1675, an Appendix to the 3d Book, and the 4th Book sometime after.

(q) These words are to found in the Anti-Baillet, ibid. pag. 335.

(r) Rapin, reflex. sur la poëtique en general n. 9. p. 20.

(s) Vavasseur, remarques sur les nouvelles reflex. p. 21. & seq.

(t) See Rapin ibid. n. 25.

RECKHEIM, a County, a Fief, and an immediate State of the Empire, has the right of voting in the College of the Princes both in the General and Circular Diets. It belongs to the Circle of Westphalia, and comprehends a Town and many Villages. Its Soil is very fruitful, and it is pleasantly situated in a fine and well inhabited Country upon the Maese, two Leagues from Maestricht, between the Territories of Juliers, Liege and Fauquemont. It receives Toll-mony upon the Maese, and they coyn Gold, Silver, and Brass in it. The Castle, which is the Residence of the Counts, is one of the finest, largest, and most magnificent in Germany. Those, who are now in Possession of it, belong to the House of † Aspermont-Linden, a very illustrious and ancient House, and are descended from the Counts of Aspermont in Lorrain, whose County consisted of almost three hundred Villages. I shall give a short Account of their (A) Genealogy, and of the present State of the Branch of the Counts of Reckheim.

† The French Writers say Aspremont, which is a corruption of the true Orthography.

REGIUS (URBAN) was a Learned Man of the XVIth Century. He was born at Langenargen, upon the Lake of Constance, and began his Studies at Lindaw; from whence he went to Friburg in Brisgaw, where he continu'd them the more successively, because he lodged in the House of (A) the famous Zazius, and was very much belov'd by him. He went afterwards to the University of Basil, and then to that of Ingolstad, whither many Scholars resorted, by reason of the great Reputation of John Eccius. He read private Lectures there, and appear'd so well qualify'd for the Direction of the Youth, that many Gentlemen intrusted him with the whole Conduct of their Sons, without excepting the Care of what concern'd their Expence. It prov'd an impossible thing for him to regulate it: Those young Men ran into Debt *, in the Taverns and Shops, and because he was Security for them, and did not receive from their Parents the Mony that he ask'd for, he turn'd in a manner Bankrupt. Being press'd by the Creditors, and having not wherewithal to satisfie them, he thought of stealing away; but some Officers being come to Ingolstad at that time to raise Men, he yielded up his Books and all his things, and listed himself. The new rais'd Men were muster'd, and the Professor Eccius, who was present at the Review, knew Regius among the Soldiers: He went to him, and being inform'd of the Reason which had mov'd him to list himself, he promis'd to serve him, and did it so effectually, that he reconcil'd him to the Muses. He threaten'd those indebted Scholars with the Prince's Indignation, if they did not disingage him. Regius went on in his Studies, and made so great a Progress in the Sciences, that he receiv'd at Ingolstad the Oratory and Poetical Crowns from the very Hands of the Emperor Maximilian. Some time after he was promoted to the Professorships of Rhetorick and Poetry in the same University. Whilst he was a Professor he wrote γ, in the Year 1516, some Letters by the Duke of Bavaria's Order, to invite Erasmus to Ingolstad; which did not succeed. Having taken to the Study of Divinity, he was so charm'd with it that he made it his only Business. He got thereby some Dispositions for Lutheranism; but he found himself perplex'd, when Eccius his Master and his Benefactor came to have γ See the 17th and 18th Letters of the 2d Book of Erasmus's Letters. Erasmus thanked and praised him. See the 19th Lett. of the 2d Book, and the 57th of the 18th.

* Modum in vestitu & victu ubique excedere. Melch. Adam. ubi infra p. 22.

(A) A short Account of their Genealogy, and of the present State of the Counts of Reckheim.] The Name of the first Count of Aspermont was Sigisfridt; he liv'd in the Year 660. He descended from the Princes d'Est in Italy. A younger Brother of that Family, descended from that Sigisfridt, and whose Name was Arnold, settled in Holland in the Year 1120, and possess'd there the Lordship of Linden, which his Descendents enjoy'd a long time. One of 'em, call'd Herman, purchas'd the County of Reckheim, about the Year 1550. He was General of the Troops of Ernestus of Bavaria, Elector of Cologne, and Father of Ernestus, Count of Aspermont and Reckheim, who was born in the Year 1583, and was Chamberlain and Colonel of the Emperors Matthias and Ferdinand II. He married Anne Antoinette, Daughter of Henry Marquiss de Gouffier-Bonnivet, by whom he had a Son nam'd Ferdinand. This Ferdinand was born in 1611, and married Elizabeth, Daughter of Egon, Count of Furstemberg, and of Anne Mary, Princess of Hohenzolleren, and had by her four Sons, and eight Daughters, viz.

Francis Gobert Count of Reckheim, Bishop of (a) Choir, and Canon of the Metropolitan Churches of Cologne and Saltzburg, and of the Cathedral of Strasburg †.

(a) In the Country of the Grisons.

† See the Article Tilli.

Ferdinand, General of the Armies of H. I. M. who by his first Marriage with Charlotte, Daughter of Lewis George, Prince of Nassaw Dilembourg, and of Anne Augusta Princess of Brunswick, had but one Daughter nam'd Charlotte Gobertine Canoness of Munsterbilsen, whose 8 Descents are Aspermont-Reckheim, Gouffier, Furstemberg, Hohenzolleren, Nassaw, Sayn, Brunswick and Denmark. He has married for his second Wife Juliana Daughter of Francis Rakoczi Prince of Transylvania, and Grand-Daughter of George the Younger, George the Elder, and Sigismund, all Princes of Transylvania. He has a Son by her, whose Name is Joseph Gobert.

Charles, Canon of the Metropolitan Church of Cologne, and of the Cathedrals of Strasburg and Liege.

Frederick, Great-Cross of the Order of Malta, and Commander of Tobel, Steinfurt and Munster.

Anne Mary, the Wife of Count Wenceslaus of Althann, Counsellor of H. I. M. Grand Judge of Moravia, Governor of the Province of Glatz, and Ambassador Extraordinary in Sweden and Poland.

Eleonora, Princess Abbess of Munsterbilsen.

Anne Salome, the Wife of Lewis Count de Souches, Major-General of the Armies of H. I. M. and his Counsellor of State.

Ernestina who was Married first to John George Count of Collonitsch, Chamberlain to H. I. M. and then to Octavius Count of Cauriani, the Emperor's Chamberlain, and Counsellor of State.

Anne Antoinette, the Wife of Claudius Count de Tilly, Lieutenant-General of the United Provinces of the Netherlands.

Mary Frances, the Wife of Charles Count of Aspermont-Linden, Counsellor of State in the Country of Liege, and Governor of the Marquisate of Franchimont.

Alexandrina and Petronilla, first of all Canonesses of Remiremont, and afterwards Ursuline Nuns at Metz.

The Counts of Aspermont-Reckheim bear Quarterly, in the 1st and 4th Gules with a Cross Or, which is Aspermont-Linden; in the 2d and 3d Or with a Lion Gules, which is Reckheim; and upon the whole Azure with an Eagle Argent, which is the Ancient Aspermont or Este (b).

(A) He lodged in the House of the famous Zazius, and was much beloved by (c) him.] He chose in Zazius's Library all the Books which he thought proper for the Improvement of his Studies, and transcrib'd all the Marginal Notes which that Learned Professor had written upon them. Thus that young Scholar spent a great part of the Night. Zazius, who Slept but little, and got up sometimes to Walk, and to allay the Trouble of his want of Sleep, surpris'd him as he was transcribing those Notes, and told him (d) in a loving manner, you are stealing the Fruits of my Watchings. Sometimes he found him asleep, and then he would lay huge Volumes on his Shoulders 'till he wak'd. (e) Aut si quando somno ad candelam oppressum & inclinato in mensam capite dormitantem offendisset: juris volumen grande unum atque alterum humeris impositum reliquit, donec excitaretur. I mention those little things, because I know that have a Quarrel with Luther. Whereupon he resolv'd to leave Ingolstad, and to retire to Augsburg, where he prov'd a useful Man against Popery. He founded a Reformed Church there, and spread from thence into Suabia the new Opinions, as they were call'd. He sided (B) with Zuinglius for some time; but afterwards he profest himself a good Lutheran. Eccius went to him at Augsburg, and conferr'd with him to bring him back to the Church of Rome; but he did not succeed in it. Nay, there arose a Paper-War betwixt 'em, which Regius maintain'd vigorously, tho' his Antagonist might reproach him with Ungratefulness. The Affairs of the new Party did not always prevail in the City of Augsburg; there was a time when Regius was forc'd to leave it, and to abscond in several Places; but he was gloriously recall'd, and married in a good Family of Augsburg. His Dispute (C) with a Woman that was an Anabaptist, had something very singular in it. He lived in that City 'till the Year 1550, that several People are extreamly well pleas'd to see such Marks of the kindness of a Professor, or of the diligence of a Scholar

(B) He sided with Zuinglius . . . . . but afterwards he profest himself a good Lutheran.] Here is what Zuinglius writ to him in the Year 1526. (a) In Eucharistia re gratulor vobis, te nostrum esse factum. Verum gratiam meretur novitas: brevi enim spero omnes qui adhuc obstrepunt tropum, qui nullo negotio videri vobis debebat, verum esse ac sententiæ nostræ simplicitatem ac claritatem. They conferr'd together about Original Sin in the same Year, and we have still (b) the Letter which Zuinglius wrote to Regius about that Point. Luther knew that those two Men had the same Opinions, and was very sorry for it. (c) Dolet mihi valde nobilissimum virum Oecolampadium tam ludicris & nihili cogitationibus in hoc barathrum prolapsum; pulsat eum sathanas: Dominus eripiat eum. Urbanus Regius in idem malum vel inclinat, vel jam cecidit: Dominus servet suos. Luther says in another Letter, that he had been inform'd, that Regius design'd to write against him. (d) Præterea Urbanus Regius minari dicitur in me scripta, scilicet Oecolampadium & Zuinglium tantos viros (ut sentit) non vult offendere: sic mutatus est ab illo. We learn from this Passage, that Regius appear'd at first what he appear'd to be at last, that is, a good Lutheran. He forsook Zuinglianism in the Year 1528. See the Letter (e) wherein Luther expresses a great Joy for it, and recommends him to the Markgrave of Brandenburg. The Conversation he had with Regius at Coburg in the Year 1530. made a great Impression upon him. Regius came out of it full of Admiration for Luther, which he exprest in a Letter. (f) Cum Saxoniam peterem Coburgi integrum diem solus cum Luthero, viro Dei, transegeram: quo die nullus mihi in vita fuit jucundior. Talis enim ac tantus Theologus Lutherus, ut nulla secula habuerint similem. Hic magis execror stultitiam & arrogantiam Carolostadianorum, qui sibi placent, quasi Luthero queant conferri, cujus umbram non assequuntur, cum omni eruditione quam jactant. Semper mihi magnus fuit Lutherus: at jam mihi maximus est. Vidi enim præsens & audivi, quæ nullo calamo tradi possunt absentibus. Luther on the other side was very well pleas'd with that Conversation, and Regius's Learning, whose Conversion seem'd to him a considerable piece of News, which he ought to impart to his Friends. He writ the following Words to Wenceslaus-Lincus. (g) Urbanum Regium quoque resipuisse, credo te nosse, & contra hostes Sacramentarios strenue nobiscum certare.

(C) His Dispute with a Woman that was an Anabaptist, had something very singular in it] (h) The Magistrates of Augsburg put the Laws in execution against the Anabaptists, whereby Sectaries are forbidden to meet in Conventicles and to perform the Exercise of their Religion; they were Banish'd and Imprison'd. There was a Woman of good Family, who boasted in Prison, that if she had a Conference with Regius, she would prove to him, that the Cause of the Anabaptists was very good; she was therefore sent for to Dispute with him in a full Senate. She appear'd there with the Equipage of a Prisoner, that is, with her Hands Chain'd, and her Feet in Irons. She alledg'd abundance of Passages out of the Holy Scripture, to maintain her Opinions. Regius answer'd her, and clearly shew'd the true Sense of those Passages. But he could not undeceive her; she continued in her Errors, and spoke to the Minister thus: Here is without doubt, Brother Urban, a very strange way of disputing. You sit upon a soft Cushion among the Burgomasters, and you speak like an Oracle, and as it were from Apollo's Tripod. But as for me, I am prostrated upon the Ground, and forc'd to plead my Cause in Irons. Sister, reply'd Regius, there is nothing in it but what you deserve, since after you have been freed from the Slavery of the Devil thro' Jesus Christ, you have been willing to undergo that infamous Yoak again. A furious Spirit makes you appear with such Liveries, for an Example to others. That Woman was at last banish'd from the Town. Here are the Latin Words. (i) Ipsa tantum abest, ut monitis locum dederit: ut pertinaciter etiam Urbanum hisce fuerit adorta: Egregia enim verò, Urbane frater, hæc disputandi ratio est inter me & te. Tu in molli culcitra ad latera Consulum assidens, quasi ex Apollinis tripode proloqueris: ego misera humi postrata, ex duris vinculis causam dicere cogor. Ad hæc Urbanus: Nec verò, inquit, injuria, soror: ut quæ semel è servitute diaboli per Christum in libertatem asserta, tua sponte iterum cervicem turpi jugo submisisti: & istis te ornamentis vesanus ostentat genius, aliis in exemplum. Senatus itaque, cùm laterem se lavare videret; contagium illud exilio mulctavit, urbeque expulit.

That Woman wanted no Wit: she made a very judicious Reflection, and season'd it with a great deal of Salt; but she had too great a Confidence, or rather she was too rash. She believ'd, that if she should dispute with a Minister of the prevailing Religion, and before the Judges who had already condemn'd Anabaptism, and imprison'd those who taught it, she might persuade the Justice of her Cause. To hope for such a thing, 'tis not enough to be in the right, one must besides hope for an extraordinary Assistance of the Divine Spirit; for, according to the usual course of things, it does not appear that a Prisoner for Religion can confound such Adversaries as speak to him with the greatest Contempt, and who have on their side an outward Pomp, and all the Company prepossest against him. I know very well, that that Woman did not maintain a good Cause; but I believe, that if she had maintain'd as good, or even a better Doctrine than that of Regius, she would have been cast, in such Circumstances as she was in. The Match was not even; the Arms were too unequal. Regius sat in an honourable Place, and was surrounded with Marks of Favour; he spoke for a Cause protected by the Sovereign, and against a Cause persecuted by the Sovereign. His Antagonist was a Woman loaded with Chains, and in the posture of a Criminal already Condemn'd. A very good Reason alledg'd by that Woman in such Circumstances would not have ballanc'd a very indifferent one alledg'd by Regius, with all the weight and emphasis of a Man sitting on the Bench of the Burgomasters, and on a kind of Tribunal. Shall I quote Euripides, who says, that the Words of a Man in favour have a greater force than if they were spoken by an unhappy and miserable Man?

Τὸ δ' (k) ἀξίωμα κἂν κακῶς λέγῃ τὸ σὸν,
Πείσει· λόγος γὰρ ἔκ τ' ἀδοξούντων ἰὼν,
Κἀκ τῶν δοκούντων αὐτὸς, ὐ ταὐτὸν σθένει.

That is, according to Ennius's Translation (l),

Hæc tu etsi perversè dices, facile Achivos flexeris.
Nam quum opulenti loquuntur pariter atque ignobiles,
Eadem dicta, eademque oratio æqua non æque valet.

Shall I quote these Verses of Plautus?

Centum (m) doctum hominum consilia sola hæc devincit dea,
Fortuna, atque hoc verum'st proinde ut quisque fortuna utitur,
Ita præcellet, atque exinde sapere eum omnes dicimus.

Shall I quote these fine Words of Pliny the Younger? (n) Quàm multum interest, quid à quoque fiat, eadem enim facta claritate vel obscuritate facientium, aut tolluntur altissime, aut humillime deprimuntur. Shall I heap up many other such Quotations? No: I omit all those common Topicks, and I shall only observe, that if Regius had disputed against a Priest at Ingolstad, in quite different Circumstances from the Dispute of Augsburg; if he had been in Chains, &c. and if the Priest had sat on a Cushion among the Senators, &c. this Affair would have

---

(a) Zuinglii Epist. lib. 1. pag. 83. apud Melch. Adamum ib. p. 73.

(b) Pag. 171 of Zuinglius's Letters.

(c) Luther. tom. 2. Epist. pag. 326. apud Melch. Adam. ubi supra.

(d) Idem Lutherus ibid. pag. 330. apud Melch. Adam. ib.

(e) It is in Seckendorf. Histor. Luther. lib. 2. pag. 122. n. 5.

(f) Melch. Adam. ubi sup. p. 78.

(g) Luther. tom. 2. Epist. pag. 2... apud Melch. Adam. ib. pag. 67.

(h) Melch. Adam. ib. pag. 73.

(i) Id. ib.

(k) Hecuba ad Ulyssem apud Euripidem in Hecuba v. 293. p. m. 20.

(l) Apud Aulum Gellium lib. 11. c. 4. p. m. 286.

(m) Plautus in Pseudolo, act. 2. sc. 3. v. 12.

(n) Plinius epist. 24. lib. 6.

1530, when a Diet was held there. He then enter'd into the Service of the Duke of Brunswick, who made him Superintendant of the Churches of the Country of Lunenburg, and had (D) a very great Esteem for him. He exercis'd his Talents for the good of the Cause in several Synods, and wrote many (E) Books. He died at Zel in May 1541, in the same manner, as he had often wish'd, that is, almost suddenly *. I must not forget that his † Wife understood the Hebrew Tongue very well. He publish'd a Conversation which he had with her about the Characters of the Messias apply'd to Jesus Christ. He had ‖ 13 Children by her. I shall make a Remark upon the Names (G) of that Minister.

REIHING

have ended with Regius's Banishment, or something worse. He had been look'd upon as a Caviller, who wrested the Holy Scriptures; and the Priest had been admir'd as a faithful Interpreter of the Word of God.

(D) Had a very great Esteem for him.] Being ask'd, whether he had bought any thing of great Value, and of a new Fashion, as the other Princes had done, he answer'd: (a) I have brought an incomparable Treasure, which will be of great use to my States, and which I prefer to all sorts of Delights. He meant Regius. And when, in the Year 1535, the City of Augsburg requested of him that he would restore them that Divine, he declared (b) that he could as well part with his Eyes as with him. He bestow'd good Pensions upon him, and the Superintendency of all the Churches in his Territories (c).

(E) He wrote many Books.] They have been collected into three Volumes; the two first contain what he publish'd in Latin, and the other what he wrote in High Dutch (d). The latter has been translated into Latin, if I am not mistaken; for I find in the Catalogue of the Bodleian Library, Vita & opera (Urbani Regii) latine reddita per Ernest. Regium. Norib. 1562. Melchior Adam observes, that Ernestus Regius, the Author's Son, Collected all those Works, and Publish'd them at Nuremberg, divided into several Tomes. He mentions particularly the Book, in which our Urban had collected the harsh Phrases, and those that are exact. The first are only proper to sow Discord, and the latter to promote Piety and Concord. Prince Ernestus of Brunswick set him upon that Collection, which was an instance of his Prudence and Piety, for blunt and sharp Expressions are like the Teeth of Cadmus's Dragon, a seed of War among Brethren. This is Melchior Adam's Reflection. (e) Extat inter alios liber ejus, in quo annotatæ sunt horridiores formæ loquendi, & monstrantur propriæ ac concinnæ, utiles pietati ac concordiæ. Has admonitiones scribi princeps Ernestus Luneburgicus voluit: qua in re sapientiam & pietatem ejus agnoscimus. Ut enim ex dentibus draconis, in Cadmæa historia, nata est soboles armatorum inter se dimicantium: sic ex improprio sermone dissensiones opinionum in docentibus & in populo nascuntur. This is little minded by the Formulary-Makers, when they are more devout than judicious, or more passionate and vain than truly devout. They are perfect Strangers to Prudence and Moderation, they set up for Rigorists (f). Note, That (g) John Freder, of Pomerania, publish'd a Work of Regius, after his Death, intituled, Loci theologici ex Patribus & Scholasticis neotericisque collecti.

(F) He died . . . . in the same manner as he had often wish'd.] (h) He was not sick above three hours, and had all along wish'd not to die of a long Sickness. (i) Nactus est genus mortis, quale sæpe in votis habuit; citum & placidum; cum semper deprecaretur diuturnos languores & longas morborum periodos. He is not the only (k) Man, who wish'd for such a Death, and who was serv'd according to his Wishes.

(G) A Remark upon the Names of that Minister.] The Name of his Family (l) was King; but finding it too lofty, and knowing that it would occasion several Jests, he changed it into that of Regius. As for the Name Urban, it was given him when he was christen'd, because the Women, who carried him to Church, could not tell the Name his Mother had a mind he should have. She desir'd he should be Christned by the Name of the Saint that was mark'd in the Kalendar on the Day he was born in. The good Women forgot it as they went: The Curate finding they were uncertain about it, told them that St. Urban's Day was near: Which was the Reason why he was call'd Urban. I shall observe occasionally, that among all Nations there are many Families, who bear the Name of a Dignity, as King, Prince, Duke, Marquiss, Count, Baron, &c. They seldom think of changing it, tho' it affords continually Matter for silly Jests and childish Allusions. But I believe our Lutheran Doctor is not the only one, who disguised his Name, to avoid such an Inconveniency. There are some Men every where, whose Name is Regis or Regius; a disguised Name, if I am not mistaken, for the Reason I have mention'd. I have said (m) in another Place, that I wonder'd that those Families who have an odious or ridiculous Name, did not leave it. And I add here, that there are some who have not now the obscene Name which they had formerly. Read these Words of Menage: "Hauteclair. The Name of "a Family. That Name was given in Henry the II's "Time to a Master of the Requests, nam'd Couillart, "upon a pleasant Occasion. That Master of the Re"quests went often to the Louvre. One Day as he "was knocking at the Door of the King's or Queen's "Closet, the Usher ask'd him his Name; but he durst "not tell it plainly, because of its Obscenity. The Usher "not understanding him, or pretending not to under"stand him, bad him tell his Name haut & clair, "(plainly and clearly) which occasion'd his being call'd "afterwards Hauteclair. I have this Story from Mr. "du Puy, who had it from Thuanus, who in the 8th "Book of his History, pag 26. of the Geneva Editi"on, mentions that Change of Name, only by these "Words: Negotium datum P. Altclaro, Libellorum Supplicum "Magistro, qui pudendo olim cognomine insignitus fuit, ut "negotium Regium, &c". He had said in the 1st Edition of his Origines, that the Beauharnois of Orleans have also changed their Name of Beauvit, because of its Obscenity, into that of Beauharnois; but in the second Edition he says 'tis a meer Story.

I foresee, that those, who shall remember a Remark of Mr. de Vigneul Marville, when they come to read what I have said in the Article of Feuardentius, will object to me that I should not have wonder'd that People don't leave their ridiculous or odious Names. They'll maintain that they have not the Liberty to do it, and they'll alledge these Words of the Melange d'Histoire & de Literature: (o) As for what Mr. de la Roque says, that since the Ordinance of Amboise of the 26th of March 1555, none is allowed to change his Name, without the King's Permission; it ought to be observed that a long time before that Ordinance no Body chang'd his Name without being authoriz'd for it. Mr. de Vigneul Marville proves this by the Example of the Barber of Lewis XI. and sets down the Words of that Prince's Patent, whereby he commands that Oliver le Mauvais, (the Bad) who was his Barber, and his Posterity be for the time to come Sirnam'd le Dain . . . . and that it shall not be lawful for any body whatsoever to call them by the said Sirname le Mauvais; which Name we have taken from them and abolish'd, and do actually take away and abolish by these Presents. That Patent is dated in October, 1474, and was registred in the Parliament of Paris the 30th of January (p) 1474. If those, who would make this Objection against me, think it to be solid, they don't know how to judge well of things. I answer in the first place, that the Expression I made use of ought to be understood as this, I wonder that loose and debauch'd People are not afraid of the Prejudice they do to their Health and Reputation. These Words, though spoken in the present Tense, do nevertheless take in past Ages as well as that in which they are spoken; and therefore my way of expressing my self to shew that I wonder'd that People did not part with odious or ridiculous Names, concerns no less the time, which preceded the Ordinance mention'd by Mr. de la Roque, than the time that follow'd it. Now it is certain that before that Ordinance was made, some People parted with their Names, or changed and disguised them. Mr. de la Roque quotes Mr. Menage, who says that William le Rat, being displeased, as 'tis thought, with his Name, which is that of an Insect, Sirnam'd himself Lesrat; and that John Dorat, Regius Professor of the Greek Tongue, chang'd his Name of Disnemandy . . . . which was the ancient Name of his Family, into that of Dorat or Daurat. It were an absurd thing to pretend that they had the King's Permission for it. Mr. de Vigneul does not say so. I am apt to believe, says he (q), that before the Ordinance of Amboise, many Persons took upon themselves to change their Names, without having Recourse to the King; and perhaps the Physician nam'd Sansmalice (without Malice) changed his Name into that of Akakia, without a Patent from Francis the Ist; but then it was a meer

Transla-

---

* Taken from Melchior Adam in vitis Theolog. p. 90 & 91.

† Micrælius, in Syntagm. Histor. Eccles. pag. m. 778.

‖ Melch. Adam. ib. pag. 74.

(a) Allatum esse a se thesaurum sorte ducatuum incomparabilem quem omnium amœnitati anteponat deliciarum. Melch. Adam. ib. pag. 78.

(b) Perinde ut oculos suos & Urbanum se amittere nolle. Id. ibid.

(c) Id. ib. & pag. 79.

(d) Micrælius, Syntag. Hist. Eccles. pag. m. 778.

(e) Melch. Adam. ubi supra pag. 79. 80.

(f) Note, that general terms, and such as are void of condescendence, are [illegible] words.

(g) Id. ib. pag. 80.

(h) Idem, pag. 79.

(i) Id. ib.

(k) See the Article Valla (George.)

(l) Majores ejus Regum cognomine insignes fuerunt: sed cum id fastuosum & jocis aptum ex rege regius factus est ut ipse dictitare solitus. Melch. Adam ib. pag. 70.

(m) In the Article Feuardentius, Rem. (A).

REIHING (JAMES) Profeſſor of Divinity at Tubingen, was born at Augsburg in the Year 1579, of one of thoſe Ancient Families call'd Patrician. He perform'd his Studies at Ingolſtad, and his Maſters were very much pleas'd with the progreſs he made in them *. Having attain'd the Age, in which the Ancient Romans had a Man's Gown given 'em, he made a Vow to take the Habit of a Jeſuit, if he ſhould recover of a dangerous Sickneſs that he labour'd under. He recover'd, and perform'd his Vow, tho' his Mother oppos'd it. He made his Noviciate at Landsberg †, and became afterwards very famous in his Order. He taught Claſſical Learning at Inſpruck, and Philoſophy and Divinity at Ingolſtad; which he did with ſo good Succeſs, that the General Aquaviva thought him worthy of the Doctorſhip of Divinity. He was promoted to it at Dilingen ‡; and from that time he found himſelf poſſeſs'd with a new Zeal for the Defence of the Church of Rome: So that his Superiors gave him in the Quality of Aulick Preacher to Wolfgang William Duke of Newburg, who had (A) newly forſaken the Proteſtant Religion, and they charg'd him to write againſt that Religion. He was thinking Night and Day upon ſuch Arguments as might entirely overthrow the Confeſſion of the Lutherans; but becauſe his Adverſaries alledg'd continually the Scripture againſt him, he thought himſelf oblig'd to conſult that Holy Book, and to keep to it, in order to take from it the Arms that he wanted to maintain that Combat. That Study made him ſenſible that he defended an ill Cauſe, and therefore he quitted his Employment, and retir'd (B) to the Court of Wirtemberg, where he embrac'd Lutheraniſm. He was made Profeſſor of Divinity at Tubingen, Preacher in Ordinary, and Director of a College. He diſcharg'd the Duties of thoſe Places with great Capacity, and publiſh'd ſome Books

Tranſlation of a French Word into a Greek one. Thus the ſame Author, whom they would alledge againſt me, acknowledges that People changed their Names, notwithſtanding the Patent of Lewis the XIth; and indeed we ought to believe that it was drawn up for his Barber, not that he might be permitted to change the Name of his Family, but that People ſhould not continue to call him by that Name. He was very much hated in the Kingdom, and conſequently People would have taken Pleaſure in croſſing his Deſign of parting with a Name that he was aſham'd of. This was the Motive of that Patent: It did not therefore ſerve as a Rule in many other Caſes, in which the Publick was not concern'd. Now if under Pretence of a Greek Tranſlation, one might, without any danger, ſubſtitute the Name Akakia to that of Sans malice; much more was it lawful to ſubſtitute one Name in the room of another, when the difference between thoſe two Names conſiſted only in the Inſertion, Tranſpoſition, or omiſſion of ſome Letters. 2dly, I ſay, that Experience is favourable to me, ſince many famous Authors have taken a new Name, without being authoriz'd for it by the Sovereign. 3dly, I add that 'tis likely the Ordinance of the 26th of March before Eaſter, 1555, tended only to prevent the Uſurpations of Nobility, or ſome other Fraud, and therefore when a Man had no other deſign than that of Regius, he was not concern'd by that Ordinance. 4thly, I further ſay, that probably it was not better obſerved, than that of the States of Blois, in the Year 1559, whereby all Gentlemen (a) were forbidden to ſign any Act and Contract with any other Name but that of their Family, upon the Penalty of being made void . . . . That Article has not proved ſo effectual as it was expected; for many People, inſtead of obſerving it, have formally acted againſt it; which I have obſerved in the authentick and publick Acts. Laſtly, I anſwer, that if the Ordinance of Amboiſe was well obſerved, one might nevertheleſs wonder that People don't part with their odious or ridiculous Names, becauſe they may obtain the King's Permiſſion (b), if they will aſk for it; and we find among other Inſtances in Mr. de la Roque's Book, that (c) James Miette [Crumb] a mean and comical Name, and ſuch as may occaſion many ſilly Jeſts, had a Patent from Henry the IVth, in March 1603 . . . . which permitted him to change his Name into that of Lauberie.

(A) Who had newly forſaken the Proteſtant Religion.] Martin Rauſcherus, who made Reihing's Funeral Oration, ſays nothing that may induce us to believe that that Jeſuit contributed to make the Duke of Newburg change his Religion. Theophilus Spizelius (d), and Father Alegambe (e), are alſo ſilent about it. Thoſe three Authors ſay only, that ſoon after that Prince had changed his Religion, Father Reihing was made his Preacher. Nevertheleſs ſome Writers affirm, that that Jeſuit was the great Converter of the Duke of Newburg, and prevail'd with him by worldly Intereſts. Here are the Words of a Journaliſt in the Extract of one of Mr. Leti's Works. (f) "The Princes of the Houſe of Newburg were Pro-"teſtants formerly; but a Jeſuit, whoſe Name was "James Reihing found the way to make one of 'em "Change his Religion, by ſome (1) pretty good Poli-"tical Reaſons, which may be ſeen in the Author. "But that which is ſurprizing is, that the Converter "himſelf embrac'd afterwards the Proteſtant Religion, "to repair in ſome meaſure the breach he had made in "it, by ſeparating the Duke of Newburg from its body. "The Abbot Pacichelli, and Baccati, Secretary to the "then Pope's Nuncio at Cologne, who are quoted by "our Author, aſcribe that Change to an occulto giudicio "di Dio; but the Proteſtants may eaſily apprehend, that "a Man who ſtudies Controverſies, may change his "Opinions, and believe that the Proteſtants are in the "right; as a Prince from a Proteſtant turns Catholick "out of Intereſt. The one is not more ſtrange than "than the other; and there is no Reaſon to ſay on this "occaſion with an Actor of the Filli di Sciro:

"Le vie de gli Dei
"Sono oſcure & ritorte:
"Ch'il crederebbe? in ſomma
"E il cielo un Laberinto, in cui ſi perde
"Chiunque va per iſpiarne i fati."

(B) And retir'd to the Court of Wirtemberg.] Spizelius is guilty of a great Omiſſion; for he does not ſet down the Year of his Retreat. That Fault has not been committed in Reihing's Funeral Oration; but the Printers of the Sieur Witte have ſo much falſified that Date, that it can be of no uſe to me. They ſay, that Reihing having made his Eſcape from the Duke of Newburg's Court, came to that of Wirtemberg (g) in the beginning of the Year 1601. They left out, without doubt, vigeſimi; for I find in another Author (h) that he ſtole away from the Duke of Newburg the 5th of January 1620, and went to that Prince's Mother at Hochſtett, and from thence to Ulm, and then to Stutguard, and at laſt to Tubingen, where he abjur'd Popery, and Preach'd about the motives of his Converſion the 2d of January 1621. I find here ſome confuſion, when I compare Paul Freherus's Narrative with that of Rauſcherus; for according to the latter, the new Comer was examin'd a whole Week, and then was ſent to Tubingen, where his Name was regiſter'd in the Book of the Rector of the Univerſity. If he arriv'd at Stutgard in the beginning of January, and if he underwent there an examination that laſted a Week, before he ſet out for Tubingen, as Rauſcherus affirms, he did not Preach at Tubingen about the Motives of his Converſion on the 2d of January, as Freherus affirms. I believe there are two Faults of Impreſſion in Freherus's Account; and that in order to rectify them, it muſt be ſaid that Reihing left the Court of the Duke of Newburg the 5th of January 1621, and Preach'd at Tubingen the 22d of January in the ſame Year. Don't wonder at the long Examination he was oblig'd to undergo. The Proteſtants miſtruſt a Jeſuit very much, and the condition they were in at that time in Germany, made ſuch a miſtruſt neceſſary. Beſides, it is a very rare thing to ſee a famous Jeſuit quit his Order to turn Proteſtant; and therefore ſuch a rarity is look'd upon as a kind of Prodigy, and is thought to deſerve a careful Examination, that one may know whether it be a good Preſage, or the forerunner of Evil. The Duke of Wirtemberg being inform'd that Father Reihing was come to change his Religion, conven'd his Divines, and order'd them to examine him well. They acted the part of Catholicks, and for a whole Week pro-

* He ſtudied in the College of the Jeſuits. Taken from Spizelius, in templo honoris reſerato, p. 91, 92.

† Rauſcherus in laud. funebri Reihingi apud Witte memor. Theol. pag. 8—.

‡ Id. ib. pag. 8 8.

(g) Venerat ſub auſpicium ineuntis anni ſupra milleſimum ſexcenteſimum primi in aulam. Martinus Rauſcherus in laudat. funebri Reihingi apud Witte, memor Theolog. p. 903.

(h) Paulus Freherus, in Theatr. virorum illuſtr. pag. 431.

Books that met with a good Reception. The Jeſuits made uſe of all ſorts of (C) Promiſes and Enticements to bring him back again, but all was in vain; he ſlighted their Flatteries, as well as the Slanders (D) that were ſpread againſt him. He fell Sick of a Dropſy in the ſixth propos'd to that Father the Difficulties that are objected againſt the Proteſtants. He anſwer'd them in ſuch a manner as ſhew'd that he had very carefully compar'd the two Religions. (a) Juro vobis Auditores: tota illa, quæ res ſeriò utrinque acta eſt, aſſiduè, ex in omnibus, & quidem cardinalibus fidei noſtræ articulis depromſit & exhibuit fundamenta, ut neminem non in admirationem ſui converteret: Sacræ etiam Scripturæ teſtimonia, quibus noſtrorum ſententia firmari ſolet, ita in numerato habebat, ita illi præcipui textus erant in mundo, ac ſi totam ætatem in ſcholis noſtris inſumpſiſſet. Quæ profectò non rudem & novitium, ſed aliquem in hac militia veteranum arguebant. After he had undergone ſuch a Trial, he was thought worthy of Adoption, and they ſpoke to him the Words of Priamus (b) to Sinon. (c) Soluto conventu latum ex aula carmen accipit.

Quiſquis es, amiſſos hinc jam obliviſcere Grajos:
Noſter eris.

(C) The Jeſuits made uſe of all ſorts of Promiſes.] The more the Proteſtants boaſted of the Converſion of ſo famous a Man, the more the Jeſuits were ſorry for the Loſs of him. He had acquir'd the Eſteem of the Society (d) by his good Life, Eloquence and Learning; and therefore the whole Order was afflicted at his change of Religion, and they left no Stone unturn'd to regain him. Father Keller promiſed him all ſorts of Advantages, and a full Liberty of returning to the Jeſuits, or of being a Canon, or of living a ſecular Life. He ingaged his Word that his Superiors would ratifie whatever he ſhould promiſe him. (e) Quam lautas ille (Kellerus) fecit pollicitationes? quam pingues conditiones & propter quas vel vadimonium deſeri poſſet, Reihingo obtulit? videlicet optionem illi permiſerat, utrum Lojolæ familia manere, an verò in Canonicum aut Laicum ſe componere eligeret: dummodo ad ſinum Romanæ Eccleſiæ rediret. Proferebat hanc in rem chartam puram, quam Itali biancam vocant, cui inſcriberet, quicquid animo collibitum eſſet ſuo: nec de approbatione Superiorum dubitaret. Conrad Reihing, a Jeſuit, who was Rector of a College at Augsburg, and Brother to our Reihing, wrote to him continually, and exhorted him to return into the boſom of the Church (1); many other Jeſuits did the ſame. Chriſtopher Grenzing, his Provincial, was the firſt who endeavour'd to bring him back; he promiſed him that the Society would be merciful to him. (f) Quid dicam de literis Chriſtophori Grenzing Provincialis, qui primus ex omnibus à fuga illum retrahere tentavit cum hoc monito: quod Societas redeunti viſcera miſerationis & benignitatis recludat? Mutius Vitelleſchi, General of the Jeſuits, took care to let him know, with a thouſand Proteſtations of Sincerity, that he would be received with open Arms, and that he would not be dealt with as Mark Antony de Dominis had been, but in a moſt cordial manner. Reihing did not truſt to thoſe Promiſes, or rather he was ſo fully perſuaded that the Church of Rome was not a good Church, that he perſever'd conſtantly in the Proteſtant Religion. The Jeſuit, George Stengelius, confeſs'd in ſome printed Pieces, that the loſs of ſuch a Man was very prejudicial to the Society. (g) Nec diſſimulavit hoc ipſum Georgius Stengelius, qui in ſcriptis ſuis hactenus publicatis, non uno loco conqueritur, ingens diſceſſione Reihingi Societati ſuæ vulnus eſſe inflictum. There is ſcarce any religious Order that has afforded fewer Proſelytes to the Proteſtants, than that which Reihing quitted: This conſideration increaſed the Affliction of the Jeſuits inſtead of leſſening it. The following Words will ſhew you how much the Proteſtants triumph'd on account of ſuch a ſingularity. (h) Quod quidem factum, quam illuſtre, quàm admirabile, quam inſperatum rarumque nobis acciderit, ne commovere quidem vos opus eſt. Clericum Regularem, & Societatis Ignatianæ Patrem ad caſtra tranſire Evangelicorum, contra quos hactenus omni impetu ſteterat: ſive ut latinè dicam, Jeſuitam fieri Lutheranum, res eſt imprimis memorabilis, & in tabulas æternitatis referenda. Res, cujus prædicatio, multorum adhuc ſeculorum ingenia, ipſamque poſteritatis memoriam fatigabit. Res, quam nemo (i) hodie aut fando acceperit, aut oculorum fide fuerit arbitratus. France has afforded very few ſuch Examples: There was one in the Year 1647, when Jarrige turn'd Proteſtant.

(D) The Slanders that were ſpread againſt him.] They publiſh'd ſome Verſes againſt him in the German Language, wherein he was horribly defamed, and ſome Letters were diſperſed in the Towns and Courts of Germany, to repreſent him as a profligate Man. They call'd him a Paraſite, who had preferr'd good Cheer and good Wine to a pious and ſolitary Life: They charged him with having been a great Courtier to the Ladies, and they pretended he had been ſo much in Love with a Maid, that he debauch'd and got her with Child: they added, that the ſwelling of her Belly having diſcover'd her Crime, he ran away to avoid Infamy and Puniſhment. (k) Circumvolitarunt vernacula lingua infames rythmi, & calumnioſæ literæ, aulas, urbes, oppida perniciosiſſime pererrarunt. Narrarunt, aulæ Palatinæ paraſitum: gynacei aſſeclam: argenteos orbes, exquiſita fercula, & liquorem illius Dei, qui olim Indos expugnavit, præ lectione, præ oratione, præ ſolitudine amaſſe: vitæ cælibis quietem deliciis prætuliſſe: Floræ & Veneris, non Societatis Sacerdotem fuiſſe: ſalacitatis libidine pruriiſſe: ſpecioſam puellam impudicè deperiiſſe: inclinaſſe virginem, & infami compreſſu gravidaſſe: cumque illa uteri bulgam plus æquo intumeſcentem celare non poſſet, deſerto vadimonio, mali facinoris infamiam, & pœnas metuentem erupiſſe. Reihing confuted thoſe Slanders by a fine (l) Apology, which he ſent to the Court of Wirtemberg. There happen'd a thing which proclaimed his Innocence. The Duke of Bavaria ſent three Deputies to that Court, to wit, Henry de Stein, the Civilian Faber, and Father Keller, a Jeſuit and Rector of the College of Munich. They had Orders to demand that that Deſerter ſhould be deliver'd up to them, and they enumerated all the Crimes that were laid to his Charge. The Duke of Wirtemberg anſwer'd them, that (m) if Reihing was guilty of thoſe Crimes, they might juridically proceed aginſt him, and that he would appoint ſome upright Judges to try him without any partiality; but that if the Proſelyte was innocent, Juſtice and Equity required that he ſhould be allow'd to live quietly in the Profeſſion of that Religion, which ſeem'd the beſt to him. If it ſhould happen, added the Duke, that my two Preachers ſhould quit their Religion, I would not ſtir out of my Chamber upon ſuch an account. “Subjunxit hoc mantiſſæ loco generoſiſſimus Princeps. Quod ſi fors hodie eveniret, utrunque Aulæ meæ Concionatorem à Religione ſua deficere: eorum cauſâ, ne pedem quidem unicum extra limen promoverem (n).” Father Keller had at that time a Conference with Reihing, and reproach'd him with thoſe Irregularities, which had occaſion'd ſo many Songs and Satyrical Letters. Reihing vindicated himſelf upon all thoſe Heads, and even took an Oath for his Juſtification in the Preſence of three Deputies of the Duke of Bavaria. “(o) Memores reſponſi iſtius, quod tibi commitibuſque tuis, in præſentia virorum honoratiſſimorum, manu pectori admota, & ſublatis in cœlum oculis catapultæ inſtar retorſit. Ego, inquiebat ille, in conſpectu Cœleſtis illius Arbitri hic conſiſto, qui quæ nos gerimus, auditque & videt. Coram divina ejus Majeſtate agnoſco me peccatorum non infimum; ſed hunc teſtem invoco, vacare me culpa omnium, quæ imputantur, probrorum: fallentem vindicet, qui nunquam fallitur.” Keller having not been able to prevail with his old Fellow-Jeſuit, retired and told him, Eve has been the occaſion of your Fall. His Meaning was, that the Deſire of marrying had induc'd Reihing to renounce his Order and Popery. All the Accuſations were at laſt reduced to this; the other vaniſh'd away; but they obſtinately maintain'd that Love was the only Motive that had made him imbrace the Proteſtant Religion. They added, that after he had married, and got many Children, he found himſelf ſo clogg'd, that he wanted Courage to return into the Boſom of the Church, and departed this World to go into Hell. This is what Alegambe reproaches him with. (p) Prolapſus in turpes amores, ordinem, fidemque transfuga deſeruit, factus errorum magiſter: ductâ dein domum pellice pro uxore, ſuſceptis compluribus liberis, ita miſer implicatus eſt, ut ad veritatis confeſſionem redire non ſuſtineret. Sic in æternam mortem occubuit. This is a common place ſo trivial and ſo much worn out, that I wonder People are not weary of making uſe of it. It has been turn'd a thouſand different ways, and ſome paſſionate Men have choſen to alledge it againſt the Proteſtants in general, rather than againſt the Proſelytes. They ſay, that the firſt thing (q) the Proteſtants do in favour of a Monk or Prieſt, who embraces their Religion, is to procure him a Wife; 'tis the Cement wherewith they incorporate him into their Sect, and make him conſtantly adhere to it. They know that ſuch Birds of Prey cannot be better allured or ſixth Year of his Converſion, and was choak'd (E) with a Cathar ſome time after *. New Lies were ſpread (F) about his Death. I ſhall give you the Catalogue of (G) his Writings.

(a) Martinus Rauſcherus ubi ſupra pag. 903.

(b) Virgil. Æneid. lib. 2. v. 148.

(c) Rauſcherus ib. pag. 905.

(d) See the Fragment of a Letter of the Jeſuit John Agricola Chaplain to the Count de Tilli in the Army: I ſay, ſee that Fragment in oratione funebri Reihingi apud Witte ubi ſupra pag. 898, 899.

(e) Rauſcherus ib. apud Witte pag. 912.

(1) Id. ib. pag. 913.

(f) Rauſcherus ib. pag. 913.

(g) Ibid. pag. 899.

(h) Id. ib. pag. 904.

(i) That Author had without doubt forgot the Converſion of Haſenmullerus: I have mention'd it in the Article Jarrige.

(k) Rauſcherus ubi ſupra pag. 905.

(l) Id. ib. pag. 906.

(m) [illegible] criminis, quorum reum poſtularent, deſertoremque, veritate [illegible]rentur: fas eſſe, & poteſtatem ipſis in Aula adverſus eum lege ac judicio experiundi, habituros judicem neutri parti obnoxium, ſed ex æquo & bono jus dicentem. Sin autem &c. Id. ib. pag. 906.

(n) Id. ib.

(o) Id. ib. pag. 906. This is an Apology of the Orator to Father Keller.

(p) Alegambe ubi ſupra. Note, that Sotuel has wholly ſuppreſs'd this Article of James Reihing.

(q) Compare with this the new Letters againſt Maimbourg's Hiſtory of Calviniſm, pag. 49[illegible].

R E I-

or tamed, than by ſuch a piece of Fleſh. What a groſs Fancy is this! I only mention it as an inſtance of the brutiſhneſs of ſome Controverſiſts. (a) Quinetiam auſim dicere eos ſtudioſius multò laborare in quærenda quamprimum, & fucati conjugii glutine alliganda unicuique transfugæ concubina, quam in emendanda vitæ præteritæ ratione ac moribus. Illud quippe certò credunt non poſſe id genus accipitres vel efficacius acceſſiri, vel melius cicurari, quam ſi ejuſmodi carnis illicio ineſcentur. Father Reihing had without doubt foreſeen that things would be brought to that paſs, and that he would be expoſed to ſuch Railleries, if he ſhould marry; but he overcame that fear, and had a greater regard for the Doctrine of the Apoſtle of the Gentiles, who will have the Biſhop to marry, and who reckons the Prohibition of Marriage among the Doctrines of the Devil. He therefore married the next Year, and choſe in his Native Country a (b) Wife whom he had never ſeen. She was a choice Woman, and of a very good Family, handſom, ſober, and adorn'd with all ſorts of Virtues. (c) Altero, poſtquam in hanc urbem venit, anno, cùm Tarſenſis Apoſtoli mandatum animo ſecum verſaret, quo EPISCOPUM unius Uxoris Virum eſſe juſſit, & quo nomine ipſe ille Gentium Doctor doctrinam matrimonio interdicentium appellaret, animum ad conjugium appulit, exemploque ſuo vetus illud Euripidis comprobavit: Fatalem viro fœminæque torum eſſe.

Obſerve, that Reihing and the Author of his Funeral Oration, explain the Words of St. Paul as a Precept: They pretend that the Apoſtle commands the Miniſters of the Goſpel to marry, and to take but one Wife. This would be certainly the meaning of St. Paul's Words, if they were underſtood literally, that is, according to the Rules of Grammar; for the terms, which denote the Marriage of the Biſhop with one Wife, are as much govern'd by the word muſt (d), as thoſe that denote the Biſhop's blameleſs Life, Sobriety, Prudence, Gravity, Modeſty, Equity, Moderation, and Unintereſtedneſs. As therefore it were abſurd to pretend that St. Paul leaves it to the liberty of the Miniſters to be ſober, modeſt, blameleſs, &c. or not; ſo it is abſurd to pretend that he leaves it to their choice to marry a Wife, or to marry none; I ſay, this is abſurd, if we ſtick to the literal Senſe, and if we ſuppoſe that St. Paul did actually obſerve Grammatical Rules. I don't mean a rigorous Exactneſs, ſuch as is obſerved in the Articles of a Treaty of Peace, wherein all the Expreſſions are narrowly conſider'd, to prevent the Abuſes that might ariſe from an Equivocation, or the Omiſſion of a Particle. I don't mean neither the rigid Exactneſs of thoſe ſcrupulous pedantick Grammarians, who had rather ſpend three hours in mending a Period, than let it paſs with ſome careleſneſs. I mean a method of explaining one ſelf neatly and clearly, as a Man of Senſe would do in a Letter to a Tutor, containing ſome Directions. If he ſhould write to him, I will have my Children to ſay their Prayers twice a Day, to go to Church twice a Week, to forbear Swearing and Quarrelling, to be dutiful to their Mother, and to go every Monday to the Play-Houſe, he would take all theſe ſeveral Things as ſo many Injunctions; he would not think that 'tis left to his Diſcretion to carry his Pupils every Monday to the Playhouſe, or not: For in ſuch a caſe, he muſt ſuppoſe that there is no Connexion between theſe words, I will, and to go to the Playhouſe; and that the Father of his Pupils made uſe of another Verb, as to this laſt thing, and ſaid for inſtance, And I give you leave to carry them to the Playhouſe every Monday. It muſt be therefore granted, that if a Sophiſt ſhould obſtinately maintain, that whatever St. Paul ſays concerning the Qualifications of a Biſhop is obligatory, it would be no eaſie thing to confute him; and that one would be obliged to beg of him not to take it ill, that one ſhould depart (e) from the Grammatical Strictneſs: Since it is not likely that the Apoſtle deſign'd to exclude from Epiſcopacy thoſe, who would live a ſingle Life, though they were endow'd with all the Talents requiſite for the performance of Epiſcopacy. Which ſhews, that too ſcrupulous an adherence to the literal Senſe of the Scripture, would very often prove the cauſe of many Illuſions, and that there are many Caſes in which the Interpreters ought to remember the Axiom, Summum jus ſumma injuria. This ſhews at the ſame time, that we ought to do, not what the Apoſtles command, according to the Grammatical Senſe, but what common Senſe teaches us they intended to command. St. Paul, according to the Grammatical Rules, commands the Biſhops to marry; but Reaſon ſhews us, that he intended only to forbid them Polygamy. We muſt therefore ſtick to this. Reihing and others are in the wrong to find in St. Paul's Words an injunction to marry; they contain only a permiſſion: But their miſtake is much more excuſable than the intolerable boldneſs of forbidding Clergymen to marry. The Chriſtian People will never be able to juſtifie before God, the baſe compliance whereby they have permitted that the Laws of St. Paul ſhould be abrogated, though never ſo plain, ſo clear, and ſo intelligible. They have been ſeverely puniſh'd for it, by the overflowing Lewdneſs wherewith their Families have been polluted, and they are not yet free from it. I muſt obſerve by the bye, that the Holy Scripture has been handled by the Chriſtians much after the ſame manner as Juſtinian's Code. They are well pleaſed when the Common-Law agrees with the Written Law; but if the Common-Law ſerves their turn better than the Written-Law, they can very well diſpence with the want of Conformity. Chriſtianity has not been for many Ages a Country that governs it ſelf by the Written Law.

(E) Choak'd with a Cathar ſome time after.] Here is a new Omiſſion of Spizelius: He neither ſets down the Day nor the Year of Reihing's Death. To ſupply that Omiſſion, I ſhall obſerve that he departed this Life (f) the 5th of May, 1628. He went to the Bath according to the Phyſician's Preſcription, and having lain down to take ſome reſt, he fell aſleep, and never awaked again. His Panegyriſt calls it a happy Death, ſuch as Auguſtus wiſh'd for himſelf and his Friends. (g) Ultimum noſtrum omniumque mortalium votorum nactus, euthanaſiam, quam ille orbis Regnator Auguſtus olim ſibi ſuiſque exoptavit.

(F) New Lies were ſpread about his Death.] It was made publick, before he died; his Dropſie was ſaid to be an effect of the Divine Vengeance; his dying without receiving the Communion, occaſion'd ſeveral malicious Reflections; they maintain'd, that at the approach of his laſt Hour (h) he was cruelly tormented by the Remorſes of his Conſcience: Laſtly, they gave out, that upon the point of Death he had made a Recantation in the preſence of the Neighbours. It is expedient to obſerve theſe Things, becauſe they ſhew the blindneſs and fury of human Paſſions, which are the fruits of Credulity and falſe Zeal, and the Plague and Deſtruction of Reaſon. (i) Vidimus volantes è vicinia chartas, immò ab Allobrogibus uſque in manus noſtras pervenerunt literæ, quæ eum in ſuprema vitæ meta poſitum, Evangelium ejeraſſe, & in præſentia Vicinorum, ipſiuſque D. PREGIZERI palinodiam ceciniſſe loquerentur. O linguæ! ô calami! ô animorum effrons nequitia! Pudor & verecundia quò receſſiſtis? Aliter tu loqueris Reverende Pregizere.

(G) The Catalogue of his Writings.] His firſt Book was printed at Cologne in the Year 1615. it was Intituled Muri civitatis ſanctæ, hoc eſt fundamenta XII. religionis Catholicæ quibus inſiſtens Sereniſſimus Princeps Neoburgicus, Lutheraniſmo abdicato in Eccleſiam pedem intulit. He was then a violent Papiſt. Balthazar Meiſnerus, Fabricius Baſſecourt, and Matthias Hoë wrote againſt him. (k) Meiſnerus è theſibus ſcalam centum & quadraginta gradus altam fabricavit, quâ MUROS BABYLONIS ROMANÆ, ET CONFICTA PAPISTICÆ RELIGIONIS FUNDAMENTA demoliebatur. Baſſecourtus TUBA DEI armatus, AD SUBVERTENDOS MUROS Eccleſiæ Romanæ progreſſus, eos velut illa Hierichuntis mœnia uno clangore diſſlare & ſolo æquare eſt aggreſſus. Ultimus Matthias Hoë Enchiridion oppoſuit, in quo Romanæ fidei nebulæ clariſſima Scripturarum luce diſcutiebantur. He publiſh'd a Reply to the two firſt, printed at Newburg in 1617. Here is the Title of it: Excubiæ Angelicæ Civitatis Sanctæ pro defenſione XII. fundamentorum Catholicorum Balthaſari Meiſnero præconi Lutherano, & Fabricio Baſſecourt, Tibicini Calviniano oppoſitæ. His Reply to Matthias Hoë was only publiſh'd in the German Language: Here is the Title of it expreſs'd in Latin, Enchiridium Catholicum Manuali D. Hoë oppoſitum. Let us ſee the Titles of the Books he publiſh'd, after he had embrac'd the Confeſſion of Augsburg. Laquei Pontificii contriti; quibus, adjuvante DOMINO, liberatus, Liberatori ſuo Ter Opt. Max. libenter meritò publicas gratias in Academia Tubingenſi dicere voluit. Tubingæ 1622 in 4to. Germanicè, ibidem eodem anno in 4to. Diſſertatio de vera Chriſti in terris Eccleſia, adverſus larvatum Jeſuitam Dillinganum: ibid. 1622. in 4to. Araneorum opera, quas contra laqueos Pontificios contritos

texturam

* [illegible]

(f) Rauſcherus ib. pag. 916. Spizelius, Spec. hiſtor. Eccleſ. p. m. 553. places his Death wrong in the Year 1624.

(g) Rauſcher, ibid.

(h) Horrendis conſcientiæ morſibus mortalitatis limen jam vicinus infeſtari cœpit. Ibid. p. 917.

(i) Idem ib.

(k) Ibid. pag. 905.

REINESIUS (THOMAS) one of the most Learned Men of the XVIIth Century, was born at * Gotha, a Town of Thuringia in Germany, (A) the 13th of December, 1587. He was a Physician by his Profession, but he applied himself very much to the Study of Literature, wherein he excell'd most. He had already practis'd Physick in some other Places †, when he settled at Altemburg, to be the Physician of that Town. He lived there many Years, and was made Burgomaster. At last, having been honour'd with the Dignity of Counsellor of State to the Elector of Saxony, he went to reside at Leipsick, where he died the 14th of February ‡ 1667 γ. He had often refused to be made a Professor (B), because he was afraid his Collegues would prove intolerable, and 'tis very likely that if he had accepted of any such Employment, he would have had many Quarrels; for he could not avoid falling out with a Professor of Leipsick, tho' they lived at a considerable distance from one another. It texturam improbam suspenderunt Georgius Stengelius, Simon Scheitenreisser, & Laur. Forerus. Stilo Reisingi dejecta: Ibid. 1623. in 4to. Apologeticus pro dissertatione sua, de Ecclesia Christi: ibidem 1624. in 4to. He publish'd in the German Language (z) a Retractation of the Book he had written against Matthias Hoë.

(A) Was born . . . . the 13th of December, 1587.] Tho' I had seen this Date in large Letters under Reinesius's Cut prefix'd to one (a) of his Books; yet I did a little suspect it, considering that the Journalists of Leipsick (b) say he died the 14th of February, 1667, being 70 Years old. Those Gentlemen are very exact, and no body could be better inform'd of the true Age of that Learned Man. Besides, I saw that Andreas Carolus Abbot of St. George, in the Dutchy of Wirtemberg, observes, that he lived above 70 Years. (c) obiit Thomas Reinesius Septuagenario major. This cannot be said of a Man, who dyes in his 80th Year. But I was no longer uncertain about it, when I read the Letter (d) wherein Reinesius says, that his Masters had advised him above 70 Years ago, to peruse frequently the Dictionaries. This he writ the 10th of February, 1665; which is a good Confirmation of the Date that is under his Print.

(B) He had often refused to be made a Professor, because he was afraid his Collegues would prove intolerable.] I find this Particular in his first Letter (e) to Gaspar Hoffman, Professor of Physick at Altorf. That Professor had writ to him (f) that he had been exposed, for the space of 30 Years, to the Clamours and Slanders of envious Men, and obliged to maintain some violent Assaults. Reinesius answer'd him, that he was likewise persecuted by some cross-grain'd jealous Men, and that there was so little true Friendship left in the World, and so little Equity and Order in the Commonwealth of Learning, that he had conceal'd himself the greatest part of his Life to avoid the Storm. (g) Me quoque circumstrepunt & adfligunt turba æmulorum, invidorum susurri, semidoctorum impudentia judicia. His enim heu! execrandis moribus hodiè vivitur, ut de Bonis judicent pessimi, de artibus imperiti, in literis dominentur thrasones; omnia sint fucata, & genuinarum amicitiarum nihil ferè restet; quas intemperies seriò deploravi semper, & ut declinarem ista passiva, βιώσας maximam partem λέληθα. He goes on, and says, I have often refused the Professorships that were offer'd me, because I thought I could not bear the ill Humour of some Persons with whom I must have lived, and I have rather chosen to stay here, though I don't live a very easie Life. He was then Physician of the Town of Altemburg. (h) Nominatus toties ab Academicis, vocatusque à Principibus ad munus docendi publicum; repugnavi, socio uno alteroque è nostratibus (non enim sum πολύφιλος*) consilii, voluntatibus utrorumque, quòd mores incommodos nonnullorum, cum quibus vivendum esset, tolerare posse non considerem, & mansi in statione, nec ipsa satis commodâ.* Here is part of the Inconveniencies which he does enumerate. My mentioning of them is not needless on this Occasion; for they are things that belong to the History of his Life. (i) Quid enim hoc decennio Altenburgi Curiensia & Gerana (k) transmittam, etsi & illic sat fuerit nubilorum) non expertus sum, in quo non tentatus? Post triste spectaculum expilatæ domûs amisi intra semestre tres jucundissimos filios, suavissimam conjugem, incomparabilem fœminam; solùm animus DEO nixus & invictus mihi superest, cum tantillo boni nominis, & quantum satis est frugali opum. Λιτῶς μὲν ἀλλ᾽ ἐν ἐλευθερίᾳ. Trinâ vice, me Physico, τὸ λοιμῶδες ἐπιδήμιον hanc urbem adflavit . . . . . Conjugium, quod ante triennium secundum inivi, est incommodius, quam speraveram, & multis rei familiaris tricis, quas tamen deprecatus fui, me involvit, &, quod caput est, sterile; quò malo tristius nihil obvenire poterat antè liberis orbato, ϗ ὅλῳ ἀπειρισάτῳ. It ought to be observed that some ill affected Persons had sent to Hoffman several Quires of Reinesius's Variæ lectiones, whilst they were printing, in hopes (l) that Hoffman would write against that Work: but the Event prov'd contrary to their Expectation; for Hoffman finding himself prais'd in that part of the Book that was sent to him, laid aside the Resentment (m) he had conceived against Reinesius, by whom he thought to have been offended, and wrote a very obliging Letter to him. I think I may say, that the sharpest Quarrel Reinesius ever had, was that which he had with Rivinus, Professor at Leipsick. Reinesius declares he had not been the Aggressor, and had only answer'd the injurious Words of that Critick. Nevertheless the latter made his Complaints to the Magistrates, and left no Stone unturn'd to prevent the printing of Reinesius's Answer. Can any thing be more unjust? (n) Nunquam odio habui hominem; sed calumniatorem & projectissimæ protervia accusatorem ferre non debui tamen. Etiamnum hodie crepant nutantque subsellia Judicum apud Nos, ad quos me, stulte querens de injuriis quas Ipse prior intulisset, deferebat, neque suæ famæ satis cavens, dum meam maculare intenderet ὑπὸ πολλῆς σκυθρωπίας ϗ ὑψηλαγορίας . . . . Defensionem meam, quam à provocantis impudentia imposita mihi necessitas excusat, in amicorum sinu deposui . . . . . (o) Dixit, quæ voluit; æquum est ut audiat quæ nolet. . . . . Ex eo vero, quod apologiam meam iis adhibitis machinis, mendaciis etiam, supprimere annisus fuit, malam causam fovere judicatus est dudum, & designasse facinus, quod æternam nomini ejus inussit notam. Voluit nimirum ut ipse de me censor sedere posset, sed ἀνυπεύθυνος; voluit ut liceret sibi in me quidvis; mihi ne quidem hiscere contrà. The Apology of Reinesius was printed, notwithstanding the Aggressor's Opposition. This I find in a Letter written the 7th of August, 1653. See also the Letter (p) which Reinesius wrote to Bosius the 18th of January, in the same Year.

What I have said of the Misfortunes that Reinesius complain'd of, seems to be the common Fate of Learned Men. The History of their Lives and their Letters do commonly shew that they have been ingaged in troublesome Quarrels, attended with the Virulency of Jealousie, Calumny, Anger, and a thousand other shameful Passions. One would think, that of all Men Scholars are most apt to make themselves and others uneasy. Which must needs create a Contempt and Hatred for Learning, or at least make one lose the good Opinion one might entertain of it. Ignorant People fancy, that if they had spent all their time in reading, they would have learn'd to moderate their Passions, and to cure themselves of several Faults, which incline them to behave themselves unjustly towards their Neighbours. But they would have other Thoughts, if they knew that the most Learned Men abuse and persecute one another, and complain of their sad Destiny. From whence we may draw this Conclusion, that there is nothing so difficult to be acquir'd as the Tranquillity and Uprightness of the Mind. A continual Study of good Books seems to be a most proper Means to acquire that Treasure; and yet it seldom procures it, and very often produces a quite contrary Effect. Horace had a very wrong Notion, when he spoke these Words: It is enough for me to beg of God that he would preserve my Life, and bestow Riches upon me; and then I shall be able to procure to my self the Tranquillity of the Mind.

Quid (q) sentire putas? quid credis, amice, precari?
Sit mihi, quod nunc est, etiam minus: ut mihi vivam
Quod superest ævi, si quid superesse volunt Di:
Sit, bona librorum & provisæ frugis in annum
Copia: ne fluitem dubiæ spe pendulus horæ.
Sed satis est orare Jovem, qui donat, & aufert.
Det vitam, det opes: æquum mi animum ipse parabo.

He was grosly mistaken: the thing, for which he thought he stood in no need of God's Assistance, was what he could less expect from his Ability, and the first he

(y) At Tubingen, in the Year 1613.

(a) His Letters ad Hoffmannum & Rupertum printed at Leipsick in the Year 1660.

(b) Acta erudit. Lips. 1682. pag. 92.

(c) Andreas Carolus memorab. Eccles. lib. 7. ad ann. 1667. pag. 409.

(d) Reines. epist. 29. ad Joannem Vorstium pag. 61.

(e) It is dated from Altemburg the 10th of October, 1638.

(f) See Reinesius's Letters, ad Hoffmannum & Rupertum pag. 1.

(g) Ibid. pag. 6.

(h) Ibid.

(i) Ibid. pag. 7.

(k) He means by Curiensia his being Physician to the Town of Hoff (in Latin Curia*) in* Voightland; and by Gerana the like Employment at Gera, a Town in the same Country, which belongs to the Lords of Plaven, whose Family-Name is Reussen, in Latin Rutheni.

it was at first a Quarrel about some Points of Literature, * which turn'd afterwards into a Law-Suit. I can't tell whether Reinesius left any Children behind him; but I know that in 1658, he complain'd that he had lost his first Wife, and all the Children he had by her; and that his second Wife, whom he had been married three Years, was barren †. This was the greatest, but not the only Inconveniency of his second Marriage. He had a share in the Liberality of Lewis XIV. to the most famous learned Men in Europe. The Sum that was sent him, was attended with a very obliging Letter of Mr. Colbert, for which he express'd his Acknowledgment by dedicating to him his Observations on the Fragment of Petronius, in the Year 1666. They, who can judge of a Point of Literature, have no sooner read some Pages of his Writings, but they place him above those Philologers, who have only a good Memory, and reckon him among those Criticks, who go beyond their reading, and know more things than Books have taught them. The Penetration of their Wit makes 'em draw Consequences, and affords them Conjectures, which lead them to the discovery of hidden Treasures. By that Means they clear the darkest parts of Erudition, and extend the Bounds of the Knowledge of Antiquity. Reinesius was one of those Criticks, and made it his chief Business to find out what others had not said. If his Supplements to Vossius's Treatise de Historicis Græcis are ever printed, the Reader will wonder how Vossius, who made so fine and so large a Collection, could omit so many things. It appears from Reinesius's printed Letters, that he was consulted like an Oracle; and that he answer'd very learnedly the Questions that were proposed to him, and that he was very well vers'd in the Knowledge of the ancient Families of Rome, and in the Study of Inscriptions. There is a very fine Elogy upon his Merit, and his learned and political Works in the Epistle § Dedicatory of the second Edition of Casaubon's Letters. Some Divines have laid to his Charge, that he had a particular Religion (C) made up of such things as seem'd to him best in other Religions. I shall set down (D) the Titles of most of his Works.

* See the Remark B.

† See the same Remark.

§ Written by Mr Grevius, and dated from Amsterdam the 31st of August, 1667. It is quoted in Moreri's Dictionary, and nothing else is quoted in it, tho' it does scarce mention any of the things related in the Article of Reinesius.

REMON

he should have besought Jupiter to bestow upon him; for it is much more easy to get Riches and Honours by one's Industry, than a quiet and contented Mind. If it be said, that Riches and Honours depend upon a thousand things which we cannot dispose of at Pleasure, and that therefore it is necessary to pray God that he would turn them to our Advantage; I answer, that the Silence of Passions, and the Tranquillity of the Mind depend upon a thousand things, which are not under our Jurisdiction. The Stomach, the Spleen, the Lymphatick Vessels, the Fibres of the Brain, and a hundred other Organs, whose Seat and Figure are hitherto unknown to the Anatomists, produce in us many Uneasinesses, Jealousies and Vexations. Can we alter those Organs? Are they in our Power (a)?

(C) Have laid to his Charge that he had a particular Religion.] A Divine of Wirtemberg, whom I have quoted above, affirms that Reinesius, who went to the Lutheran Churches, and communicated with the Lutherans, spoke so ill of their Divines, and of their Doctrine, and Liturgies, that he was worse than a profess'd Adversary. From whence he concludes, either that he was of the Religion of prudent Men, or that he favour'd it; for he openly declared that he followed a certain Religion in certain Points, and another Religion in other Points. (b) Tam sinistrè sensit, tam scabiosè locutus est, de Doctoribus & Professoribus harum (Lutheranarum) partium, imò de ipsa doctrina, de symbolicis libris, de dogmatibus in iisdem contentis, ut vix quisquam ex manifestis adversariis taliter fecerit. Probari hæc possunt ex Epistolis, quas an. 1654. vel circiter, Coloniæ Brandenburgicæ publicavit, ubi contemptim Formularios vocat Theologos F. C. amplexos; D. Majorem Seniorem, Grandionem, qui applausores nullos in N. habeat; alios nominat Archiperecidas. & ita conseq. Religioni Prudentum procul ambiguo addictus erat Sycophanta, vel eidem certè favebat, apertè fassus, hoc se in una Religione, aliud in alia sequi. That Divine had explain'd in another Place what he meant by the Religion of prudent Men. Here is the Substance of his Discourse. (c) A Dutch Man said one Day, that the Religion of Grotius was that of Learned Men. Being ask'd what Religion it was; he answer'd, they believe what they please. Hulseman (d) ask'd, whether Grotius meant that one ought to follow the Opinions of prudent Men, and he believes this is the Religion of prudent Men, which is known but to few Persons, and very much boasted of in France, and particularly in Holland. Hereupon (e) Mullerus a Divine of Hamburg, and (f) Kromaier, a Divine of Leipsick, held it for a certain thing that Grotius had follow'd the Religion of prudent Men, which is a mixture of many Religions, and is made up of several Doctrines suited to one's Taste and Interest. It is call'd the Religion of prudent Men, because the wise Men of this World pitch upon it with great Prudence, as they think, and keep it as long as they please; it is also call'd the Political and Philosophical Religion. It goes by the first of those two Names, because the Politicians make choice of it; for they are Men who will be free in that Point, and who turn themselves all manner of ways. It is styl'd Philosophical, because it frees a Man from the Obligation of believing; and 'tis well known that a Philosopher submits to no Human Authority, and will not swear to the Words of any Master. Liber homo Philosophus nullius addictus jurare in verba Magistri. The Author mentions two other Epithets; he says, (g) that this Religion of prudent Man is call'd Eclectick, or Eclogistick. I wonder he said nothing of the Sect of the Eclectick Philosophers founded by Potamon of Alexandria, who lived in the time of Augustus. Those Men were neither Platonists, nor Stoicks, nor Peripateticks, nor of any other particular Sect; but they took out of every one of 'em what they lik'd best, and left the rest. Such is the notion of the Religion ascrib'd to Reinesius. It was a Religion of choice, a Mosaic Work, a Work made up of in-laid Pieces. There are more People than is commonly believ'd, who form such a Religion to themselves, and do not boast of it. They might be call'd in Latin (h) Miscelliones.

(D) The Titles of most of his Books.] Here are some concerning Physick: De vasis umbilicalibus eorumque ruptura observatio singularis, at Leipsick, 1624. in 4to. Chimiatria, hoc est Medicina nobili & necessaria sui parte, Chimiâ, instructa & exornata, at Gera in Voigtland, 1624. in 4to. The following Books concern Literature: De Deo Endovellico, Altemburg, 1637. Ἱστορούμενα linguæ Punicæ contra Vitum Wolfrum, Altemburg, 1637. Variarum lectionum libri tres, ibid. 1640. in 4to. Defensio variarum lectionum, Rostoch, 1653. in 4to. Epistolæ ad Casparum Hoffmannum, & Christ. Ad. Rupertum, Leipsick, 1660. in 4to. They have printed, after his Death, Epistolæ ad Johannem Vorstium, at Coln in Brandenburg, 1667. in 4to. Epistolæ ad Nesteros patrem & filium, Leipsick, 1670. in 4to. Epistolæ ad Christianum Daumium, Jëna, 1670. in 4to. Epistolæ ad Jo. Andream Bosium, Jëna, 1700, in 12mo. Syntagma inscriptionum antiquarum cumprimis Romæ Veteris quarum omissa est recensio in vasto Jani Gruteri opere, cujus istihoc dici possit supplementum, cum commentariis absolutissimis (i), Leipsick, 1682. in folio. Dissertatio Critica de Sibyllis Oraculis (k), Jëna 1685. in 4to. I can say nothing about some other Books which Mr. Konig ascribes to him. I am afraid he confounds together those that have been Printed, and those that have not been Publish'd. He ascribes to him glossarium vocum barbaricarum: censuram nonnullorum in Salmasii exercitationibus Plinianis, Commentarium in Inscriptiones Gruteri. Variarum Lectionum libros sex. Ἱστορούμενα Medicinæ, vel successiones & vitas Medicorum, and several other Works. Moreri pretends, that Reinesius made himself known by his Six Books of Variæ Lectiones, that he has also written a Censure upon Salmasius's Exercitationes on Pliny or Solinus, and some Commentaries on Gruterus's Inscriptions (l). I can't agree with him in this; for there are only three Books of Variæ Lectiones Printed; and I know nothing of Reinesius's Book, Intituled, Censura exercitationum Plinianarum Salmasii. I don't find it

(g) Andreas Carolus lib. 6. cap. 32. pag. 97.

(h) Miscelliones appellantur qui non certæ sunt sententiæ, sed variorum mixtorumque judiciorum. Festus Pompeius.

(i) See the Acta Eruditorum, 1682. pag. 80. & seq.

(k) See the Nouvelles de la Republique des lettres July, 1685. art. 5.

(l) Confer the Jugemens des Savans, tom. 3. pag. 461, 462.

REMOND * (FLORIMOND DE) Counsellor in the Parliament of Bourdeaux, towards the latter end of the XVIth Century, signalized himself by some violent (A) Books against the Protestants. He had been a Huguenot in his younger Days; but if we may believe him, he was rescued † from the Mouth of Heresy by a Miracle, of which he was an Eye-witness in the Year 1566. Moreri, who mentions it, knew not the Place where that Comedy was acted: He says § that a Woman, call'd Nicole Obri, a Native of Vervins, was exorcized at Laudun. He is mistaken, it was at Laon: I have said in another place ‖ that Father Labbe has committed the same Fault. There is some Reason to believe that Florimond de Remond studied under Peter Ramus, in the College de Prele at Paris: Which I observe only to have an Opportunity to mention what he says (B) concerning the Book intitled de tribus Impostoribus. Boterenius ‡ places his Death in the Year 1602, and Moreri in the Year 1600. Some will have it that he is not the Author of the Books (C) that are ascribed to him.

mention'd in the Prefaces to his Posthumous Works. I don't question but that he was well qualified to write such a Book, and to cut out as much work for Salmasius, as for Barthius; but I don't know whether he had such a design, and if he had, I dare say the performance of it has not been made publick. The Inscriptions commented upon by Reinesius are different from those of Gruterus. Lastly, Moreri says nothing of many Books that have been publish'd. If his Article of Reinesius was corrected, there would remain but two or three Words of his.

I must desire the Readers to take notice that the Booksellers have prefix'd Reinesius's Name to a Book, of which he did not write one Line. Mr. Witte mentions this, lest Reinesius should be look'd upon as a Plagiary: (a) Exiit quoque Lipsiæ an. 1679. sub ejus nomine, Schola Jure-Consultorum Medica, Relationum libris aliquot comprehensa, quibus principia Medicinæ in jus transsumta ex professo examinantur. Verum autem Author & titulus iste est; Fortunati Fidelis de Relationibus Medicorum libri IV. in quibus ea omnia, quæ in forensibus ac publicis causis Medici referre solent, plenissimè traduntur, studio D. Pauli Ammanni, Lipsiæ 1674. Hoc indicare volui, ne Vir Cl. præter meritum Plagiariis adscribatur. Mr. Witte has forgot a material Circumstance, viz. that the Book intituled Fortunati fidelis, &c. was printed (b) at Palermo in the Year 1602. in 4to. That Edition is quoted in Lindenius Renovatus, pag. 275. under the Name of Fortunatus Fidelis; but the Author did not know that the Schola Jurisconsultorum, &c. printed at Leipsick in the Year 1679. is the same with that of Fortunatus Fidelis, for he ascribes it to Reinesius, pag. 1023. I fancy the Leipsick Edition, 1674. differs only from that of 1679. as to the Title; and that Reinesius's Name was put to it, to make it sell the better.

(A) By some violent Books against the Protestants.] He publish'd a Book, Intituled, Erreur populaire de la papesse Jeanne. I have the Bourdeaux Edition 1594. the Author puts his Name to it, which shews that 'tis not the first; for the first came out without his Name. As it was never my Design, they are Florimond de Remond's (c) Words, to get some Reputation by those inconsiderable productions of my Brain, (it were to pretend to build a solid Glory upon a sandy Foundation) so I have endeavour'd to avoid Shame. Which moved me to suppress my Name, because it could not keep a rank among so many learned Men, wherewith France abounds. But since that Author has put a quite contrary Interpretation upon the laudable fear that restrain'd me, I have been willing to open the Curtain, and appear in Publick; and yet I will out of kindness for him suppress his Name, since he has so weakly answer'd my Arguments. This he says, concerning a (d) Minister of Bearn, what had writ something against the Anonymous Book of the Popular Error about Pope Joan: which was the Reason why the Author publish'd a second Edition of it well revis'd, and undertook a longer and more serious Work; it was that concerning Antichrist. Vignier says (e) that he made use of the second Edition of the Antichrist, and of the Antipope Joan, revis'd, corrected, and enlarged by the Author, and Printed at Paris by Abel l'Angelier. 1599. He is mistaken as to the Antipope Joan; for the Paris Edition 1599. was at least the third. Cooke is still more mistaken, for he says (f) that Book was first written in French in the Year 1602. Sagittarius (g) mentions only the French Edition of Bourdeaux of the same Year. The third Book of Remond did not come out 'till after his Death; it is Intituled, The History of the Birth, Progress and Decay of Heresy in this Age, divided into eight Books. The sixth Book was to contain an account of the Schism of England; they found only the Title of it among the Papers of the Author: He compos'd first (h) the seventh and the eighth, which were more necessary, because they contain'd the History of what had happen'd in France. Francis de Remond, his Son, who took care to get that Work Printed, and Dedicated it to Paul V. supplied (i) the sixth Book. Sagittarius observes, (k) that Florimond de Remond, or rather the Jesuit Richeome, writ the History of the Birth, Progress and Decay of Heresy in three Volumes; he quotes the French Edition of Paris 1605. and that of 1624. This Account is not exact, for the Edition of 1605. contains only one Volume, and 'tis the only one that was written by Remond; the other two were compos'd by Claudius Malingre, Historiographer of France, and Printed at Paris in 1624. That Work of Remond, and Malingre's Continuation, have been (l) Reprinted several times, sometimes in French, and sometimes in Latin. The two other Works of Remond have been likewise Translated into Latin. Note, that he publish'd at Bourdeaux in 1594. the French Translation he had made of Tertullian's Treatise de Corona militis, and of the same Father's Discourse ad Martyres. Note also, that Baronius, some other Writers of the same Party, do very much and commend his Books of Controversy.

(B) What he says concerning the Book Intituled de tribus Impostoribus.] " (m) Have we not seen a detestable Book forg'd in Germany, tho' Printed in another " Country, at the very same time that Heresy acted its " part, which sowed this Doctrine with this horrid Title, Of the three Impostors, &c. ridiculing the three " prevailing Religions, which alone acknowledge the " true God, viz. the Jewish, the Christian, and the Mahometan. That Title was sufficient to shew, that it " was a production of Hell; and that the Age which " brought forth such a Monster, was a very wicked one. " I would not have mention'd it, if Hosius and Genebrard had not spoken of it before me. I remember, " that when I was a young Boy, I saw a Copy of it in " the College de Prele in Ramus's Hands, who was an " eminent Man for his Learning, and who confounded " himself with his Inquiries into the Mysteries of Religion, which he coupled with Philosophy. That " wicked Book was handed about among the most " Learned, who were desirous to see it". They are Remond's Words. If he had known, that that wicked Book was talk'd of under the Empire of Frederick II. (n) would he have been so bold as to ascribe the production of such a Monster to the XVIth Century? Perhaps he would, for his only design was to render Lutheranism odious per fas & nefas. Most People father (o) the pretended Book de tribus Impostoribus upon Aretin; they put it therefore upon Italy, and not upon Germany.

(C) Some will have it, that he is not the Author of the Books that are ascrib'd to him.] Mr. Sagittarius supplies me with two Passages in a Book Printed in 1694. Florimundus Ramundus, Vasco, senator parliamenti Burdegalensis, sub cujus nomine Ludovicus Richeomus, Jesuitici Sodalitii Theologus, Gallice scripsit Errorem popularem de Johanna Pseudo-pontifice, dicta Papissa, Latine postea versum (p). This, he says, pag. 683. Let us see what he says, pag. 820. Florimundus Ramundus, sive potius cujus stylo usus est, Ludovicus Richeomius Soc. J. qui de ortu, progressu & interitu hæreticorum hujus temporis Tomis III. commentatus est. I proceed to a Book Printed in 1687. (q) " But upon the whole matter it " is first very much doubted, whether he was at all the " Author of those Books that passed under his Name. " For many have said, that F. Richeome, a Jesuit, writ " them, and borrow'd the Name of a Councellor of " Parliament, to give his Work the more Credit. Perhaps it was thought necessary to set a Writer of some " Name in opposition to Mr. de Thou, whose History " was writ with too much Sincerity to be acceptable " to that Order. Peter Matthieu in his History says " positively, that it was believ'd that F. Richeome was " the Author of the Books that went under the Name " of Florimond de Raimond. Vignier in his Theater of Antichrist, and Rivet in his Answer to the Jesuit, say " the same thing; and these were the Men that writ " soon after Florimond's Book appear'd. Blondel was " also

* Florimond de Remond.

† De l'origine & progrès de l'heresie, Book [illegible], pag. 902.

§ Moreri at the word Florimond de Raymond.

‖ In the Article Laudun, Remark C.

‡ Rodolph. Boterenius, comment. de rebus in Gallia gestis lib. [illegible] pag. 91.

(a) Witte in Diario biographico ad ann. 1667. fol. Yyy 3.

(b) I have been inform'd of this by a Letter of Mr. Bourdelot, first Physician to the Dutchess of Burgundy.

(c) Page 303. of his Erreur populaire, edit. of Bourdeaux 1594.

(d) He denotes him only by these two Letters R. T.

(e) Vignier, theatre de l'Antechrist in the Table of the Authors.

(f) Cooke, dialogue de la Papesse Jeanne, pag. 2. I make use of the French Translation made by John de la Montagne.

(g) Sagittar. introduct. in hist. Eccles. pag. 683.

(h) See the Preface to the Histoire de la naissance, &c. de l'heresie.

(i) I was forced to work hard, and to write in haste, that I might publish it as soon as ever I could. Ibid.

(k) Sagittar. ibid. pag. 820.

(l) [illegible]

(m) Flor. de Remond, de la naissance de l'Heresie, Book 2. ch. 16. pag. 236.

(n) See the Article Aretin (Remark [illegible].)

(o) Ibid.

(p) Sagittarius ubi supra pag. 683.

(q) Barnes, a Defence of the Reflections on Varillas, p. 26.

him, whereof the moſt conſiderable is the Hiſtory of the Birth, Progreſs and Declenſion of the Hereſy of this Age. He was the unfitteſt Man in the World to ſucceed in ſuch an (D) Undertaking.

“ alſo of the ſame Mind.” Theſe are the Words of a Doctor, who is now an Illuſtrious Prelate in England. It is certain, that theſe following Words are to be found in a Work of Vignier: (a) Matthieu the King's Hiſtoriographer ſays in his Hiſtory of the King, that he does not think that the Book concerning Antichriſt was written by the ſaid Remond, but by the Jeſuit Richeome. It is no leſs certain, that Rivet having mention'd what Florimond de Remond acknowledges to Calvin's Honour in his Hiſtory of the Birth of Hereſy, adds this: (b) I have been willing to ſet down here the Words of an Enemy, and perhaps of the Jeſuit Richeome, to whom Peter Matthieu aſcribes Remond's Antichriſt. I have found the Paſſage of Peter Matthieu; here it is: “ (c) The Aſſembly began with declaring that the Biſhop of Rome “ was the Antichriſt, foretold in the Word of God. “ 'Tis a long time ſince the Miniſters have taught this “ Doctrine in their Writings, and in their Sermons, and “ the Catholicks have taught the contrary. Florimond “ de Remond, or, as I think, Richeome a Jeſuit under “ that Name, has more inlarg'd upon that Subject than “ any body elſe, and collected by way of Antitheſis “ whatever belongs to the true Antichriſt, and to the “ pretended one”. I leave it to the Readers to judge whether this is a ſufficient ground to lay down as a certain matter of Fact, that all the controverſial Books that have been publiſh'd under the Name of Florimond de Remond had been written by Richeome. But here's another Teſtimony of one of the Authors, who confuted Maimbourg's Hiſtory of Calviniſm. I cannot give any credit, ſays he (d), to Florimond de Remond, having been told by a Counſellor of the Parliament of Bourdeaux, call'd Lewis le Maſſip, (an honeſt Man, with whom I have been intimately acquainted, having lodged at his Houſe at Bourdeaux in 1650, where I attended the Court, and having kept Correſpondence with him for ſome Years by way of Letters) that it was a conſtant Tradition in that Country, that Remond, who was a Member of their Parliament, had had three conſiderable Advantages: 1. To grow old without being gray-hair'd: 2. To build without Mony: 3 To write without Learning; becauſe the Jeſuits ſupplied him with whatever is to be found in his Hiſtory of the beginning and declenſion of Hereſy.

(D) He was the unfitteſt Man in the World to ſucceed in ſuch an Undertaking.] Hiſtory, generally ſpeaking, is the moſt difficult compoſure that an Author can undertake, or one of the moſt difficult. It requires a great Judgment, a noble, clear and conciſe Style, a good Conſcience, a perfect Probity, many excellent Materials, and the Art of placing them in a good Order, and above all things the power of reſiſting the inſtinct of a Religious Zeal, which prompts one to cry down what he thinks to be falſe, and to adorn and imbelliſh what he thinks to be true. From this ſhort and exact Deſcription of the Talents, that make up the Character of a good Hiſtorian, one may eaſily perceive, that Florimond de Remond could not ſucceed in his deſign of Writing the Hiſtory of the beginning and progreſs of Lutheraniſm and Calviniſm. It was a great Subject, one of the greateſt Revolutions that have been ſeen in Chriſtianity. Reaſons of State had crept into it, and were combin'd with the Intereſts of Religion; which made up a mixture that increas'd the Hiſtorian's Labour, and requir'd great Application, and a Mind wholly free from Prejudices. I don't examin whether our Remond had Learning, Judgment, and Wit enough, and a good Style to treat well ſo important a Subject, and I am willing to ſuppoſe, that in that Reſpect he was far leſs contemptible than he is repreſented to be by his Adverſaries, but had he had no other Faults than thoſe, which his Zeal for the Catholick Religion, and his hatred againſt the Proteſtants produced in him, he ſhould have acknowledg'd that he undertook a thing that was above him. He ſtumbled in his Preliminaries; he did like thoſe who go about to build a Houſe, (e) before they caſt up the Expence they muſt be at, to know whether they are able to ſpend ſo much. He neglected the Precept which the moſt skilful Maſters have ſo wiſely recommended, to wit, to pitch upon a Subject adapted to one's Capacity, and to make a long trial of one's Ability:

> Sumite (f) materiam veſtris, qui ſcribitis, æquam
> Viribus, & verſate diu, quid ferre recuſent,
> Quid valeant humeri.

The chief thing he ſhould have done, was to examin his Conſcience, but in all probability 'twas what he neglected moſt; He did not think of ſounding his Heart, and asking himſelf very ſeriouſly, can I publiſh ſuch Truths as are diſadvantageous to the Catholicks, and advantageous to the Huguenots? They hate me, and I hate them; they have abus'd me, and I have abus'd them. I have publiſh'd ſome Controverſial Books, which they have refuted, and I have replied; can I be ſure that I ſhall not be overcome in the leaſt by Paſſion, Zeal and Reſentment, and that I ſhall never tell a Lie in favour of my Cauſe? They, who have read his Hiſtory with ſome attention, may ſay without any Raſhneſs, that he did not conſult himſelf about thoſe things, or that he did not follow the dictates of his Conſcience. He repreſents the Proteſtants as guilty of all ſorts of Injuſtices, and the Catholicks as very wiſe and innocent Men; and he ſeldom relates any thing without uſing injurious Epithets, and outrageous Words againſt the Hereticks. His Quotations ſignify but little; for he alledges either Men of his Party, and who, moſt of 'em, had ſome Diſputes with the Miniſters, or ſome Proteſtants, as he found them quoted in the Writings of thoſe Men. Such an Hiſtorian muſt neceſſarily be a Slave to Pious Frauds, or deluded by himſelf, and conſequently the unfitteſt Man in the World to write the Hiſtory of the beginning and growth of the Proteſtant Religion, and the fitteſt to tranſgreſs againſt the two (g) great Laws of his Profeſſion; for there are ſome Falſities he does not ſcruple to publiſh, and there are ſome Truths he dares not publiſh. An Hiſtorian, who deſigns to write ſuch a Hiſtory, ſhould be told, as Phaeton was,

> Magna (h) petis, Phaëton, & quæ non viribus iſtis > Munera conveniunt, nec tam puerilibus annis.

I know ſome Perſons, who could wiſh we had ſome Hiſtories of that important Revolution written neither by a Roman Catholick, nor by a Proteſtant. They fancy that Intereſt, Zeal and Hatred ingage a Writer to exaggerate, or to ſuppreſs, to extenuate, or to diſguiſe things according as they may ſerve, or prejudice the Honour of his Party. They wiſh therefore, that Thucydides, or Livy, might have given us the Hiſtory of the Events, which Florimond de Remond promiſes us in the Title of his Work. They wiſh thoſe Illuſtrious Authors might have done it, not ſo much by reaſon of their Eloquence and great Judgment, as becauſe they were Heathens, and might have been Neuters between the ſeveral Sects of Chriſtianity; ſo that they would have related without any Prejudice and Impartiality, what was to be praiſed or blamed in the Conduct of the Papiſts, Lutherans and Calviniſts. But I don't know whether they might have kept an exact Neutrality; for Popery being more agreeable to Paganiſm than the Proteſtant Religion, they might have been prepoſſeſs'd againſt Luther and Calvin. An Hiſtorian can never ſtand too much upon his guard; and 'tis almoſt impoſſible for him to be altogether free from Prejudices. There are ſome Forms of Government, and ſome Moral and Political Maxims, which he likes or diſlikes. This moves him to favour one Party rather than another, even when he writes the Hiſtory of an Ancient Nation, or of a remote Country. Suppoſe a Man writes in our Days the Hiſtory of an Indian King, who died two or three hundred Years ago, after he had been dethron'd, you'll be apt to believe that no Intereſt can hinder him from being a ſincere Writer; and yet if he is an Enemy to Monarchy, and approves the Rebellion of Subjects, he'll uſe a thouſand ſhifts and diſguiſes to render the Memory of that Monarch odious, and to juſtify the Civil Wars which pull'd him down from the Throne. An Hiſtorian, who is an Enemy to Rebellion, would take a quite contrary courſe. Which is the reaſon why there are ſo few Hiſtories wherein the naked Truth appears, and that are free from ſome Marks of the Hiſtorian's Anger or Diſcontent, or from his Satyrical Strokes againſt ſome living Perſons. He meets with them in his way, whilſt he writes the Hiſtory of the Indies. All Readers cannot gueſs whom he means; but ſome gueſs at it, and he knows very well that ſome will. You may judge whether we can truſt the Modern Hiſtorians, ſince Livy himſelf could not be altogether impartial between the Proteſtants and the Catholicks, by reaſon of a certain general Conformity. The beſt Advice that could have been given to Florimond de Remond, had been Qualifications requiſite for a good Hiſtorian.

(a) [illegible] Vignier, [illegible]

(b) Rivet, [illegible]

(c) Matthieu [illegible] Henry IV. [illegible]

(d) John Bapt. de Rocoles, [illegible] Calviniſme pag. 285.

(e) See St. Luke's Goſpel chap. 14 v. 28.

(f) Horat. de arte Poet. v. 38.

(g) Quis neſcit primam eſſe hiſtoriæ legem, ne quid falſi dicere audeat, deinde ne quid veri non audeat, ne qua ſuſpicio gratiæ ſit in ſcribendo, ne qua ſimultatis? Cicero de orat. lib. 2. fol. m. 74. A.

(h) Ovidius Metam. lib. 2. v. 54.

dertaking, conſidering the Hatred he had conceived againſt the Party wherein he had been brought up, which a Miracle, as he pretended, had obliged him to forſake. But that Hiſtory, tho' never ſo bad, has been quoted by a great many other Writers, and 'tis a ſurpriſing thing to find in many Books ſeveral Matters of Fact very conſiderable and of great Conſequence, for which the Reader is referr'd not to any Authentick Pieces, but to Remond's Teſtimony. Some ſay he did very ill diſcharge the Duties (E) of his Office in the Parliament of Bourdeaux. The Proteſtants taxed him * with a very great partiality againſt them. Varillas was a little mortified (F) when he was oblig'd to confeſs he had tranſcribed that Author.

* See the Remark E.

R E-

to tell him that he ſhould continue to write Controverſial Books, wherein an Author may be allow'd to appear Paſſionate; and not to ſet up for an Hiſtorian, it being an Employment that does not agree with a zealous Catholick, and which he ſhould have left to lukewarm and indifferent Men. I am likewiſe of Opinion, that a zealous Huguenot ſhould be adviſ'd not to write the Hiſtory of Calviniſm, or Lutheraniſm, or that of the Edict of Nantes, or any ſuch like. They ſhou'd tell him, You are exaſperated, you have conceiv'd a great hatred againſt the Perſecutors, you are full of an ardent Zeal for your Cauſe, you would give us not a Hiſtory, but a piece like an Advocate's Plea; you would only blame the contrary Party, and praiſe or juſtify yours; this you could not do without omitting ſeveral things, and publiſhing many Falſities. Write therefore ſome other Book, if you deſign to do ſomething that way for the publick good.

But here is a new Reaſon why ſo few Men can write a good Hiſtory. They who are able to overcome all Prejudices, could not appear altogether impartial without expoſing themſelves to the Indignation of the People; (the word People has a large Extent, and takes in a great many Perſons that are Graduate and have Titles of Honour) they would be look'd upon as falſe Brethren, Prevaricators, and perfidious Men. Was not la Popelinere like to be cruſh'd to pieces, for having related ſome things in his Hiſtory of the Troubles under Charles IX. otherwiſe than he ſhould have done in the Opinion of many? I ſhall ſpeak of it in his Article in the Supplement to this Dictionary. Several People could wiſh that an Hiſtorian of their Party would imitate thoſe that play at Picket, who keep only good Cards, and lay out the bad ones.

Why I ſaid that Probity ought to be an Ingredient of the Character of an Hiſtorian.

Perhaps ſome will wonder that I ſhould aſſert that an upright Conſcience, and a perfect Probity, are neceſſary to an Hiſtorian, and it will be ſaid that an ingenious Man may write a good Hiſtory as well as a good Speech, and a good Tragedy, without thoſe Qualifications; I ſhall therefore prove my Aſſertion: In order to it, I obſerve that Truth being the Soul of Hiſtory, it is an eſſential thing for an hiſtorical Compoſition to be free from Lies; ſo that though it ſhould have all other Perfections, it will not be a Hiſtory, but a meer Fable and Romance, if it wants Truth. It is not ſo with a Poetical or Rhetorical Piece. From whence I conclude, that none can be well qualified to write a good Hiſtory, unleſs he be ſuch an Enemy to Lying, that his Conſcience does not permit him to tell Lies even to the Advantage of his Religion, and deareſt Friends, nor to the Diſadvantage of an impious Sect, and of his moſt implacable Perſecutors. I underſtand by Lying, not only the Invention of a falſe Thing, but alſo the Suppreſſion or Addition of certain Circumſtances, that may ſerve to juſtifie others, or to lay ſomething to their Charge. Thoſe, who have not ſuch an upright Conſcience, and ſuch a Probity, will be guilty of a Fraud in writing Hiſtories, ſometimes to pleaſe thoſe from whom they expect good Offices, and ſometimes for fear of diſobliging ſome Perſons, who might hinder 'em from obtaining Penſions. What has been ſaid of the Orator, is ſtill more neceſſary to an Hiſtorian: He ought to be defined, Vir bonus narrandi peritus, an honeſt Man, who knows how to relate things. And yet you ſhall ſeldom ſee any Body inquire, whether the Author of an Hiſtory is a good Man. The uſual Queſtion is, Whether he be a Man of Wit and Judgment? Whether he has a fine Style? Whether he pleaſes the Reader? And according as the Anſwer is, People will either buy his Book or not buy it. They ſhould at leaſt imitate thoſe, who in their Enquiries about the Character of Witneſſes, begun with their Riches, and (a) ended with their Honeſty.

Protinus (b) ad cenſum, de moribus ultima fiet
Quæſtio: quot paſcit ſervos, quot poſſidet agri
Jugera, quam multa magnaque paropſide cœnat?

They ſhould at laſt inquire whether the Author is an honeſt Man. Mr.  begins with ſuch a Queſtion, when they ſhew him in a Bookſeller's Shop the Relation of a Voyage, the Memoirs of ſuch a one, &c. Here's a Book, ſay they to him, very well written, very curious, and that ſells well. But, ſays he, do you know the Author of it? Is he a vain and ambitious Man? Does he love Pleaſure? Could he appear in a good Dreſs, without getting three or four hundred Crowns from the Bookſeller that he made uſe of? I ſhould be glad to know that before all things; for the Writer of a Relation, if he be a vain Man, and deſigns to be well paid for his Copy, will not ſcruple to ſtuffer into it all the Lies that may pleaſe the Reader, and ſet off the Author.

(E) That he diſcharged very ill the Duties of his Office.] Conſult Dr. Burnet in his Defence of the Reflections on Varillas, where you will find theſe words: (c) Florimond de Remond was as little eſteem'd in the Quality of a Judge, as he deſerves to be for his Writings; for the Character that was given of him, was no leſs ſevere than pleaſant: Judicat ſine conſcientia, libros ſcribit ſine ſcientia, & ædificat ſine pecunia: He judges without Conſcience, he writes Books without Knowledge, and builds without Mony. If you read the laſt Pages of the French Edition, you'll find an Extract of a Letter with a Preamble, that deſerve to be tranſcribed. Here they are: (d) So many Complaints were made about his Malignity and Injuſtice towards the Proteſtants, in his Life-time, that no Credit can be given to his Teſtimony againſt 'em. 'Tis an eaſie thing for an unjuſt Judge to become a paſſionate Hiſtorian; nay, one muſt be more hard-hearted to commit an injuſtice as a Judge, than to write a Falſhood as an Hiſtorian. But here is the Extract I have mention'd. "There is a Book "intituled, Plaintes des Egliſes Réformées au Roi, ſur "pluſieurs injuſtices qui leur ſont faites. It was printed "in 1597, without the Author's Name. They complain, "among others, of Florimond de Raymond, who, during "the Troubles of 1572, having been taken in a Journey "by a Party of the Proteſtants, who made him pay a "Ranſom of 1000 Livres, never loſt any occaſion to get "himſelf reimburſed, and had that Sum paid him ten or "twelve times, as he himſelf boaſted of it. Afterwards, "being appointed to report the Caſe of a Proteſtant Widow, whoſe Husband has been kill'd in cold Blood by a "Roman Catholick, he helped him to make his Eſcape, ſo "that the Murtherer remain'd unpuniſh'd. We find alſo "at the latter end of the ſame Book, that a Proteſtant "Maid having been buried in the Churchyard of the Catholicks at Bourdeaux, there came out a Decree, at Re- "mond's Sollicitation, by which it was order'd, that the "Body of that Maid ſhould be taken up, and denied Burial, together with all the Bodies of the Proteſtants that "had been buried there for the ſpace of ten Years †."

(F) Mr. Varillas was a little mortified, when he was obliged to confeſs that he had tranſcribed that Author.] Dr. Burnet (e) criticis'd him for having denied that the Marriage of the (f) Prince of Wales with the Infanta of Spain had been conſummated, and repreſented to him, that he had writ a little more artificially, if he had ſet over againſt this, on the Margent, ſome Citations of a Letter, or Recital, which would have coſt him nothing, and have been full as true as his other Citations are. His Anſwer contains this among other things, (g) that ſuppoſing he had poſitively affirm'd that that Marriage was not conſummated, it would not be a Fiction of his own, and that he could alledge a good Authority for it, meaning Florimond de Remond. He declares, that conſidering how partially the Engliſh, German, Italian, and Spaniſh Writers had writ about the Schiſm of Henry VIII. he had been (h) obliged to pitch upon a French Author, and that he caſt his Eyes upon Florimond de Raimond. He was Counſellor in the Parliament of Bourdeaux; he had a Wife and Children; he had no particular Reaſon to alter the Truth: The Calviniſts were in his time in the heighth of their Power; he had no occaſion to be diſpleaſed with them; and he ſpent ſo much time upon his Hiſtory of the Birth, Progreſs, and Declenſion of Hereſie, that he died before it was made

(a) It is commonly ſaid, to denote a covetous Age, that a Father, who deſigns to marry his Son, inquires firſt whether ſuch a Maid is rich, whether ſhe is handſome, and at laſt whether ſhe is honeſt.

(b) Juven. ſat. 3. v. 140.

RESENIUS (PETER) Counſellor and Profeſſor at Copenhagen, was born there the 17th of June, 1625. His Father, and his two Grand-fathers had been Biſhops of Sealand. He was made Sub-principal of the College of Copenhagen in 1646; and having reſigned that Employment the Year following, he travell'd into foreign Countries. He ſtudied Philological Learning and the Civil Law, for the ſpace of four Years, in the Univerſity of Leyden, and then he went into France, Spain and Italy. He was a whole Year at Padua, where he applied himſelf chiefly to the Study of the Civil Law. He was elected Counſellor of the Germanick Nation there, and Vice-Syndic of the Univerſity, and in that quality he made a harangue in the Senate of Venice, and obtain'd a Privilege for that Univerſity. 'Twas only long of him that he was not made a Knight of St. Mark. He left Padua after he had taken his Degree of Doctor of Law the 11th of September, 1653. He return'd into Denmark by the way of Germany, and married the 8th of July, 1655. He was made Profeſſor of Moral Philoſophy, in the Univerſity of Copenhagen the 15th of November, 1657, and then Conſul of the ſame City, and Counſellor in the Supreme Council, and at laſt Preſident of Copenhagen, and Counſellor of Juſtice. He had a Grant of Nobility the 8th of January, 1680, and was made Counſellor of State the 6th of May, 1684. He had a very fine Library, which he beſtowed upon the Univerſity of Copenhagen: The Catalogue of it was printed * in 1685. He publiſh'd alſo (Z) many Books.

REVEREND-DE-BOUGY (JOHN) Marquis de Bougy, and Lieutenant-General in the French Armies, under the Reign of Lewis the XIVth, diſtinguiſh'd himſelf upon many Occaſions by his great Courage and Ability, and by a conſtant Adherence to the Service of his King, when ſo many others join'd with the Rebels in the † laſt Civil War. He was a Proteſtant, and of an β ancient and noble Family in the lower Normandy, and the γ youngeſt

* At Copenhagen in 4to.

† Taken from the Journal of his Life, written by himſelf and prefixed to the Catalogue of his Library.

β In 1649, and the following Years.

γ A Memorial imparted to the Author.

made publick. His Children took care to get it printed: it met with a very good reception; there have been ſeveral Editions of it, and ſince not one Proteſtant has undertaken to confute it within theſe fourſcore Years, no more than the Books concerning Antichriſt and Pope Joan, written by the ſame Author; I had ſome reaſon to believe that if they did not approve of it, it was at leaſt indifferent to them. Dr. Burnet did eaſily run down the Authority of ſuch a Voucher: He (a) ſhewed that Florimond de Remond lived far from England, and from the knowledge of Engliſh Affairs, and (b) that a Man ſees in every period of his Hiſtory, ſo much of a malignant Spirit againſt the Reformation, that this gives a juſt Prejudice againſt all that he ſays . . . . . . and beſides, that that part of his Hiſtory, which relates to the Affairs of England, is not ſo much as pretended to be writ by him: For the contrary is expreſly intimated in the Preface, and his Son ſeems to claim the praiſe of that to himſelf. Nay, it is very much doubted whether he was at all the Author of thoſe Books that paſſed under his Name; for many have aſcribed them to Father Richeome. He adds, (c) that Florimond de Remond never paſs'd in France for an Author of any Note, either for Judgment or Sincerity; and that he was accounted an unjuſt Judge. The Doctor goes on, and ſays, Mr. Varillas, who, perhaps a Year ago, would have reſented it, as the greateſt Indignity that could have been done him, if it had been ſaid that he did nothing but copy ſuch an Author, and that he was only his Eccho, is now glad to fly to ſo poor a Shift; for which he is, as I hear, ſo much cenſured in Paris, that it is perhaps too great a Cruelty in me to urge this Matter too far. He jeers him for having obſerved that Remond had a Wife and Children. It is not eaſy, ſays the Doctor *, to find out the Force of this Argument: but a Man muſt riſe above the Vulgar, as much as Mr. Varillas, to comprehend his lofty Strains. If to have Wife and Children makes a Man a good Writer, one may conclude without any further Inquiry, that Mr. Varillas has neither. Here is alſo a new Argument for the Marriage of the Clergy, that has never been yet thought on; yet an ordinary Capacity cannot comprehend why this ſhould have made Florimond de Remond a good Writer, and why it had not the ſame Effect on Mr. de Thou. At the end of the French Edition this Critick tells him † that the Proteſtants publiſh'd their Complaints againſt the furious Animoſity which Remond expreſs'd againſt them: This was ſufficient to prepoſſeſs him when he went about to write their Hiſtory; but beſides, he had not forgot that he had been their Priſoner, and ranſom'd by them. Is it not therefore a ſhameful thing for Varillas to maintain that he had no occaſion to be diſpleaſed with them? But if any Hiſtorian ſhould bluſh to alledge the only Authority of ſuch a Voucher as Remond, in giving an account of the Schiſm of England; it is a moſt ſhameful thing for Varillas to do ſo, ſince he ſet up for a Writer, well furniſh'd with rare, authentick, private, and unknown Manuſcripts.

I muſt obſerve that there is a Falſity in Varillas, that was not taken notice of. He pretends that the Books concerning Antichriſt and Pope Joan, written by Florimond de Remond, have not been refuted. If he had caſt his Eyes upon the Title Page of the (d) Theatre de l'Antechriſt, and upon Alexander Cooke's (e) Dialogue, he might have ſeen the contrary. I muſt alſo obſerve that the Reaſon he alledges, grounded upon his Hiſtorian being a married Man, is not a contemptible one; for it is more natural to believe that a Layman was free from Prejudices in writing the Hiſtory of the Enemies of his Church, than 'tis natural to expect ſuch a thing from a Clergy-man. And therefore Varillas might be perſuaded that Florimond de Remond was leſs to be ſuſpected than a Monk, or a Prieſt. I confeſs this Reaſon is as good for Thuanus; but ſince he writ nothing about Henry the VIII's Schiſm, how could Varillas make uſe of him? He might therefore have defended himſelf as to this Head.

(Z) He publiſh'd alſo many Books.] Here is the Liſt of 'em, (f) Edda Snorronis Sturleſonii triplici linguâ Iſlandicâ & Latinâ: quarum Iſlandica primitiva eſt, reliqua autem interpretationes. Præfixa etiam prolegomena de triplici ratione docendi Ethicam: Item de Edda Scriptoribus, partibus & aliis ſimilibus. Impreſſum eſt hoc opus in quarta quam appellant forma, Anno M. DC. LXV. Edda Sæmundiana pars dicta HAVAMAAL, complexa Ethicam Odini: eſtque & Iſlandicè & Latinè impreſſa, in quarto, ut vocant, anno M. DC. LV. Edda Sæmundiana VOLUSPA, continens Philoſophiam Danorum, Norvegorumque antiquiſſimam: eſtque impreſſa in quarto, anno M. DC. LXV. item anno M. DC. LXXIII. additis Gudmundi Andreæ Iſlandi annotationibus. Inſcriptiones Havnienſes, Amagrienſes & Uraniburgicæ, Latina, Danica & Germanica; una cum addita narratione de Tychone Braheo diverſiſque ipſius & ſororis ipſius Sophiæ Braheæ epiſtolis, edita in quarto, anno M. DC. LXVIII. Jus aulicum vetus Regum Norvegorum, dictum HIRDSKRAA: Item jus aulicum vetus Regum Danorum dictum VITHERLAGSRET, linguâ triplici, originali Iſlandica, interpretibus Danica, atque Latina, addita quoque annotationes. Impreſſio facta Havniæ anno M. DC. LXXIII. Havniæ delineatio topographica in ære expreſſa, unà cum brevi partium & locorum enarratione, Danicè & Germanicè impreſſa Havniæ, anno M. DC. LXXIV. Samſoæ deſcriptio & delineatio cum figuris. In folio. Havniæ anno M. DC. LXXV. Friderici II. Hiſt. Danicè in fol. cum figuris, Haf. an. M. DC. LXXV. Lexicon Iſlandicum Gudmundi Andreæ Iſlandi, cum præfatione de ejuſdem vita: in forma quarta Havniæ, anno M. DC. LXXXIII. Leges Cimbricæ Valdemari ſecundi Regis Danici, Germanicè, interprete Erico Krabbio, equite Danico. In præfatione addita eſt narratio de ordine equeſtri Dannebrogico: item de novo corpore Juris Danici: nec non de genealogia ejuſdem Erici Krabbii. Havniæ in quarto, anno M. DC. LXXXIV. Leges civiles & eccleſiaſticæ Chriſtiani Secundi in quarto, Havniæ anno M. DC. LXXXIV. Havniæ & Riparum jus urbicum. In 12. Havniæ, eodem anno M. DC. LXXXIV.

(A) He was . . . . of an ancient and noble Family.] He was the Son of Michael REVEREND DE BOUGY, and Grandſon of Olivier REVEREND DE BOUGY, and Great-Grandſon of Michael REVEREND DE-BOUGY. The two latter are mention'd in Mezeray's Hiſtory, as we ſhall ſee by and by. The Printed Books ſay nothing of their Predeceſſors; but the Writings of the Family go higher, though

(a) Burnet, a Defence of the Reflexions, pag. 24.

(b) Ibid. pag. 25, 26.

(c) Ibid. pag. 27.

(*) Ibid. pag. 29.

(d) That [illegible]

(e) It was tranſlated out of Engliſh into French by John de la Montagne.

(f) Vita Reſenii, fol. D ij verſo youngeſt of ſixteen Brothers or Siſters. He got into the Regiment of Guards as a Cadet at twelve Years of Age, and afterwards he raiſed himſelf by degrees; for he was ſucceſſively a Cornet, Captain of the Light-Horſe, Colonel of Horſe ε, &c. He was Cornet of the Gendarmes ζ of Marſhal de Gaſſion, who conceived ſo great (B) an Affection and Eſteem for him, that this very thing is enough to convince us of his Bravery, and other military Virtues. He proved very thankful; for he eſpouſed the Intereſts of that Marſhal ſo zealouſly, that Cardinal Mazarin could never bring him off. His Eminence was very preſſing upon him on that account, when he went to Court in order to mend what the Marſhal's Vivacity and Boldneſs had ſpoiled η. The Cardinal was more ſucceſsful in his Endeavours to gain (C) M. de Bougy after Gaſſion's Death. He perform'd great and important Services during the Civil War, and his good Conduct and Fidelity were ſo well known, that he was θ choſen to Command in chief the Troops that ſhould remain with the King; which he did ſo ſucceſsfully, that after he had beat the Rebels, who undertook to prevent his going over the Loire at la Charité, and being enter'd into Berri, he forc'd their Commander to abandon the City of Bourges, where the King was receiv'd ſoon after. He had before Commanded in Chief at the Siege of Chateau-Portien; which oblig'd the King after the taking of that Place to make him Governor of it . . . . . He ſignaliz'd himſelf by the taking of Mas d'Agenois . . . . . and at the retreat of Saint Andras, and on ſeveral other Occaſions; in one of which, being Lieutenant-General, after he had fought with great Valour to the laſt Extremity, he was taken Priſoner ι in the Year 1653. He was permitted κ to go to Court upon his Parole, and having been exchang'd he return'd into Guienne, where he married in 1654. Mary de la Chauſade de Callonge, a very rich Heireſs, by whom he left (D) but one Son. The Queen-Mother, and Cardinal Mazarin concern'd themſelves very obligingly (E) with that Marriage, and did not forget to mention the good Services (F) of the Lady's Father. He ſerv'd in Catalonia the ſame Year under the Prince of Conti, and the Years following till 1657. when he was oblig'd to ask leave to go to Montpellier, that he might be cured of a Defluxion in his tho' they are ſomewhat imperfect, the Houſe having been plunder'd once, and burnt another time during the Civil Wars of the XVIth Century (a). Mezeray reckons one (b) Bougy among the Lords that join'd at Caen the Duke of Montpenſier, whom Henry III. had ſent into Normandy, to prevent the deſign of the Leaguers upon that Province. This Bougy was the Father of Oliver Reverend-de-Bougy, whom the ſame Hiſtorian mentions in theſe terms: (c) "Caen had been loſt, if the Reſolu-

" tion and good Conduct of Oliver Reverend-de-Bougy,
" a Gentleman of that Country, who happen'd to be
" there, had not put a ſtop to that Irruption. He goes
" courageouſly into the Street, ſends for his Friends, ſtirs
" the Inhabitants, and in the mean time foreſeeing that
" the Enemies intended to ſhut up the Gate of the Bridge,
" he orders immediately one of his Men to go and nail
" a piece of Wood to it. So that whilſt the Enemies
" endeavour to ſhut it, and the more haſte they make,
" the leſs they perceive the hindrance, he arrives there-
" upon with fifteen or twenty Men animated by his Ex" ample. They are ſurpriz'd and troubled at his co" ming; and becauſe they cannot ſhut the Gate cloſe,
" one of thoſe who attended him, call'd la Reviere Re-
" nouf, thruſting himſelf with no leſs Boldneſs than " Courage into the Gap, ſhoots la Motte-Corbiniere in the " Head with a Piſtol, and by his Death cauſes his De" ſign to miſcarry. The Town grew more ſenſible of " the danger they were in, when it was over; and
" the King gave this Character of Bougy, that his Fide" lity, of which he had already many Proofs, had ſaved
" on this occaſion all the Lower Normandy.

(B) The Marſhal de Gaſſion conceiv'd ſo great an Affection and Eſteem for him.] 'Tis well known that he died of the Wound he had receiv'd at the Siege of Lens, as (d) he was ſhaking one of the Stakes of a Palliſado. He received a Muſquet-ſhot in the Head, which threw him down; but he was immediately taken up by his Couſin Gaſſion, and by the Marquiſs de Bougy, the only Perſons who had followed him. They carried him back into the Trenches. He got himſelf carried to Arras. Mr. de Bougy (e) accompanied him thither. The Marſhal gave him his (f) Sword, as he was a dying, telling him that he thought he was the only Man in France beſt qualify'd to wear it after him. The Marſhal's Regiment was divided between his Couſin Mr. de Gaſſion, and the Marquiſs de Bougy.

(C) the Cardinal was more ſucceſsful in his Endeavours to gain Mr. de Bougy.] Having ſent for him to Court, as ſoon as he heard of the Marſhal's Death, he told him: I offer you a Friend in the room of him, whom you have loſt: I have been ſo well pleaſed with your conſtant Fidelity to that Marſhal, that I deſire you would ſhew the ſame to me, and I engage to be your Friend. Mr. de Bougy return'd ſuch an Anſwer as the Cardinal deſir'd, and proved ſo faithful to him, that when his Eminence went out of France, he accompanied him to the Frontiers. I'll come again, and I'll make your Fortune, ſaid the Cardinal to him; but when he return'd, he told him that his being a Proteſtant was an Obſtacle to it (g).

(D) By whom he left but one Son.] To wit, John James REVEREND-DE-BOUGY, who was born in 1655. and commanded nine Years the Regiment Colonel. He left the Service on account of his Religion, and retir'd into Holland. He lives at the Hague, where he is very much conſider'd, and indeed he deſerves it. He loſt his only Son ſince he came from France. He has only two Daughters left by Elizabeth de Bar de Camparnau, whom he married in 1674. She is deſcended by the Mother's ſide from that famous Reniers, whoſe Quarrel with Veiſins was attended with very remarkable Circumſtances. They are to be found in Thuanus (h) and Mezerai (i). This laſt Hiſtorian obſerves that he was Lieutenant of the Princes in Querci. The Family of Bar de Camparnau is a very noble one. It is mention'd in ſeveral Books, eſpecially in the Hiſtory of the Siege of Montauban (k).

(E) The Queen-Mother and Cardinal Mazarin concern'd themſelves very obligingly with that Marriage.] The Marquiſs de Bougy was the Bearer of a Letter, which that Queen writ to Mademoiſelle de Callonge, to deſire her to receive him as one that came from her. She added, the Services of your deceaſed Father engage me to ſee you ſettled: I don't think that I can help you to a better Match (l).

(F) The good Services of the Lady's Father.] It was James de la Chauſade Baron de Callonge. He had been Governor of Montpellier during the Wars of the Duke of Rohan, to whom he was nearly related. 'Twas he, who ſpoke in the Name of the Reformed, when the Peace was concluded before Montpellier. See du Pleix's Hiſtory, Girard in his Life of the Duke of Epernon, Baſſompierre's Memoirs, the Life of the Duke of Montmorenci, and ſeveral other Authors. The King's Patent for erecting the Barony of Callonge into a Marquiſate, imports, that this James de la Chauſade had been Colonel of a Regiment of Foot for the King's Service in Holland, that he had made himſelf conſiderable by his Valour and Experience in Military Affairs, and by many glorious Actions, eſpecially at the time of the Commotions in Guienne, under the Duke of Epernon's Government, during which he brought to that Duke at two ſeveral times conſiderable Succours of Gentlemen Volunteers, which did not a little contribute to keep up his Majeſty's Authority, and to curb the Factions; that at the Battel of Avein he took the Enemy's Cannon, after he had broke through and routed them with his Regiment, conſiſting of twenty Companies, and that leſt his Glory ſhould be confin'd within the Frontiers of this Kingdom, he follow'd the Duke of Candale into Turkey to fight the Enemies of the Chriſtian Name, where he blew up the Gate of Agliman with a Petard, and was one of the firſt who enter'd that Place Sword in Hand, after having ſignaliz'd himſelf on ſeveral ε ibid.

ζ ibid.

η ibid.

θ The King's Patent for the erection of the Marquiſate of Bougy.

ι ibid.

κ Imparted Memorial.

(a) Memorial imparted to me.

(b) Mezerai, hiſt. de France tom. 3. pag. 776. édit. 1685.

(c) Id. ib. in the Life of Henry IV. pag. 1097, 1098.

(d) The Abbot de Pure, vie du Marechal de Gaſſion, tom. 4. pag. 309. ad ann. 1647.

(e) The ſame Memorial.

(f) It is kept in the Family to this Day.

(g) ibid.

(h) Tuan. lib. 75. pag. 107 ad ann. 1572.

(i) Mez ubi ſupra pag. 259.

(k) [illegible] parted Memorial.

(l) ibid.

his Breaſt. He got that Illneſs for having been a whole Night upon the Hills, where he was cover'd with Snow in his Sleep. He found no eaſe at Montpellier, and finding none neither at Bourdeaux, he went to his Country-Seat at Callonge, where he died in the Year 1658, being 40 Years of Age. He was regretted by every body. The King, the Queen and Cardinal Mazarin did his Widow the Honour to write to her ſome Letters of Conſolation. He would have made a greater Fortune, if he had been a Roman Catholick: He received ſeveral Letters from the Queen, and from the Cardinal, wherein they exhorted him to change his Religion, and to remove by that Means a great Obſtacle to his Advancement: They offer'd him a Marſhal's Staff, and a Government that would be left to his choice, provided he would be a Convert. His Anſwer was, That if he could reſolve to betray his God for a Marſhal's Staff, he might betray his King for a leſſer advantage, and that he could do neither of 'em, being contented to ſee that his Services were acceptable, and that his Religion was the only Reaſon why he was not rewarded for them *. The King had erected the Lordſhip of Bougy, ſituated in the Lower Normandy, into a Marquiſate; but becauſe it is held of ſeveral Lords, ſo many Oppoſitions were form'd againſt the regiſtring of the Letters Patents, that they prov'd ineffectual: Which was the Reaſon why that Erection was transferr'd to the Barony of Callonge; which depends immediately on the King. The Patent was drawn up in November, 1667, and regiſtred in the Chamber of Account the 9th of September, 1669. I have read it, and I found in it a large Accounts of the Services which the Marquis de Bougy did to the King. They conſiſted not only in warlike Actions, but alſo † in Negotiations. You'll find here ſome (G) of the moſt glorious Paſſages of his Life. He received among other Wounds five Musket-ſhots.

REZ (ANTONY DE) Eſq; Advocate in the Parliament of Paris, was the Son of Antony de REZ, Counſellor-Secretary to the King, and was born at Paris in the Year 1630. His Merit will beſt appear by two Elogies that have been γ ſent to me. I make no doubt that all diſcerning Men will own they are ſo well written, that they may ſerve as a Model. The firſt is larger (A) and contains more Particulars. The ſecond is a Piece of great weight; for ral other Occaſions (a). Mademoiſelle de Callonge, his other Daughter, died at the Hague ſome (b) Months ago, in a very far advanc'd Age. She had never been married. She was a Perſon of an exemplary Piety and Virtue, and underſtood Hebrew (c) very well: She came out of France on account of her Religion when the Edict of Nantes was revok'd. Mezerai (d) mentions one Callonge among the Proteſtant Lords of the Province of Guienne, who took up Arms in Charles the IXth's Reign.

(G) Some of the moſt glorious Paſſages of his Life.] At the Battel of Rocroi he commanded the Company of Gaſſion's Gendarmes, and tho' he had a Foot bruiſed with a Musket-ſhot, he broke through a Battalion of the Enemies, where his Horſe was killed under him with ſeveral thruſts of Pikes and Swords (e). They are the very words of the King's Patent above-mentioned. In the Year 1650. He threw himſelf into the Town of Saint Quintin with 500 Horſe, and by that means broke the Spaniards deſign upon that Place, which was in great Danger. Afterwards, when they beſieged the Town of Guiſe, the Advice he gave to place 1200 Musketeers in the Wood, to cut off the Paſſage of the Proviſions for the Beſieged, and the great Ability wherewith he himſelf executed that Enterprize, was one of the Cauſes why that Siege was rais'd (f). The Court having reſolv'd to quit Paris in 1651. when the Prince of Condé had diſcover'd his ill Deſigns, the Queen ſent immediately for Mr. de Bougy, who was in Flanders, and when ſhe ſaw him come into her Chamber with his Boots on, ſhe cry'd out, Here's Bougy, my Fear is over; and then ſhe told him, that ſhe had ſent for him to intruſt him with the King's Perſon, and herſelf. Accordingly he carried them to Fontainebleau. Take notice that he was then but a Marechal de Camp, and that there were many Officers at Court in higher Stations; (g) but the Queen did not truſt every body, or rather ſhe miſtruſted almoſt every body. Mr. de Bougy (h) at his ſetting out from Flanders had order'd a Detachment of Horſe to follow him, and then went Poſt. As ſoon as he had conducted the Court to Fontainebleau, he was inform'd, that the Prince's Troops were marching towards Gien, to poſſeſs themſelves of it. Whereupon he diſpatch'd a Courier to the Torops of Flanders, who had been order'd to follow him, and deſired them to make all the haſte they poſſibly could. The Courier met them as they were taking their Quarters. After they had ſeen the Order, they only baited, and then continued their March. They were no ſooner arrived, but Mr. de Bougy put himſelf at the Head of 'em, and being entered into Gien, he order'd the Gate on the ſide of the Prince's Troops to be open'd, and charged them ſo briſkly, that he routed them, and took three General Officers Priſoners. As he was purſuing the flying Enemy, he perceiv'd a young Boy frighted, and ask'd him what was his Name; and being told that he was the Son of one of the chief Magiſtrates of Bourges, Will you, ſaid he to him, carry a Letter to your Father; the Queen looks upon him as one of her moſt faithful Servants. The Boy promis'd to deliver it, and immediately Mr. de Bougy acquainted that Magiſtrate that he had juſt now beat the Prince's Troops, and was marching to Bourges. In the mean while the Prince of Conti had got into that Town, and aſſembled the Magiſtrates to oblige them to declare for him. The young Boy arrives, the Prince of Conti laughs at the Letter, and takes it for a Stratagem, and ſteps into another Room, to draw up the Anſwer he would have them return to Mr. de Bougy's Letter. Whilſt he was writing it, ſome wounded Soldiers arrive, who confirm the Truth of that News; whereupon the Magiſtrates declar'd to him that he muſt retire; and that they will remain faithful (i). The Prince (k) retired to Mouron, and from thence into Guienne. Mr. de Bougy was order'd to purſue him under the Conduct of the Count de Harcourt, who having permitted him to go with 500 Horſe over the River Né in Saintonge, and over a very large and dangerous Moraſs, behind which the Rebellious Troops lay to the number of 4000 Horſe, and 500 Foot, he took two of their beſt Quarters, and brought with him near 500 Troopers or Officers. At the Siege of Capdequiers, in Catalonia where he was Lieutenant-General, the Troops that gave the Aſſault, having been repulſed from the Breach, he took a Halberd from a Serjeant, mounted the Breach firſt, and animated the Soldiers by his example. He was wounded there with a Musket-Shot, and notwithſtanding his Wound he held out 'till the Town was taken. He had the Government of it given him, tho' ſuch a way of rewarding Huguenot Officers was not in Faſhion at that time (l).

(A) The firſt is larger, and contains more particulars.] Here it is ſuch as it came to my Hands; I thought I could neither alter nor curtail it without ſpoiling it. "Antony de Rez betook himſelf to the Bar from his "younger Years, and pleaded his firſt Cauſe at ſixteen "Years of Age. After he had been ſome time in the "inferior Courts to learn the way of proceeding, he "appear'd in the Parliament with great Glory, being "ſtill very young. He ſoon diſcover'd all the Noble "Talents, whereby he was ſo glorioſly diſtinguiſh'd "afterwards; a ready, quick and penetrating Wit; a "noble, plain and natural Eloquence; a polite and charming "Delivery; a Ciceronian Jeſting; a certain way of "inſinuating himſelf, which gain'd him the Love of "every Body; a Sincerity which appear'd in his Look, "and in all the Features of his Face; a probity, that "was proof againſt the moſt tempting Briberies; an "agreeable and ſolid Erudition grounded upon Reaſon, "Juſtice and Humanity, more than upon Books; in a "Word, all the fine qualities of an honeſt and great Man. "All ſorts of People reſorted to him; the Men of Quality "were pleas'd with his good Mien, Affability and "Gentleman-like Behaviour: Thoſe of the meaner ſort "were for it is taken from a Speech (B) spoken in the Parliament of Paris by an Advocate General.

---

* Taken from the above-mention'd Memorial.

† Here are the Words of the Patent. During all that time, having as great an Opinion of his Prudence, as of his Valour, we imploy'd him likewise in several important Negotiations, particularly with the Duke of Modena, when he declared for us, and join'd his Army with ours in 1648.

‖ The Patent for the Erection.

γ By Mr. Marais Advocate in the Parliament of Paris.

(i) Taken from the ſaid Memorial.

(k) Letters Patents.

(l) From the ſaid Memorial.

RHODOMAN (LAURENCE), was born in the Year 1546, in the Village of * Sassowerf belonging to the Counts of Stolberg in the Upper Saxony. Those Counts perceiving in him a great Disposition for Learning, maintain'd him in † the College of Ilfeld. He was there six Years, and made so great a Progress under Michael Neander ‖, that he appear'd afterwards well qualified to be the chief Teacher in the best (A) Colleges, and in some famous Universities. He distinguish'd himself particularly by his great Skill in the Greek Tongue. The best Judges ¶ admired his Greek Verses. Scaliger did not (B) like his Latin Poetry. He succeeded very well in his Latin Translation of Diodorus Siculus. At last he was made Professor of History in the University of Wittemberg, where he died the 8th of January, 1606. You'll find here the Catalogue of his (C) best Works. He obtain'd the Honour of Poet Laureate. Nicolas RHODOMAN, § his Son, has publish'd something.

RHO.

* Rhodomannus, Epist. dedicat. Quinti Smyrnæi. Quenstedt de patr. illustr. pag. 319.

† These Ancestors had founded it in the Monastery of that Name by the Advice of Luther and Melanchthon. See the Epistle Dedicatory prefix'd to the Quintus Calaber of Rhodoman.

‖ See the same Epistle Dedicatory, and the Preface to his Translation of Diodorus Siculus.

¶ See the Remark B.

§ Konig. Biblioth. pag. 689.

“were also desirous to have him for their Advocate, because they knew he was a Man of Honour, obliging, and ready to hear every body. He discharg'd his Duty most faithfully, and with the greatest exactness, even in the least things. The Magistrates of all Ranks, being persuaded that nothing but Truth could come out of his Mouth, heard him with Pleasure, lov'd to see him, and honour'd him with a particular Affection. Tho' he was full of Business, his great Order enabled him to go through it. He was concern'd in most considerable Causes; he defended most eloquently that of the Princes of Lorrain, relating to the Donation of Mademoiselle de Guise, and afterwards he maintain'd the Validity of her last Will. All his Combats were attended with so many Victories, if a Client wanted an Advocate, the Court nominated him by a superior Order, and intrusted him with such Causes as were given over. The great Affairs increas'd, and became easy in his Hands, the most knotty Difficulties vanish'd away as soon as he handled them, and the Judges, being put in a safe way by him, gave their Judgment without any fear of being mistaken. We have seen what he was at the Bar: He was yet more amiable in Conversation. There was never a more affectionate, sincere, and officious Friend, a better Father, and a better Husband. He lived an innocent and virtuous Life, attended with briskness and gayety: His Wit supplied him immediately with a thousand ingenious Inventions to divert himself after his great labours: He was never weary of himself, and those, who happen'd to be with him, were never weary of his Company: He was that universal Man, whom Mr. Pelisson describes to us in his Preface to Sarrazin, an excellent Orator of the Bar, a judicious Chamber-Counsellor, a kind Father and a kind Husband in his Family, a pleasant and useful Friend: In short, he was adorn'd with all the natural and acquir'd Knowledge, that can satisfie the Mind of Man. He wanted only to live longer: but he died of a malignant Fever, in the middle of a most glorious Career, being forty three Years of Age, the 7th of February, 1694. after a Sickness that lasted seven Days. He left two Children, a Son and a Daughter, by Magdalen du Four his Wife.”

(B) The second Elogy . . . . . is taken from a Speech spoken in the Parliament of Paris.] Here is the continuation of the Words you have read in the foregoing Remark: “M. de Harlay, who was then Advocate-General, and Spokesman at the opening of the Parliament in the same Year, did remember him ten Months after his Death, and proposed him as a model to all his Brethren in these Words very glorious to his Memory. (a) To moderate the true Liberty of your Profession we must tell you again, that it is not an easie undertaking, and a thing that requires no great Labour: it is the fruit of a continual Study, or rather of a continual Attention upon our selves, and of an exact practice of many Virtues. Thus one of your Brethren, whom an untimely Death has lately taken away from us, acquired the Esteem of the Publick, and the love of all those who knew him, and attain'd in an Age not far advanced to the Reputation and Practice of the most consummate Advocates. Adorn'd with those outward Advantages, which none but Nature can give, he shewed in his Countenance the Character of Probity and Modesty, which appear'd in his whole Conduct. You have seen him from his first beginning bear gloriously the weight of the greatest Actions, and defend the most difficult Causes with no less Politeness than Sobriety. Attentive to all his Duties, zealous for his Clients, civil to his Brethren, respectful to the Magistrates, he made it appear by signal Proofs, that if sometimes the Necessity of your Ministry, or the express Orders of your Superiors, oblige you to speak for Imposture and Calumny, you may be the Defenders of a Crime without acting against your Honour and your Conscience, and even use the hardest words, without transgressing the most exact Rules of Decorum and Civility. But 'tis not enough to pay outwardly this melancholy Duty to his Memory, nor to hear with pleasure the Praises he so justly deserves; his Example ought to excite you to imitate his Virtues, and to lay upon us by your Conduct a continual Obligation to spend these solemn Days in publishing your Praises, without being forced to censure any faults contrary to the Duties of your Profession, and which are so rare among you to our great Satisfaction.

(a) Discours prononcé à la S. Martin 1694. sur la liberté.

(A) To be the chief Teachers in the best Colleges, and &c.] Here is what he himself says: (b) Itaque in his, cum Dei benedictione, progressus feci, ut nobilium inde puerorum & illustriss. principum informationi neque inutiliter neque infructuose applicarer; Scholarum etiam bene constitutarum administrationi debine præficerer. The Places, where he taught, are mention'd in his Funeral Programma; (c) Docuit Walcenrodi, docuit Ienæ, docuit Stralesundi, docuit denique Wittebergæ, atque ita docuit ut eruditione, sedulitate ac dexteritate secundus haberi nemini debeat. He was Professor of the Greek Tongue at Jena, for the space of seven Years, and Professor of History at Wittemberg, for the space of four Years (d).

(B) Scaliger did not like his Latin Poetry.] He spoke the following Words in Conversation: (e) Rhodomannus doctissimus in Poësi Græca, sed in Latina imperitus & infelix. . . . . Bonum Diodorum Siculum edidit; a pretty Man, qui latuit, as Leopardus, who was a good Grecian. I have writ so many Letters about Rhodomanus into Germany, that they have been shown to the Duke of Saxony, who sent for him from a trivial School in Pomerania to Wittemberg: He is a very ugly and clownish Man. . . . He is a Poet and a good Grecian; he has publish'd a Chronology, wherein he makes it his Business to contradict me and every Body else. There are very foolish things in his Book. Chronologers have committed abundance of Mistakes; Rhodomanus dotes in his old Days: He pronounces as Vulcanius does. Rhodomanus carmina Latina non bene scribit, sed Græca bona; bonus est Græcus in Poesi.

NOTE, That Scaliger has confounded our Laurence Rhodoman with one Laurence Codoman (f), who is the Author of four Books of Chronology, which he added to his Annals of the Holy Scripture, printed at Wittemberg in 1581. 'Tis a very common thing for the most learned Men to make a quid pro quo in Conversation, and when the Names of Authors differ only in some Letters, such a Mistake may be easily committed. This is the Case of Scaliger.

(C) The Catalogue of his best Works.] He translated into Latin the Greek Poem of Cointus Smyrnæus, or Quintus Calaber, concerning the taking of Troy, and added some Corrections to it. As for the Commentaries he had made upon that Author, I don't believe they have been printed; Moreri and others say, without any Ground for it, that they are very much esteem'd. I make use of an Edition (g) of that Work, in which there are two Greek and Latin Poems of Rhodoman: the one is intitled ΙΛΙΑΣ ΜΙΚΡΑ, and contains an Abridgment of the Iliads, and of Quintus Calaber: The other, intitled ΤΡΩΙΚΑ, contains an Epitome of the Trojan War, ex variis auctoribus decerpta. There is also the Oration, in which Dion Chrysostom maintains that Troy was not taken, with Rhodoman's Latin Translation, and some Scholia. Here are the Titles of some other Books: (h) Historia vitæ & doctrinæ Martini Lutheri carmine heroico descripta. (i) Descriptio Historiæ Ecclesiæ sive populi Dei Politiæ ejusdem & rerum præcipuarum, quæ in illo populo acciderunt, Græco carmine, cum versione Latina è regione textus Græci, Francof. 1581. in 8vo. Poësis Christiana, id est, Palestina seu Historia sacra Græco-Latina libris IX. Marpurgi 1589. Francof. 1590, 1630. in 4to.

Argo-

RHODOPE, a famous Curtezan, contemporary with Æsop, and his Fellow-Slave, was born in Thrace *. Xanthus the Samian carried her into Egypt, where Charaxus, a Merchant of Mitylene †, and Sappho's Brother, grew so much in Love with her, that he bought her for a great Sum of Mony. By that Means ſhe was made a free Woman; and becauſe ſhe was very beautiful, and the Town of Naucratis, where ſhe ſettled, was full of rich and voluptuous Men, ſhe got a great Eſtate by driving the Trade of a Curtezan ‡. However we muſt not believe that ſhe got ſo much by it, as to be able to build one (A) of thoſe Pyramids, that have been reckon'd among the ſeven Wonders of the World. Herodotus calls it a fabulous Story. What is (B) ſaid of her Shoe is not better grounded. Athenæus § is of Opinion that the Curtezan Dorica, Miſtreſs to Sappho's Brother, has been confounded with Rhodope by Herodotus.

RICCI (MICHAEL ANGELO) made a Cardinal by Pope Innocent XI. the firſt Day of September, 1681, was born at Rome in 1619. He was a lover of the Mathematicks, and made a great progreſs in that Science, as it appears by his Treatiſe De maximis & minimis, which has been reprinted twice or thrice. He wrote two learned Diſſertations, one of which is inſerted in the Works of Cardinal Brancaccio, and the other in Carlo Dati's Epiſtle ad Philalethes. He applied himſelf afterwards very earneſtly to the Study of Divinity. He has been praiſed by ſome very famous Authors, as Gaſſendus, Renatus Franciſcus Sluſius, Cardinal Pallavicini, Fabretti, &c. He had a very conſiderable Library ‖. He went through ſeveral Employments, before he was made a Cardinal; and, amongſt others, through that of Secretary of the Congregation of Indulgences and Relicks, and that of Conſultor of the Holy Office. He was poſſeſs'd of thoſe Employments in 1678. when he approved the Book of the Biſhop of Condom. I mean his Expoſition de la Doctrine Catholique.

RICHER, or RICHIER (PETER) ¶ a Carmelite, and a Doctor of Paris, imbraced the Proteſtant Religion, and retired to Geneva, where he was admitted into ζ the holy Miniſtry in the Year 1556. to be ſent to the Sieur Villegagnon in America. He was then η above fifty Years of Age. He embark'd λ at Honfleur, the 19th of November in the ſame Year, with another Miniſter, whoſe Name was Chartier, and with ſome other Perſons, whom the Church of Geneva judged to be proper for Villegagnon's Deſign: He μ arrived at the iſle of Coligni the 10th of March, 1557, and preach'd there the very ſame day before Villegagnon, π who all the time joined his Hands, lifted up his Eyes to Heaven, fetched great Sighs, &c. which filled the whole Congregation with admiration. Some few Days after they adminiſtred * Herodot. lib. 2. cap. 135.

† A Town in the iſle of Lesbos.

‡ Taken from Herodotus, ibid. c. 135.

§ Athen. lib. 13. Pag. 596.

‖ Taken from Prosp. Mandoſius Biblioth. Rom. cent. 5. p. 344, 345.

¶ Thevet, Coſmograph. Univerſelle Book 21. c. 2. f. 909.

ζ John de Lery, hiſtoire d'un voiage de l'Amerique ch. 1. pag. m. 6.

η Id. ib.

λ Id. ib. ch. 2. p. 8

μ Id. ib. ch. 6. p. 55.

π ibid. pag. 5[illegible].

Argonautica. Thebaica, Ilias parva: Lipſ. 1588. in 8*vo*. Tabulæ Etymologiæ Græcæ: ibid. 1590. in 8*vo*. Memnonis Hiſtoria de Republica Heracleenſium, & rebus Ponticis Eclogæ: ſeu excerpta & abbreviatæ narrationes in Sermonem Latinum tranſlatæ: Helmſtadii 1591. in 4*to*. Epithalamia ſacra: Ienæ 1594, in 4*to*. Ex Memnone, de Tyrannis Heracleæ Ponticæ Cteſia & Agatharchide excepta hiſtoria Græcè & Latinè partim ex Laur. Rhodomani interpretatione: Genevæ 1593. in 8*vo*. Theologiæ Chriſtianæ tyrocinia, carmine Heroico Græco Latino in V. libros digeſta: Lipſiæ 1597, in 8*vo*. His Germanis was not printed when he died: It is very much commended in his Funeral Programma. (a) Imprimis opus illud auro contra æſtimandum, quod de origine, moribus ac rebus geſtis veterum Germanorum Græcè ſcripſit, & Germanidem inſcripſit. Quod opus unicum tale eſt, ut animum atque ingenium hominis excellentem, charitateque patriæ mirifice flagrantem, abundè oſtendat. Witte (b) reckons it among the printed Books of Rhodoman, but does not ſay in what Year it was printed at Wittemberg.

(A) To build one of thoſe Pyramids.] Pliny does not ſeem to doubt of it; but perhaps he believed nothing of it, and expreſſed himſelf as he did, only that he might have an occaſion to ſet forth ſome Subtilties. He ſays, that the heighth and magnificent Structure of the Pyramids is not that which ought to be moſt admired in that Wonder of the World; the greateſt Miracle (he goes on) lyes in this, that a Woman of Pleaſure ſhould have got ſo much Wealth, as was ſufficient to raiſe that Pyramid which is moſt eſteem'd. (c) Hæc ſunt pyramidum miracula: ſupremumque illud, ne quis regum opus, miretur minimam ex his, ſed laudatiſſimam, a Rhodope meretricula factam. Æſopi fabularum Philoſophi conſerva quondam & contubernalis hæc fuit, majore miraculo tantas opes meretricio eſſe conquiſitas quæſtu. That Tradition was but a Romantick Story of the Greeks. Herodotus, though a Credulous Author, rejects it. He (d) maintains, that the Pyramid, whoſe Conſtruction was aſcribed to Rhodope, was built many Years before the Reign of Amaſis, in which that Curtezan lived. He adds, (e) that tho' ſhe had got a great Eſtate, ſhe would not have been able to pay the immenſe Charges of that Building. He proves it by a very good reaſon. We know, ſays he, what the Riches of that Woman amounted to; for the Iron Spits, which ſhe Conſecrated in the Temple of Apollo at Delphi, and for which ſhe ſpent the tenth part of her Eſtate, are to be ſeen there ſtill. Thoſe Spits were deſigned for the roaſting of Oxen. The Heathen Prieſts were not very nice; the ſmell of Gain was very acceptable to them, though the Cauſe of it was never ſo ſtinking: And Veſpaſian might have learn'd of them this Maxim, (f) Lucri bonus eſt odor ex re qualibet. They heartily received the Offerings of Strumpets, and conſecrated them among the moſt celebrated Monuments of the Devotion of People; whereby they immortalized the Crimes of thoſe Curtezans, according to their Deſires. Rhodope gave away the tenth part of her Booty for the making of Spits, that ſhe might raiſe to her ſelf an eternal Monument in Greece. (g) Ἐπεθύμησε γὰρ Ῥοδῶπις μνημήϊον αὐτῆς ἐν τῇ Ἑλλάδι καταλιπέσθαι, ποίημα ποιησαμένη τοῦτο, τὸ μὴ τυγχάνει ἄλλῳ ἐξευρημένον. καὶ ἀνακείμενον ἐν ἱρῷ, τοῦτο ἀναθεῖναι ἐς Δελφοὺς μνημόσυνον ἑωυτῆς. τῆς ὦν δεκάτης τῶν χρημάτων ποιησαμένη ὀβελοὺς βουπόρους πολλοὺς σιδηρέους, ὅσον ἐνεχώρεε ἡ δεκάτη οἱ, ἀπέπεμπε ἐς Δελφούς. οἳ καὶ νῦν ἔτι συννενέαται, ὄπισθε μὲν τοῦ βωμοῦ τὸν Χῖοι ἀνέθεσαν, ἀντίον δὲ αὐτοῦ τοῦ νηοῦ. Quum enim optaret memoriam ſui in Græcia relinquere, fecit opus quod ab alio excogitatum non eſt neque donatum, idque donavit in templo Delphico monumentum ſui. E decima enim ſuarum opum tot è ferro verua ad boves torrendos fecit, ad quot facienda ſufficeret decima ipſa: quæ Delphos miſit: quæ nunc quoque poſita ſunt è regione templi, poſt aram quam Chii donaverunt. The Law (h) of the Jews did not allow of ſuch an Impurity.

(B) What is ſaid of her Shoe.] One Day as ſhe was Bathing, and her Maids kept her Cloaths, an Eagle ſtoop'd down upon one of her Shoes, and carried it away, and let it fall upon Pſammitichus's Lap. That Prince was then ſitting upon his Tribunal, to adminiſter Juſtice. He admired the Beauty of that Shoe, and the Conduct of that Eagle, and order'd that the Lady, who had been robb'd of her Shoe, ſhould be look'd for all over Ægypt. They found her, and brought her to him, and he married her (i). I don't believe it, tho' Fortune is ſometimes pleaſed with ſuch Sports: (k) ἡ τὰ παράδοξα καὶ τὰ ἀδόκητα φιλοῦσα ἐργάζεσθαι τύχη, inopinatorum atque inexpectatorum amans fortuna. Rhodope, Æſop's Fellow-Slave, would have been well contented to marry that monſtrous Man. What a wonderful alteration, if ſhe had married a great Monarch, and if ſhe had been one of thoſe,

Quales (l) ex humili magna ad faſtigia rerum
Extollit, quoties voluit fortuna jocari?

Obſerve by the by, that Wit may prevent the ill Effects of Uglineſs, with reſpect to a fine Woman. Æſop, tho' the ugliest of all Men, (m) moved Rhodope's Heart.

(f) Juven. Sat. 14. v. 204. See Suetonius in Veſpaſiano c. 23.

(g) Id. Herodotus ib.

(h) Non intres mercedem meretricis, aut pretium canis in domum Dei tui in quocunque voto, quia abominatio eſt utrunque apud Dominum Deum tuum. Deuteron. cap. 23. v. 18.

(i) Taken from Ælian. var. Hiſt. lib. 13. cap. 33. See alſo Strabo, l. 17 pag. 556.

(k) Ælianus ibid.

(l) Juvenal. Sat. 3. v. 39.

(m) Herodot. ubi ſupra c. 134.

administred the Lord's Supper, ς and John Cointa, formerly a Doctor of Sorbonne, made an Abjuration of Popery. Villegagnon made admirable Prayers, * and received the Bread and the Wine from the Minister's hand upon his Knees. The hopes grounded on those Expressions of Zeal did soon vanish away, for he and Cointa began to Dispute † soon after with Richer and Chartier about the Eucharist. The latter was sent back to Geneva, to acquaint Calvin ‖ with that Dispute, to whose Judgment Villegagnon declared he would submit. But he pull'd off the Mask before the coming γ of Calvin's Answer: He declared himself a Papist soon after δ the Communion of Whitsunday; and, if he had been able, he ζ would have ill-treated Peter Richer, and the other Genevois: but he was contented to command them to retire, which they did. I speak of this more largely in ξ another place. They embark'd θ the 4th of January, 1558, and after having been reduced to very great ι Streights, they arrived at last in the Harbour of Blavet in Bretagne, μ the 26th of May. Richer was made afterwards Minister of the (A) Church of Rochelle, and publish'd a piece against (B) Villegagnon. Nothing can be more ridiculous than to make him the Head of the Sect of the Richerians, and to say that that pretended Sect was tainted with Nestorianism: And yet a famous Jesuit (C) has been so bold as to affirm it. He adds, that Richer infected the (D) Inhabitants of Annonai in Vivarez with his Errors. I have mention'd in another Place, * a Letter which that Minister wrote from America.

ς Id. ibid. pag. 69.
* Ib. p. 66.
† Ib. p. 67.
‖ Ib. p. 68.
γ Ib. p. 56.
δ Id. ib. See also Beza hist. Ecclesiast. l. 2. p. 160.
ζ Leri, ib. pag. 85.
ξ In the Article Villegagnon.
θ Idem chap. 21. pag. 141.
ι Jean de Leri one of 'em made a description of them. Ibid. chap. 21. & 22.
μ Idem pag. 375.
* In the Remark F. of the Article Leri.

RICIUS

(A) Richer was made afterwards Minister of the Church of Rochelle.] "(a) At that time Peter Richer being return'd from America, where he had suffer'd very much under the Tyranny of Villegagnon, a most wicked and wretched Apostate, came to Rochelle, where he found about fifty Persons, who had been gather'd together in the Lord by the Ministry of la Fontaine and la Place, whom I have mention'd in the History of the preceding Year. He did so much incourage and strengthen that small Flock in a little time, that a Consistory and the whole Discipline were established there; and God was pleased to favour that first beginning, so that in a little time a great part of the Town join'd themselves to the Church of the Lord, forsaking the Superstitions of the Church of Rome. From that time the Lord prepared that Place to make it sustain hereafter the most violent Assaults of its Adversaries". He was still living when John de Leri printed his Relation, that is, in the Year 1577. For in the Description of the Miseries of their Voyage he speaks thus: "(b) As to Mr. Peter Richer, now a Minister of the Church of Rochelle, he'll tell you that he lay all along, and was so weak that he could not lift up his Head to pray to God; but he invok'd him with great Ardour in that Condition". Note, That Moreri is mistaken, when he says that Richer was Minister at Geneva after his Return from America. Note also, That Mr. Vincent (c), who sets down Beza's Words, and who adds, that they gave Poupeliniere occasion (1) to call Richer the Father of the Church of Rochelle, has observed that what Beza says of the Establishment of a Consistory in that Year 1558, may be justified by the Registers of that Church; but he is so far from saying that Richer was made Minister of that Place, that he declares (e) that the Minister appointed there, when the first Consistory was settled, was call'd Fayet. 'Tis true, he says that in the Year 1561, that Church had two Pastors, to wit, Fayet and de l'Isle. The latter is our Richer (f).

(B) And publish'd a Piece against Villegagnon.] The Book intituled, A Refutation of the Lies and foolish Stories of Nicolas Durand, call'd the Chevalier de Villegagnon, and printed in 1562, in 8*vo*. was not written by James Spifame under Peter Richer's Name, as du (g) Verdier Vau-privas affirms; it was written by the Author, whose Name is prefixed to it. We find this Title in the Epitome of Gesner's Bibliotheque. (h) Petri Richerii Apologetici libri duo, contra Nicolaum Durandum qui se Vilagagnonem vocat, quibus illius in pios Americanos tyrannidem exponit, & negotium Sacramentarium tractat. Geneva 1561, in 4*to*. To which you may add these Words of John de Leri. "(i) But because, when Villegagnon return'd into France, not only Peter Richer painted him in his true Colours, but also some others treated him as he deserved, I shall say no more of him, for fear of tiring the Readers". If you desire to have a Proof of Moreri's taking little Care to examine what he advanced; you need only consider that after he has given us a good Character of Villegagnon, he refers us (k) to his Life, written by Richer, a Work wherein Villegagnon must needs be represented as a wicked Man.

(C) A famous Jesuit has been so bold as to affirm it.] Consult the Tables of Father Gaultier, where you'll find that the 63d Chapter of the 16th Century, is intituled DE RICHERIANIS, DUCE Petro Richerio. He says (l) that Peter Richer taught in America before Villegagnon, that CHRIST as a Man ought not to be worship'd. This is one of the Proofs alledged by that Jesuit, when he maintains that the Calvinists renew the impious Doctrines of Nestorius. Calvini vestigiis, says he (m), insistit Petrus Richerius in Americam ab eo missus anno 1557. quiam & præsente Domino Villagagnono prædicat, & coram Notario publico Francisco Alberico mordicus tuetur Jesum Christum in carne humana non esse adorandum. Tuetur, inquam, dum respondet ad interpellationem sibi per eum factam ejusdem D. Villagagnoni nomine, utpote causam exigentis cur Jesum Christum adorare nolit. Horum nobis omnium fidem facit tum epistola ejusdem Villagagnoni ad Ecclesiam Christianam data, tum ea quam octavo Julii anno 1560. ad Magistratum Genevensem scripsit, tum annexa ejusdem Notarii testificatio, quam diei decimaquarta Maii anni 1559. nota obsignavit; tum altera testificatio die octavo Junii 1558. data subscriptaque a D. Petro a Falcilla, quem D. Villagagnonus ad Ministrum Richerium 27 Decembris 1557. miserat, rationem ejusmodi doctrinæ sciscitaturum: ubi asserit se, dum à Ministro Richerio quæreret, cur inter orandum non diceret, Gloria Patri & Filio & Spiritui sancto, &c. responsum plane nullum accepisse: dum autem denuntiaret conqueri D. Villagagnonum, quod nullam unquam ad Jesum Christum precationem dirigeret, hoc se a Ministro responsum habuisse, hæreticum illum arbitrandum esse, qui necesse duxerit orare Jesum Christum (3). Num hac loquendi formula uti potuisset Minister Richerius, si credidisset in carne humana Jesu Christi aliam non esse hypostasim, subsistentiam aut personam, nisi Verbi Divini? You may apply to the pretended Sect of the Richerians what I have said in the Article of the Bezanites. Spondanus (o) says that some of Richer's Sectators were so impious as to deny the Resurrection. But when I consider that Mr. Vincent, in the above-quoted Book, does scarce mention Peter Richer, I can't forbear laughing at the Boldness of those, who represent as the head of a Party a Man, who made so little a Figure. I must observe that many (p) Divines among the Calvinists are of Opinion that the Humanity of CHRIST in abstracto, ought not to be worship'd. If Peter Richer maintain'd nothing else, he needed not fear to be accounted a Heretick among those of his Party.

Note, That Varillas (q) goes farther than Spondanus; for he affirms that Peter Richer taught, that eternal Life is only promised to the Souls of Christians, and that they shall be happy only with respect to their Souls, and that therefore the Lord's Supper having not been instituted to supply their Wants, there was no need to use it frequently. I fancy he only taught, that the Sacrament of the Eucharist being not appointed for the use of the Body, it was not necessary that the Flesh of CHRIST should be contain'd in it. This was his Opinion, which his Enemies alter'd and misrepresented as they thought fit.

(D) Infected the Inhabitants of Annonai . . . . with his Errors.] He does not mention the time: It was doubtless before the Voyage into America. (a) Probè novi hunc Petrum Richerium fuisse illum ipsum, qui urbi Annonensi in Vivariensi provincia malorum plurimorum author fuit. Cum enim in eam, se Catholicum simulans, esset ingressus, imò & menses aliquot in concionibus ea simulatione usus, tandem ubi se in præcipuorum civium, qui illum sæpe convivio exceperant, amicitiam insinuatum vidit, cordis sui pestem aperuit; primùm quidem privatim, deinde verò è pulpito pleno ore in Sacramenta invectus, ac nominatim in Realitatem Eucharisticam. Quod ubi animadvertunt Magistratus, dum in eum inquirunt, ecce evanescit homo nequam, majorem tamen urbis partem erroribus

(a) Theod. Beza hist. Ecclesiast. lib. 2. pag. 129. 140. ad ann. 1558.

(b) Leri, Hist. du Voyage de l'Amerique ch. 22. pag. m. 368.

(c) Vincent, Recherches sur les commencemens & les premiers progrès de la reformation de la ville de la Rochelle, p. 27, 28.

(1) Poupel. l. 5. in the beginning.

(e) Vincent ubi supra pag. 44.

(f) Peter Richer Sieur de l'Isle. Id. ib. pag. 27.

(g) Du Verdier, Biblioth. Franc. pag. 620.

(h) Epitome Biblioth. Gesn. pag. m. 682.

(i) Leri ubi supra ch. 6. pag. 74.

(k) Moreri at the word Villegagnon.

(l) Gaulterius tab. Chron. pag. m. 802.

RICIUS (Paul) a converted Jew, was a German, and flouriſh'd in the XVIth Century. He was Profeſſor of Philoſophy at Pavia, and acquired a great Reputation by it, and the Eſteem of many learned Men, who recommended him ſo effectually to the Emperor Maximilian, that he was ſent for by that Prince, and made one of his Phyſicians. He publiſhed ſeveral (A) Books againſt the Jews, and concerning ſome other Matters. He is very much praiſed for his Sincerity, Honeſty, Moderation, and Learning *. See his Elogy in a Letter (B) of Eraſmus, quoted here-under. The famous John Eckius was one of his Adverſaries: the Subject of their Diſpute was this Queſtion, viz. Whether the Heavens (C) are animated. Ricius maintain'd that they are, and advanced ſome Opinions that were looked upon as Paradoxical.

RYER (Andrew du) Sieur de Malezair, Gentleman in Ordinary of the King's Chamber, and Knight of the Holy Sepulcher, lived in the XVIIth Century. He made a conſiderable ſtay at Conſtantinople for the King's Service, and afterwards he was Conſul of the French Nation in Ægypt. He got a great Knowledge of the Turkiſh and Arabick Languages, as it appears (Z) by his Writings. He was Born at † Marcigni, a little ‡ Town on the Loire in the Frontiers of Forez.

RYER (Peter) a Pariſian, was admitted β into the French Academy in Faret's room, the 21ſt of November, 1646. He made a great many French Tranſlations, and ſome Dramatick γ Pieces. Moſt of the Authors tranſlated by him are Greek or Latin: as for the Greek, he only put (*) the old Tranſlations into new French, or follow'd the Latin Tranſlations: and as for the ancient Latin Authors, he often miſtook (A) their Senſe. Which he did also eruditus illaqueatam relinquens. I have mention'd that Paſſage, as being part of Ricker's Life.

(A) Several Books againſt the Jews, and concerning ſome other Matters.] Here are the Titles of ſome of 'em. Philoſophica, prophetica ac thalmudiſtica pro Chriſtiana veritate tuenda, cum juniori Hebræorum Synagoga diſputatio. De ſexcentis & tredecim Moſaicæ ſanctionis ſeu pentateuchi edictis. Farrago ex Thalmudæorum codice excerpta, ad petitionem Maximiliani Cæſaris. Iſagoge in Cabaliſtarum ſeu allegorizantium eruditionem cum epiſtola contra Stephani Presbyteri Cabalæ obtrectatoris epiſtolam. De modo orandi in nomine tetragrammato. De novem doctrinarum ordinibus, & totius peripatetici dogmatis nexu compendium. Statera prudentum. Concluſiones quibus Ariſtotelem triplicem doctrinæ ordinem exercuiſſe, & totius ejus dogmatis nexum dijudicare poteris. He did not forget the common Subject for the Declamations of that time; for he made an Oration to excite the Germans to ingage in a War againſt the Turks, in virulentam immaniſſimamque Turcarum rabiem, ad principes, magiſtratus, populoſque Germaniæ oratio (a).

(B) See his Elogy in a Letter of Eraſmus.] 'Tis the laſt of the 1ſt Book, and it is dated the 10th of March, 1516. Theſe Words are to be found in it: (b) Paulus Ricius ſic me proximo colloquio rapuit, ut mira quadam me ſitis habeat, cum homine ſæpius ac familiarius conſerendi ſermonem. Præter Hebrææ linguæ peritiam, quantum ille tenet philoſophiæ, quantum Theologiæ: tum quæ animi puritas, qui diſcendi ardor, qui docendi candor, quæ diſputandi modeſtia? Mihi ſanè vir ille primo ſtatim guſtu placuit olim Papiæ, cum illic philoſophiam profiteretur: nunc propius intuito magis etiam placet. Is demùm verè mihi videtur Iſraelitam agere, ſuoque cognomini pulchrè reſpondere: cujus omnis voluptas, omnis cura, omne otium ac negotium, in divinis eſt literis. Dignus nimirum animus, cui otium contingat quàm maximè honorificum. Ricius ſent him his Treatiſe concerning the Cabala, and the Thanks he receiv'd for it are very glorious to him; for it appears by it that this Proſelyte had defended the Cauſe of one of his Friends cruelly ſlander'd, and had kept at the ſame time within the Bounds of Moderation, and abſtain'd from injurious Words. (c) Arriſit animus iſte Gratiis & amicitiæ natus, qui tanto ſtudio tuetur hominis eruditiſſimi innocentiam, adverſus impudentiſſimos ſycophantas. Arriſit denique te, hoc eſt abſoluto veroque philoſopho, digna moderatio: quâ ſic fortiter patrocinaris amico, ut a conviciis in adverſarium temperes, reputans quid te, quàm quid illo dignum eſſet.

(C) Whether the Heavens are animated. Ricius maintain'd that they are, and advanced.] A Proteſtant Divine obſerves that Ricius's Opinions favour'd the Principles of Magick, and yet that his Books de cœleſti agricultura had been approved and praiſed by the Divines of Bologna, Padua, Ferrara and Pavia. (d) Paulus Ritius dum cœlorum animationem & Cabaliſticam ſuam Arithmanticam per decem enumerationes tradit, magiæ principia non parum promovet in commentariis ſuis ad librum R. Joſeph Caſtiliens. qui porta lucis dicitur, & tamen libros illos de cœleſti agricultura magnifico elogio approbarunt Academia Theologia Bononienſis, &c. John Eckius did not follow the Steps of thoſe Italian Divines; for he maintain'd (e) that the Doctrine, which teaches that the Heavens are animated, is ridiculous, execrable, and contrary to Faith. Claudius Eſpencæus, of whom I learn this, knew not upon what Reaſons that Cenſure was grounded; for he had not ſeen John Eckius's Book, and knew no more of it than what he had found in Ricius's Confutation of it, of which he gives us a ſhort Analyſis. He ſays (f) that Author maintain'd three things. 1. That the Doctrine, which teaches that the Heavens are animated, does not belong to Divinity; for it can neither be proved nor confuted by the Principles of Religion: Hence it is that Divines are divided about that Problem. 2. That this Opinion agrees better with the Words of the Prophets, than the contrary Doctrine. 3. That (g) Reaſon leads us to believe that the Heavens are not inanimate Beings. Eſpencæus examines Ricius's Arguments, and confutes them, and at laſt declares that it is more ſafe to deny than to affirm that the Heavens have a Soul. The Reader will not be diſpleaſed to know upon what occaſion he publiſh'd his Book (h) de cœlorum animatione. They had a mind to print at Paris an Edition of all the Works of Cardinal Contarin; but the Divine, who was to give his Approbation, ſcrupled to do it, becauſe he found (i) that the Author affirms that the Heavens are animated. He conſulted Claudius Eſpencæus, who anſwer'd him that he look'd upon it as an inconſiderable Difficulty, and ſoon after remembring that he had collected ſeveral things about that Queſtion, he put 'em together and publiſh'd them (k).

Obſerve that among the School Divines and Philoſophers, the Queſtion is only to know, whether the immediate Mover of the Celeſtial Spheres is a Soul properly ſo call'd, and forma informans. It is the Opinion of ſome, and it is commonly rejected; but as for the Opinion of thoſe, who admit of moving Intelligences, as aſſiſtent forms, it is almoſt generally received; and truly I don't ſee how one can be without 'em, and I fancy the Copernicians will fall into it ſooner or later in relation to their Planets. Father (l) Daniel, and Mr. (m) le Clerc have objected ſome Difficulties againſt their Syſtem, which puzzle them very much. Sir Iſaac Newton, and others have ſo ſtrongly aſſaulted the Hypotheſis of the Vortices, that the General Laws of Motion are not ſufficient to account for the Phænomena. A particular Direction of an intelligent Being would come in very ſeaſonably.

(Z) As it appears by his Writings.] He printed at Paris in 1630, a Turkiſh Grammar. Four Years after he publiſh'd in the ſame City his French Tranſlation of Guliſtan, or The Empire of the Roſes, written by Sadi the Prince of the Turkiſh and Perſian Poets. But his chief Tranſlation is that of the Alcoran, which has been printed ſeveral times. He publiſh'd it after he had been a Conſul for the French Nation in Egypt; which appears by the honourable Teſtimonial which the Conſuls of Marſeilles gave him the 12th of February, 1633, and which may be ſeen at the end of that Tranſlation.

(A) He often miſtook the Senſe of the ancient Authors. Which he did alſo.] (n) The leſs faulty of his Tranſlations, in the Judgment of many Perſons, is that of Cicero's Works, tho' he ſkipped many Places which he did not underſtand, eſpecially in the Orations, and tho' in order to come off and to fill up the Gaps, he put in the room of 'em ſeveral inſignificant and nonſenſical things, that are only fit to dazzle and perplex young Readers (o). Theſe Words in the Hexaalſo ſometimes in his Tranſlation of the Modern Authors, I mean of Thuanus and Scaliger. 'Tis thought his Tranſlations would be better than they are, if he had been better (B) paid by the Bookſellers; but becauſe they gave him but a ſmall matter for every Sheet, he was forc'd to make all the haſte he could, that he might be able to maintain his Family. He died in the Year * 1658. There is ſomething about him in the (C) Menagiana: you'll find it in the Remarks.

---

* Taken from Melchior Adam in vitis Medicor. pag. 9, 10.

† Marcinicenſis. See Colomies, Gallia Orient. pag. 163.

‡ See Baudrand voce Marcinicum.

β Pelliſſon, hiſt. de l'Academie Françoiſe, p. m. 229.

γ See the Liſt of 'em in the Hiſtory of the French Academy, pag. 356, 357. and in Mr. Baillet's Jugemens ſur les poetes, n. 1486.

(f) Id. ib.

(g) Id. ib. c. 8. p. 70.

(h) It was printed at Paris in the Year 1571.

(i) In the firſt Book of Contarin de animæ immortalitate, printed at Venice in 1525.

(k) See the Preface of that Treatiſe of Claud. Eſpencæus.

(l) In his Voiage du monde de Deſcartes.

(m) In his Phyſicks.

(n) Baillet. Jugemens des Savans tom. 4. pag. 549.

(o) The Author adds, that Father l'Eſcalopier does often complain of the Faults he committed in his whole Tranſlation of Cicero.

RIGORISTS. So they call in the Spaniſh Netherlands the Janſeniſts, the Fathers of the Oratory, and in general thoſe whoſe Maxims are † moſt oppoſite to looſe Morality. A Man of Prateolus's Character might make a Sect of thoſe Caſuiſts, to inſult the Church of Rome about her Diviſions. They are falſly accus'd ‖ of commanding their Penitents to eat Hay, and young Maids to put on wet (Z) Shifts, which, as 'tis ſaid, occaſions the Death of ſome of 'em.

RIMINI

Hexameron ruſtique are levelled at him, if I am not miſtaken: "(p) He, who tranſlated Cicero's fine Treatiſe de amicitia into French, has not been more lucky in his Tranſlation of theſe Words, Agrigentinum doctum quemdam virum, which he renders thus, a Learned Man call'd Agrigentinus, without minding that Cicero ſpeaks of Empedocles Agrigentinus, whom he denotes by the Name of Agrigentum, a Town of Sicily, where he was born. Beſides there was never a Man of Letters, whoſe proper Name was Agrigentinus. The ſame Writer in his Tranſlation of Valerius Maximus, Chap. 1. Example 4. Page 6. renders vitio tabernaculum captum, thus, the Tabernacle had been touch'd by chance, inſtead of ſaying, they had been wanting in the Ceremonies that are to be obſerv'd, when they take the place of the Auguries call'd Tabernacle. For want of underſtanding theſe Words, tabernaculum captum, as they ought to be underſtood in that Place, and for want of knowing the Practice of the Augurs, he thought this ought to be expounded according to the Cuſtom of the Jews, amongſt whom none but the Levites were allow'd to come near the Tabernacle,". To this I ſhall add a Paſſage out of the Nouvelles de la Republique des Lettres: "(a) Mr. Teiſſier takes Notice of ſome Faults in Mr. du Rier's Tranſlation: Here is one amongſt others. Thuanus ſpeaking of John Revius, who died in the Year 1553. ſaid annos cum ſeculo numerabat; which ſignifies that Revius died at 53 Years of Age. Mr. du Rier ſays on the contrary, that he died a hundred Years old. If he committed ſuch Faults in his Tranſlating a Modern Author, whoſe Meaning may be more eaſily underſtood, than that of the Ancients; one may very well believe, that he is often out in his Tranſlation of Cicero. And indeed Father l'Eſcalopier in his Commentary on the Books de Natura Deorum, cenſures continually poor (b) Mr. du Rier's Tranſlation". I have obſerv'd another Fault which Mr. Teiſſier takes notice of. Thuanus ſays, (c) Hulrico Hutteno equiti Franco . . . . . quadamtenus comparandus. Du Ryer renders thoſe Words thus, He may be compared in ſome manner with Heutin a French Knight, and Mr. Teiſſier ſays upon it, (d) Hutten was a German born in Franconia, and not a French-man, as Mr. du Ryer ſays, who did not underſtand the true Signification of the Word Francus. Mr. Teiſſier has overlook'd ſuch a like miſtake in the Article of Duaren. (e) Eaque (Duareni Opera) Cujacius ipſe plurimi ſemper fecit, cùm ex quatuor Franciſcis qui eadem ætate eandem ſcientiam profitebantur, unum Duarenum ſibi placere, cæteros jus tantum deliguriré diceret. Thoſe Words of Thuanus have been render'd by du Ryer in this manner. Nay, Cujas himſelf valued much Duaren's Works, and ſaid, that of the four French Profeſſors, who taught the ſame Science at the ſame time, he liked none but Duaren. What a miſtake to fancy that Franciſcus is the Name of a Nation, and not a Chriſtian Name. Thuanus's meaning is this: there were at the ſame time four Profeſſors of the Civil Law, whoſe Chriſtian Names were Francis, and Duaren was the only one of the four whom Cujas eſteem'd. The three others were Francis Baudouin, Francis Hotman and Francis Roaldes. I have found many other Faults in Thuanus's Verſion. Here follows an overſight which Colomeſius obſerv'd. "(f) Mr. du Ryer . . . . has very much obliged Pious Souls, by tranſlating thoſe Pſalms (g) into our Language with ſo much Politeneſs. Only there is one place, wherein I wiſh he had minded the Latin a little better. 'Tis in page 17. &c. of the ſecond Edition, where Mr. du Ryer's Tranſlation runs thus; and as if I was ſtill a Child at a hundred Years of Age, tho' never ſo old and broken, I do ſtill the Actions of a Child. He ſhould have render'd the Latin Words thus; and as if I was a hundred Years old, I do at the Age I am in all the Actions of a Child. If thoſe Pſalms were compos'd by Antony King of Portugal, Mr. du Ryer's Miſtake cannot be excus'd; for 'tis certain, that poor Prince was not ſixty four Years old when he died".

(B) If he had been better paid by the Bookſellers.] You'll find the following Words next to thoſe I have ſet down out of the Nouvelles de la Republique des Lettres. "(h) Which ſhould teach many mean Authors, who know no more Latin than what they learn'd at School, not to venture upon Tranſlations. It requires more Capacity than one can think, and Men that will not do it to get a livelihood. This I ſay, without alluding to this Paſſage of Richelet's Dictionary, pag. 110. of the (i) ſecond Part. The late du Rier wrote to get Bread, that is, only to maintain himſelf". Here are two Paſſages of Mr. Baillet. (k) And therefore 'tis believed that his Learning and Skill in Languages were but inconſiderable; and that the Bookſellers, who maintained him, did not allow him time enough to perfect any thing. This is the firſt Paſſage: the ſecond is ſtill more diverting. "(l) Such Writers, who are reſolved never to go back, or who by their choice, or by reaſon of the ill Circumſtances they are in, find themſelves neceſſitated to go forward, whatever obſtacle they meet with, would think themſelves maim'd if they ſhould cut off any thing from their Writings. And particularly thoſe whoſe Subſiſtence depends upon the weight and meaſure of their Writings, would be afraid of loſing a Penny, if they ſhould ſtrike a needleſs or ill placed Word out of their Works. This was the reaſon why William Xylander, Lewis Dolce, John Baudoin, Peter du Ryer, and many other Mercenary Writers, and ſuch as receive a Salary from Bookſellers, thought themſelves oblig'd to lengthen and inlarge their Writings as much as ever they could: ſo that to preſerve their Lives they were not unwilling to ſpoil their Reputation, ſome by Tranſlating for half a Crown, or a Crown a Sheet, and others by making four hundred long Verſes for four Livres, and as many ſhort ones for two Livres, as Mr. Furetiere (1) ſays". See what I have ſaid of Caraun (m).

(C) Something about him in the Menagiana.] "(n) I think Mr. du Ryer was a Native of Paris. He was like Xylander, qui fami magis quam famæ inſerviebat. He tranſlated to get Mony, and died before he had made an end of the Tranſlation of Thuanus's Hiſtory. To avoid Expences, he liv'd out of Paris farther than the Piquepuces, where he lodged with his Wife and Children. I went once to ſee him with ſome Friends. He treated us with Cherries gather'd in a little Garden he had. He made a Tragedy, Intituled, Alcyonée, which is an admirable Piece, and may be compar'd with the beſt pieces of Corneille. There are ſome wonderful Verſes in it, and it is very well underſtood. Mondory acted his part very well in it.

M. DE Vigneul Marville, pag. 196. of the 1ſt Volume of his Melanges, mentions a Viſit that he and ſome others paid to du Ryer, and ſays, that the Collation they had, which conſiſted of Milk, Cherries, freſh Water and brown Bread, made 'em lament the Fate of that excellent Man.

(Z) To put on wet Shifts.] I don't think that any Caſuiſt, who is a Man of Senſe, tho' never ſo ſevere, preſcribes ſuch a Penance to a young Maid, tho' it were neceſſary to ſuppreſs a violent Temptation to Lewdneſs; but there are ſome Men whoſe rigid Morals ſpoil their Judgment to ſuch a degree, that 'tis not unlikely ſome young Maids, who reveal'd too many Frailties at a Confeſſion, have had ſuch a Remedy preſcribed them; and ſince St. Francis of Aſſiſi thought it expedient for him to get a Woman of Snow, he might very well have preſcribed a wet Shirt to others.

I

---

* And not in 1656. as Moreri ſays.

† The Method of thoſe Gentlemen is called Rigoriſm.

‖ See the Difficulties propos'd to Mr. Steyaert. 1. part. pag. 31.

(p) Hexameron ruſtique, pag. 27, 28.

(a) Nouvelles de la Repub. des lettres, October 1684. art. 2. p. 774. in the Extract of the Elogies taken from Thuanus, and commented by Mr. Teiſſier.

(b) Note, that l'Eſcalopier criticiſes only the Tranſlation of the Books de natura Deorum.

(c) Thuan. lib. 13. p. 271. ad ann. 1554.

(d) Teiſſier Addit. to the Elogies, tom. 1. pag. 91.

(e) Thuan. lib. 23. p. 471. ad ann. 1559.

(f) Colomeſius, Biblioth. choiſie, pag. 145.

(g) That is. Pſalmi confeſſionales inventi in ſcrinio Antonii Portugalliæ Regis. Lutetiæ 1595. 16.

RIMINI (GREGORY of) in Latin Gregorius Ariminenſis, is known by that Name, becauſe he was born at Rimini, (Ariminum) a Town of Italy. He taught in the Univerſity of Paris * with great Applauſe. He was one of the moſt Subtil School-men of the XIVth Century, and the Subtilty of his Wit prompted him to addict himſelf much more † to the Party of the Nominaliſts than to that of the Realiſts. He was an Auguſtin Monk, and was made General of his Order at Montpellier in 1357. He had been the chief Profeſſor of the Auguſtins in the Convent of Rimini in the Year 1351. He died at Vienna in Auſtria in 1358. His chief Works are ſome Commentaries on the Maſter of the Sentences, and on St. Paul's Epiſtles. He was no leſs recommendable for the Holineſs of his Life than for his Learning and great Parts, and he is reckon'd among thoſe that have been beatified ‖. I muſt ſay ſomething of his Opinions. He vigorouſly oppos'd ‡ the Divines, who aſſert that by the Almighty Power of God two contrary Propoſitions concerning one and the ſame thing may be true at the ſame time. I don't apprehend how he durſt queſtion ſuch a Doctrine as this, which is an unavoidable conſequence of the Doctrine of Tranſubſtantiation. He came much nearer the Doctrine of St. Auguſtin § as to Freewill, than moſt Divines of his times; nay, he maintain'd that an invincible (A) Ignorance does not juſtify a Man. But he taught

I Have read a Memorial printed at Delft in 1696, and containing a ſhort Anſwer to the three Accuſations of Janſeniſm, Rigoriſm, and Innovation. The Author having laid down in it the Maxims of Jesus Christ, goes on thus. "(a) If thoſe that are call'd Rigoriſts, have more "rigorous Maxims, a Conduct harder to Fleſh and Blood, "and a Severity which exceeds that wholeſome Severity, they deſerve to be puniſh'd. But if it be true, "on the contrary, as it is certain and evident, that the "Weakneſs of moſt Chriſtians forces them to be content"ed with much leſs, and to comply with humane Frail"ty in the Application of thoſe holy Rules; it is a great "Injuſtice and a puniſhable Calumny to cry 'em down "as Men, whoſe Maxims are cruel and extreamly ſe"vere: and it is more certain ſtill, that they who op"poſe what they call Rigoriſm, oppoſe the Goſpel . . . . "It is therefore true, that Rigoriſm is a meer Phantom, "wherewith they ſcare People to undo good Men, and "the true Servants of Jesus Christ. M. Steyaert ac"knowledges it himſelf in his Theſes on the Rituals pub"liſh'd within theſe few Years. His Teſtimony cannot "be ſuſpected; he ſays there, that thoſe who endeavour to "obſerve the Rules of the Church in the direction of Souls, "are thoſe who are call'd Rigoriſts, and that he knows "no others. . . . . . (b) It is certain, on the contrary, "that the Looſeneſs oppoſite to that Rigoriſm, is but "too real. (c) M. Steyaert acknowleges it in his "Theſis of Moral Divinity mended. For after having "proved it by the Words of Pope Alexander the VIIth, "which I have ſet down, he adds: What would cer"tain Men do, or what would they not do, if they "could alledge any ſuch thing againſt Rigoriſm; where"as in order to prove it, they have nothing to produce "but ſome idle Stories, as Hay, and wet Shirts, pre"ſcribed for a Penance.

(A) Nay, he maintain'd that an invincible Ignorance does not juſtifie a Man.] M. Arnauld makes this Obſervation in the 9th part of the Difficulties propoſed to M. Steyaert. 'Tis upon occaſion of a Decree of Pope Alexander the VIIIth, which condemns 31 Propoſitions; the ſecond whereof is this: (d) Tametſi detur ignorantia invincibilis juris naturæ; hæc in ſtatu naturæ lapſæ operantem ex ipſa non excuſat à peccato formali: that is to ſay, "Tho' there is an Ignorance of the Law of Nature, that "is invincible, yet in the State of corrupt Nature that "Ignorance does not clear from a formal Sin thoſe who "do what is forbidden by the Law of Nature". M. Arnauld mentions afterwards three Opinions. The firſt is (e) that a humane Action is not a formal Sin, if he who does it, does not know that he commits a Sin. He aſcribes this Opinion to the Jeſuits, and affirms that they (f) pretend to ſay nothing but what is reaſonable; becauſe 'tis agreed on all hands, as they ſuppoſe, that an invincible Ignorance juſtifies a Man, and that he is reputed to be invincibly ignorant of the ſinfulneſs of what he does, when he has no ſuch thought in the doing it. The ſecond Opinion is, that of "(g) many Divines, who, leſt thoſe "falſe Subtleties ſhould overthrow this important Max"im, that the Ignorance of the Law of Nature does "not juſtify a Man, which has been acknowledged by "the Heathens themſelves, and is laid down in the Ca"non Law in theſe Words, Ignorantia juris omnibus "adultis damnabilis eſt, maintain that it ought not to be "look'd upon as invincible, abſolutely ſpeaking, becauſe "that Law is ſuch, that Man was made capable to "know it, and would have known it, if he had conti"nued in the State wherein God had placed him; that "in the State he is in, his knowing only the firſt Prin"ciples of it, and his Ignorance of the reſt, which he "may however know with the Aſſiſtance of Grace, is "a conſequence of Original Sin. Which, according "to St. Thomas, is ſufficient to ſay, that Men are "obliged to do what they cannot do without Grace, "tho' that Grace, without which they cannot do it, "be given to ſome out of Mercy, and be denied to o"thers out of Juſtice, as a Puniſhment of a preceding "Sin, if it were but Original Sin. Nothing can be "more formal than what the Angelical Doctor teaches "upon that Subject, 1. 2. qu. 2. Art. 5". According to this ſecond Opinion, (h) which has been entertain'd by moſt of the Ancient Divines, the Ignorance of the Law of Nature did never juſtify any Body, becauſe it could not be looked upon as invincible. "(i) The 3d Opinion "is that of Gregorius Ariminenſis, of Eſtius, and other "Divines, who taking the Word invincible in another "Senſe, don't ſcruple to aſſert that the Ignorance of "the Law of Nature does not juſtify a Man, even when "it might be look'd upon as invincible. For, ſay they, "it may be call'd invincible with reſpect to humane "Means, ſuch as Inſtruction, of which many People "have been depriv'd, eſpecially among the Infidels . . . . "(k) Thoſe, who taking the Word invincible in this "Senſe, have acknowledg'd that a vaſt number of Hea"thens have been invincibly Ignorant of many Duties "of the Law of Nature, ſhould neceſſarily have ſaid, "that the Ignorance of the Law of Nature does not "clear Men from Sin, even when it may be called "Invincible, with reſpect to the want of Humane, "and even Divine Means, when God does not af"ford thoſe, that would be immediately neceſſary to "overcome that Ignorance. We have ſtill ſome "Theſes publickly aſſerted in our Days at Rome in the "School of the Auguſtins, wherein this Propoſition is "to be found: Ignorantia invincibilis juris naturalis non "excuſat à peccato. Ex Gregorio in 2. Sent. diſp. 29. "qu. 1. art. 2. in reſp. ad arg. ubi ait. Ad probationem: "Secundum omnes Doctores non imputantur homini quæ "ex ignorantia ſimpliciter invincibili committuntur: dico "quod illud eſt intelligendum de ignorantia quæ non eſt "peccatum nec pœna peccati, cujus ille ſit vel fuerit reus. "Quod probat ex S. Aug. in Ep. ad Sixtum. Ignoran"tia enim invincibilis eſt pœna peccati Originalis, cujus "omnis homo naſcitur reus. So that 'tis not very "long ſince they publickly aſſerted at Rome, that an in"vincible Ignorance does not clear Men from Sin, and "no body was offended at it; nor was it believ'd that "they who aſcrib'd that Opinion to St. Auguſtin, and "to Gregorius Ariminenſis, one of his moſt faithful Diſ"ciples among the School-men, impos'd upon that Fa"ther. Eſtius did alſo teach the ſame Doctrine in ex"preſs Words." M. Arnauld adds (l) that the Difference between the two laſt Opinions is but a Diſpute about Words, and that at the bottom each of them does perfectly agree with the general Maxim of the Canon Law, and the Doctrine of St. Auguſtin againſt the Pelagians, and that of St. Bernard againſt Abelard; that whatever is done againſt the Law of Nature is a Sin, in whatever manner one may be Ignorant of it, becauſe 'tis always a Puniſhment of ſome Sin, as St. Auguſtin ſays in his Letter to Sixtus. But the firſt Opinion, which is that of the Jeſuits, does totally overthrow the Maxim of the Canon Law, and the Doctrine of holy Men, by generally aſſerting on one hand that an invincible Ignorance does always juſtify Men; and on the other by ſtretching ſo far the Word invincible whenever they pleaſe, that if they would ſpeak ſincerely, they ſhould ſay that a Sin of Ignorance is never a formal Sin, but only a material one.

* Elſſius in Encomiaſtico Auguſtiniano pag. 247.

† Id. ib.

‖ Ex eodem ibid.

‡ See Fonſeca on Ariſtotle's Metaphyſicks, lib. 4. cap. 3. pag. m. 651.

§ See the Scholaſtica Orthodoxa of Paul Ferry pag. 304, 447.

(h) Ibid. pag. 241.

(i) Ibid.

(k) Ibid. pag. 242.

(l) Ibid. pag. 243, 244.

taught a thing, which was objected to Deſcartes, and which would be very ſcandalous, if a favourable Interpretation was not put upon it; for he taught (B) that God can lie or deceive

I thought fit to mention all theſe things, not only becauſe they afford us a ſhort and uſeful Inſtruction about a very difficult and important Subject; but alſo becauſe they diſcover to us that our Gregorius Ariminenſis did not uſe any Evaſion and Subterfuge. He dived into the bottom of a Doctrine, he perceived the moſt natural Conſequences of a Principle, and owned them boldly, without ſeeking any equivocal or mitigated Expreſſions. I do not ſay this, to condemn thoſe who endeavour to ſoften what they think might offend the Readers. They may have a good deſign, and ſome matters are ſo difficult and intricate, that we may very well excuſe thoſe, who uſe ſometimes a different method to explain them. The Queſtion about Sins of Ignorance is one of that kind: it is ſurrounded with Precipices on all ſides. 'Tis therefore no wonder, if thoſe, who walk in ſuch a way, do ſometimes turn aſide, or go back. They grant one thing, and then they oppoſe it: they give with one hand, what they take away with another. They will grant, (a) That an invincible Ignorance juſtifies Men, and then they will alledge a great many Examples taken from the holy Scripture, to ſhew that the Sins of Ignorance do not excuſe Men; and the neceſſary reſult of thoſe Quotations muſt be, either that the Ignorance of moral Duties was never invincible, or that though it be invincible, it does not excuſe a Sinner. If you conſider narrowly all their Arguments, you'll find that after they have (b) ſuppoſed that Ignorance is never a Sin, but when it is not invincible, they leave, properly ſpeaking, no Caſe, wherein that (c) Ignorance is invincible; for, they ſay, it may be overcome with reſpect to the Paſſion of JESUS CHRIST (d), even when it has never been heard of. They pretend, that if a Savage of America is ignorant of the matters of Fact contained in the New Teſtament, it is his fault, becauſe he has not put himſelf in a diſpoſition that may move God to reveal to him the Myſteries of Salvation, and has made himſelf unworthy of that heavenly Favour. Ask 'em this queſtion; Can he have that good Diſpoſition that you ſpeak of? Can he make a good uſe of the Light of Nature? They'll anſwer you, that he can, if he will. If you ask 'em whether he may have ſuch a Will? I think they'll anſwer you that he cannot, but that it is (e) only a moral Impotency, which is nothing elſe but the ill diſpoſition of his Will, and a conſequence of the Corruption wherewith the Children of Adam are born. This is at the bottom the ſame Doctrine with that of our Gregory, and I think it were better to ſay plainly, as he does, that an invincible Ignorance can be no Excuſe, when it proceeds from Original Sin, and is a Puniſhment for it. 'Tis true, that this Doctrine is liable to ſome Inconveniencies; for it ſeems to lead one by degrees to this Aſſertion, Frenzy and Madneſs can be no Excuſe, ſince they ought not to be excluded from the Evils, which have been introduced by Sin, and which ſerve as a Puniſhment for Sin. But the firſt Opinion, mention'd by Mr. Arnauld, is alſo liable to (f) many Inconveniencies. The Queſtion is not to chuſe an Opinion free from all Intricacies, or a very intricate one. But the Queſtion is to chuſe one of two Extreams, whereof one is contrary to Philoſophical Notions, and the other to the Theological Syſtems.

(B) He taught that God can lie and deceive us.] Deſcartes laid down, as the only Foundation of humane Knowledge, the perſuaſion we ought to have that God can neither be deceived, nor deceive others. They objected againſt him (g), that, according to Gregorius Ariminenſis, and ſome other Schoolmen, God may ſay ſome things that are contrary to his Thoughts and Decrees, as when he commanded Jonas to preach in Ninive, that it would be deſtroyed in 40 days. If he harden'd and blinded Pharaoh, if he ſent a lying Spirit into ſome Prophets, how do you know, ſaid they to Deſcartes, that he cannot ſeduce us? May he not deal with us as a Phyſician deals with ſick Perſons, and as a Father deals with Children? They are often deceived wiſely, and for their good. Could we look upon Truth, if God preſented it to us naked? (h) Si Deus puram nobis oſtenderet veritatem quis eam oculus, qua mentis acies ſuſtinere valeat? Deſcartes anſwer'd, (i) That we muſt diſtinguiſh between God's way of ſpeaking, accommodated to Man's Capacity, and to the Truths that have a relation to Mankind, and the way of ſpeaking that relates to abſolute Truths. The firſt way of ſpeaking is very frequent in the Scripture; but the laſt ought to be that of Philoſophers. Pharaoh's hardneſs of Heart, and ſuch like things, do not denote a poſitive Action of God; it was only a privation of Grace. It is plain, ſays he, that I did not mean ſuch Lies as conſiſt in Words, but the inward and formal Malice that is to be found in Deceit. The Decree againſt Ninive was only Comminatory, and depended upon a Condition. However, I do not blame thoſe (k) who ſay, that God may, by the Miniſtry of his Prophets, declare ſome Lies free from all manner of malicious Deceit, and like thoſe of Phyſicians, who, to cure their Patients, make 'em believe ſome things that are falſe. Moreover, I confeſs, that the natural Inſtinct, which God has given us, does ſometimes deceive us really; for the Nature, which God has given us for the preſervation of our Body, moves the Hydropicks to do a thing that is prejudicial to them, that is, to drink; but I have ſhewn in my 6th Meditation how this can be reconciled with God's Goodneſs and Veracity.

I muſt obſerve by the by, that the Objection remains, notwithſtanding this Anſwer; for when a Man is forc'd to confeſs that a general Maxim, which he had laid down as the foundation of a certain and demonſtrative Doctrine, admits of many Exceptions, he ſhakes it to that degree, that it can no longer fix our Uncertainties, and there is no Caſe wherein a Sceptick may not uſe Deſcartes's Diſtinction. If I were deceived, will he ſay, by the Ideas, which repreſent to me Matter as an extended Subſtance, it would be a Deceit free from all manner of Malice, and perhaps it would be uſeful to me in the State I am in, which in ſome reſpects is a true State of Infancy or Sickneſs, whilſt my Soul is united to my Body. A Verbal Lie is not better than an Ideal Lie, and cannot be ſeparated from it; for Men ſpeak only to excite ſome Ideas in the Minds of thoſe who hear them; and may I not ſuppoſe that all ſorts of Ideas relate, not to abſolute Truths, but to ſuch Truths as have a relation to Mankind?

I muſt alſo obſerve by the by, that there are certain Things and certain Expreſſions in the Scripture, that will always confound the deepeſt Metaphyſicians. We have here an inſtance of it. See how Deſcartes was run down by the Hypotheſis which Gregorius Ariminenſis pretended to ground on the Scripture. One may eaſily gueſs that he was ſtrangely ſurpriſed, when he ſaw that the thundering Arguments that fell upon him, came from a place from which he expected it leaſt. He thought he had built upon a Rock, for he had built upon the Infallibility of God. He expected, without doubt, to have the Approbation of Divines as to that fundamental Part of his Hypotheſis, and he was ſure at leaſt that no Paſſages of the Scripture would be alledged againſt him: And yet the Storm fell upon him from that very place; and it was ſo violent that he was forced to yield. So vain are the Thoughts and Hopes of Men! But on the other ſide, we may very well wonder that Deſcartes made ſo weak a Reſiſtance. His quick Surrender is a ſign that he was not at all acquainted with Books of Divinity. If he had been verſed in that Reading, he might have known a great many Explications and Solutions of thoſe Scripture Paſſages that Gregorius Ariminenſis built upon, and they might have afforded him a method of Diſputing, whereby he might have come off. 'Tis likely ſome will ſay that I am miſtaken, and that he could not well make uſe of that method; for he was only for evident Reaſons, and always preferr'd what is clearer to what is leſs clear. Now the Paſſages that were objected againſt him out of the Holy Scripture, are infinitely clearer than the Explanations and Gloſſes of the Commentators; which is the reaſon why he laid down his Arms ſo ſoon. I can anſwer this Objection, and I ſay before hand, that this great Philoſopher ſhould at leaſt have inſiſted more than he did on the nature of the Expreſſions made uſe of by the Holy Writers, to accommodate themſelves to the Capacity of the People. Vulgar Minds being not able to raiſe themſelves to the moſt perfect Being, it was neceſſary that the Prophets ſhould bring down God to Man, and make him ſtammer with us, as a Nurſe ſtammers with a Child, whom ſhe ſuckles. Hence it is that there are ſo many Expreſſions in the Scripture, importing that God repents, that he is angry, that he will inquire whether a thing has happened, that he will alter his mind if Men obey, or do not obey him, and a thouſand ſuch things, that are inconſiſtent with infinite Perfection. Deſcartes did not fail to ſhew what difference there is between thoſe Expreſſions, and thoſe of a true Metaphyſician; but he touch'd too ſlightly upon it, and loſt all the Advantage he might have drawn from it; for he yielded notwith-

ſtanding

(a) See the Preface of the Supplement to the Philoſophical Commentary upon theſe words, Compel them to come in, fol.  4. verſo & ſeq.

(b) See Mr. Saurin's Reflexions ſur les droits de la conſcience, pag. 16.

(c) That is, as to the Doctrines and Facts that concern Religion.

(d) Saurin ibid. pag. 15.

(e) Ibid. pag. 16.

(f) See the Difficultez propoſées à Mr. Steyaert ubi ſupra pag. 244. & ſeq.

(g) See the ſecond Objections againſt Deſcartes's Meditations, pag. m. 66.

(h) Object. ſecunda contra Meditat. Carteſii, pag. m. 66.

(i) See Deſcartes's Anſwer to the ſecond Objections, pag. m. 75, & 76.

deceive us. They made a great noise in Holland against a Minister, who had said the same thing, (G) but with some Restrictions that Corrected it.

R I T-

standing, to the the Pretension of Gregorius Ariminensis, he should not have done it; he should have affirmed constantly, that the Passages of the Scripture, wherein it is said that God does sometimes deceive, ought never to be literally understood, and ought to be expounded, as those that say that he repents, and which ascribe to him some other humane Frailty. He should have shewn at large, that a Philosopher ought not to have a regard to those Passages of the Word of God, wherein the greatness of the Supreme Being is to be represented. Mr. Regis was very sensible of this: I will lay down as a Maxim, says he, (a) "That whenever I design to speak of God exactly, I must not consult my self, nor speak according to Custom, but raise my Mind above all Creatures, to consult the vast and immense Idea of the most perfect Being: So that I may be allow'd to say in a Moral Treatise, That God has repented, that he is angry, &c. But those and such like Expressions cannot be allowed me in a Treatise purely Metaphysical, in which one must speak exactly."

Let us remember, that if the Scripture does often represent God under popular, and consequently very false Notions, to accommodate it self to the Capacity of those, for whom God design'd the Revelation; it affords us in other places the Lenitive that we may want. I mean the Description of the Infinite Being in his immutable and most perfect Majesty.

(G) They made a great noise in Holland against a Minister, who had said the same thing, but with some Restrictions that Corrected it.] I mean Mr. de Wolzogue. He was Professor and Minister of the Walloon Church at Utrecht, in the Year 1666, when a Book came out, intituled, Philosophia S. Scripturæ interpres, Exercitatio paradoxa. It appear'd a very pernicious Piece to the Orthodox Divines, and worse than a Socinian Book. Mr. de Wolzogue was one of those who confuted it; but he was so unlucky in his Performance, that they made as much or more noise against his (b) Confutation, than against the Book he had confuted. Here is one of the things that gave the greatest Offence. "(c) I am to prove in the third place, that God will not deceive any body: though I need not take much pains to prove it. When God says a thing, it is sufficient to make us apprehend that he will not deceive Men. I say, that he will not deceive, lest one should think that he cannot do it, if he would. For as any one, who goes about to deceive another, is reputed to be in some measure above him in that respect, and to surpass him either in Address, or Strength, or in some other Faculty whatever it be; and because God's Wisdom, and Power, and all his other Attributes are infinite; 'tis plain that the Creatures, even the most perfect of them, because they are finite, as being Creatures, may be led into Error by the infinite Creator. But I deny that he will do it. For we can scarce think of an intention to deceive, without believing that there is some Malice in it, whereby we endeavour to impose upon the Person, whom we dare not assault without Cunning and Deceit; or that there is a weakness of Mind, which makes one doubt of a good Success without it. Each of those two things betrays a great Imperfection: they must not be therefore ascribed in the least to him, whom we look upon as a most perfect Being." They, who wrote (d) against Mr. de Wolzogue, made a great uproar about this Proposition, God might deceive others, if he would. It is certain that it sounds ill, and though the Explanation the Author added to it, reduced it to the common Opinion of the Orthodox Divines, that 'tis impossible God should deceive any Body, yet it had been better for him to abstain from those offensive Words, which at the bottom were of no use to the Question in hand, and were a meer needless Parenthesis. It seems to me that Men in cold Blood would not have carried their Censure farther; only they might have added to it, that an Author, who appears so much addicted to Descartes, ought not to use a great compass of Words in order to say that God cannot deceive. He ought to so say in one word. They, who express themselves thus, the Reprobate might love God, if they would, but their Corruption is so great, that they cannot be willing to love him, say at the Bottom the same thing with those, who affirm roundly, that 'tis impossible the Reprobate should love God. This last Proposition being shorter, is preferable to the other. In like manner, since it is a shorter Expression to say, God cannot deceive, than to say, He might deceive, if he would; but he is so holy, that he cannot have the will to deceive; why did M. de Wolzogue use so many Windings and Turnings in his Discourse? However it be, there is more reason to wonder that the Censure was not wholly confined within those Bounds, than to see that the Sieur de Labadie, who in the Name of the Walloon Church of Middelburg, accused M. de Wolzogue in the Walloon Synod, durst accuse him of Heterodoxy for saying that God cannot have the will to deceive us. "(e) Mr. de Labadie disputes against me, in his Latin Books, as an Error contrary to the Scripture, not what I said that God might deceive us if he would, but what I added to it, that God cannot have the will to deceive us. He pretends, that I have not said enough, and affirms that God will and can deceive. He objects the Scripture against me, and asks, What will Wolzogue say to the History related in the 22d Chapter of the 1st Book of Kings, and especially to the words of the 22d Verse? And the Lord said, Thou shalt persuade him, and prevail also; go forth, and do so. Now therefore, behold the Lord has put a lying Spirit into the Mouth of all these thy Prophets, and the Lord has spoken Evil concerning thee. When God willed and commanded that Ahab should be seduced, and put a lying Spirit (for so Junius and Tremellius speak) must he be charged with weakness of Mind or Malice?" See the Margin (f). I shall set down another Passage, whereby it will appear that the Adversaries of M. de Wolzogue were not offended at Labadie's Temerity. 'Tis a very long Passage; but since it contains a Doctrine, whereby the censured Proposition is clear'd and explain'd in a solid manner, the Reader will not think it strange to find it here. Here are therefore Mr. de Wolzogue's Words in the Preface to a Collection of (g) Judgments, which he publish'd in 1669.

"(h) The main Objection, and which makes the greatest Noise, is what I have said, that God can deceive us, if he will. For it seems my meaning is, that God can deceive us. But I think there is nothing more harmless than what I have said, and that it will be found to be very Orthodox, if it be carefully examin'd. For if there be any thing to be said against it, it must be in the Sense, or in the Words. As for the Sense, I lay down that 'tis impossible God should ever deceive any Body, as 'tis impossible he should Lie or deny himself; this I have said in express Words in several Places of my Book; I made it the Foundation of my whole Dispute, and I think it is so important a Truth, that I believe we can have no assurance of any thing in the World, nor of our Salvation without it. Nevertheless, in order to explain the Nature of Deceit, I distinguish the will of Deceiving from the qualifications necessary to perform that Deceit. The will of Deceiving, is always Sinful, and contains properly the Imperfection that is in Deceit; but the Qualifications that might serve to put that Deceit in Execution (k) are good, and contain always some perfection. Let us consider two Men, one of which is stupid and malicious, and the other a virtuous and able Man: It may be said of the first, that he is desirous to deceive some body, but that he has not Wit enough for it; 'tis not for want of Will, but for want of Power. On the contrary it will be said of the second, that he has all the Wit that is requisite to impose upon simple People, but that he is too honest to do it. Now if we apply this to God, it is most certain that he will not Deceive, he cannot have such a Will, he is too perfect for it, being Perfection it self; but as for the qualities requisite for the Execution of a Deceit, such as Wisdom and Power, without doubt God is endow'd with them; not that he can at any time make use of his Wisdom and Power to perform a Deceit, for this still supposes a Will to deceive; but he has however the Wisdom and Power requisite for the execution of a Deceit; and 'tis in this Sense I say, that God can deceive if he will. But that he cannot will it; that is God cannot deceive, not for want of Wisdom or Power; but by reason of the Perfection of his Will. So that these Words, God can deceive if he will, ought to be Paraphras'd thus, God has all the qualifications necessary for the execution of Deceit; he is wise, powerful and constant; he has whatever might serve for the performance of a deceitful Design, if he was willing to deceive; but it is impossible for him to have such a Wit; it is also impossible that he should use his Power for the execution of a Deceit; from whence I conclude, that 'tis impossible he should deceive any body. The meaning of which is, that God is most wise and powerful. Who will deny it? But perhaps

" w

(a) Regis, [illegible] de la Philosophie, [illegible] pag. [illegible] edit. of Amst. [illegible]

(b) It is intituled, De Scripturarum interprete adversus Exercitatorem paradoxum libri duo, and was printed in 1667.

(c) Wolzogue, Apologie pour le Synode de Naerden, part. 4, pag. 160.

(d) See Mr. Vander Weyen, [illegible] of the Book [illegible] proves [illegible] Regnum [illegible] Reformatorum [illegible] in [illegible] de Interprete Scripturæ. Mr. Vogel [illegible] and [illegible]

(e) Wolzogue ubi supra, pag. 156, 157.

(f) Note, that M. de Wolzogue observes afterwards, that he gave M. de Labadie notice of that oversight in the Synod of Naerden, and since that time, adds he, he has mended his Opinion, having observed that it was an Impiety to say that God will and does effectively deceive Men.

(g) That is, Jugemens de plusieurs Professeurs & Docteurs en Theologie qui prononcent Orthodoxe le livre de Louys de Wolzogue de l'Interprete de l'Ecriture.

(h) Wolzogue, Avant-propos des Jugemens, &c.

(k) Compare with this what I have said in the Remark A of the Article Rangouze.

RITTANGELIUS (JOHN STEPHEN) a converted Jew, was of Hamburg in Germany, and lived in the XVIIth Century. He was Professor of the Oriental Languages in the University of Koningsberg, and publish'd (A) some Books, which shew that he was Zealous for the Christian Religion, and a learned Man. He design'd to publish some other Books, and in order to it he made a Journey to Amsterdam; but his Manuscripts were torn to pieces by some Privateers, who took the Ship in which he had embark'd. He himself relates this Adventure in the Epistle Dedicatory of his Jezirah. Some say he was born a Jew. The Journalists of Utrecht * affirm it positively; but others say, that being a Roman Catholick he turned Jew, and afterwards Protestant. They are the words of the Nouvelles de la Republique des Lettres, in August, 1699. page 212. But (B) some are of Opinion

"it will be said that there is some harshness in the "Words. Suppose there was, is it such a Crime as de"serves all the Noise that is made about it? If all harsh "and offensive Words were struck out of the Books of our "Divines, there would be many erasures in them. Cal"vin himself would not be free from Censure about the "Doctrine of Predestination. But as for the Doctrine "in question, I maintain that the Scripture says more "of it than I do. It says, 1 Kings 22. that the Lord "has put a lying Spirit in the Mouth of the false Prophets. "In the 20th Chapter of Jeremiah, verse 7. O Lord "thou hast deceived me, and I was deceived. And in "Ezekiel 14. 9. If the Prophet be deceived, when he has "spoken a thing, I the Lord have deceived that Prophet. "Did I advance any thing that seems at first so strange "as this? I am not ignorant of the Sense that is put up"on those Passages, and I wish they would have ad"mitted that which I put upon my Assertion, without "charging me with the appearance of harshness that is to "be found in the words. That which is surprizing, "is, that M. de Labadie maintains that God can and will "deceive, and that he has deceived: he finds fault with "me because I said only that God can deceive if he will, "but that he cannot will it; and yet none of our Zea"lots reprove him for it."

M. de Wolzogue's Adversaries were not satisfied with that Explication. M. Vogelsang confuted it with great Contempt and Indignation, and observed, among other things, that 'tis likely Descartes took from the Schoolmen his distinction between the Power and the Will to deceive; as if that Power was a kind of Perfection, whereas the Will to deceive is an Imperfection. He will have it that Descartes (a) hunted after the Glory of Invention, by digging up the Ordures of the Schoolmen; and he quotes a Passage of the fifth Chapter of the fourth Book of Aristotle's Topicks, where it is said that the Faculty of doing moral Evil is in God, and in a good Man. He alledges also these words of Thomas Aquinas, which explain that Passage of Aristotle. (b) Deus peccare non potest, quia est omnipotens. Quamvis Philosophus dicat in quarto Topicorum, quod potest Deus & studiosus (vir probus) prava agere. Sed hoc intelligitur vel sub conditione, cujus antecedens sit impossibile, ut puta, si dicamus quod potest Deus prava agere si velit. Nihil enim prohibet conditionalem esse veram, cujus antecedens & consequens est impossibile; sicut si dicatur, si homo est asinus, habet quatuor pedes. Vel, ut intelligatur, quod Deus potest aliqua agere, quæ nunc prava videntur, quæ tamen, si ageret, bona essent. Vel loquitur secundum communem opinionem gentilium, qui homines dicebant transferri in Deos, ut Jovem & Mercurium. He maintains that Thomas Aquinas made himself ridiculous, by pretending to justifie that Opinion of Aristotle. He is very severe upon him: I shall only mention what he says upon the last Point. (c) Quod ultimo loco hariolatur, Aristotelem forte sic locutum fuisse juxta communem opinionem Gentilium, qui homines dicebant transferri in Deos, ut Jovem & Mercurium; quam hoc plane frivolum est? Etenim, juxta communem Gentilium opinionem, Dii non modo facultatem habebant mala vel turpissima perpetrandi, sed & promptam sane voluntatem. Quapropter eorum poetæ furta Numinum & imposturas, & rixas, & pugnas, & mutuorum odiorum rancores, & libidines & adulteria vulgo decantavere. Quod plane contra Philosophi scopum & mentem est, qui mala perpetrandi voluntatem Deo penitus abrogat, etsi facultatem prava faciendi concesserit. He adds (d) some other Passages of the Scripture to those that were quoted by M. de Wolzogue, and shews how they are to be understood. See the Margin †.

(A) And publish'd some Books.] He had said in his Notes upon the Book (e) Jezirah, that the Chaldaick Paraphrase on the Scripture affords very good Arguments against the Jews and the Anti-Trinitarians. Whereupon a Socinian fell upon him in a Book he publish'd under the Name of Irenopolita. Rittangelius answer'd it, and intitled his Answer Libra veritatis, and dedicated it to John Casimir, King of Poland. M. Vander Waeyen (f) caused it to be reprinted at Franeker in 1698. with another Treatise of the same Author concerning the Ceremonies of the Passover. He reprinted also in the same Place, in the Year 1699. Rittangelius's Book de veritate Religionis Christianæ, which contains a large Collection of Passages, (g) shewing that the ancient Jewish Church believed the Mystery of the Trinity, and the Eternal Divinity of the Messias. M. Wagenseil (h) has publish'd some Letters, which Rittangelius wrote to a Jew, and which seem to him to be excellent. M. du Voisin, who refuted the Book of the pretended Irenopolita, has not been so succesful in it as the Christian Proselyte: 'Tis the Opinion (i) of M. Vander Waeyen. I must add that some of those, who don't like Rittangelius's Principles, did no sooner hear that there was a new Edition of his Libra veritatis, but they publish'd a Manuscript written long before, and intitled Bilibra veritatis & rationis, &c. To which they added the Dissertation de verbo Dei, which had occasion'd Rittangelius's Work. Consult the Nouvelles de la Republique des Lettres (k).

Rittangelius publish'd at Koningsberg in 1652. his German Translation of the Prayers, which the Jews make in their Synagogues on the first Day of every Year, and dedicated it to the Elector of Brandenburg. We read in the Epistle Dedicatory, dated the 31st of May, 1652. that he had been sick about a Year, and that he had little hopes of recovering; that he had often desired to have some choice Disciples committed to his Care, that the Talent he had received of God might not die with him, but be transmitted to others; that he could not obtain this Favour, and therefore notwithstanding his great Illness, he had translated some Jewish Prayers into the German Language. He takes notice in his Preface of several Faults committed by Kircher, Cappel, Scaliger, Vechner, Vorstius, Constantin l'Empereur Slegovotius, and Schickardus, in translating some Hebrew Passages (l). The Journal, which I have quoted, informs us of his Infatuation. (m) In eo merito a cordatioribus Theologis reprehendendus, quod ubique fere jactat, ne apicem quidem ullum vel literam in Novo Testamento reperiri, quem non ex Hebræorum antiquitatibus desumtum demonstrare ipse possit, & quidem, ut ipse loquitur, non opinionibus, (quia opinio versatur circa illa, quæ se aliter habere possunt) sed auctoritatibus omnium seculorum, tam Judaicæ, quam Christianæ Ecclesiæ & Antiquitatis. He said there is not a jot in the New Testament, but what is taken from the Jewish Antiquities.

(B) Some are Opinion that he never profest Judaism.] A Manuscript Letter dated the 10th of September, 1701. has been imparted to me, out of which I shall extract some Passages that will please the Curious.

The Author of the Letter was particularly acquainted with our Rittangelius. He observes, 1. That Hornius, Wagenseil, and several other Writers affirm, that he had been, and was perhaps born, a Jew. 2. That the Anonymous Author of the Bilibra veritatis affirms, (n) That Rittangelius having been bred up in the Church of Rome, embraced the Religion of the Jews, who, as 'tis said, Circumcised him at Hamburg; and that afterwards he was Baptized at Dantzick by Mr. Nigrinus, and profess'd himself a Christian. 3. That Christopher Hartknoch, Professor at Thorn, (o) says, That Rittangelius being born a Christian, as 'tis said, and being initiated into the Christian Religion through Baptism, embraced Judaism, and was Circumcised at Hamburg; that afterwards he turn'd Papist, and then Calvinist, and at last Lutheran; that, against Custom, he was made Professor extraordinary of the Hebrew Tongue, in the University of Koningsberg, without any Preliminary Disputation for it; that he was favour'd therein by the Great Marshal, and that a Quarrel arising between Latterman and Mislenta, he sided with Latterman.

The Author of the Letter makes in the first place a Remark upon the Uncertainty that may be observed in those ſion that he never profeſs'd Judaiſm. He was ſtill living the 5th of May, 1651. for 'tis the Date of the Epiſtle Dedicatory * prefix'd to one of his Books.

---

* Biblioth. librorum novorum mens. Sept. & Oct. 1697. pag. 675.

(a) Solet Cartesius e putidissimis antiquorum philosophorum atque scholasticorum [illegible] ineptiarum sordibus excrementa præcipue [illegible] sæpenumero deligere, ut de placitis olfactis & meritis sepultis oblivione, furtivitatis [illegible] gloriolam subripiat. Reinerus Vogelsangius, Theol. D. M. & S. S. Theologiæ Professor in Ecclesia & Gymnasio Sylvæ-ducensi. ad præfat. Lud. Wolzogii necessaria respons. pag. 49.

(b) Thomas Aquinas 25. quæst. art. 3. apud Vogelsang. ibid. p. 51.

(c) Vogels. ibid. p. 52.

(d) Ibid. pag. 69.

† Note, that the Walloon Synod declar'd Wolzogue's Book to be Orthodox.

(e) 'Tis a Book, which the Jews ascribe to the Patriarch Abraham. Others ascribe it to Rabbi Akiba. Rittangelius made a Translation of it with some Notes, which was printed at Amsterdam, in 1642.

ROBERT (John) Profeſſor of the Civil Law in the Univerſity of Orleans, the Place of his Birth, in the XVIth Century, was eſteemed (A) for his Works. Annæus † ROBERT, his Son, Advocate in the Parliament of Paris, publiſh'd ſome Books relating to the Civil Law, that (B) are valued. See the ‖ Letter which Paſquier thoſe Writers, and upon their various Accounts; from whence it follows, that if ſome of 'em are not miſtaken, the others muſt needs relate ſome Falſities. Afterwards he gives an Abſtract of a Letter, which a Senator of Dantzick writ to him the 22d of April, 1700. That Abſtract imports, that Mr. Hartknoch, (ſpeaking without doubt of the ſame Nigrinus, to whom he aſcribes the baptizing of Rittangelius,) ſays (a) that Nigrinus, being a Lutheran, turn'd Calviniſt, and was a Preacher at Dantzick, and then turn'd Papiſt at the Suggeſtion of the Capuchin Valerian Magnus; and that before that time he had ſaid many things agreeable to the Principles of the Socinians concerning the Birth of JESUS CHRIST. That Senator was deſired to inquire whether there was any Monument of the pretended Baptiſm conferred upon Rittangelius by Nigrinus at Dantzick; and he was told, that ſuch a Ceremony would have been performed with great Pomp, and regiſtred in the Archives of the Church, conſidering the Merit and Learning of that new Chriſtian. His Anſwer was, That Nigrinus was invited, in 1630, to be Paſtor of the Reformed in St. Peter's Church at Dantzick; and that the Office of baptizing being appropriated to the Deacons in that City, excluſively of the Paſtors, Nigrinus could not have baptized Rittangelius. He had no time to inquire, whether he contributed to the Converſion of that Proſelyte. From all theſe things the Author of the Letter concludes, that Rittangelius was neither baptized nor re-baptized at Dantzick: Which proves, ſays he, that thoſe are miſtaken, who ſay he was born, or made himſelf a Jew. I wonder, continues he, that ſo many famous Writers have neglected to inquire into the Truth of the Matter; which had been no difficult thing for them during Rittangelius's Life, who, as he had many Friends, had alſo many Enemies. They have been contented to tranſcribe one another, and to publiſh a looſe Report, without giving themſelves the Trouble to examine whether it was well grounded, or not.

He ſays, that being in Pruſſia in the Year 1649, and the two Years following, and having lodged for ſome Months in the Houſe of Mr. Ahaſuerus Brand, Great Marſhal, and one of the four Counſellors of the Regency, he had an Opportunity to know Rittangelius, and to contract a very ſtrict Friendſhip with him. The Great Marſhal was his Patron, and uſed to invite him to Dinner. He and ſeveral other Perſons of Honour and Probity told the Author of the Letter, that Rittangelius was born a Roman Catholick in the Fortreſs of Forcheim in Franconia, in the Dioceſs of Bamberg; that having ſtudied Humane Learning, he went to Conſtantinople, where he very much converſed with the Rabbins for the ſpace of twelve Years; that, at his Return, he imbraced the Reformed Religion, and then removed to Koningsberg, where the Elector of Brandenburg made him Profeſſor Extraordinary of the Hebrew Tongue, none but the Lutherans being at that time allowed to be Profeſſor Ordinary in that Univerſity; that no body believed he was born a Jew, but that ſome ſuſpected he had been one.

The ſame Author of the Letter ſays, that one day the Baron of Eulenburg, Son-in-Law to the Great Marſhal, bantered Rittangelius about Circumciſion, being at Table at his Father-in-Law's, who was ſorry for it; that Rittangelius, being very much aſhamed, excuſed himſelf modeſtly, and complained that they had ſuch thoughts of him contrary to all Truth. After Dinner the Author of the Letter expreſs'd to him his Trouble for the Affront he had received. Rittangelius melting in Tears, and fetching very deep Sighs, proteſted to him that he had not been circumciſed. The ſame Author affirms, that a Miniſter of Elbing, venerable for his Probity and Learning, afforded him a good Proof of it. The unfortunate Rittangelius was married to a Woman, who (b) abuſed him, and was ſupported in her Humours by her Relations, who lived at Elbing. That Miniſter uſed his utmoſt Endeavours to make 'em Friends, and was a Witneſs of the violent Paſſion of the Wife, from which he drew a good Argument againſt the common Opinion of her Husband's being circumciſed; for he argued thus: That Woman, during her Paſſion, vented impudently whatever might contribute to the diſhonour of her Husband; but ſhe never reproach'd him with being circumciſed; therefore he is not circumciſed.

The Author of the Letter adds another Reaſon. It does not appear, ſays he, that any of Rittangelius's Adverſaries upbraided him with ſuch a thing in any of their Books during his Life. Yet they were many, and ſome of 'em ſhewed a great deal of Spite. He did not ſpare them, and briſkly attack'd ſeveral famous Authors in his Writings; and, among others, (c) Miſlenta the Pillar of Lutheraniſm at Koningsberg, and the Buxtorfs, whom he charged with a groſs Ignorance of the Hebrew Tongue.

Laſtly, The Author of the Letter thinks, that ſeveral People entertain'd ſuch Suſpicions of Rittangelius, becauſe he only converſed with the Jews during his Stay at Conſtantinople, and becauſe he look'd like a true Rabbin. But this does not prove that he imbraced Judaiſm. Perhaps he made the Jews believe, he would do it, to make 'em the more willing to teach him their Learning, and then he went away without keeping his Word (d).

(A) Was eſteem'd for his Works.] He publiſh'd Sententiarum juris libri 4. Paris 1557. Recepta juris civilis lectiones libri 2. Orleans 1567. Animadverſionum juris civilis libri 3. Paris 1580. Cujas wrote againſt this laſt Book, under the Name of Mercator. Robert made a Reply, intituled, Notarum libri 3. ad Jacobi Cujacii Mercatoris notarum libros 3. printed at Orleans in 1583. He writ alſo a Book againſt a Miniſter call'd Robert Maſſon. That Work being tranſlated into French, was printed at Paris in 1569. See Du Verdier's (e) Bibliotheque Françoiſe.

(B) Some Books relating to the Civil Law that are valued.] His four Books rerum judicatarum are very much eſteem'd. 'Tis a Collection of the Decrees of the Parliament of Paris, or of the Great Council, &c. concerning very conſiderable Matters. The Reaſons of the Advocates are mention'd at large, and learnedly. It is a continued Series of learned and choice Quotations. I would ſay no more of it, were it not that I remember that among thoſe, who ſay, that the Paſſages of Tagereau, which I have quoted in the Article Quellenec, give ſome Offence; ſome go upon this falſe Suppoſition, that that Writer was a Man of no Authority, and an unknown Perſon; and that he is the only Author, who has been ſo raſh as to write in ſuch a manner. I hope they'll be no longer offended, if I ſhew them, that this Scandal is grounded on a Miſtake about a Matter of Fact; which was one of the Reaſons that moved me to make it appear in the ſecond Edition of the Article Quellenec. 1. That Tagereau's Diſcourſe is not an (f) unknown Piece. 2. That another (g) Advocate of Paris was as free in his Expreſſions as he. I add here, with the ſame Intent, that is, for the Edification of thoſe Gentlemen, that Annæus Robert, one of the moſt famous Advocates of that ſame Parliament, went beyond thoſe two, and even in a Book dedicated to the Great Achilles de Harlai, firſt Preſident of that auguſt Senate. The 10th Chapter of his 4th Book rerum judicatarum runs upon a Proceſs about Impotency brought to the Parliament of Paris by way of Appeal. That Parliament confirm'd by a Decree (†) the Sentence of the Eccleſiaſtical Judges, who had order'd a Search and a Congreſs; which the Husband not liking, had appeal'd to the Parliament. His Advocate repreſented the Abomination of ſuch Proceedings. He did, in ſome meaſure, what happens in great Revolutions of State,

Ggg when

* See the Remark A towards the end.

† And not Andrew, as Konig ſays.

‖ It is in the [illegible] Book, pag. 555, &c. of the 2d Tome.

(a) Ibid. pag. [illegible]

(c) A Doctor of Divinity.

(d) Taken from a Letter Scripta a Medico Germano T. L. K. ad Medicum Hollandicum P. B.

(e) Page 753.

(f) It was inſerted in the Bibliotheque du Droit François, a Work reprinted at Paris in the Year 1657.

(g) Sebaſtien Rouillard.

(†) The 20th of January 1587.

quier writ to him. Lewis ROBERT, his Son, Advocate in the ſame Parliament, died very young, and had already acquired a great Reputation. See James Gutherius's Choartius major, vel de orbitate toleranda. This Treatiſe is to be found at the end of the Book de Jure Manium: The Author addreſs'd it to Annæus ROBERT, and comforted him as well as he could. I have mention'd in another Place Peter ROBERT, one of the moſt illuſtrious Advocates of the Parliament of Paris, in the Reign of Henry II. and I ſhall ſpeak of him (C) again. I don't know whether the Profeſſor of Orleans and he were of the ſame Family.

ROBERVAL, Profeſſor of Mathematicks at Paris, contemporary with Des Cartes, and his great Enemy. See the Sorberiana, and Mr. Baillet *.

ROCCO (GIROLAMO) was ſo great a Maſter in the Art of Writing, that he deſerves to be mentioned. He was a Venetian, and lived in the beginning of the XVIIth Century. The Duke of Savoy (T) expreſs'd a great Eſteem for him.

ROCHE.

when (a) the Laws are overturn'd for a little time, in order to make 'em laſt a long time. He diſpenſed with the Rules of Modeſty, for the good of Modeſty. He made an impudent Deſcription of a Search, to make one abhor it, and endeavour the Extirpation of a moſt impudent Abuſe. Tagereau was animated with the ſame Spirit; but Robert gave himſelf a freer Scope, because he wrote in Latin. (b) Visitis ad perpetuam rei deteſtationem, quam à jure & judicio exſulare convenit, viſitationem (ſpectaculum nunc publica dignum) verbis repræſentari! Parcite pudicæ aures, ſi quid in re obſcœna labitur verecundiæ ſermonis modeſtia. Puella reſupina jacet cruribus hinc inde diſpanſis. Proſtant pudenda corporis partes, quas natura ad delicias generis humani velavit. Has & matronæ (quæ obſtetrices anus ſunt) & medici inſpiciunt, pertractant, diducunt: Magiſtratus vultu compoſito riſum diſſimulat: Matronæ præſentes venereum uſum obitum refricant: Medici pro ætatis diſcrimine, hic vires priſtinas reminiſcitur, ille animo æſtuante inani ludicri ſpectaculo paſcitur: Chirurgus aut ferramento fabrefacto (id ſpeculum matricis vocari ſolet) aut cereo & fictitio Priapo aditus Venereos tentat, aperit, reſerat: Puella jacens titillatione veſana prurit: Ut etiam ſi virgo viſitari cœperit, inde tamen non incorrupta recedat. Modeſty, continues he, (c) does not allow me to ſay more of it. Afterwards he obſerves, that ſuch a Practice might be tolerated, notwithſtanding its Shamefulneſs, if it was a good way to find out the Truth of the Matter; but he maintains, that it is a deceitful way, and thereupon he heaps up many obſcene Things. The whole Chapter is full of ſuch Thoughts and Expreſſions, and nothing can be more laſcivious, than the Paſſage wherein the Wife's Advocate exhorts the poor Husband to a Love-fight, and deſcribes to him the Sweets that one may enjoy in the Field of Battel. There had been ſuch a Cauſe in the Parliament of Paris ſome Years before: Which I obſerve only to acquaint the Reader, that Antony Hotman, Brother to the famous Francis Hotman, declared againſt the Congreſs, and was extreamly (d) free in his Expreſſions. The Book he publiſh'd upon that Subject is intituled, Traité de la diſſolution du Mariage par impuiſſance & froideur de l'homme ou de la femme; A Treatiſe concerning the Diſſolution of Marriage, by reaſon of the Husband's, or the Wife's Frigidity; and was printed ſeveral times. I think the firſt Edition came out in the Year 1581; and that it was in the ſame Year that one of his Kinſmen was proſecuted to have his Marriage diſſolved, under Pretence of Impotency. It is certain that Roulliard ſays, that Antony Hotman compoſed that Treatiſe only to favour one of his Relations, who was impotent. Take notice, that this Brother of Francis Hotman made a great Figure among the Advocates, and was preferred, by the Leaguers, to the Office of Advocate-General in the Parliament of Paris. Let no Body think therefore that Tagereau is the only Author, whom I could have quoted; for I might have alledged the moſt celebrated Advocates. I muſt not forget that the Work of Annæus Robert has been tranſlated and publiſhed in French by an (e) Advocate. I have not that Tranſlation; but I think that the above-quoted Latin Paſſage, and many others, are not expreſs'd in it ſo nakedly, as in the Original, and yet that they are very obſcene.

I have read, in Beza's Hiſtory of the Reformed Churches of France, that an Advocate's Wife, in whoſe Houſe the Proteſtants had ſeveral Meetings at Paris, made her ſelf (f) a Priſoner in the Chatelet, with her two Daughters, to convince the World of the Falſity of the Report, that had been ſpread about the Lewdneſs of thoſe Aſſemblies. "(g) The Court . . . . . . cauſed the two Daughters to be ſearched by ſeveral Surgeons and Midwives, and at ſeveral times. But all the Searchers, except an old Matron, declared them to be Virgins; nor did that Matron poſitively affirm, that they had been corrupted by the approach of a Man; and, at laſt, ſhe begg'd their Pardon, after they had been ſet at Liberty, declaring how, and by whom ſhe had been bribed". Beza does not ſeem to condemn the Trial which they ſubmitted to; and indeed, they found themſelves in ſuch circumſtances as might excuſe them for expoſing themſelves to a Search notwithſtanding Modeſty, and the Danger they ran, becauſe the Searchers might well be ſuſpected of unfair Dealing. I ſhall ſay nothing of the uncertainties of ſuch a Proceeding; but after all, if thoſe Gentlewomen had refus'd to be Searched, they had confirmed thereby the Depoſitions of the falſe Witneſſes. The Queſtion was to confute the Informations which the Preſident Saint André had cauſed to be drawn up, wherein two Witneſſes affirm'd, that in an Aſſembly (upon Thurſday in the Holy Week) made up of a great number of Men, Women and Maids, about twelve a Clock at Night . . . . . after they had Preached, and eat a Pig inſtead of the Paſchal Lamb, and after they had put out the Lamp that gave them Light, every Man fell upon a Woman, and that among other Women, they (the two Witneſſes) ſaw the ſaid Advocate's Wife, and her two young and handſom Daughters, one of which happening to meet one of 'em (one of the Witneſſes) he knew her two or three times for his Share (h). Theſe Informations made a great Noiſe, and were ſhewn to the Queen Mother (i).

(C) And I ſhall ſpeak of him again.] This Peter Robert was (k) a Pariſian. Loiſel ſpeaks of him thus. "He (l) was more eſteem'd than the others "abovementioned, not that he was more Learned "than they, for I believe he was inferior to "them in that Reſpect; but he had a noble Preſence, "a good Voice, and a fine Delivery, and was "more valued for his Natural Parts, than for his "Study. He made himſelf famous particularly by two "Pleadings: the firſt was that which he made for "Preſident d'Oppede, concerning the Inhabitants of "Cabrieres and Merindol; the thing is ſo well deſcribed "by Thuanus, that I need not dwell upon it. "The late M. Clement du Puy had been firſt intruſted "with that Cauſe; but falling Sick of the Sickneſs "of which he died, Preſident d'Oppede apply'd "himſelf to Robert, whom he daily informed "of what he ſhould ſay. The other Reaſon of "Robert's Advancement, was, that turning Proteſtant, "he was employ'd by the Prince of Condé, Grand-Father "of this preſent Prince, to declare his Innocence: "From that time he was always made "uſe of by thoſe of that Religion; which coſt him "his Life, for he was kill'd on St. Bartholomew's "Day."

(T) The Duke of Savoy expreſs'd a great eſteem for him.] The following Paſſage is to be found in a Book, Intituled, La Sage & delectable Folie, written by J. Marcel. "(m) I ſhould be too tedious, "ſhould

---

* Baillet, Vie de Deſcartes, tom. 2. p. 504. where he ſays that there are two faults in the 2d Volume of Merſenne. See also his Traité des Auteurs deguiſez, Pag. 145.

(a) Leges ſemper ut eſſent, aliquando non fuerint, ſaid an ancient Roman.

(b) Annæus Robertus, rerum judicatarum lib. 4. cap. 10. pag. 780. edit. Genev. 1620. in 8vo.

(c) Plura dicere vetat pudor. Id. ibid.

(d) See the Remark G of the Article Quellenec.

(e) Called Tournet. I have it from Mr. Marais, with ſome other particulars.

ROCHEFOUCAUD (ALEXANDER DE LA) Abbot of St. Martin †, Brother to the Count de Randan, who was killed at the Battel of Issoire, and to Francis Bishop of Clermont, who was since Cardinal, engaged unluckily in the Imposture of Martha Brossier, who pretended to be possess'd by the Devil. I have said, in her Article, that the Parliament of Paris having at last ordered her to be carried to Romorantin by the Provost, forbad her Father to let her go out of that Place without leave from the Judge. Notwithstanding that Prohibition, the Father and his Daughter went with our Abbot into Auvergne, and then to Avignon. Tho' the Parliament ‖ of Paris summon'd the Abbot twice, and ordered at last that the Revenues of his Benefices should be seized for Contempt of the Court, this Crew proceeded in their Journey, and went to Rome, γ thinking that the Woman possessed by the Devil would act her part much better on that great Stage, and find more credulous People in that Place, which is the Fountain of Belief. The Bishop ‡ of Clermont was so much suspected of having suggested this foolish Design to his Brother, that he was likewise deprived of his Ecclesiastical Revenues. Henry IV. being well inform'd of the wicked Designs that were brooding, ordered Mr. de Sillery and Cardinal d'Ossat to discover the Plot, and to prepossess the Pope against that Crew, before they should act their part. They carefully executed his Order; besides, Cardinal d'Ossat (Z) prevailed with the Jesuits to side with him; so that the Abbot of St. Martin, at his arrival at Rome, found himself deprived of the chief Assistance he relied upon. The Jesuits forsook him, and the Pope, who had been forewarn'd, did nothing contrary to the Sentence given by the Parliament of Paris against that pretended Demoniack. The Abbot was obliged to implore Henry the Fourth's Clemency for himself and his Brother. Not long after he fell sick, and 'twas said that he died of Grief, for having undertaken so long a Journey to make himself despised. Martha and her Father, being forsaken by every Body, took Sanctuary in the Hospitals §.

† Mezerai, Abreg. Chronolog. ad ann. 1599. pag. [illegible]

‖ Thuanus lib. 123. circa fin.

γ Mezerai ibid.

‡ Thuanus ibid.

§ Mezerai ubi supra. Thuanus speaks of it thus: Ita fabula de Martha a Spiritu obsessa somno evanuit, ipso Sammartino qui spe sua falsus in aula illa despectus esse cœperat, ex mœrore mox mortuo, & Martha patreque ejus ex xenodochiorum stipe miseram vitam vix tolerantibus.

RODON (DAVID DE) or rather DERODON (DAVID) Professor of Philosophy, first at Die, and then at Orange, and at last at Nimes, was a Native of Dauphiné. He was one of the most subtil Logicians in France, and few Spanish or Irish School-men exceeded him in what concerns the Universals, Entia Rationis, and the airy and abstracted Speculations of the Categories, and the Dependencies of the Syllogistical form. But if he equall'd in this the most refined Logicians of the Schools, he far exceeded them in his Physicks; for he imbraced the Opinion of the Moderns and the Hypothesis of Atoms, to explain, as Gassendus did, many Natural Effects by Mechanical Principles. His Body of Philosophy sold very well, and the Printer got a great deal by it, especially by the Abridgment of it; for the long Scholastick Disputes contain'd in his large Work, discouraged many Readers. Derodon wrote a Book de Supposito, wherein he openly declared for Nestorius, against St. Cyril; not by admitting two Persons, but by maintaining that Nestorius did not admit of 'em, and that St. Cyril confounded the two Natures of CHRIST. Wherein he only followed the footsteps (A) of a Gentleman of Provence, whom doubtless he had been acquainted with, and who forsook the Church of Rome to turn Protestant. This Opinion of Derodon is an (B) incident of the famous Dispute between two Ministers of

" should I name all the Princes who have been liberal " and kind to the Virtuoso's; and therefore I shall only " mention what concerns Rocco Girolami of Venice, a " very good Arithmetician, and so excellent a Writer, " that I don't think any Man in his time exceeded " him. He Dedicated a Book Engraven upon Copper-" Plates to his Highness of Savoy in the Year 1603. " adorned with several sorts of Characters, Cyphers, " and excellent Strokes. That great Prince having " seen it, rewarded the Industry of the Author, by " putting with his own Hands a Gold Chain worth " 125 Crowns about his Neck". The Author mentions the same Reward in another place of his Book, viz. in the Chapter (a) Intituled La folie des Ecrivains. Perhaps the Reader will not be displeased to find here the Names of some Persons, who, as he says, excell'd in that Art. " We have seen, (they are his Words) (b) " many fine Writers, who have " Published Books of several sorts of Characters, as " in France, le Gagneur, Lucas, Josserand, and o-" thers; in Italy, D. Augustin of Sienna, M. Martin " of Romagna, Camillo Buonadio of Piacenza, Cresci " a Milanese, Curione a Roman, Palatin, Verune, " and others, with M. Antonio a Genoese, who in " the Year 1606. made a Book containing several " sorts of Letters and Characters, Dedicated to the " Prince of Mantua and Montferrat.

(Z) Cardinal d'Ossat prevailed with the Jesuits to side with him.] He spoke particularly to Father Sirmond, Secretary to their General (c); and having shewed him the King's Orders, he represented to him, that it was to be feared the Attempt of the Abbot would prove an obstacle to the recalling of the Jesuits, because he and the Bishop of Clermont had studied amongst 'em. Afterwards he represented to him the Rashness of such an Undertaking, and how prejudicial it would be to the Church, if the Supreme Courts of the Kingdom should fall out again with the Pope. Those Reasons produced a very good Effect.

(A) Wherein he only followed the Footsteps of a Gentleman of Provence.] His Name was Giles Gaillard. He turn'd Protestant about the Year 1630. and retired to Orange, where he made a Panegyrick upon Prince Frederick Henry. He took care to publish the Motives of his Conversion. See the Book he Intituled Le Proselyte Evangelique. The following Passage, concerning his Book de Supposito, is to be found in a Letter of Sorbiere to Vossius written in the Year 1646. when he sent him the Copy he had been presented with by the Author. (d) Illi (Ægidio Gailliardo nobili Gallo) nuper venit in mentem nescio quid circa Nestorium, quasi perperam in Ephesina Synodo fuerit livore Cyrilli hæreseos insimulatus damnatusque; eaque de re edidit librum, cui titulus est De Supposito. The Postscript to this Letter is remarkable; for it informs us (e) that one of the most learned Ministers was of the same Opinion.

(d) See the 432d Letter, among those that were written to Vossius, pag. 285.

(e) Audio Joh. Croium in eadem esse sententia in qua Gaillardus noster.

(B) An incident of a famous Dispute.] This will appear by a long Passage of M. Saurin, one of those two Disputants. " (f) M. Jurieu is a wonderful " Man: An Error will be purified by going thro' " his Channel, and what is Heresie in another Man, " is an Orthodox Doctrine in him, by vertue of " his violent, and impetuous Zeal. In his first Apo-" logy which he Published after the Synod of Ley-

(f) Saurin, Examen de la Theologie de Mr. Jurieu, pag. 867. & seq.

" den, of Holland, and which is not * ended yet. I shall say something of it in the Remark and

* I publish'd it in the Year 1690 when I was about the first Edition of this Work; but I must say now, that this Controversie was ended long after.

"don, he gives us the History of the rise and growth of that pernicious Cabal of Socinians, or Men inclined to Socinianism, to whom all Religions are indifferent, and who are half Atheists, in which he involves all those whom he has a mind to Sacrifice to the hatred of the Publick. He relates several particulars concerning that Cabal, to have a fair Pretence of enumerating his Virtues and noble Exploits. Among the Characters of Heresie, which he has discover'd in some Divines, he reckons their Approbation of Derodon's Book, Intitled De Supposito, which he styles twice in half a Page the wretched Book De Supposito. He informs us that this wretched Book was burnt at Toulouse: A great Sign of Reprobation in a Book! I confess that Author had been suspected of some Errors: Perhaps he gave occasion to those Suspicions, by departing from the Opinions commonly receiv'd, and carrying his Philosophical Liberty a little too far. He was sometimes brought into Trouble for his Doctrine; but he came off with Honour. I saw him at Geneva in the Year 1664, where he was a Refugee, after he had been Banish'd from France, for having writ a Book, Intitled, Le Tombeau de la Messe. I often discoursed with him about several Matters, and always found him very Orthodox. He died at Geneva in the same Year 1664, if I am not mistaken, not long after I set out from thence for Holland. I was informed that his Death had been very edifying, and that he had made a Confession of Faith that was approved. But whatever the private Opinions of that Philosopher might be, or whatever he might have said in Conversation, or writ in other Books, his Treatise De Supposito is not answerable for them, but only for the Errors contained in it. When a Man is suspected, he ought to be narrowly observed, and all his Words ought to be scanned, ne lateat anguis in herba; but his Orthodox Opinions must not be changed into Errors, nor all his Errors into Heresies. The Design of this Reflection is not fully to justifie the Treatise De Supposito; but to excuse it, being condemn'd by a Man who himself stands in need of Excuse and Pardon. One can hardly guess what M. Jurieu finds fault with in that Book, unless it be the same Liberty of condemning the Title of Mother of God, bestowed upon the Holy Virgin, which he himself takes in one of his Pastoral Letters. That Philosopher explains the Word Suppositum in a very Orthodox manner, both with respect to divine and humane Persons. In his Explication of the Person of Christ after his Incarnation, he pitches upon the Opinion that is commonly received, and least liable to ill consequences, and the Cavils of Hereticks. 'Tis true, that he sides with Nestorius, against Cyril and the Fathers of the Council of Ephesus, from whom he thinks Eutyches had his Heresie. But if this be an Error, 'tis only in a matter of fact; and a Book cannot be accounted pernicious upon such an account. What Poison is there then in that unfortunate Book? it lyes only in the Author's Aversion for the Title of Θεοτόκος, Mother of God, and his reflecting upon Cyril, and the Divines of his Party, whom he looks upon as the Patriarchs (a) of Idolatry. The Censurer of this Philosopher is not so severe in his Judgment of 'em, but his Opinion is the same as to the Doctrine. He spares those, who have introduced the Word in question into the Church; but he uses that Word without any Mercy. In his Opinion Cyril was no Idolater, and his fault lyes only in a wrong Zeal; but this fatal Word Θεοτόκος has occasion'd Idolatry, and even the Nestorian Heresie. I must set down once more the very Words of our Divine so zealous for Orthodoxy, and particularly for the Anti-Nestorian Orthodoxy.

The Author inserts in this place a large extract of the Pastoral Letters of his Adversary, wherein the Title of Mother of God is condemned as the Cause of Idolatry, and then he goes on thus. "(b) The Author of the Book, Intitled De Supposito, says nothing at the bottom that goes beyond this. For if M. Jurieu pretends that this Philosopher absolutely refused to call the Holy Virgin Mother of God, it will be said that he did it in the same Sense that M. Jurieu himself does it. The contrary cannot be proved by his Book. And since that Author acknowledges one only Person as well as two Natures in Christ, and according to the Principles of his Philosophy, actiones & passiones sunt Suppositorum, a Maxim which he often repeats; there is reason to believe that he did not deny that the Holy Virgin was the Mother of him, who is God, and a Divine Person. Accordingly he calls her the Mother of Christ, having acknowledged that Christ is but one Person, both God and Man, and even a Divine Person, whose personality does properly reside in the Word. What great difference is there then between the niceness of this Philosopher, and that of our Divine? Why is the former an Heretick, and the latter Orthodox, when they think and speak the same thing about the same Matter? . . . . . As for me, I have openly declared against the niceness of the Philosopher, and of the Divine. I persist in this Declaration; I don't approve their Boldness, and the Singularity of their Opinions; I condemn their Errors; I blame them both, but I Anathematise neither of 'em . . . . . I have sometimes admired Derodon's Zeal, a Protestant, Anti-Papist and Anti-Idolatrous Zeal. He calls all the Reformed Ministers Angels of Laodicea, and lukewarm Pastors, because we are not willing to Excommunicate Cyril, and the Fathers of the Council of Ephesus. This is a very extraordinary Zeal for a Philosopher; but M. Jurieu is too indulgent, for he excuses Cyril and the Fathers of the Council of Ephesus, who introduced Idolatry. Derodon's System is more coherent than that of M. Jurieu. Derodon places Cyril, and the Fathers of the Council of Ephesus, among the Idolaters, whose Fathers they are. M. Jurieu distinguishes the Fathers from the Children, tho' he charges the former with being the cause of the Idolatry of the latter. All the difference between Derodon and M. Jurieu lyes in this: according to Derodon, Cyril and the Fathers of the Council of Ephesus acted and argued consequentially, they were Idolaters, and established Idolatry; whereas, according to M. Jurieu, those Fathers who composed an Oecumenical Council, introduced the greatest of all Idolatries, without being Idolaters.

Mr Jurieu's Reply is very long, and made up of many pieces. I shall only set down some Passages out of it, that concern Derodon. "(c) Derodon's Book De Supposito is scarce, and I had not seen it, when I publish'd a loose Sheet with this Title, Idée des Sentimens de M. Saurin; and therefore what I have said of it in that small Piece ought not to be minded. Derodon's Book has been since imparted to me by an illustrious Friend: Having perused it, I have not found any formal Heresie in it, but a prodigious Rashness, and a violent desire of making Cyril odious, and defaming the Council of Ephesus. Besides, his Quotations are unfaithful, his Explications unfair, and his Proofs sophistical: And therefore I believe that Book deserved to be burnt, as it was by a Decree of the Parliament of Toulouse; for to cry down as Hereticks those who maintain'd the holy Mysteries, is an infallible way of bringing those Mysteries into Contempt. The Author was one of those Latitudinarians, who appeared above forty Years ago in the Southern Provinces; and it seems, that Petit, Professor of Divinity at Nimes, favoured them. At least, one may infer it from the Extracts produced out of him by M. d' Huisseau, a great Latitudinarian, in Vindication of his Book, intituled, De la Reunion du Christianisme. Derodon, in order to promote the common Interest of his Sect, makes it his business to render the Ancients odious and contemptible. . . . . (d) Derodon, the greatest, and perhaps (e) the first Enemy of Cyril among the Moderns, was a silly Sophist, ignorant of Antiquity: He was Professor of Philosophy, and took a great Pride in his Subtilty. But learned and wise Men know what is a Man subtil in the Peripatetick way: Such a one is a Sophist; which was also Derodon's Character. He had a mind to distinguish and immorta-
" lize

(a) See in the Remark L of the Article Nestorius, whether it be true, that the Words Mother of God, have occasion'd the Worship paid to the holy Virgin.

(b) Idem Saurin, ibid. pag. 570.

and I will not omit the ſpecious Accuſation (C) of Ignorance, in Matters relating to Eccleſiaſtical Antiquity, brought in againſt that Philoſopher. He ſet up for a Controverſiſt, and ſo exaſperated his Adverſaries, that they obtain'd a Decree from the King, whereby he was baniſh'd the Kingdom * in the Year 1663, if I am not miſtaken. He retired to Geneva, where he died two Years after, or thereabouts. Thoſe of his Party were not always pleaſed with his Doctrine, and he was brought into trouble upon that Account, † but he came off with Honour. I don't know whether " ize himſelf by ſetting up againſt Cyril, and the " Council of Epheſus. He writ his Book deſignedly, " to ſhew that he was an Eutychian, that is, that he " confounded the two Natures; and to prove, on the " contrary, that Neſtorius was a very orthodox Man. " This Work is mightily cried up by our Latitudi- " narians. The firſt time I ſaw it, it was in M. " Papin's Hands, who praiſed it as an excellent Book. " M. Saurin has often beſtowed the ſame Encomium " upon it in my Preſence; which ſhews, that thoſe " two Men are thoroughly unacquainted with Eccle- " ſiaſtical Matters. Derodon was a Man of the " ſame Character, and undertook to write upon a " Subject that he was ignorant of. He took or ſtole " what he ſays againſt Cyril from a Friend whom " he often mentions, and who had writ a compleat " Hiſtory of the Diſputes of Cyril and Neſtorius, which " was to be publiſhed: This he does not ſcruple to " confeſs . . . . . (a) Beſides his Ignorance, he was " guilty of Malignity; for nothing can be more ma- " licious and unfair than that Man's diſpute againſt " St. Cyril.

I ſhall make no Reflections upon this; for 'tis likely Mr. Saurin's Reply will come out before I make an end of this Work; and the Readers will find in that Reply (b) the raſh Judgments and other Faults of Mr. Jurieu fully laid open. I ſhall only ſay, that 'tis not at all likely that Derodon intended to favour the pretended Faction of the Latitudinarians; for he maintains Neſtorius's Cauſe, not by looking upon him as the Defender (c) of the moral Union of the Word with the Human Nature, but by conſidering him as an Orthodox Man, with reſpect to the Hypoſtatical Union; and he impugns Cyril, only becauſe he looks upon him as the Author of the Eutychian confuſion of the two Natures. Without doubt he only deſigned to vex the Papiſts, and make 'em aſham'd of their oppreſſing the Memory of Innocent Men, whilſt they extol to the Sky a Heretick, who had the ſecular Power, the Emperor's Favour, and the prevailing Cabal of a Council on his ſide. Nay, if one had a mind to carry Charity ſomething farther, one might affirm, that his only Deſign was to protect Innocence, by making it appear that Neſtorius is wrongfully accounted an Heretick. A Man who impugns St. Cyril, cannot be ſaid to be a malicious Man; no ſuch thing can be neceſſarily inferr'd from it. Perhaps no Party-leader did ever leſs deſerve to be tenderly uſed: he behaved himſelf with ſo much Violence and Fury, that he deſerves no Thanks for having maintain'd Truth, ſuppoſing he maintain'd it; if he found it, 'twas only by chance and accidentally. Some unruly Horſes, who do not break their Heads againſt the Walls of a Stable, becauſe their Fury moves them towards a Door, which happen to be half open, are a faithful Picture of ſome Doctors who light upon Orthodoxy, notwithſtanding a thouſand violent Paſſions wherewith they are tranſported. All the common Places alledged by Mr. Jurieu to juſtify St. Cyril, and to condemn Neſtorius, may ſerve to juſtify the latter, and condemn the former. I could eaſily give a Specimen of it.

(C) The ſpecious Accuſation of Ignorance.] " (d) " 'Tis highly probable, that he had not ſeen the Acts " of the Council of Epheſus; the bare Title of his " Book is ſufficient to make one ſenſible of it. Diſ- " putatio de ſuppoſito; in quâ plurima hactenus inau- " dita de Neſtorio tanquam Orthodoxo, & de Cyrillo " Alexandrino, aliiſque Epiſcopis in Synodum Epheſi " coactis tanquam hæreticis; and in the 71ſt Page of " his Book he ſays, Rem novam & hactenus inaudi- " tam jam demonſtrandam ſuſcipimus &c. Scilicet " Cyrillum Alexandrinum & alios Epiſcopos qui tertio " Concilio Oecumenico interfuerunt fuiſſe hæreticos, & " Authores hæreſis Eutychianæ. What a prodigious " Ignorance and Boldneſs is this! If this Man had " but caſt his Eyes upon the Authors of the Fifth " Century, eſpecially upon the Acts of the Council " of Epheſus, would he have ſaid, that the Accu- " ſation brought againſt Cyril, of being the Author " of the Eutychian Hereſie, which confounds the " two Natures, is a thing unheard of? He was re- " proached with it by all the Neſtorians, and many " others who were not Neſtorians; by John Biſhop " of Antioch, who Excommunicated Cyril as con- " founding the two Natures, and aſcribing to the " Divine Nature all the Infirmities that belong on- " ly to the Human Nature of Chriſt." The Author alledges ſeveral other ſuch Proofs, whereby it appears that St. Cyril was accuſed of that Hereſie, and concludes with theſe Words, (e) And therefore his telling us that his Accuſation againſt Cyril is a new Diſcovery, and a thing unheard of, betrays a great Ignorance, and an intolerable Vanity.

If I had Derodon's Book I would give my Opinion about this Particular; but ſince I have it not, I ſhall only ſay, that the Words quoted out of it by his Cenſurer do not prove what he brings 'em for. They ſhew that Derodon undertook to prove, as a thing unheard of, not that St. Cyril was accuſed of being the Author of Eutyches's Errors; but that St. Cyril, and the other Fathers of the third Oecumenical Council, were Hereticks, and brought in Eutychianiſm: Which weakens (f) the Arguments alledged for the Ignorance of that Philoſopher, and ſhews that his Cenſurer perverts, or does not underſtand the ſtate of the Queſtion. If it be a miſtake, it ought to be excuſed, conſidering the perplexity he muſt needs have been in, being to act the part of an Apologiſt for thoſe very Men, whom he had ſeverely cenſured. Conſider, that this Man being to anſwer the Biſhop of Meaux, gave a hideous Deſcription of the primitive Fathers, and being to anſwer Mr. Saurin was obliged to commend thoſe ſame Fathers. How can ſuch a Man be maſter of his Thoughts? Can an Author, beaten at his own Weapon, and who cannot defend himſelf but by confuting and contradicting himſelf in a moſt wretched manner; I ſay, can ſuch an Author be anſwerable for an over ſight? Neceſſity has no Law; this is what he may plead for himſelf: But ſuch an Apology will not ſatisfy the juſt Complaints of the Publick; all the Readers may very well tell him, Whom do you take us for? Muſt we be ſo ſhamefully impoſed upon? When you cannot anſwer an Adverſary but by ſuppoſing that the Fathers were Heretical, you charge 'em with Hereſie; and becauſe at a Years end it is neceſſary for you that they ſhould be Orthodox, in order to get rid of another Adverſary, you make 'em ſound in their Doctrine: Is it not a very unfair and ſhameful thing?

Here follows Mr. Saurin's Anſwer, to clear Derodon of the Ignorance charged upon him. " (g) Mr. " Jurieu makes it appear, that he has not ſeen De- " rodon's Treatiſe De Suppoſito, or that he hopes no " body will ſee it; for the Author has collected ma- " ny Teſtimonies and Hiſtorical Facts, to confirm his " Accuſation againſt Cyril and the Council of Ephe- " ſus. He quotes Ibas Biſhop of Edeſſa, Gennadius " Patriarch of Conſtantinople, Theodoret Biſhop of " Cyrus, John Archbiſhop of Antioch, and a- " bove forty Eaſtern Biſhops, who charged Cyril " with the Hereſie of Apollinaris, and objected to " him that he made the Divine Nature of Chriſt " paſſible, by confounding it with his Human Na- " ture. The Author therefore was not ignorant of " this, and when he ſpeaks of Cyril's Hereſie, and " Neſtorius's Orthodoxy, as of a thing unheard of, " it is with reſpect to the latter Ages, and not with " reſpect to the Age that Cyril and Neſtorius liv'd in: " Nay, he mention as a thing unheard of, not the " Queſtion, which of thoſe two Patriarchs was a " Heretick, or an Orthodox Man, but the Anſwer

" he

* For having publiſhed a Book intitled, Tombeau de la Meſſe.

† See the Remark B.

(a) Jurieu ibid. pag. 281. 282.

(b) It came out in 1697 with this Title, Juſtification de la doctrine du Sieur Saurin … contre deux libelles de Mr. Jurieu l'un intitulé Idée des ſentimens &c. & l'autre le Religion du Latitudinaire. See pag. 13. 341. & ſeq.

(c) Note … Mr. Jurieu … pag. … the … the Latitudinarian … againſt Cyril …

(d) Id. … pag. 27 … U … of the … which … are ſo … f. … 279.

(e) Id. ib. pag. 281.

(f) There is a very great difference between maintaining that a whole Council is Heretical; and maintaining, that a private Man was formerly accuſed of Hereſie. The firſt Aſſertion may be advanced as a thing unheard of, without pretending that the charge laid upon that private Man is a matter of Fact not known before.

(g) Saurin, Juſtification de ſa doctrine contre deux libelles de Mr Jurieu pag. 346.

whether the Synods or Conſiſtories were offended at his denying, that the Conſervation of Creatures is a (D) continual Creation.

He had been a Roman Catholick; which is the reaſon why Theophilus Raynaud calls him a Deſerter of Faith, for 'tis he that is (E) meant in the Paſſage I quote out of his Haplotheca.

ROHAN (RENATA DE) Daughter * of Lewis de Rohan IV. Seigneur de Guemené, was the accidental cauſe of a Murder, which was like to occaſion many Diſorders at the Court of France, ſoon after the (A) Death of Francis II. She was the Widow of Francis de Rohan, Seigneur de Gié, and courted by the Count de Laval †. The Baſtard de Bueil, Son to the Count de Sancerre, and ‖ one of the moſt renowned Braves of the Duke of Guiſe, deſigning to oppoſe that Courtſhip, was not contented to become the Count's Rival, but beſides, inſolently gave out that this Widow, after a promiſe of Marriage, written and ſign'd with her own Hand, had granted him the laſt Favours. Perhaps he only intended to put Laval and his other Rivals out of conceit with that Lady; but Laval was of Opinion, that it was an Affront (B) that required a ſhed- ding

* Father Anſelme, Hiſt. des grands Officiers, pag. 56.

† Renatus de Laval, Seigneur de Loué.

‖ Varillas, Hiſt. de Charles IX. tom. 1. pag. 8.

he makes to it, by juſtifying Neſtorius, and condemning Cyril.

(D) Is a continual Creation.] He denied a Doctrine, which tho' very common among the Spaniſh and Iriſh Schoolmen, is very evident. We muſt reject the cleareſt Notions, or acknowledge that a Being made out of nothing by the infinite Power of the Creator, cannot have any cauſe of Exiſtence in itſelf; and therefore it cannot continue to Exiſt but by the ſame Power that produced it at firſt: It is therefore created in each moment of its duration, that is, it exiſts in each moment, only becauſe God continues to have the ſame Will that he had, when that Being began to exiſt.

This act of the Divino Will cannot ceaſe to create whilſt it ſubſiſts, ſince it did create in the firſt moment that Creatures began to exiſt. Derodon's Objections may be eaſily confuted: they are much the ſame with thoſe propoſed by Bernier (a). A profeſſor (b) of Philoſophy in the Academy of Puylaurent, wrote a Treatiſe againſt Derodon upon that Subject, and ſolidly confuted him. That Profeſſor had ſeveral Quarrels with him at Nimes, and I have heard ſay, that he had a hand in a Book intitul'd, L'impieté decouverte, which was publiſh'd againſt Derodon. I have alſo been told, that M. Claude, who was then Miniſter of Nimes, lent a helping hand to the Enemies of that Philoſopher, by Writing, or at leaſt Correcting that Work. It is an abſurd thing to ſay, with Gaſſendus and Derodon, that God contributes to the preſervation of Creatures by preventing their Deſtruction. Could any thing deſtroy them, ſince there are but two ſorts of Beings in the Univerſe, viz. God and the Creatures? Such a care would be as needleſs as the watchfulneſs of a Shepherd againſt Wolves in a Country where there are no Wolves, and even where there could be none. It were in vain to ſay that a Body deſtroys another Body, that Fire deſtroys Wood, that a Man kills another Man, &c. for this is not a deſtruction of Creatures, but only a change of Modifications: Modes are not accounted the ſubject of Creation, but the Subſtances in which they reſide.

(E) 'Tis he that is meant in the Paſſage I quote.] Having ſaid that the ſubtil Scotus is falſly accuſed of admitting a kind of real diſtinction between the Divine Eſſence and its Attributes; he adds, that he had lately diſcourſed at Orange with an Apoſtate, who alledged the Authority of Scotus to maintain a new Blaſphemy. (c) Placuit hanc crambem obiter hic recoquere, quia his ipſis diebus Arauſicæ Spurcus FIDEI DESERTOR blaſphemiam novam Scoti autoritate tegere eſt auſus. That Blaſphemy was, that the three Perſonalities of the Trinity are Modes of the Divine Eſſence properly ſo call'd. He obſerves, that this Innovator, who quoted Scotus in his Preſence, had not made uſe of his Authority in his Diſputation de Suppoſito. 'Tis a ſign he meant Derodon. Here's another Proof of it: (d) Perperam tam craſſus error, ſimplicitatem divinam & puriſſimam actualitatem exſcindens tanti viri (Scoti) ſuffragio calumnioſè captato munitus eſt ab eo, quem retuli ſpurco fidei deſertore male Rotundo. This laſt Word is a manifeſt alluſion to Derodon's Name. Three Years after he made uſe of the ſame Quibble in another Book, wherein he refuted Derodon, who maintained that the Work intitled Theſaurus, and aſcribed to St. Cyril, was not that Father's. (e) Eidem S. Cyrillo ſuppoſititium eſſe opus quod inſcribitur Theſaurus contendit ſpurcus hæreticus, autor diſputationis de ſuppoſito, quam nuperrime ementito nomine loci ſuoque ſuppreſſo, homo male teres atque ROTUNDUS edidit Arauſicæ. In ea diſputatione, quæ eſt una jugis hæreſeon & atrociſſimarum calumniarum lepra, nebulo qui in S. Cyrillum maxime rabit, abjudicat ei opus Theſauri.

(A) Soon after the death of Francis the Second.] Varillas (f) ſays, that it was three Days after the death of that Prince; but he is miſtaken, having not carefully conſidered Thuanus's Words. (g) Triduo poſt de Vicedomini Carnutum morte allatum eſt . . . . . in idem tempus incidit Buellii . . . . . cædes. If he had minded what goes before, he might have ſeen that this triduo refers to the 21ſt (h) of December, on which Day a Reſolution was formed, the Subſtance whereof is to be found in the foregoing Words of that Hiſtorian. According to this account, the News of the Vidame's Death came to Orleans the 24th of December. But Francis II. died the 5th of the ſame Month, and therefore there had been more than three Days between the King's Death, and the Baſtard's Murther. Tho' I take notice of this fault, I am not ignorant that it is very inconſiderable; but 'tis fit the Readers ſhould know what leads a Writer into an Error. I don't pretend that the Vidame of Chartres died 15 or 16 Days after the King; I only mean, that if we keep to Thuanus's Account, we muſt judge of it in that manner: But I would adviſe no body to give Credit to that Hiſtorian in this particular. My reaſon is, that Thuanus follows Preſident de la Place, whoſe Chronology is not at all exact upon this Head. For the account he gives runs thus: Francis II. dies the 5th of December, 1560; the King of Navarre reſigns the Regency to the Queen-Mother; a Regulation is agreed upon the 21ſt of December; three Days after, the Death of the Vidame of Chartres is heard of; the greateſt Difficulties being removed by that Regulation, the holding of the States is reſolved upon, notwithſtanding the Proteſtations of part of the Deputies; Cardinal de Lorraine endeavours to get a Commiſſion, in order to make a Speech in the Name of the three States of the Kingdom; he does not ſucceed in his Deſign; hereupon the Baſtard de Sancerre is killed; laſtly, the States meet on the 13th of December. This is the model that Thuanus goes by, which is of no uſe to fix the Day on which the Vidame died, nor that on which the Baſtard was kill'd.

(B) That it was an Affront that required a ſhedding of Blood.] This is the Reſult of the unhappy Maxims of the Point of Honour, conſidering how indulgent the Judges are to thoſe who ſtain a Woman's Reputation by their Slanders. If you proſecute a downright Calumniator, or an indiſcreet bragging Fool upon ſuch an account, they'll come off with a Denial or a Retractation. This is what moves a Duelliſt to right himſelf. The Baſtard expected it, and without doubt (i) truſted to his Courage and Skill more than to the Juſtice of his Cauſe; for can any one ſay with any Juſtice, even without telling a Lie, that he has obtained ſuch Favours? But he was attacked in ſuch a manner, that he could not defend himſelf.

(a) See Bernier's Book printed at Amſterdam in 1685, and intituled, Traité du libre & du volontaire.

(b) He was a Phyſician, call'd John Bon; his Body of Philoſophy has been printed.

(c) Theoph. Raynaud. Hoplothec. ſect. 2. ſerie 1. cap. 6. pag. 89. That Book was printed at Lyons in the Year 1650.

(d) Id. ib. pag. 90.

(C) Thoſe

ding of Blood; and becauſe his Eſteem for the Baſtard was not great enough to do him the Honour to fight him, he took an Opportunity to kill him at Orleans. The * Conſtable Montmorency approved that Murther, and begg'd Laval's Pardon: On the contrary, the Houſe of Guiſe urged that the Murderer ſhould be puniſh'd; and their Credit did ſo prevail in the Council, that the King of Navarre, in whoſe Palace Laval had taken Sanctuary, was obliged to procure his Eſcape in the Night. Afterwards his Eſtate was Confiſcated †. Thoſe, who ſay (G) that the Conſtable proſecuted the Murtherer, becauſe he was of his Family, are not miſtaken. Our Renata married Renatus de Laval β; and John de Laval, Marquis de Neſle, was her third Husband.

ROHAN (ANNE DE) the Daughter of Renatus de Rohan and Catherine de Parthenay, Heireſs of the Houſe of Soubiſe, was no leſs Illuſtrious for her Piety and great Parts, than for her Noble Extraction. She was Siſter to the Duke of Rohan, the Pillar of the Proteſtants during the Civil Wars, in the Reign of Lewis XIII. I have ſaid in another place ʒ, that ſhe bore the Hardſhips of the Siege of Rochelle with an heroical Conſtancy; and that, for the ſpace of three Months, ſhe lived upon Horſes Fleſh and four Ounces of Bread every Day. The Hiſtorian δ who informs us of this Particular, adds, That ſhe and her Mother refuſed to be comprehended in the Capitulation, and remained Priſoners of War. He beſtows this Encomium upon her, That ſhe was celebrated for her exemplary Piety among thoſe of her Religion, and for her Learning which was uncommon in one of her Sex. She made very good Verſes: The Excellent (T) Poem ſhe wrote upon the Death of Henry the Fourth is a Proof of it. What is ſaid of her Skill in (Z) the Hebrew Tongue is very remarkable. She died a Maid at Paris the 20th of September, 1646, in the ſixty ſecond Year of her Age. Mrs. Schurman wrote ſome Letters to her, which may be ſeen in the Collection of her Works.

* Id. ib.

† Id ib.

β Father Anſelme ibid.

ʒ In the Article of Catherine de Parthenay.

δ Hiſt. du Duc de Rohan, Paris 1666.

ROY

(G) Thoſe, who ſay.] President de la Place is (a) one of them; Loüe, ſays he, was ſupported by the Conſtable, becauſe the ſaid Lady was grand Neece to the ſaid Conſtable, and the ſaid Loüé was deſcended in a direct maſculine Line from the Conſtable Matthew Montmorency, as well as the ſaid Conſtable. Thuanus makes the ſame Obſervation concerning Renatus de Laval: (b) Unde magna rurſus inimicitiarum ſeges inter Guiſianos & Momorantios orta eſt, cum illi Sancerra Comiti adeſſent, hi Lavalium uti ex Matthæi Momorantii Equitum Magiſtri ſtirpe profectum tuerentur. I cannot apprehend why Varillas, who had ſaid in the firſt (c) Edition of his Life of Charles the Ninth, That the Count de Laval was of the Houſe of Montmorency, ſtruck it out in the ſecond. I eaſily apprehend why he left out, that this Count was Brother-in-Law to the Chatillons; for it is a plain Falſity: But the other Fact agrees with the Genealogy of the Houſe of Montmorency, publiſhed by (d) du Cheſne.

(T) The excellent Poem ſhe wrote.] D' Aubigné, who was ſparing of his Praiſes, inſerted part of it at the end of his Hiſtory, and prefixed theſe Words to it: Anne de Rohan, Princeſs of Leon, and of all thoſe who write well at this time, will ſpeak better than I. She expreſſes her ſelf thus:

> Quoi? faut-il que Henri, ce redouté Monarque,
> Ce dompteur des humains, ſoit dompté par la >   Parque?

I would not have mention'd thoſe two Verſes, were it not that they afford Matter for a Criticiſm. M. Peliſſon having ſaid, (e) That it was one of Malherbe's Maxims, that the Adjectives ending with an e Maſculine, ought never to be placed before, but after a Subſtantive; whereas thoſe that have a feminine Termination, may be placed before or after, as one thinks fit; that one may ſay for inſtance ce redoutable Monarque; or, ce monarque redoutable; and, on the contrary, that one may ſay ce monarque redouté, but not ce redouté monarque; I ſay, Mr. Peliſſon having ſaid this, goes on thus: I have not pitch'd upon this Example without Reaſon, and at Random; for I have often heard Mr. de Gombauld ſay, that before this Obſervation had been made, Malherbe and he walking one Day together, and diſcourſing of ſome Verſes of Anne de Rohan, one of which was,

> Quoy faut-il que Henri, ce redouté Monarque.

Malherbe told him ſeveral times, that he did not like the end of that Verſe, without being able to give any Reaſon for it; which made him think of it very attentively, and having immediately found out the reaſon of it, he imparted it to Malherbe, who was as much pleaſed as if he had found a Treaſure, and afterwards made a general Rule of it. Now here is an Obſervation of Menage not very well grounded. M. de Gombauld, ſays he (f), did alſo frequently diſcourſe with me of that Converſation he had with Malherbe, but not altogether in the ſame manner as M. Peliſſon relates it: for he always told me, that 'twas he who perceived that redouté Monarque was wrong. However that Rule, whether it be Malherbe's or Gombauld's, is altogether falſe: (g) He proves it by ſeveral Examples, and ſhews that Malherbe himſelf did not keep to it, ſince he ſaid in two places aſſeuré Secours. But this is not the thing I would be at. I maintain, that Menage underſtood M. Peliſſon's Words, as if they ſignified that it was Malherbe, and not Gombauld, who found out the Reaſon why the Verſe in queſtion was faulty; for had he not underſtood them in that Senſe, he would not have ſaid, this Rule, whether it be Malherbe's or Gombauld's. The plain meaning of which is, that this Rule was found out by Malherbe, according to Mr. Peliſſon's Account, and by Gombauld, as Menage was told by Gombauld himſelf. But it is more plain ſtill, that Mr. Peliſſon aſcribes the Diſcovery to the latter, and not at all to Malherbe: Will any Body wonder, that ſometimes a Latin Author ſhould not be underſtood for want of Application; ſince M. Menage did not underſtand a French Author, though he expreſs'd himſelf very intelligibly?

(Z) What is ſaid of her Skill in the Hebrew Tongue, &c.] She read the Old Teſtament in that Language; and inſtead of ſinging Pſalms at Church in French Verſe as others did, ſhe meditated upon them in Hebrew. (h) Hanc illuſtriſſimam & ſapientiſſimam Principem Hebraicis Literis haud leviter fuiſſe tinctam teſtis fuit αὐτόπτης Rev. Pærens, dum Pariſiis degeret; quotieſcunque enim ipſam adiret, Vet. Teſtamenti caput aliquod Hebraicè legentem inveniebat, & quod mirere ne in Eccleſia quidem hocce ſtudium deſeruit, cum etiam illic, dum Hymni Davidici decantarentur, ipſa interim Hebraico idiomate mente pſalleret. Mr. Colomies, who mentions this, alledges an Authority for it in the Margin, which is worth (i) tranſcribing.

(a) De l'Etat de la Relig. & Repub. lib. 9. towards the end.

(b) Thuanus ubi ſupra.

(c) Tome 1. pag. 8. Dutch Edit.

(d) [illegible] p. 19.

(e) Hiſt. [illegible] Acad. [illegible] 178.

(f) Obſervations ſur les poeſies de Malherbe, pag. 302.

(g) Ibid.

(h) Colomeſius in Gallia Orientali, pag. 165.

(i) Hujus in Hebraicis peritiam firmat Phil. Aquinas Epiſtola Præfat. in capitula Patrum, à ſe ex Hebræo in Gallicum ſermonem verſa. Id. ibid.

(A) An-

ROY (JAMES LE) Baron of the Holy Empire, and Lord of St. Lambert, originally deſcended from an ancient (A) and noble Family of France, got a great Reputation by the Works he publiſhed. He was born at Antwerp the 28th of October, 1633. As ſoon as his Age permitted him to Travel, Baron * LE ROY, his Father, ſent him to the moſt famous Univerſities of Europe, and at his return reſigned to him the Places he was poſſeſs'd of at the Court of Bruſſels. Our Baron did ſo punctually diſcharge the Duties of thoſe Places, that the Marquis de Caracene, Governor of the Low-Countries, ſent him into Spain to inform his Catholick Majeſty, Philip the Fourth, of the State of his Government. Having worthily performed his Commiſſion, he returned into the Netherlands, and could not agree with the Marquis de Caſtel Rodrigo, Governor of that Country; wherefore he reſolved to lay down his Employments, and retired to his Seat near Antwerp. Had it not been for this, he would have raiſed himſelf to the moſt conſiderable Civil Offices; but the Commonwealth of Learning would have loſt by it; for he had not been at leiſure to write ſeveral good Books (B) that have been publiſh'd. See the Remark B.

There is ſomething in that Remark which concerns Mrs Bourignon, and at which her Friends have been offended. I ſhall examine what one (C) of them ſays in anſwer to my Remark.

RON-

(A) Ancient and noble Family.] The Anceſtors of Baron le Roy left France, to follow Philip the Good, Duke of Burgundy, and ſettled in the Low Countries.

PHILIP le Roy, Knight-Banneret, Seigneur de Broucham, &c. the Father of him who makes the Subject of this Article, (a) bought of the Lady Margaret Bandewyns the Lordſhip of Chapelle St. Lambert, the 15th of December, 1654. He was made free Baron of the Holy Empire by a Patent of the Emperor Leopold, dated from Luxemburg the 30th of May, 1671. He was then Counſellor to his Catholick Majeſty in the Supreme Council of the Finances of the Low Countries and Burgundy.

(B) Several good Books that have been publiſh'd.] The firſt Book he undertook to write in his Retirement, was the Notitia Marchionatus Sacri Romani Imperii, which was Printed at Amſterdam in Folio in the Year 1678. See the Nouvelles (b) de la Republique des Lettres. He publiſh'd afterwards in the ſame City, in the Year 1683, a Piece intituled, Achates Tiberianus, ſive gemma Cæſarea, antiquitate, argumento, arte, hiſtoria prorſus incomparabilis, D. Auguſti apotheoſin, Imp. Cæſ. Tiberii, Auguſtaque Juliæ Domus ſeriem & iconas, genteſque bello captas repræſentans, notis hiſtoricis illuſtrata, in Folio. See the Acta (c) eruditorum, and the Journal (d) des Savans. He printed, in 1693, at Amſterdam, a Book in Folio with this Title, Topographia Hiſtorica Gallo-Brabantiæ, qua Ramondua oppida, municipia & dominia illuſtrantur, atque Monaſteria, Nobiliumque Fratoria, Caſtellaque in æs inciſa exhibentur. That Book contains a very particular Account of that part of the Low-Countries called the Walloon Brabant; and if we had ſuch a Deſcription of all Europe, it would be extremely uſeful and inſtructive. I add, that he has Commented upon the Chronicle of Balduinus of Aveſnes, and that he is (e) now Commenting upon that of Albericus, a Monk of Trois Fontaines, which has never been printed, and the Publication whereof has been wiſhed for a long time. He has lately put out (f) a ſmall Book of 13 Pages, intituled, Prædictio Anthoniæ Bourignon de vaſtatione urbis Bruxellarum per ignem, wherein, after a ſhort deſcription of the Miſery that Town was expoſed on the 13th of Auguſt, 1695, when the French bombarded it, he mentions what has been ſaid concerning Antoinette Bourignon, in the Supplement to Moreri's Dictionary, and theſe Words of one of her Letters. (g) I don't ſee how I can ſtay at Bruſſels, tho' I had full Liberty to do it; nor could I ſtay long in it, SINCE BRUSSELS IS TO BE DESTROYED BY FIRE, if I have had a right Viſion, as I told you at Maſuriel's Houſe. The Spirit which revealed this burning to Mrs. Bourignon, did not well fix the time; for ſhe fancied, in the Year 1666, that Bruſſels would be ſhortly burnt down, and yet it was not bombarded 'till 29 Years after.

Since the firſt Impreſſion of this Article, Baron le Roy has publiſh'd, Caſtella & Prætoria Nobilium Brabantiæ, Cœnobiaque celebriora ad vivum delineata æriquе inciſa . . . . . cum brevi eorundem deſcriptione. At Antwerp, 1696, in Folio. And (h) L'Erection de toutes les Terres, &c. The Erection of all the Seats, Lordſhips and Families of Brabant, that have Titles of Honour, proved by Extracts of original Patents. Such a Book ſhould be printed about each Province of Europe, whereby one might know thoſe, who boldly aſſume the Title of Marquis, or Count.

(C) I ſhall examin what one of Mrs. Bourignon's Friends ſays in anſwer to my Remark.] His Anſwer is to be found in a Letter concerning myſtical Authors, printed (i) a Year ago with the Theologie réelle vulgairement dite la Theologie Germanique. The anonymous Author, who has publiſh'd this, quotes my Words, and then adds: " (k) No, by your Leave, " laying aſide all manner of Equivocation, there was " no time neither well nor wrongly fixed in the " Prediction, as you intimate: Beſides, it was " not a verbal Revelation, as you give to under- " ſtand, in order to make it ſuſceptible of a Fal- " ſity as to the time; but it was viſual, and conſe- " quently of ſuch a Nature, as to fix no time in " expreſs Words. Nor did Mrs. Bourignon fancy, " that Bruſſels would be burnt down in a ſet time, " ſooner or later; but nothing being determined up- " on that Point, no time being fix'd or excluded, " this Undetermination was the true Reaſon why " ſhe did not think her ſelf ſecure from that Danger " at any time, and had a provident Care at all times." He adds, That, in the ſame manner, the Lord and his Apoſtles having foretold in general his ſecond coming, exhorted the Chriſtians to be watchful at all times, leſt they ſhould be ſurprized; whereupon a profane Man might have had a better Pretence than our Author, to ſay as he does, " The Spirit, which revealed that ſecond Coming to them, did not well fix the time; for they fancied, ſeventeen hundred Years ago, that it ſhould happen in their Life-time, and yet no ſuch thing has been ſeen hitherto." St. Peter tells us, that the profane Men of his time argued already in that manner. Thus the anonymous Author criticizes my Remark: I'll make it appear that he lyes under a great Illuſion.

I obſerved, that the Spirit did not fix the time well, and this Author owns that it fixed no time. What can I deſire more? Is it not manifeſt, that whoever does not fix a time, does neither fix it right nor wrong; and that therefore one may ſay he did not fix it well? My Aſſertion is therefore true; and 'tis certain, at leaſt, that Mrs. Bourignon drew a falſe Conſequence from what had been revealed to her viſually. She concluded from it, that Bruſſels would be ſhortly deſtroyed by Fire; for ſhe believed that the Permiſſion ſhe had to ſtay in that Town, would ſerve her but for a little time; I ſay, ſhe came to think ſo, by reaſon of the viſual Revelation we are told of. As ſhe reſolved to leave a Town which ſhe thought was ready to be burnt, ſhe would

---

* Philip le Roi, Seigneur de Ravels Broucham, & de St. Lambert in Brabant. See the Remark A.

(a) Topographia Gallo Brabantiæ pag. 185.

(b) For September 1685. art. 5. pag. m. 1004.

(c) Acta Erudītor. Lipſienſ. 1684. pag. 255

(d) Journal des Savans of the 19th of March 1685.

(e) In the Year 1696.

(f) At Amſterdam 1696.

(g) Theſe Words are taken from a Letter written from Ghent to M. de Cort the 15th of January 1666. 'Tis the 12th of the 3d part of a Book, intitled Tombeau de la fauſſe Theologie.

RONSARD (PETER DE) a famous French Poet, of a Noble Family would doubtless have advised all those, who had been willing to be directed by her, to do the same; she would therefore have given that Advice to all the Inhabitants of Brussels, if they had been her Disciples. Now, how strangely had they been deluded, if they had followed her Direction! A great many People, who could not live above 10, 15, 15 or 20 Years, had left their Birth place for fear of being destroyed by a Fire that was to fall 20 Years after. They had been imposed upon by false Prophecies: for a Revelation, though true in it self, because it exhibits only some Images, becomes fallacious and deceitful when applied to Times or Places that do not belong to it. If the revealing Spirit does not deceive, the Person who receives the Revelation will nevertheless deceive by his false Applications; and therefore Mrs. Bourignon's Apologist, without being aware of it, inables us to conclude, that she has been a false Prophetess in this Point. It were better to have no Revelations at all, than to receive Prophecies that are not understood, and whose wrong Explication moves one to make useless Steps. If Mrs. Bourignon had been quiet in the Places which she thought would be intirely burnt down, she would have lived there the remaining part of her Life, without seeing that Prediction fulfilled: for she died 15 years before Brussels was bombarded. She was therefore afraid without any reason, and she removed out of a panick Fear. I would not have you to think, that I grant to her Apologist, that the visual Revelation he speaks of (†) was evidently verified by the Event. The bombarding of Brussels has no greater Connexion with the Vision of that Woman, than with the Dreams of other People. I think it will be granted me, that most people do sometimes see a Town on Fire in their Dreams. When we dream that a House is set on fire, 'tis commonly that which belongs to us: If we dream that a Town sinks in the Water, or is devoured by Flames, 'tis commonly a Town that is best known to us, that wherein we were born, or where we make our Abode. I therefore venture to say, and I think those who mind their Dreams will not charge me with Rashness for it, that many Citizens of Brussels have seen that Town on fire in a Dream; and even that some of 'em dream'd (a) that it was bombarded. Must such Dreams be accounted Prophetical? Visions of this kind in the Head of devout people, are more suspicious than in the head of worldly people; for a devout Person fancies, when he is awake, that the Corruption of a great Town will draw Fire from Heaven upon it. Now people do commonly see, when they are asleep, what they have thought of being awake. I omit, that according to Mrs. Bourignon's Prophecy, Brussels was to be destroyed by Fire: 'Tis plain, this denotes a total Destruction, and therefore 'tis not the bombarding of the Year 1695. That Town was not destroyed by it; only some Houses were ruined or damaged. It grew finer and more magnificent some few Years after; and the Inhabitants were so little concern'd for the Damage, occasion'd by the Bombs, that when they heard that the Treaty of Riswick was carried on successfully, they freely owned they had rather be bombarded three or four times, than see the end of War, which brought in Mony amongst 'em so plentifully.

The best thing alledged by the anonymous Writer, is the Prediction of the Apostles, concerning the last coming of the Son of God. They preached it as (b) being ready at hand, and yet that Prophecy has not been fulfilled these seventeen hundred Years. The Solution of this Difficulty may be seen in the Commentaries upon the Scripture. I shall only say, that this was never look'd upon as a sufficient Reason to justifie those, who, in the following Ages, foretold things that did not come to pass. They have always been accounted false Prophets, or false Interpreters of the Apocalypse. Why should I be the only Man not allowed to make use of the same Argument against those who pretend to foretell things to come? 'Tis well known, that those who are ingaged to vindicate the new Prophets, answer the Objections, as this anonymous Writer does, at the Cost of the true Prophets mention'd in the Scripture. We have not forgot yet the Pastoral Letters of the Author he speaks of some Pages before, who, says he, (c) will have many Chimerical Prophets of all Ages to be truly inspired, and expects still that his Party will be restored in France by way of Inspiration. It was in vain for him to alledge the Prophets of the Old Testament, in order to justifie the pretended Prophets of Dauphiné: Wise and pious People following the Dictates of Reason, declared against them; and when the time fixed by him for the Deliverance was expired, they maintained that his prophetical Inspirations were false. They were not afraid that the Prediction of the second Coming of CHRIST, alledged by the anonymous Writer, would be objected against them. I proceed in this Matter as those Gentlemen did, and as it has been the constant Practice of the most grave Divines, whenever any Fanaticks arose, whose Prophecies were confuted by the Event.

I must answer another Complaint of Mrs. Bourignon's Apologist. He says, that I seem to take a great delight in reflecting upon her, and very much enlarges upon it. He adds, that I frequently refer my Readers to a Libel of M. de Seckendorf; whereupon he quotes a long Passage of M. Thomasius, Professor at Hall, whereby it appears that M. de Seckendorf was blinded by his Passion when he writ against that Woman. I answer in few Words, 1. That none will say I had a mind to reflect upon her, but such as are prepossess'd with an infatuating Admiration: Being charmed with the Perfections they think to discover in a certain Person, they can find no fault in him, all his Actions appear holy to them, and they grow very angry with those who are more discerning, and undertake to shew the weak side of such a Person. I have not in the least reflected upon Mrs. Bourignon's Zeal and Chastity; I only made an Abridgment of her Life, referring my Readers to a Memorial imparted to me by M. Poiret, which our Anonymous Author takes to be advantageous to that Gentlewoman. If I said something of her scolding Humour, and of her great Husbandry, 'tis what Truth required from me as an Historian. I have advanced nothing without a Proof for it; but let the impartial Readers judge of it. I answer in the second place, that among many Quotations out of Antoinette's Life and Works, there are hardly above five or six out of M. de Seckendorf. Why then does this Anonymous Writer intimate that I entirely depend upon the Authority of that Author? Lastly, I say, that I knew not then what M. Thomasius observes concerning the Proceedings of that illustrious German. M. Thomasius is a Man of Merit, and I have had a long time a great Esteem for him: I need not object any thing against his Remarks, for he charges M. de Seckendorf with Curtailing some Passages only in what concerns the Opinions of Mrs. Bourignon; but I have only quoted him for a matter of fact, and I have most times confirmed what I take from him by some other Passages. I have no Reason to think that he was blinded by Passion in that respect. After all, if he was so guilty as this Author will have it, would no Body have taken notice of it? Would not M. Poiret, whom he has confuted, have writ against him a second time to shew his unfairness?

I shall make no answer to many other Observations of the anonymous Author. His Complaints are very general, and plainly shew that he is too touchy, and wants still to mortifie his internal Senses. The Mortification of the external Senses is not sufficient; one must besides overcome the irascible Appetite. I beseech him to think seriously of it, and I refer him to the Answers I have already (d) made, or to this general Observation, that it

(†) Ibid.

(a) Especially since the Ga[illegible] did [illegible] frequent[illegible] mention the bom[illegible] of [illegible]

(b) For [illegible] ex[illegible] to [illegible] they [illegible] to [illegible] them[illegible] rea[illegible] for it.

(c) Lettre touchant les Auteurs Mystiques, pag. 108.

(d) In my Reflexions sur le Jugement du public, which he quotes ubi supra, pag. 312, 313.

mily (A), was Born in Vendomois the ſame Year that Francis the Firſt was made Priſo at Pavia. This Circumſtance occaſioned (B) ſome unjudicious Reflections. He was lik to periſh on his Birthday; and the Danger he run was attended with an Incident, whic

it would be a needleſs and inſignificant thing to anſwer Complaints grounded upon no manner of Proof. If any one raiſes any particular Objection againſt me, and examines ſome Arguments alledged in this Dictionary, I ſhall not deny him an Anſwer: but as to general Complaints, I ſhall only appeal to the equitable Readers.

(A) Of a noble Family.] Lewis de Ronſard, his Father, (a) was Knight of the Order, and Steward to Francis the Firſt, who pitch'd upon him to attend Francis Dauphin de Viennois and Henry Duke of Orleans, his Sons, into Spain, whilſt they were there as Hoſtages for the King their Father. He married Joan de Chandrier, whoſe Family was related to that of La Trimouille, &c. and conſequently to that of Craon; (b) from whence the Kings of England are deſcended, by the Match of the Empreſs Mathilde: So that he (c) made it appear that Ronſard was related in the ſixteenth or ſeventeenth Degree to Elizabeth Queen of England. 'Tis ſaid, that Lewis de Ronſard was deſcended from one Baudouin, a younger Brother of a great Family (d), upon the Borders of Hungary and Bulgaria, who (e) brought a Company of Gentlemen to King Philip de Valois. Nay, 'tis ſaid (f), that there is a Lordſhip called the Marquiſate of Ronſart, in the Place (g) where the Danube is neareſt to Thrace. But I think this may be looked upon as one of the Romantick Stories which moſt Noble Houſes uſe to tell of their firſt Founders. They are very fond of deriving their Original from the remoteſt Countries, and from a younger Brother of a Noble Extraction, a brave Adventurer, whoſe fine Exploits were very well rewarded by the Prince in whoſe Service he engaged. If ſuch Stories were only told by three or four Families, one would not be ſo apt to laugh at them. I muſt obſerve, that the Author quoted by me has only turned into Proſe what Ronſard ſaid of his Extraction in one (h) of his Elegies. Du Perron (i) told the ſame Story, but inſtead of Bulgaria he ſaid Moravia. The Collection of the fineſt Pieces of the French Poets, printed in 1692. contains (k) a Life of Ronſard, wherein 'tis ſaid he originally came from Hungary and Bulgaria: If it be not an Abſurdity, 'tis at leaſt a Falſification; for the Tradition of that Family aſſigns but one native Country to their Anceſtors, upon the Borders of Hungary and Bulgaria. They are the Words of Claudius Binet: Thus you ſee how Writers run into miſtakes, when they change the Terms of the Originals, whether it be in order to be ſhorter, or becauſe thoſe Words are thought to be too old. The word Borders ſhould not have been left out here.

(B) Some unjudicious Reflections.] "(l) Peter "de Ronſard was Born of Lewis, and Joan de Chandrier, in the Caſtle de la Poiſſonnerie . . . . "upon a Saturday the 11th of September, 1524; "on which day King Francis was made Priſoner "at Pavia. 'Tis a queſtion whether France was "more Unfortunate by the King's Impriſonment, "than happy by ſuch a Birth, which was remarkable, like that of many other great Men, by ſuch "a memorable Event. Thus the Birth of the great "Alexander was ſignalized, and as it were lighted "by the Flames which conſumed the Temple of "Diana at Epheſus." What a fine Compenſation is this! Was not France well Indemnified for the Impriſonment of her King, a Misfortune which was like to occaſion the Ruin of the Kingdom, and which actually occaſion'd a long Series of ſhameful and diſmal Loſſes to the Nation; I ſay, was not France well indemnified, ſince a Wit was born on that very Day, who adorned her with thouſands of Verſes by way of Sonnets, Madrigals, Stanza's, Hymns, Odes, &c. This Thought of Claudius Binet could not be tolerable but in a Poem of a Panegyriſt; and yet Men of Senſe would cenſure it as an inſipid Hyperbole. Doubtleſs this was the Reaſon why du Perron did not make uſe of it in his Funeral Oration of Peter Ronſard. What ſhall we ſay then, when we ſee it in Proſe in a piece of Hiſtory, I mean, in the Life of Ronſard? But what ſhall we ſay of Thuanus, that grave, that venerable Magiſtrate, who very ſeriouſly ſet forth the ſame thought in a general Hiſtory, which is a Maſter-piece? Natus erat, (Petrus Ronſardus) ſays he (m), eodem quo infeliciter à noſtris ad Ticinum pugnatum eſt, anno, ut ipſe in Elegia ad Remigium Bellaqueum ſcribit, quaſi Deus jacturam nominis Gallici eo prælio factam & ſecutum ex illo veluti noſtrarum rerum interitum tanti viri ortu compenſare voluerit. Take notice that Thuanus does not ſay that Ronſard was Born on the ſame Day that the Battel of Pavia was fought: He only ſays, that Poet was Born in the ſame Year. But Claudius Binet, who wanted ſomething more wonderful, affirms, that he was Born on the ſame Day. He betrays himſelf, he diſcovers his Lie; for he marks the 11th Day of September, 1524, as being the Birth-day of his Poet; and every Body knows that Francis the Firſt was beaten at Pavia the 24th of February, 1525. However, Ronſard was Born in the ſame Year, according to the way of reckoning at that time; for the Year did not begin then, the 1ſt day of January, but at Eaſter, and ſo the Battel of Pavia was contained in the Year 1524. It cannot be ſaid that there is a fault of the Preſs in Binet's Book; for when he tells us that Ronſard died the 27th of December, 1585, he ſays, (n) that Poet was 61 Years, 3 Months and 16 Days old, and therefore he believed that he was Born the 11th of September, 1524. Which gives me occaſion to take notice of a miſtake (o) of Sainte Marthe; but I confeſs, there is ſome uncertainty in the Matter, whereby he might be excuſed. 'Tis only from a Paſſage of Ronſard that we know he was Born the ſame Year that Francis the Firſt was taken; at leaſt it is certain that du Perron alledged no other Proof againſt thoſe who were not of that Opinion. As to the time of his Birth, ſays he (p), "there are "ſeveral Opinions about it. Some think he was "Born in the Year 1522, and that conſequently "he died in his Climacterical Year, as it has been "obſerved of many great Men. Others ſtick to "what he ſays, that he was Born the ſame Year "that the great King Francis was made a Priſoner; as the Birth of illuſtrious Men is frequently remarkable by ſuch notale Events. We may "further obſerve, that the taking of that King, "by which Ronſard denotes the Year of his Birth, "falls in exactly upon the ſame Day on which we "celebrate the Memory of his Death, which is St. "Matthias's Day (q)." This only Proof of du Perron will appear weak, if we conſider that Ronſard in one of his Poems mentions his Age, which does not ſuit with a Man born in 1524, or 1525. Theſe are his Words:

Tu (r) dis que je ſuis vieil, encore n'ay-je atteint
Trente & ſept ans paſſez, & mon corps ne ſe plaint
D'ans ny de maladie, & en toutes les ſortes
Mes nerfs ſont bien tendus, & mes veines bien fortes;
Et ſi j'ay le teint palle & le cheveu griſon,
Mes membres toutesfois ne ſont hors de ſaiſon.

The Poem, wherein he ſpeaks thus, was compoſed ſome Weeks after the Death of the Duke of Guiſe (ſ), and conſequently in the Spring of the Year, 1563. A Man, who was then but 37 Years old, muſt have been born in 1526, and at this rate Scævola de Sainte Marthe were not to blame. 'Tis ſomewhat ſtrange, that our Poet did not well know when he was born.

(C) Which

(a) Binet, Vie de Ronſard, in the 9th Tome of Ronſard's Works, in 12°, pag. 113. Note, That du Perron, in the Funeral Oration of Ronſard, in the ſame Volume, p. 189 does not ſay, that Lewis de Ronſard was Steward to Francis I. but to Henry II.

(b) Binet, ib. p. 112.

(c) That is, the Sieur du Faux of Angers, in his Memoirs. There is, in my Edition, le Sieur du Faur; but I find in la Croix du Maine that this Author's Name was Paſcal Robin du

(d) Binet ibid.

(e) Id. ib. pag. 113.

(f) Id. ib.

(g) Ibid. pag. 112.

(h) The 20*th. It is inſcribed to* Belleau.

(i) Oraiſon funebre de Ronſard, pag. 188.

(k) In the 1*ſt Tome, pag.* 239.

(l) Idem Binet ibid. pag. 113.

which occaſion'd ſome (C) witty Conceits, that are not more ſolid than thoſe Reflections. He put himſelf at the Head of (D) ſome Soldiers in Vendomois, in the Year 1562, and made as great a Slaughter of the Proteſtants as ever he could; which was the Reaſon why ſome ſatyrical Pieces were publiſhed at Orleans againſt him,

(C) Which occaſioned ſome witty Conceits, that are not more ſolid than thoſe Reflections.] "(a) His Birth day was like to be the Day of his Burial; for as they were going from the Caſtle de la Poiſſonnerie to the Parochial Church, to get him Chriſten'd, the Woman who carried him, going over a Meadow, let him fall through inadvertency; but he fell gently upon the Graſs and the Flowers of the Meadow. Beſides, a Gentlewoman, who carried a Veſſel full of Roſe-water and of all ſorts of Herbs and Flowers, as it is uſual, going to take up the Child, ſpilt upon his Head part of that Water, which was a Preſage of the good ſmell which the Flowers of his learned Writings would ſpread all over the Kingdom." This is what the Italians call Concetti. When le Pas wrote the Hiſtory of Ronſard's Muſe, he took care to make ſome Verſes upon that Thought. He was born, ſays he (b), of a Knight of the Order, on the ſame day that Francis the Firſt was taken at the Battel of Pavia; and it has been ſaid to his Glory, that France would have been inconſolable on account of ſuch an unfortunate Day, if that ſame Day had not produced ſo great a Man. His Birth Day was like to be that of his Death. A Gentlewoman (c), who carried him from the Caſtle de la Poiſſonnerie, where he was born, to the Church of the Pariſh, where he was to be Chriſtened, let him fall unawares; but, by good luck, he fell in a Meadow, and upon Flowers, and got no hurt by it, only he was wet all over with the Roſe-water, which they carried, as 'tis uſual, for the Chriſtening.

Ce ne fut point ſans doute un effet du hazard,
Je croi qu'on peut ſans badinage,
Dire que ce fut un preſage
De la fortune de Ronſard;
Un preſage certain qui fit alors comprendre,
Combien de bonne odeur Ronſard devoit répandre,
Un preſage certain que les neuf doctes Sœurs,
Dont il devoit chanter la gloire,
Pour éterniſer ſa memoire
Luy feroient quelque jour des couronnes de fleurs.

(D) At the Head of ſome Soldiers.] I ſhall ſet down a Paſſage of Beza. "(d) The worſt of all was, that the Mob broke not only the Images, but alſo ſome Monuments of the Houſe of Vendome, that is now the Head of the Houſe of Bourbon, which was taken very heinouſly, and not without Reaſon. When the Romaniſts ſaw this, and that part of the Nobility of the Country were gone to the Prince at Orleans, and others had thrown themſelves into the Town of Mans, they began to keep the Reformed under great Conſtraint. Peter Ronſard, among others, a Gentleman, and an excellent French Poet, who hired his Tongue, not only to defile his Muſe with all ſorts of Filthineſs, but alſo to Slander our Religion, and thoſe who profeſs'd it, having turn'd Prieſt, reſolved to have a hand in thoſe Quarrels with his Friends. In order to it, having got together ſome Soldiers in a Village call'd Evaille, which was his Pariſh, made ſeveral Excurſions attended with Plunder and Murthers". Spondanus will have it, that the Nobility of Vendomois pitch'd upon the Prieſt Ronſard to be their Head; but I had rather keep to Beza's Narrative. However, I ſhall ſet down the Words of that Annaliſt. They contain ſome other things that want to be rectified. (e) Arma quoque ſumens nobilitas, ducem ſibi elegit Ronſardum, qui inſolentiam profanorum non ferens, multos ex iis male mulctavit: quamquam curionatum Evalliæ tenebat, hoc amoenitatis aut commoditatis captu. Neque enim is erat, qui libertatem ſuam, atque adeo licentiam poeticam ſacerdotalis muneris neceſſitate tamquam compede ad gravitatem ei functione dignam vellet aſtringere: ſed homo generoſus, & a teneris anni inter nobiles pueros Caroli Ducis Aurelianenſis Franciſci I. filii in aula, & poſtea militaribus ſtudiis in Anglia & Scotia innutritus, antequam literis ſub 25. ætatis operam daret, & divinum ingenium ad poeticam appelleret, inter præcipua vitæ oblectamenta etiam armorum curam & amorem retinuerat. Theſe Words give us to underſtand, that Ronſard had a Living only for his Pleaſure, and that he diſcharged the Duties of the Prieſthood perfunctorily. If Spondanus had known that this pretended Curate had been in the ſame Poſt at the Court of Scotland, that he had in the Houſe of the Duke of Orleans, would he have made uſe of this diſtinction, viz. that Ronſard was bred up a Page to that Duke, and learned the Art of War under the King of Scotland? This wants to be rectified. That young Man was (f) made Page to the Dauphin in the Year 1536, three Days before that Prince died. Afterwards he entred into the Service of Charles Duke of Orleans, the King's Second Son, and continued there for ſome time, being very acceptable to his Maſter . . . . . who, to give him an occaſion of ſeeing the World, made him Page to James Stuart, King of Scotland, who came to Marry (g) the Lady Magdalen, Daughter to Francis I. The King of Scotland carried him into his Kingdom, where he continued (h) two Years, and half a Year in England; and then he returned into France, and applied himſelf to the Duke of Orleans, his Maſter, who made him Page of his Stables, and ſent him upon Buſineſs into Flanders and Zealand, with Orders to go as far as Scotland, which he did . . . . . At his return from that Journey, being only about 15 or 16 Years of Age, after he had ſerved the Duke of Orleans five Years, 'till that Prince died, and afterwards Henry, who was ſince King, in the Year 1540. he went in the Retinue of Lazarus de Baif . . . . . . who was ſent Ambaſſador to the Diet of Spires (i). It appears from this Narrative. 1. That Ronſard did not learn the Art of War in Scotland, otherwiſe than he had done in the Service of the Duke of Orleans, and otherwiſe than the Pages of Princes learn it. 2. That Spondanus expreſs'd himſelf ill, and knew not that our Poet was only 13 or 14 Years of Age when he was in Scotland, and that at his return into France he was made Page to the Dauphin's Brother. Perhaps it will be objected to me, that Binet's Narrative being full of Faults, ought not to be alledged againſt that Annaliſt; but notwithſtanding this Objection, I believe Binet is not miſtaken as to the time that Ronſard was made Page to the King of Scotland. However, he is groſly miſtaken in his Computation; for if Ronſard had been a Domeſtick to the Duke of Orleans five Years, 'till that Prince died, he would have ſerved him 'till the Year 1545. and if he had been ſince in the Service of the Dauphin Henry, how could he have been in Lazarus de Baif's Retinue, in the Year 1540? But it is true, (k) that Lazarus de Baif being ſent Ambaſſador into Germany in the Year 1540. took along with him our Ronſard, who had made an end of his Service as a Page. However it be, Varillas has been deceived by Spondanus. "(l) New Puniſhments were invented againſt the Calviniſts of Vendome, becauſe the moſt violent amongſt 'em had ſearched the Sepulchres of the Anceſtors of the King of Navarre: And the famous Poet Ronſard, a Gentleman of that Country, who being weary of the Court, and deſiring to be in better Circumſtances than he was at Home, had accepted the Living

"of

(a) Claudius Binet, ubi ſupra, pag. 114.

(b) Le Pas, Triomphe de la Muſe Amourette, page 182, 183. of the 2d part of the new Works, Dutch Edit. 1687.

(c) Binet does not ſay that the Gentlewoman carried him; he diſtinguiſhes her from the Woman who carried him.

(d) Beza, Hiſt. Eccl. B. 7. pag. 537, 538.

(e) Spondanus, Annal. ad ann. 1562. num. 16. p. m. 1, 622.

(f) Binet, ubi ſupra, pag. 115.

(g) He Married her at Paris in January 1537.

(h) Du Perron, Oraiſon funebre de Ronſard, pag. 193. ſays that he was two Years and a half in Scotland.

(i) Taken from Claudius Binet, pag. 115. & ſeq.

(k) See the Verſes of Antony de Baif in Mr. Menage's Remarques ſur la Vie d'Ayrault. pag. 196.

(l) Varillas, Hiſt. de Charles IX. tom. 1. pag. 171. Dutch Edit. ad. ann. 1562.

him, wherein it was ſuppoſed that he was a Prieſt. He defended himſelf (E) in Verſe, and denied that he was inveſted with ſuch a Character. What is cer-tain, is, that he had ſome Benefices in Commendam, and among others the Pri-ory of St. Coſmus near Tours. He died there the 27th of December, 1585. and had but an indifferent Burial; but twenty four Years after a noble Monument (F)

" of Evailles, took up Arms again which he had " born in Scotland and England. Afterwards he " excuſed himſelf for it, ſaying in a pleaſant man-" ner, that not being able to defend his Pariſhio-" ners with St. Peter's Key, for which the Calvi-" niſts had no Reſpect, he took St. Paul's Sword, " and putting himſelf at the Head of the Neigh-" bouring Gentry, kept his Church and his Pariſh " from being plunder'd ". You ſee he falſly ſup-poſes that Ronſard bore Arms in Scotland and England.

(E) He defended himſelf in Verſe, and denied that he was a Prieſt.] The Miniſter Chandieu and Florent Chretien were the Authors of the Pieces publiſhed againſt him at Orleans. The firſt appeared under the diſguiſe of A. Zamariel B. de Mont Dieu, and the ſecond under that of Francis de la Baronnie (a). Father Garaſſe ſpeaks of 'em in the following manner. " (b) Thoſe two Men gave him a ſevere " Reprimand, which is Intitled, la Metamorphoſe de " Ronſard en Pretre, ou le Temple de Ronſard. They " accuſed him, among other things, of having " taught Atheiſm.

" Je t'ay veu diſcourir tout ainſi qu' Epicure
" Qui attachoit au ciel un Dieu qui n'a la cure
" De ce qu'on fait en bas, & en parlant ainſi
" Tu monſtrois que de luy tu n'avois grand ſou- (e), &c.

" But Ronſard made a ſolid Anſwer to their " ſcurrilous and impertinent Language in a Poem, " Intitled, Des miſeres du temps, in which he pro-" teſts, &c.". Garaſſe is miſtaken: the Poem Intitled, Des miſeres du temps, is not an Anſwer to Zamariel and la Baronnie. The Piece publiſhed againſt them by Ronſard in his vindication, came out with this Title, Reponſe aux injures & calomnies de je ne ſçai quels predicantereaux & Miniſtreaux de Geneve. The reaſon that moved the Proteſtants to make Verſes againſt that Poet, is imperfectly related by Binet and Varillas. One of them ſays, that they abuſed him, to revenge themſelves for the Poems he had writ againſt them; the other affirms, that they cenſured him by reaſon of his Warlike Exploits. Thoſe two Reaſons ſhould have been put together; for 'tis certain they fell upon him, becauſe he had made uſe of his Pen and Sword againſt 'em with great Fury. Here follow Binet's Words. This (c) " obliged Ronſard to oppoſe that " new Opinion, and to arm the Muſes in the De-" fence of France, publiſhing his Remonſtrances, " which were thought ſo proper to confute the " Enemies of the Catholick Religion, that the King, " and the Queen his Mother, gratified him for " it; as did alſo Pope Pius V. who wrote to him " a Letter of Thanks: which was the reaſon why " thoſe of the new Religion fell upon him, and " publiſhed a very Satyrical and Biting Poem a-" gainſt him, which they called le Temple de Ronſard, wherein they painted his Life as it were in " Hangings. They made alſo ſome Anſwers to " his Remonſtrances with this Title, La Metamorphoſe de Ronſard, the Authors of which were " one A. Zamariel and B. de Mont-Dieu both Mini-" ſters. He ſufficiently points at the latter in theſe " Verſes of his Anſwer to him, comparing him " to Siſyphus, " Qui remonte & repouſſe aux enfers un rocher,

" Dont tu as pris ton nom."

Binet divides one Author into two, A. Zamariel B. de Mont-Dieu is but one Man. I proceed to Varillas's Words. (d) This occaſioned the terrible Sa-tyr which Florent Chretien, at that time a zealous Calviniſt, and Preceptor to the Prince of Navarre, wrote under the Name of the Miniſter de la Baronnie againſt the ſame Ronſard; and the Anſwer of the latter, wherein he ſhewed that Indignation would enable him to make finer Verſes than Nature, tho' he had a wonderful Genius for Poetry (e). He is in the wrong to ſay, that Florent Chretien wrote under the Name of a Miniſter, and to believe that none but he publiſhed Satyrs againſt Ronſard. We have ſeen that he ſays after Beza and Spondanus, that this Poet was a Curate; but their miſtake will appear by the following Verſes.

Or (f) ſus mon frere en Chriſt, tu dis que je ſuis Preſtre:
J'atteſte l'eternel que je le voudrois eſtre,
Et avoir tout le chef & le dos empeſché
Deſſous la peſanteur d'une bonne Eveſché:
Lors j'auroy la couronne à bon droit ſur la teſte, Qu'un raſoir blanchiroit le jour d'une grand feſte,
Ouverte, large, longue, allant juſques au front,
En forme d'un Croiſſant qui tout ſe courbe en
rond.

Does not Ronſard plainly deny, in theſe Verſes, that he was a Prieſt? And if he had been one, would he have been ſo bold as to deny it? Something may be ſaid, in order to excuſe the Miniſters, who gave him that Title. He had been ordained, and performed Eccleſiaſtical Functions in the Quire in Sacerdotal Habits: He himſelf informs us of it.

Mais (g) quand je ſuis aux lieux où il faut faire
voir
D'un cœur devotieux l'office & le devoir,
Lors je ſuis de l'Egliſe une colonne ferme,
D'un ſurpelis ondé les eſpaules je m'arme,
D'une haumuſſe le bras, d'une chape le dos,
Et non comme tu dis faite de croix & d'os:
C'eſt pour un Capelan, la mienne eſt honorée
De grandes boucles d'or & de frange dorée:

. . . .

Je (h) ne perds un moment des prieres divines:
Dés la pointe du jour je m'en vais à matines,
J'ay mon breviaire au poing, je chante quelque-fois,
Mais c'eſt bien rarement, car j'ay mauvaiſe voix.
Le devoir du ſervice en rien je n'abandonne,
Je ſuis à Prime, à Sexte, & à Tierce, & à None.
J'oy dire la grand' Meſſe, & avecques l'encens
(Qui par l'Egliſe eſpars comme parfum ſe ſent,) J'honore mon Prelat des autres l'outrepaſſe,
Qui a pris d'Agenor ſon ſurnom & ſa race.
Apres le tour finy je viens pour me r'aſſoir.

This was the reaſon why the Proteſtants believed that he was a Curate. Menage (i) fancies that a Miniſter, whoſe Name was de Mont-Dieu, wrote againſt Ronſard; but he is miſtaken; 'tis only a diſguiſe under which the Miniſter Chandieu appeared when he publiſhed that Piece. M. Baillet (k) thinks that Florent Chretien aſſumed that falſe Name. Colomies (l) has no reaſon to ſay that la Croix de Maine knew not in his Bibliotheque, Page 88. that Florent Chretien wrote againſt Ronſard, under the Name of Francis de la Baronnie. I have mentioned, in (m) another Place, the Anſwer made by

(a) See Garaſſe's Doctrine curieuſe p. 126. & 1022. & la Croix du Maine pag. 88.

(b) Garaſſe ibid. pag. 126. 127.

(c) Binet ubi ſupra, pag. 138. 139. See alſo the Funeral Oration by du Perron, p. 197. where no other reaſon is to be found but that alledged by Binet.

(F) was erected there to his Honour. He was cruelly Tormented with the Gout, and, 'tis ſaid, he got it (G) by his Debaucheries. His Works are full of gallant Verſes, wherein we find that he had * three chief Miſtreſſes. The laſt was only (H) an Amuſement to him, and a Poetical Subject. Beſides, it is to be obſerved that he often made Love-Verſes at the requeſt of ſome Lords of the Court; ſo that they contained a Deſcription of their Paſſions, and not of his own. The

* See the Remark H.

by Ronſard, when he was charged with an Act of Paganiſm.

(F) A noble Monument was erected there to his Honour.] Joachim de la Chetardie, Counſellor Clerk in the Parliament of Paris, being Prior of St. Coſme, 20 Years after Ronſard's Death, could not endure that the Tomb of that Illuſtrious Poet ſhould not be (c) diſtinguiſhed from others, and ſhould want an Inſcription. Wherefore, when he got the Monaſtery repaired, he cauſed a Marble Tomb to be erected, and adorned it with an (b) Epitaph, and a Statue of Ronſard made by an excellent Sculptor. (c) Cum magni Ronſardi cineres populari loculo, mutos & illiteratos jacere videret, melior æquiorque illis qui eis optimis exuviis ditati ſunt, tamdiu manes eſſe neglectos non tulit, ac Ronſardum illum . . . . . Chetardius marmoris alta ſtrue, ſtatua ad viventis ſimilitudinem veriſſime expreſſa à Phidia Lutetiano donavit, brevi nota & elogio. Theſe Latin Words reflect upon Ronſard's Relations, as if they had taken no care to preſerve his Memory; but it is certain that Gallandius cauſed a pompous Funeral to be made for him in Boncourt-College, of which he was Principal. (d) Teſtamento condito quo hæredem ſcripſit Johannem Gallandium juventutis Pariſienſis optimum moderatorem, cujus hoſpitio tum Lutetiæ eſſet, familiariſſime utebatur, qui dignam tanti viri memoriæ gratiam rependens ei exequias perhonorifice poſtea in ſchola Becodiana ſua parentavit. Here follows a deſcription of that Funeral. “(e) M. “Galland, whoſe Affection for him was not bu“ried in the ſame Grave, doing what France was “bound to do, cauſed great Preparations to be “made in Boncourt-Chappel, where his Funeral “was celebrated in a ſolemn manner upon a Mon“day, the 24th of Febuary, 1586. The Service ſet to “Muſick, and attended with all ſorts of Inſtru“ments, was Sung by the choiceſt Singers, the “King's Muſicians being ordered to be there; for “the King lamented the Loſs of ſo great a Man, “who was an Ornament to his Kingdom. I “ſhould be too long, ſhould I make a particular “Deſcription of the Funeral Orations, Encomiums “and Verſes, that were made upon that occaſion, “and conſecrated to his Memory, and of the Lords, “who, (together with that generous Prince Charles “de Valois, attended by the Duke of Joyeuſe, and “the moſt Reverend Cardinal his Brother, to whom “Ronſard was related,) honoured that Funeral Pomp “with their Preſence; at which the moſt conſide“rable Members of the Parliament of Paris, fol“lowed by the greateſt Wits of France, were “pleaſed to aſſiſt. In the Afternoon M. du Perron “pronounced his Funeral Oration with great Elo“quence; and there was ſuch a vaſt Concourſe of “Hearers, that Cardinal de Bourbon, and many o“ther Princes and Lords, were obliged to go away, “being not able to crowd in.

(G) 'Tis ſaid he got it by his Debaucheries.] He was a well-ſhap'd Man, ſtrong and vigorous; and beſides, having a great deal of Wit, and a great Inclination for a voluptuous Life, one may eaſily gueſs he improved the Opportunities of ſporting with the fair Sex. He deſtroy'd his ſtrong Conſtitution by his looſe Life, as Thuanus obſerves: (f) Verum homo ut ingenio ſic forma & corporis robore inſignis cum vita ſoluta licentioſe nimis genio indulgeret, valetudinem firmiſſimam debilitavit, acerbiſſimis arthriticis doloribus extrema ætate conflictatus. He was very deaf; and the Author of his Life owns, that this Infirmity came upon him, among other Reaſons, becauſe (g) being in Germany, he was forced to drink ſuch Wines as are to be found there, moſt of which are Sophiſticated. This is a Miſtake; for there are excellent Wines in Germany; and if Ronſard had drank 'em moderately, they had done him no harm. The Authors of the Pieces publiſh'd againſt him at Orleans, repreſent him as a Man who had been a great Debauchee.

(g) Binet, ubi ſupra, pag. 117.

Tu (h) m'accuſes, Cafard, d'avoir eu la verolle;
Un chaſte Predicant de fait & de parole
Ne devroit jamais dire un propos ſi vilain:
Mais que ſort-il du ſac? cela dont il eſt plein.

(h) Ronſard, ubi ſupra, pag. 86.

. . . .

Tu (i) te plaints d'autre part que ma vie eſt
laſcive,
En delices, en jeux, en vices exceſſive:
Tu mens meſchantement, ſi tu m'avois ſuivy
Deux mois, tu ſçaurois bien en quel eſtat je vy.

(i) Id. ib. pag. 93.

(H) The laſt Miſtreſs was only . . . . a poetical Subject.] Let us ſee firſt of all what we are told of his two firſt Miſtreſſes. “(k) Ronſard falling “in Love with a handſome Woman of Blois, whoſe “Name was Caſſandra, on the 21ſt of April, in “a Journey he made to Blois, where the Court “was, being then (l) twenty Years of Age, re“ſolved to ſing his beloved Object, as well on “account of her Beauty, as by reaſon of her “Name. He was ſmitten as ſoon as he ſaw her, “which he plainly intiminates by this Motto “(†) ΩΣ ΙΔΟΝ ΩΣ ΕΜΑΝΗΝ.” The Verſes he made upon that Miſtreſs were thought ſomewhat obſcure; wherefore he reſolved to deſcribe in a more eaſy Style his Paſſion for Mary, who was a handſome Maid of Anjou. He often denotes her by the Name of Pin de Bourgeuil, becauſe it was the Place where ſhe lived, and where he ſaw her firſt, happening to be there with his Friend Baif. He loved her very much after he had courted Caſſandra ten Years, whom he left out of Jealouſy. It appears therefore from this Paſſage, that Ronſard Sung the Praiſes of his Mary in the Year 1544, and yet Binet (m) had been ſaying that Ronſard had publiſhed an Epithalamium on the Marriage of M. de Vendome and Joan d'Albret, Queen of Navarre, and then that he had made two other Poems before he fell in Love with Caſſandra. This Marriage was in 1548. It is ſaid in Ronſard's Life, printed in the Collection of the fineſt Pieces of the French Poets, which came out in 1692, that he fell in Love with Caſſandra at Blois, being in the Service of the Duke of Anjou. There was no Duke of Anjou at that time. Here follows the Hiſtory of his third Love. (n) “He “ended his Works with his Sonnets upon Helena, “whoſe Virtues, Beauty, and great Accompliſh“ments, were the laſt and moſt worthy Subject “of his Muſe: The laſt, becauſe he never had the “Happineſs to ſee her 'till he was an old Man; “and the moſt worthy, becauſe this Lady was, “by her Quality, Virtue and Reputation, above “thoſe, whom he loved in his younger Years. “He was more familiar with them, than with the “laſt, whom he honoured and praiſed, inſtead of “courting her. Witneſs the Title he gave to his “Praiſes, imitating Petrarch in that reſpect, who “being one day praiſed in the Queen Mother's Pre“ſence, on account of his chaſte and modeſt Poetry, “her Majeſty adviſed him (Ronſard) to write in the “ſame Style, as being more ſuitable to his Age, “and

(k) See what has been ſaid of Malherbe in the Remark B of his Article.

(l) Binet, ubi ſupra, pag. 129.

(†) They are Theocritus's Words, which Virgil renders thus in his 8th Eclogue, ut vidi ut perii.

(m) Binet, ibid. pag. 133.

(n) Id. ib. pag. 142, 143.

The Remembrance of it made (H△) him uneasie; for he remembred at the same time that he got nothing by it; and that the Reward due to him had been bestowed upon others. He was not so unfortunate as to the Poems he inscribed to Charles the Ninth; for he (H△△) was well paid for them. He prosecuted Joachim du Bellay, to recover some Odes (I) which had been cunningly

" and the Gravity of his Learning. Thus Ronſard " having, as he thought, an Opportunity of con- " ſecrating his Muſe to a Perſon of great Merit, " took the Queen's Advice for a Permiſſion, or ra- " ther a Command to addreſs himſelf to one of " her Maids of Honour, of a very ancient and no- " ble Family of Saintonge; and he continued to " praiſe her almoſt to the end of his Life: And " becauſe her Wit did frequently afford him Mat- " ter to exerciſe his Muſe, he conſecrated a Foun- " tain to her in Vendomois, which goes by her " Name to this very day.

The Collection of the fineſt Pieces of the French Poets, both ancient and modern, printed at Paris in the Year 1692, contains the Life of Ronſard, wherein I have found a Fault, which wants to be rectified. (a) He ſung Helena de Sugeres, a Maid of Honour to the Queen, and deſired Cardinal du Perron to write a Preface, in order to prefix it to his Gallant Poems; in which he intreated him to ſay, that he loved that Maid in an honeſt way. The Cardinal anſwered him, that inſtead of a Preface, he ſhould put the Picture (1) of Helena de Sugeres to his Book. Du Perron being but a young Man when Ronſard died, 'tis not likely that this great Poet would have deſired him to write a Preface for him. The Truth is, that he deſired no ſuch thing of any Body: 'Twas the Lady, who made ſuch a Requeſt to Cardinal du Perron. If you read the Perroniana at the word Gournay, you'll find theſe (b) Words in it. This is what I told Mrs. de Surgeres one day, who deſired me, at Mr. de Rets's, to put an Epiſtle to Ronſard's Works, whereby it might appear, that he had not an unchaſte Love for her. I told her, inſtead of ſuch an Epiſtle, 'tis but putting your Picture to it.

(H△) The Remembrance of it made him uneaſy . . . . . he remembred that he had got nothing by thoſe Poems.] I ſhall ſet down a Paſſage of Binet to prove this. " (c) He often told me, that he " had made many amorous Verſes and Maſquerades " at the Requeſt of ſome great Men, meaning, that " he had often ſtrain'd his Muſe without any Satiſ- " faction; others having got the Reward he de- " ſerved: Which was the Reaſon why he prefix- " ed theſe Verſes of Virgil to his Works, ſic vos " non vobis, &c. It is well known for whom he " wrote the Amours of Callirea, a very handſome " Lady of the Court, of the noble Family of Atry, " ſirnamed Aquaviva, as he ſufficiently intimates " by the Sonnet, which begins thus, La belle eau " vive. It is alſo known for whom he made the " Verſes concerning (d) Aſtrea, who was likewiſe " a very handſome Lady of the Court, whoſe " Name is very much imbelliſh'd by the meer Al- " teration of a Vowel". It appears from theſe Words, that Ronſard was not ſo uninereſted as an honeſt Man ought to be. It had been a glorious thing for him, if he had ſhewed himſelf leſs mercenary: 'Tis a Fault that prevails among Poets, and I wonder that Binet ſhould have been ſo ingenuous as to acquaint the Publick with the Complaints that Ronſard made to him in private, for not being rewarded. However it be, this ſhews that a Man may write very paſſionate Verſes, without being in Love with the Perſon who is the Subject of thoſe Verſes. I think this may be more eaſily done by a Man who has (e) a Miſtreſs.

(H△△) He was well paid for the Poems he inſcribed to Charles the IXth.] That Prince, (f) " be- " ſides his yearly Penſion, made him ſome Pre- " ſents. 'Tis true, he ſaid ſometimes in jeſt, that " he was afraid of loſing his Ronſard, and that " too much Wealth would make him idle, adding, " that a good Poet ought not to be fatten'd no " more than a good Horſe, but only kept in good " Caſe. Nevertheleſs he was always very liberal " to him, and would have continued ſo, if he had " lived; for he was not ignorant that Poets have " a kind of Sympathy with the Grandeur of Kings, " and are apt to take Fire, being ſenſibly affected " when their Labours and Merit are not ſufficient- " ly rewarded, as he complains of it in ſeveral " Places". The latter part of this Paſſage confirms what has been ſaid in the foregoing Remark concerning Ronſard's mercenary Humour, and therefore I have not left it out, as I would have done, had it not been for that Reaſon. Brantome mentions this Policy of Charles the IXth, as may be ſeen in Daurat's Article. 'Tis the moſt effectual way of keeping the Poets buſie: If they were too rich, they would be apt to deſpiſe their Trade. Charles the IXth was therefore in the right to deal with the Poets, as if they had told him, Give us neither Poverty nor Riches, feed us with Food convenient for us. The Temper he obſerved, is perhaps the greateſt Bleſſing that can be wiſh'd for the Commonwealth of Learning; for ſome Authors would not have publiſh'd ſeveral good Books, if they had lived in Plenty: Others would have been more accurate in their Compoſures, had they not been ſo poor. The great Poverty of ſome Authors has occaſion'd a Multitude of bad Books, which the Publick are peſtered with. A moderate Income would have inabled them to poliſh their Works; but the preſſing Neceſſity of a Man, incumbred with a great Family, and perſecuted by a Creditor, whom he puts off 'till he be paid for his Copy, and gratified for his Epiſtle Dedicatory, obliges him to write ſo haſtily, that he has no time to lick up his Works into the beſt Shape. 'Tis to be obſerved, that there are ſome ſuch Works which 'tis better to have, than to be wholly deprived of 'em. For Inſtance, 'twas better to have du Ryer's Tranſlations, than none at all of the Authors tranſlated by him: And therefore, if we ſuppoſe that du Ryer would have lived an idle Life, if he had been rich, 'twas better for the Publick, that he had no more than was neceſſary to maintain him. When a Writer deſigns to raiſe his Fortune, he endeavours to write well; but he has no ſooner obtained his End, than he grows remiſs. This is what may be obſerved in Preachers: They are thought to preach better (g) before they are Biſhops, than after they have attain'd to that Dignity. Which puts me in mind of an ingenious Repartee. A great Prince of our time, deſigning to beſiege a Town, was told, that it would be defended by a Mareſchal of France, and did not alter his Reſolution upon that account, ſaying, that a Governor, who is not yet Mareſchal of France, is more to be feared, than one who is ſo already.

(I) To recover ſome Odes which had been cunningly, &c.] This is a remarkable Suit, and I don't Queſtion, that Ronſard proſecuted it as warmly, as others would do to recover an Inheritance. The Hiſtorian ſpeaks of it with great caution, being tender of the Plaintiff's and Defender's Reputation: The latter acted the moſt odious part before the Judges, and the other was laughed at by them. I ſhall ſet down the whole Narrative of Binet. " (h) " When Caſſandra's Amours, and the Four Books of " Odes, which Ronſard promiſed in imitation of " Pindar and Horace, were much talk'd of; it being " a common thing for Wits to be jealous one of " another, du Bellay, who had alſo ſung his Olive " in ningly ſtolen from him; but afterwards they agreed, and were Friends again. He would have had a better Succeſs in his amorous Verſes, had he not ſo carefully imitated the ancient Poets: The too frequent uſe of their Fables made him Harſh (K) and Obſcure. Nay, he ſometimes took the liberty, as they did, to uſe ſome (L) obſcene Expreſſions, and in general was guilty of many Profanations, and inſerted too many Pagan Notions in his Poems, which nevertheleſs were paid (M) with Sacred Things.

(a) Recueil des plus belles pieces, tome 1. pag. 141, 142. Dutch Edit.

(1) Becauſe ſhe was ugly.

(b) See the Remark B. in the Article Gournay.

(c) Binet, ubi ſupra, pag. 141, 142.

(d) She was a Lady of the Houſe d'Eſtrée.

(e) 'Tis but fancying that the Lady for whom he makes Verſes, is his beloved Object.

(f) Binet ibid. pag. 143.

(g) [illegible]

(h) [illegible]

" in an amorous Strain, went about to compoſe " ſome Odes like thoſe of Ronſard, which he got " into his Hands without his Knowledge. He made " ſome, which, together with ſeveral Sonnets, he pub- " liſh'd with the Title of a Collection of Poems, to " prevent Ronſard. The latter conceived a reaſona- " ble Jealouſie againſt du Bellay, ſo far as to indite " him in order to recover his Papers. They were " adjudged to him; and then the Quarrel was over. " Ronſard deſired du Bellay to go on with his Odes, by " which means they became greater Friends than ever, " being of Opinion that ſuch an Ambition ſhews a " generous Soul, and that if Men, jealous of Glory, " grow quickly angry, they are alſo eaſily recon- " ciled.

(K) Made him harſh and obſcure.] The Obſcurity of his Works was complain'd of at that very time, which was the reaſon why ſome of his Friends Commented upon them. Caſſandra's Amours were Commented upon by Muret: The Firſt Book of his Love for Mary was Commented upon by Remi Belleau, and the Second by Nicolas Richelet: His Sonnets upon Helena, the Five Books of his Odes, and his Hymns, were Commented upon by the ſame Richelet; and Claudius Garnier did the ſame upon all the Pieces of the Ninth Part of his Works. (a) Beſides ſeveral Pieces of the Firſt Part, Peter de Marcaſſus Commented upon the Franciade, which makes up the third, the Bocage Royal which makes up the Fourth, the Eclogues, Maſcarades, and Cartels, which make up the Fifth, the Elegies which make up the Sixth, and the Poems which make up the Eighth. John Beſly, the King's Advocate at Fontenay le Comte, Commented (b) upon the Hymns. Poor Ronſard is put to a Non-plus in the Parnaſſe Reformé, on account of the impenetrable Obſcurity of his Works, without the help of a good Commentary. His Je ne ſuis point ma guerriere Caſſandre, &c. is particularly alledged againſt him. Do you believe ('tis a Queſtion put to him) (c) that your Caſſandra, for whom you made that Sonnet, had ſuch a good Opinion of it? Do you think that the Dolope Soudart, the Myrmidon, the Corebe inſenſé, and the Gregeois Penelée, were very well known to her; and was it a ſmall matter for a Woman to be put to the trouble of unfolding all the Fables relating to the Siege of Troy?

(a) Baillet, Jugemens ſur les poemes, tom. 3. n. 1325. pag. 371.

(b) Colomeſ. obſervat. ſacr. pag. 94.

(c) Parnaſſe reform. p. 91, 92. Dutch Edit.

Ronſard's Obſcurity and Harſhneſs would be more excuſable, had he been the firſt who improved the French Poetry; but he ſaw it full of Charms, and near its Perfection in Marot's Writings, which might have been a great help to him. I ſhall ſet down Monſieur de la Bruyere's Opinion. (d) " One " would think from Marot's Turn and Style, that he " writ after Ronſard: There is hardly any diffe- " rence between him and us, but in ſome Words. " Ronſard, and the Authors contemporary with him, " did the French Style more harm than good; they " kept it from arriving to Perfection, and were " like to hinder it from ever attaining to it. 'Tis " ſurprizing that Marot's Works, which are ſo eaſy " and natural, did not make Ronſard, who was full " of a Poetical Spirit, a greater Poet than Ronſard " and Marot. But how could they produce ſuch an " Effect in a Man whoſe Taſte was ſo depraved, " that he look'd upon 'em as a Heap of Dirt with " ſome Grains of Gold in it? He (e) had conſtantly in his Hands, as we are told by the Author of his Life, ſome French Poets ..... eſpecially .... John le Maire de Belges, the Roman de la Roſe, and Marot's Works, which he call'd, as Virgil did thoſe of Ennius, a Dunghil, out of which, as it were by an induſtrious waſhing, he took many Grains of Gold. That Waſhing would not have appear'd very induſtrious to Monſieur de la Bruyere, he would have ſaid that Ronſard took the Earth, and threw off the Gold.

(d) La Bruyere, Caracteres, in the Chap. intituled, des ouvrages de l'Eſprit, p. m. 82.

(e) Binet, Vie de Ronſard, p. m.

(L) Some obſcene Expreſſions.] I ſhall only give one inſtance of it alledged by Monſieur Menage in a place, wherein he finds fault with him for uſing obſcure Fables. No Fables, ſays he (f), ought to be made uſe of, but ſuch as are known to every body. Ronſard, who made uſe of ſome that are only known to the Learned, and only to be found in the Scholiaſts, ſuch as that which he mentions in theſe Words of the 21ſt Ode of the 2d Book out of the Scholiaſt upon Nicander,

Ny les fleurons que diffama
Venus, alors que ſa main blanche
Au milieu du Lis renferma
D'un grand Aſne le roide manche, was accounted a Pedant, inſtead of a Learned Man. Here follows a Note of Nicolas Richelet upon thoſe four Verſes of Ronſard. (g) " This we find in " Nicander's Alexipharmaca. One can hardly ap- " prehend how it can be underſtood of the Lilly, " which the ſame Nicander calls in another place " Venus's Delight. And indeed our Author ſeems " to doubt of it, ſpeaking a ſecond time of the Lil- " ly in that ſame Ode; for it were needleſs to ſpeak " twice of the ſame Flower. Nicander ſays that this " Flower, whatever it be, undertook one Day to " contend for Beauty with Venus, who out of ſpite, " and to revenge her ſelf, ſhut up the privy Parts of " an Aſs in its Leaves.

"——Τότ' ἀπέσυγεν, ἀφρὼ
" Οὕνεκ' ἐειδμαίνεσκε χροιῆς ὕπερ, ἐν δὲ
" νυθείοις
" Ἀργαλέην μεσάτοισιν ὀνείδειν ἐπέλασσε
" Δεινὴν βρωμήεντος ἐπαλδήσασα κορύ-
" νην."

That Commentator does not complain of the Obſcenity of the Text.

(f) Menage, Obſervat. ſur Malherbe, pag. 531.

(g) Richelet, upon the 2d Book of Ronſard's Odes, p. m. 306.

(M) Which nevertheleſs were paid with ſacred Things.] Conſult Sorel, who ſays that Ronſard's Odes, (h) " written to any ones Praiſe, are an imitation of " Pindar, and that the reſt, which are indifferent, " are moſt of 'em taken out of Anacreon; ſo that " there is ſcarce any thing to be found in 'em, but " that perhaps to Morrow we ſhall be nothing but Duſt, " that we ought to enjoy our ſelves whilſt we may " do it, and drink and indulge the Love of Women; " which betrays a Man, who does not believe the " Immortality of the Soul. His Hymns contain ve- " ry few Precepts of Virtue: Some are only a meer " repetition of what is to be ſeen in Homer and other " Poets, as his Hymns upon Calais and Zethes, " and Caſtor and Pollux; which is very improper, " for what ſignifies it to ſing the Praiſes of thoſe " chimerical Heroes? His Hymn concerning Hercules compared with Chriſt, both as to his Birth " and Labours, cannot excite any Devotion; for " thoſe remote and far fetch'd Applications are fitter " to make one Laugh, than to produce in us a Re- " pentance of our Sins." He gives the Subſtance of that Hymn, and then he adds, (i) " I had ra- " ther lay aſide intirely the Fables of the Heathens, " than pretend to mend 'em by applying them " in ſuch a manner to Holy Myſteries. 'Tis a dan- " gerous

(h) Sorel, Remarks on the 13th Book of the Berger extravagant, pag. 648.

(i) Id. ib. pag. 650.

Things. People are very much divided in their Opinions about his Works, as may be ſeen in M. Baillet *. See alſo Sorel's †Remarks upon the Berger Extravagant, wherein you'll find many curious and ſolid Criticiſms upon that Poet. I muſt not forget what has been obſerved, that he did not well ſucceed in mending (N) his own Works; he left out the beſt Things: which is a troubleſome Fault, and ſome other Writers have not been free from it. I muſt alſo take Notice, that

" gerous thing to ſuffer ſuch Subjects to be handled by the Poets. If you examine the Matter " narrowly, you'll find that the Myſteries of our " Religion are Prophaned by ſuch a method; for " the Relations are only ſuperficial. What a ſhameful thing is it to refer Jupiter's Adultery to the " Incarnation of the Eternal Word? At this rate it " muſt be ſaid, that the Holy Virgin is repreſented " by Alcmena, and then the Angel Gabriel, who " declared the Conception, and the Holy Ghoſt that " wrought it, muſt be repreſented by Mercury. " Wretched Poet! If you deſign to explain in ſuch a " manner what we are told of Hercules, mind what " you do; for there are ſuch abominable Thoughts " concealed under it, that my Pen drops from my " Hands when I think of 'em. Perhaps you'll ſay, " that you have not meddled with them: But will " not every Reader, if he has never ſo little Subtilty " in him, be deſirous to know all the Relations contain'd in your Fable? Beſides, is not the Compariſon between Hercules and Chriſt execrable in every part of it." I muſt not forget that he ſays ſomething to excuſe that Poet. " (a) I have alſo ſeen ſome moral Reflections upon the Roman de la Roſe, wherein the moſt lewd Things contain'd in that Romance were explained, with relation to our Creation and Redemption, and Eternal Life. There are ſome execrable Thoughts " in that Book; however I believe the Author was " a well-meaning Man, and acted therein according " to the Simplicity of the time he lived in. And I " make no doubt that Ronſard had a very good Intention in his Hercule Chretien, but his Performance did not anſwer his Hopes. As for his other " Hymns, for inſtance, concerning Eternity, Juſtice, " the Devils, and others of the like nature, he " brings in ſeveral Deities, which he ſhould have " left to the Greeks." When he criticiſes the Hymns about the Four Seaſons of the Year, which are the Maſter piece of that Poet, if we may depend upon (b) his Funeral Oration, and Paſquier (c), he obſerves a great many Faults in 'em, and even a groſs Contradiction. Tho' Fictions wholly depend upon a Writer's Fancy, the ſame Poet ought not to have two different Opinions in one and the ſame Work, and yet in a following Hymn, which muſt needs have a dependance upon the firſt, ſince the four Hymns are coupled together, Ronſard ſays, that Nature perceiving that Time, her Husband, was no longer fit for amorous Embraces, tho' ſhe did whatever lay in her Power, to excite in him a deſire of Sporting with her, fell in Love with the Sun, with whom ſhe lay, and got by him the Four Seaſons. Thus we have here another Birth (d). Nor does he forgive him for telling his dear (e) Helena, that ſhe muſt not forget upon Aſh-Wedneſday to come and take ſome Aſhes from his Heart, which the Fire of Love has conſumed. He was very much in the right to condemn many other Prophanations of our Poets, and the Rewards beſtowed upon 'em. The worſt of all, ſays he (f), " is, that ſome beneficed Men of " this Age have writ in ſuch a Style more freely than " others; as if they had been allowed to play with " Holy Things, becauſe they had the Adminiſtration of 'em. They were look'd upon as Men, " who took more care of their Bellies than of their " Flocks, and becauſe they ſpoke in a prophane " manner, Lay-People were ſo bold as to do the ſame, " which did great Prejudice to Religion. I know " but too many ſtill, who are not yet inveſted with " Eccleſiaſtical Dignities, but deſire to be promoted " to them, tho' their only Talent conſiſts in writing impious and lewd Things. They are Court-Flies, buzzing in the Palaces of Princes, and continually importuning them, becauſe 'tis thought " here that a Benefice is the fitteſt Reward that can " be beſtowed upon a Poet. What an abominable " cuſtom, to give Eccleſiaſtical Preferments to Men, " who would not be Rewarded, had they not been " Pimps to their Maſters, as it appears from their " amorous Verſes, made in order to indulge the diſorderly Paſſions of Princes and Kings. 'Tis true " that St. Gelais was a Biſhop, that Deſportes was " an Abbot, and that Ronſard had (g) ſome Benefices, and that he deſired the King to add a Croſier " to his Lyre, as if a Biſhoprick had been a true " Reward for his Poems, tho' it ought to be conferr'd on none but thoſe who are Holy in their " Words and Actions. However I will not blame " all thoſe Men upon that account, for I do piouſly " believe, that they wrote thoſe looſe Poems in " their Youth, and that they have ſince made Penance " for 'em.

Theſe laſt Words agree, as to Ronſard, with what M. Baillet ſays of him. (h) " I ſhall do a good Office to Ronſard's Memory, by informing the Publick, that in the laſt Years of his Life, he condemn'd the unchaſt and looſe Poems he had made. " Nay, he began then to reform his Muſe, reſolving to write only Chriſtian Poems the remaining " part of his Days. Not contented to ſecure his " Conſcience for the time to come, he was deſirous " to expiate his paſt Sins, by ſuppreſſing ſeveral " Pieces he had made in his Youth, and leaving " out all the Paſſages he did not approve in thoſe " that were not wholly bad. But it may be ſaid, " that he did it more like a Father, who cannot diveſt himſelf of his Tenderneſs for his Children, " than like an incorruptible Judge." M. Menage (i) alledges theſe Words of Binet againſt it: (k) Perſiſting in the Reſolution of Loving and Serving one of the Maids of Honour to the Queen, he praiſed her almoſt to the laſt moment of his Life. Thuanus obſerves, that Ronſard made ſome Verſes (l) even when he was a dying, and that they were pious and tolerable Verſes. I have read in Brantome, that Chatellard, a French Gentleman, who was Beheaded in Scotland for loving the Queen, and making an attempt upon the Honour of that Princeſs, had no other Viaticum or Preparation for Death, than the reading of a Poem of Ronſard; which plainly ſhews, that he took it to be a very pious Piece. (m) Being brought to the Scaffold, he took Ronſard's Hymns into his Hands, and for his Eternal Comfort, read out the Hymn concerning Death, which is a very fine one, and fit to make one leſs afraid of dying, having no other godly Book, nor any Miniſter or Confeſſor.

(N) He did not well ſucceed in mending his Works.] In order to make a very inſtructive Commentary upon theſe Words, I ſhall ſet down a long Note of M. Menage. " (n) It often falls out that the " ſecond Thoughts of the Poets are not ſo good as " the firſt, as (o) Binet very judiciouſly obſerves, " ſpeaking of Ronſard's Verſes. Some, ſays he, are " of Opinion, that ſeveral Paſſages which he has " mended in his Works, are not ſo agreeable as " they were at firſt; for it happens ſometimes,

" eſpecially

---

* Baillet, Jugemens ſur les poetes, 5. part. n. 1335.

† Upon the 13th Book, pag. 647. & ſeq.

(a) Id. ib. pag. 652.

(b) Thoſe who have ſeen his Hymns about the four Seaſons, (and I think there are few in this Congregation but have had that Curioſity) will doubtleſs confirm my Opinion of 'em, and acknowledge that 'tis almoſt impoſſible to peruſe them, without being charm'd with 'em, and confeſſing that there is a Soul and a Genius in 'em, which affects and tranſports both the Readers and Hearers. Du Perron, Oraiſon funebre de Ronſard, pag. 198. 199. (c) Paſquier, Recherches, book 7. ch. 11. pag. m. 646. (d) Sorel, ubi ſupra, pag. 653, 654. He had been mentioning another Fiction of Ronſard, about the Birth of the Four Seaſons. (e) Idem, Remarks upon the 14th Book, pag. 733. (f) Id. ib. pag. 738, 739, 740.

that the common-place of the (C) Jeſts upon Poets for being badly lodged, was uſed againſt Ronſard.

ROQUETAILLADE (John de la) in Latin, de Rupeſciſſa, a Franciſcan Fryar, in the Convent of * Aurillac, of the Dioceſs of St. Flour, made himſelf Famous in the XIVth Century; as well for the Liberty he took of Exclaiming againſt (A) the Vices of the Clergy, and the Oppreſſion of the People, and Diſperſing menacing Predictions, as for his long Impriſonment, which was the Puniſhment of his Bold-ecially in Poetry, that the firſt Fury is more natural, and if the File be too much uſed, inſtead of clearing and Poliſhing, it ſpoils the Grain. Paſquier, in his (a) Reſearches, has made the ſame Obſervation. A Great Poet, ſays he, ſpeaking of Ronſard, but a very bad Judge of his own Works; for about Two or Three Years before his Death, being weaken'd with Old Age, and afflicted with the Gout, Melancholy, and continual Sickneſs, the Poetical Vein, which before kept him good Company, having almoſt forſaken him, he cauſed all his Poems to be Printed in one great Volume, whoſe general Oeconomy he Reform'd, and cut out of his Works many beautiful Inventions, and changed ſome Verſes intirely, and in ſome others he put in other Words, which were not ſo emphatical as the firſt; having, by this means, totally Deface'd, in ſome places, the Beauty of his Poems, not conſidering that tho' he was the Father, and by conſequence, look'd on himſelf to have an abſolute Authority over his Compoſitions; yet he ſhould have reflected, that Old and Melancholy Age was an unfit Judge of the Flights of a vigorous Youth. But nothing proves this Truth ſo well as the Example of Taſſo, who Changed for the worſe, his Poem of Hieruſalem. It's a long time ſince Taſſo was Reproached with this. I have by me a Book called Il Duello dell' Ignoranza, & della ſcienza, which was Printed at Milan in 1607; and I find there, That this great Poet was blamed for leaving out ſome of the moſt Beautiful Paſſages nella Gieruſalemme conquiſtata, and putting in their place things ridiculous. The Author obſerves ſome of theſe Paſſages, after which he ſpeaks thus, (b) a' quali tutti graviſſimi, e giocondiſſimi avvenimenti ſoſtituiſce il Taſſo coſe tali, che ſe con ſemplice intelligenza debbono prenderſi, ſono ſi frivole, che niente più, e ſe ci è dentro qualche miſtero, egli ci è involto con tante ambagi, ch'à ſottrarnelo non baſterebbe l'iſteſſo Edippo. The Author that furniſhes me with this Paſſage, is call'd Don Coſtantino de' Notari Nolano della Congregatione Caſſinenſe. I have touched in another place upon the Faults one may fall into by Corrections,

* See the Remark A at the end.

(C) The Common place of the Jeſts upon Poets for being badly lodged, was uſed againſt Ronſard.] His Condition in this reſpect, was worſe than to lodge in a Garret, ſince 'tis ſaid, That he was poſted like a Lanthorn on a High Tower, or like Sentinels who watch all Night, leſt any Houſe ſhould be on Fire. 'Tis added, that there is ſtill a Monument of that ſad Lodging, ſince the Tower in which he was lodged is ſtill call'd by his Name. This is certainly what he did not expect; none deſires to become immortal by ſuch means, and any body would be very unwilling to have this Thought of Horace apply'd to him.

(c) Exegi Monumentum ære perennius,
Regalique ſitu Pyramidum altius.

The Author whom I am to produce, ſpeaks in the following manner. (d) Ronſard, they ſay, not daring to attack Rabelais, whilſt alive, in Writing, tho' they often quarrelled at Meudon in the Houſe of the Princes of Lorrain, writ only an Epitaph againſt him, in which he abus'd him very much, becauſe Rabelais look'd on him only as a poor miſerable Poet, inſomuch that he thought himſelf very happy to lodge in a Watch Tower, which is at this time called Ronſard's Tower, at Meudon; from whence he went to the Caſtle, where he often met Mr. Francis Rabelais, who did not ſpare him; for after all, tho' he was not ſo good a Poet as he; yet he was born a Poet as well as a Phyſician, (1) Incomparably more knowing than that Prince of the Poets of his time, and underſtood Railing much better. The Book from which theſe Words are taken, was Printed at Paris, 1697: The Author has not (e) put his Name to it. He had practis'd Phyſick 50 Years, and yet was Poor; his ill Fortune had made him Satyrical, and he imploy'd his time only in Criticiſing. This appears by his Supplement to the Hiſtory of Phyſick, by his Antimenagiana, and by the little Book he Publiſh'd under the falſe Name of Pepinacourt, with the Title of Reflexions, penſees, & bons mots anecdotes. He dy'd at Paris the 18th of May, 1698.

(A) Of exclaiming againſt the Vices of the Court of Rome, &c.] I am of Opinion, That to Comment upon theſe Words, I can do nothing more to the purpoſe than to ſet down a long Paſſage out of Froiſſard. (f) There was a Friar Minor, full of Learning in the City of Avignon, who was called Fryar John de Roquetaillade, whom the Pope caſt into the Priſon of the Caſtle of Baigneux, for Predicting wonderful things that were ſoon to come to paſs, and eſpecially to fall upon the Prelates and Preſidents of the Church, for their great Luxury and Pride; and alſo upon the Kingdom of France, and all the Great Men of Chriſtendom, for their great Oppreſſions of the Common People. And the ſaid Fryar John would prove what he ſaid out of the Apocalypſe, and the Ancient Books of the Holy Prophets, which were diſcover'd and open'd to him, by the Grace of the Holy Ghoſt; ſo that he ſaid many things which it was difficult to believe. Some of them came to paſs at the time foretold by him, which he did not predict as a Prophet, but out of the Scriptures, and by the Grace of the Holy Ghoſt, who had given him Underſtanding to Declare and Explain all the Ancient Prophecies, to Proclaim to all Chriſtians the Year and the time they were to come to paſs. And he made on this Subject many Learned Books, one of which was written in 1346, which contained many wonderful and incredible things; ſome of which have already happen'd——— (g) In my Youth, Pope Innocent, who then reigned in Avignon, kept this Fryar in Priſon. This Fryar, (as he ſaid, and as I have often heard ſay in many places not Publick but Private), had put forth, and continued to put forth many Predictions of remarkable Events that were to happen in France, and which are already verify'd; as the taking of King John Priſoner; and he often ſaid, and ſhew'd by ſtrong Reaſons, that the Church was to ſuffer much, becauſe of the Luxury of thoſe who had the Government of it. And then when I ſaw him in Priſon, I was told in the Pope's Palace, of an Example he had given to the Cardinal of Oſtia, alias of Arras, and to the Cardinal of Auxerre, who had been to ſee him, and reprove him for his Words. This Example is the Apologue or Fable, which you may (h) ſee here below. Why do not you read, continu'd (i) he, the Life of St. Sylveſter, and how the Emperor Conſtantine gave him the Tythes of the Church, and upon what Conditions. He did not ride about with 2 or 300 Horſes, but kept himſelf cloſe in Rome, and lived ſoberly with thoſe of the Church. This Fryar declared to them, that the Change which he predicted and denoted by the Apologue, would quickly come to paſs: Inſomuch, adds the Hiſtorian, that very often the Cardinals were aſtoniſhed at it, and would willingly have put him to Death, if they could have found, as they could not, any juſt cauſe to have coloured the Action: ſo they let him live as long as he could, but durſt not let him out of Priſon, for fear he ſhould lead the People into an Error, by his profound Predictions, drawn from his own Interpretations of the Scripture. Nevertheleſs, many things, (as ſome ſay, who have better obſerved his Predictions than I have) which he foretold in Priſon, and which he proved by the Apocalypſe, came to paſs: The true Proofs with which he armed himſelf, ſaved him often from being Burnt; and beſides, there were ſome Cardinals who had pity on him, and were not ſo hard upon him as they might have been.

We will make two Obſervations upon the Diſtinction menton'd by Froiſſard. He ſays, That this Fryar did not predict what was to come as a Prophet, but only as a Perſon who had received from the Holy Ghoſt the underſtanding of Prophecies. This is only a quæſtio de Nomine, or a Diſpute about Words: However it ſeems to me, that the Privilege of this Fryar equal'd, and even ſurpaſs'd that of the Prophets; for the Prophets did not always know what God Couched under the ſignificative Images of what was to come to paſs, and by conſequence, a Perſon to whom God reveals the true Senſe of thoſe Prophetical Signs, receives a more particular favour. And therefore neither ſuch Man nor his Favourers, ought, under pretence of Modeſty, to make any Difficulty to call this Favour the Gift of Prophecy. If a man ſhould pretend to Expound the Revelation of St. John, only by the aſſiſtance of what may be gathered from a ſerious Examination of the Scriptures, it were another matter; but when he perſuades himſelf that he underſtands the Apocalypſe only by the help of the Holy Ghoſt; when (f) Froiſſ. vol. 1. c. 211.

(g) Idem. vol. 1. c. 21. apud eundem. ib. p. 450.

(h) In the Remark D.

(i) Id. ib.

Boldneſs (B). Some People ſay that the Event juſtify'd his Predictions; but other aſſure us, (C) that the quite contrary came to paſs. He did not properly give him ſelf out for a Prophet, but for one who had obtained of God the Knowledge of the Secrets of the Apocalypſe, and other Prophecies of the Scripture. See in the Remark A, a large Paſſage out of Froiſſard. Great notice was taken of the Apologue, (D) which he made uſe of to ſhew, That the ſame Princes who had en riched the Church of Rome, would bring Her back again to Her Ancient Pover

I ſay, he ſpeaks thus to his Readers; (m) I can ſay, That God in the way opened my Eyes in ſuch a manner, that it has given me more Conſolation than I can expreſs: for after having conſulted the Eternal Truth a hundred times with a profound Humility, and a great Attention, at laſt I was anſwer'd; He declares himſelf at the bottom, to be a Perſon raiſed by God to diſcover Future Events: is not this to call ones ſelf effectually a Prophet, or more than a Prophet? This is my firſt Obſervation: the next is this; That all Authors do not agree, that John de Roquetaillade did not pretend to the Spirit of Prophecy. Read the following words of (n) an Author who has writ the Life of Innocent VI. Circa idem tempus, (i. e. in 1356.) inſurrexit quidam frater ordinis Minorum de conventu Aureliaci diœceſis ſancti Flori, dicens ſe habere SPIRITUM PROPHETIÆ, qui de futuris dicebat & in ſcriptis redigebat multa, vocatus Frater Johannes de Rupeſciſſa, qui quia potius vaticinator quam PROPHETA merito erat cenſendus, ad dictum Innocentium fuit adductus, &c. It is certain that this Fryar declared openly in his Writings, That he did not ſpeak as a Prophet. See what I ſhall quote below, (o) out of a Journaliſt.

(B) Long Impriſonment, which was the puniſhment of his Boldneſs.] Froiſſard tells us, That the Pope kept this Fryar in Priſon in the Caſtle of Bagnols. Another Writer aſſures us, That about 1356, this pretended Prophet was ſent to Innocent VI. who impriſoned him, (p) and never after gave him his Liberty. But this was not his firſt Impriſonment; for in 1345, he was impriſoned in the Convent of Figeac by order of Fryar William Farmena, Miniſter of the Franciſcans in the Province of Aquitain. This is to be ſeen in the beginning of the Revelations of this Prophet. Where it is alſo to be ſeen that he reduced them into Writing, at the requeſt of Cardinal William Curti. It will be worth the while to give you his very words. (q) Ego frater Johannes de Rupeſciſſa ordinis fratrum Minorum Provinciæ Aquitaniæ, provinciæ Ruthenenſis, & conventus Aurelhiaci, ad mandatum veſtrum deſcripſi ſeriem notabilium eventuum futurorum mihi in carceribus apertum, prout melius & verius potero recordari. Modus revelandi fuit iſte. Cum anno Domini milleſimo trecenteſimo quadrageſimo quinto multis diebus fierem vinctus ferro in carcere luti in conventu Figiaci ſtupens & mirans quare cum tanta crudelitate miſſus eſſem per fratrem Guillermum Farmena tunc miniſtrum Aquitaniæ in carcerem, &c. It may well be concluded from theſe words, That he was not Honour'd with the Gift of Revelation till he was a Priſoner; which excites my Curioſity to know for what reaſon he was impriſoned. Some ſay, it was becauſe of his Hereſies; (r) but the Writers that were nearer his time, ſay, He was only impriſon'd becauſe he fore-told the near approach and coming of Antichriſt, and advanced many things that diſpleaſed the Popes and Princes; for he maintain'd, That their Ambition, Pride and Avarice, were the cauſe of the Evils he fore-told. Alciatus places him among thoſe who have ſuffered for uſing a certain Method of maintaining Religion. They give out Prophecies, and 'tis the Principal means by which they endeavour to fright thoſe Perſons, whom by other means they cannot induce to ſerve God: (s) Sunt & qui vaticinia ſe ſcire profiteantur, hocque potiſſimum modo, quos verbis ad cultum & pietatem inducere neſciunt, terrere conantur, quod merito Hercule in malam rem Johanni de Rupeſciſſa Symmiſtæ veſtro vertit. Cum enim ſe a Deo admonitum univerſalis Judicii affirmaret, cumque mundi finem adeſſe conclamaret, quia dictis ejus res non reſponderunt, Avinione ab Urbano quinto captus in cuſtodia manſit. This Fryar having prophecy'd that the End of the World was at hand, was impriſon'd by Urban V. becauſe the Event did not anſwer his great Threats. Alciatus has committed a Chronological Fault: It was Innocent VI. the Predeceſſor of Urban V. who impriſon'd Roquetaillade.

(C) The Event juſtify'd his Predictions; but others aſſure us, the quite contrary came to paſs.] We have obſerv'd already, that Froiſſard does give Evidence that many things fore-told by this Fryar, came to paſs. The Author of the Life of Innocent VI. does not deny it; but he adds, that in many other things the Predictions of this Fryar proved falſe, from whence he reaſonably infers, that he was not a Prophet. (t) Licet in dictis & ſcriptis ſuis reperta fuerint multa quæ proceſſu temporis contigerunt, propter quæ plures ſibi fidem dabant, tamen etiam multa defecerunt; & ſic apparebat quia non erat vere Propheta, quia in illo, ſi talis fuiſſet, nullus fuiſſet defectus. I do not much wonder that it was believed that he fore-told ſome Truths; for, firſt, thoſe who exclaim againſt publick Diſorders, and affirm that God will ſpeedily revenge the Oppreſſed People, and chaſtiſe the Pride, Avarice and Luxury of the Great ones, are favourably heard by the Multitude, who interpret every thing to the Honour of the Prophet, it ſuiting well with their Genius; nay, they force themſelves to believe what is fore-told, and gloſs on it according to what they earneſtly deſire. In the ſecond place, the World has been always ſo expoſed to War, Famin, Peſtilence, &c. that whoſoever at any time will fore-tell dreadful Events, and terrible Scourges of the Anger of God, will hit upon Truth. But to run down at once all the Favourers of this Fryar, we need only make an Obſervation, (Viz.) That the principal Points of his Prophecy proved falſe. He fore-told (u) the total deſolation of the Clergy; the coming of an Angel, who in quality of the Vicar of Jeſus Chriſt, would reform all things, and convert the Infidels; a Peace that ſhould continue upon Earth about a Thouſand Years. He ſaid thoſe things would quickly come to paſs, which have proved great Lies; for nothing like it came to paſs in the Age in which he liv'd, nor in the ſucceeding Ages to this Hour. (x) I ſhall ſet down what we find in a very good Chronicle. (y) Joannes de Rupeſſa Minorum ordinis inſignis Theologus tempeſtate hac præter ea, quæ in ſententiarum libros accurate docteque ſcripſerat, in carcerem truſus multa de futuris tanquam Propheta ſcribere præſumpſit, videlicet de duobus Antichriſtis, & de eccleſiæ conciliatione & de converſione omnium gentium ad ſidem Chriſti, & alia multa, quæ in januis adeſſe affirmabat. Et hæc a domino Jeſu Chriſto ſibi revelata fuiſſe conteſtabatur, quæ non modo non evenere, ſed oppoſitum in omnibus fuiſſe conſtat. Hujuſmodi autem pronoſticatores multi ab initio decepti fuere. Quibus ſatius fuiſſet ſilere, quam talia temere loqui.

(D) The Apologue which he made uſe of to ſhew that the ſame Princes.] He ſpoke it when the Cardinal of Arras, and Cardinal d'Auxerre went to ſee him in Priſon, to Cenſure him. Mr. du Pleſſis Mornay draws from hence a Proof of the Oppoſitions that were made to Antichriſt: let us ſee how he abridges the long recital of Froiſſard: (z) "The ſum is, That "the Church was like a beautiful Bird, which ſhould "be hatched without Feathers, and not being able to "fly, ſhould be in danger of ſtarving; that other Birds "had pity on her, and cover'd her with their Feathers; Kings and Princes enriched her with Lands, "and honour'd her above meaſure: upon this, ſhe "grew proud, and ſeeing her ſelf grown up, ſhe "thought that ſhe had no more need of them, but "began to pick at them with her Beak, and ſcratched them with her Claws; and to quarrel with "Emperors and Princes: that the Birds thereupon, "reſolv'd to re-take their Feathers, and ſo Princes would reaſſume their Gifts and Demeſnes, "and compel her to cry Mercy: The Emperor, and "other Chriſtian Princes would ſtrip her of all, if ſhe "grew proud again. Mr. du Pleſſis ſays, That this Apologue of the Bird has its Foundation in the Apocalypſe, cap. 17. where it is ſaid: (1) That Kings ſhall give their Power and Authority to the Beaſt, or Whore; but afterwards they ſhall hate, and worry her, and ſhall eat her Fleſh, and burn her in the Fire. (2) Wolfius has inſerted in his firſt Tome all theſe Paſſages of Froiſſard, and has added a Figure of the Bird of the Apologue. It is to be obſerv'd that Roque-

(m) Jur'eu Preface in the Accompliſſement des Propheties, tom. ***.

(n) Autor primæ vitæ Innocentii VI. vulgatæ a Baluzio, p. 342. tom. 1. vitarum Paparum Avenionenſium.

(o) In the Remark F.

(p) Ad dictum Innocentium Papam fuit adductus per quem fuit carceribus mancipatus, in quibus permanſit per totum tempus ipſius. Id. ibid.

(q) Joh. de Rupeſciſſa init. Revelationum apud Baluzium not. ad vitas Paparum Avenion. pag. 947.

(r) Quod autem ſunt nonnulli recentiores qui ob hæreſim in vincula conjectum dixerunt, non ita antiquiores qui nonniſi ob prophetias de Anti-Chriſto proxime venturo captum volunt. Spondan. ad an. 1356. n. 20 p. m. 540.

(s) Andreas Alciatus Epiſt. contra vitam Monaſticam pag. 65. 66.

He Composed several (E) Books, some of which are Printed, you'll find (F) two of 'em in the Appendix of the Fasciculus rerum expetendarum & fugiendarum. We are told (a) that he was a great Divine, and a good Philosopher. I know not whether he dy'd in Prison or not; but I believe that those who say (G) he was burnt, are mistaken. James Podera (β) says he was buried at Villefranche, in the Diocess of Lyons, in a Convent of his own Order. Raynaldus who (H) endeavoured to take advantage of a Prophecy of this Friar, has been solidly refuted by Baluzius.

RORARIUS (Jerôme) Nuncio of Clement VII. at the Court of Ferdinand King of Hungary, has Composed a Book (γ) which is worth Reading. He undertakes to demonstrate that Brute Beasts have not only Reason, but that they make better use of it than Men. The occasion which moved him to write that Book is Curious, and very Singular. He had been Discoursing with a Learned Man, who affirmed that Charles V. did not equal Otho, or Frederick Barbarossa. There needed no more to make Rorarius conclude that Beasts are more Reasonable than Men, and he undertook immediately to Compose (A) a Treatise upon this Subject. It was at the time that Charles V. made War against the League of Smalcalde. This Book is not ill writ, and it contains a great many singular Facts concerning the Industry of Beasts, and the Malice of Man. Those which concern the Roquetaillade Prophecied that this Impoverishment of the Church was near at Hand; but he was Deceived. See Coeffeteau (b) in his Answer to the Book of Mr. Du Plessis. The same thing is still Prophecied about the end of the XVII Century.

(E) He Composed several Books.] Besides his Prophecies, there's a Book of his de Consideratione quintæ essentiæ, another de familiaritate philosophiæ, another called vade mecum in tribulatione, and a Commentary super prophetiam Cyrilli eremitæ Presbyteri. Mr. Baluzius (c) speaks of this last Book, as if there were a Manuscript of it in the King's Library; he says the others are to be found (d) in Manuscript in Mr. Colbert's Library. Observe that the Work de Consideratione quintæ essentiæ rerum omnium, was Printed at Basil (e) in 1561. It is said so in the Abridgment of Gesner (f), and it's given out there by a Mistake of an Hundred Years, That this Author lived about the Year 1240. I have quoted in another place (g) Naudæus, who has made mention of this Book of Joannes de Rupescissa. There goes about, under the Name of this Apocalyptical Friar, a Book de Confectione veri lapidis Philosophorum, Printed at Basil in 1561.

(F) Two of 'em in the Appendix ... rerum expetendarum.] This is a Book that was Printed at London 1690. The Author of the Bibliotheque Universelle speaks much of it in his Nineteenth (h) Volume. Here is what he says of Roquetaillade. (i) "They have Inserted "here 2 Works of this Friar; the first called A Copy "of the Prophecy of Friar John de Roquetaillade, of "the Order of the Franciscans, of the Province of Guienne, Warden of Rhodes, and Advocate (k) of Orleans, Prisoner at Avignon, the 8th Year of the Pontificate of Clement VI. in the Prison called Soldan, "in the Month of November, 1349. The other "Work of this Friar is (l) his Vade mecum in tribulatione. In this Book which he calls Libruneulus, he "declares, That he is not a Prophet as those "who have received immediate Revelations from "God, and who say when they Denounce them, "Thus saith the Lord; but that God had given him "the Talent of seeing by the Scripture (†) "things to come: He points at some of his "Books, wherein he says, he had exactly set down, "and observed some Events, and it appears that "he Composed this in 1356. Afterwards he "Proposes twenty Explications of the Apocalypse, "which he calls intentiones. In the first he foretels that the Pope shall subdue all the World, "which shall look upon him as their Pastor: A "Prediction which is quite contrary to that of our "Protestant Interpreters of the Apocalypse, who "are not more Happy in their Predictions than "Friar John; and some of them are more Blamable in that they would engage Princes to make "War without end, that their Conjectures may "take effect. Our Friar at least, non erat intentionis faciendi guerras, and would make use only "of Spiritual Arms; whereas some of our Roquetaillades of these Days would oblige by Force "Erroneous Consciences to make Profession of their "Opinions, without believing them.

(G) Those that say he was Burnt are mistaken.] "Some "(m) say that at last he was burnt. These are the words of Mr. du Plessis, who puts in the Margin, Petrus Premonstratensis in Cronico quod inscribitur Biblia pauperum. Baluzius rejects this and says, (n) he knows not from whence Cæsar Nostradamus had (o) it, That this Friar was burnt publickly at Avignon, in 1362, by the Pope's Order. What Froissard has writ is a solid Refutation of this Lye, tho' we had not the Testimony of those, (p) who say that he was buried at Villefranche in a Convent, where he had made his Profession of the Rule of St. Francis.

(H) Raynaldus, who endeavoured to take advantage of a Prophecy of this Friar, has been solidly Refuted.] He apply'd it to the Election of Urban VI. (q) Odoricus Raynaldus, an. 1379. n. 12. refert insigne, ut ille vocat, vaticinium viri religiosi Joannis e Rupescissa inventum inter monumenta Avenionensia, ex quo multum adjuvari putat causam Urbani. The Prophecy is, that the See of Rome (r) shall be Vacant 18 Months, and that in the Time of the Conclave there shall be so great a Battle between the People, and the Tyrants of Italy, and so great an Effusion of Blood, that it will be thought the End of the World is come. Now by the just Judgment of God, an Anti-Pope shall be Chosen, according to the Suggestions of a Deceiver, who shall have Two Tongues, ad suggestionem unius bilinguis falsarii. This Deceiver, according to Raynaldus, was the Cardinal of Amiens. But Mr. Baluzius shews us two things; the first, (s) that the Prophecy does not relate to the time when Urban VI. was Chosen Pope; the second is, that if it concerned that time, it would be more contrary to Urban VI. than to the pretended Anti-Pope Clement VII. He shews by the Commentary of Roquetaillade upon the Prophecy of Cyril, that the Vacancy of the Papal Chair during a Year and a half, has Relation to the time that Anti-Christ shall appear. Here is the Character of that time. The Kings of France and England shall then Fight against the Infidels in the East. This does in no manner agree with the time of the Schism of Urban VI. and Clement VII. Observe that this Friar acknowledges that the Anti-Pope shall be Elected (t) to the Dishonour of Jesus Christ, and of the true Pontif, and that Anti-Christ shall support the Cause of the Anti-Pope. Illud scandalum (u) erit majus quia Antichristus partem Antipapæ sustinebit. From this 'tis manifest, that he did not hold the Pope to be Anti-Christ.

(A) To compose a Treatise upon this Subject.] There are two Epistles Dedicatory in the Beginning of this Book; one to the Bishop of Arras, dated March 1. 1547. the other to Cardinal Christopher Madrucio, Bishop of Trent. This piece remained almost a Hundred Years in the dark Recesses of Libraries. At last Naudæus had it Printed in France, and Dedicated it to Messieurs du Puy. His Epistle Dedicatory is dated from Paris, April 9. 1645. That Book was Re-printed in Holland (x) more than once. I do not know for what reason it is put among the Books of Physick, in Lindenius Renovatus. I am sure I shall be accused of producing sometimes Proofs without Necessity; but the Readers would be in the Wrong to say so, as to what I have advanced, touching the Motive

(a) Trithemius de Script. eccles.

(β) Jacob. Podera in hist. Provinciæ Sancti Bonaventuræ p. 315, 322, apud Baluzium, not. ad vitas paparum Avenionensium, p. 934.

(γ) Rorarius, quod animalia bruta ratione utantur melius homine, lib. 1. p. 47. edit. Amstelod. 1654.

(b) Coeffeteau, reponse au Mystere d'iniquité, p. 1078.

(c) Baluz. not. ad vitas Paparum Avenion. p. 931.

(d) id. ib. p. 932.

(e) The Oxford Catalogue takes notice of the Basil Edition, 1561.

(f) Epit. Biblioth. Gesneri, p. m. 451.

(g) In the [illegible] of the Article Albertus Magnus.

(h) From p. 331. to p. 354.

(i) Bibliot. Univers. Tom. 19. p. 338.

(k) The Latin p. 432. append. Fasc. has Custos Ruthenensis & Carcerarius Aurelianensis. This last word signifies a Public and [illegible] of Orleans. [illegible] Judicious signifies some Deputy equivalent to the Don Procurator among the Benedictines or Carthusians; but I don't know what the Mendicants call [illegible] but it's not Advocate. (l) Ibid p. 349. (†) The second Continuator of William de Nangis, apud Dacher. Spicil. tom. 11. 822. says that this Friar being asked about future things by the Arch-Bishop of Toulouse, an. 1356. Answered, Ego sicut unus [illegible] & abhominabilis peccator ea quæ dico, non dico de capite [illegible], nec sum propheta, sed tantum per intelligentias Prophetarum. He answered several things, whereof most did not come to pass. See Mr. Brown's Prologue in the Appendix of the Fasciculus rerum expetendarum.

(m) Du Plessis ubi supra.

(n) Baluzius, ubi sup. p. 932.

(o) Cæsar Nostradamus in historia Provinciæ. p. 411.

(p) Jacobus Podera apud Baluzium ib.

(q) Baluz. ibid. p. 1160, 1161.

(r) Baluz. ibid.

(s) id. ib. and p. 1459.

(t) In contumeliam Christi & veri Pontificis. Joh. de Rupescissa apud Baluz. p. 1162.

(u) Idem apud eundem. p. 1459.

(x) I make use of the Amsterdam Edit. of 1654. in 12.

the induſtry of Beaſts, put under great Difficulties both the Followers of Deſcartes (B) and Ariſtotle. The firſt deny that Beaſts have any Soul; the latter maintain that they are endowed with Senſe, Memory, and Paſſions, but not with Reaſon. 'Tis pity that the Opinion of Deſcartes ſhould be ſo hard to Maintain, and ſo far from Likelyhood; for it is (C) otherwiſe very Advantageous to Religion, and this is the Motive of Rorarius's Book. If I did not quote his own Words, I ſhould give occaſion to think, That I have framed the Idea of a Chimecherical Writer to divert my Reader. For what can be imagined more Comical and Extravagant, than a Man who takes Pen in Hand to place Mankind below Beaſts, for no other reaſon, but becauſe a Learned Man takes it ill that Charles V. ſhould aſpire to the Univerſal Monarchy, without having the Qualities of Otho the Great, or of Frederick Barbaroſſa? It is therefore very neceſſary that I ſhould prove what I have ſaid above. Eram, Illuſtriſſime Princeps, (they are Rorarius's Words) paucis ante diebus, ubi de Cæſare ſermo habebatur; & fuit doctiſſimus aliquis vir, qui diceret, neſcire quo colore clens Chriſtianum orbem ditionis ſuæ facere niteretur. Haberet in ſe ſaltem quo cum Othonibus, aut Frederico Ænobarbo conferri poſſet. Movit (fateor) mihi ſtomachum, dignum immortalitate Principem illis poſtponi: qui licet inſignes fuerint, ſi tamen in unum omnes congerantur, hujus magnitudini non ſufficiant. Itaque in mentem mihi venit animalia bruta ſæpe ratione uti melius homine, idque duobus libellis oſtendi (y). He did not content himſelf with one ſingle Declaration: He had already obſerved this in another Epiſtle Dedicatory. (z) Scripſeram libellos duos, in quibus oſtenderam animalia bruta ſæpe ratione uti melius homine; idque feceram, ut quorundam impudentiam, anne potius dementiam retunderem; qui maximi omnium Imperatorum Caroli Quinti ſplendorem intueri non valent. Read the reſt of this Epiſtle, you'll find there a Man very partial to Charles V. and a great Flatterer. There are many more like him in the World.

(B) Put under great difficulties both the Followers of Deſcartes, &c .... Ariſtotle.] This needs no Proof, with reſpect to the Carteſians; there's no Body but knows that it is difficult to prove how meer Machines can do what Animals do. Let us only prove that the Peripateticks will find it very hard to give good Reaſons for what they aſſert. Every Peripatetick, when he hears it affirmed, That Beaſts are only Automata, or Machines, preſently Objects, That a Dog that is beaten for falling foul upon a Diſh of Meat, touches it no more when he ſees his Maſter threatning him with a Stick. But to ſhew that this Phænomenon cannot be explained by him that propoſes it; it's enough to ſay, That if the Action of this Dog is attended with Knowledge, the Dog muſt neceſſarily reaſon: He muſt compare things preſent with things paſt, and from thence draw a Concluſion: He muſt needs Remember both the blows that were given him, and why he has received them: He muſt needs know, That if he ſhould fall foul upon the Diſh, which ſtrikes his Senſes, he ſhould do the ſame Action for which he was beaten, and Conclude, That to avoid a new beating he muſt abſtain from that Meat. Is not this true Reaſoning? Can you explain this Act by the ſimple Suppoſition of a Soul that has Senſe; without reflecting upon its Acts; without Remembrance; without comparing two Ideas; without drawing any Concluſion? Examine well the examples (a) which are heaped together, and which are Objected to the Carteſians; you'll find they prove too much, for they prove that Beaſts compare the end with the means, and that on ſome occaſions they prefer what is Honeſt before what is Profitable; In ſhort, That they are guided by Rules of Equity and Gratitude. Rorarius ſays there have been Horſes that have refuſed to leap their Mothers; others, who having done it unwittingly, being deceived by the Artifice of their Groom, afterwards knowing what they had done, have thrown themſelves down a Precipice. (b) Teſtantur literarum monumenta, fuiſſe gregis cuſtodem, qui equum ut matrem iniret, nunquam inducere potuerit; & quoniam ambo eximia ſpecie erant, fraude tamen illuſiſſe, velatis oculis, ne matrem videret: Detracto poſtmodum operimento, & agnito cum matre concubitu, petiiſſe prærupta, & ſe patrati ſceleris reum precipitem dediſſe. Maris hæc virtus; alibi fœminæ: ſiquidem in Reatino agro equa lacerato prius auriga, qui flagitii auctor fuerat, eundem exitum habuit. What he and other Authors relate of the Diligence of Dogs, in procuring aſſiſtance to their Maſters, and Revenging their Death, &c. are things abſolutely inexplicable according to the Hypotheſis of the Ariſtotelians; ſo that all their diſpute againſt the Diſciples of Carteſius, is Labour in vain. There is no need of any thing, but of the dexterous Management which Pereira made uſe of. You grant ſaid he, (c) to his Adverſaries, that Animals do many things which much reſemble what the Rational Soul does, and yet that their Soul is not Rational. Why then do you forbid me to maintain that they do many Things, which much Reſemble what a Senſitive Soul does, tho' their Soul be not Senſitive? I do not wonder in the leaſt, that neither Carteſius, nor any of his Diſciples ever made uſe of a Paſſage in the Code of Juſtinian, (d) where it's ſaid that Beaſts are incapable of doing any Injury, becauſe they want Senſe; it is clear that the word Senſus in that place is taken for Deſign and Underſtanding.

(C) Very advantageous to Religion.] What induces the Carteſians to ſay that Beaſts are Automata, is, That according to their Maxims, all Matter is incapable of thinking. They do not content themſelves to ſay, That only Spiritual Subſtances are capable of Reflections; but they maintain that every Thought, whether you call it Reflection, Meditation, drawing of Conſequences, or whether it be called Senſation, Imagination, Inſtinct, is of ſuch a Nature, that the moſt ſubtil and perfect Matter is incapable of it, and that it can only be found in Incorporal Subſtances. By this Principle there's no Man but may convince himſelf of the Immortality of his own Soul: Every one knows that he thinks, and conſequently if he reaſons after the Carteſian manner, he muſt own that his Thoughts are diſtinct from his Body: From whence it follows, That in this reſpect he's Immortal; For the Mortality of Creatures conſiſts only in this, That they are compoſed of many parts of Matter, which ſeparate one from another. This is a great advantage to Religion; but it will be almoſt impoſſible to preſerve it by Philoſophical Reaſons, if it be granted that Beaſts have a Material Soul which Periſhes with the Body; a Soul whoſe Senſations and Deſires are the cauſe of the Actions which we ſee them do. See the Remark F. The Theological advantages of Carteſius's Opinion concerning Beaſts being meer Automata, do not ſtop there. They diffuſe themſelves over many Important Principles, which cannot be ſufficiently maintained, if Beaſts are allowed to have a Senſitive Soul. If St. Auguſtin maintained theſe Principles, tho' he granted this ſort of Soul in Beaſts, and if he did not find himſelf much perplexed about the Connexion of theſe two Things, he was more Fortunate than Wiſe. From (e) the Principles which he has carefully Examined, and Solidly Eſtabliſhed, it manifeſtly follows, That Beaſts have no Soul, as Ambroſius Victor ſhews (f) in his Sixth Volume of Chriſtian Philoſophy. The Author, who affords me theſe Words, ſuppoſeth That the Holy Doctor knowing too well how to diſtinguiſh the Soul from the Body, to think that there were Corporal Souls, admitted a Spiritual (g) Soul in Beaſts. Now here is a Scantling which he gives us of the Principles of St. Auguſtin, which are Incompatible with this Soul of Beaſts (h); That a Creature, which has not Sinned, can never ſuffer any Evil; but according to him Pain is the greateſt of Evils, and Beaſts ſuffer Pain. That the more Noble thing cannot have for its End the leſs Noble; but according to him, the Soul of Beaſts is Spiritual, and more Noble than the Body, and yet they have no other End than the Body. That what is Spiritual is Immortal, and the Soul of Beaſts, tho' Spiritual, is ſubject to Death. There are many ſuch like Principles in the Works of St. Auguſtin, from whence it may be concluded that Beaſts have no ſuch Spiritual Soul as he admits in them. I am not fully perſuaded that St. Auguſtin believed that the Soul of Beaſts is an Incorporal Subſtance; but be it as it will, the ſecond Principle which is given us here for an Example, is incompatible with the Doctrine of this great Doctor; for that which Knows, is more Noble than that which does not Know: But St. Auguſtin allowed Senſe at leaſt to the Soul of Beaſts; therefore he believed it more Noble than the Body; therefore he maintained on the one ſide, That the more Noble thing cannot have for its end

(y) Rorarius, epiſt. dedicat. ad Malatiſtum Cardinalem.

(z) Idem, epiſt. dedicat. ad Epiſcopum Atrebatenſem.

(a) See in Lipſius epiſt. 50. centur. 1. miſcellan. ſeveral ſurprizing Actions of Elephants. This letter is a Commentary by way of Examples upon the words of Pliny, which I will quote in the Remark D. See concerning Horſes the ſame Lipſius cent. 3. ad Belgas ep. 56. and concerning Dogs. cent. 1. ad Belg. ep. 44.

(b) Rorarius, lib. 2. p. 72.

the only reaſon which hinders ſome People from quitting it. It is not ſubject to the moſt dangerous Conſequences of the common Opinion. It is a long time ſince it has been Maintained that the Souls of Beaſts (D) are Rational. The Philoſophers and the leſs Noble; and on the other ſide, That the Soul of Beaſts, being more Noble than their Body, has an other end than their Body. This, you'll ſay, is of ſmall importance to Religion. But you are Miſtaken, will ſome Anſwer; for all the Proofs of Original Sin, drawn from Sickneſſes and Death, which Children are ſubject to, fall to the Ground, if you ſuppoſe that Beaſts feel: They are ſubject to Diſeaſes and Death, and yet they never Sinned. And therefore you argue wrong, when you ſay little Children Suffer, and Die, therefore they are Guilty; for you ſuppoſe a Falſe Principle, which is contradicted by the Condition of Beaſts, viz. That a Creature, which never Sinned, can never ſuffer any Ill. This is nevertheleſs a moſt clear Principle, which flows neceſſarily from the Ideas we have of the Juſtice and Goodneſs of God. It is agreeable to the immutable Order, from which we clearly apprehend that God never departs. The Souls of Beaſts confound this Order, and overthrow thoſe diſtinct Ideas: It muſt therefore be granted, That the Automata of Carteſius, favour the Principles by which we judge of the Infinite Being, and by which we maintain Orthodoxy. Read what follows.

" (i) Religion was drawn into the Cauſe (k), thro' the Hopes that the Anticarteſians had conceived to ruin by it the Machines of Carteſius; but it is Impoſſible to expreſs the advantage, which accrued from thence to his Diſciples. For they believe that they have Demonſtrated, That by allowing Beaſts to have a Soul capable of Knowledge, all the Natural Proofs of the Immortality of the Soul are deſtroyed. They have ſhew'd, That their Opinion had not more Obſtinate Enemies than the Impious and Epicureans; and that a greater Spite cannot be done to thoſe bad Philoſophers, than by depriving them of all the falſe Reaſons, which they borrow from the Souls of Beaſts, to draw a Concluſion, That there is only more or leſs difference between them and us. It is certain, That there are none who affect more than thoſe People, to make Beaſts come near Men in Perfection. Thus the Sectators of Deſcartes, have by this means Intereſſed Religion in their Cauſe: But they are not Contented with this Reaſon. They have raiſed themſelves to the Nature of God, to find out Invincible Arguments againſt the Knowledge of Beaſts; and it may be ſaid, they have found very good ones. The Author of the Recherche de la verité, has given us the Plan of it in ſeveral places of his Work. Father Poiſſon of the Oratory has profoundly Treated the Argument, which is Grounded upon this Principle of St. Auguſtin, that God being juſt, Miſery is a neceſſary Proof of Sin; from whence it follows, That Beaſts not having Sinned are not ſubject to Miſery: But they would be ſubjected to it, if they had any feeling; therefore they have none. You'll find after theſe Words the extract of (l) a Book, which ſhews, That if Beaſts have a Knowing Soul, (m) it follows, 1. That God does not Love himſelf; 2. That he's not Conſtant; 3. That he is Cruel and Unjuſt. He would not Love himſelf; for he would have Created Souls capable of Knowledge and Love, without obliging them to Know and Love him. He would have Created them to be in a ſtate of Sin, and by conſequence he would have diſpenſed them with the Law of Order, which is a Supreme and Indiſpenſable Law. The ſtate of Sin is to fix upon Creatures, as one's ultimate end: This is what the Souls of Beaſts do, according to the common Opinion. According to the ſame Opinion theſe Souls are Annihilated, when Beaſts die: Where is then the Conſtancy of God? He Creates Souls, and Annihilates them ſpeedily. He does not deal ſo with Matter: He never deſtroys it. He therefore preſerves the leſs perfect Subſtance, and deſtroys the more perfect. Is this the part of a wiſe Agent? The Souls of Beaſts never ſinned, and yet they are ſubject to Pain and Miſery, and to all the Irregular Deſires of Creatures, which have ſinned. How do we treat Beaſts? We make them tear one another in pieces for our Diverſion; we Kill them for our Nouriſhment, and Ranſack their Bowels during their Lives, to ſatisfy our Curioſity; and we do all this by vertue of the Dominion that God has given us over them. What a diſorder is it, That an Innocent Creature ſhould be ſubject to the Caprices of a Criminal one? There's no Caſuiſt that believes that there is any ſin in baiting of Bulls, or in hunting or fiſhing, to deſtroy Animals, or in killing of Flies, as Domitian did. Is it not Cruelty and Injuſtice to ſubject an Innocent Soul to ſo many Miſeries? The Opinion of Carteſius frees us from all theſe Difficulties. I will give a Liſt of ſome pieces, which have been Publiſhed in favour of this Opinion.

A Preface of Mr. Schuyl: It is at the beginning of the Latin Tranſlation of Deſcartes's Treatiſe of Man. A Treatiſe of Antony le Grand, (n) Diſſertatio de carentia ſenſus & cognitionis in brutis. A Letter of Mr. (o) de Cordemoi, to a Learned Jeſuit, Printed in 1668. A Treatiſe of the Souls of Beaſts, Printed in 1676, at Lyons, writ by Dilly, a Prieſt of Ambrun. Philoſophical Conferences by Mr. Rohault. The Notes of Father Poiſſon, upon the Method of Deſcartes. The Brutum Carteſianum of Arnoldus Geulinex. This is a Poſthumous Work, which was Publiſhed in 1688, by Mr. Langenhert, a good Carteſian, but not in what concerns the Souls (p) of Beaſts; tho' he has put in a Geometrical Form the Reaſons which prove that Beaſts have no Feeling. Many Diſciples of Deſcartes leave him as to his Doctrine of Automata. Mr. Craanen, Profeſſor of Philoſophy, and afterwards of Phyſick at Leyden, has been a great Stickler for this Philoſopher, and has ſuffered for him; and what perhaps is more wonderful, he would not forſake his Doctrine about the Glandula Pinealis; But he Laughed at thoſe, who hold that Beaſts have no feeling. Mr. Regis, one of the moſt Famous Carteſians in theſe times, went not ſo far: He was Contented to ſay, That (q) whatever Inclination he may have to give to Beaſts a Soul diſtinct from the Body, he had rather ſuſpend his Judgment in that reſpect. One might place the Book of Father Pardies, about the Knowledge of Beaſts, among thoſe that have been Publiſh'd to maintain Deſcartes's Opinion; for the Reaſons of the Carteſians are propoſed in it, with their utmoſt Strength, and very Weakly Refuted. I believe nevertheleſs that he was not Negligent in the ſecond Part of his Work, and that he did all that was poſſible to maintain the Antient Opinion: But having alſo done all that he could do to repreſent faithfully, and in their beſt Colours, the Reaſons of the New; He has made ſome ſuſpect, that he had no real deſign to Confute Carteſius. Here is the Judgment of one of his Order: (r) There is nothing more ſeducing than the Expoſitions made by Father Pardies, in his Book called, De la connoiſſance des beſtes, of the Knowledge of Brutes, where Painting Carteſianiſm in its ſtrongeſt and livelieſt Colours, he goes ſo far as to Convince his Readers, that there is no need of a Soul to Walk, Drink, Eat, &c. but alſo to Speak, and to Speak as long as a Preacher in a Sermon of an Hour, or a Lawyer in a long Plea. This Book has made the Author, among the Peripateticks, to paſs for a Prevaricator, who at the bottom was a Carteſian, notwithſtanding the Pains he has taken in the ſecond Part of his Book, to Refute Carteſianiſm, and to Defend the Antient Philoſophy, as to the Souls of Beaſts.

(D) That the Souls of Beaſts are Rational.] All that I had to ſay upon this, might have been put in the Remarks of the Article Pereira; but I had a mind to avoid Prolixity in that Place. We may reckon Strato and Æneſidemus among thoſe, who have maintained that the Souls of Beaſts are Rational; for they taught that Senſe could not ſubſiſt without Underſtanding. (ſ) Idem eſſe αἴσθησιν, καὶ διάνοιαν (1), ſenſum & cogitationem, opinio fuit tum Stratonis Phyſici, qui Theophraſti auditor (2) fuit; tum Æneſidemi, qui (3) in Pyrrhonia introductionem conſcripſit. De utroque teſtis nobis Sextus Empiricus adverſus Mathematicos (4). Voſſius without doubt would have cited Plutarch, if he had called to mind this paſſage. (t) Καίτοι Στράτωνός γε τοῦ φυσικοῦ λόγος ἐστὶν, ἀποδεικνύων ὡς οὐδ᾽ αἰσθάνεσθαι τοπαράπαν ἄνευ τοῦ νοεῖν ὑπάρχει. Stratonis etiam Phyſici extat oratio, qua ſine intelligentia ſentiri omnino nihil poſſe demonſtrat. It is ſaid that Parmenides, Empedocles, Democritus, and Anaxagoras, taught that all Beaſts are Rational. (u) Ab hac opinione qui beſtiæ ſenſus creduntur expertes, ad alteram venio: ſecundum quam, ut Sextus Empiricus (5) ait, οὐδέν ἐστιν ζῶον ἄλογον, ἀλλὰ καὶ νοῦ, καὶ ἐπιστήμης δεκτικόν.

(i) Nou- [illegible] de la Republ. des [illegible] March 1684. p. 23, 24. (k) Viz. the [illegible] concerning the Souls of Beaſts.

(l) [illegible] (m) Nouv. Rep. [illegible] p. 25.

(n) [illegible] this Author [illegible] the Book [illegible] p. 171. 1684. Edit. 1686. In one of the Letters of Monſ. Arnauld to Father Mallebranche we find that le Grand is a Fran- [illegible] Friar. (p) This Letter was Anony- [illegible] but [illegible] Deſcartes, Tom. 2. p. 541. [illegible] ſays it was of Mr. Cordemoi. (p) See the Journal of Leipſick, Novemb. 1688. p. 624. (q) Pierre Sylvain Regis, Syſteme de Philoſophie, lib. 7. part 2. tom. 5. p. 126. Lyons 1691. in 12. (r) Suite du voiage du monde de Deſcartes, p. 9. & 10. edit. Amſter. 1696. (ſ) Voſſius de origine & progreſſu idololatriæ, lib. 3. c. 41. init. p. m. 938, 939. (1) Senſus & cogitatio men[illegible] (2) Laert. lib. 5. in Stratone. (3) Laert. in Pyrrho.

(4) Cap. de homine, ſive p. 201. edit. Aurelian. (t) Plutarch. de ſolertia animalium, p. 961. A. (u) Voſſius ubi ſupra p. 940. (5) Pyrrhoniarum Hypotypoſ. lib. 2. c. 5.

ist

phers of the Schools are very much miſtaken, if by Rejecting that, they perſuade themſelves ter adeo: nullum eſt animal rationis expers; ſed omnia ſunt intelligentiæ, & ſcientiæ capacia. Hanc ſententiam Parmenidi, Empedocli, & Democrito, tribuit Stobæus in Eclogis Phyſicis (u). Anaxagoras quoque interdum in hanc opinionem incurrit: teſte Ariſtotele lib. 1. de anima cap. 11. (v); ubi agnoſcit quidem, non uno loco dicere, mentem eſſe ejus cauſam, quod recte, & pulchre ſe habet; ſed alibi, tradere, τὸν νοῦν εἶναι τὸν αὐτὸν τῇ ψυχῇ· ἐν ἅπασι γὰρ ὑπάρχειν αὐτὸν τοῖς ζώοις, καὶ μεγάλοις, καὶ μικροῖς, καὶ τιμίοις, καὶ ἀτιμοτέροις. Idem eſſe mentem, & animam: mentem enim omnibus ineſſe animalibus, tam parvis, quam magnis; tam vilioribus, quam honeſtioribus. I paſs by the common Opinion of the Ancients, viz. That Living Bodies contain a Soul, which is part of the Soul of the World. I grant that the Natural Conſequence of this Opinion is, That the Souls of Beaſts and Men are of the ſame Nature; but this does not prove that Beaſts are actually Rational: For one might Maintain that the Portions of the Soul of the World, that are united to certain Bodies, loſe the Faculty of Reaſoning. And ſince the Sticklers for the Doctrine of the Soul of the World, never Taught that the Souls of Plants were Rational; they muſt needs have believed that their Doctrine did not engage them to Maintain, That Beaſts argue. Let us therefore paſs by this Opinion, tho' Virgil alledged it as the fitteſt means to explain all that he had ſaid of the Qualities of Bees.

> His (x) quidam ſignis, atque hæc exempla ſecuti,
> Eſſe apibus partem divinæ mentis, & hauſtus
> Æthereos dixere: Deum namque ire per omnes
> Terraſque, tractuſque maris, cœlumque profundum:
> Hinc pecudes, armenta, viros, genus omne ferarum,
> Quemque ſibi tenues naſcentem arceſſere vitas.
> Scilicet huc reddi deinde, ac reſoluta referri
> Omnia: nec morti eſſe locum; ſed viva volare
> Sideris in numerum, atque alto ſuccedere cœlo.

It is better to ſpeak of Philo, who made a Book, wherein he maintained that Beaſts are Rational: (y) Περὶ τοῦ λόγον ἔχειν τὰ ἄλογα ζῶα, de eo quod bruta animilia ratione ſint prædita. In another place (z) I have ſpoken of the Opinion of Galen; but ſee here a more formal Proof of it. (a) An animantia quæ dicuntur bruta, prorſus expertia ſint rationis, nondum ſatis liquet. Fortaſſis enim, tametſi non habeant eam Rationem, quæ juxta vocem intelligitur, nobiſcum communem, quam vocant enuntiativam; certe eam, quæ ſecundum Animam accipitur, quam Rationem appellant affectuum capacem, habent nobiſcum communem, licet alia magis, alia minus. Tho' Lactantius declares in ſome Places, That God (b) has not granted Beaſts a Rational Faculty; yet he maintains in his Treatiſe De ira Dei, that excepting Religion Beaſts imitate Men in every thing, and participate of the advantages of Human Nature. The difference is only in more or leſs. (c) Solus (homo) ſapientia inſtructus eſt ut religionem ſolus intelligat, & hæc eſt hominis atque mutorum vel præcipua, vel ſola diſtantia; nam cætera quæ videntur hominis eſſe propria, etſi non ſint talia in mutis, tamen ſimilia videri poſſunt.... Quid tam proprium homini quam ratio, & providentia futuri? Atqui ſunt animalia, quæ latibulis ſuis diverſos, & plures exitus pandant; ut ſi quod periculum inciderit, fuga pateat obſeſſis; quod non facerent, niſi ineſſet illis intelligentia, & cogitatio. Alia provident in futurum. We are not for all this to Believe that he maintained that the Souls of Beaſts are Spiritual and Immortal; for at that Time the Connexion between Thought and Spirituality, was not clearly ſeen. Doth not Arnobius manifeſtly affirm, That Human Souls, of their own Nature are Mortal, and that they ſhall totally Periſh in the Torments of Hell, and could not continue always in Heaven, were it not by the Grace of God? Does not he aſſert that a Simple and Immortal Nature is incapable of Pain? He felt ſome; therefore he did not believe that his Soul was an Immortal, Immaterial, and Spiritual Being. (d) Homo prudentiæ non pravæ, ſays he, ſpeaking of Plato, & examinis judiciique perpenſi, rem inenodabilem ſuſcipit, ut cum animas dicat immortales, perpetuas, & corporali ſoliditate privatas, puniri eas dicat tamen, & doloris afficiat ſenſu. Quis autem hominum non videt, quod ſit immortale, quod ſimplex, nullum poſſe dolorem admittere? quod autem ſentiat dolorem immortalitatem habere non poſſe? Nec tamen ejus auctoritas plurimum à veritate declinat.... Non eſt abſone ſuſpicatus jaci eas in flumina torrentia flammarum globis, & cœnoſis voraginibus tetra. Faciuntur enim, & ad nihilum redactæ, interitionis perpetuæ fruſtratione vaneſcunt. Sunt enim mediæ qualitatis, ſicut Chriſto auctore compertum eſt, & interire quæ poſſint Deum ſi ignoraverint vitæ, & ab exitio liberari, ſi ad ejus ſe minas atque indulgentias applicuerint. He Confutes the Platonicks, who ſaid, That the Soul of Man has a Celeſtial Origin (e), that it is Immortal, and Incorporal: his Chief Argument is, That there is but little difference between our Souls and thoſe of Beaſts. (f) Vultis tumore depoſito cogitationibus tacitis pervidere animantia nos eſſe, aut conſimilia cæteris, aut non plurima diverſitate diſtantia? Quid eſt enim, quod nos ab eorum indicet ſimilitudine diſcrepare? vel quæ in nobis eminentia tanta eſt, ut animantium numero dedignemur adſcribi? He Examins the Preeminence of Man above other Creatures, and he ſays it is inconſiderable: He particularly affirms that Men do not ſurpaſs Beaſts in Reaſon. (g) Sed rationales nos ſumus, & intelligentia vincimus genus omne mutorum. Crederem iſtud veriſſime dici, ſi cum ratione & conſilio cuncti homines viverent, ſervarent officiorum tenorem, abſtinerent ab illicitis ſeſe, negotia turpia non adirent, neque quiſquam pravitate conſilii, atque ignorantiæ cæcitate contraria ſibimet atque inimica depoſceret. Vellem tamen ſcire quænam ſit hæc ratio, per quam ſumus potiores animalium generibus cunctis: quia nobis domicilia fecimus, quibus poſſimus hyemalia frigora, & æſtatis flagrantias evitare? Quid? animantia cætera hujus rei providentiam non habent? We may therefore reckon Arnobius among thoſe, who hold that the Souls of Beaſts are Rational. It is from him, without doubt, That Lactantius learned to put no other difference between them and Man, but Religion. Some Philoſophers have envied this Privilege of Men; for they ſaid that Beaſts have a Religion. Xenocrates the Carthaginian ſaid, that they knew God. Democritus muſt needs have been of his Opinion, if he reaſoned Conſequently: This is at leaſt the Pretenſion of Clemens Alexandrinus. (h) Καθόλου γ' οὖν τὴν περὶ τοῦ Θείου ἔννοιαν Ξενοκράτης ὁ Καρχηδόνιος οὐκ ἀπελπίζει, καὶ ἐν τοῖς ἀλόγοις ζώοις· Δημόκριτος δὲ, κἂν μὴ θέλῃ, ὁμολογήσει διὰ τὴν ἀκολουθίαν τῶν δογμάτων· τὰ γὰρ αὐτὰ πεποίηκεν εἴδωλα τοῖς ἀνθρώποις προσπίπτοντα, καὶ τοῖς ἀλόγοις ζώοις ἀπὸ τῆς θείας οὐσίας. Ut ſummatim quidem dicam, Xenocrates Carthaginienſis non ſpem omnium abjicit, quin etiam in rationis expertibus animantibus ſit Dei notitia. Democritus autem, etſi nolit, confitebitur per dogmatum conſequentiam: fecit enim eaſdem imagines in homines incurrentes, & in animantes rationis expertes, ex divina eſſentia. Pliny places Religion among the Moral Vertues of Elephants. Maximum eſt Elephas, ſays he (i), proximumque humanis ſenſibus: quippe intellectus illis ſermonis patrii, & imperii, & imperiorum obedientia, officiorumque, quæ didicere, memoria: amoris, & gloriæ voluptas: imo vero, (quæ etiam in homine rara,) probitas, prudentia, æquitas, religio quoque ſiderum, Soliſque ac Lunæ veneratio. Auctores ſunt, in Mauritaniæ ſaltibus ad quendam amnem, cui nomen eſt Amilo, miteſcente Luna nova, greges eorum deſcendere: ibique ſe purificantes ſolenniter aqua circumſpergi, atque ita ſalutato ſidere in ſilvas reverti, vitulorum fatigatos præ ſe ferentes. Alienæ quoque religionis intellectu, creduntur maria tranſituri non ante naves conſcendere, quam invitati rectoris jurejurando de reditu. Viſique ſunt feſſi ægritudine, (quando & illas moles infeſtant morbi) herbas ſupini in cœlum jacientes, veluti tellure precibus allegata. (k) Dion Relates part of theſe things. Can one believe that the Diſciples of Plato, who looked upon Brutes to be probably immortal, with reſpect to the Soul, as Paganinus Gaudentius obſerves, ſhould take Reaſon from them? (l) Quod ſi dicas apud Platonicos ſolas animas rationales eſſe immortales, reſpondebat Alcinous non eſſe id prorſus exploratum. Nam poſtquam dixit animas rationales ſecundum Platonem eſſe immortales, mox ſubjungit: (1) Utrum verò & irrationales, ambiguum eſſe videtur: & quamvis ipſe ſentiat eſſe probabile eas eſſe mortales, indicat tamen id inter Platonicos non fuiſſe certum. I ſay nothing of Solomon, who ſeems to ſay, formally, (m) That the Souls of Beaſts and Men, are of the ſame Nature; for we ought not to take his Words as they ſound, we ought to give them a better Senſe: (n) but it may be granted us on good Grounds, that many of the Rabbins believed that Beaſts have a Rational Soul.

The famous Maimonides believed without doubt, that they reaſon; for he gives them a kind of Free-Will.

(u) Pag. 93. edit. Plantin.

(v) Cont. 51.

(x) Virgil. Georg. lib. 4. v. 219.

(y) Euſeb. Hiſtor. eccleſ. lib. 2. cap. 18. p. m. 59.

(z) In the article Pereira.

(a) Galenus in exhortat. ad Art. lib. ſtud. initio, apud Ant. le Grand de carentia ſenſus pag. 10.

(b) Cæteris animantibus quoniam rationalem iſtam vitam non attribuit. Lactant. de opificio Dei, cap. 2. p. m. 574.

(c) Id. de ira Dei, cap. 7. pag. 529.

(d) Arnobius, adverſus Gentes, lib. 2. pag. m. 52.

ſelves, they ſhall avoid the ill Conſequences of the Opinion (F) that gives Beaſts a ſenſitive Soul. Theſe Gentlemen want neither Diſtinctions, nor Exceptions, nor Boldneſs to decide, that the Acts of this Soul do not exceed certain Bounds, which they Will. Mr. Arnauld had good reaſon to object againſt him, that from thence it would follow, that they might be Rewarded or Puniſh'd after Death. If I relate ſomewhat at length what precedes this Reflection of Mr. Arnauld, it is becauſe of certain Facts which ſhew us the Opinion of ſome Jews about Animals. This great Rabbin (a) Explains five Opinions touching Providence, which are all, as he believes, as Ancient as the Prophets. (b) The Fourth of theſe Opinions extended the Providence of God to every thing, and did not deny the Free Will of Men. Maimonides lays its many Inconveniencies againſt the Followers of this Opinion. (c) They ſaid that it was a Work of the Wiſdom of God, that there were Men who, tho' they had never ſinned, were born with many Defects, and that it was better to be ſo than not be at all. We do not comprehend, ſays this Jewiſh Doctor, what Goodneſs there could be in this, ſed nos iſtam bonitatem non intelligimus. (d) "When "they were asked what Juſtice there was in the death "of Beaſts, what ſin they had committed, and why "God would (ſince his Providence extended to all) "have an innocent Rat pull'd in pieces by a Cat? "They anſwer'd, God had order'd it ſo; but that "he would recompence that Rat in another World. "It is very ridiculous that there ſhould be a Heaven "for Rats. But this Rabbin himſelf occaſion'd this "Folly, when he gave a Will to irrational Animals "as well as to Men: omnia pariter animantia irrationalia moventur ſua voluntate: for if they have a Will "it would be hard to give a Reaſon why they ſhould "not be capable of Good or Evil, Rewards and Puniſhment."

The Socinians do not go ſo far as Maimonides; they do not give Beaſts a Will properly ſo called, nor a Free Will; they do not allow them to be capable either of Virtue or Vice, or of Puniſhment or Reward, properly ſpeaking. They ſay, nevertheleſs, that Reaſon, Liberty and Virtue are found in them imperfectly and analogically; and that in ſome manner they are worthy of Reward or Puniſhment. If you will not believe me, read the following Paſſage. (e) Quia homo inter animantia ſolus ratione proprie dicta præditus eſt, in illum etiam ſolum tum voluntas, tum virtus & vitium, tum denique præmium & pœna cadit. In bruta tamen animalia cadit aliquid ſingulis iſtorum analogum, in ea præſertim, quæ ſunt perfectiora, & diſciplinæ alicujus capaciora. Eſt enim in illis primum aliqua facultas rationi reſpondens, quam nonnulli rationem inferiorem vocant, quâ non de rebus modo jucundis, ac utilibus quodammodo ratiocinantur, & de ratione illorum adipiſcendorum diſpiciunt; ſed etiam viam ſibi a Deo præſcriptam, ſeu rectam quandam vivendi rationem naturæ ſuæ conſentaneam, quæ honeſtati analoga eſt, agnoſcunt. Inde ſequitur facultas altera, voluntati quodam modo reſpondens, in qua nonnihil eſt libertatis. Hinc aliquid etiam virtuti & vitio ſimile, ſeu recte & prave factum: quorum illud eſt, cum bruta naturæ ſuæ ductum ſequuntur, hoc cum a naturali via exorbitant. Unde tandem etiam aliquid præmio aut pœnæ, & huic quidem maxime ſimile. Unde beſtias etiam a Deo (f) punitas, aut pœnas certas lege illis conſtitutas, cernimus: qua de re legatur Socinus in Anti Puccio. Quemadmodum ergo rationem humanam κατ' ἐξοχὴν, & proprie hoc nomine appellamus, & brutis eam adimimus (dicimus enim irrationalia ſeu ratione carentia) ita & cætera omnia. Rurſus quemadmodum improprie & per analogiam rationem brutis tribuimus, ita & cætera omnia. I know not whether Gulielmus Pariſienſis, one of the greateſt Genius's of his Age, cou'd avoid going a little beyond this Opinion; for it is ſaid, (g) he taught that the Souls of Beaſts are ſpiritual; and 'tis not certain that ever he retracted this Opinion. See the Citation i of this page.

To come to the Moderns, I ſhall obſerve that Valla (h) and (i) Antony Cittadinus acknowledged Reaſon in Beaſts. Stephen Paſquier has writ a fine Letter upon this Opinion. This Letter is the firſt of the Tenth Book. Montagne is for this Opinion, and ſeems to believe that Raimundus Sebunus's Apology is in part that of Beaſts. Charron has follow'd him in this, as well as in many other things. (k) A Phyſician of Rochelle having writ againſt Charron, was confuted in his turn by one of the beſt French Pens that has writ of Philoſophy: I mean Mr. de la Chambre, Phyſician to Mr. Seguier, Chancellor of France. The Phyſician of Rochelle (l) reply'd; his Antagoniſt did the ſame, and intitl'd his Book Traité de la Connoiſſance des Animaux, &c. a Diſcourſe on the Knowledge of Beaſts, wherein all that has been ſaid pro and con is examined. I obſerve by the by, that Isaac Voſſius (m) is of Opinion, That in reſpect of Language, the Condition of Beaſts is better than ours, becauſe they communicate ſooner, and probably more happily their Thoughts than we. (n) A German Criticiſes upon that. We ſhall ſee the Opinion of Sennertus in the Remarks D and E of his Article: I will quote there ſome Modern Authors, who believed that the Souls of Beaſts are Spiritual.

(F) The Ill Conſequences of the Opinion that gives Beaſts a ſenſitive Soul.] There's nothing more diverting, than to ſee with what Authority the Schoolmen put limits to the Knowledge of Beaſts. They will have it, that they know only particular and material Objects, and that they only love what is profitable and agreeable; that they cannot reflect upon their Senſations and their Deſires, nor draw Conſequences. One would think that they have ſearched more exactly into the Faculties and Acts of the Souls of Beaſts, than the moſt expert Anatomiſts into the Entrails of Dogs. Their Temerity is ſo great, that if they had found out Truth by chance, they had made themſelves unworthy of Praiſe and even of Pardon. But let us give them Quarter; let us grant them all that they ſuppoſe: what do they hope for from it? Do they fancy, that by this means they ſhall obtain from any body that can reaſon, that it ought to be granted, That the Soul of Man is not of the ſame Species with that of Beaſts? This is a Chimerical Pretention. It is evident to any one that can judge of things, that every Subſtance that has Feeling, knows that it has it: and it would not be more abſurd to maintain, That the Soul of Man knows actually an Object without knowing that ſhe knows it; than it is abſurd to ſay, That the Soul of a Dog ſees a Bird without perceiving that ſhe ſees it. This ſhews that all the acts of the ſenſitive Faculty are, of their own nature, and by their own Eſſence, reflexive upon themſelves. Father Maignan, who, notwithſtanding his Learning, has remain'd in the Errors of the Schools, as to the Souls of Beaſts, owns nevertheleſs that in order to feel a thing, one ought to know the Senſation one has of it. Id quod vocamus ſentire, ſays he, non eſt ſine cognitione ejus rei quæ dicitur ſenſibilis: cum autem nihil externum ſit per ſe ſenſibile; ſed tantum per ſuam actionem; adeoque actio ejus ſit primario ſenſibilis: & cum inſuper nos non dicamur alicujus agentis actionem ſentire, ſi ea dum in nobis ſit, omnino lateat nos; conſequenter id quod vocamus ſentire, non eſt ſine cognitione actionis, quæ ſit in nobis ſentientibus; imo quia ſentire nihil aliud ex parte ſentientis dicit, præter eam cognitionem; conſequens eſt ipſum ſentire, quatenus ſe tenet ex parte ſentientis, conſiſtere in eo quod eſt agnoſcere ſe pati; quod coincidit cum eo quod eſt agnoſcere actionem in ſe receptam, ſeu paſſionem ſuam (o). It muſt then be ſaid, That the Memory of Beaſts, is an Act that makes them remember what is paſt, and which tells them that they remember it. How then can it be ſaid, that they have not the power of Reflecting upon their Thoughts, nor of drawing Conſequences? But once more let us not diſpute upon that; let us give theſe Philoſophers leave to build their Suppoſitions very ill: let us only make uſe of what they teach.

They ſay, That the Soul of Beaſts receives all the Objects of the five external Senſes; that among thoſe Objects ſhe judges that ſome are convenient for her, and others hurtful; and that by a conſequence of this Judgment, ſhe deſires thoſe that are convenient, and abhors the others; and that in order to enjoy the Object ſhe deſires, ſhe tranſports her Organs to the Place where it is, and that in order to fly from the Object which ſhe hates, ſhe withdraws her Organs from the place where it is. I conclude from all this, That if ſhe doth not produce ſo noble acts as our Soul, 'tis not her fault, or becauſe ſhe is of a Nature leſs perfect than the Soul of Man; it is only becauſe the Organs ſhe animates do not reſemble ours. I ask of theſe Gentlemen, if they would allow that one ſhould ſay, That the Soul of a man is of another Species at the Age of Thirty Five years than at the Age of one Month; or, that the Soul of a Phrenetick, or a Blockhead, or a doting Old Man, is not ſubſtantially as perfect as the Soul they preſcribe: but all this confuſed and impenetrable talk ſignifies nothing towards the Eſtabliſhing of a Specifick (F) difference between the Souls of Men and Beaſts; it is ſcarce probable, they can invent a better Explication

---

(b) Arnauld, ib. pag. 235.

(c) Arnauld, p. 236.

(d) In ib.

(e) John Crellius, Ethicæ Christianæ, lib. 1. cap. 1. p. m. 65. 66.

(f) Vide infra, pag. 2609.

de orig. & progr. idol. l. 3. c. 41. p. 940. (i) In. l. 1. Analyt. c. 3. apud eundem, ib. (k) Chanuet in his Orations againſt Charron.

(l) His Reply is intitl'd, De l'Inſtinct & de la connoiſſance des animaux, Rochelle, 1646 in 8.

(m) Iſaacus Voſſius de poematum cantu & viribus Rythmi, p. 65.

(n) Joh. Cyprianus, in Hiſtoriæ Animalium confirmatione, p. 2.

(o) Emmanuel Maignan, Philoſophia naturæ, cap. 24. n. 2. p. m. 527. See alſo Caſimirus of Toulouſe, Atomi Peripateticæ, tom. 4. pag. 70. where he ſets down in few words, the definition of Father Maignan, and this of Cajetan, Senſus eſt objecti in organo formaliter ſuſcepti dignotio, and approves them.

Soul of a Man of excellent Parts. They would without doubt reject this Opinion as a groſs Error; for it's certain, that the ſame Soul which in Children does only Feel, Reaſons in a grown Man; and the ſame Soul which makes a Man of Parts to be admir'd, would only dote in an Old Man, extravagate in a Fool, and feel in a Child. We ſhould be guilty of a groſs Error, did we believe, that the Soul of Man is only ſuſceptible of Thoughts which are known to us. There is an infinity of Senſations, Paſſions, and Ideas, of which this Soul is very capable, tho' it be never affected with them during this Life. If it were united to Organs different from ours, it would think otherwiſe than it does at preſent, and its Modifications might be far more noble than thoſe we have. If there were ſubſtances, which in organiz'd Bodies had a train of Senſations, and other Thoughts far more ſublime than ours, could it be ſaid that they are of a more perfect Nature than our Soul? No, without doubt; for if our Soul was tranſported into thoſe Bodies, it would have the ſame train of Senſations, and other Thoughts far more ſublime than ours. This is eaſie to be apply'd to the Soul of Beaſts. It will be granted that it feels Bodies; that it diſcerns them; that it deſires ſome, and abhors others. This is enough: It is therefore a Subſtance that thinks, it is therefore capable of Thought in general; it can therefore receive all ſorts of Thoughts; it can therefore Reaſon; it can therefore know what is Honeſt; the Univerſals; the Axioms of Metaphyſicks; the Rules of Morality, &c. For as Wax can receive the impreſſion of one Seal, it manifeſtly follows, that it may receive the figure of any Seal; it muſt likewiſe be granted, that ſince a Soul is capable of one Thought, it is capable of any Thought. It would be abſurd to Reaſon thus, This piece of Wax has only receiv'd the Impreſſion of three or four Seals; therefore it cannot receive the Impreſſion of a Thouſand. This piece of Pewter has never been a Plate; therefore it can never be, and it is of another nature than that piece of Pewter which I ſee there. They reaſon no better, who diſpute thus, The Soul of a Dog has never had but Senſations, &c. therefore it is not capable of the Ideas of Morality, or of the Notions of Metaphyſicks. From whence comes it that a piece of Wax bears the Impreſſion of a Prince, and the other does not? it is becauſe the Seal is apply'd to the one and not to the other. This piece of Pewter was never a Plate; but it will be one, if you caſt it into the Mould of a Plate. Caſt the Soul of this Beaſt into the Mold of Univerſal Ideas, and of the Notions of Arts and Sciences, I mean, unite it to a well choſen Humane Body; it will become the Soul of a Man of parts, and be no more that of a Beaſt.

You may ſee therefore that it is impoſſible for the School Philoſophers to prove, that the Souls of Men and Beaſts, are of a different Nature. Let them tell me a thouſand and a thouſand times, That Man's Soul does reaſon, and know Univerſals and Virtue, and that Beaſts know nothing of the matter. We Anſwer them, Theſe differences are only accidental, and are no marks of a ſpecifick Difference. Ariſtotle and Cicero, at the Age of one Year, had never had more ſublime Thoughts than a Dog, and if they had lived in the ſtate of Infancy Thirty or Forty Years, the Thoughts of their Souls had never been any thing but Senſations and little Paſſions of Play and Eating: it is therefore by accident, that they have ſurpaſſed Beaſts; it is becauſe the Organs on which their Thoughts depended have acquired ſuch and ſuch Modifications, to which the Organs of Beaſts do not arrive. The Soul of a Dog in the Organs of Ariſtotle or Cicero, would not have failed to acquire all the Knowledge of theſe two great men.

This Conſequence is very falſe; ſuch a Soul does not reaſon, does not know Univerſals, therefore it's of a different Nature from that of a great Philoſopher: for if this Conſequence were good, it would follow that the Soul of little Children is different from that of Men. What do you dream of, you peripatetick Philoſophers, when you pretend that if the Souls of Beaſts do not reaſon, they are ſubſtantially leſs perfect than Souls that Reaſon? You ought firſt to prove, that the want of reaſoning in Beaſts, proceeds from a real and internal Imperfection of the Soul, and not from the Organick Diſpoſitions on which it depends; but this is what you can never prove: for it is clear, that a Subject which is capable of the Thoughts which you allow in the Souls of Beaſts, is capable of Reaſoning and of any other Thought; from whence it reſults, that if it doth not actually Reaſon, it is becauſe of certain accidental and external Obſtacles, I mean, becauſe the Creator of all things has fix'd every Soul to a certain train of Thoughts, by making it depend on the Motions of certain Bodies. This is the Reaſon why Sucking Children, Mad-men and Frenticks do not reaſon.

One cannot, without Horror, think of the ill Conſequences of this Doctrine: The Soul of Man and the Soul of Beaſts do not differ ſubſtantially; they are of the ſame Species, the one acquires more Knowledge than the other: but theſe are only accidental Advantages, and depending on an arbitrary Inſtitution. This Doctrine neceſſarily flows from what the Schools teach about the Knowledge of Beaſts. It follows from thence, that if their Souls are material, and mortal, the Souls of Men are ſo likewiſe; and that if the Soul of Man is Spiritual and Immortal, the Soul of Beaſts is ſo too. Horrible Conſequences! turn which way you will. For if to avoid the Immortality of the Soul of Beaſts, you ſuppoſe that the Soul of Man dies with the Body, you overthrow the Doctrine of another Life, and the Foundations of Religion. If to preſerve to our Souls the privilege of Immortality, we extend it to thoſe of Beaſts into what an Abyſs do we fall? Will there be for them an Heaven and a Hell? Will they go from one Body to another? Will they be annihilated, as Beaſts die? Will God create continually an infinite number of Spirits, to plunge them again ſo ſoon into their firſt Nothing? How many Inſects live but a Day? Do not fancy that it's ſufficient to create Souls for Beaſts which we know; thoſe that we do not know are far the greater number. The Microſcopes diſcover them to us by thouſands in a ſingle drop of Water, and many more would be diſcover'd if we had more perfect Microſcopes. And let no Man ſay that Inſects are only Machines; for one might better explain by this Hypotheſis, the Actions of Dogs, than the actions of Piſmires and Bees. There is, perhaps, (o) more Wit and Reaſon in the inviſible Creatures, than in the largeſt. We are now going to take a view of the vain efforts of the Schools, to eſtabliſh a ſpecifick difference between the Souls of Men and Beaſts.

(o) See the words of Pliny Cited in the Article Menage.

(F) A Specifick Difference between the Souls of Men and Beaſts.] They ſay, That the Soul of Beaſts is a material Form, but that the Soul of Man is a Spirit which God has Created immediately. But how do they prove that? I ſuppoſe they only argue upon the Principles of natural Reaſon, without having recourſe to Scripture or the Maxims of Religion; and I ask them a good Proof to ſhew that the Souls of Beaſts are corporal, and ours not? They will alledge and ſet before me the Beauty and extent of Humane Knowledge; the ſmallneſs, groſsneſs and obſcurity of the Knowledge of Beaſts; and they will conclude, that a corporal Principle is capable of producing the Knowledge of Beaſts, but not the Reflections, Reaſonings, univerſal Ideas, Ideas of Honour and Honeſty, which are found in the Soul of Man; and that by conſequence this Soul ought to be of an Order ſuperior to Matter, and ought to be a Spirit. I will not ſay now that they aſſert raſhly, That the Soul of Beaſts does not Argue, and that it has no Idea of what is honeſt. Let us lay aſide this Objection, and only ſay, that it is a thouſand times more difficult to ſee a Tree, than to know the act by which we ſee it; ſo that if a material Principle is capable of knowing an Infinite number of outward things, it will be far more capable of knowing its own Thoughts, and of comparing them together and multiplying them: therefore the Reflections, and Concluſions, and Abſtractions of Man require no nobler a Principle than Matter. A Learned Peripatetick is of our ſide; let us hear him ſpeak; his Confeſſion will be more perſuaſive than my Objections. "If (p) you once admit, ſays he, "that all that is wonderful in the actions of Beaſts, "may be done by means of a material Soul; "will you not preſently go a ſtep farther, and ſay, that "all that paſſes in Man may be alſo done by a mate-"rial Soul? If you once grant that Beaſts, with-"out any ſpiritual Soul, can think, act with a "deſign tion than what they have given hitherto. The Author, who has well Confuted the Opinion of Descartes concerning the Souls of Beasts, would have done us a singular favour.

(p) Pardies, de connoiſance des Betes. 49. p.12 & ſeq.

"design, fore-see things to come, remember what is "past, make use of Experience by the Reflection they make upon it; why will you not "grant that Men are capable of exercising their "Functions without any Spiritual Soul? After all, "the Operations of Men are no other than those "which you ascribe to Beasts: If there be any difference, it is only in degrees; and so all that you "can say will only be, that the Souls of Men are more "perfect than those of Beasts, because Men remember better than they, think with more reflection, "and fore-see things with more certainty; but "you cannot say that their Souls are not material. "You'll say perhaps, That in Men there are some "Operations that cannot suit with Beasts, nor proceed from any other Principle than a Spiritual "Soul: And those Operations are Universal Knowledge, that Ratiocination, whereby we learn one "thing from another; and the Ideas we have of Infinity, and of Spiritual Things which do not fall "under the Senses. But those who deny that there "is any Knowledge in Beasts, do not deny for all "that, that those Thoughts and Reasonings are in "us, since we our selves are conscious of them: So "that they have always the same Right which you "have to prove the Existence of the Rational Soul. "But besides, they add, that all those Operations "which you look upon to be so extraordinary, differ only in degrees from the Operations which "you attribute to Beasts. And certainly, it seems "that to act with a design, to improve by Experience, to fore-see things to come (which you grant "to Beasts) ought to proceed no less from a Spiritual Principle than what is found in Man. For "after all, what is an Universal Knowledge, but a "Knowledge which suits with many things that are "like, as the Picture of a Man would suit with all "the Faces that should resemble it? What is "a Reasoning, but a Knowledge produced by another Knowledge, as we see that a Motion is produced by another Motion? Certainly, if it be "once granted, That Thought, Intention, and Reflection may proceed from a Body animated with "a material Form; it will be a very difficult thing "to prove, That the Reasonings and Ideas of Man "cannot proceed from a Body animated likewise "with a material Form.

I desire all my Readers to take notice of the ill Condition the School-men are in, as to the Doctrine of the sensitive Soul. They alledge against Descartes the most surprising actions of Beasts; they chuse them on purpose, the better to confound him; but afterwards they find that they are gone too far, and have supplied their Adversary with Weapons to destroy the Specifick difference which they endeavour to prove between our Souls and those of Beasts. They could wish that one should forget all the Examples of Cunning, Precaution, Docility, and Knowledge of things to come, which they have set forth with so much Pomp, in order to shew that Beasts are not meer Machines; they could wish that one should mind only the gross actions of an Ox intent upon feeding: But 'tis too late to require such a thing; those very Examples are made use of to confound them, and to prove against 'em, That if a material Soul is capable of all those things, it will be able to do whatever we observe in Man's Soul: Only a greater degree of Subtilty must be supposed in the Souls of Beasts. Can one forbear supposing, That the Soul of a Dog or of an Ape is less gross than that of an Ox? In a word, if nothing but a Spiritual Soul can produce the actions of a dull witted Clown; I'll maintain against you, That nothing but a spiritual Soul can produce the actions of an Ape; And if you say that a material Principle is able to produce whatever is performed by Apes; I'll maintain against you, that a material Principle may be the cause of whatever is performed by stupid Men, and that provided Matter be subtiliz'd, and disintangl'd from all gross Particles, Phlegms, &c. it may be the cause of whatever the most understanding man can do.

QUE-STION ...cerning ...liberty ...Souls ...Beasts.

Some Authors insinuate, That since the Soul of man is endowed with Free-Will, and that of Beasts is depriv'd of it, there must needs be a specifick difference between them, and one must be spiritual and the other material. The Jesuit Theophilus Raynaud, publish'd in 1630 (a) a book then intituled, Calvinismus Bestiarum Religio. His chief (b) Design was to prove that the Doctrine of the Dominicans brings men to the Condition of Beasts, by depriving them of Free-Will. (c) Hæc ipsa est ac caput primarium Calvinismi, [illegible] Calvinismum esse religionem bestiarum, quod ponit [illegible] in maxime [illegible] homini [illegible] dignitate [illegible] At [illegible] prelamine, [illegible] ratione [illegible] per libertatem. [illegible] liberationem [illegible] per Calvinismum. He supposes that the liberty of indifference is the Character, whereby men are distinguished from Beasts; for as to the Liberty, which consists only in being free from Constraint, or in Spontaneity, the School-men can say that Beasts are deprived of it. I must shew that it is not true, that a Soul endowed with Free-will is of another kind than a Soul that is not free. The Souls of little Children and mad men are deprived of Free-will, and yet they are of the same Species with those that are most free. To which may be added, that those who maintain the liberty of indifference, say, that it will cease after this Life, and yet they acknowledge that a Human Soul is the same substance upon Earth as in Heaven or Hell. 'Tis therefore manifest, That the liberty of indifference is not an essential Attribute of Creatures, but a Gift, or an accidental favour bestowed upon them by the Creator. And consequently the Souls that are not gratified with it, are not of a different Species from those that receive it. This Argument is therefore very wrong: The Souls of Beasts are deprived of Free-will, but the Souls of Men are not; therefore the Souls of Beasts are material, and the Souls of Men are spiritual. I go farther, and I say that those, who admit of a sensitive Soul, have no good reason to assert, That Beasts are not free Creatures. Don't they say, that they do a thousand things with great pleasure, being directed by the Judgment they make of the usefulness of Objects, whereby they are prompted to unite themselves to those Objects? If Liberty consists only in being free from constraint, and in a Spontaneity preceded by the discerning of the Objects, is it not an absurd thing to deny the liberty of Beasts? Has not a hungry Dog the power of abstaining from a piece of meat, when he is afraid of being beaten, if he does not abstain from it? Is not this to have the power of acting or not acting? Doubtless his abstinence proceeds from his comparing his Hunger with the blows of a Stick, which he judges to be more intolerable than Hunger. If you observe all the humane actions that are ascrib'd to a liberty of indifference, you'll find that a man does never suspend them, or never chuses one of the two contraries, but because having compared the Reason, pro and con, he is thereby more inclin'd to suspend his action than to act, or has more inducements for one action than for another. Let us further hear the Jesuit, who writ against the Cartesians. "(d) It is "no easie thing thus to separate Reasoning from "Thought; and I think it may be easily proved, that "when a Substance is capable of thinking, it is also "capable of reasoning; that it has a Will, and a free "one; and in a word, that it can act like Men. "The ancient Philosophers, and even the Fathers of "the Church, have proved that we have a Free-"Will by this general Argument; That whatever is "capable of Knowledge, can know Good and Evil, "that is, what is good or bad for it, and consequently, that by considering those two Objects, it can "compare them together, deliberate, and resolve to "chuse the one and reject the other, wherein the "use of our liberty consists. This is so true, that "the definition of liberty taken in general, which we "use still to this day, is this, Facultas agendi cum "ratione, the faculty of acting with Knowledge, "which is the signification of these words, cum ratione.

One of the best Arguments that are alledged for the liberty of Man, is taken from the punishment of Malefactors. All Societies are agreed to punish them exemplarily, and even to extend, in some cases, the punishment to their dead Bodies: They are deprived of Burial, and exposed to the publick view upon Wheels and Gibbets. If Man did not act freely, if he was determined by a fatal and unavoidable Ne-favour, if he could have cleared (G) the common Opinion from the great Difficulties that attend it. Mr. Leibnitz, one of the greateſt Wits of Europe, being ſenſible

---

(a) See Baillet Vie de Descartes, tom. 1. p. 11?.

(b) He disputes against Calvin, but he does it to conclude against the Dominicans, whom he pretends to be like Calvin as to that Doctrine, what he concludes against Calvin.

(c) Calvinismus bestiarum Religio, distrib. 2. p. m. 25.

(d) Pardies ubi supra n. 25. pag. 104, 105. Note that p. 113. he alledges for an instance a Dog, who had learned to sing his Part with his Master. He quotes Horarius oratione peculiari de ratione brutor. He should have quoted Rorarius, quod animalia bruta utantur ratione melius homine. Lib. 1. pag. 2.

ceſſity to have a certain train of Thoughts, Robberies and Murders ſhould not be puniſh'd, and no Advantage could be expected from the puniſhment of Criminals; for thoſe who ſhould ſee the dead Body of a Malefactor upon a Wheel, would not be leſs ſubject than before to that prevailing power, which deprives them of the uſe of Liberty. This Argument for a Free-will is not ſo ſtrong, as it ſeems to be; for tho' Men are perſuaded that Machines have no feeling, they will give 'em a hundred Blows with a Hammer, when they are out of order, if they think to ſet them right by ſtarting a Wheel, or another piece of Iron. They would therefore cauſe a Pickpocket to be whipp'd, tho' they knew that he has no Free-will, if Experience had taught them that the whipping of People keeps them from committing certain actions. However, if this Argument for a Free-will has any force, it will manifeſtly ſhew, that Beaſts are not deprived of liberty (e). They are puniſhed every day, and they mend their faults by that means. Ochinus, in the beginning of his Labyrinths, examines all the Reaſons, which make us believe that we act freely, and ſays among other things againſt that which is taken from the puniſhments inflicted upon Malefactors, that if the Judges were ſure that the hanging of a Horſe, who kills a Man, and the leaving him a long time upon the Gallows in the Highway, would hinder other Horſes from doing miſchief, they would uſe that puniſhment, whenever a Horſe maims or kills any body (f). 'Tis likely he did not know that in ſome Countries they make uſe of ſuch Sights, to keep Beaſts in awe. Rorarius was an Eye-witneſs of it; he ſaw two Wolves hanging upon a Gibbet in the Dutchy of Juliers, and he obſerves, that it made a greater Impreſſion upon the other Wolves, than the Mark of a red hot Iron, the loſs of one's Ears, &c. upon Thieves. He ſays alſo that 'tis uſual in Africa to nail ſome Lions to a Croſs, in order to terrify others, and that the People find ſome benefit by it. (g) Solent in Africa crucifigere leones, ſi qui deprehendantur urbes obſidere, quod in ſenecta faciunt: quoniam ad perſequendas feras vires non ſuppetunt; cujus pœnæ metu, licet urgeat fames, deſinunt: & nos ab Agrippina Colonia Duram verſus equitantes, in illa vaſta ſylva, vidimus duos caligatos lupos, non ſecus quam duos latrones furcæ ſuſpenſos: quo ſimilis pœnæ formidine à maleficio reliqui deterreantur. At inter homines quotidie reperiuntur, quibus ob admiſſa furta tergus virgis cæſum, abſciſſæ auriculæ, ſignatæ genæ, truncata altera manus, erutus oculus, nec adhuc a furtis ſe continere poſſunt, donec laqueus vitæ finis extiterit.

(G) If he could have cleared the common Opinion, &c. The Book (h) Intitl'd, Le Voyage du Monde de Deſcartes, has been very much eſteem'd, and not without reaſon. It contains very great difficulties objected to the Carteſians in an agreeable and lively manner, and very well urged. Thoſe which concern the Machinal Souls of Beaſts, are, I think, the beſt that can be propoſed. The Author ingenuouſly confeſſes, that the Peripateticks ſhewed at firſt no great ſkill in attacking that great Paradox of Deſcartes, and that the Carteſians drew ſome advantage from it. He makes uſe, with great dexterity, of the ill conſequences that may be drawn from that Paradox; for he ſhews that the Arguments of the Carteſians move us to think, that other Men are meer Machines. This is perhaps the weakeſt ſide of that Carteſian Opinion, and it confirms a very judicious Thought that one may have about the nature of human Knowledge. It ſeems that God, who beſtows it, acts like the common Father of all Sects, being not willing that any of 'em ſhould intirely triumph over another, and ſink it without recovery. A Sect, tho' put to its laſt ſhifts, will always recover, if it ceaſes to ſtand upon the defenſive, in order to act offenſively by way of diverſion and retortion. The combat of Sects is always like that of the Greeks (i) and Trojans the Night that Troy was taken: they overcome one another by turns, as they happen to change their way of fighting. A Carteſian has no ſooner run down a School-man's Opinion about the Souls of Beaſts, but he finds that he may be beaten with his own Weapons, and that his Adverſary may ſhew him that he proves too much, and that if he will argue conſequently, he muſt give over ſome Opinions; which he cannot do without making himſelf ridiculous, and admitting manifeſt Abſurdities: For is there any Man that dares affirm that he is the only Perſon that thinks, and that all other Men are meer Machines? Would not he be look'd upon as more extravagant than Mad Men, or thoſe that are removed from all Human Society? This Conſequence of that Carteſian Doctrine is a ſad mortification; it is like a Peacock's Legs, whoſe uglineſs gives a check to the vanity which the beauty of his Feathers had inſpired him with. However, it muſt be confeſt that the whole advantage of Father Daniel againſt Deſcartes's Opinion conſiſts in the Objections that he raiſed, and not at all in the Anſwers that he made to the Objections of the Carteſians. He does not deny that their Queſtions are very puzzling; but he maintains that in their turn, they are not leſs perplexed by the Queſtions that are put to them, and that (k) good Repriſals may be made upon them. You muſt not expect to find in his Book the Solution of the Phyſical, Moral and Theological difficulties, that are propoſed to the Peripateticks about the Souls of Beaſts; he is contented to anſwer, that if there are ſome things in their Opinion that cannot be comprehended, there are ſome likewiſe in Deſcartes's Hypotheſis. (l) The definition of the Soul of a Beaſt, a Subſtance capable of ſenſation, that is, of Seeing, Hearing, &c. is as clear as the Carteſian definition of a Spirit, a thinking and Reaſoning Subſtance. They are Father Daniel's Words, which he proves afterwards as well as can be. A little before he had ſaid (m) that the Soul of a Beaſt is neither Matter nor a Spirit, but a middle being between both, which is not capable of Reaſoning or thought, but only of Perception and Senſation. If he ſays nothing that is more ſatisfactory, 'tis not for want of ability, but the nature of the Subject does not permit it.

He muſt give me leave to ſay, that his Hypotheſis cannot be maintain'd, and that no difficulty can be reſolved by it. Theſe two words, Matter, Spirit, ſeem at firſt ſight to admit of a Medium; but if the thing be narrowly look'd into, it appears that they may be reduced to a contradictory oppoſition. 'Tis but asking whether a Subſtance, that is neither a Body nor a Spirit, is extended or not. If it be extended, there is no reaſon to diſtinguiſh it from Matter; and if it be not extended, I deſire to know why it ſhould be diſtinguiſh'd from a Spirit: for the Notion of a Subſtance, that has no extenſion, ſuits with the Notion of a Spirit, and we cannot apprehend that this Notion can be divided into two different kinds, ſince the Specifick Attribute aſſign'd to the one, will never appear inconſiſtent with the other. If God can add (n) Thought to an unextended Being, he may likewiſe add it to another Being that is unextended, there being nothing but extenſion that ſeems to us to make Matter uncapable of thinking; at leaſt we clearly conceive, that an unextended Subſtance which can feel, is alſo capable of reaſoning; and conſequently, if the Soul of a Beaſt is an unextended Subſtance capable of ſenſation, it is alſo capable of reaſoning; It is therefore of the ſame kind with the Soul of Man, and not a middle Being between a Body and a Spirit. Here's a Queſtion put by Father Daniel. (o) Will the Carteſians deny the poſſibility of this ſort of Beings, capable only of Senſation? What's become of the Reſpect which their Maſter endeavoured to inſpire into them for the Almighty Power of God, who, he ſays, can order it ſo, that a Triangle ſhall not have three Angles, and that two and two ſhall not make four; and yet cannot produce a Being, that has only Senſations? This Queſtion might puzzle a Man, who ſhould have made a Vow never to depart from any of Deſcartes's Opinions; but it does not appear that any Carteſian will be ſuch a Slave to him, and I am ſure that Deſcartes would never have ſeriouſly affirm'd, that God can make two feet of Wax ſuſceptible of three or four Figures, and uncapable of all others. Whatever Opinion Deſcartes may have had about this, his Followers will never think they are wanting in the reſpect they owe to God, if they ſay, that a Being only capable of Senſation, is not more poſſible than a piece (p) of Wax only Suſceptible of a ſquare Figure. As for what concerns a Being, that ſhould have only Senſations, they'll think it very poſſible; as it is poſſible that a certain piece of Matter ſhould be always round, if God would for ever hinder the tranſpoſition of its Particles. Father Daniel will give me leave ſenſible of thoſe difficulties, has given us ſome hints, which (H) deſerve to be conſidered. I ſhall mention part of what he ſays upon this Subject, were it only to propoſe

---

(e) Obſerve the Queſtion of Franzius Hiſt. animal. ſacra parte 1. c. 2. p. m. 16. Quæri autem poſſet an non ponenda ſit rationalis anima in brutis—cum Geneſ. 9. v. 5. Deus ipſe vindicare velit ſanguinem hominis in brutis ſi quando effuderint ſanguinem humanum. He alſo quotes Exodus 12. v. 28. and Leviticus 20. v. 15, 16. where God orders that Brutes ſhould be puniſh'd.

(f) I have not now by me that Book of Ochinus; I quote what I remember he ſays: perhaps I do not exactly tranſlate his words; but I am ſure that I ſet down his meaning.

(g) Rorarius ubi ſupra, lib. 2. p. 109.

(h) Father Daniel a Jeſuit, is accounted the Author of that Work.

(i) Nec ſoli pœnas dant ſanguine Teucri: Quondam etiam victis redit in præcordia virtus, Victoresque cadunt Danai. Virgil. Æneid. lib. 2. v. 366.

leave to obſerve, that he did not perceive that it is not the ſame thing to ſay, firſt, a being only capable of Senſation, and then, a being that has only Senſation. The poſſibility of the firſt is unconceivable; and the poſſibility of the ſecond is manifeſt. But as a piece of Wax, in which God ſhould always hinder the Tranſpoſition of the Particles, would be of the ſame Species with a piece of Wax, the change of whoſe Extremities would continually produce a new Figure; it may likewiſe be ſaid that a Subſtance, which God ſhould always confine within the bounds of Senſations, would be of the ſame Species with a Subſtance that ſhould arrive to Reaſoning.

It remains for me to ſhew the inſufficiency of Father Daniel's Hypotheſis. 1. We want a Syſtem, that proves that the Souls of Beaſts are Mortal: But this cannot be proved by ſuppoſing a middle Being between a Body and a Spirit; for ſuch a Being is not extended: It is therefore Indiviſible; nothing but Annihilation can deſtroy it: Diſeaſes, Fire and Sword cannot hurt it; and therefore it is in that reſpect of the ſame Nature and Condition with Spirits, and Humane Souls. 2. We want a Syſtem whereby it may appear that there is a Specifick difference between the Souls of Men and thoſe of Beaſts: But this middle Being does not prove it; for if the Soul of a Beaſt, being neither a Body nor a Spirit, has nevertheleſs ſome Senſations, the Soul of Man will be able to Reaſon, tho' it be neither Body nor Spirit, but a middle Being between both. 'Tis a more difficult thing for a Being deſtitute of Senſe to arrive to the Perception of a Tree, than for a ſenſitive Being to acquire the Faculty of Reaſoning. 3. We want a Syſtem, that gives an account of the ſurpriſing Skill of Bees, Dogs, Apes, Elephants, &c. and you talk of ſuch Souls in Beaſts, as have only Senſations, without (a) thinking and reaſoning. If you think well of it, you'll be ſenſible that ſuch a Soul is not ſufficient to explain the Phænomena. Father Daniel Confeſſes it in another place of his Book, where he ſeems to allow the Peripateticks no other Advantage but that of Poſſeſſion: For having mention'd the Difficulties that are to be found in the Opinion of the Carteſians concerning Beaſts, he adds: (b) It cannot be denied that the Peripateticks have alſo ſeveral Difficulties to reſolve; but tho' they were much more conſiderable than they really are, as long as the Carteſians have nothing to ſay that is more Satisfactory or more Intelligible, we ought to keep to this, and argue upon this Head, as a great Miniſter of State did twenty five Years ago, upon the whole Body of Philoſophy. He was adviſed not to get his Son to learn the ancient Philoſophy, becauſe there was nothing in it but Fooleries. I have been told alſo, ſaid he, that there are many Fooliſh and Chimerical things in the new one; and therefore continued he, ſince I am to chooſe the ancient or the new Fooleries, I think the ancient ought to be preferr'd before the new. Perhaps Nihuſius (c) argued in the ſame manner.

(H) Has given us ſome hints, which deſerve to be conſidered.] (d) He approves the Opinion of ſome Moderns, who think that Animals are Organized in the Seed; and beſides he believes (e) that Matter alone cannot conſtitute a true Unity, and that therefore every Animal is united to a Form, which is a ſimple, and indiviſible Being. Moreover he ſuppoſes (f) that this Form never leaves its ſubject; from whence it reſults, that properly ſpeaking, there is no Death nor Generation in Nature. He (g) excepts the Soul of Man from all this; he lays it aſide, &c. This Hypotheſis (h) frees us from ſome difficulties. There's no longer any need to anſwer the preſſing Objections raiſed againſt the Schoolmen. The Soul of a Beaſt, ſay their Adverſaries, is a ſubſtance diſtinct from the Body; it muſt therefore be produced by Creation, and deſtroyed by Annihilation: Heat (i) muſt therefore have the power to Create Souls, and to (k) Annihilate them, than which nothing can be more abſurd. The Anſwers of the Ariſtotelians to this Objection do not deſerve to be mention'd, and plainly ſhew that it is unanſwerable. They don't come off better, when they are urged to ſhew the Reaſonableneſs of a continual Production of an almoſt infinite number of Subſtances, which are totally deſtroyed a few days after, tho' they are far more Noble and Excellent than Matter, which never loſes its Exiſtence. Mr. Leibniz's Hypotheſis removes all thoſe difficulties; for it induces us to believe, 1. That God in the beginning of the World Created the Forms of all Bodies, and conſequently all the Souls of Beaſts. 2. That thoſe Souls have Subſiſted ever ſince, being inſeparably united to the firſt Organized Bodies in which God placed them. The Tranſmigration of Souls becomes needleſs in this Hypotheſis, without which there would be a neceſſity to admit of it. I ſhall ſet down part of Mr. Leibniz's Diſcourſe, that my Readers may ſee whether I have taken his Senſe right. “(l) Here the Transformations of Swammerdam, Malpighius, and Leeuwenhoeck, ſome of the moſt excellent Obſervators of our time, came to my Aſſiſtance, and made me more eaſily believe, that Animals, or any other Organized Beings, do not begin to exiſt when we think they do, and that their ſeeming Generation is only an unfolding, and a kind of Augmentation. I have obſerved that the Author of the Recherche de la verité, Mr. Regis, Mr. Hartſoeker, and ſome other able Men are not far from this Opinion. But the greateſt Queſtion remains ſtill, viz. what becomes of thoſe Souls or Forms after the Death of the Animal, or the Deſtruction of the Organized Being. This is the moſt perplexing thing; becauſe it does not ſeem reaſonable that Souls ſhould remain needleſly in a Chaos or confuſed matter. This made me think at laſt that the only way left is to ſay, that not only the Souls, but alſo the Animals themſelves, and their Organized Machines are preſerved, tho' the Deſtruction of the groſs Particles has reduced them to a ſmallneſs, that is as Imperceptible, as it was before they were Born. And indeed no Body can exactly fix the true time of Death, which may paſs a long time for a meer ſuſpenſion of viſible Actions, and at the bottom is never any thing elſe in meer Animals: As it appears from the Reſuſcitations of Flies drowned, and then Buried under Pulverized Chalk, and many ſuch like, which ſufficiently ſhew that there would be many other Reſuſcitations, traced up higher, if Men were able to put again the Machine in Order. . . . . It is therefore Natural that the Animals having been always alive and Organized (as ſome Perſons of great Penetration begin to acknowledge) ſhould always continue ſo. And ſince there is no Birth, nor a quite new Generation of Animals, it follows that there will be no final Extinction of 'em, nor an intire Death taken in a ſtrict Metaphyſical ſenſe; and conſequently that inſtead of the Tranſmigration of Souls, there is only a Transformation of the ſame Animal, according as its Organs are differently folded, and more or leſs open and unfolded.

I ſhall obſerve occaſionally that ſome are of Opinion that the Primitive Subject, to which our Soul is united, goes out of our Body together with it, when we come to Die. M. Poiret thinks ſo, and believes that Moſes upon the day of the Transfiguration, appear'd with the true Body that attended his Soul at his departure from this Life; that is, as he explains it, when that bleſſed Soul left the Cover, which wrapped up the ſubtle Body to which it was united. He calls the dead Body a Cover, and Ruſt, with reſpect to the true Subject, that is united to the Soul. Theſe are his Words: (m) Cum Deus ſit conſtans in ſuis operibus, maxime in præcipuis, & quoad fundamentaliora, condideritque mentes quaſdam, humanas nempe, corporibus annexas; probabile non eſt, id opus vel per aliquod tempus ex toto interrumpi atque deſtrui: & ex hiſtoriis ſacris habemus, Moſen, cujus cadaver omnino cecidit, cum Elia apparuiſſe Apoſtolis Chriſtum in transfiguratione radiantem ſpectantibus: id quod ſine corpore, cui mens fuerit juncta, fieri non poterat. Nonnulli ad corpus ex aere aſſumptum recurrunt: at quid ni id ex ipſo Moſis corpore (& ſic de cæteris) eſſet, portio nempe materiæ illius internæ ſpiritualioris, ſubtilioris & purioris, quæ depoſito cadavere, ſeu tegmine vel cortice aut ſcabie vel rubigine quadam, exhalaret, & menti adhuc unita, ejus regimine, ſecundum Dei placitum, dirigeretur? He has Publiſh'd ſome Objections, that were ſent him from Sedan. It was objected to him among other things, (n) that the example of Moſes proves nothing; becauſe that great Prophet could not have been (a) I uſe here the word Thinking for a kind of Perception, and not in the general Notion of Des Cartes.

(b) Suite du voiage du monde de Deſcartes, pag. 105, 106.

(c) See the Remark H of this Article.

(d) See M. Leibniz's Memorial inſerted in the Journal des Savans of the 27th of June 1695, pag. 444. Dutch Edit.

(e) Ibid. pag. 445.

(f) Ibid. pag. 447.

(g) Ibid. pag. 448.

(h) Bernier, in his [illegible]

(l) Journal des Savans, ubi ſupra pag. 449.

(m) Poiret, Cogitat. rational. de Deo, anima & malo, in appendice n. 1. pag. 611. edit. Amſtelod. 1685.

(n) Idem Reſponſ. ad primas object. pag. 696.

poſe my Doubts. But to return to Rorarius, I think he was Born at Pordenone (I) in Italy. I wiſh I had read the Plea (α), which he compoſed for Rats. It was Printed in the Country of the Griſons in the Year 1548. There is ſomething like it in the Works (β) of Preſident Chaſſanée. I ſhall make an end here (γ) of the Collection, whereof you have ſeen the principal Part in the Article of Pereira.

I am informed from ſeveral Hands that many Perſons, who love Dogmatical Hiſtory, have approved the Collections, which I have Publiſh'd in the Remarks of this Article. Nay, ſome would be glad that I ſhould Publiſh ſome others, if any new ones ſhould come into my Hands. This makes me take the Liberty to add here ſome (K) ſupplements, been ſeen by the Apoſtles, unleſs a great deal of Matter had been added to that, which went out of his dead Body with his Soul. Now if it had been neceſſary to give him above one half of a new Body, one may very well ſay that the Matter, with which he appeared on that day, was all new. M. Poiret anſwered (n) that the ſubtle Matter, which goes out of the Body with the Soul, is indeed too thin to ſtrike upon our Senſes; but that we may ſee it, when God aſſiſts us in an extraordinary manner. He was told that ſome Schoolmen admit of a Quinteſſence, which ties a human Soul to the Organs formed out of the four Elements, and ſerves it as a Vehicle, when it leaves the Body. They ſay alſo that this Vehicle is the ſubject of the Torments, which the Reprobate endure after the Reſurrection. (o) Obſervo opinionem viri docti non multum diſcrepare a quorundam Scholaſticorum placitis, qui præter quatuor elementa neſcio quam quintam eſſentiam venire in compoſitionem humani corporis opinantur, quæ ſit veluti medium quoddam vinculum, quo incorporeus & immortalis animus cum terreno ac mortali corpore copuletur: aliter enim ſi res eſſet, nulla videretur eſſe proportio & convenientia inter corpus & animam rationalem: & illam quidem quintam eſſentiam naturæ cœleſtis eſſe volunt, eamque ferre animum quando per mortem è corpore migrare cogitur, & in ea pœnas apud inferos luere ſceleribus ſuis promeritas. M. Poiret (p) anſwered that he had nothing to do with the Schoolmen's Notions. See the Margin (q).

There are ſome things in M. Leibniz's Hypotheſis, that are liable to ſome difficulties, tho' they ſhew the great extent of his Genius. He will have it, for Inſtance, that the Soul of a Dog acts independantly upon outward Bodies; (r) that it ſtands upon its own Bottom, by a perfect Spontaneity with reſpect to itſelf, and yet with a perfect Conformity to outward things. . . . That its internal Perceptions ariſe from its Original Conſtitution, that is to ſay, Repreſentative (capable of expreſſing Beings out of itſelf, with reſpect to its Organs) which was beſtowed upon it from the time of its Creation, and makes its individual Character. From whence it reſults, that it would feel Hunger and Thirſt at ſuch an Hour, tho' there were not any one body in the Univerſe, and tho, nothing ſhould exiſt but God and that Soul. He explains (ſ) his Thought by the Example of two Pendulums that ſhould perfectly agree: That is, he ſuppoſes that according to the particular Laws, which put the Soul upon Action, it muſt feel Hunger at ſuch an Hour; and that according to the particular Laws, which direct the motion of Matter, the Body which is united to that Soul muſt be modified at that ſame Hour, as it is modified when the Soul is Hungry. I'll forbear preferring this Syſtem to that of Occaſional Cauſes, till the Learned Author has perfected it. I cannot apprehend the Connexion of Internal and Spontaneous Actions, which would have this Effect, that the Soul of a Dog would feel Pain immediately after having felt Joy, tho' it were alone in the Univerſe. I underſtand why a Dog paſſes immediately from Pleaſure to Pain, when being very Hungry, and eating a piece of Bread, he is ſuddenly ſtruck with a Cudgel; but I cannot apprehend that his Soul ſhould be ſo framed, that at the very moment he is beaten, he would feel pain, tho' he were not beaten, and tho' he ſhould continue to eat Bread without any trouble or hindrance. Nor do I ſee how the Spontaneity of that Soul ſhould be conſiſtent with the ſenſe of Pain, and in general with all unpleaſing Perceptions. Beſides, the reaſon why this Learned Man does not like the Carteſian Syſtem, ſeems to me to be a falſe Suppoſition; for it cannot be ſaid that the Syſtem of Occaſional Cauſes brings in God acting by a Miracle (t), Deum ex machina, in the mutual dependency of the Body and Soul: for ſince God does only intervene according to general Laws, he cannot be ſaid to act in an extraordinary manner. Does the internal and active virtue Communicated to the Forms of Bodies, according to Mr. Leibniz, know the train of Actions which it is to produce? By no means; for we know by Experience that we are Ignorant whether we ſhall have ſuch and ſuch Perceptions in an hour's time. It were therefore neceſſary that the Forms ſhould be directed by ſome external Principle in the production of their Actions. But this would be Deus ex machina, as well as in the Syſtem of Occaſional Cauſes (u). To conclude, as he ſuppoſes with great reaſon, that all Souls are Simple and Indiviſible, one cannot apprehend how they can be compared with a Pendulum, that is, how by their Original Conſtitution they can diverſify their Operations, by uſing the ſpontaneous Activity, beſtowed upon them by their Creator. One may clearly conceive that a ſimple Being will always act in an uniform manner, if no external Cauſe hinders it. If it was Compoſed of ſeveral Pieces as a Machine, it would Act different ways, becauſe the peculiar Activity of each piece might change every Moment the Activity of others: But how will you find in a ſimple Subſtance the cauſe of a change of Operation?

(I) He was Born at Pordenone in Italy.] Here is the reaſon I have for it. He ſays that Sacillum is near the place of his Birth. Proximum eſt patriæ meæ Sacillum oppidum (in quo doctiſſimus Franciſcus Amaltheus publico ſtipendio humaniores litteras profitetur, cujus ſub ductu pueritiæ meæ rudimentum depoſui) amœnum flumine. This Parentheſis is not needleſs; for we learn from it where our Rorarius began his Studies, and that the (x) three Brothers, who made the Name of Amaltheus ſo Famous, were not the only Perſons of that Name, that were Learned. It is certain that Sacillum is not far (y) from Portus Naonis, or Pordenone, as the Italians call it, or Portenau, as the Germans name it (z). The Epiſtle Dedicatory of Rorarius's Book to the Biſhop of Arras, is dated from Portus Naonis; and there was a Phyſician of the ſame Town, whoſe Name was Nicolas RORARIUS. He wrote a Book Printed at Venice, in 1566, and 1572. and Intitled Contradictiones, dubia & paradoxa in libros Hippocratis, Celſi, Galeni, Aetii, Æginetæ, Avicennæ cum eorundem conciliationibus. We find theſe Words concerning that Writer in Lindenius Renovatus. Nicolaus Rorarius Utinenſis Medicus, vixit circa A. C. 1563. Renatus Moreau de V. S. in Pleurit. The meaning of which is not that he was a Native of Udine, but only that he practiſed Phyſick there. And therefore Konig has committed a Fault, when he ſays, Rorarius (Nicol.) de Portunnone, Utinenſis collegit conciliationes contradictionum in ſcriptis Medicorum anno 1566. The Omiſſion of the word Medicus after Utinenſis would make one believe that this Phyſician was Born at Udine, and that de Portunnone was a Sirname of his Family. Doni Dedicated one (a) of the Chapters of his Ramo della Zucca al S. Gregorio Rorario da Pordonone.

(K) Makes me take the liberty to add here ſome Supplements.] I ſhall name firſt of all the Authors, who believe that Beaſts have Rational Souls. I don't think that any body has carried the thing farther than the Philoſopher Celſus; for deſigning to confute the Chriſtians, who ſay that all things were made for the uſe of Man, he endeavours to ſhew that Beaſts are not leſs Excellent than Men, and even that they ſurpaſs them. He aſcribes (b) to them (c) a form of Government, and the obſervation of Juſtice and Charity. He pretends that Ants converſe one with another. (d) When they meet one another, ſays he, they converſe together; hence it is that they never loſe their way. They are therefore endowed with Reaſon in all its degrees; they have naturally the notions of ſome Universal Truths; they have the uſe of Speech; they have the knowledge of Accidental Things, and know how to expreſs

---

(α) Oratio pro Muribus adverſus Nicolai Boſſi edictum. Auguſtæ Rhetiæ an. Phil. Gilhard. Draudius Biblioth. pag. 1591.

(β) See Thuanus, Lib. 6. pag. 125.

(γ) See the Remark D.

(n) Id. ib. pag. 695.

(o) Ibid. pag. 696.

(p) Ibid. pag. 697.

(q) The Anonymous Platoniſt, who writ Philoſophia vulgaris refutata, Printed in 1690. ſays that Ockam, Maironi, Antonius Mirandulanus, Garbius, & Licetus will have the Soul of Man to be made up of two Subſtances, alia immaterialis quæ a Deo creatur, alia materialis ex traduce propagatur, &c.

(r) Journal des Savans of the 4th of July 1695. pag. 457.

(ſ) See the Hiſtoire des Ouvrages des Savans, February 1696. pag. 274. 275.

(t) Ibid.

supplements, tho' I am not Ignorant that many Readers will not much care for them, and will look upon 'em as meer Excrescencies. They will not say so of the express them. He affirms that some Beasts "(a) know the Secrets of (b) Magick; so that Men cannot Boast of it as of a Privilege peculiar to them. He speaks of it in this manner. If a Man is proud of his Knowledge of the Secrets of Magick, Serpents and Eagles, know more of it than he. For they have many Antidotes against Poisons and Diseases, and they know the Virtue of some Stones for the Cure of their little ones; which Men value so much, that when they find some of 'em, they think to have found a Treasure. . . . . (c) Afterwards designing to shew at large, that Men, under pretence of Knowing the Deity, ought not to pretend upon that account that they are above all Mortal Beings, since there are some Irrational Animals, who have a clear and distinct Idea of it; whilst the most Subtil Men, whether they be Grecians or Barbarians, have so many disputes about it; he adds: If any one pretends to raise Man above other Animals, because he is capable of knowing the Deity, and receiving the Idea and Impression of it; let him know that there are many among them, who may Boast of the same Advantage: And that upon good grounds. For can any thing be more Divine than to Foresee and Predict things to come? Now other Animals, especially Birds, are in that respect the Masters of Men; and the Art of our Diviners consists only in Understanding what those Animals teach them. Birds therefore and other Animals qualified for Divination, to whom God discovers things to come, give us the Knowledge of 'em by Signs and Symbols: Which shews that they have Naturally a more frequent and more strict Commerce with the Deity than we have; that they exceed us in Knowledge, and are dearer to God than we. The most Knowing Men say also, that those Animals Converse together in a more Holy and Noble manner than we do, and that they understand their Language; which appears from this, that after they have told us that the Birds say they will go to such a place, and do there such a thing; they shew us those Birds going thither, and actually doing what they said they would do. As for the Elephants, there is no Creature that shews a more Religious respect for Oaths, or a more invislable Fidelity: Which doubtless proceeds from no other cause than their Knowledge of him." This has been refuted by Origen in his Book against Celsus.

Salmasius is one of the Moderns, who believe that Brutes are endowed with Reason. He says (d) that the Examples, which may be alledged for it, are so many that one might fill up a Book with them. Osiander does not approve this Opinion. See his Notes upon Grotius's Book de jure belli & pacis, in the Chapter wherein he rejects the definition (e) of the Law of Nature, adopted by Justinian in the 1 Book of the Institutes. That definition lays down that Men and Beasts have a share in the Law of Nature. Most of those, who approve it, go upon this Hypothesis, that Beasts are not deprived of the use of Reason; but most of those, who reject that Notion of the Law of Nature, go upon the contrary Hypothesis. Osiander (f) is one of 'em, and he commends Grotius for not approving Justinian's definition, wherein, says he, he was guided by Laurentius Valla, Francis Connanus, Dominicus Sotus, and many others. We shall see by and by a Tenet of Grotius, which Osiander has Condemned, concerning the Principle of certain Actions of Beasts, that seem to proceed from Reason. John Antony Cappella, a Neapolitan Physician, Publish'd (g) in 1641. Opusculum paradoxicum quod ratio participetur a brutis, which I have not read; and therefore I cannot say which way he goes about to prove it. I am better acquainted with Dr. Willis's Opinion. He pretends that the Souls of Brutes are composed of Organs, and that they have the same Figure and Extent with the Bodies they inform; only they are not so thick, and their Parts are so thin that they cannot be seen, and would easily be scattered, if the Bodies of the Animals did not keep 'em together. (h) Ista particularum subtilium congeries, sive anima, quæ sese latius explicans, & particulas suas aliis crassioribus insinuans, & intertexens corpus fabricat, juxta figuram & dimensionem istius corporis exactè conformatur, ipsi coextenditur, & tanquam capsulæ, aut vaginæ ad amussim adaptatur, totum ac singulas partes ejus actuat, vivificat, & inspirat; porro lethum, ipsamet anima, e se statim dissolvit, tenuesque in auras evanescens abit, a corpore continenti, in subsistentia sua & esse conservatur. Ita quidem Anima, tenuissima licet, corporea, corporis quasi spectrum, sive larva umbratilis videtur: Parva hæc simul cum corpore ex materia ejus disposita emergens, hypostasin, sive subsistentiam suam, non minus quam corpus, juxta Ideam, sive Typum sibimet ex naturæ lege præstitutum accipit; quamvis autem corpori intime unitur, ejusque velut subtegmen existat, tamen utpote subtilissima, & quasi filo admodum prætenui consistens, sensibus nostris percipi nequit, at solummodo ab effectis & operationibus suis dignoscitur. He ascribes (i) to those Souls a kind of Reason, which he explains Analytically. He says that there is such a Soul in Man, and besides, a Spiritual one, and pretends to explain by those two Souls the Conflict which we are conscious of within our selves, and which other Philosophers explain by the Superior and Inferior Faculties of one simple and spiritual Substance, which they call the Rational-Soul (k). But this way of Explaining the conflict between Reason and the sensitive Soul is not satisfactory; for every body is conscious to himself, that the Principle which desires sensual Pleasures, is the same in number with the Principle that thwarts such desires, and which overcomes it sometimes, but is most times overcome by it. If we had two different Souls really distinct one from another, we should not observe this Unity of Principle. If it be said that one of 'em produces its Sentiments and Passions in the other; I answer that it follows from thence that there are two Substances in each Man, which have the same desires. But no Man did ever perceive two such distinct Principles. Besides, if a Material Soul could Communicate a sensual Desire to the spiritual Soul of Man, the Body would do it likewise; and consequently Beings are multiplied without Necessity, by ascribing to each Man a Body, and two Souls, one of which is Sensitive, and the other Rational. But to proceed, Dr. Willis observes that Sir Kenelm Digby was of Descartes's and Pereira's Opinion about the Souls of Brutes (l) Pereira . . . . bestias omni cognitione, seu perceptione carere affirmavit; quem in nupero hoc seculo πόδα πόδι sequuti sunt Viri Clarissimi, Cartesius, Digbæus, cum aliis, qui brutorum animas, quantum fieri possit, ab humana discriminare præ se ferentes, eas non modo corporeas, & divisibiles, sed etiam mere passivas asseruerunt. Afterwards he shews what difference there is between Descartes's Opinion, and that of Sir Kenelme Digby, and he says that the latter does not deprive Beasts of Sensations and Memory. It is not true therefore that his Opinion was the same with that of Pereira, and Descartes: Why then did the Doctor say it was? (m) Digbeius . . . . insuper adjecit, effluvia quadam tenuissima e corpore sensibili delibata, non modo sensoria exteriora afficere, verum & interiores recessus subingredientia, sese spiritibus immiscere, eosque in varias fluctuationes agendo, & sensus & motus locales diversimodos producere; porro ex his atomis extrinsecus ita partes nervosas, ac cerebrum ipsum subeuntibus, haud tantum actiones extemporaneas procedere; verum ex iisdem in corpore sentiente relictis, ac intra cerebri loculos reconditis, prioresque configurationes retinentibus, rerum antea actarum ideas in memoria residuas constitui. We may therefore conclude, that Sir Kenelme Digby is none of those, who maintain that Beasts are meer Machines. Mr. Locke believes that they are endowed with Reason. The following Words will shew you wherein he places the difference between Men and Beasts. "(n) This I think I may be positive in, that the Power of Abstracting is not at all in them, and that the having of general Ideas is that which puts a perfect distinction betwixt Man and Brutes; and is an Excellency, which the Faculties of Brutes do by no means attain to. For it is evident, we observe no Footsteps in them of making use of General Signs, for Universal Ideas: From which we have Reason to imagin, that they have not the Faculty of Abstracting, or making General Ideas, since they have no use of Words or any other general Signs.---(o) And therefore I think we may suppose, that 'tis in this that the Species of Brutes are Discriminated from Men; and 'tis that

(a) Ibid. pag. 185.

(b) He means natural Magick.

(c) Ibid. pag. 183, 184.

(d) See Osiander upon ...hnsia, pag. 213.

(e) Jus naturale est quod natura omnia animalia docuit. Nam jus istud non humani generis proprium, sed omnium animalium, quæ in cœlo, quæ in terra, quæ in mari nascuntur. — Videmus etenim cetera quoque animalia illius juris perita censeri. Institut. lib. 1. tit. 2.

(f) Osiander ...or. in ...r. Grotii de jure belli & pacis, pag. ...6. &

(g) Nicolo Toppi Biblioth. Napolet. pag. ...

(h) Thomas Willis de Anima brutorum ... parte 1. cap. 2. pag. m. 15.

(i) Id. ib. cap. 6. pag. 91, 92.

(k) Id. ib. cap. 7.

(l) Idem. cap. 1. pag. 5, & 6.

(m) Id. ib pag. 7.

(n) Locke, An Essay concerning Humane Understanding, Book 2. chap. 11. §. 10, 11. 'Tis an excellent Work, which deserved to be translated into French, as well as it has been Translated by Mr. Coste.

(o) Ibid. Sect. 11.

the Obſervations I deſign to make upon (L) M. Leibniz's Reflections, which have “ that proper difference wherein they are wholly Separated, and which at laſt widens to ſo vaſt a diſtance. For if they have any Ideas at all, and are not bare Machines, (as ſome would have them) we cannot deny them to have ſome Reaſon. It ſeems as evident to me that they do ſome of them in certain Inſtances reaſon, as they have Senſe; but it is only in particular Ideas, juſt as they receive them from their Senſes. They are the beſt of them tied up within thoſe narrow Bounds, and have not, as I think, the Faculty to inlarge them by any Kind of Abſtraction.

SOME Authors, who have aſcrib'd the actions of Brutes to an External Principle.

There is in the Nouvelles (a) de la Republique des lettres, an Abſtract of a Book Intitled, Eſſais nouveaux de Morale, which was Printed at Paris in 1686. The Author, who denies on the one ſide that Beaſts are endowed with the Faculty of Reaſoning, confeſſes on the other ſide that their Actions are directed by (b) an External Reaſon, and that the Reaſon and Wiſdom, which governs them, is more excellent and ſure than that of Man .... The Reaſon, ſays he (c), which Operates in Beaſts, is not in them ....'tis, as St. Thomas ſays after all the Antient Fathers, the Soveraign and Eternal Reaſon of the Supreme Being, who preſerves his Works, and directs them to the ends for which he Created them, with the ſecret Springs he has put in them, which are variouſly determin'd, to produce a thouſand ſorts of different Motions, according to their ſeveral Wants. Add to this the following words of Mr. Bernard: “ (d) The Philoſophers, who are moſt earneſt in aſſerting that Beaſts are meer Machines, muſt ingenuouſly confeſs that they perform ſeveral Actions, the Mechaniſm whereof they cannot explain. The ſhorteſt way would be to ſay in general, that God, who was willing that their Machines ſhould ſubſiſt for ſome time, has thro' his infinite Wiſdom diſpoſed their parts agreeably to ſuch an Intention. I think I have read ſomewhere this Aſſertion, Deus eſt anima brutorum: this Expreſſion is ſomewhat Harſh; but it is ſuſceptible of a Reaſonable Senſe. Grotius ſays that ſome Actions of Beaſts, wherein they give over their Private Intereſt in favour of others, proceed from an External Intelligence. (e) Cæterarum animantium quædam utilitatum ſuarum ſtudium, partim fœtuum ſuorum partim aliorum ſibi congenerum reſpectu, aliquatenus temperant: quod in illis quidem procedere credimus ex principio aliquo intelligente extrinſeco, quia circa actus alios, iſtis neutiquam difficiliores, par intelligentia in illis non apparet. Gaſpar Zieglerus, in his Note upon that paſſage, finds fault with Grotius for not Explaining more clearly his Thoughts about the Nature of that External Principle: If it be the Divine Providence, ſays he, Grotius lies open to the Satyrical Streaks of Dr. (f) Juan Huarte, who ſhews that a Philoſopher ought not to explain Phænomena by the immediate Operation of God. He quotes (g) two Writers, who have aſcribed all the Skill of Brutes to a Natural Inſtinct, and he approves their Opinion. Oſiander did very much inlarge in his Confutation of Grotius, and he ſays among other things, that this External Principle muſt be God himſelf, or an Angel, or the Univerſal Form of Averroes, and that none of thoſe three Suppoſitions can be admitted (h). My mentioning Averroes, puts me in mind that he admitted an External Principle of Human Knowledge common to all particular Underſtandings, and which Influences alſo Beaſts and Stones; but ſince he acknowledged that this Influence is Fruitleſs with reſpect to Beaſts and inſenſible Creatures, becauſe it falls upon a Matter ill diſpoſed, it cannot be ſaid that he aſcribed more Perfection to Beaſts than the Schoolmen do. (i) Averroes lib. 3. de anima cap. 5. unum facit omnium hominum intellectum, re ab animæ ſubſtantia ſeparatum, ſed ſingulis conjunctum per inſidentes phantaſiæ imagines; etiam equo, & aſino, lapidi, & metallo, aſſiſtentem, ſed citra fructum, quia materies ſit inepta. M. de Vigneul Marville (k) tells us, that there was a certain Philoſopher at M. Rohault's Conferences, who in order to explain how Beaſts being meer Machines, Act nevertheleſs, as if they had a Soul, made uſe of the Hypotheſis of the Comte de Gabalis, that is, he ſuppoſed that ſome Elementary Spirits make it their buſineſs to put in Motion all the Machines of Beaſts, according to the rules of Mechanicks. He gave ſo ingenious a turn to his Diſcourſe, that Mr. Pequet told him, that (l) if his agreeable Syſtem was not true, it was however bene trovato. I make no doubt that ſome People will be pleaſed with it: But if I was to diſpute about it, I could eaſily ſhew that it is inſufficient to explain the Phænomena, and that in ſome reſpects it is more intricate than that of Deſcartes. The difficulty, which makes the Carteſians moſt uneaſy, does not conſiſt in ſaying that Beaſts do readily move a thouſand different ways, but in ſaying that they expreſs Love, Hatred, Joy, Jealouſy, Fear, Grief, &c. The Syſtem of thoſe Elementary Spirits is of no uſe to explain this, ſince 'tis pretended that they put in motion the Springs of Beaſts only to procure to themſelves an agreeable Amuſement. They would not be therefore ſuch fools as to undergo Hunger, Cold, or Pain. It were therefore neceſſary to ſuppoſe, that none of thoſe Paſſions is to be found in Beaſts, and then all the Difficulties return again; or elſe it muſt be ſaid that thoſe Spirits are Condemned to direct the Machines of Brutes, in order to expiate their Sins, by ſuffering all the Paſſions which the Peripateticks aſcribe to Beaſts: which is againſt the Suppoſition of the Gabaliſt Philoſopher. I omit ſeveral other Difficulties as great as theſe, which may be raiſed againſt that Syſtem falſly ſaid to be bene trovato.

You'll find in the Nouvelles de la Republique des Lettres (m), that M. Vallade, Author of a Philoſophical Diſcourſe concerning the Creation and ordering of the World, has explained the moſt ſurpriſing Actions of Brutes by Mechanical Laws. The ſame Nouvelles (n) inform us, that M. de la Bruyere was Criticiſ'd for aſſerting that Beaſts are nothing but Matter. There is in the fine Book of Don (o) Francis Lami, about the Knowledge of ones ſelf, an Explanation, (p) wherein the Author ſhews that there is no ſolid reaſon to aſcribe Knowledge and Immortality to the Souls of Beaſts; whereas it cannot be reaſonably denied that Human Souls have both. That Explanation is worth reading, eſpecially, becauſe it contains a Solution of the moſt perplexing difficulty of the Carteſian Syſtem; for Don Lami ſhews that any Body may be Convinced by very ſtrong Arguments, that other Men are not meer Machines: And yet the Anti-Carteſians draw ſuch an Inference, if it be true that Brutes are made up of Organs ſo well contrived, that they may do without Knowledge whatever they do. If God, ſay they, was able to form ſuch a Machine, he might alſo make others that would perform all the Actions of Man, and conſequently we could not be ſure that any other Man thinks beſides us. Father Gilbert, Regius Profeſſor in the Univerſity of Toulouſe, is one of thoſe who have Publiſh'd ſome Books (q) againſt the Opinion of the Carteſians about the Souls of Beaſts. Note, that this Opinion has been aſſerted in a Courſe of Philoſophy taught (r) at Paris, in the College of the four Nations, and afterwards Printed in the ſame City in the Year 1695. with this Title, Inſtitutio Philoſophica ad faciliorem veterum ac recentiorum Philoſophorum lectionem comparata. It contains 4 Volumes in 12. What concerns the Senſitive Soul is to be ſeen in the third Volume from Page 271. to Page 292. I don't queſtion that Dr. Bayle, a Phyſician and Profeſſor of the Liberal Arts at Toulouſe, has imbraced Deſcartes's Opinion upon this Head in his Phyſicks, which he has lately Publiſh'd in 3 Volumes in Quarto (s).

I could make a long Supplement upon what I have ſaid above, concerning M. Peires's Opinion; but I had rather ſupreſs it, and only point out a Writer (t), who made a very Learned Collection relating to the Doctrine of the Platoniſts, about the Etherial Matter, which attends Souls at their Entrance into Bodies, and at their going out of them.

(L) Of the Obſervations which I deſign to make upon M. Leibniz's Reflections.] I declare firſt of all, that I am very glad I have propoſed ſome ſmall Difficulties againſt the Syſtem of that great Philoſopher, ſince they have occaſion'd ſome Anſwers, whereby that Subject has been made clearer to me, and I have more diſtinctly diſcover'd the wonderful part of it. I look now upon that Syſtem as an important Conqueſt, which enlarges the Bounds of Philoſophy. We had only two Hypotheſes, that of the Schools, and that of the Carteſians: The one was a way

(a) In October 1686, pag. 1196, & ſeq.

(b) Nouveaux eſſais de morale, pag. [illegible]

(c) Ibid. pag. 32.

(d) Nouvelles de la Rep. des lettres Oct. 1700. pag. 419, 420.

(e) Grot. de jure belli & pacis proleg. n. 7.

(f) In the 7th Chapter of his Examen de Ingenios para las Sciencias.

(g) Nos enim brutorum inſtinctum ad inſtinctum referimus naturæ, cum Sperlingio noſtro l. 1. inſtit. phyſ. cap. 6. qu. 3. & cum [illegible] Joh. Frid. Hornio de ſubject. jur. nat. c. 6. Ziegler in prolegomena Grotii pag. 5.

(h) Oſiander ubi ſupra, p. 48. & ſeq.

(i) Voſſius de origine & prog. idol. lib. 3. cap. 42. p. m. 952.

(k) Melanges d'hiſt. & de litterature, tom. 1. pag. 100. & ſeq. Rouen 1700.

have been publiſh'd in the Journal of Mr. Baſnage; for thoſe Remarks are a Natural

way of Influence of the Body upon the Soul, and of the Soul upon the Body; the other was a way of aſſiſtance, or occaſional cauſality. But here is a new Acquiſition, a new Hypotheſis, which may be call'd, as Father Lami ſtyles it (a), a way of pre-eſtabliſh'd harmony. We are beholden for it to Mr. Leibniz, and 'tis impoſſible to conceive any thing, that gives us a nobler Idea of the Power and Wiſdom of the Author of all things. This, together with the advantage of removing all Notions of a miraculous Conduct, would move me to prefer this new Syſtem to that of the Carteſians, if I could conceive a poſſibility in the way of pre-eſtabliſh'd Harmony. I deſire the Reader to take notice, that tho' I confeſs that this way removes all Notions of a miraculous Conduct, yet I don't retract what I have ſaid formerly, (b) That the Syſtem of Occaſional Cauſes does not bring in God acting miraculouſly. I am as much perſuaded as ever I was, that an Action cannot be ſaid to be miraculous, unleſs God produces it as an Exception to the general Laws; and that every thing, of which he is immediately the Author, according to thoſe Laws, is diſtinct from a Miracle properly ſo call'd. But being willing to clear this Diſpute from as many things as I can poſſibly, I conſent it ſhould be ſaid that the ſureſt way of removing all Notions that include a Miracle, is to ſuppoſe that created Beings are actually the immediate Cauſes of the effects of Nature. I will therefore lay aſide what I might anſwer to that part of Mr. Leibniz's Anſwer. I will alſo ſuppreſs all the Objections which are not more contrary to his Opinion, than to that of ſome other Philoſophers. I will not therefore inſiſt upon the Difficulties that may be raiſed againſt this Suppoſition, That a Creature can receive from God the power of moving it ſelf. They are very great, (c) and almoſt unanſwerable; but Mr. Leibniz's Syſtem dos not lie more open to them than that of the Ariſtotelians. Nay, I don't know whether the Carteſians would ſay, That God cannot communicate to our Souls a power of acting. If they ſay ſo, how can they own that Adam ſinned? And if they dare not ſay ſo, they weaken the Arguments, whereby they endeavour to prove, that Matter is ſuſceptible of no manner of activity. Nor do I believe that it is more difficult for Mr. Leibniz than for the Carteſians, or other Philoſophers, to free himſelf from the Objection of a fatal Mechaniſm, which deſtroys human Liberty. Wherefore waving this, I ſhall only ſpeak of what is peculiar to the Syſtem of the pre-eſtabliſh'd Harmony.

I. My firſt Obſervation is, That it raiſes the Power and Wiſdom of the Divine Art above whatever can be conceiv'd. Fancy to your ſelf a Ship, which having neither Senſations, nor Knowledge, and being not directed by any created or uncreated Being, has the Power of moving it ſelf ſo exactly as to have always a favourable Wind, to avoid Currents and Rocks, to caſt Anchor where it ought to be done, and to retire into a Harbour preciſely when there is occaſion for it: ſuppoſe ſuch a Ship ſails in that manner for ſeveral Years, being always turn'd and ſituated as it ought to be, according to the ſeveral changes of the Air, and the different ſituation of Seas and Lands; you will acknowledge that God, notwithſtanding his infinite Power, cannot communicate ſuch a Faculty to a Ship; nay, you will ſay that the nature of a Ship is not capable of receiving it from God. And yet what Mr. Leibniz ſuppoſes about the Machine of a Human Body is more admirable and ſurpriſing than all this. Let us apply his Syſtem concerning the Union of the Soul with the Body to the Perſon of Julius Cæſar.

II. We muſt ſay according to this Syſtem that the Body of Julius Cæſar did ſo exerciſe its moving faculty, that from its Birth to its Death, it went through continual Changes, which did moſt exactly anſwer the perpetual Changes of a certain Soul which it did not know, and which made no impreſſion upon it. We muſt ſay that the Rule, according to which that Faculty of Cæſar's Body exerted it ſelf, was ſuch that he would have gone to the Senate upon ſuch a day, and at ſuch an hour; that he would have ſpoke there ſuch and ſuch Words, &c. tho' God had been willing to annihilate his Soul the next day after it was created. We muſt ſay that this moving Faculty did punctually change and modify it ſelf according to the volubility of the Thoughts of that ambitious Spirit; and that it was affected preciſely in a certain manner, rather than in another, becauſe the Soul of Cæſar paſs'd from a certain Thought to another. Can a blind Power modify it ſelf ſo exactly by virtue of an Impreſſion, communicated Thirty or Forty Years before, and which was never renewed ſince, and which is left to it ſelf, without ever knowing what it is to do? Is not this much more incomprehenſible than the Navigation I ſpoke of in the foregoing Paragraph?

III. The Difficulty will be greater ſtill, if it be conſider'd that the Machine of man contains an almoſt infinite number of Organs, and (d) that it is continually expoſed to the Shock of the Bodies that ſurround it, which by an innumerable variety of ſhakings, produce in it a thouſand ſorts of modifications. How can it be conceived that this pre-eſtabliſh'd Harmony ſhould never be diſorder'd, but go on ſtill during the longeſt life of a Man, notwithſtanding the infinite varieties of the reciprocal action of ſo many Organs upon one another, which are ſurrounded on all ſides with infinite Corpuſcles, ſometimes hot and ſometimes cold, ſometimes dry and ſometimes moiſt, and always acting and pricking the Nerves a thouſand different ways? Suppoſe the multitude of Organs and external Agents be a neceſſary Inſtrument of the almoſt infinite variety of Changes in a human Body; will that variety have the requiſite juſtneſs? Will it never diſturb the Correſpondence of thoſe Changes with the Changes of the Soul? This ſeems to be altogether impoſſible.

IV. 'Tis in vain to have recourſe to the power of God, in order to maintain that Brutes are meer Machines; 'tis in vain to ſay that God was able to make Machines ſo artfully contriv'd that the Voice of a Man, the reflected Light of an Object, &c. will Strike them exactly where it is neceſſary, that they may move in a certrin manner. This Suppoſition is rejected by every body, except ſome Carteſians; and no Carteſian would admit of it, if it were to be extended to Man, that is, if any one ſhould aſſert, that God was able to form ſuch Bodies as would machinally do whatever we ſee other Men do. By denying this, we do not pretend to limit the Power and Knowledge of God; we only mean that the nature of things does not permit, that the Faculties, imparted to a Creature ſhould not be neceſſarily confined within certain bounds. The actions of Creatures muſt be neceſſarily proportion'd to their Eſſential State, and performed according to the Character that belongs to each Machine; for according to the Axiom of the Philoſophers, (e) whatever is receiv'd, is proportion'd to the capacity of the Subject that receives it. We may therefore reject M. Leibniz's Hypotheſis as being impoſſible, ſince it is liable to greater difficulties than that of the Carteſians about the Souls of Brutes. He puts a perpetual Harmony between two Beings, which do not act one upon another; but if Servants were meer Machines, and ſhould punctually obey their Maſters commands, it could not be ſaid, that they do it without a real action of their Maſters upon them: for their Maſters would ſpeak ſome Words, and make ſome Signs, that would really ſhake and move the Organs of the Servants.

V. Now let us conſider the Soul of Julius Cæſar, and we'll find the thing more impoſſible ſtill. That Soul was in the World without being expoſed to the Influence of any Body or Spirit. The power it had receiv'd from God, was the only principle of the actions it produced at every moment: And if thoſe Actions were different from one another, it was not becauſe ſome of 'em were produced by the Concourſe of ſome Springs, which did not contribute to the production of others; for the Soul of Man is ſimple, indiviſible, and immaterial. Mr. Leibniz owns it: and if he did not acknowledge it, but on the contrary, if he ſhould ſuppoſe with moſt Philoſophers, and ſome (f) of the moſt excellent Metaphyſicians of our Age, that a Compound of many material parts placed and diſpoſed in a certain manner, is capable of thinking; his Hypotheſis would appear to me for that very thing abſolutely impoſſible, and I could refute it ſeveral other ways, which I need not mention, ſince he acknowledges the Immateriality of the Soul, and builds upon it. I return to the Soul of Julius Cæſar, and I'll call it an (g) immaterial Automaton, and will compare

(a) Dom. Franc. Lami, re. Connoiſſance de ſoi même, pag. 226. edit. 1699.

(b) See the Memorial which Mr. Leibniz, has cauſed to be inſerted in the Hiſtoire des Ouvrages des Savans, July 1698. pag. 344.

(c) See Mr. Sturmius in the firſt Tome of the Phyſica electiva ſive hypothetica (whereof an Extract is to be found in the Journal of Leipſick 1697. pag. 4..&

(d) Obſerve, that according to Mr. Leibniz, what is active in every ſubſtance, ought to be reduced to a true Unity. Since therefore the Body of every Man is compoſed of many Subſtances, each of them ought to have a Principle of action really diſtinct from the Principle of each of the others. He will have the action of every Principle to be ſpontaneous. Now this muſt needs vary their effects, ad infinitum, and confound them. For the impreſſion of the neighbouring Bodies muſt needs put ſome conſtraint upon the natural ſpontaneity of every one of them.

(e) Quidquid, recipitur, ad modum recipientis recipitur.

(f) Mr. Locke for inſtance.

(g) Mr. Leibniz uſes this expreſſion ubi ſupra, pag. 338. The Soul, ſays he, is a moſt exact immaterial Automaton.

Natural and neceſſary Conſequence of a Paſſage of the firſt Edition of this Article. I hope they will occaſion the clearing of a Subject, which is not leſs difficult than important.

ROSE

compare it with an Atome of Epicurus; I mean an Atome ſurrounded with a Vacuum on all ſides, and which would never meet any other Atome. This is a very juſt Compariſon, for this Atome on the one hand, has a natural Power of moving it ſelf, and exerts it without any aſſiſtance, and without being retarded or hindred by any thing; and on the other hand, the Soul of Cæſar is a Spirit, which has receiv'd the Faculty of producing Thoughts, and exerts it without the influence of any other Spirit, or of any Body. It is neither aſſiſted nor thwarted by any thing whatſoever. If you conſult common Notions, and the Ideas of Order, you will find that this Atome can never ſtop, and that having been in motion in the fore-going moment, it will continue in it at this very moment, and in all the moments that ſhall follow it, and that it will always move in the ſame manner. This is the conſequence of an Axiom approved by M. Leibniz: Since (a) a thing does always remain in the ſame ſtate wherein it happens to be, unleſs it receives ſome alteration from ſome other thing; (b)——— I conclude, ſays he, not only that a Body which is at reſt, will always be at reſt; but alſo that a Body in motion, will always keep that motion or change, that is, the ſame ſwiftneſs, and the ſame direction, if nothing happens that hinders it. Every one clearly ſees that this Atome, whether it moves by an innate Power, as Democritus and Epicurus would have it, or by a power receiv'd from God, will always move in the ſame Line equally, and after an uniform manner, without ever turning aſide, or going back. Epicurus was laugh'd at, when he invented the motion of declination; it was a precarious Suppoſition which he wanted to get out of the Labyrinth of a fatal neceſſity, and he could give no reaſon for this new part of his Syſtem. It was inconſiſtent with the cleareſt Notions of our Minds; for 'tis evident that an Atome, which deſcribes a ſtrait Line for the ſpace of two days, cannot turn away at the beginning of the third, unleſs it meets with ſome Obſtacle, or has a mind, all of a ſudden, to go out of its Road, or contains ſome Spring which begins to play at that very moment. The firſt of theſe Reaſons cannot be admitted in a Vacuum. The Second is impoſſible, ſince an Atome has not the Faculty of Thinking. And the Third is likewiſe impoſſible in a Corpuſcle that is a perfect unity. I muſt make ſome uſe of all this.

VI. Cæſar's Soul is a Being to which Unity belongs in a ſtrict Senſe. The Faculty of (c) producing Thoughts is a Property of its Nature, which it has receiv'd from God. If the firſt Thought it produces is a Senſe of Pleaſure, there's no reaſon why the Second ſhould not be likewiſe a Senſe of Pleaſure; for when the total cauſe of an effect remains the ſame, the effect cannot be altered. Now this Soul at the ſecond moment of its exiſtence, does not receive a new Faculty of thinking; it only preſerves the Faculty it had at the firſt moment, and it is as independent from the concourſe of any other cauſe at the ſecond moment as it was at the firſt; it muſt therefore produce again at the ſecond moment the ſame Thought it had produced juſt before. If it be objected that it ought to be in a ſtate of change, and that it would not be in ſuch a ſtate, in the caſe that I have ſuppoſed; I anſwer that its change will be like the change of the Atome: For an Atome, which continually moves in the ſame line, acquires a new ſituation at every moment; but it is like the preceding ſituation. A Soul may therefore continue in its ſtate of change, if it does but produce a new Thought like the preceding. But ſuppoſe it be not confined within ſuch narrow bounds, it muſt be granted at leaſt, that its going from one Thought to another implies ſome reaſon of affinity. If I ſuppoſe that in a certain Inſtant the Soul of Cæſar ſees a Tree with Leaves and Bloſſoms, I can (d) conceive that it does immediately deſire to ſee one that has only Bloſſoms, and then one that has only Leaves; and that it will thus ſucceſſively produce ſeveral Images ariſing from one another; but one cannot apprehend the poſſibility of the odd changes of Thoughts, that have no affinity with, and are even contrary to one another, and which are ſo common in Mens Souls: One cannot apprehend how God could place in the Soul of Julius Cæſar the Principle of what I am going to ſay. He was without doubt pricked with a Pin more than once, when he was ſucking; and therefore according to Mr. Leibniz's Hypotheſis, his Soul muſt have produced in it ſelf, a Senſe of Pain after the pleaſant ſenſations of the ſweetneſs of the Milk, which it had enjoy'd for the ſpace of two or three Minutes. By what Springs was it determin'd to interrupt its Pleaſures, and to give it ſelf all of a ſudden a ſenſe of Pain, without receiving any intimation of preparing it ſelf for ſuch a Change, and without any new alteration in its Subſtance? If you run over the Life of that Roman Emperor, every Page will afford you Matter for a ſtronger Objection than this is.

VII. The thing would be leſs incomprehenſible, if it were ſuppoſed that the Soul of Man is not one Spirit, but rather a Multitude of Spirits, each of which has its Functions, that begin and end preciſely as the changes made in a Human Body require it. By virtue of this Suppoſition it ſhould be ſaid, that ſomething analogous to a great number of Wheels and Springs, or of matters that ferment, diſpos'd according to the changes of our Machine, awakens or lulls aſleep for a certain time, the action of each of thoſe Spirits; but then the Soul of Man would be no longer a ſingle Subſtance, but an Ens per aggregationem, a heap of Subſtances juſt like material Beings. We are about a ſingle Being, which produces in it ſelf ſometimes Joy, ſometimes Pain, &c. and not about many Beings, one of which produces Hope, another Deſpair, &c.

In theſe Obſervations I have only cleared and unfolded thoſe, which Mr. Leibniz has done me the Honour to examin; and now I ſhall make ſome Reflections upon his Anſwers.

VIII. He ſays, that (e) The Law of the Change which happens in the Subſtance of an Animal tranſports him from pleaſure to pain, at the very moment that a Solution of continuity is made in his Body; becauſe the Law of the indiviſible Subſtance of that Animal, is to repreſent what is done in his Body, as we experience it, and even to repreſent in ſome manner, and with reſpect to that Body, whatever is done in the World. Theſe words are a very good Explication of the grounds of this Syſtem, they are, as it were, the Key, and unfolding of it; but at the ſame time they are the very things at which all the Objections of thoſe, who take this Syſtem to be impoſſible, are levelled. The Law Mr. Leibniz ſpeaks of, ſuppoſes a Decree of God, and ſhews wherein this Syſtem agrees with that of Occaſional Cauſes. Thoſe two Syſtems agree in this point, that there are ſome Laws, according to which the Soul of Man is to repreſent what is done in the Body of Man, as we experience it. But they diſagree as to the manner of executing thoſe Laws: The Carteſians ſay, that God executes them: Mr. Leibniz will have it, that the Soul does it; which appears to me impoſſible, becauſe the Soul has not the neceſſary Inſtruments for ſuch an Execution. Now tho' the Power and Knowledge of God be Infinite, he cannot perform with a Machine deprived of a certain piece, what requires the concourſe of ſuch a piece. He muſt ſupply that Defect; but then this Effect would be produced by him and not by the Machine. I ſhall ſhew that the Soul has not the Inſtruments requiſite for the Execution of the Divine Law, we ſpeak of, and in order to it I ſhall make uſe of a Compariſon.

Fancy to your ſelf an Animal Created by God, and deſign'd to Sing Continually. He will doubtleſs Sing at all times; but if God will have him to Sing a certain Set of Tunes, he muſt neceſſarily put it before his Eyes, or Imprint it upon his Memory, or diſpoſe his Muſcles in ſuch a manner, that according to the Laws of Mechaniſm, a certain Tune will always come after another, agreeably to the Order of the Tablature. Without this one cannot apprehend that this Animal can ever follow the whole Set of the Notes appointed by God. Let us apply this to Man's Soul. M. Leibniz will have it, that it has received not only the Power of producing a continual Series of Thoughts, but alſo the Faculty of following always a certain Set of Thoughts, which anſwers the continual Changes that happen in the Body. This Set of Thoughts is like the Set of Notes preſcribed to the Singing Animal above mention'd. Can the Soul Change its Perceptions or Modifications at every Moment, according to ſuch a Set of Thoughts, without

(a) Memorial inſerted in the Hiſtoire des Ouvrages des Savans ubi ſupra pag. 331

(b) Mr. Leibniz, ibid. declares that he acknowledges the truth of this Axiom; nay, ſays he, I maintain that it is favourable to me, and indeed it is one of the things I build upon.

(c) This I ſay, according to Mr. Leibniz's Syſtem.

(d) I ſpeak thus by way of conceſſion; That is to ſay, I will not take advantage of the Reaſons which hinder us from conceiving that a created Spirit can of himſelf frame any Ideas.

ROSE (William) Preacher to Henry III. and Bishop of Senlis, the most violent Leaguer that was in France. See the Notes upon the Catholicon d'Espagne *; to which you may add this Circumstance, that he refused to pull off his Episcopal Habits, when the Parliament of Paris condemned him to make an Honourable Amand; and that he made it in his Pontificalibus the 5th of December 1598 †. Mr. de Launoi is very much to blame for having bestowed α so many Encomiums upon that Prelate, without censuring him in the least. 'Tis a scandalous thing.

ROSES, a Town of Catalonia. It was only an Abbey β, when Charles V. built there a Town and a Fortress, Thirty five Toises from the Sea, in an open Country. That Town has the Mediterranean Sea on the South, the Plain of Lampurdan and a Pond on the West, and the Pyrenees on the East and North. It is fortify'd with five Bastions lin'd with Free-stone. It remain'd faithful to the King of Spain, when all Catalonia revolted to France in the Year 1640. Du Plessis-Pralin laid siege to it in 1645, and took it 57 Days after the opening of the Trenches; for which he was made Marechal of France. The Spaniards having almost recover'd all Catalonia during the Civil War of France, could not for all that re-take Roses. They kept it Block'd up Nine Months, and reduc'd the Garrison to an Extreme Famine; but they retir'd upon the approach of the French Succours. This happen'd in 1653. Roses was restored to 'em by the Pyrenean Treaty, in 1659, and they lost it (Z) in the Year 1693. The Bay of Roses is above four Leagues in compass, and begins at the end of the Pyrenean Mountains, at the Castle of the Trinity, and ends much about the little Town of Empurias. It has no Ports, being only a shallow Road which neither Ships nor Gallies can come to for want of Water. But between the Castle of the Trinity and the Town, there is a small Hollow, where great Ships may stay for some time upon a Necessity. A League and a half beyond the Castle, as one goes towards Roussillon and out of the Bay, there is a γ Burrough call'd Capdequiers, which depends upon the Government of Roses, and has a pretty good Harbour δ.

ROSIER. ε(Hugh Sureau du) in Latin, Hugo Sureus || Rosarius, was a famous Minister of the Church of Orleans, under the Reign of Charles IX. He was Born † Rosoy in Tierache, in the Province of Picardy. He was imprison'd at Orleans, in the Year 1566, being suspected (A) of having Publish'd a Book full of Seditious Maxims. But he out knowing the Series of the Notes, and actually thinking upon them? But experience teaches us, that it knows nothing of it. It were at least necessary, that in default of such a Knowledge, there should be in the Soul a Set of particular Instruments, each of which would be a necessary cause of a certain Thought. They should be so placed and disposed as to operate precisely one after another, according to the Correspondence pre-establish'd betwixt the Changes of the Body and the Thoughts of the Soul. But it is most certain, that an immaterial, simple, and indivisible Substance, cannot be made up of such an innumerable multitude of particular Instruments placed one before another, according to the Order of the Tablature in question. It is not therefore possible that a Human Soul should execute that Law.

M. Leibniz (a) supposes that the Soul does not distinctly know its future perceptions, but that it perceives them confusedly, and that there are in each Substance (b) Tracks of whatever happens, and shall happen to it; but that infinite Multitude of Perceptions hinders us from distinguishing them——The present state of each Substance, is a natural consequence of its preceding State ——— (c) The Soul, tho' never so simple, has always a Sentiment composed of many Perceptions at one time; which answers our end as well as if it was composed of pieces, like a Machine. For each fore-going perception has an influence upon those that follow, agreeably to a Law of Order, which is in Perceptions as well as in Motions—— (d) The Perceptions that are to be found together in one and the same Soul at the same time, including an infinite multitude of little undistinguishable Sentiments that are to be unfolded, we need not wonder at the infinite variety of what is to result from it in time. This is only a consequence of the representative nature of the Soul, which is to express what happens, and what will happen in its Body, and in some manner in all other Bodies, by the Connexion and Correspondence of all the parts of the World. I have but little to say in answer to this: I shall only observe, that this Supposition, if it be clear'd, is the right way of resolving all the Difficulties. M. Leibniz, thro' the penetration of his great Genius, has very well conceiv'd the whole extent and strength of the Objection, and what remedy ought to be applied to the main Inconveniency. I don't question but that he will smooth the rough part of his System, and teach us some excellent things about the Nature of Spirits. No body can travel more usefully than he in the intelligible World. I hope that his Explanations will remove all the Impossibilities, which I have found hitherto in his System, and that he will solidly resolve my Difficulties, and even those (e) of Father Lami; and these Hopes made me say before, without designing to pass a Compliment upon that Learned Man, that his System ought to be look'd upon as an important Conquest.

Here is a Difficulty which he will doubtless remove: Whereas according to the Supposition of the Cartesians, there is but one general Law for the Union of all Spirits with Bodies; he will have it, That God gives a particular Law to each Spirit: From whence it seems (f) to result, that the Primitive Constitution of each Spirit is specifically different from all others. Don't the Thomists say, That there are as many Species as Individuums in the Angelical nature?

(Z) And they lost it in the Year 1693.] The Marechal and Duke of Noailles Besieg'd it about the latter end of May, and oblig'd the Governor Don Pedro Robi to Capitulate the 9th of June. The Castle of the Trinity, at the Entrance of the Bay of Roses, and within Cannon shot of the Place, was taken four Days after.

(A) Being suspected of having Publish'd a Book full of Seditious Maxims.] Beza gives an Account of that Libel. "(g) At that (h) time, says he, there "came out a Book printed under-hand at Lyons, "without the Name of the Author, and Printer, "and Intitul'd, La Defense Civile & Militaire des "Innocens, & de l'Eglise de Christ, written without "doubt by a Wicked and Seditious Person. The "said Book falling into the Hands of some Honest "Men, all means were used to know from whence "it came, but it was in vain. Only there was a "strong suspicion, that Charles du Moulin, a famous Civilian, and Advocate of the Parliament "of Paris, who was then at Lyons, and had sided "with the Protestants from the time of King Henry, was the Author of it; having always be"fore, and ever since appear'd a very fantastical "Man. But he denied it with great Oaths, right or "wrong. Lyons was then in the Hands of the Protestants: Soubise who commanded in it, enjoined the Ministers to examin that Book, and they gave their Judgment about it in the following Words. "(i) We, Ministers of the Word of God, in the "Reformed Church of Lyons—— having invoked "the Name of God, and seen a certain Book lately Printed, and Intituled, La Defense Civile &

---

* [illegible] upon the Catholicon d'Espagne, pag. [illegible] & seqq. edit. 1696. See also pag. 67.

† Thuanus, [illegible] pag. [illegible]

α Launoi in Histor. Collegii Navarr. pag. 1019. & seq.

β Baudrand in Rhoda.

γ It was formerly a strong Place.

δ Taken from a Relation of the Siege of Roses Publish'd in 1693.

ε Some call him des Rosiers.

|| Thuanus says Sorellus, Roserius lib. 34. p. 687. & Sorellus Rosarius, lib. 52. pag. 1088.

† La Croix du Maine, pag. 173.

(a) Ibid. pag. 337.

(b) This is [illegible]

(c) Ibid. pag. 339.

(d) Ibid. pag. 340.

(e) They are in the 2d Discourse of Self-knowledge, from pag. 225. to pag. 243. Paris Edit. 1699.

(f) There never were two Men, who had the same Thoughts, I will not say a Months together, but even two Minutes. The Principle of Thought must therefore have a particular Rule and Nature in every Man.

(g) Beza, Histoire Ecclesiast. Book 11. pag. 244.

(h) That is in the year 1563.

(i) Beza Ibid.

he was set at liberty, because they could not Convict him of it. He and another Minister

" Militaire des Hommes & de l'Eglise de Christ, do " arrest and certifie, That it is full of a false and " wicked Doctrine, being in some points the same " with that of the Anabaptists, and inducing Men " to sedition and Rebellion, and to disobey Kings " and Princes against the express Command of God; " so much the more, because the Author of it makes " an ill use of many Passages and Examples of the " Holy Scripture, which he wrongfully applies to " his Opinions, against their true Sense and meaning, " as we are ready to make it appear by the Word " of God. For which reason we desire that the said " Book be wholly supprest, that Men may not be " infected with such a Seditious and Pestilential " Doctrine. Pursuant to this Censure, Sorbise order'd (a) That all those who had this Book, should bring it to him within 24 Hours, and that all those who should sell it, or hand it about, should be hanged without any Tryal; and he had it burnt by (b) the common Hang-man in the four principal places of the Town, the 12th of June, 1563. (c) Thus things went as to this Book, Says Beza: " And several Years " after, du Rosier, a Minister of Orleans, who was " not then at Lyons but at Orleans, and knew no " more what was done at Lyons than what passed in " the Indies, was accus'd of being the Author of it. " And accordingly he was Arrested, and sent Prisoner " to Paris with great noise, as if the Protestants " approv'd that Doctrine. But God would " have it that the Truth should quickly come out, " tho' du Rosier had powerful Enemies, particularly " Birague, who some Years after was undeservedly " made Governor of Lyons. Thuanus mentions in a few Words, the Proceedings relating to this Book; but he observes (d) that it was fallly ascrib'd to the Civilian, Charles du Moulin. Deckherus has misrepresented the Title of that Book. Eodem, (superiori seculo) says he, (e) non expresso Authoris nomine vulgatus libellus de potestate principis Lugduni combustus, &c. One of those who Publish'd some Animadversions upon Deckerrus, express'd himself in a doubtful manner upon occasion of those Words; which he should not have done: He was uncertain whether that Book was different from that which was Printed at Paris in 1589, with this Title, Traité de la puissance des Rois contre le Roy de Navarre. Had he known that du Moulin had been (f) dead long before the Right of the King of Navarre came to be spoken of, he would have said positively, that those two Books were very different one from another: Here is a non liquet, which is not much to his Honour. (g) An vero iste tractatus idem sit de quo Cl. Deckherus pag. 338. loquitur tanquam Lugduni combusto, & falso adscripto Carolo Molinaeo J. C. sed quem alii tribuunt Hugoni Sorello Roserio, non mihi liquet.

I must take notice of some Faults of Davila. He says, that in the Year 1566, a Minister Born at Orleans, preach'd a Seditious Sermon, after he had Publish'd a Book wherein he maintain'd that the French ought to obey the King no longer, and might lawfully Kill him, since he was an Idolatrous Prince. (h) Nè erano meno ardite le penne de gli Ugonotti di quello, che si fossero l'armi, perche in questo medesimo tempo un Ministro, nativo di Orliens, andava seditiosamente predicando contro alla podestà del Re, & havea anco stampato un libro, nel quale sosteneva, che il popolo Francese non era piu in obligo d'obbedire al Re, per esser egli diventato idolatra, & per questa ragione contendeva ancora, che si potesse lecitamente ammazzare; dalla quale empia, e diabolica semente è poi successivamente derivata in altri tempi, & in altre persone, quella pestifera dottrina, che con horribile perversione d'ogni legge divina, & humana ha insegnato a gli huomini ad insanguinarsi le mani sotto pretesto di pietà, e di religione, nelle viscere de i Re legitimi, constituiti sopra gli huomini per rappresentanti di Dio. 'Tis plain he means the Minister du Rosier, who was imprison'd that Year, under pretence of a Seditious Libel. But 1. That Minister was not a Native of Orleans. 2. He did not preach against the King's Power; for if his Sermons had been Seditious, it had been no difficult thing to Convict him of Rebellion. Birague his Enemy, who caus'd him to be imprison'd, as being the Author of a Libel, would not have been cast for want of Proofs: Had he had none as to the Book, the Sermons would have afforded him some, which had been sufficient to Prosecute him. And therefore since that Minister was set at liberty, 'tis manifest his sermons were not such as Davila represents them to be. I cannot believe that the Book, which was burnt at Lyons, taught that the killing of Kings was a lawful thing: Had it contain'd such an execrable Doctrine, the Ministers who censur'd it, would have thundered more terribly against it than they did. I confess that la Croix du Maine, a Protestant Author, says, That du Rosier writ a French Book amongst others, (i) wherein he endeavours to shew that it is lawful to kill a King and a Queen, who will not imbrace the Reformed Religion, and side with the Protestants: But I believe he said this without having read the Libel, that was Burnt by Soubise's Order, and if I am not mistaken, he goes only upon the credit of the Authors quoted by him. See, says he, The French History of our time of the last edition enlarged by John le Frere de Leval, and Belleforest in the 2d Volume of his great Annals of France, fol. 16.., 1563, &c. Varillas, who certainly would not have extenuated the Heinousness of that Libel, speaks of it as of a Book levell'd at the Monarchical Authority. But there is a vast difference between this and teaching that Kings may be lawfully murdered. I must set down the whole Passage of that Historian. " (k) Soubise, before his Departure (l), caused a Seditious " Book lately come out, to be Burnt by the " Hang man. The Calvinists ascrib'd it to the famous " Civilian Charles du Moulin; which they did " probably out of spite against him, because he was " the only French-man, who adhered to the Lutheran " Sect, and refused to join with them: for du " Moulin's Style and Character did not appear in that " Book. It was, properly speaking, a Satyr against " all Christian Monarchies, which he pretended to " overthrow by several Passages of the Holy Scripture " curtail'd or wrested to another Sense. The " Catholick Writers say that it was written by a Calvinist " Minister; that it was not their first Attempt " of that kind against the Authority of Kings; " and that three Years before in 1560, they held a " Synod at Chalons upon Saone, wherein they declared " that the equality of Conditions was the " most certain Privilege of the Gospel-Liberty purchased " by the Blood of Christ. But that Synod is " not to be found in the Collection (m) of the Twenty " six first Synods held in France by the pretended " Reformed. There is nothing to be seen about it " any where, except in the Writings of their Adversaries; " besides, 'tis not likely that their Ministers " should have taken upon themselves, without " consulting Calvin, to lay down, as the Foundation " of their Religion, a Paradox so well Confuted in " Aristotle's Morals, and so dangerous, that it tended " to the Destruction not only of Calvinism, but also " of all Civil Societies. This Passage does not contain many things that the French Protestants can complain of; on the contrary they may praise the Equity of that Author, who justifies 'em very well. But his Marginal Note has been a Snare to some Learned Men. Their Fault, tho' very excusable, is of great Moment. I call it an excusable Fault; because a French Reader will be apt to take that Note in the same sense that was put upon it in the Acta Eruditorum, unless he uses great attention. Any one that reads that Marginal Note of Varillas, will presently think that he saw among the Manuscripts of Lomenie the Acts of the Synod, which the Protestants have not inserted in the Collection of their 26 first Synods. The Learned Authors of the Acta Eruditorum understood it so. This Sense does a great deal of Wrong to the Reformed: For were it true that there is in the Collection of their Synods, among the Manuscripts of Lomenie, a Synod held in 1560, which declar'd for the equality of Conditions; One would be apt to believe that they made a Decision about it in the Year 1560. which afterwards they thought fit to suppress with all the Acts of that Assembly. It is therefore expedient that every Body should know that the Word it in the Marginal Note refers to the word Collection, and not to the word Synod. Varillas means that he has seen among the Collections of Lomenie, the Collection of the 26 First Synods held by the French Protestants, and that he has not found in it the Synod of the Year 1560, which declared, as 'tis said, That Men ought to be all equal. The

Authors

(a) Ibid. pag. 245.

(b) Id. ibid. pag. 246.

(c) Id. ib.

(d) Quem nonnulli, sed falso, Carolo Molinaeo J. C. alii Hugoni Sorello Roserio tribuebant. Thuan. lib. 31. p. 68. ad an. 1563.

(e) Deckher. de scriptis adespotis, pag. 338.

(f) He died in the year 1566.

(g) Petrus Baelius, epistola ad Almeloveenium de scriptis adespotis ad calcem tractatus Deckherri pag. 371. edit. 1686.

(h) Davila, delle guerre civili di Francia, lib. 4. pag. m. 160. ad ann. 1566.

Miniſter diſputed in the ſame (B) Year with two Doctors of Divinity, of the Faculty of Paris, in the Houſe of the Duke of Nevers, at the inſtance of the Duke of Montpenſier, who was in hopes that this Diſpute would bring back the Dutcheſs of Bouillon his Daughter to the Catholick Church; but he was baulk'd in his Expectation. Du ‡ Roſier redeem'd his Life during the Paris Maſſacre, by Abjuring his Religion; and being immediately made uſe of to Exhort the King of Navarre, the Prince of Condé, &c. to imbrace the Roman Communion, and having had all the Succeſs that the Court of France could wiſh for, he was thought a very fit Man to make a Converter of him. He was therefore Imployed as ſuch in ſeveral Places of Paris, and the Court was ſo well pleaſed with the Progreſs he made, that he was ſent with the Jeſuit Maldonat to Metz, where there was a Plentiful Harveſt. He harangued and (C) exclaim'd againſt the Schiſm, but he was not perſuaded of the Truth of what he ſaid: For ſome Miniſters having found an Opportunity to ſpeak to him in Private, and to make him ſenſible of the Heinouſneſs of his Fault, he ſeem'd to be well diſpoſed to Mend it, and accordingly he left Maldonat, and retired to Heidelberg, where he Profeſt himſelf a Proteſtant again. He could never recover the Eſteem he had been in before he changed his Religion; and he would have been not only very much Deſpiſed, but alſo reduced

‡ This may be ſeen in Thuanus l. 52. pag. 1088.

Authors of the Acta Eruditorum make him ſay the quite Contrary. (1) Ex Manuſcriptis Lomenianis decretum Synodi à Reformatis Catalauni (i) habitæ allegat, quo contra regiam poteſtatem ſtatuerint, æqualitatem conditionis humanæ inter potiſſima privilegia libertatis Evangelicæ eſſe, quam Chriſtus ſuo ſanguine veris Chriſtianis promeruerit.

(B) Diſputed——with two Doctors of Divinity.] The Duke of Montpenſier was of Opinion that the Dutcheſs of Bouillon would Renounce Calviniſm, if ſhe was willing to hear Dr. Vigor: Nay, he conſented that the Miniſter Spina ſhould be preſent at it. In order to pleaſe him the Duke of Bouillon and Admiral Coligni agreed upon a Conference, which was to be held in his Houſe the 1ſt of July, 1566. Spina and Barbaſte, Miniſter of the Queen of Navarre, came thither on the appointed Day. They were ask'd, whether they intended to Pray according to the Cuſtom of the Reformed Churches, before they ſhould begin the Conference: They anſwered that they were reſolved upon it, and becauſe they perſiſted in that Reſolution, the whole Project was broke; and they went away having Rejected all the Expedients that were Propoſed, to prevail upon them not to make any Prayer. Dr. Ruzé told 'em that if they intended to Pray, he would go out and make Water in the mean time. He Propoſed to them to make only a mental Prayer, or to go and Pray in a Neighbouring Houſe. All theſe Propoſals were Rejected, and ſo there was no Conference (d). People did not fail to ſay that they had declined the Diſpute: The Admiral maintain'd the contrary before the King and Queen, and that they would be ready at all times to meet the Doctors, and to defend the Confeſſion of their Churches by the Scripture. Whereupon the Duke of Nevers begg'd of their Majeſties that the Conference might be renew'd. The Conditions were agreed upon: Dr. Vigor and Dr. de Sainctes on the one ſide, and the Miniſters Spina and Sureau on the other began the Diſpute in his Houſe the 9th of July, 1566. and went on with it for ſeveral Days. Some Hiſtorians affirm that Hugh (a) Sorel was then put out of Priſon: Mezeray (b) and Varillas ſay ſo: Theſe are the Words of the latter. (c) The Duke of Montpenſier was of Opinion, that the beſt way to bring back again the Dutcheſs of Bouillon his Daughter to the Communion of the Catholick Church, "was a Publick Conference of two Doctors with two Miniſters; and it began at Paris in Nevers-Houſe. The Doctors were Simon Vigor, afterwards Arch-Biſhop of Narbonne, and Claudius de Sainctes, afterwards Biſhop of Evreux. The two Miniſters appointed for that Diſpute were John de l'Eſpine, whom I have already mention'd, and Charles Barbaſte, who had been a Carmelite: But Barbaſte being not in a Condition to come to the Conference, the Calviniſts took from thence occaſion to demand that Hugh Sorel des Roſiers ſhould be put in his place. Des Roſiers was a Miniſter, who had been Impriſon'd for Writing a Libel concerning the Authority of Magiſtrates, wherein he pretended that it was a lawful thing to deſtroy a Sovereign of a Contrary Religion. He deſerved at leaſt to be Condemn'd to a perpetual Impriſonment for ſuch a Crime; but he obtained his Pardon by the Sollicitations of thoſe of his Party, and by the Credit of the Duke of Montpenſier. It was thought Expedient that the Dutcheſs of Bouillon ſhould have no occaſion to complain, under pretence that ſhe could not have the two Miniſters, whom ſhe took to be the beſt Diſputants; and the Diſputation (2) was managed without any Heat, out of reſpect to the Illuſtrious Perſons that were preſent at it. But notwithſtanding this Moderation the Catholicks and the Calviniſts gave out that they had the Advantage. Nor did the Event clear the truth of the Matter; for if on the one ſide &c. It ſeems from the Printed Account of the Miniſters, that du Roſier had been ſet at Liberty, before there was a talk of making him one of the Diſputants. For when they heard that Vigor was Sick, and that Sainctes was gone from Paris, they were afraid that the Conferences being interrupted would remain ſo too long; and therefore they deſired to go Home, and repreſented (d) that they happen'd to be at Paris only accidentally; that Spina was come thither to go into Anjou; and that the other, who was Miniſter of the Church of Orleans, had been lately put out of Priſon, having been carried to Paris laſt June, upon a falſe Accuſation of the Enemies of God's Church, who charged him with being the Author of a Wicked and Pernicious Book, Written againſt the Obedience that is due to Kings and Princes; and that therefore it was a great Inconveniency for him to make a long ſtay in a Town whither he was come againſt his Will. Claudius de Sainctes got (e) that diſpute Printed.

(2) It has been Printed.

(d) Actes de la conference, pag. 325.

(e) In the Year 1568. according to all the Bibliographers that I have conſulted. There is no likelihood that it is the firſt Edition: The relation of the Miniſters had appeared two Years before.

(C) He harangued and exclaim'd againſt the Schiſm, but] Beza in his Hiſtory of the Reformed Churches of France, gives an account of it in the following Words. The Marechal de Rets Governour of the Country call'd Meſſin, "(f) tried another way, and ſent for du Roſier, a Miniſter who had changed his Religion, and who was attended by a Spaniſh Jeſuit, whoſe Name was Maldonat: This Jeſuit was accounted the moſt Learned and the moſt Subtil Man of his Order. As for du Roſier, he had done at Paris all that he could do to pervert others, ſo far as to Print his Abjuration, and other Books full of Falſities, and which ſhewed an Ill Conſcience; whereas before, he had the Reputation of a Learned Man, as he really was, and had been choſen to Diſpute at Paris with Dr. Vigor and Dr. de Saintes. When that Man changed his Religion, it proved a great Scandal to many People: He endeavoured afterwards to mend the buſineſs as well as he could; but he never had ever ſince a ſound Judgment, nor an upright Conſcience, and at laſt he Died of the Plague at Francfort, with his Wife and all his Children. But to return to our Hiſtory, thoſe two Men being come to Metz, and moſt of the Proteſtants being compell'd to repair to the Biſhop's Palace upon a Sunday, du Roſier made a long Speech to them about the Succeſſion of Biſhops, which he ſaid was the mark of the True Church. Beza adds, (g) that du Roſier being convinced of his Fault in his own Conſcience, and adviſed by good People to mend his Condition, deſired ſome help to get out of the Mire; which was granted him, and that Poor Wretch was conducted to the Church of Heidelberg, where he acknowledged his Faults, and Publiſhed a ſmall Treatiſe contrary to thoſe he had Printed at Paris. Now, let us ſee what a Slandering Miniſter, who changed his Religion, ſays of him. "(h) They were very much afraid that du Roſier would too much inſiſt upon that (i) Point:

(f) Beza, hiſt. Eccleſiaſt. Book 16. *p.*475.

(g) Id. ib.

(h) That is, the Miniſters of Sedan.

(i) That which concerned the Vocation of the Miniſters.

ced to great Neceſſity, had he not found a place of Corrector * in Andrew Wechel's Printing-Houſe at Francfort. He died of the Plague (D) in that Town with his whole Family. When he took a Journey to Metz, † he was deſired to go to Sedan, to convert the ſame Dutcheſs of Bouillon, who had occaſion'd his Conference with two Catholick Doctors; but he could not prevail upon that Lady. I ſhall ſpeak of (E) his Writings.

He is ſaid to have been a Man of a wrangling Humour, and Fond of particular Opinions, and he ſowed (F) Seeds of Diſcord in the Church of Orleans, by keeping Correſpondence with ſome Fanaticks; ſo that it was to be feared that the French Churches would have been ſadly Divided, if the Peace had been of any continuance, and if the Maſſacre had not prevented a Schiſm.

ROTAN (John Baptiſt) Miniſter of Rochelle, was very much Eſteem'd for his Parts and Learning; but he was ſuſpected of having (A) Betrayed his Party, by countenancing Henry IV. in his deſign of turning Catholick. 'Tis ſaid that he promiſed

"And therefore ſome Perſons of Sedan went to him "at a place call'd Chemery, and made him believe "(for he was a Timorous, Inconſtant, and Credulous Man) that if he return'd to Paris with Maldonat, he would certainly be put to Death, and "that the Duke of Bouillon had been informed of it; "which was Falſe. Moreover, they told him that "Maldonat had given a hint of it, ſaying that he "had ſtill ſomething of a Heretick; and they pre"vailed ſo far upon him, that he left that Jeſuit "without taking his leave of him, and retired into "Germany. They ſupplied him with Money for his "Journey, and afterward they made ſeveral Gathe"rings for him, which amounted to above 250 "Livres (k). I remember, ſays he, in another "Book," (l) That it was the firſt Crime they charged "du Roſier with, when he ſeem'd to have a mind to "ſeparate from them, and to return into the Pale "of the Catholick Church. But when they ſaw "that this and ſome other common Faults, as his "being a Mumper, a Liar, and a Man of no Reſo"lution, were not ſufficient to run him down; ſome "of 'em went about to caſt a Blemiſh upon his "Wife's Chaſtity, giving out that ſhe had proſtitu"ted herſelf to ſome Canons of Orleans: A thing "not to be credited for the Reaſon, which I had ra"ther leave to the conſideration of thoſe, who have "ſeen and known her, than Publiſh them in "Print.

(D) He died of the Plague] We have already ſeen it in a Paſſage of Beza, and Philip Lonicerus ſays it likewiſe. (m) Ex improviſo ſiquidem anno ſuperiori, in ipſis Vindemiis, peſte Rempublicam noſtram tunc infeſtante, ex hac vita, non ſine magno doctorum virorum, quibus ille notus erat, tuoque cum primis dolore, ex hac miſera vita, una cum uxore ſua, in cœleſtem illam avocatus eſt. Thus he ſpeaks to John Fichard Syndic of the City of Francfort, in an Epiſtle Dedicatory prefixed to a Poſthumous piece of our Sureau, viz. the Latin Tranſlation of a Book (n) of John Corras. If Lonicerus had dated that Epiſtle, we might know in what Year du Roſier died. The Year of my Edition, which is 1588, is of no uſe to me. It is certain that this Miniſter did not die the Year before: He was already dead when Beza Publiſh'd his Hiſtory of the Reformed Churches of France in 1580. Here follows another Paſſage of Lonicerus, wherein du Roſier is very much Praiſed. (o) Quæ ſit humanarum rerum fragilitas, Fichardé clariſſime, ſuperiore anno præmatura ſua morte, etiam noſter ille Hugo Surœus, non ſine doctiſſimorum virorum ſuſpiriis, teſtatus eſt. Qui cum laudatiſſimæ Andreæ Wecheli, viri optimi & humaniſſimi, Typographiæ ſtrenuam navaret operam, talem ſua induſtria, quam excelsâ, non ſolum Latinæ & Græcæ, verum etiam Hebraicæ atque Chaldaicæ linguæ notitia ornabat, laudem conſequutus eſt, ut omnibus bonis & doctis viris eſſet gratiſſimus.

I find in the Epitome of Geſner's Bibliotheca, (p) that the Latin Tranſlation of Corras's Book was Printed at Francfort in 1579. apud Andream Wechelum. If it be the firſt Edition, it muſt be ſaid that du Roſier died in the Autumn of the Year 1578. The Author of the Notes upon the Confeſſion de Sancy (q) places his Death in the Year 1575.

(E) I ſhall ſpeak of his Writings.] He Publiſh'd ſeveral Books in French, if we may believe la Croix du Maine (r), who mention but two of 'em, viz. that which concerns the killing of Kings, and a Treatiſe concerning his Confeſſion of Faith, with an Abjuration of his Huguenotiſm, &c. Printed at Paris in 1573. We have ſeen above that he Publiſh'd a piece about his return to the Reformed Church. He had Publiſh'd ſome Controverſial Books at Orleans, before the Paris Maſſacre, as it appears from the Annotations of Gentianus Hervetus mention'd (s) by la Croix du Maine. If Konig had ſaid that Hugo Sureau Tranſlated into Latin an Arreſt of the Parliament of Toulouſe, he would not be liable to Cenſure; but he made uſe of this Expreſſion, (t) edidit arreſtum Parlamenti Tholoſani in caſu admirabili matrimoniali An. 1588. Which contains two Faults. 1. It does not appear from it whether Sureau is the Tranſlator or the Author, or meerly the Publiſher of that Arreſt. 2. Sureau could not put out ſuch a Piece in the Year 1588, for he was then no longer Living. There is a vaſt number of ſuch Faults in the Bibliographers.

(F) He ſowed Seeds of Diſcord in the Church of Orleans.] The Author of the Memoirs Intitled, de Statu Religionis & Reipublicæ in regno Galliæ, which are aſcribed to John de Serres, gives the following Character of him. (u) Vir non ineruditus, (Rozarius) ſed fœdiſſimo lapſu oſtendens quid ſit infirmitas humana, & quam periculoſum etiam ſit, pacato tempore, dum nullo hoſte urgemur, indulgere inſanientis noſtræ rationis commentis, ut certam exploratamque veritatem ſempiternis principiorum firmamentis cœlo & terra firmiorem, in dubium pro arbitratu noſtro revocemus: quo curioſæ licentiæ morbo Rozarius laborabat, corrupto quodam more & ambitione de Eccleſiæ ſucceſſione, diſciplina, & de aliis etiam Religionis capitibus ſuperciliose diſputans, ſeque ſuis collegis hac in re excellentiorem importuno quodam ſtudio exiſtimans. Non obſcurarum enim turbarum ſemina in Eccleſia Aurelianæ inſeminarat, dum ſeſe cum novorum commentorum architectis, phanaticis ingeniis familiarius conjungeret: unde, niſi periculoſæ tranquillitatis incommoda, novo hoc remedii genere Deus præcidiſſet, magnæ & periculoſæ turbæ in Eccleſiis Gallicis erant haud dubie exundaturæ. Another Writer of that time has theſe Words: (x) "One du Roſier, a Miniſter, a Man of a ready "Wit, but Reſtleſs and Inconſtant, being made a "Priſoner about a Day's Journey from Paris, as he "was running away, began to waver and ſoon after "changed his Religion.

(A) He was ſuſpected of having Betrayed his Party] D'Aubigné ſays (y) that the Miniſter Rotan, a Piedmontois (z), a Profound Divine and a Subtil Philoſopher, had a mind to be a Courtier, and thought that the third Party, which was formed ſometime after the Death of Henry III. would open a Breach, thro' which he might come in to Buſineſs. He joyned with Morlas, who had the ſame Proſpect, and then both of 'em Concerted with du Perron how they might engage the King to turn Catholick. They were kindly treated by the Directors of the Finances, which occaſion'd the coming of others into their Faction. Rotan and Morlas diſputed about ſeveral points againſt du Perron in the King's preſence, and deſignedly yielded to him, who was a Man of prodigious Learning; ſo that ever ſince the Siege of Rouen he inſinuated himſelf into the King's Favour by his eaſy and charming Eloquence. ——Whereupon, each of 'em giving an opportunity to his Friend, they began to profeſs the change of Religion. Note that Rotan began to reliſh a Court Life, when he was there to follicit (a) the Payment of ſome Money, which he had lent, or rather cauſed to be lent by others, at Geneva, for the Troops raiſed by Sancy. This ſhews that he did not confine himſelf to the Functions of his Character, and that he medled with Political Affairs: and therefore 'tis leſs to be wondred at, that as ſoon as he was acquainted with the Court, he reſolved to raiſe himſelf, by preferring his Worldly Intereſts to his Religion. (b) He was deputed

* See the Remark D.

† See Thuanus ubi ſupra.

(k) Matthew de Launay, Declaration & Refutation des fauſſes ſuppoſitions, fol. 139.

(l) Defenſe de Matthieu de Launay contre les fauſſes accuſations, fol. 37.

(m) Phil. Lonicerus, epiſt. dedicat.

(n) The Arreſt of the Parliament of Toulouſe, againſt the pretended Martin Guerre; which Arreſt, Corras, who reported the cauſe, adorned with a large Commentary.

(o) 'Tis the beginning of the Epiſtle Dedicatory.

(p) Pag. m. 425.

(q) Pag. 470, 471. edit. 1699.

(r) La Croix du Maine, Biblioth. Françoiſe, pag. 173.

miſed to ſuffer himſelf to be worſted in a Diſpute with du Perron, in the preſence of that Prince, in the Year 1593; but the Remorſes of his Conſcience, or Vanity obliged him to pretend to be (B) Sick, that he might avoid entring the Liſts. It is farther ſaid, that he continued to be a Prevaricator all the reſt of his Life, and that he and de Serres (C) deſign'd to go about a Deceitful Project in a National Synod; but they died before that Synod was held. Rotan taught Divinity * at Rochelle, and Publiſh'd a Controverſial (D) Book, concerning the Euchariſt, and another † wherein he Confuted the Reaſons, which Cayet had alledged for his Converſion. There is ſome reaſon to believe that he had been (D △) Miniſter of the Church of Geneva. He had been admitted Doctor of Divinity at Heidelberg, in the Year 1573. Zanchius, who performed the Ceremony, ſays that Rotan deputed to Mante with ſeveral others, to repreſent to the King the Grievances of the Proteſtants; but he got himſelf choſen to diſpute againſt du Perron. He had promiſed to act the Part of a cunning Prevaricator, and being ready to do it, it happen'd that Vanity or Fear made him ſo waver that he choſe rather to pretend to be Sick; and Berault, a Miniſter of Montauban, took his Place. The diſpute was very ſharp on both ſides about the ſufficiency or inſufficiency of the Scripture, and the Words of St. Paul in his 2d Epiſtle to Timothy; and the Conference was broke by the Eccleſiaſticks.

---

(B) To pretend to be Sick, to avoid entring the Liſts.] We have juſt now ſeen that d'Aubigné ſays ſo: I ſhall now ſet down a paſſage of the Hiſtory of the Edict of Nantes, from which it appears that Rotan's Conduct was approved in a National Synod. "(c) "Rotan, a Famous Miniſter, was ſuſpected of having "conſented to thoſe Artifices, whether he was really prevailed upon in hopes of ſome Favours, or "only pretended to approve them, in order to get "himſelf deputed; becauſe it was an Honourable "Commiſſion. So that the Conference began, and "du Perron appear'd in it as a Man ſure of obtaining a compleat Victory by his Adverſary's Colluſion. The diſpute ran upon the Sufficiency of the "Scripture, and the Explication of the 16th Verſe "of the 3d Chapter of the 2d Epiſtle of St. Paul "to Timothy. But Rotan, either out of Honour "or Conſcience, not daring to be ſo baſe as 'twas "ſaid he had promiſed to be, pretended to be Sick, "and ſo got out of the Lurch. Beraud, a Miniſter of Montauban, took his place; but the Conference did not laſt long, when they ſaw that they "were Diſappointed in their Hopes. The Clergy "found out a way to break it, without ſeeming to "decline it; and the Miniſters offered to renew "it, whenever they ſhould be deſired to do it. But "becauſe notwithſtanding thoſe Offers, the Clergy "boaſted of having had the Advantage of the Miniſters; Beraud and Rotan got their Proceedings "approved by the National Synod, that was held at "Montauban the Year following. Rotan was ſheltered under Beraud's Protection, and this Approbation put an end to the Suſpicion that was entertain'd of him, as if he had been a Prevaricator. It doth not clearly appear from this Account, nor from that of d'Aubigné, whether Rotan pretended to be Sick after ſome Conferences, or before any Conference; and therefore I ſhall ſet down the Words of another Hiſtorian, that the Readers may have a more diſtinct Knowledge of the Matter. Among thoſe Deputies, ſays he (d), "there were ſeveral "Miniſters, and amongſt others one Rotan a Griſon, "who being ſtill at Rochelle, boaſted that he would "overcome the Catholick Doctors in a Diſputation, "and he believed it; and to ſhew that it was his Opinion, he had a great many Books carried from Rochelle to Mante: Wherein he was very much aſſiſted "by the Sieur du Pleſſis Governour of Saumur—— "(e) On the appointed day, the ſaid Sieur du Perron, and the Miniſter Rotan, after ſome Preambles, "wherein they proteſted that they acted only out of "zeal for Truth, began to treat" of the ſufficiency of the Word of God. That Hiſtorian gives the ſubſtance of the Objections and Anſwers, like a partial Man againſt the Proteſtants, and then Concludes thus, (f) Rotan was then a little confounded, and began to Praiſe the ſaid Sieur du Perron, and then the Aſſembly was diſmiſt for that Day. Rotan appear'd no more at the Conference: Berault a Miniſter of Montauban took his place, who the Six following days was carried by the ſaid Sieur du Perron, per omnes locos Dialectice, about the Word ὠφέλιμος, to make Wiſe. Hiſtory, Poetry, Mathematicks, Philoſophy, Phyſicks, Morals, Metaphyſicks, Scholia's, and Commentaries were brought in right or wrong by Berault*: but he could never make it out that that Greek Word ſignifies or includes Sufficiency. And indeed after he had praiſed the ſaid Sieur* du Perron, he gave to underſtand that he had not prepared himſelf for a diſpute. Thus ended the Conference, and the Miniſters of the pretended Reformed Religion return'd into their reſpective Provinces.

(C) He and de Serres —— about a deceitful Project.] I have only read this in d'Aubigné: He ſhews how the Court made uſe of addreſs to pervert the Miniſters, and then he ſays: (g) the Power of the Court appear'd particularly in the Miniſters Rotan, Serres, Cahier, Morlas, and de Vaux. The whole Myſtery of thoſe Practices, and particularly of thoſe of Mante, was laid open by the latter, who confeſt his Prevarication to ſeveral Eminent Perſons with horrid cries. D'Aubigné was one of thoſe Perſons. After he had, ſays he (h), Truſted his Confeſſion to my Boſom, with great Sighs, he put into my Hands three Bonds; one of 2500 Crowns, and the other two ſomething leſſer, which I reſtored to his Heirs. In the Confeſſion Catholique de Sancy he brings in Cahier relating all theſe things, and affirming what (i) he (d'Aubigné) durſt not affirm, about the Circumſtances of de Vaux's Death. (k) Being in this Perplexity, (they are Sancy's Words) "I perceived M. Cahier walking in "the Court. I went to him and ask'd him what "was become of the Miniſter de Vaux. Sir, ſaid "he, that Wretch having promiſed many fine "things to the Biſhop of Evreux, and received ſome "Money from him in order to perform his Promiſe, wanted Courage to do it, and went from "hence into his Country, crying and ſaying that "God's Cauſe had been Betrayed by him and five of "his Friends, whom he pointed at without naming "them. He added, that God would be Merciful "to him, and that he was going Home to give up "his Soul into his hands, as ſoon as he ſhould come "to Millaud. However, he offer'd to write a Letter to the Biſhop of Evreux, by a truſty Friend, "whereby the Biſhop would diſcover to him the Prevarication of the Conference of Mantes, and the other Preparations of Roban (l) and de Serres, who, "you know, did early promiſe their perfidious Aſſiſtance. The Huguenots were ſuch Fools as to refuſe "his offer, ſaying that Chriſt's Kingdom ought not to "be Eſtabliſh'd with Craft and Fraud. —— (m) I ask'd "Cahier what cover Roban (n) and Serres could "make uſe of to juſtify themſelves? The two firſt, "anſwered he, need no cover; for they are "covered with Earth. I'll tell you how. As ſoon "as they heard of de Vaux's Confeſſion, they incouraged one another, and got themſelves Elected "for the National Synod of Montpellier, being reſolved to venture all, and to try whether they "could get ſomething by the Confederates before they "ſhould make their Retreat. But it fell out unluckily that they died at the opening of the Synod. The Author of the Notes upon the Confeſſion Catholique de Sancy, obſerves (o) that this is the National Synod held at Montpellier, in May 1598. againſt which Reboul wrote in 1600. the Satyr Intitled, Actes du Synode Univerſel de la Sainte Reformation.

(D) And Publiſh'd a Controverſial Book concerning the Euchariſt.] It was Printed at Rochelle, and Intitled Traité Orthodoxe de l'Euchariſtie. Dr. Julius Cæſar Bulenger refuted it in a Book Printed at Paris, for Frederick Morel, in 1598. in 8. He refers the Reader to it in the Preface of his Catholick Anſwer to du Pleſſis Mornay's Book upon the Euchariſt.

(D △) There is ſome reaſon to believe that he had been Miniſter of the Church of Geneva.] For we find in Melchior Adam (p) that he was one of the three (q) Miniſters, who went from Geneva to Bern

* Cum Rotanum renuntiarem (Anno Domini) publice praeſtantem & dignum Baptiſtam Rotanum Rhætum, doctum & eloquentiſſimum Doctorem, qui feliciter Theologicam rexerat. Melch. Adam. [illegible] pag. 316.

† Printed at Rochelle in 1595.

(c) Hiſtoire de l'Edit de Nantes tom. 1. B. 3. p. 112. ad ann. 1593.

(d) Peter Victor Cayet, Chronologie Novenaire, tom. 2. fol. [illegible] verſo.

(e) Idem ibid. fol. 27[illegible] verſo.

(f) Idem Cayet ibid. fol. [illegible] verſo.

(g) D'Aubigné, tom. 3. Book 5. chap. 1. pag. 655.

(h) Idem, pag. 626.

(i) You may ſee it in the Original.

(k) Confeſſion Catholique de Sancy, in the laſt Chapter of the 2 Book, pag. 547. edit 1699.

(l) It ſhould be Rotan.

(m) Confeſſion Catholique de Sancy ibid. pag. 548

(n) Read Rotan.

(o) Notes ſur la Confeſſion de Sancy, pag. 560.

(p) Melch. Adam. in vita Stuckii pag 771. vitar. Theol. German. Obſerve that he places this in 1578. But in Beza's Life pag. 229. where he relates the ſame thing, he puts 1588.

(q) The two others were Beza and la Faye.

Rotan ‡ had left his Country 15 Years before for his Religion, and that he bore joyfully the loss of a considerable Estate. Maimbourg (E) deserves to be Criticized.

‡ Erasmi, quod propter Domini Jesu Christi curam, annos jam fere quindecim, cum non parva suarum bonorum eorumque non tenuium jactura conjunctum, æquissimo semper animo tulit, imo magnæ gloriæ loco habuit. Zanchius Epist. lib. 2. pag. 603.

ROTTERDAM, is one of the most considerable Towns in Holland, it stands upon the Maese, very conveniently for Trade. There is no doubt that it took its Name from its Situation at the Mouth of the Rotte ‡. 'Tis not known at what time it began to be Built, but 'tis well known that about the Year 1270, it was Erected into a City; for it was surrounded with Ramparts, and endowed with Privileges ‡. Nothing has made it more Famous than its being the place, where (A) the Great Erasmus was Born: A Glory, to which it has not been in 1588, to assist at a Synod, which was convened on account of the Disputes raised by Samuel Huberus and Claudius Auberi. I have spoke in another place (q) of this Samuel Huberus, and now I shall say, that this Claudius Aubert was Professor of Philosophy at Lausanne, and that going out of his Sphere, and taking upon him to Dogmatize, he taught viva voce, and in Writing that the Righteousness of Man is an Inherent Quality. The Synod Condemned that Opinion, and obliged Auberi and his Adherents to acknowledge that they Imbraced the Doctrine contain'd in the Confession of Faith of the Churches of Swisserland and France, viz. that we are justified by Faith as by an Instrument, wherewith we take hold of JESUS CHRIST our Righteousness. Claudius Alberius Triuncurianus cum suis, recepta doctrina & in confessione tam Gallicana quam Helvetica comprehensa, de nostra ad tribunal Dei justificatione per fidem tamquam instrumentum, quo Christus, justitia nostra apprehendatur, professus sit se penitus assentiri (r). I shall occasionally observe, that he only submitted in words to the Decisions of that Synod. I have a Book, Publish'd in the Year 1591. by one Antony Lescaille, wherein I find that Dr. Gryneus spoke thus in an Assembly held at Basil in December 1590. upon occasion of the Differences of this Antony with Constant and Couet Ministers of the French Church: " (s) that there was one " Auberi, who had heretofore writ a Book, which " had been afterwards Condemn'd at Bern, and who " had Subscribed to some Positions, which after- " wards he did not keep to. That going thro' " Basil, and returning to it as he came from Franc- " fort, he had sowed his Errors in several Houses; " but none was so bold as to maintain them, except " Lescailles, to whom the said Aubery had left a " piece of his own making. And therefore he will " give notice of it to the Magistrates of Bern, that " the said Aubery may be Punish'd. This Lescaille was an Illiterate Layman, who took upon him to Dogmatize, and put into the hands of his Ministers (t) a piece concerning good Works. Beza spoke to him thus in August, 1591: (u) " Heark ye, you have " not written that piece: Aubery is the Author of it, " tho' he denied it at Bern against his Conscience. " Lescaille answered, 'tis a Book of my own Com- " posing, and M. Aubery never saw it such as it is: " I don't deny that I have learn'd of him, and of " others, some things that are in it. Beza said, 'tis " an ill Book. Lescaille answered, I don't pretend " that 'tis all good: If any one shews me by the " word of God that there is any harm in't, I'll be- " lieve it. Beza went on and said, Aubery has " written an ill Book, and you Praise it. Lescaille " answered, I like very well what I understand in " M. Aubery's Book; but I will neither approve nor " condemn what I don't understand.

(q) In the Remark D of the Article Hunnius.

(r) Melch. Adam. ib.

(s) La doctrine ancienne du premier, deuxiéme, troisiéme & dernier Jugement —— par A L P D D G G H pag. 50. 51.

(t) Ibid. pag. 27.

(u) Ibid. pag. 92. 93.

(E) Maimbourg deserves to be Criticized.] These are his words. " (x) What have they not said to " cast a Blot upon the Memory of Sponde (Spon- " danus) Lieutenant General at Rochelle, Salette " Counsellor to the King of Navarre, Morlas Coun- " sellor of State, and Super-intendant of the Maga- " zins of France, du Fay, Clairville, Rohan, and " many other Famous Ministers, who having been " very Honest Men, whilst they lived amongst 'em, " and the most considerable Persons of their Consi- " story, became all of a sudden by a very strange " change Profligate Wretches, and the worst of Men, " for having Abjured Calvinism. He supposes in this passage, 1. That du Fay was a Minister. 2. That there was a Minister call'd (y) Rohan. 3. That those two pretended Ministers made an Abjuration of the Reformed Religion. Which is all False. They were look'd upon as False Brethren; but it does not appear that Rotan and du Fay died Papists. See the Notes upon the Confession Catholique de Sancy, pag. 357. and 358. of the Edition of 1699.

(x) Maimbourg, Preface of the History of the League.

(y) He was deceived by a fault of Impression, which crept into the Confession Catholique de Sancy.

(A) Than its being the place where the great Erasmus was Born.] If Homer had been as much esteem'd in his Life time, as he was after his Death, many Cities would have aspired in vain to the Glory of having produced him; for the City, which had that advantage, would have given undeniable Proofs of it, before the length of time could have afforded any other Town matter to contend about it. This is the reason why there are no disputes about the place where Erasmus was Born. The great Reputation he acquired during his Life has prevented such Contestations. The City of Rotterdam was early sensible of the Glory, that accrued to it from being the Birth-Place of Erasmus: Whilst things were fresh in Men's Memory, they took care to prevent their being deprived of it, and to make the thing unquestionable. There was a necessity for them to think early of it, for such a Birth as that of Erasmus might in time have been covered with a thick darkness, since his Mother, a Woman of a mean Extraction, went to Rotterdam with a design to Conceal the Birth of her Child. As for his Conception, the City of Tergow lays a just claim to it, and looks upon it as no small advantage. A Burgo-Master (z) of this Town undertook to prove that Erasmus was Born in it, and only bred at Rotterdam. But 'tis to no purpose for him to maintain such a thing; the contrary appears from the Registers of the Convent of Stein, and every Body believes that Erasmus was Born at Rotterdam and not at Tergow. We find these words in a Letter of the Burgo-Masters and Counsellors of Tergow, inserted in Guicciardin's Description of the Low-Countries Translated from the Italian: (a) Oriundus etiam hac urbe magnus ille Desiderius Erasmus, Goudæ enim conceptus & utero gestatus, ROTERODAMI (quo cum ad pariendum vicina esset mater secreta de causa contulerat) IN LUCEM EDITUS EST. They shew in the Library of Tergow a Head of Erasmus, which may be look'd upon as a Publick Monument of their not believing that he was Born there; for the Inscription, that is about that Head, imports that he was Conceived at Tergow and Born at Rotterdam. M. Almeloveen has lately renewed the dispute of those two Towns by a curious Incident (b): He pretends that Erasmus is rather a Citizen of Tergow than of Rotterdam, because according to the Laws, a place where a Child happens to be Born by chance, is not accounted his Native Country. If a Woman being upon a Journey is brought to Bed in a Town, if she does not design to Settle there, and makes her abode in another place, her Child is not accounted a Citizen of that Town, and the place where his Parents are settled is look'd upon as his Native Country. At this rate Erasmus should rather be call'd Goudanus than Roterodamus; for his Father and Mother lived at Tergow: And if his Mother did not Ly-in at Tergow but at Rotterdam, 'twas a meer accidental thing. She absconded to save her Honour, and went to a Neighbouring Town only for some days to Ly-in privately (c).

I shall observe by the by that some French Authors, grounded upon an Antiquated Right, I mean the Ancient Geography, and the old division of Gaul mention'd in Julius Cæsar's Commentaries, went about to prove that Erasmus was their Country-Man. Robert Cenalis (d) Bishop of Avranches said positively that France is Erasmus's Native Country, and that it is very much obliged to him, utpote homini in Gallia nato. Erasmus favoured this Pretension; for he said sometimes (e) that he was Born in Gaul, and look'd Amstel. 1694. (c) See the Letter of a Civilian call'd Mr. Written to Mr. Almeloveen, upon this, and inserted in the nitates Theologico. Philologicæ. (d) Histor. Gallic. l. 30. 39. 44. (e) Et pristinam illam laudem nostræ liæ. Nihil enim vetat eumdem ditione Germanum esse, terum Cosmographorum descriptione Gallum. Erasmus lib. 11.

been inſenſible; for the Inhabitants of that City took care (B) to Honour the Memory of that great Man, which is ſo glorious (C) to them. Rotterdam is the Seat of the Admiralty of the Maeſe.

ROVENIUS (Philip) a Titular Archbiſhop, and Apoſtolical Vicar in the United Provinces, was born at Deventer *. He Publiſh'd ſeveral Books, and one amongſt others, de Republica Chriſtiana, Printed in the Year 1648. I ſhall quote a Paſſage out of it, to ſhew the ſtrange (Z) Jargon of ſome devout Women, which he does ſeverely condemn.

RUA

look'd upon the Learning of Budæus, a French Man, as a thing very Glorious to his own Country. Some Germans were jealous of this Conceſſion, and humbly begg'd of Eraſmus not to ſuffer that the French ſhould appropriate him to themſelves. (r) Ne patiar me Gallis plus me aſſerat, ſed ingenue fatear Batavum eſſe Germaniæ partem, videlicet ne tanta gloria fraudentur. His anſwer, which is very modeſt, comes to this that he was born upon the Borders of Gaul and Germany, but ſomewhat nearer the former. An Batavus ſim nondum mihi ſatis conſtat. Hollandum eſſe me negare non poſſum, et in parte natum ut ſi Coſmographorum picturis credimus magis vergat ad Galliam quam ad Germaniam, quanquam extra controverſiam eſt totam eam regionem in confinio Galliæ Germaniæque eſſe. Hence it is, that in (s) another Letter, he neither ſays that he is a French-man, nor denies it; looking upon it as a problematical thing. Gallum eſſe me nec affirmo, nec inficior, ſic natus ut Gallus ne an Germanus ſim anceps haberi poſſit.

(B) To Honour the Memory of that Great Man.] The City of Rotterdam order'd, 1. That the Houſe wherein Eraſmus was Born, ſhould be adorn'd with an Inſcription, whereby all the Inhabitants, and all Foreigners might be inform'd of ſuch a glorious Prerogative. 2. That the College, wherein Latin, Greek and Rhetorick are taught, ſhould be call'd Eraſmus's College, and Conſecrated to him by an Inſcription upon the Frontiſpiece. 3. That a Wooden Statue ſhould be erected to him in the Year 1549. Another Statue of Stone was put in its place in the Year 1557. the Spaniard having overthrown it in 1572. The Inhabitants ſet (x) it up again, as ſoon as they were freed from their Tyranny; and at laſt a (y) braſen one was erected in 1622, which is admired by good Judges. It ſtands in the great place of the City, near a Canal, upon a Pedeſtal, adorn'd with Inſcriptions, and ſurrounded with Iron Rails. Thoſe ſeveral Statues were made by Degrees of a more valuable matter; wherein Eraſmus was dealt with as the Deities of Ancient Rome: for not only the Offerings of private Perſons were at firſt none of the moſt conſiderable,

Nunc (z) te marmoreum pro tempore fecimus, at tu
Si fœtura gregem ſuppleverit aureus eſto;

but alſo thoſe of whole Towns and Nations were made in the beginning with mean and common Things.

‖ Fictilibus crevere diis hæc aurea templa.

Moſt Travellers ſpeak of the Statue of Eraſmus, when they Publiſh an account of what they have ſeen in the United Provinces. M. Joli (a) a Canon of Paris, having mention'd that Statue, and the Houſe wherein Eraſmus was born, adds, That the great Reputation of that Man makes thoſe two things, which are little of themſelves, the moſt conſiderable of the Town; tho' they cannot be ſaid to be little and inconſiderable, ſince (b) Sebaſtian Munſterus tells us in his Coſmography, that Philip, King of Spain, Son to the Emperor Charles V. being come to Rotterdam, in the Month of September, of the Year (c) 1545. That Statue was erected (d) upon the account of his Arrival, and that ſome Verſes made in his Honour, were put into the Hands of Eraſmus, to be preſented to him; which being done, the King, Mary, Queen of Hungary, and all the Princes, who accompanied them, out of love for the Memory of ſo great a Man, went, and viſited with reſpect, the Houſe and the Chamber where he was Born. Monconis (e) ſays not ſo much of it, being contented to obſerve the poſture of the Statue, and to ſet down the Inſcriptions of the little Houſe. He ſays, That Eraſmus invented (f) the uſe of Turf, and Sails to ſerve for all Winds, as thoſe of Boats and Yachts: Which does not ſeem to me to be more true, than what he had ſaid before, that the Schelde and the Rhine being met together, paſs by Rotterdam, enter part of it, and beſides, get into the Town thro' two great Canals. But M. Bullart (g) confirms the Paſſage, which I have quoted out of M. Joly; for he ſays, That when Philip II. made a ſolemn Entry into the Town of Rotterdam, as being the Sovereign Prince of the Netherlands, the Senate cauſed the Statue of Eraſmus to be placed, as their greateſt Ornament, over againſt the Houſe where he was Born, dreſs'd in his Eccleſiaſtical Habit, holding a Pen in his Right Hand, and preſenting to the Prince with the Left a Paper, with theſe Words in it.

Sereniſſimo Hiſpaniarum Principi D. Philippo à Burgundia Deſiderius Eraſmus Rotterodamus.

Rotterodamus ego non inficiabor Eraſmus,
Ne videar cives deſeruiſſe meos.
Ipſorum inſtinctu, Princeps clariſſime, ſalvum
Ingreſſum precor ad limina noſtra tuum,
Atque hunc quo poſſum ſtudio, commendo popellum
Maxime præſidiis Cæſare nate tuis.
Te Dominum agnoſcunt omnes, te Principe gaudent,
Nec quicquam tota charius orbe tenent.

M. Joli might have quoted, upon this occaſion, a more Authentick Author than Sebaſtian Munſterus; for he might have quoted the Spaniſh Relation of the Voyage of Don Philip Prince of Spain, written by Juan Chriſtoval Calvete de Eſtrella. I muſt obſerve that in the Year 1672, the Mob having made an Inſurrection in moſt Towns of the Province of Holland, Rotterdam was for ſome days, at their Diſcretion, and during that Anarchy, the Statue of Eraſmus was remov'd from its place, as a thing that favour'd of Popery. The Mob carried it into a Publick Houſe, and took into Conſideration whether it ſhould be melted down. The Magiſtrates of Baſil did no ſooner hear of it, but they order'd ſome Merchants of their Town to deſire their Correſpondent in Rotterdam, to buy that Statue at a certain Price. The Correſpondent went upon a Bargain, and might have had it, had it not been for a ſmall difference in the Price. He gave an Account of his Commiſſion, and received a new Order to give the Magiſtrates their own Price; but they changed their Mind, and reſolved neither to ſell or to melt down that Statue, but to ſet it up again in the ſame place; which they did ſome time after. The Merchant, who had a Commiſſion to buy it for the Magiſtrates of Baſil, gave me this Account within (h) theſe two days.

(C) Which is ſo glorious to them.] Moſt of thoſe who write ſomething concerning Eraſmus's Life, take notice of the glory he has procured to his Native Country. Du Verdier (i) Vau-Privas, and Bulart (k) begin with ſuch an Obſervation in their Encomium upon that Youth of Rotterdam. The Words of (l) Rhenanus upon this occaſion, are too fine not to be inſerted in this place. Natus eſt, ſays he, ſpeaking to the Emperor Charles V. abavi tui Friderici III. Aug. primis Imperii annis ad quintum Calend. Novembris, Roterodami in Hollandia tua inferioris Germaniæ Provincia, quam olim Batavi poſſederunt, nunc magis notam ſtudioſis omnibus ob unius indigenæ Eraſmi incunabula, quàm veterum incolarum memoria quamlibet bellico robore præſtantium. Hoc alumno Roterodamum oppidum ſe ſemper jactabit, & doctis erit commendatum. I might quote many Authors, who in order to heighten the glory of Rotterdam, join theſe two things together; that Eraſmus was Born in it, and that they have erected a Statue to him.

(Z) The ſtrange Jargon of ſome devout Women.] You may ſee in the following Paſſage, what he ſays of ſome Nuns, who affected ſome particular Exerciſes of Devotion and Spirituality. (m) Non raro etiam ſuperbiam aliquam conjunctam habent, ut ambulent in magnis, & mirabilibus ſuper ſe, ut vileſcant illis ordinaria pietatis exercitia approbata ab Eccleſia, vel à Patribus commendata: nihil crepent niſi uniones cum Deo, cum uniantur proprio (ſi non pejori) ſpiritui: jactent tranſubſtantiationes myſticas, cordis concentrationes: potentiarum, imo omnis ſui eſſe, annihilationem, connubium eſſentiæ creatæ & Divinitatis: ſpiri-

tuale

* Valerii Andreæ Biblioth. Belgica, p. [illegible]

(f) Franciſco Carro del Bachiller Rod. Nicol. Antonii Biblioth. Hiſpan. tom. [illegible] p. 157.

(g) Acad. des Sciences, vol. 2. pag. 162.

(h) I write this the 28th of July, 1699.

(i) Proſopogr. tom. 3. p. 2389.

(k) Acad. des Sciences, tom. 2. p. 159.

(l) Epiſt. præfixa Operibus Eraſmi. See alſo Quenſtedt pag. 121. of his Dialogue de patriis illuſtrium doctrina & ſcriptis virorum.

(m) Philip. Rovenius de Repub. Chriſtiana lib. 1. cap. 43. p. 278.

Principi offerebat. (e) Voiag. part. 2. p. 129, 130.

of Monconis are found in a Book Printed in 1692.

Theatro Belgico. See the Place that relates to Roterdam.

Æneas Silvius mentions the Turf in a Book which he Pub-

. See Martinus Schoockius de Turffis, pag. 3.

RUA (Peter) a Learned Spaniard, who taught Philology at Soria, (A) the Place of his Birth, lived in the XVIth Century. He Publiſh'd three very Learned and Curious Letters ‡ againſt Antony de Guevara, wherein he confuted a vaſt number of Falſities Publiſh'd by that Author, and the ridiculous ſhift that he made uſe of. This you may ſee (B) in a Paſſage of Andreas Schottus. Moreri (C) has committed a very great Blunder.

RUARUS (Martin) a Socinian Miniſter, was Born at Krempen * in Germany. He was infected with the Socinian Hereſies by Erneſtus Sonerus, Profeſſor at Altdorf, who taught them privately, and he grew ſo fond of 'em, that he choſe rather to loſe his Patrimonial Eſtate than to renounce that Sect. He § was eſteem'd both at Home and Abroad for his Judgment, Learning, and good Life. He was made Rector of the College of Racovia, and then Miniſter of the Socinians at Dantzick, both in the Town, and in the Burrough of Straſſin, and he died in that Office, in the Year || 1657, being 70 Years old. † He was already poſſeſt of it in the Year 1635, as it appears from (D) James Ogier's Travels. He Writ (E) ſome Pieces, which have been Printed. The famous Calixtus left no ſtone * unturn'd to Convert him, at the Conference of Thorn in the Year 1646, but he could not prevail with him.

RUFFI (Antony de) Counſellor in the Seneſchal's Court of Marſeille, where he was Born, diſcharg'd the Duties of his Office with great Integrity, and a very extraordinary Conſcienciouſneſs. Beſides, he apply'd himſelf to Hiſtorical Inquiries with a wonderful Diligence and Patience, as it appears from his Hiſtory of Marſeilles, Printed in 1642, and re-printed with || large Additions in the Year 1696, in two Volumes, in Folio. He was but 35 Years of Age, when it came out the firſt time. An Office of Counſellor of State was beſtow'd upon him in 1654, as a Teſtimony of tuale Sacramentum inſeparabilitatis, ſomnium omnium affectionum, abſorptionem & liquefactionem in amplexu ſponſi, triplicem animæ hierarchiam, orationem in quiete paſſiva, ebrietatem ſpiritualem, cordis ſilentium, meditationes negativas, uniones ſupereſſentiales, puteum & gurgitem annihilationis, amorem Deificum, transformantem, unientem, ſtringentem, amplexantem, ſuavitatem cor auferentem, ſugentem ſponſi ubera, ruminantem collum, abſorbentem enthuſiaſmum, inſenſibilitatem & oblivionem omnium inducentem abyſſalem cum Deo identificationem, confricationem Deificam, incendentem & conſumentem cor: elevationem ad ſuavitatem cœleſtem ex infernali languore, introverſionem ſuper cœleſtem, caliginem & umbram Dei, allocutiones internas, elevationes incognitas, extenſiones & applicationes amoroſas, animæ ſuſpenſiones, deliquium, ſuſpiria, mortem ſenſuum & omnium affectuum, ecſtaſim continuam, juſtitiam ratiocinii, cordis contactum & patefactionem, liquefactionem, influxum, inflammationem, aſſultus qui ferri nequeant, penetrationes ad intima, vulnerationes, conſtrictiones, alligationes inſeparabiles, aſpectus penetrantes & oblectantes, voces tremulas, murmura columbina, guſtus ſuaviſſimos, odores gratiſſimos, auditus melodiæ cœleſtis, hypermyſticas Dei & animæ perichoreſes, impudentiam ſpiritualem, aſpirationes Myſanthropicas, ignem ſine carbone, flammam ſine corpore, holocauſtum meridianum in viſcerali & medullari penetrabilitate, contactum mirabilem & ſuaviſſimum, obſcuræ noctis gaudia & caliginem. Hæc & ſimilia ſeſquipedalia verba in nova pietatis ſchola inter ſponte electos Magiſtros, & diſcipulas curioſas, adeo frequenter tenero proferuntur palato, ut intimis in viſceribus ſentiantur (a).

(A) At Soria, the Place of his Birth.] One would think, at firſt ſight, that Andreas Schottus, and Don Nicolas Antonio do not at all agree. The one ſays, (b) Petrus Rhua Numantinus primum Abulæ, poſt Numantiæ in patria annos plurimos ad extremam uſque ætatem bonas litteras docuit; and the other, (c) Petrus Rua, Orienſis, Abulæ primum, mox in patria urbe juventutem humanioribus imbuit literis ad extremam uſque ætatem: But at the bottom they ſay the ſame thing. Soria, which was built near the Ruins of Numantia, is call'd Numantia by ſome, and amongſt others by Andreas Schottus.

(B) This you may ſee in a Paſſage of Andreas Schottus.] Here it is. (d) In quo egregie verſatum fuiſſe teſtantur Epiſt. 3. Hiſpanice ſcriptæ, eruditionis plenæ, & humanitatis ſatis copioſæ: quibus Ant. Guevarræ (qui tum ſolus doctrinæ, & eloquentiæ arcem tenere videbatur) errores, mendaciaque in hiſtoriis antiquorum, veteribuſque monumentis lapidum, & nummorum explicandis, egregie refellit. Valde ut mirer Gallos, Guevarræ epiſtolas converſas Aureo titulo decoraſſe, manibuſque ita tenere ſolitos, ut pro oraculis circumferant, quæ tot mendaciis, quot verſibus ſcatere dicuntur. Rhua itaque de tot millibus multa indicavit, facemque prætulit, ne quis poſthac credulus in errorem induceretur. Epiſt. 1. numiſmatum inſcriptiones, & confinxiſſe, & ridicule explicaſſe, in Chronologia & magiſtratuum dignitate turpiter hallucinatum. Epiſt. 2. erraſſe in hiſtoria Rom. temporum ratione, locorumque nominibus, ſolenne illud ſuum ſervando, audacter ut omnia pronunciet, quaſi poſteris imponere velit, aut credens omnes et temere aſſenſuros audito illo Pythagoreorum αὐτὸς ἔφα, contrarium oculos confixit, citans identidem, & prodigioſe nomina propria hiſtoricorum, cudenſque arbitratu ſuo, ad hanc diem inaudita. De numiſmatis inepta & vetera leges; ut & de legibus Rom. & legum auctorib. de lege Julia Poppæa, Cornelia, Falcidia, aliiſque: de medicina & empirica. Tertia epiſtola ut mole ſua ita rerum pondere ceteris major eſt. Cum enim Guevarra omnem antiquitati fidem derogare niteretur, epiſtola quadam, quo ſua mendacia tegeret, velaret, vel tueretur; cum a ſacris literis diſceſſeris, omnia incerta fabuliſque plena affirmat. Refellit virum diſerte Rhua ex Athenagoræ apologia pro Chriſtianis, & hoc eſſe omnem artium labefactationem, fidemque ut ſocietatis humanæ, ita & ſcientiarum vinculum è medio tollere. This is a curious Supplement to the Article of Guevara.

(C) Moreri has committed a very great Blunder.] He ſays, Peter Rhua wrote a Treatiſe De Leg. Julia, Poppæa, Cornelia, Falcidia, &c. de Medicina & Empyrica; and he quotes Father Schottus's Book for it. What a prodigious miſtake is this? Does not that Father clearly ſay, not that Rhua wrote a Treatiſe upon thoſe Subjects, but that the Deſign of his Second Letter was to ſhew the Falſities of Guevara upon ſeveral other Matters, and particularly upon thoſe? Beſides, the lex Julia, and the lex Poppæa, are not two Laws, but one and the ſame Law. Father Schottus ſays ſo plainly enough; he puts no Comma between Julia and Poppæa.

(D) From James Ogier's Travels.] That Author was at Dantzick in 1635, in the Retinue of Count d'Avaux, Ambaſſador of his moſt Chriſtian Majeſty. He ſays, that being in a Bookſeller's Shop, one Ruardus (he ſhould have ſaid Ruarus) came to him, with whom he diſcours'd in Latin for two Hours, and then in French. Aggreſſus me eſt quidam N. Ruardus, quocum per duas horas collocutus ſum Latine, ac deinde Gallice, qui me ad ædes ſuas adeundas invitavit. Didici poſtea ab aliquo, eum eſſe Arianorum Paſtorem: ſunt quippe Gedani hujuſmodi homines, qui clam congregantur, inſcio vel diſſimulante Senatu (e).

(E) He writ ſome pieces.] He writ ſome Notes upon the Catechiſm of the Socinian Churches of Poland, which were Printed in the Edition of that Catechiſm publiſh'd in 1665. They are alſo to be found in the Edition of 1680. He made ſome other Notes upon the ſame Work; but they have not been publiſh'd (f). There are two Centuries of his Letters: The 1ſt was Printed at Amſterdam for David Ruarus, the Author's Son, in 1677, with a Preface of Joachim Ruarus, David's Brother. The 2d was Publiſh'd in 1681. for the ſame David, who ‡ Antonius in Biblioth. Hiſp. [illegible]

* A Town in Holſtein.

§ Ob eruditionem, pietatemque præſtantiam, morumque integritatem, in magno & apud illos & alios eruditos fuit pretio. Mollerus Iſagoge ad hiſt. Cherſoneſi Cimbricæ, part. 3. pag. 136.

|| Id. ib.

* Nulli ut popularem hunc ſuum in viam revocaret, pepercit operæ, ſed pertinaciam ejus, ſuperare non potuit Mollerus ibid. p. 107.

|| See the Hiſtoire des Ouvrages des Savans, June 1697.

(a) Doctor Stillingfleet hath gathered out of the Myſtical Authors ſome ſuch Phraſes. See his Tract of the Fanaticiſm of the Romiſh Church. p. m. 240. 307. & ſeq.

(b) Andr. Schottus, Biblioth. Hiſpan. pag. 567.

(c) Nicol. Anton. Biblioth. Scriptor. Hiſpan. to. 2. p. 187.

(d) Andr. Schottus ibid.

(e) Carl. Ogier, [illegible] 218, 219.

(f) Ex [illegible] Biblioth. Antitrin. pag.

of the Eſteem he was in for his Learning and great Merit. I ſhall alledge an Inſtance of (A) the tenderneſs of his Conſcience, which will give me occaſion who added a Preface to it. Thoſe Letters (c) are very curious. Some took him to be the Author (d) of the German Tranſlation of the New Teſtament, made at Racow, and Publiſh'd in the Year 1630; but 'tis a miſtake. (e) Quas falſi mihi conſtat, cum ex Crellio (t) [illegible] Johann. Crellio & Joach. Steg[illegible] Senioris [illegible], tum ex indicio Filii, quem [illegible] reliquit, cognominis, Amſtelodami viventis, a [illegible] eam credi a Chriſtoph. Oſtorodo [illegible] aliqui, [illegible] autem eſſe a tota Societate, [illegible] parente ſuo, ac præfationem tandem a Crellio additam, A. 1684. [illegible]

to

(A) Of the tenderneſs of his Conſcience.] This appears "from the Reſtitution he made to a Perſon, "whoſe Cauſe he had reported. He was afraid he "had not beſtowed a ſufficient time upon the Examination of that Cauſe, and that he had contributed to the loſs of it by his Careleſsneſs; and "he was ſo far from ſeeking any Excuſes, which "Self-love never fails to ſuggeſt, that he condemn'd himſelf, and made uſe of a Prieſt of "the Oratory to reſtore the Sum which that "Perſon had loſt. Perhaps it may be ſaid that "the niceneſs of the Judge proved more favourable to the Perſon concern'd, than a more ſevere "and ſtrict Examination of his Cauſe would have "been. This great probity was authentically acknowledg'd by the Parliament of Provence, in an Arreſt given in the Year 1655, at the Suit of the "King's Attorney General. This is what we find in M. de Ruffi's (f) Elogy immediately after theſe Words: Whenever he ſate upon the Bench, his Mind was taken up with the Deſcription of that Court of Juſtice mention'd by the Royal Prophet in one of his Pſalms: God is preſent in the Aſſembly of the Gods; being in the middle of 'em, he judges them; ſtetit in Synagoga Deorum, in medio autem Deos dijudicat: Being poſſeſt with the Sentiments, that ſuch a Thought can inſpire, he weigh'd every thing in the Scale of the Sanctuary: Fleſh and Blood, the dangerous ſeductions of Friendſhip, and the power of Intereſt never made him ſwerve from the Path of Juſtice; he omitted nothing to be informed of the Truth: His firmneſs in protecting Innocency, and puniſhing Wickedneſs was as great as his Penetration; and he never gave his Opinion, nor pronounced a Sentence, without ſeriouſly conſidering whether it would be approved, at the laſt Day, before the Throne of God.

It was not a needleſs thing for me to obſerve that theſe Words are to be found immediately before thoſe wherein it is ſaid, that he reſtor'd a certain Sum to a Perſon who had loſt his Cauſe. This will give me occaſion to make an important Reflection. The Author of the Elogy means without doubt, that M. de Ruffi had examin'd the Cauſe with his uſual exactneſs; but that his great conſcientiouſneſs made him fear that he had been a little careleſs. This Author does certainly give us to underſtand that the Scruples of that Judge were grounded upon the Informations he had receiv'd ſince the Cauſe had been judged. In a word, the thing ought to be underſtood in this manner. The Counſellor, who reported the Caſe, did it with a very great Application and Integrity; but after it had been decided, he found out, I do not know how, that the Party who had been caſt, had a better Right than he thought. He therefore came to think that if he had more carefully examin'd all the Writings, he would have made a more favourable Report, and thereupon he condemn'd himſelf, and reſolv'd to make a Reſtitution. This ſhews that he had a very tender and ſcrupulous Conſcience; which could not be ſaid of him, ſhould we ſuppoſe that he was ſenſible of an affected Careleſsneſs, and of ſome Lazineſs and Impatience. For in ſuch a caſe a Man, who reports a Cauſe, is certainly guilty; his Ignorance cannot excuſe him: and tho' he feels ſome Remorſe, 'tis not a Proof of a tender Conſcience; for a Man may have a hard Conſcience and yet be ſenſibly affected with ſuch inward Remorſes. But I ſuppoſe by virtue of the Expreſſions made uſe of by the Elogiſt, that Mr. de Ruffi could not blame himſelf for any ſuch thing. He intended to make a very fair report; he neglected nothing that he thought neceſſary, and he knew that in many other Cauſes the ſame application had been ſufficient. The only thing therefore that he blamed himſelf for, was his believing that he had done all that a good Reporter ought to do, having found out at laſt that he might have reported the caſe better than he had done. Since he was uneaſie in his Mind upon ſuch an account, he would have been uneaſie, tho' he had known that it was hardly poſſible, humanly ſpeaking, to do better, and that his Ignorance was invincible. What I am going to ſay will ſhew you the Reaſon, why I make theſe Obſervations upon M. de Ruffi's Conduct.

Some Pieces have been Printed in Holland within theſe ten (g) Years about the rights of an erroneous Conſcience. The Authors who maintain'd that Ignorance can be no Excuſe, have inſtanced upon ſome Holy Men, who have been extremely afflicted for what they have done with a good intent, thinking to ſerve God, and who believ'd they ſtood in need of God's Mercy, &c. Such Examples, generally ſpeaking, prove nothing at all; for a Man of a tender Conſcience, and full of Love for Virtue, will grieve even for a Fault that is purely Material, I mean commited with an invincible Ignorance. If a Phyſician ſhould come to know by a Revelation, that the Remedy he has preſcrib'd to a Sick Perſon, has been the occaſion of his Death, tho' according to all the rules of his Art, he was to preſcribe it; he would heartily grieve for it, if he was a conſcientious and charitable Man. He would make amends for it to the beſt of his power, by relieving the Family of the Deceaſed, reduced to great Poverty by his Death. And yet he would be very innocent before God; for I ſuppoſe that his Ignorance was invincible, and ſuch as it ought to be, to excuſe a Man according to the moſt rigid (h) Divines. The ſame muſt be ſaid of a Judge who has occaſion'd the loſs of a Cauſe, when no Humane Knowledge was able to diſcover the Truth. He would certainly grieve, if he ſhould know that the Party condemn'd was in the right, and would make up the Damage if he was a Man truly conſcientious and of a ſtrict Virtue. The Author of the Encomium upon M. de Ruffi, has given us an Inſtance of it. Such a Grief therefore and ſuch Reparations ought not to be alledged, in order to prove, That an unaffected Ignorance cannot excuſe a Man. The more we are pious, the more we'll grieve for the material Faults we have committed out of Ignorance. The Conſcience becomes then more ſevere than God himſelf, whether it be out of Humility or Precaution. A thouſand Inſtances might be alledged to ſhew that an Innocent Man will grieve, make up a Damage, Reſtore, &c. If a good Man hears that his Horſe has lamed ſome body, is he not concern'd for it? Does he not pay ſometimes the Chirurgeon, who takes care of the poor Wretch? And if he be a Man of a ſcrupulous Conſcience, is he not afraid that God will call him to an account for his careleſsneſs, and for keeping ſuch a Horſe? and yet all judicious Caſuiſts will acknowledge the innocency of that good Man, if they know that his Horſe has done ſuch a Miſchief without any fault of his. If an Orator ſhould be at a ſtand, and by ſuch an unvoluntary Misfortune ſhould prejudice his Neighbour, would he not be vexed at it? If he ſhould beg of God that he would forgive him, and if he went about to make up the damage, could we conclude from it that he has committed a ſin; and can we call that a Moral Fault, which is only a Phyſical Imperfection, as independent upon our Reaſon and Liberty, as the weakneſs of the Eyes ſuddenly dazled by too great a light? I ſuppoſe the Orator has neglected nothing that he thought neceſſary to remember his Speech. But let us keep to the Ignorance of Honeſt Judges. The firſt Preſident of the Parliament of Paris, made a Speech at the opening of that Court in 1693, wherein he repreſented (i), That tho' the Judges think they have done their beſt to have a full knowledge of a Cauſe, yet ſometimes they commit an Injuſtice, when they fancy they pronounce a very juſt Sentence, which has been ſeen in M. de Langlade's Caſe; for the Judges notwithſtanding their great Capacity, and the care they took to clear the Matter, condemn'd an innocent Man; for which they endeavour'd to make amends by their Arreſt. From whence it appears, That thoſe Judges, tho' honeſt and careful of their Duty, were concern'd for their Miſtake, and made amends for it. If they had dy'd, before they came to know

(g) [illegible] in Septemb-er 169[illegible].

(h) I have ſaid in another place, that they acknowledge, properly ſpeaking, no invincible Ignorance in religious matters: but they are not ſo rigid in relation to Matters of Fact, and Human Diſcipline.

(i) Mercure Galant for Novemb. 1693. p. 3[illegible].

to debate a Queſtion concerning the Ignorance, whereby a Man may be excus'd, and to examin the Anſwers that may be made to the Compariſons taken (B) from Judges, who give an Unjuſt Judgment without knowing it, or from Phyſicians, whoſe (C) Remedies prove mortal, notwithſtanding their Honeſty and Learning. Our know that they were miſtaken, being conſcious to themſelves of having done their beſt to find out the Truth, could they have fear'd any thing from the Divine Juſtice? Can it be ſaid that they were oblig'd to overcome ſuch Obſtacles as were invincible with reſpect to them? See the Author of the Commentaire Philoſophique (a), who has ſo fully prov'd, that in ſome caſes an innocent Man may be condemn'd, and a guilty one acquitted without any Sin, that the Learned Miniſter of Utrecht (b) who writ againſt him, left this Doctrine untouch'd.

Poſi

(B) To examin the Anſwers —— to the Compariſons taken from Judges.] How can it be ſaid, will ſome object to me, that ignorant Judges deſerve to be excus'd, ſince they occaſion ſo many Diſorders? Don't you know that they are puniſh'd? For if application be made to the Sovereign, or to a Superior Court, their Judgments are reverſed, they are cenſur'd, and ſometimes degraded. 'Tis the uſual courſe of Humane Juſtice. Now if Princes puniſh in ſuch a manner thoſe that are ignorant of their Laws, how can it be ſaid that God will not puniſh thoſe that are Ignorant of his Word? This Compariſon is not therefore advantageous to thoſe who preach up Toleration. To this I muſt anſwer three things.

I. Should a Judge, thro' a groſs Ignorance, take the wrong way in a Cauſe, that may be eaſily determin'd, he would doubtleſs deſerve to be degraded, not as being an ill Man, if he had followed the dictates of his Conſcience (c) with an intent to be juſt to the Parties concern'd, but as being unqualify'd for ſuch an Employment; and if thoſe, who degrade him, knew the uprightneſs of his Heart, they would declare that he is a good, conſcientious, and juſt man, and that he only wants Learning. Juſt as if an Ambaſſador ſhould diſmiſs his Secretary, whoſe Hand is not very legible, tho' he knows his faithfulneſs and Capacity. This would be no Blot upon his Honeſty, no Reflection upon his Wit; he is only diſmiſt becauſe the Ambaſſador wants a Man, who writes a good Hand. Let us compare two Judges one with another, the one is very Learned, the other is a Man of indifferent Parts; and both are equally honeſt. If one of 'em be for the Affirmative, and the other for the Negative, according to the Dictates of their Conſcience, having uſed all the Induſtry and Application they are capable of in order to know the Truth; and if the ſuffrage of the more Learned is juſt, and the ſuffrage of the other unjuſt, I maintain that the one does not exceed the other in Uprightneſs. I grant that he is a more knowing Judge, and better qualify'd for his Employment, becauſe the Qualities of a good Judge take in Knowledge and Integrity; but he is not a Man of greater Probity, nor more zealous for Juſtice.

II. We are told of an uſual courſe of puniſhing ignorant Judges; but I don't know whether there are any inſtances of it. There is nothing more common than to ſee the Judgment of an inferior Court reverted by a Superior Court; but the inferior Judges are neither turn'd out nor cenſur'd, unleſs it does plainly appear that they have been guilty of Bribery, Partiality, or at leaſt of a very great Ignorance. And if it be ſuppoſed that they have determin'd a Cauſe according to their Knowledge, tho' it be never ſo ſmall, their Superiors are contented to rectify their Judgment. I ſhould be glad if any one would alledge an Inſtance of a Judge, degraded for want of Learning, tho' at the ſame time he was look'd upon as a conſcientious and incorruptible Man, very much intent upon Study, and very careful to examin a Cauſe. I am perſuaded that the Puniſhment of Judges is always grounded upon this Suppoſition, that they have been brib'd, or have acted out of Paſſion, or are guilty of a voluntary Ignorance. But here is a very pregnant Inſtance to confirm the Opinion laid down in the Commentaire Philoſophique. "(d) Tho' we "pretend to be innocent, it does not follow that the "Judges are unjuſt, for it is not a thing inconſiſtent "with Courts of Judicature, made up of Men, who "may be deceiv'd, and deceive others, that an Innocent Perſon ſhould be condemn'd, and a Guilty "one acquitted by a Juſt Judge. It often falls out, "that in Civil and Criminal Cauſes, the Judges are "divided in their Opinions when the caſe is doubtful; and as all of 'em may be directed by the "Law, it may be that all of 'em are juſt, whether "they acquit or condemn, giving their judgment "according to the Dictates of their Conſcience. "(f) When King Henry II. your Predeceſſor, was "inform'd, that Peliſſon, Preſident in the Parliament "of Chambery, which at that time did belong to "France, had been depriv'd of his Office by "Arreſt of the Parliament of Dijon, at the Suit of "Tabouet the King's Attorney, and that the Cauſe "being ſince brought to the Parliament of Paris, "by virtue of ſome Letters of Evocation, he had "been acquitted, and the ſaid Attorney condemn'd, "he juſtify'd all the Judges, notwithſtanding their "contrary Opinions, ſaying, that ſome had given "their Judgment according to Conſcience, and others according to the merit of the cauſe.

III. We muſt keep to the true ſtate of the Queſtion. The Author of the Commentaire Philoſophique, compares together thoſe who are miſtaken in a Law-Suit, and thoſe who are miſtaken in Controverſies about Religion; but he ſuppoſes that neither of 'em can be excuſed unleſs they have heartily and ſincerely us'd their utmoſt Endeavours to find out the Truth. When he ſays that in ſome Caſes the Judges condemn an Innocent Perſon, and acquit a Criminal, without any Guilt; he goes upon this Suppoſition, that they do whatever they can, and whatever the Laws preſcribe to them in order to come to the true knowledge of the matter of fact, and that they have been led into an Error meerly by the intricacy of the Cauſe, acting all along according to the Dictates of their Conſcience. If any ſuch Judges have been degraded by their Superiors, tho' they were thought to be equally Learned and Honeſt, and if ſuch a Degradation ſeems to be lawful to Wiſe Men, there is ſome reaſon to draw from thence ſome Conſequences, in order to prove that God will puniſh Ignorant Men notwithſtanding their ſincerity. But if the thing is quite otherwiſe among Men, what will become of theſe Conſequences? I think one may be allow'd to draw quite contrary Inferences from it, and this amongſt others; ſince Kings do not puniſh thoſe who, notwithſtanding all their Application and Honeſty, cannot avoid being miſtaken in their Judgment about a very intricate Cauſe; much more will God, who is infinitely Good and Juſt, bear with thoſe who are not able to unfold the true ſenſe of a Paſſage of the Scripture.

I muſt further obſerve two things: One is, That a Judge of a very groſs Ignorance, can hardly be accounted a good Man; for this ſuppoſes that he has neglected to inſtruct himſelf, (e) and that his Lazineſs is inexcuſable, or that he has given up himſelf to Pleaſures. A Man who behaves himſelf thus in the exerciſe of ſuch an Office, cannot have (f) a right Conſcience, and if ſuch a Man is degraded, it cannot be ſaid that he has been puniſh'd for his ſincere and unvoluntary Ignorance. The ſecond thing I have to ſay is, That I advance all thoſe Obſervations only as Doubts and Probabilities, which may be examin'd, without pretending to aſſert the Doctrine of the Commentaire Philoſophique. And to ſhew my Readers that I am far from extenuating the Faults of a Judge, which proceed only from Ignorance, I ſhall ſet down a thundring Judgment againſt them. The firſt Preſident de Lamoignon (g) "would have "thought himſelf deficient in the moſt eſſential part "of his Office, if he had not taken care to have as "much Knowledge as Uprightneſs. And therefore "he uſed to ſay, that there is no great difference "between a Wicked Judge and an ignorant one. "The Firſt knows at leaſt his Duty, and is ſenſible "of his Injuſtice; but the other does neither know "the Good nor the Miſchief he does: The one "is conſcious of his Faults, and is more inexcuſable; "but the other ſins without any remorſe, and is "more incorrigible. But they are equally Guilty, "with reſpect to thoſe whom they condemn thro' "Error or Malice. A Man does not leſs feel his "Wound, whether he be wounded by a Mad-man "or a blind one; and it matters little whether one "be undone by a Man, who deceives him, or by "a Man who is deceiv'd.

(C) From Phyſicians, whoſe Remedies prove Mortal not-

(a) In the Supplement page [illegible] & ſeq. & p. [illegible] & ſeq. to p. [illegible], ſee alſo Montaigne's Eſſays, lib. 3. chap. 13. p.m. [illegible]

(b) See M. Saurin's Book, intitled Reflexions ſur les droits de la conſcience, Utrecht, 1697.

(c) Suppoſing ſuch a Judge can be ſaid to have a very upright Conſcience. See above Letter g.

(d) Richeome, Plainte Apologetique au Roi Henri IV. pour les Jeſuites. p.m. 182.

(f) [illegible]

RUFFI lived 82 Years. It does not appear from the * Elogy, which I have quoted, in what Year he was Born, nor in what Year he Died: Such (D) an Omiſſion cannot be juſtified. Lewis Antony de RUFFI his Son had a hand in the Additions of the Second Edition of the Hiſtory of Marſeilles.

RUFINUS, a Favourite of the Emperor Theodoſius, † " was a Gaul, Born " in the Province of Aquitania ||, of an indifferent Extraction, but of a lofty " Mind. He was a ſupple, inſinuating and polite Man, well qualified to divert a " Prince, and even to ſerve him. He came to the Court of Conſtantinople, where " he got Friends and Patrons: He made himſelf known to Theodoſius, and had the " good Fortune to pleaſe him. He ſo well Improved the beginning of his For- " tune, that he was in a ſhort time Promoted to conſiderable Imployments. The " Emperor made him High Steward (1), admitted him into all his Councils, Ho- " nour'd him with his Friendſhip and Confidence, and at laſt raiſed him to the " Conſulſhip with his own Son Arcadius. That Man maintain'd himſelf as he had " had been advanced, rather by his Addreſs than by his Virtue. His Ambition in- " creaſed with his Fortune: He endeavoured to inrich himſelf with the ſpoils of " thoſe, whom he deſtroyed by his Calumnies (2). Whoever had an extraordi- " dinary Merit, and was in a Condition to contend with him, could not fail to " be his Enemy. Nevertheleſs being afraid of loſing the Prince's Affection, unleſs " he preſerved his Eſteem, he appear'd Modeſt and Unintereſted. He cover'd " his ill Counſels with the pretence of Juſtice or Policy, and knew ſo well how " to ſet off his good qualities, and conceal the ill ones, that the Emperor, tho' " never ſo knowing and jealous of his Authority, was often Deceiv'd and Go- " vern'd by him, without perceiving it. The principal (3) Lords of the Court " could not ſee the Elevation of this Favourite, without being offended at it —— " They Conſpired againſt him, and reſolved to undo him": But their Enterpriſe (A) occaſion'd withſtanding their Honeſty and Learning.] I ſhall not dwell long upon this. Should a Phyſician, will ſome ſay, come to think that Arſenick is a good Remedy, and give it to his Patients, and ſo ſend 'em apace into another World, he would be juſtly puniſh'd in this Life, and in that which is to come, though he ſhould plead an unvoluntary Ignorance. This is the Image of an Hereſiarch. I anſwer that 'tis impoſſible, Morally ſpeaking, that there ſhould be ſuch a Phyſician; and therefore ſuch an Example ought not to be alledged. No Man can believe that Arſenick is a good Remedy, unleſs we ſuppoſe him like thoſe, who fancy that they are Kings, or made of Butter, and that therefore they muſt not come near the Fire. Such People are kept within ſight, or ſhut up by their Relations: No Body conſults them in a fit of Sickneſs, or about a Law Suit to follow their Advices. If it be ſuppoſed that a Chymiſt may ſincerely believe, that he knows how to Prepare Arſenick ſo as to make a good Remedy of it; one may give a very good Judgment about his Ignorance. Either he has Experienced the Virtue of that Remedy, or he has not Experienced it. If he has made no ſuch Experiment, we muſt ſay either that he does not believe what he ſays, or that he is Mad. If he has made the Experiment, and yet perſiſts in the ſame Opinion; one may certainly affirm that he is a Wicked or a Mad-Man. A ſincere Ignorance ſuppoſes that a Man has made it is buſineſs to examin a thing with an earneſt deſire of Knowing the Truth of it, and without being acted by Avarice, Pride, or any deſign of Cheating. Hereſiarcks cannot be reaſonably compared with that imaginary Phyſician, who Kills ſo many People, unleſs they have ſeen the Eternal Damnation of their firſt followers. If ſuch a ſight did not Convert 'em, they muſt needs be Mad, or ſpeak againſt their Conſcience; and in both caſes they ought to be deliver'd to the Secular Power; In the firſt caſe to be ſhut up in a Publick Houſe for Mad-men, and in the ſecond, to ſuffer the Puniſhment which thoſe deſerve, who Blaſpheme againſt God whom they know. No body deſires that ſuch People ſhould be Tolerated.

As to the Puniſhment that a Phyſician ſhould deſerve before God, if he ſhould give Arſenick to his Patients, the thing may be thus determin'd. If he was a Mad-man, he will be judged as a Mad-man: If he was not Mad, he will be judged according as his Ignorance has been voluntary or unvoluntary. Now by a voluntary Ignorance we muſt underſtand ſuch an Ignorance as proceeds from Lazineſs, or from ſome other fault, which may be mended.

(D) Such an Omiſſion cannot be juſtified.] Paul Jovius, Scævola de Sainte Marthe, and many other Elogiſts have often committed the ſame fault. Were they afraid that a date would ſpoil the Harmony of a Period? Or had they a mind to be ſhort? How vain would ſuch Excuſes be! If they went upon ſuch Ridiculous Reaſons, why didn't they put in the Margin what they ſhould not have Omitted? I am ſure that upon ſome Occaſions they have been ſilent, becauſe they did not know in what Year their Hero was Born or Dead. The Author of M. Ruffi's Encomium cannot be excuſed upon ſuch an Ignorance. But will ſome ſay in his Vindication, does he not ſay that the Hiſtory of Marſeilles was Printed when the Author was but 35 Years of Age? Does he not ſay that the Author lived 82 Years? Is it not an eaſy thing to infer from thence, that he was Born in the Year 1607, and that he Died in 1689. I anſwer in the Negative, becauſe he does not tell us that the Hiſtory of Marſeilles was Printed in 1642, and that date is neither to be ſeen in the Epiſtle Dedicatory, nor in the Preface, nor in the King's Licence, nor in any other part of the Prolegomena: And therefore we want another Book to know the Year in which that Author was Born or Died. It is therefore a Fault: for a Reader ſhould not be ſo much as obliged to turn to ſome other Pages of the ſame Book upon ſuch an occaſion. Much leſs ought an Author to impoſe upon us the neceſſity of conſulting another Book.

(A) Their Enterpriſe occaſion'd their own Ruin, and] They, who conſpired againſt him, were (b) Timaſus and Promotus, who had lately Commanded the Army, and done Important Services —— Tatian, who had Govern'd all the Eaſt in the abſence of Theodoſius —— and Proculus, Tatian's Son, Governour of Conſtantinople, a young, bold and daring Man. Rufinus being informed of all their Deſigns, prepoſſeſt the Emperor in his behalf, and repreſented to him, (c) That the Favours he daily received from his Majeſty made him Odious to the whole Court; that tho' he was never ſo careful to prevent the Murmurs of thoſe, who Envied him, new Cabals and Factions were daily form'd againſt him; that he muſt needs ſink, unleſs he be ſupported by the ſame Hand, that raiſed him; that he was ſenſible of his want of Merit, and gloried only in the kindneſs his Majeſty had for him, and in expreſſing his acknowledgment for it all the Days of his life. Having thus ingaged the Emperor to Protect him, he made it his buſineſs not only to avoid being Surpriſed, but alſo to deſtroy his Enemies —— Being in Council with Promotus, he had ſeveral Conteſtations with him. (d) The Emperor went out, and then their diſpute began again: Both of 'em maintain'd their Opinions, and grew hot upon it. Rufinus ſpoke ſome offenſive words; whereupon Promotus fell into a Paſſion, and gave him a Box on the Ear. —— The Emperor, to whom Rufinus immediately Complain'd, was very angry at it. He openly declar'd, that he would no longer ſuffer ſuch Diviſions and Intrigues, and the Authors of 'em; that he would teach 'em to live Peaceably, and to conſider thoſe whom

---

* See the Elogy of Ruffi in the Hiſtory of Marſeilles 1696, written by his Nephew Antony Ruffi, a Religious of the Abbey of Lerins.

† Flechier, hiſtoire de Theodoſe, B. 4. pag. 433. Paris 1680. in 12.

|| Born at Elusa according to Claudian. 'Twas then the Metropolis of the Countrey now called Armagnac in Gaſcony properly ſo called.

(1) Zozim. l. 4. Ambr. Ep. 53.

(2) Claudian. l. 1. contra Ruff.

(3) Zoz.

(b) Flechier, hiſtoire de Theodoſe, Book 4. pag. 434. ad ann. 391.

(c) Id. ib. pag. 435. ad ann. 392.

(d) Zoz l. 4.

occaſion'd their own Ruin, and confirm'd him in his Power. He was Baptized with (B) great Pomp in the Year 394. The Spite he conceived againſt Stilico, who was above him after the Death of Theodoſius, put him upon Treacherous Deſigns, whereby he undid himſelf. * He took advantage of his Maſter's Weakneſs; he Imbroiled the Empires and the Emperors by his ſecret Practices with the Huns, the Goths, and the Alans, and went about to make himſelf Sovereign, or at leaſt Independent upon his Maſters and his Enemies. He was kill'd † in the Year 395. See Moreri. His Death put an end to Claudian's Doubts about Providence; they vaniſh'd away aſſoon as he heard of the Fall of that inſolent and unjuſt Favourite. I ſhall make ſome Reflections (C) upon his words; which will give me occaſion to inquire whether whom he had an Affection for; and that if they continued to be jealous of Rufinus, he would raiſe him ſo far above them, that they would be forced to Reſpect and perhaps to Obey him. That Prince, who knew how to make himſelf Fear'd, when there was a neceſſity for it, ſpake theſe words ſo warmly, that from that time no body durſt Murmur. He turn'd Promotus out of the Court, and almoſt at the ſame time he made Rufinus Prefect of the Pretorium. The new dignity of this Favourite, and the Emperor's protection, on which he entirely relied, inabled him to revenge himſelf more eaſily of his Enemies. Promotus did not live long after his Diſgrace, for having received Orders to go and joyn the Army, and to March towards the Baſtarnæ, who were Plundering Thrace, he was kill'd in an Ambuſh, by a Party of thoſe Barbarians: Several People accuſed Rufinus of that Treachery. Proculus's (2) Death was not leſs Diſmal. That Miniſter had him accuſed of ſeveral Crimes, bribed the Commiſſioners appointed to Try him, obliged them underhand to Condemn him to Death, and contrived the Matter ſo that the Pardon, which the Emperor ſent him, came after the Execution. He croſs'd Tatian (3) in ſome Domeſtick Concerns, and Timaſius would not have been more Fortunate than the reſt, had he not endeavoured to gain the Affection of that Favourite, and made himſelf an Accomplice of his Crimes.

* Flechier, ibid. pag. [illegible].

† But according to Mr. Flechier ibid. pag. 437. in the Year 397.

(2) Zoz. l. 4.

(3) Ambr. ep. 53.

(B) He was Baptiſed with great Pomp.] M. Flechier has given us a noble Deſcription of it, next to a Preamble, which is a Maſter-piece, and therefore I ſhall ſet down his Words ſomewhat at large. " (a) " Rufinus, who govern'd the Empire with an Abſo- " lute Power in the abſence of Theodoſius——— " had for a long time Concealed his Vanity and Am- " bition under the appearances of an affected Mo- " deſty: And whether he had a mind that the Em- " peror who loved him, ſhould have a good Opi- " nion of him, or whether he was willing to give " leſs Umbrage to the Courtiers, who envied his " Fortune, he grew every day more Powerful, with- " out ſeeming to be more Proud. He was deſirous " to get Wealth by private means; and tho' he " loved Pomp and Statelineſs, his Avarice gave a " check to his Pride. But when he ſaw that " he could rely upon his Maſter's Affection, " being loaded with the Wealth he had recei- " ved from him, or unjuſtly acquired, he gave a " full ſcope to his Inclinations, and grew Inſolent, " as ſoon as he believed he might be ſo with Im- " punity. He got a great many Creatures, appear- " ed Abroad with a more Magnificent Equipage " than became a private Man, and built more State- " ly Houſes than the very Palaces of the Emperors. " He had taken a particular care to build near the Sub- " urb of Chalcedon (4), a Houſe of Pleaſure ſo vaſt, " that one would have taken it for a Town, and ſo " full of Ornaments and Precious Goods, that one " could hardly believe that a private Man had been " able to bear ſuch exceſſive Charges. On the one " ſide they were building a large Church in Honour " of St. Peter and St. Paul; and on the other, at a " ſmall diſtance, a Monaſtery was to be ſeen upon " a riſing Ground, which was to ſupply the want of " Clergy-Men in that Church. When thoſe Buildings " were finiſh'd, Rufinus reſolved to be Baptized, and " at the ſame time to Celebrate the Dedication of " that New Church with all imaginable Pomp——— " (b) Adding a great deal of Oſtentation and Vain- " Glory to a little Religion, (5) he call'd together " the Biſhops of the ſeveral parts of the Eaſtern " Empire, eſpecially thoſe, who were poſſeſt of the " firſt Sees. Nay, he intreated by repeated Letters, " the moſt Famous Anachorets of Egypt to leave " their Solitude, in order to aſſiſt at the Ceremony. " The great Station he was in, in that Empire, " whereof he had the chief Direction under Arcadi- " us, moved a great many Biſhops to ſet out upon " the firſt Invitation, and to bring along with them " the moſt Holy Men of their Provinces. The Aſ- " ſembly was very numerous. There were in it " three Patriarchs, Nectarius of Conſtantinople, Theo- " philus of Alexandria, and Flavian of Antioch. Gre- " gory Biſhop of Nyſſa, Amphilocus of Iconium, Paul " of Heraclea, Dioſcorus of Helenopolis, and many " other Famous Prelates arrived there before the " reſt. The chief Perſons of the Nobility and " Clergy, and an innumerable Multitude of People " reſorted thither, ſome to Honour the Feaſt, others " to make their Court to that Favourite, and ma- " ny to ſatisfy their Curioſity. This Ceremony was " performed in the Month of September. The " Church was hung with fine Tapeſtry; the Altar " glittered with Gold and precious Stones. The " Conſecration was made in great Order and with " all poſſible Magnificence. The Service being o- " ver, they proceeded to Rufinus's Baptiſm with the " ſame Pomp. The Patriarch Nectarius adminiſtred " it to him, and the Famous Evagrius of Pontus, who " had been ſent for from Egypt with the Anachoret " Ammonius, received at the coming out of the " Font (6) that Regenerated Man, who did not " long preſerve his Innocency. Thus ended that " Solemnity, which would have been one of the " moſt Holy and moſt Magnificent of the Eaſtern " Church, had it not been attended with a Prophane " Luxury, and had not that Miniſter endeavoured " to get again from the People by his Injuſtice what " he ſeem'd to have ſpent for God upon that oc- " caſion.

(a) Flechier, ubi ſupra pag. 486. ad. ann. 394.

(4) Zozom. l. 8. c. 17.

(b) Flechier, ibid. pag. 488.

(5) Theodoret. l. 1. c. 31. Socrat. lib. 2. c. 5. Pallad. in Lauſiac. c. 4.

(5) Pallad. in Lauſiac.

(C) Some Reflections upon Claudian's Doubts.] He ſays that the Beautiful Order, which appears in the World, moved him to believe that it is directed by the moſt wiſe Laws of an Infinite God; but that the diſorder, which prevails among Men, the Proſperity of the Wicked, and the Miſery of Good Men, induced him to believe, as Epicurus did, that all things had been made by Chance, and that the Gods did not concern themſelves with the Government of the World. At laſt, ſays he, the Puniſhment of Rufinus has removed my Doubts; I acquit the Gods; I do no more complain that the Wicked have got ſo much Power; they are only raiſed to fall from a higher place.

Sæpe (c) mihi dubiam traxit ſententia mentem,
Curarent Superi terras, an nullus ineſſet
Rector, & incerto fluerent mortalia caſu.
Nam cum diſpoſiti quæſiſſem fœdera mundi,
Præſcriptoſque maris fines, annique meatus,
Et lucis, noctiſque vices: tunc omnia rebar
Conſilio firmata Dei, qui lege moveri
Sidera, qui fruges diverſo tempore naſci,
Qui variam Phœben alieno juſſerit igne
Compleri, Solemque ſuo: porrexerit undis
Littora; tellurem medio libraverit axe.
Sed cum res hominum tanta caligine volvi
Aſpicerem, lætoſque diu florere nocentes,
Vexarique pios: rurſus labefacta cadebat
Religio, cauſſæque viam non ſponte ſequebar
Alterius, vacuo quæ currere ſemina motu
Affirmat, magnumque novas per inane figuras
Fortuna, non arte, regi: quæ Numina ſenſu
Ambiguo vel nulla putat, vel neſcia noſtri.
Abſtulit hunc tandem Rufini pœna tumultum,
Abſolvitque Deos. Jam non ad culmina rerum
Injuſtos creviſſe queror, tolluntur in altum,
Ut lapſu graviore ruant.

(c) Claudian. in Rufin. lib. 1. init.

I have promiſed in (d) the Article of Marechal d'Ancre, to mention in this place Balzac's Reflections upon a thought of Malherbe like that of Claudian: I do now perform my Promiſe. " (e) 'Tis true " that this was a common thing, before it was Re- " formed by the Chriſtian Religion. The Gods " were charged with all the Crimes of Men. The " Divine Providence was every day Indited by ſome " body

(d) See Concini Remark

(e) Balzac, Socrate Chretien p.m. 23

whether all those, who have maintain'd the Orthodox Opinion concerning Providence, have well observed the Rules of a Disputation. Gabriel Naudé affirms that "body, who complain'd that the things of this "World did not go, as he could have wish'd. Their "Poets too frame it an Evidence against God. This "is an old saying alledged by Cicero, and there is "nothing so obvious in the Heathen Poets, as the "Crimes of their Gods, and of Destiny. Crimen Deorum, Fatorum crimen, &c. Corinna is Sick, and "if she dies of her Sickness, says a Poet who was in "Love with her, the Death of such a beautiful Woman will be the Crime of the God of Physick.

"Tam formosa tuum mortis crimen eris.

"Nay since the Empire of Constantine, and under the "Children of Theodosius, there are some Instances "of those Poetical Blasphemies, and of that Prophane "Liberty. If Rufinus had not been punish'd for his "Crimes, the Gods would have been looked, as "Rufinus's Abettors and Accomplices.

"Abstulit hunc tandem Rufini pœna (a) tumultum,
"Absolvitque Deos.

"One of our Poets said something like it, but in "a very Excellent manner, and his Copy exceeds "all his Originals. I take it to be a Master-piece: "'Tis in that Ode, which may be set above the Finest and most Elaborate Odes of the Ancients. "The God of Seine speaks to a Favourite, who was "going over the Pont-Neuf. I shall add the following words of Menage to those of Balzac: (b) Ton chomage, Et le ciel accusé de supporter tes crimes, est resolu de se justifier, (And Heaven being accused of Favouring thy Crimes, is resolved to vindicate it self) is not originally Claudian's: Many of the Authors, who lived before him have said the same thing. Cicero in the third Book de natura Deorum: Diogenes quidem Cynicus dicere solebat, Harpalum, qui temporibus illis prædo felix habebatur, contra Deos testimonium dicere, quod in illa fortuna tam diu viveret. And in another place of the same Book: Improborum igitur prosperitates, secundæque res redarguunt, ut Diogenes dicebat, vim omnem Deorum ac potestatem. Martial:

Nullos esse Deos, inane cœlum
Affirmat Selius; probatque, quod se
Factum, dum negat hæc, videt beatum.

Seneca says in that sense, Deorum crimen, Sylla tam felix: and an ancient Comick Poet, Θεῶν δ᾽ ὄνειδος, τοὺς κακοὺς εὐδαιμονεῖν.

Barthius (c) has Collected a great many such Sayings, and has not omitted those that are to be found in Holy Writ (d). One may bring under this Head all the Passages of the Ancients, wherein Fortune is reviled, as a blind, inconstant, rambling, and unjust Being, that favours unworthy Persons. I shall only set down one of those Passages out of Pliny. (e) Invenit inter has utrasque sententias medium sibi ipsa mortalitas numen, quo minus etiam plana de Deo conjectatio esset. Toto quippe mundo, & locis omnibus, omnibusque horis omnium vocibus Fortuna sola invocatur: una nominatur, una accusatur, una agitur rea, una cogitatur, sola laudatur, sola arguitur, & cum conviciis colitur volubilis, a plerisque vero & cæca etiam existimata, vaga, inconstans, incerta, varia, indignorumque fautrix. Huic omnia expensa, huic omnia feruntur accepta: & in tota ratione mortalium, sola utramque paginam facit. Adeoque obnoxiæ sumus sortis, ut Sors ipsa pro Deo sit, qua Deus probatur incertus.

It may be said that in all Ages and among all Nations, without excepting the Age we live in, and Christianity, the Prosperity of Wicked Men has occasion'd many Murmurs against God, and raised many Doubts about Providence. On the other side that Objection has been answered at all times and in all Countries; and yet it has been continually Revived: So that what is said of the Palm-Tree may be applied to it, curvata resurgo. We ought to be persuaded that it is a false and insignificant Objection; but it will not be improper to examin whether Claudian made a good Answer to it.

Perhaps some would tell him; you have not taken the right way; the only answer you should have made to your difficulty, was to consider the vast and immense Idea of the most perfect Being, and to draw this Consequence from it: He is the Author and Governour of all things; and therefore nothing comes to pass but what is directed in a most Wise, Just and Admirable Manner. This is certainly the true way of removing all Doubts: Silence Reason; (f) let it acquiesce to Authority: God hath said so, whatever it be, God has done it, God has permitted it; it is therefore true, just, wisely done, and wisely permitted. If you enter into the Discussion of each particular Argument, you'll never see an end of the Matter, and after a thousand Disputes, you'll be obliged to have recourse to Authority, and to the immense Idea of the most perfect Being. But since we must come to that at last, let us keep stedfastly to it, mistrusting our imperfect Knowledge, and fully persuaded that the best use of Reason as to those things is not to Reason at all. When a Man engages in a Disputation, he must undertake to shew his Adversary that he is in the wrong; but he must not pretend that his Adversary will acquiesce in his first and second Answers. The Rules of a Disputation require that each Party may be allowed to reply, as often as he can answer an Argument by another Argument, and till the Matter be brought to the first Principles. If I can shew a Man that his Assertion is contrary to the common Notions, and that mine is a natural and necessary consequence of those Notions; I am not obliged to hear him any longer, by virtue of this Axiom, Adversus negantem principia non est disputandum. But if I give only a probable Solution of his Objections, and he is able to bring in new Difficulties as probable as my Solution, I cannot require of him that he should acquiesce in my Answers: I must look out for a new Solution of his new Difficulties; and if I can find none that is evident, or that will not admit of a specious Answer, I ought to give over the Dispute without pretending to have got the Victory; otherwise I should imitate the French Converters. About the Year 1680, those Gentlemen offered to enter upon a Conference about Religion with their erring Brethren: They promised to hear their Doubts, and to clear them, and to instruct them in a very cordial manner: But after they had answered two or three times, they could no longer abide to be Contradicted, they would have their Explanations submitted to, otherwise they declared that their Adversaries were Obstinate. It had been better to say so at first: It is a Ridiculous thing to enter into a Discussion, if we will not suffer an Adversary to make a hundred Replies, if he can do it; and if he is able to alledge against the tenth Reply, an Argument as probable as the Objection which he proposed against the main Assertion. Such is the State of Disputations. Your Adversary attacks your Assertion, you answer him; but it often falls out that your answer lies more open to Difficulties than the Assertion it self. You ought therefore to refute his Reply: Your new Answer contains I know not what, that raises new difficulties more plausible than the first; therefore they must be examin'd, and so in infinitum, unless you bring in common (g) Notions, to non-plus your Antagonist. Such are the Laws of a Disputation; if you have no mind to observe them, 'tis better for you not to enter the Lists, being contented to say, this ought to be believed without Reasoning: God said so; that's enough.

What Laws are to be observed in a Disputation.

This would be an unjust Proceeding, if the State of the Question was this, Has God spoke? But it cannot be said to be unjust, when we dispute with Men, who acknowledge the Existence of a most perfect Being, and raise Doubts in their Minds because good Men are Unhappy, and wicked Men live in Prosperity. The only answer, that ought to be made to those Doubting Men, is this. You are persuaded of the Existence of a most perfect Being; you ought therefore to believe that it Governs all things in a most perfect manner: For if you don't draw this Consequence from the Principle which you admit, you are Ignorant of the first Rules of common Sense, and you might as well argue thus; The Sun cannot produce darkness, therefore it has produced it. That it may the better appear that we ought to keep to that short answer, and to the general Principle of the Existence of God, I will shew the Inconveniencies, which arise from a particular Discussion of each Argument. In the first place, it is certain that in such a case you are obliged to answer all the Replies of an Adversary, till you can bring an Argument against him, to which no reasonable Reply can be made: Such are the Laws of a Disputation, as I have already observed. In the second place, it is certain that your particular Arguments will be an-

(f) I was dumb, I opened not my Mouth because thou didst it. Psalm. 39. ver. 10.

(g) By common Notions I understand in general all the Principles, which the two contending Parties are agreed upon.

Rufinus has been praised (D) by three or four celebrated Historians; but there is no such thing.

RUGGERI † (Cosimo) a Florentine, introduced himself into the Court of France as a great Astrologer, when Catherine de Medicis favour'd that sort of People. He was a Man of parts, and had the Reputation of being Learned: Being very bold even to Impudence, he thrusted himself among Persons of Quality, and was a great Intreaguer. Catherine de Medicis bestowed upon him the Abby of St. Mahe, in the Lower Bretaigne. He calculated the Nativity of all the Lords of the Court, and went about it in such a manner as he thought most proper to get Mony from them ‖. At last, he was accounted a Diviner and a Magician, and in the Year 1574, he found himself forced in infinitum, and that the Answers will be no less plausible, as it will appear from this Specimen. Suppose our Poet had acquainted another Man with the Reason, that removed all his Doubts: He would have told him, since Rufinus has been punish'd, there is a Providence, whereby all things are wisely and justly govern'd. The Prosperity of that wicked Man did not prove that Providence was asleep, but on the contrary, that it was preparing by degrees a severe Punishment for him; he was rais'd that he might be the better crush'd to pieces by falling from a high place: tolluntur in altum, ut lapsu graviore ruant. Claudian might have been answered, if you have nothing else to say, the difficulty remains still; tho' your Solution be never so (a) ancient, it is not the better for it; whilst you resolve a great Difficulty, you lie open to one that is greater still. Your Particle UT strikes one with horror. You ascribe to a most perfect Being, who is consequently infinitely good, a Motive and a final Cause, which is so far from having any goodness in them, are the most malicious and Tyrannical Character that can be conceiv'd. 'Tis just as if one of our Emperors designing to inflict a capital Punishment upon some of his Domesticks, should make 'em Governors of Provinces, and suffer 'em to exercise all sorts of Extortions, and to suck the Substance of the People, in order to punish 'em more severely. If you had been so bold as to say of Theodosius what you say of God, that he raised Rufinus to the highest Dignities to crush him the better, and to shew his Subjects his Soveraign Power of raising and depressing Men, he would have had you hanged, as a Satyrical and Insolent Poet. Claudian would doubtless be sensible of the heinousness of his UT and of his final cause, and would desire that this Word should not be taken in a strict sense. He would say that Providence had not loaded wicked Rufinus with good things, in order to do him more mischief, but in hopes that that Favourite would make a good use of 'em. He would add, that according to the Laws of Nature, the fall of Bodies is so much the greater, as they fall from a higher place, and that therefore Rufinus's Elevation could not but aggravate his punishment, when the ill use he continually made of Heavenly Favours call'd for it. But Claudian would be answered that this does not remove difficulties: Hopes are not to be found in the Divine Nature; God most certainly knows whatever shall come to pass; he knew most certainly that Rufinus would make an ill use of his Favours; and therefore it (b) had been better to prevent him, than to bear his Crimes for many Years, in order to inflict upon him a punishment, which cannot make up the mischief he has done, the oppression of so many innocent Persons, the death of so many People, and the ruin of so many Families. 'Tis but a poor satisfaction for a Province desolated by a Governor, to have him punish'd; it (c) continues in the miserable condition it was in before, and sometimes the Guilty Man is the better for it. I don't carry farther the Replies, which our Poet could make; doubtless he could make a great many, and his Adversary would do the same. I suppose that after a long disputation his Adversary would tell him: I believe as well as you, that whatever has happen'd in the case of Rufinus is Just, Wise, and perfect in respect to God; but I don't believe it by virtue of your Arguments. The Idea of the most perfect Being is sufficient to those, who know how to make a good use of their Reason. I know some Men, who have read several times Boetius, de Consolatione Philosophiæ, and find a great difference between the Objections and the Answers of that Author. Boethius was both a great Philosopher, and a very good Man. Groaning under the weight of his Misfortune, and overwhelm'd with Grief, he supposes that Philosophy comes to comfort him. He raises several Objections about Providence: Philosophy answers them as well as she can; but whereas the Difficulties of Boethius are fitted to the meanest capacity, the Solutions can hardly be understood without the greatest attention, and the quickest apprehension. Philosophy mistrusts her self, and requires most times that she may be allow'd to wind about, and to trace up things higher; and tho' what she says be never so solid, it happens sometimes that we don't understand it; and if she convinces us, she does it most times without inlightening the Mind. Such is the Opinion of some Persons who have read Boethius. They have acquainted me that a most subtil Professor of the XVII. Century, brings in a Heathen, who raises many Difficulties about Providence, and gives him no other expedient, but the assistance of the Divine Grace. (d) Unde Philosophus noster ethnicus tot difficultatibus oppressus, nisi gratia divina animetur, ad cognitionem Dei unius ac infiniti ab universo nunquam assurget.

Before I make an end of this Remark, I must take notice of the Injustice of some Persons, who fancy that those who reject the Reasons they alledge for a Doctrine, reject the Doctrine it self. There is a very great difference between those two things, and they are easily distinguish'd by equitable and understanding Men, who entertain no ill suspicion of those, who cannot abide that weak and wrong Arguments should be made use of to maintain a Truth. This however may be liable to some abuses; for, (to give an Instance of it) the Pyrrhonists under pretence of confuting only the Arguments of the Dogmatists for the existence of God, did actually undermine the Doctrine it self. At first, they (e) declared that they follow'd the common Opinion, without addicting themselves to any particular Sect; that they acknowledg'd the existence of the Gods, honour'd them, and ascrib'd a Providence to them; but that they could not abide that the Dogmatists should be so rash as to reason about it: Afterwards they proposed their Objections, which overthrowing Providence, tended to overthrow the Existence of God. See Sextus Empiricus (f), who instead of grounding his Doubts, as Claudian did, upon the Prosperity of Wicked Men, grounds them upon Adversity, and the many Evils that prevail in the World. He alleges an Argument, which has been better express'd than Confuted by Lactantius. That Argument may be seen in the Article Paulicians: Father Theophilus Raynaud has observ'd, that according to Arnobius, it is an insoluble one. (g) Posset denique cum Sexto Empirico Lib. 1. Volum. 3 Pyrrhonicarum hypothyposeon cap. 1. fieri tale argumentum, quod si Deus sit, cum sit bonus infinite, & perfectissimus, nulla in mundo esset malitia aut imperfectio: nam contrarium unum infinitum, destruit totaliter aliud. Cui argumento responsurus Arnobius lib. 2. num. 49. post multam exaggerationem difficultatis, insolubilem existimare videtur. Alexander autem quem refert & late rejicit Simplic. 2. cœli, in fine, concedit Deum non posse mala excludere, alioqui ea omnino fuisse prohibiturum. Et verò hoc ipsum argumentum multos Philosophos vexasse, testatur Lactantius libro de ira Dei cap. 13. Sed recte respondet Scot. &c.

(D) [Has been praised by three or four celebrated Historians.] " (h) Claudian does very much inveigh a-" gainst Rufinus—— and yet Zozimus, Zonaras, Eu-" tropius, and Paulus Orosius praise him exceedingly. They are Naude's words; he is very much mistaken. (i) Orosius speaks ill of Rufinus, and says nothing in his Commendation: Eutropius does not at all mention him; for his History ends with the death of Jovian, who liv'd before the Empire of Theodosius. I find nothing in Zonaras that relates to our Rufinus. Rufinus mention'd by that Annalist, (k) was Consul of Rome, when Pyrrhus made War against the Romans: As for Zozimus, he is so far from praising Rufinus excessively, that he represents him as a wicked Man: I could prove it out of several Passages of his History, but this will be sufficient. Pagi & † Mezeray, Abregé Chronol. pag. 253. He calls him Cosmus Roger.

‖ Garasse, Doctrine curieuse, pag. 135.

(a) Juvenal Sat. 10. v. 105. Said before him, speaking of Sejanus. Nam qui nimios optabat honores, Et nimias poscebat opes, numerosa parabat Excelsæ turris tabulata, unde altior esset casus, & impulsæ præceps immane ruinæ.

(b) Cur omnium crudelissimus tamdiu Cinna regnavit? At dedit pœnas. Prohiberi melius fuit, impedirique ne tot summos viros interficeret, quam aliquando pœnas dare. Cicero de natura Deorum lib. 3. pag. m. 679.

(c) Exul ab octava Marius bibit, & fruitur Diis iratis. Juvenal. Sat. 1. v. 49.

(d) [illegible]

(e) Sext. Empiric. [illegible]

(f) Sext. Empiric. ibid.

(g) Theoph. Raynaud. [illegible] Theolog. Natural. [illegible]

(h) Naude, [illegible]

(i) [illegible]

(k) Zonar. [illegible] Edit. [illegible] 1670.

felt involved in the Accuſation of La Mole (A) and Coconas, who among other Crimes were Indicted for Witchcraft againſt the Life of Charles IX. He is call'd † Coſmo the Italian in that Tryal, and he was condemn'd to the Gallies; but the Queen Mother ‡ ſet him at liberty ſometime after. He perſuaded La Mole and ſome others, that he could make Wax-Images, ſome of which would inſpire Love into Women, and others make any Body die in a lingring Condition ||. He began in 1604, to ſet up for a Writer of Almanacks, and continued to do ſo every year: They were intermixed with Sentences taken out of the Latin Authors §. He liv'd a long life, and Survived * all the Italian Courtiers of Catherine de Medicis. He died at Paris in the Year 1615, and becauſe he openly and inſolently declared that he dy'd an Atheiſt, his Body was depriv'd of Burial. He had been accus'd in [illegible] At Roſi [illegible] quidem, qui [illegible] innumerabilium [illegible] pri- vatim extiterit, & univerſæ reipublicæ detrimentum attulerit, [illegible] admiſſis [illegible]. One can hardly conceive how ſuch a Man as Gabriel Naudæus, who had a vaſt Reading, and a great Memory, could commit ſo many Miſtakes in ſo few lines.

(A) In the Accuſation of la Mole and Coconas.] They were two Favourites of the Duke of Alençon, Brother to Charles IX. who had put their Maſter upon wicked Deſigns, or had been inſtrumental in the execution of them. I am apt to believe that they were falſly accuſed of ſome Crimes; but they deſerved to ſuffer Death for the things that were truly laid to their charge. I'll quote Mezeray firſt; and then le Laboureur. (a) They found in la Mole's Houſe a Wax Image which one Coſmo Rugier, a Florentin, and a great Cheat, had made for him to enchant a Gentlewoman, with whom he was in love: The Queen Mother was willing that People ſhould believe it had been made againſt the King; which he denied all along: Nevertheleſs he was beheaded with Coconas. 'Tis ſaid that two Princeſſes, who were in love with 'em, ſtole away their Heads, and embalmed 'em in order to keep 'em: One of their Accomplices was broke upon the Wheel, and Rugier was ſent to the Gallies. The Queen Mother, who gave credit to Diviners and Sorcerers, had him ſet at liberty ſome time after to make uſe of him. Le Laboureur tells us, that the Queen would have had Coſmo hanged, and he does not ſay that 'twas ſhe who ſet that Galley-ſlave at liberty: I call him ſo, tho' I know that he never rowed. (b) "Tourtai was condemn'd to be hang'd, and to "be put firſt of all to the Rack—— Being ask'd "whether one Coſmo, an Italian, knew any thing of "the matter, he anſwered, That there is an Italian, "a black Man, with an ugly Face, who plays upon "the Inſtruments, wears ſometimes round and ſome- "times Taffety Breeches, and always black Cloaths, "and is a very luſty Man, and very much conver- "ſant with la Noele; but he does not know whether "he knows any thing of that enterprize". Theſe Words are explain'd by le Laboureur in the following manner. (c) "That Italian is Coſmo Rogieri, whom "I have already (d) mention'd, and whom the Queen "had placed with the Duke her Son, under pre- "tence of teaching him the Italian Tongue, but in "truth to be a Spy upon him; being inform'd or "afraid that a Party was forming to ſet him upon "the Throne after the death of Charles IX. prefe- "rably to the King of Poland his Brother, whoſe re- "turn into France, they deſign'd to prevent. He "confeſt afterwards to ſome body, that after he had "given ſome Advice to the Queen, he found out "that the Faction would be ſo ſtrong by reaſon of "the Hatred which the Paris-Maſſacre had occaſion'd, "and becauſe that Prince was ſuſpected of Cruelty, "and the Queen and the Houſe of Guiſe would have "again the Government in their hands, that he re- "ſolved to follow his Maſter's Fortune, not doubting "that this Faction would ſucceed in their Attempt, "being ſupported by great Men, and by the Secre- "taries of State, and many Members of the Parlia- "ment He was ſtill more confirm'd in that Opini- "on, when having diſcover'd to the Duke the ſecret "Converſations he had with the Queen, the Duke "truſted him with all his Deſigns, and made uſe of "him to wheedle his Mother with ſome inconſide- "rable things that he reported to her, whereby he "had an occaſion to diſcourſe with her, and dive "into her Thoughts. Thus he was deeply engaged "in that Deſign; but the Queen having diſcover'd "the whole matter, caus'd him to be impriſon'd, as "well as the reſt, and brought to his Tryal. He "bore the Torture with great Reſolution upon "more than fourſcore Heads, and even upon many "which he himſelf had diſcover'd, without confeſſing "any thing relating to the Conſpiracy or the En- "chanted Medals; for he was accuſed of having "made a Medal of King Charles, to bring him to "his death, and two more for the Duke of Alençon "and la Mole his Favourite, who had them ty'd to "their Hats in order to keep up an inviolable Friend- "ſhip betwixt 'em. But they proved very fatal to "la Mole, who upon this vain Aſſurance ſet up for "a mighty Man; and he was ſo far from being ſup- "ported by any Friends in his Misfortune that his "own Maſter and good Friend gave Evidence againſt "him. He did not think that our Flowers de Luce, "which are ſaid to have been ſent from Heaven, "have a ſupernatural Virtue againſt Charms. If "it be true that Coſmo gave away many Charms, "he kept a good one for himſelf againſt hanging. "Catherine de Medicis would have had him hanged; "but he would not: She had only the ſatisfaction to "ſee him chain'd, and his Journey to Marſeilles "was the only Toil and Fatigue that he went thro. "He got ſome Friends there, who prevail'd with "the Captain of his Galley to take him into his "Houſe; which was never ſo much frequented upon "his account, as it was then by reaſon of that illu- "ſtrious Galley-ſlave. He turn'd it into a School "of Mathematicks and Judicial Aſtrology, having "a Guard, who look'd rather like a Man given him "out of Honour, than in order to obſerve him and "prevent his Eſcape". Thuanus ſays, That la Mole had a Wax Image prick'd in the Heart, and that Ruggeri being proſecuted as a Magician, was ſet at liberty by the Queen Mother. I ſhall ſet down Thuanus's Words and la Mole's Anſwers in the Remark E.

(B) He openly and inſolently declared that he died an Atheiſt.] Theſe are the Words of the Mercure François. (e) Old age, the Gout and the Stone, having reduced him to a dying Condition, his Friends adviſed him to think of God, and ſent for the Curate of the Pariſh; but he would not ſee him: They brought him ſome Capuchins; but he laugh'd at 'em. When he was told that he ſhould duly prepare himſelf to obtain God's Mercy, and be afraid of the laſt judgment, he anſwered: O ye Fools! there are no Devils but the Enemies that torment us in this World, nor any God beſides Kings and Princes who can raiſe us and do us good. If you prefer the Paraphraſe of a Jeſuit to the plainneſs of this Account, read the following Words. (f) "The "Gout and the Gravel—— like two Satellites of "Death, having ſeized on him, waſted and conſu- "med him; but they left him a ſound and a clear "Judgment to repent of his Sins. Four days be- "fore he died, the Curate of St. Medard gave him "a Viſit, and endeavour'd to make him ſenſible of "his Duty; but he would not hear him. Some "honeſt Capuchins were ſent for to try whether "they could work upon him: they came to ſee "him at the requeſt of ſome of his Friends, and "laid before him the ſeverity of God's Judgments, "and the Power and Malice of Satan in the laſt "days of a Man's Life, telling him that he ſhould "think of his Salvation. But he anſwer'd them "with the Tone of a Mad and deſperate Man, You "Fools, get out of my Chamber; I would have you "know that there are no other Devils but our Ene- "mies, who do us miſchief in this World, nor any "God beſides Kings and Princes who do us good: I "have lived in this Belief and I will die in it. They "omitted neither fair words, nor Threatnings to "bring him into the right way; but it was to no "purpoſe: From that time he went on uttering moſt "horrid Blaſphemies, as Lucilio (Lucilio Vanini) "had in the Year 1598. of having made uſe of Witchcraft (C) againſt the Life of Henry IV. and having anſwered the Queſtions that were put to him by M. de Thou, he was diſmiſt without any Puniſhment. I ſhall give an account † of this Paſſage, whereby it will appear that this wicked Man was extremely Impudent and very great with the Ladies. Many Reflections might be made upon his minding Aſtrology and Magick, tho' he believed (D) neither a God nor a Devil; for 'tis a general

---

† [illegible] ‡ Mezeray [illegible] pag. [illegible] 1615. § See the Remark A. || [illegible] * Garaſſe, ubi ſupra.

(a) Mezeray, Abrege Chronol. tome 5. pag. 157.

(b) Le Laboureur, Addit. to Caſtelnau, tom. 2. pag. 408.

(c) Id. ib. (d) Pag. 401.

(e) Mercure François, tom. 4. p. 46.

(f) Garaſſe, Doctrine curieuſe, pag. 156, 157.

† In the Remark D.

" had done upon the Wool-pile; 'till at laſt he " ended his wretched Life as Judas did, Infelicem " Spiritum non emiſit, ſed amiſit. The noiſe of his " Deſpair was immediately ſpread all over Paris; he was curſed by the People, and his Bo-" dy was expoſed in the Fields, as being unwor-" thy of Chriſtian Burial (g).

(C) Of having made uſe of Witchcraft againſt the Life of Henry IV.] That Prince being at Nantes in the Year 1598. was told that Coſmo Ruggeri was guilty of that Crime. There was a report that this Man, being then an Eccleſiaſtick, had a private Cloſet in the Caſtle of Nantes, wherein he ſhut up himſelf every day, under pretence of painting, but in truth to prick with a Needle a Wax Image like the King. He gave ſome Hopes that by this means the King would pine away with a lingring Diſeaſe. (h) Coſmus Rugerius tunc ſacris addictus ad regem delatus fuerat, quaſi ipſius vitæ deteſtandis magiæ artibus perniciem molitus eſſet. Nam in arce Nannetenſi ſpecie pingendi cellam peculiarem habuiſſe, in qua ceream imaginem, quæ regis ſpeciem referebat, diris epodis excantatam cottidie acu figebat, eaque re ſore ſpem fecerat, ut rex mox mortifero languore ſenſim abſumeretur. The King ordered M. de Thou, and another Judge to Inform againſt him. Coſmo being juridically Interrogated, anſwered firſt of all the Objection that was made to him, grounded upon his having been put to the Torture for ſuch a thing in the Year 1574. He maintain'd that he had been then falsly accuſed, and that his Innocence had been acknowledged by his Judges; (c) that his being ſuſpected of Magick, was only grounded upon his Skill in Aſtrology; becauſe People thought that he could not foretell ſo many things without the Aſſiſtance of the Devil, tho' he had only foretold them by an exact Knowledge of Nativities. He added that the great Affection he had conceived for the King long ago was ſufficient to clear him from the Crime, charged upon him. He ſaid that after the Paris-Maſſacre the Court of France took into Conſideration what they ſhould do with the King of Navarre, and the Prince of Conde, and that Catherine de Medicis ask'd him whether he had Calculated their Nativities; and that he anſwered her he had done it, and knew by that means they would occaſion no trouble in the Kingdom. He added that his anſwer prevented the ill Deſigns that were formed againſt 'em; that he had acquainted la Noue with it, and deſired him to give 'em notice of it, that for the time to come they might behave themſelves ſo as to Confirm what he had told Catherine meerly out of Love for them; ſince ſuch things could not be certainly diſcovered by Aſtrology (d). He concluded with ſaying that he hoped His Majeſty remembring ſo good a Service, would have more regard to it than to the Malicious and Falſe Accuſations of his Informers. M. de Thou gave an account of all theſe things to the King: That Prince acknowledged that la Noue had told him ſo at that time, and ordered that Ruggeri ſhould be ſet at Liberty, and that all Informations againſt him ſhould be Superſeded. The Ladies had already obtained the Pardon of that Wretched Man, who quickly appeared at Court very Familiar with them. (e) Intermiſſa ulterior in Coſmum inquiſitio & ipſe libertati reſtitutus fuit, & in arctam familiaritatem cum gynæceo venit, cujus favore a Rege, cum hæc diceret, jam gratia in mecano facta fuerat. M. de Thou, mentions a thing, which ought not to be omitted. Ruggeri, was ſo Impudent as to ſay that 'twas not he, but a Gardner of the ſame Name, who had been accuſed and puniſh'd in la Mole's time, and he impoſed in ſuch a manner that he had a Penſion of Hiſtoriographer beſtow'd upon him. (f) Homo impudentiſſimus ac perditiſſimus poſtea auſus eſt palam dicere quæ ad annum LXXIII. de Coſmo Rugerio commemorantur, ad ſe minime pertinere, ſed Touanum olitoris cujuſdam cognominis tunc petulanti errore allucinatum eſſe; eoque veſania venit, ut emendicato ſtipendio in aula obtinuerit, ut ſcribendæ hiſtoriæ munus ſibi demandaretur. That Man's Impudence was very great. The anſwers he made to the two Commiſſioners appointed to examine him at Nantes, ſigned with his own hand, were ſtill extant, wherein he acknowledged that he was the ſame Coſmo Ruggeri, who had been falſly accuſed, when la Mole was tried; but he maintain'd that he had been Gloriouſly acquitted: Whereas 'tis certain that he was Condemn'd to the Gallies. (g) In his (confeſſionibus) eundem ſe eſſe minime diffitetur, ſed per calumniam accuſatum, & poſtea honorifice, ſicut jam dixi, dimiſſum; in quo rurſum inſigniter mentitus eſt, nam ex archivis Curiæ tridem conſtat, eum poſt quæſtionem ad triremes damnatum eſſe, ſed mirorum in hoc hominum genus prono favore pœnam remiſſam fuiſſe, & cum duceretur, vinculis exemptum in aula ſtatim comparuiſſe. I muſt further add, that the Commiſſioners having told him at Nantes, that Judicial Aſtrology being a thing impious and unworthy of a Chriſtian, he was very much to blame for applying himſelf to it, eſpecially conſidering that he was a Prieſt; he excuſed himſelf as well as he could, and even ſpoke of that Science in a contemptible manner, and ſwore that he had never Calculated any Nativity ſince he was a Prieſt.

(D) His minding Aſtrology and Magick, tho' he believed neither a God nor a Devil.] Mark well the Confeſſion he made, when he was a Dying. There are no other Devils, ſaid he (i), but the Enemies who Torment us in this World, nor any God beſides Kings and Princes, who can raiſe us and do us good. He added, according to Garaſſe, (k) I have liv'd in this Belief, and I will die in it. If this Addition was made by that Jeſuit, I think it may be juſtified by the Laws of a Paraphraſe; for it is almoſt an undeniable thing, that an Old Man, who dies an Atheiſt, has been an Atheiſt a long time. People don't grow Irreligious upon their Death-Bed, nor even in their Old-Age; on the contrary (l) the greateſt part of the Libertins and Unbelievers renounce their Impiety in their Sickneſſes, and die very (m) Orthodox. 'Tis therefore very likely that Ruggeri had been for a long time ſuch as he died. To what purpoſe then did he caſt Nativities, and make Wax-Images, which he diſtributed as ſo many cauſes of Love and Sickneſs? Such things can hardly be reconciled: All thoſe, who mention his Death, make ſuch a Reflection upon it. (n) He had formerly made People believe———that he knew how to make Images, &c. and YET that Atheiſt did not believe that there was any Devil. (o) The wiſeſt Men were then (p) of Opinion, that he had no Knowledge of Necromancies, and INDEED THE ISSUE made it plainly appear. It is certain that ſince he did not believe the exiſtence of any Spirit diſtinct from Humane Souls, he muſt needs have look'd upon Magick as a thing in which there was no reality; and conſequently his pretending to make Images, which had the Power to Kill, or to inſpire Love, proceeded only from a greedy deſire of getting Money. It is not certain that he knew the Vanity of Aſtrology: A Man of Parts and Learning does clearly perceive that a piece of Wax in the ſhape of a Man or of a Woman, and pricked in the Heart, cannot produce in any body the deſire of Marrying a certain Perſon, or any other Paſſion. He evidently knows that a piece of Wax, which repreſents Henry IV. whether it be put near the Fire at Nantes, or pricked in ſeveral places in the ſame Town, cannot bring an Hectick and Mortal Fever upon the King at Paris. And therefore any Man of Senſe and Learning, who is perſuaded that thoſe Wax-Images have ſuch a Power, muſt needs know that thoſe Effects are produced by an inviſible Spirit, which works Immediately and Phyſically upon certain Perſons, whilſt thoſe Images are in ſuch Circumſtances. Ruggeri did not believe that there was any ſuch Spirit, and therefore he knew that thoſe Images had no ſuch Virtue. But it does not ſo evidently appear, that the Celeſtial Bodies are not capable of producing many effects upon Earth. 'Tis well known that ſome Perſons, who were accounted Atheiſts, ſeem'd to be perſuaded of the Influence of the Stars, even with reſpect to the free Actions of Men, and what we call

Fortune,

(g) Spizelius, Scrutinio Atheiſmi, pag. 13. He is in the wrong to place him among the Atheiſts, that were burnt alive.

(h) Thuan. de vita ſua lib. 6. ad ann. 1598. pag. 1214. col. 1. C.

(c) Cõs id autem pleriſque ſuſpectum fuiſſe, quod aſtrologiæ peritus certiorem ac ſibi cum paucis cognitam natalium horarum conficiendarum ſcientiam calleret, cujus ope ac ductu cum multa multis prædixiſſet, in eam veniſſe opinionem, quaſi occulta cum malis ſpiritibus familiaritate hæc didiciſſet. Id. ibid.

(d) Id autem non tam ex arte, quam adfectu erga ipſos bene animato feciſſe, quippe cum res ejuſmodi eſſet, ut per aſtrologicæ artis rationem præſtari non poſſet. Id. ib. col. 2. A.

(e) Id. ib. B.

(f) Id. ib.

general Opinion among Chriſtians, that if there are Devils, there is a God, and that thoſe who do not believe the Exiſtence of God, don't believe that there are

Fortune, or contingent Events. And therefore 'tis not certain that Ruggeri was ſenſible of the Vanity of Judicial Aſtrology. However I believe it may be ſaid, conſidering the turn of his Mind (a), that he caſt up Nativities, as Impoſtors uſe to do, without giving any Credit to them, and to Trick People out of their Money.

Perhaps it will be Objected to me, that it is as difficult to believe that a certain Planet, ſituated in a certain manner in the Figure of one's Nativity, is the Phyſical Cauſe of the kind Reception a Prince gives to a Man of Fifty Years of Age, who waits upon him at a certain Hour, as to believe that a Wax Image prick'd in the Heart can produce an act of Love in the Soul of a Man a Hundred Leagues off. To which I Anſwer, that this effect of the Planet appears to many People as Chimerical as the Effect of the Image, and I am one of 'em; but I repeat it again, 'tis an eaſier thing to believe the Power of the Planets, than that of thoſe Wax Figures. Not one Learned Man can be alledged, who believed that thoſe Figures inſpire Love, and occaſion Death a Hundred Leagues off by their own Power, and without the Interpoſition of any Spirit; but ſome Men of Learning may be alledged, who believed that without the help of good or bad Angels, the Planets of ones Nativity are the cauſe of his moſt accidental Adventures. 'Tis eaſily conceived that a piece of Wax prick'd at Nantes, heated and modified at ones Pleaſure, cannot be the Phyſical Cauſe of any thing at Rome; but 'tis known by Experience that, that the Virtue of the Sun produces a thouſand Things upon Earth Phyſically and as a true Cauſe: Which is the Reaſon why People are led into an Error, thinking that that the Operations of the Planets do likewiſe reach the Earth; which being once admitted will carry a Man a great way by degrees, and at laſt they are look'd upon as the Cauſe of every thing.

THAT if Judicial Aſtrology diſcovered Futurity, it would be a kind of black Magick.

I muſt obſerve by the by, that this Illuſion ſhould be more ſeverely repreſt than it is; for were it true that by means of an Horoſcope one may know beforehand the Happineſs or Misfortunes of others, the Circumſtances of their Marriages and Death, &c. were it true for inſtance that Gauric diſcovered by an Aſtrological Operation that King Henry would be Kill'd in a Duel, Aſtrology ſhould be accounted one of the Magical Arts, and of thoſe ways of knowing things to come, that are grounded on a Pact with the Devil. The pains Aſtrologers are at in caſting up a Nativity, and conſulting the Rules they have laid down upon the diſtinction of the Signs, the properties of the Houſes, the different Aſpects of the Planets, &c. I ſay, their Pains in that reſpect would be like that of Magicians, (b) who deſcribe Circles, make many Poſtures in them, utter certain Words, &c. On both ſides what a Man does would be only a ſign of Inſtitution, in whoſe preſence a Bad Angel would act in a certain manner. Any one, who conſiders the thing impartially, will plainly ſee that Magical Ceremonies, a Circle, a Bow, a Wand ſucceſſively pointed to the four Cardinal Points of the Horizon, ſome words uttered, and others written upon a piece of Paper, &c. can no more Cure a Man dangerouſly Sick, than an Horoſcope can diſcover whether a Man will meet with a Happy Match, whether he'll get the Love of ſome Princes, whether he will be Baniſh'd, whether he'll be a Rich Man in Land or Money, and whether he'll Die at Sea or at the Siege of a Town. Which ſhews that an Aſtrologer ſhould be liable to a greater Puniſhment, according as he tells more certainly the Truth of Things to come; for the certainty of his Predictions would be a ſign that he carefully performs the Ceremonies, by whoſe means the Devil ingages to foretell things to come. This further proves that Judicial Aſtrology cannot be a way of foretelling Future Events different from a Sieve, a Looking-Glaſs, Smoak, and many other (c) Abominations. From whence I conclude that the indulgence of the Eccleſiaſtical and Secular Courts for Aſtrologers is very much to Blame. There are very good Civil and Canonical Laws againſt that ſort of Men. They have been carefully Collected by a Profeſſor (d) of Padua, in a Book Publiſhed at Venice, in the Year 1662, but they are not put in Execution. Did not John Baptiſt Morin Regius Profeſſor at Paris, quietly enjoy his Penſions and Offices till he Died, tho' every Body knew he Calculated Nativities, and Boaſted Publickly that he had a wonderful Skill in it (e)? Had he ventured to maintain, that Relicks ſhould not be Worſhipp'd, he would have been degraded the very next Day; he would have been ſhamefully Expell'd; and if any conſiderable Perſon had Protected him, all the Clergy would have been in an uproar, and nothing could have Pacified them but the Depoſing of ſuch an Impious Man. But he was ſuffered to Practice all his Life-time, without being Puniſh'd for it, an Art, which muſt needs be Magical, if things to come may be known by it. I obſerve that 'tis a difficult thing to apprehend how they can be known by the Help of the Devil; for tho' the Knowledge of Angels be ſuppoſed never ſo great, it does not ſeem to include the Concatenation of all the Objects that muſt be known, to foretell ſuch and ſuch Things; and it were an Abſurd Thing to ſay that God reveals them to the Evil Spirits, whenever they have a mind to execute the Pact which they have Contracted with Man. The Abbot Furetiere (f) does very neatly ſet forth this Objection; but he forgets the main difficulty: He does not ſay that Man's free will would be a meer Chimera, if Angels could know a Man's Thoughts ten Years hence, by the Knowledge of the Connexion that is between Natural Cauſes and their Effects.

WHETHER it can well be concluded from the Exiſtence of Devils that there is a God.

Nothing could be more abſurd than to aſk, Whether it be poſſible that Ruggeri, who denied the Exiſtence of God, and of Good and Bad Angels, ſhould have believed that his Wax Images had ſome Virtue in them; but it were no abſurd Thing to put this Queſtion to all Atheiſts. 'Tis commonly believed that all thoſe, who deny the Exiſtence of God, do likewiſe deny by a neceſſary Conſequence the Exiſtence of all Spirits, and the Immortality of the Soul. I don't wonder that this ſhould be a Common Opinion; for I think there is no Example (g) of the Separation of thoſe two Blaſphemies; I mean that there never was any Atheiſt, who believed the Exiſtence of Devils and the Immortality of the Soul; or that there never was a Man perſuaded of the Truth of Magick, but believed the Exiſtence of God. Some Chriſtians, who are Orthodox in all other Points, cannot believe that Bad Angels concern themſelves with any thing, and reject without any Exception what is commonly ſaid of Magick and Sorcery. If they were contented to ſay that the Exiſtence and Operations of Bad Angels can only be proved from the Scripture, I ſhould not ſo much wonder at their Opinion; for 'tis certain that Reaſon affords great Difficulties againſt the Empire of the Devil, which are grounded on our Notions of God's Wiſdom and Goodneſs: But 'tis a great piece of Temerity, to ſay no worſe, in thoſe who deny that the Devil has any Power, to pretend to Reconcile their Opinion with the Scripture. However it be, the following Conſequence is Falſe and Unjuſt, you don't believe that there are any Devils, and therefore you don't believe that there is a God. As for this Conſequence, you don't believe that there is a God, and therefore you don't believe that there are any Good or Bad Angels, it ſeems to be very certain; for, as I have already ſaid, no Example can be alledged to diſprove it. Here is another Conſequence, which ſeems to be certain, there are Devils, therefore there is a God. The neceſſity of drawing this Concluſion appears ſo evident that 'tis generally affirmed that thoſe, who deny the Exiſtence of Devils, deprive the Orthodox of an undeniable Proof of God's Exiſtence. I confeſs that hitherto I have not ſeen any Body but ſeem'd to me fully perſuaded, that the Exiſtence of the Devil, is a neceſſary and irrefragable Proof of the Exiſtence of God; and you'll ſee no Man, who doubts never ſo little of this (h) laſt Truth, but denies that there are any Angels. However, I confeſs I have not a ſufficient Penetration to ſee that ſtrict Connexion, which every Body perceives between theſe two Aſſertions, There

(a) [illegible] that the King of Navarre's and the Prince of Condé's Horoſcopes [illegible] pointed that they would be [illegible], and [illegible] the [illegible] Aſtrology.

(b) See in the 13th Letter of [illegible] a long [illegible] of Magical Ceremonies.

(c) See the Alphabetical Catalogue [illegible] in the 37th Chapter of a Book printed at Paris, and afterwards in Holland 1692, intitled, Remarques ou Reflections critiques, morales & hiſtoriques ſur les plus belles & les plus agreables [illegible] I believe the Author [illegible] all this [illegible] of Martin del Rio's [illegible]

(d) Don Joſeph Maria Maravigilia Clerk Regular in his Pſeudomantia veterum & recentiorum explosa, ſive de fide divinationibus adhibenda.

(e) See the Article of this Morin.

(f) See Furetieriana, pag. 199, & ſeq. Edit. of Bruſſels.

(g) See hereafter what Reſtriction is put to this in ſpeaking of the Eaſtern Nations.

(h) That is, the Exiſtence of God.

are Devils. I shall say something about it. I must take notice of (E) Father Garaſſe's Faults.

RUTILIA.

are Devils; therefore there is a God. Laying aside the Scripture, to go upon Metaphyſical Principles, may one not ſay that God has Created no other Spirits but the Soul of Man? If it be ask'd why ſo Powerful a Being has not produced other Beings, it may be inferred, that he was not Pleaſed to do it; he has produced all things with a perfect Liberty, more of one kind and fewer of another: His Will always directed by an Infinite Wiſdom, was the only Rule that he went by. What can one ſay againſt ſuch a Reaſon? Ask an Atheiſt, why he denies the Exiſtence of Devils; he'll give you a Pitiful Anſwer, and if you preſs him hard, he'll be quickly ſilent. Will he ſay that the Univerſe being Infinite and Eternal, the moſt perfect Being, which neceſſarily exiſts, contains nothing that exceeds Man in Knowledge? What! becauſe Man has two Eyes, a Noſe, a Mouth, a Brain, Nerves and Veins, muſt all the Knowledge and Induſtry of Nature fall to his ſhare? Muſt there be no Will, no Underſtanding, no Paſſions, no art of applying Bodies one to another any where elſe? If you could make it out that a free Agent was pleaſed to beſtow Knowledge upon no other Beings but ſuch as have a Brain, you would put me to a ſtand; but you acknowledge no ſuch Cauſe. According to your Principles every thing Exiſts and Acts Neceſſarily; and therefore you cannot tell me why an Impalpable Matter would be leſs Ingenious than that which we call Fleſh and Blood, a Man, a Beaſt, &c. and if you argue right, you ought to believe that ſince the Infinite Being thinks in a Man, it thinks every where elſe; and that if there are many Living Bodies upon Earth, which Love and Hate one another, and ſome of which are oppreſt by others; there are alſo in the Air or elſewhere ſome Material Beings, that Love Man, and ſome that Hate him, and are more Knowing and Powerful than Man. Thoſe will be Good Angels, and theſe Bad Angels. In a word, ſince an Atheiſt cannot deny that there are (a) Wicked, Envious, and Revengeful Beings, which are pleaſed with the Misfortunes of others, and by the application of Bodies produce ſtrange changes in Nature according to their Paſſions, he'll make himſelf Ridiculous if he denies that beſides thoſe Wicked Beings, which are the Objects of his Eyes, there are many others which he does not ſee, and which are ſtill more Malicious and Knowing than Man. And therefore it may be ſaid that if the Univerſe was not the Work of God, it would neceſſarily contain Bad Angels, as it contains Men and Wolves; but ſince it is the Work of God, it is not at all neceſſary it ſhould contain ſuch or ſuch Things, and conſequently the Exiſtence of Devils is not ſo good a Proof of the Exiſtence of God, as 'tis commonly believed. (b). I propoſe this only as a Problematical Queſtion.

Thus it were poſſible, tho' ſuch a thing never happen'd, that ſome Men no leſs Atheiſtical in ſome reſpects than Ruggeri was, ſhould nevertheleſs believe that ſome Wax Images with the help of ſome Ceremonies, might inſpire Love, or occaſion Death a hundred Leagues off. They would look upon thoſe Ceremonies only as a ſign of Agreement, whereby a Devil would be determin'd to produce ſome Effects by the Application of Bodies, whoſe Force would be known to him.

A CONSIDERATION upon the Religion of the Eaſtern Nations.

I deſire you to take notice that hitherto I have only conſidered the Knowledge we have of the Opinions of the Ancient Pagans and Modern Europeans; for I confeſs that what is ſaid of the Religion of the Eaſtern Nations, does not permit me to uſe the general Expreſſion I made uſe of. We are told (c) that the Siameſe acknowledge no Deity, and yet they (d) believe the Return and Apparition of Spirits; they are afraid of the Dead, and practice ſome Ceremonies to Pacify them. (e) Beſides they offer up Prayers to the good Genii almoſt upon all Occaſions, and make Imprecations againſt the Bad ones. Such Men are well qualified to be Magicians without believing any Deity. The Author of the Relation I have quoted, adds, that (f) the Indians believe now as the Ancient Chineſe did, that there are Good and Bad Souls every where, on which they have as it were beſtowed the Almighty Power of God. The meaning of which is that they Acknowledge no Supreme Deity, but an Infinite number of Genii, Good and Bad; and therefore they may be both Atheiſts and Magicians. The Notions of the Learned in that Country, are more like thoſe of the Europeans; for if on the one ſide they are Atheiſts, they deny on the other the Exiſtence of Spirits and the Immortality of the Soul. (g) Several Relations of China tell us that the Men of Letters, who are the moſt conſiderable Citizens in that Country, look upon Funeral Ceremonies only as Civil Duties, without ſaying any Prayers; that they have no ſenſe of Religion, and don't believe the Exiſtence of God, nor the Immortality of the Soul; and that tho' they pay an outward Worſhip to Confucius in the Temples Conſecrated to him, they don't beg of him the Learning which the Letter'd Men of Tunquin deſire him to beſtow upon them. Their outward Worſhip of Confucius is therefore a meer Mummery; they conform to it out of Policy. The following Paſſage ſhews that they deny not only a Supreme Intelligence, but alſo Inferior Beings endowed with Intelligence. (h) By degrees the Men of Letters, that is thoſe who have ſome Titles of Literature, and are the only Perſons that have a hand in the Government, becoming wholly impious, and making no alteration yet in the Style of their Predeceſſors, have changed the Soul of Heaven, and all other Souls into I know not what Ætherial Subſtances, deprived of Knowledge, and ſet up a blind Fate, which in their Opinion, does whatever a moſt Powerful, Wiſe and Juſt Being might do.

(E) I muſt take notice of Father Garaſſe's Miſtakes.] I. He ſays (i) that about Fifteen Days before Coſmo Ruggeri Died, in the Year 1615, a ſmall (k) Book was handed about at Paris with this Title, Hiſtoire épouventable de deux Magiciens eſtranglez par le Diable la ſemaine ſaincte. (A dreadful Hiſtory of two Magicians Strangled in the Holy Week). But we are told in the Mercure François (l) that Ruggeri's Death occaſion'd that ſmall Book. There is no doubt that the Author of that Mercure is more Exact and Credible than the Author of the Doctrine Curieuſe; and therefore all the Moral Reflections of the latter, grounded upon fore-running Reports, are altogether inſignificant. I muſt not forget theſe words of the Mercure: (m) The firſt of thoſe two Magicians was Cæſar, that Famous Cheat, who trick'd all the Curious of his time of their Money, to ſhew 'em Devils, and to put 'em in the way of finding ſome Treaſures, and then Laugh'd at 'em. It was reported that he had been Strangled by his Devil, and yet he is ſtill alive being a Priſoner in the Baſtille. The ſecond was the Abbot of St. Mahé. II. Garaſſe goes on thus: (n) It happen'd in the Year 1574, that la Mole and Cacouas (o) being Condemn'd by a Decree of Parliament, as Perſons convicted of Witchcraft and Enchantments upon occaſion of Charles IXth's Death, Coſmo Ruggeri was involved in their Accuſations, as having lent 'em a helping hand by his Necromancy. La Mole and Coconas were Executed during the Life of Charles IX; and therefore 'tis not true that they were put to Death upon occaſion of his Death. It does not appear that their Witchcraft was levell'd at that Prince's Life, and it cannot be ſaid that they were Convicted of it. Here follows an Extract of la Mole's Anſwers when he was put to the Rack. (p) Being told that he had ſome Wax Images in his Houſe with two holes in their Head, he has anſwered no. Being ask'd about the Wax Image, which is ſaid to have been found in his Houſe, he ſays, O God, I deſire I may Die, if I have made any Wax Image for the King. Being ask'd about the Gold Figures in his Hat, he ſays he knows nothing of 'em. Being again faſten'd to the Buckles and Rings, he ſays that he knows not what he has ſaid. The little Treſtle has been brought in again, and being exhorted to ſpeak the Truth, he ſays, Gentlemen, I know nothing elſe upon the Damnation of my Soul; before the Living God I know nothing elſe. True Eternal God, my God, I don't know whether the Wax Image was made for the King or Queen. Being ask'd where the ſaid Image is, he ſays that the ſaid Image was made for his Miſtreſs, his Country Woman, whom he had a mind to Marry, and that it will appear 'tis the Figure of a Woman, and that the ſaid Coſmo has the ſaid Image, and that the ſaid Figure has two thruſts in the Heart. Being interrogated about the King's

Sickneſs,

(a) By theſe Beings I mean Mankind.

(b) Mr. Becker inſiſts very much upon charging Divines with introducing Manicheiſm by the Power which they aſcribe to the Devils. He is in the wrong to accuſe them of this, ſince they build upon Scripture. I here conſider things as a Philoſopher.

(c) La Loubere, Relation de Siam, tom. 1. chap. 22. n. 6. p. m. 501.

(d) Id ib. chap. 20. n. 20. pag. 481.

(e) Id. ib.

(f) Id. ib, ch. 23. n. 8. pag. 508.

(g) Id. ib. chap. [illegible] n. 6. pag. [illegible]

(h) Id. ib. chap. 21. n. 4. pag. 514.

(i) Garaſſe, Doctrine curieuſe, Book 1. ſect. [illegible] p. [illegible]

(k) Id. ib. pag. 154. See alſo Thuanus's Continuator ubi infra.

(l) Ubi ſupra, pag. 47.

(m) Ibid.

(n) Garaſſe ibid. pag. [illegible]

(o) It ſhould be Coconas.

(p) Le Laboureur, Addit. to Caſtelnau, tome 2. pag. [illegible]

RUTILIA, a Roman Lady Siſter to Publius Rutilius, who ſuffered with ſo great conſtancy the injuſtice of his Baniſhment, and Wife of Marcus Aurelius Cotta, had a Son who was a Man * of great Merit, whom ſhe loved tenderly, and whoſe Death ſhe bore with great Courage. Seneca alledges her (A) as an Example. Cicero had a mind to do the ſame, but not being ſufficiently informed of the thing, he conſulted about it Pomponius (B) Atticus, who could not ſatisfy his deſire. The Sickneſs, he ſays put me to Death if Poor la Molle had ever any ſuch thoughts, and deſires that Coſmo ſhould be ſent for, who will ſay there is nothing elſe in it. Being ask'd where the ſaid Wax Image is, he ſays Coſmo has it, and that it was made for a Woman, and he did not deſire Coſmo to do any thing elſe, and that the ſaid Coſmo prick'd it in the Heart. Being ask'd why he prick'd it in the Heart, he ſays he does not know, it never has been brought to him, he deſires it ſhould be removed, and ſays he will ſpeak the Truth. He has been brought to the Fire, and exhorted to ſpeak the Truth about that Wax Image; he ſays God D—— me for ever, if it be for any thing elſe than what I ſay. Here follows likewiſe an extract of the Confeſſions extorted from Cosmo by the Torture. (a) Being ask'd about the Wax Image he ſays he knows nothing of it, and that Coſmo, and la Molle are moſt intimate Friends. Being ask'd whether he knows of any Pictures or Characters made againſt the King, he ſays no, and that he was diſcourſing about it with a Captain of the Town, who told him they had broke all the Rings of la Molle; and that he ask'd the ſaid Captain whether they had broke a Ring as big as ones finger, and that if there was any thing, it would be found there: He farther ſays, that he never heard of any Attempt upon the King's life. Being ask'd whether he knew any thing about the Wax Figure, he ſays no, and that if any Body knows any thing of it, 'tis Coſmo. Thuanus ſays that la Molle proteſted that this Wax Image was only deſign'd to inſpire a Woman with Love. (b) Tortus Mola & interrogatus de imaguncula cerea, quam magicis præſtigiis ab ipſo confictam, & acu in corde tactam conſtabat quem in rei uſum id faceret, & cujus opera ad id uteretur: reſpondit, ut puellam quandam in Provincia, quam efflictim deperiebat, hac arte ad mutuo ſe redamandum accenderet, id feciſſe; eaque in re uſum opera Coſmi Rugerii Florentini, qui mox comprehenſus & tanquam maleficus omnino raſus, Reginæ favore, quæ illius & hujuſmodi hominum opera perfamiliariter utebatur, periculo exemptus eſt. III. Garaſſe is not exact in the following Words. (c) "This Man having avoided "that danger by his Miſtreſs's Favour, was hurried "on by the itching deſire of being accounted a "great Aſtrologer, and one who had a wonderful "ſkill in that Art; ſo that he made it his Buſineſs "to promiſe Wax Images to all the Curious "Debauchees, to inſpire Love or Hatred; and be"cauſe thoſe two Paſſions are equally fooliſh, he "had a greater Practice in Paris than if he had "promiſed Pardons and Plenary Indulgences." This Author in order to prove that Coſmo was willing to be accounted a Man of great ſkill in judicial Aſtrology, ſays that he made it his buſineſs to promiſe Wax Images. Thoſe Images have been at all times look'd upon as effects or Fooleries of Magick, and do not belong to judicial Aſtrology: They are not reckon'd among Taliſmans; and the manner how they are uſed plainly ſhews that their Virtues, whether true or falſe, do not depend upon the Conſtellations. We are told that they muſt be prick'd with Needles, heated with a ſlow Fire, &c and great Alterations will happen by that means in thoſe who are the Objects of ſuch Practices. This cannot be Natural; the influences of the Stars cannot produce ſuch effects; 'tis black Magick; 'tis the Devil's Work. The Pagans aſcribed that Practice to none but Witches.

Book

> Devovet (d) abſentes, ſimulacraque cerea fingit,
>
> Et miſeram tenues in jecur urget acus.

The Mercure François does not ſay, as Garaſſe does, that Coſmo promiſed Wax Images, to inſpire Love or Hatred (e). He promiſed Wax Images, (f) ſome to make Women Love thoſe that Courted them, and others to make ſuch Perſons Die in a lingring Condition as one deſired, by uttering their Names and invoking certain Devils. We are told a pleaſant Story about Tamerlan's Daughters: 'Tis ſaid that their Father would have 'em learn Magick, and that with the help of ſome Images they Facilitated the Conqueſt of the Provinces he deſign'd to Subdue. Audivi ab aliquibus qui dictum Tamerlanem diu noverant, quod habuit tres filias quas in arte magica fecit inſtrui, in qua mirabiliter profecerunt, quæ incantationes, & exorciſationes, & IMAGINES contra provincias quas ſibi ſubjicere volebat facere conſueverunt, quæ plerumque efficaces fuerunt (g). IV. The following Words are not right: (h) That Wretched Man —— went on with that infamous trade, till the Year 1604, tho' he was an Abbot, indulging the diſorderly paſſions of all the looſe Courtiers. From that Year he began to take another courſe. For he betook himſelf to write Almanacks, ſome under the Name of Quelberus, others under the Name of Vannerus, or the weeping Pilgrim of Savoy. Garaſſe had put together the making of Wax Images and the ſtudy of Aſtrology, as two things one whereof is the Proof of the other; and then all of a ſudden he tells us that as ſoon as Coſmo began to write Almanacks, he left off diſtributing thoſe Images to the looſe Courtiers: in which there is a Contradiction and a wrong Argument. Tho' a Man writes Almanacks, he may be ſtill a Cheat with reſpect to thoſe Images. The Mercure François does not agree with Garaſſe about all the ſuppoſititious Names prefixed to Ruggeri's Almanacks. Compare the Words of the Jeſuit with theſe: (i) Ever ſince the Year 1604 he wrote Almanacks every Year, ſome under the Name of Querberus others under the Name of Vannerus and the weeping Pilgrim of Savoy, which he adorn'd with Verſes or Sentences out of the beſt Latin Poets and Orators.

(A) Seneca alledges her as an Example.] In the Book he writ during his exile to comfort his good Mother. He exhorts her to imitate our Rutilia among other Ladies. Rutilia, ſays he (k), Cottam filium ſecuta eſt in exilium, & uſque eo fuit indulgentia conſtricta, ut mallet exilium pati, quam deſiderium: nec ante in patriam, quam cum filio rediit. Eumdem jam reducem, & in Rep. florentem tam fortiter amiſit, quam ſecuta eſt: nec quiſquam lacrimas ejus poſt elatum filium notavit. In expulſo virtutem oſtendit, in amiſſo prudentiam, nam & nihil illam a pietate deterruit, & nihil in triſtitia ſupervacua ſtultaque detinuit. Cum his te numerari feminis volo, quarum vitam ſemper imitata es &c. The Reader will give me leave to ſet down a paſſage out of Father Senault's Treatiſe de l'uſage des paſſions, in a place wherein he explains the Characters of deſire. "Baniſhment is doubtleſs one of the moſt Cruel Pu"niſhments inflicted upon Guilty Perſons: We are "thereby ſeparated from thoſe we Love, and it "ſeems to be a long Death, attended with a little "Life to make us more miſerable. And yet there "was a Mother, who rather choſe to ſuffer the Cru"elty of that Puniſhment than the Violence of de"ſire, and was willing to follow her Son in his "Baniſhment, leſt ſhe ſhould lament his abſence "and wiſh for his return." But how came Father Senault to know that becauſe ſhe followed her Son, ſhe was free from the Trouble of wiſhing he might return to Rome? To conclude, Rutilia's Son was call'd Caius Aurelius Cotta. He was a good (l) Orator: He was Baniſh'd during the Quarrels of Marius and Sylla, and return'd to Rome when the party of the latter was uppermoſt. He was made Conſul in the Year of Rome 678. 'Tis probable he died two Years after of a Wound that open'd again; which deprived him of the Glory of the Triumph that was decreed for him (m). He is not that Cotta, who is one of the Interlocutors in Cicero's Books de natura deorum, as Glandorpius (n) will have it.

(B) He conſulted about it Pomponius Atticus, who could not ſatisfy his deſire.] He had a mind to know whether Rutilia died before or after her Son. (o) Rutilia vivone C. Cotta filio ſuo mortua ſit, an mortuo? Pertinent ad eum librum quem de luctu minuendo ſcripſimus. In another Letter he has theſe Words: (p) De Rutilia, quoniam videris dubitare ſcribes ad me cum ſcies, ſed quam primum. Corradus's Note is too curious not to be inſerted here: (q) Mortuo mortua

eſt

---

* See the Remark A, towards the end.

(g) Theodoricus à Niem, de ſchiſmate, lib. 2. pag. m. 114.

(h) Garaſſe, ubi ſupra, pag. 156.

(i) Merc. François, ubi ſupra, pag. 46.

(k) Seneca de conſolatione ad Helviam cap 16. p. m. 787.

(l) Cicero, de Oratore l. 1. fol. 60. & in Bruto fol. 109. See Corradus in Brutum Ciceronis pag. 310. & ſeq.

(m) Conſule Sigonius in faſtis Conſul. ad ann. 678. 680.

(n) Glandorp. Onomaſt. pag. 144.

(o) Cicero, epiſt. 20. lib. 12. ad Atticum.

(p) Idem epiſt. 22. ejuſd. libri.

(q) Corradus in epiſt. 20. lib. 12. ad Atticum pag. 328. edit. Græviana.

Book † wherein he designs to speak of our Rutilia being not extant, we know not whether he had all the Information he wanted, and whether he mention'd her, but 'tis very likely he did. What is remarkable is that we are told he desir'd to be inform'd of some circumstances he had already mention'd || in his Works. Which shews that the greatest Authors forget those very things they have publish'd.

S

SABELLICUS (Mark Antony Coccius) was a Learned Man, who flourished towards the latter end of the XV. Century. His Father was a Smith, and he was Born in § a little Town of Italy upon the Teverone. He applied himself so early to his Studies, that before he had a Beard he kept School at Tivoli. Having got some Money by that means, he went to Rome in order to improve his Learning by the Lectures of * Pomponius, who admitted him into his Academy with the usual Ceremonies, and particularly with the imposition of a new Name, viz. Sabellicus. This new Academist reform'd his style in that School, and then he went from Rome to Udine near Aquileia, where he was a publick Teacher, and put out some Books, which proved so advantageous to him that the Magistrates of Vicenza knowing his great Capacity offered him twice as great a Pension as what he had: He accepted of those offers and came to Vicenza to Teach Philology. But he was soon after invited by the Senate of Venice, who offered him two Honourable and profitable Imployments: The one was to write the History of the Republick, and the other to Teach Philological Learning. He went therefore to Venice, and was more successful in Teaching his Scholars than in Writing (A) the History that he was put upon; for it is full of Flatteries and Lies. He undertook afterwards to compose an Universal History from the beginning of the World, and applied himself to it till he died. This Work has been publish'd, and is not (B) much esteem'd. Sabellicus died of the (C) Pox, being about seventy Years Old. Not trusting his Bastard, he himself caused his Epitaph to be ingraved upon his Tomb-Stone: 'Tis an Inscription (D) that is not very modest ∧. He had been Library-Keeper to Cardinal Bessarion χ. His Eyes had the same Faculty with those of || Tiberius; for when he waked in the Night he could plainly see his Books and his Chamber for some time ǂ. All his Works were Printed at (E) Basil in the Year 1560. in 4 Volumes in Folio. When he died he Acted like those Fathers

† V. his Book de consolatione.
|| See the Remark B.
§ 'Tis call'd in Latin Vicus Varronis, or Vicus Valerius, see Leander Albertus descriptio Ital pag. m. 221.
* Thus Paulus Jovius calls him. 'Tis the famous Pomponius Laetus.
∧ Taken from Paul Jovius in elog. viror. doctor. c. 48. pag. 114. 115.
χ Freherus in Theatro pag. 1434.
|| Sueton. in Tiberio cap. 68.
ǂ Pierius Valerianus in Hieroglyph. apud Freherum ubi supra says that he heard him say so.

---

est——— quod mirum Ciceronem quaesisse quum in libris oratoriis jampridem scripsisset Cottam ipsum sibi sermonem illum retulisse: quin Atticus etiam dubitabat, quum tamen uterque & Cottam & Rutiliam vidisset.

(A) Was more successful in Teaching his Scholars than in Writing the History——— for it is full &c.] He was paid to be sincere and exact with respect to his Scholars, but not with respect to History; and therefore he discharged better the Duties of a Teacher than those of an Historiographer. (a) Nec ibi diu mansit, evocante Senatu Veneto, ea conditione, ut civitatis res gestas a fine Justiniani conscriberet, & trecentis aureis in gymnasio profiteretur. In hoc munere perutilem juventuti operam praestitit, quum in altero adulatione parum sobria rerum veritatem adumbrasse videretur. Julius Caesar Scaliger says that Sabellicus confess'd that he publish'd or supprest matters of Fact, as he was directed by the Money he receiv'd from the Venetians. Thus I Paraphrase these five Latin Verses:

Venalis (b) item penna Sabellii latronu,
Qui dat, adimitque, ut libitum, cuique quod vult.
Falsa qui rogatus, undenam tot esset ausus:
Monstrans Venetum perditus aureum nomisma,
Te, inquit, quoque lux haec faceret loqui si haberet.

(B) And is not much esteem'd.] Paul Jovius says that things are so crowded in that Work, that they make but little Appearance. 'Tis the usual Fault of those, who undertake to include the History of the whole World in one or two Volumes. Read these Words of Paul Jovius. (c) Sed in Enneadibus omnium temporum, ab orbe condito memoriam complexus, uti necesse fuit, ingenti operis instituto festinanter indulgenti, res illustres praeclara cognitione dignissimas perobscura brevitate adeò vehementer offuscavit, ut excitatam uberrimo titulo legentium cupiditatem passim eluserit, quum omnia in acervum angustissimè coarctata, nequaquam certa effigie, sed exiguis tantùm punctis, & lineis annotata designentur.

(C) Sabellicus died of the Pox.] Paul Jovius does not say in what Year he died; but (d) Vossius shews that it was in the Year 1506. Pierius Valerianus does not affirm that he died of a Venereal Disease; but the description he gives of his Distemper contains several Symptoms, that may be easily accounted for, if we suppose that it was the Pox, as Paul Jovius will have it. These are Valerianus's Words: (e) Eò plus infortunij, & aerumnarum pertulit Sabellicus, vir ille scriptorum copia, & elegantia multò clarior, quàm mea ulla possit commendatione crescere, miserabilem vitae finem eum sortitus est, quod putrida, perniciosaque correptus elephantiasi per annos aliquot miserabiliter cruciatus, interclusa vocis via, caeterisque tam spiritus, quam cibi meatibus computrescentibus, gutturisque corruptis omnibus organis, venisque corrosis, non sine cruciabili tormento annos aliquot peregit, eaque tabe demum confectus interiit. See Jovius's Words in the Margin (f). Vossius observes that it is said in the List of the Historians of Udine, that Sabellicus wrote till the Year 1513. which is false, as it appears from two Letters of Bembus written in the Year 1506. wherein he mentions Sabellicus's Death. The 5th Letter of the 4th Book (g) says that he died the 17th of April 1506. The same Vossius tells us that Leander Albertus testifies that Sabellicus lived three Years after he had made an end of his Enneades, which reached to the Year 1504. I find in Leander Albertus that those Enneades reached to the Year 1507. and that the Author died in the same Year. I have consulted not only the Latin Translation (h) Printed at Cologne in 1567. but also the Italian Original Folio 149. Printed at Venice in 4° 1561.

(D) An inscription, that is not very modest.] If any Body else (i) had made it, one might excuse it. Here it is (k):

Quem non res hominum, non omnis ceperat aetas,
Scribentem capit haec Coccion urna brevis.
M. Anton. Coccius Sabellicus vivus sibi F.

(E) All his Works were Printed at Basil in 1560.] Before this Edition in 4 Volumes in Folio Printed for Hervagius, there had been an Edition in 2 Volumes

(a) Paulus Jovius in elog. c. 48. pag. 114. 115.

(b) Jul. Caesar Scaliger de regnor. eversionibus, pag. 329. part. 2. poemat. edit. 1591.

(c) Jovius ubi supra pag. 115.

(d) Vossius de historicis Latin. pag. 67.

(e) Pier. Valerianus de literat. infelicitate lib. 1. pag. 28.

(f) Ad septuagesimum fere annum perveniens Gallica tabe ex vaga Venere quaesita non obscure consumptus, Jovius ubi supra. See also the Verses of Latomus in Jovius.

(g) Pag. m. 531.

(h) Page 22.

(i) Infare quidem & meritum elogium et certe honestius si alieni ingenii pictas inscripsisset. Jovius ubi supra.

(k) See Freherus in Theatro pag. 1434.

thers, who are more fond of their weakeſt Children, than of thoſe who have the beſt Conſtitution. For he deſired (F) his Collegue Egnatius to Print a Manuſcript by which he could get no Honour. Egnatius got it Printed, and was blamed for it. You'll find a Noble Encomium upon Sabellicus in † Jacobus Philippus Bergomas, who was Contemporary with him. Moreri has committed ſome Faults.

SABEUS (Fauſtus) Born in the Country of Breſcia in Italy, was ſo much eſteem'd for his Learning that Leo X invited him to Rome and made him his Library-keeper. He undertook ſeveral long and painful Journeys in order to increaſe the Library of the Vatican, and was ill rewarded for his Pains. He (A) complain'd of it; but his Complaints made no impreſſion upon four other Popes, who kept him in their Service. They gave him no Preferment, which made him renew his Complaints. He died at Rome being 80 Years old, under the Pontificate of Paul IV. * We have (B) ſome Books written by him. I have ſaid in || another place that he had a hand in the firſt Edition of Arnobius.

SAGRA-

lumes in Folio Printed in the Year 1538. for the ſame Hervagius; but this contained only the Enneades, and the Ten (a) Books of his Exempla, with an Hiſtorica Synopſis, which carried the Enneades to the Year 1538. This Continuation was made by Gaſpar Hedion. Cælius Secundus (b) Curio had the Direction of the Edition Printed in 1560, to which he added a Continuation of the Enneades to that Year. The 4th Volume contains moſt of Sabellicus's Opuſcula. I ſay moſt of 'em; for they did not inſert in it his (c) Paraphraſe and Notes upon Suetonius, nor his Critical Obſervations upon ſeveral Authors. They are divided into two Books, and have been often Printed, and Namely at Venice in the Year 1508 in Folio. Badius inſerted them in a Compilation of ſuch things in 1511. and Gruterus put 'em in the firſt Volume of his Theſaurus. (d) To conclude, thoſe who reckon the Enneades of that Author among the Books Printed ſoon after the Invention of Printing are groſly miſtaken. Beughem mentions an Edition of that Work made at Mentz in 1442. (e) Sabellicus. Hiſtoriæ Enneades Septem. 'Tis true he doubts of it; but he ſhould have poſitively ſaid it is falſe; for (f) Sabellicus in 1442. was not yet ſeven Years Old, and when he publiſhed thoſe 63. Books of his Hiſtory he dedicated them to the Doge of Venice Auguſtin Barbadigo, who was not promoted to that Dignity till the Year 1486.

(F) He deſired his Collegue Egnatius to Print a Manuſcript—— Egnatius ——— was blamed for it.] Here is the Title of that Work. (g) MARCI ANTONII COCCII SABELLICI de omnium gentium omniumque ſeculorum inſignibus memoriaque dignis factis & dictis exemplorum libri X Quæ ad vitæ mores, prudentiam ſapientiamve comparandam conducunt plurimum. Iccirco quum omnibus qui illo libero beatoque literarum otio perfruuntur, tum vero imprimis qui vel adoleſcentiam in ſcholis, vel populum in concionibus docent utiliſſima ſunt. 'Tis a Book, to which this thought of Pliny may be very well applied: (h) Inſcriptiones propter quas vadimonium deſeri poſſit. At cum intraveris, dii deæque quam nihil in medio invenies! We are told in the Title Page that it is a Book very uſeful to thoſe who ſtudy, but chiefly to thoſe who teach Youth, and to Preachers. Indeed it may be of ſome uſe to thoſe, whoſe Buſineſs it is to give ſome Exerciſes to Young Boys. Egnatius having publiſh'd that Book was blamed for it: Some taxed him with Inconſtancy, under pretence that there had been a long enmity between him and the deceaſed. They found Fault with him for having perform'd the part of a good Friend by publiſhing that Manuſcript. Others ſaid that he had publiſh'd it only out of Hatred for Sabellicus, and that he knew well enough that the impreſſion of ſuch a Book would tarniſh the Glory of the Author. Egnatius wrote a (i) Preface in his Vindication, wherein he maintain'd that Conſtancy does not require that a Mortal Man ſhould cheriſh an immortal hatred, and that nothing can be more reaſonable than to free one ſelf from the ſlavery of paſſions. He added that any Body, who has not a braſen heart, would have been moved with the Intreaties of that dying Man, and that he was ſo affected with them that he could not deny him that good Office. (k) Nos verò cum aliis honeſtiſſimis cauſis adducti, & prius Sabellicum funebri laudatione proſecuti ſumus, & nunc pro virili opus hoc emendavimus. Cujus editionem moriens mihi ad ſe accerſito, & gratam recordationem pietatis in ſe Michaelis Triviſani Nicolai filii, qui ſub eo non parvo tempore meruerat, quique opus hoc literis plenum exſcribendum curarat, commendavit, ut tam obſtinatum, tam durum, tam denique ferreum eſſe putem neminem, quem ſuprema illa vox moribundi hominis, atque adeo ab omni ſuſpicione immunis non emolliſſet: me certe adeo emollit, ut nihil pro humanitatis jure negare homini præſertim jam morienti potuerim majorem hoc facto laudem a bonis ſperans, quam quicquid de me Amafinii, & Rabirii iſti recentes oblatrent attendens.

(G) Moreri has committed ſome Faults.] I. The place, where Sabellicus was Born, is not a ſmall Borough: Leander Albertus (l) ſays that it is a ſtrong place (m) both by its Situation, and by the Works that have been made in it; and he adds that in 1533. Lewis Gonzaga General of Clement VII's Troops, beſieged it and was kill'd by a Cannon Ball. II. Moreri's way of refuting thoſe, who ſay that Sabellicus deſcended from the Coccejan Family, is a very bad one. He tells us that it is likely enough that Sabellicus was the Son of a Smith, if one conſiders only the Sir-Name Coccius, which is only to be found in the Epitaphs and upon the Monument erected to him after his Death. What an Argument is this? The Sir-Name Coccius is only to be found in the Epitaphs, &c. therefore it is likely enough that Sabellicus's Father was a Poor Smith. Here is another falſe Argument. Moreri ſuppoſes that if the Sir-Name Coccius had belonged to Sabellicus's Family, one might very well believe that he was deſcended from the Coccejan Family. What an abſurdity! I muſt obſerve two other Faults relating upon this Head: It is certain that Sabellicus took the Sir-Name of Coccius in his life time, and that the Inſcription of his Tomb was not made after his Death. He himſelf cauſed it to be ingraved. III. He did not Teach young Boys in little Boroughs, but at Tivoli, which is an Epiſcopal See. IV. Moreri has theſe Words, we have his Hiſtoria Enneadum in XI. Books from the beginning of the World to the Year 1504; than which nothing can be more abſurd. He had read in Voſſius (n), that Sabellicus made himſelf Famous by his Hiſtory of eleven Enneades, that is, by an Hiſtory divided into eleven Enneades, and he came to fancy that Sabellicus had writ a Hiſtory divided into eleven Books, which contain'd the Actions of the Enneades. The Reader muſt know that Sabellicus affecting to imitate the Ancients, divided his Hiſtory not into (o) Decades as Livy did, but into Enneades. V. When Moreri ſays that the Epitaph, which Sabellicus made for himſelf (p) is reaſonable enough, but modeſt, he perverts the ſenſe of Paul Jovius, and gives a wrong judgment of the thing it ſelf.

Note that many other Authors have alſo miſunderſtood the paſſage of Voſſius relating to the Enneades. Zeillerus tells us that Sabellicus wrote the Hiſtory of two Enneades: (q) cujus maxime celebratur hiſtoria Enneadum II. and Konig (r) ſays that he has left us eleven Books of Enneades.

(A) And was ill rewarded for his Pains. He complain'd of it.] This I prove by the following paſſage. (ſ) Di che egli agramente ſi querela e duole. Il che pure gli ſucceſſe ſotto quattro altri Pontefici quali con molta ſua ſiniſtra fortuna infelicemente ſervì.

(B) We have ſome Boooks written by him.] Five Books of Latin Epigrams, which he publiſhed at Rome in the Year 1556. and dedicated to Henry II. King of France. He was pretty well paid in Money and Cloaths for his Epiſtle dedicatory: E ne riportò da quella Maeſtà una collana d'oro, dolcento

ſcudi

---

† Jacob. Philippus Bergomas in Supplemento Chronicorum pag. 335. 336. edit Venet. 1506.

* [illegible] Leonard. Nicodemum addizioni alla biblioteca Napoletana pag. 165.

(l) Leand. Albert. in deſcript. Ital. pag. m. 214.

(m) Caſtellum nunc eſt cum natura loci tum opere muniſſimum. Id. ibid.

(n) Maxime celebratur hiſtoria Enneadum XI. Voſſius ubi ſupra. Note that the laſt Ennead contains only 2 Books.

(o) Note that he divided his Hiſtory of Venice. into Decads. It contains 3. whole Decads, and 3. Books of the 4th.

(p) Perhaps the Printers have left out ſome Words, and Moreri had ſaid, but not very modeſt.

(q) Martinus Zeillerus de hiſtoricis parte 1. pag. 127.

(r) Konig Biblioth. pag. 712.

(ſ) Leonardo Cozzando ubi infra.

SACRATUS (PAUL) a Canon of Ferrara, where he was Born in the XVI. Century, was one of thoſe, who applied themſelves to the Politeneſs of the Latin Style. He ſucceeded in it, as it appears from his Letters to Paul Manutius, Riccobonus, Muretus, and (C) ſeveral other Learned Men, which he Publiſh'd in the Year 1579. He Dedicated them to James SACRATUS his Brother, Biſhop of Carpentras. He ſpent ‡ many Years in Studying at Padua, and in Travelling. There are two ſhort Diſcourſes at the End of his Letters, wherein he Apologizes for two Prelates, who, contrary to cuſtom, had writ their Mandates in the Vulgar Tongue; which they did, becauſe the greateſt part of the Clergy in their Dioceſes did not underſtand Latin. He Compoſed ſome † Books, and Died at (D) Seventy Five Years of Age. James Sadolet, Biſhop of Carpentras and Cardinal, his * Uncle by the Mother's ſide, took care to inſtruct him.

SADEUR (JAMES) Author of a New Voyage into Terra Auſtralis, Printed in French in the Year β 1692. His Father's γ Name was James Sadeur, and his Mother's Guillemette Itin: They were both Natives of Chatillon upon Bar, in the Juriſdiction of Rhetel in Champagne, and went with a deſign to ſettle in America; but after nine or ten Months ſtay at Port-Royal, they took Shipping the 25th of April, 1603. to return into France. The Wife, fifteen Days after ſhe had Imbark'd, was Delivered of the Boy who makes the Subject of this Article. The Father and the Mother were Caſt-away near Cape Finiſterre, where their Ship run aground: The Child was Saved as by a Miracle, and given to an Inhabitant of that Coaſt; and then having again eſcaped from another Shipwrack, he went to Serve a Portugueſe δ Lady, and Studied with her Son. He was taken by ſome Pirates in the Year 1623. He was like to Periſh in another Shipwrack; but he was ſaved by a Ship that was going into the Indies; and ſuffered a fourth Shipwrack, which occaſion'd his Landing in Terra Auſtralis, by ſeveral Accidents which no Body is obliged to believe. The manner how this came to paſs, and how he overcame the Wild Beaſts ready to devour him, and at laſt left that Country after he had been Thirty Two Years in it ζ, and arrived at Madagaſcar, is ſo ſtrange that I don't think there are any Fictions more Comical in Arioſto and Amadis. Accordingly I don't pretend that James Sadeur did ever exiſt, and that there is any Truth in his Hiſtory; and if I mention him and his Voyage to Terra Auſtralis, 'tis becauſe I ſpoke of him in the Article of Adam, and that I may ſay ſomething further concerning the Idle Fancies of Antoinette de Bourignon. For you muſt know that James Sadeur, who pretends to be an Hermaphrodite, tells us that it was that very thing which preſerved his Life, in a Country where every Body has both Sexes, and where η all the Men of our Continent are call'd Sea Monſters, and have no Quarter given them. All the Auſtralians, ſays he θ, have both Sexes; and whenever a Child comes into the World having but one Sex, they ſtifle it as a Monſter. He does not clearly explain (A) how they Beget; but he gives us to underſtand, κ that Children grow in them as (B) Fruits do upon Trees; that they ‖ live without Luſting one after another, and cannot bear of it without Horror; that their Love is neither Carnal nor Brutiſh; that they are wholly ſufficient to themſelves, and want nothing to be Happy. In a word, the Argument alledged by an Old Auſtralian in his Book, ſuppoſes that each individual Perſon is the ſole cauſe of the Children that come into the World. He brings him in raiſing difficulties ┼ againſt the Generation, which depends upon two Perſons, † See the Remark C.

‡ See Sacratus's Letters lib. 1. epist. 13. 15. & lib. 6. pag. 181.

* In the [illegible]

β Note, that this Book had been Printed before at Vannes, in 1676. in 12.

γ Avantures de Jaques Sadeur pag. 2 Dutch Edit. 1692. in 12.

δ The Counteſs de Villa-franca.

ζ Pag. 92.

η Pag. 147.

θ Pag. 59. 62.

κ Pag. 92.

‖ Pag. 69.

┼ Pag. 71

ſcudi del ſole, e una giubba di veluto pavonazzo. He wrote a Book of Coſmography, and had a hand in the Collection Printed at Francfort, in 1580. with this Title, Picta poeſis Ovidiana: theſaurus propemodum omnium fabularum poeticarum Fauſti Sabæi Brixiani aliorumque clarorum virorum tam veterum quam recentiorum epigrammatis expoſitarum (a).

(C) From his Letters ——— which he Publiſhed in the Year 1579.] I have not ſeen this Edition: That which I make uſe of is of Lyons, 1581. in 16. There was another Publiſhed at Cologne in 1583. See (b) Morhoſius's Polyhiſtor. The other Works of Sacratus are, ſuper Geneſim liber unus. In Pſalmos Davidis liber unus. In Epiſtolam Canonicam B. Jacobi Apoſtoli liber unus. See the apparato (c) degli huomini illuſtri della città di Ferrara written by Agoſtino Superbi da Ferrara.

(D) And Died at Seventy-Five Years of Age.] According to the Epitaph Ingraved (d) on his Tomb in the Cathedral Church of Ferrara, by the care of the Biſhop of Carpentras his Brother. The Year of his Death is not mention'd in that Epitaph; which is a great Negligence.

(A) How they Beget.] He ſays that (e) all the time he was amongſt 'em, he never could learn how Generation is performed in that Country, and that (f) they have ſo great an Averſion for whatever concerns the firſt beginning of Life, that a Year or thereabouts after his Arrival, two Auſtralians hearing him ſay ſomething about it, went away expreſſing as much Horror as if he had committed a Crime.

(B) As Fruits do upon Trees.] I have mention'd in (g) another place a Paſſage of Antoinette Bourignon (h), wherein ſhe ſays that Sin has disfigured the Work of God in Men, and that inſtead of being Men, as they ſhould be, they are become Monſters in Nature divided into two imperfect Sexes, unable to produce their like alone, as Trees and Plants are produced, which in that reſpect are more Perfect than Men or Women, who cannot Produce without the Help of another, and without Pain and Miſery. If you except the Conſequences of Sin, the Doctrine of that Woman, and that of the Auſtralian Philoſopher, are as like one another as two drops of Water. I wonder neither of 'em perceived that their pretended Superiority of Plants above Man, with reſpect to the Faculty of Engendring, is a Falſe Suppoſition; for 'tis true indeed that each Plant produces its Grain, its Fruit, and its Seed, independently from another Plant of a different Sex; but 'tis not true that it produces another Plant in it ſelf and by it ſelf. What has it then above Man? Does not a Man produce in himſelf, and without the Concourſe of the other Sex, the Seed, which is like the Grain or Kernel in Plants, from which another Individuum proceeds? 'Tis true, will ſome ſay; but that Individuum will not proceed from that Seed without a Conjunction with the other Sex. But I anſwer, do you think that the Seed of Plants does not want to be received into a Womb that it may become a Plant? Muſt it not be received into the Earth? Has it not as great a dependency upon another Being as the other? 'Tis certain

(a) Taken from Leonardo Cozzando della libraria Breſciana aperta parte 1. p. 109. See alſo Ghilini's Theatro tom. 1. pag. 51.

(b) In the 24th Chap. of the 1ſt Book. pag. 309. 310.

(c) Pag. 16.

(d) Ibid.

(e) Avantures de Jaques Sadeur pag. 60. 92.

(f) Pag. 91.

(g) In the Remark G of the Article of Adam.

(h) Preface to the nouveau Ciel.

Persons, one of which is the Father and the other the Mother. That Old Man concludes that Man cannot be a perfect and compleat Being without both Sexes, because one Sex is not sufficient for Production without the Conjunction of the other. Sadeur did so well apprehend those Principles and their Consequences, that to shew that he understood them, he made use of these words: † I consider'd how the Supreme Being acts, I was sensible that a Creature could not better resemble him than by Acting as he does, and that an Action performed by the Concourse of two Persons could not be so perfect as those that are performed by one and the same Person. Thus the Inhabitants of Terra Australis are of Mrs. Bourignon's Opinion; and one would be apt to think that James Sadeur, whoever he be, seems to intimate that the Australians (C) are not Descended from Adam, but from an Androgyne, who did not fall, as he did, from the State of Innocence. This would be a pretty good Device to impose upon the Censors of Books, and remove the difficulties of a License, if one had a mind to Publish a Pre-Adamitical (D) System. If La Peyrere had made use of this Device, he would have avoided a great deal of Trouble. Cyrano Bergerac did not wholly neglect it in his Travels in the Sun and Moon. Perhaps the Author of * the History of certain that according to Mrs. Bourignon's, and James Sadeur's System, the perfect State of Man would not be like that of Plants in this respect, Man would produce in himself, and by his own Power, not something wherewith to make another Man in another Subject, but another Man. A Plant does not do that; it produces in it self, something out of which, when received into the Earth, another Plant springs. I remember to this purpose to have read the following Verses.

† Pag. [illegible]

* See what Judgment Mr. Jurieu makes of him, pag. 19 of his [illegible].

J'ai (a) veu vif sans fantosme
Un jeune moyne avoir
Membre de femme & d'homme
Et enfant concepvoir
Par luy seul en luy mesmes
Engendrer, enfanter
Comme font aultres femmes
Sans oultil emprunter.

They are taken out of a Poem of John Molinet, Intitled, Recollection des merveilles advenues en nostre temps. Here is an Hermaphrodite more extraordinary than that mention'd by M. de Beauval, in his (b) Histoire des Ouvrages des Savans. The words applied to the Porcupine, seque jaculo, sese pharetra, sese utitur arcu, might have been applied to it. Isaac Vossius's (c) Hypothesis, does not reach so far.

But this whole Story of Molinet ought not to be Credited. That Monk did not get himself with Child. I don't know whether he was Punish'd; I have only read that he was put into the Hands of Justice, and confined till he was Delivered. Read this Passage of the Chronique Scandaleuse de Louis XI. " (d) In the said Year 1478, it came to " pass in Auvergne, that a Religious of a Convent " of Black Monks belonging to Cardinal de Bourbon, " had both Sexes, and made use of 'em in such a " manner that he happen'd to be with Child: " Whereupon he was Seized, Prosecuted, and " confined till he should be Delivered, that he " might be dealt with afterwards as the Judges " should think fit. " Is it not a strange Carelessness to give no account of the Consequences of this Imprisonment?

(C) That the Australians are not descended from Adam.] He ascribes many things to them, which suit only with the State of Innocence; for he says they are not (e) ashamed of being Naked, they all Love one another with a sincere Affection, they never Quarrel, they know nothing of Property, they have all things in common with an admirable Uninterestedness, they bring forth (f) without any Pain, they don't (g) Lust one after another, they are Strong and Vigorous, their Health is never alter'd by any Sickness, and they make no great account of Life, in comparison of the Eternal Rest that follows it, which they ardently desire. 'Tis true their Notion of that Eternal Rest is not very Orthodox, for in their Opinion it does not consist in the Beatifical Vision, but in the Privation of a particular and individual Existence. They say that after Death we exist only in general, in an (h) Universal Genius, who Communicates himself severally to each particular Being, and has the Power, when an Animal Dies, to preserve himself till he be Communicated to another. So that the Genius is extinguish'd by the Death of that Animal, without being destroyed, since he waits only for new Organs, and a new Machine to be Revived. This is as great a Nonsense as the Soul of the World of some Ancient Philosophers. According to Sadeur's account the Australians are not over Religious. They are contented (i) to Worship the Incomprehensible Being without ever speaking of him; they fancy nothing can be more Offensive to him, than to make his Divine Perfections the Subject of their Discourse; So that it may be said that the main part of their Religion is not to speak of Religion. This does not savour of the State of Innocence: Man ought to Glorify his Maker by his Words as well as by his Thoughts; and 'tis in vain to say, as the Old Australian did, that whoever ventures to speak of God, is like to speak of him otherwise than he should do; for this would prove too much, and it would follow from it that one should never think of the Incomprehensible Being. I shall set down what is to be found upon this Subject in the Book of that Pretended Traveller. He told the (k) Old Man that in Europe God is the subject of the most agreeable and useful Conversations; and being ask'd, whether People had the same Notions concerning that Incomprehensible Being, he sincerely confest they very much differ'd in their Conclusions from the same Principles, which occasion'd many sharp disputes, frequently attended with a violent Hatred, and sometimes with bloody Wars, and other dismal Consequences. The Old Man, says Sadeur, replied with great Ingenuity, that if I had not answered him in that manner, he would not have said a word more, and would have had the utmost Contempt for me, being, said he, very sure that Men could not speak of an Incomprehensible Thing, without having very different and quite contrary Opinions about it. None, added he, but a blind Being can be ignorant that there is a first Principle; but one must be Infinite, as it is, to speak of it exactly: For since we acknowledge that it is Incomprehensible, it follows that we can speak of it only by guess, and that whatever we can say of it may indeed satisfy the Curious, but not Rational Persons. And we rather chuse to be wholly Silent, than to run the hazard of venting many Falsities concerning its Nature.

(h) Pag. 93.

(i) Pag. 83.

(k) Pag. 88.

(D) A Pre-Adamitical System.] Sadeur says that (l) the Australians reckon above twelve thousand Revolutions of the Solstices from the beginning of their Republick, and give out that they derive their Original from a Deity, who with one Breath produced three Men from whom all others are Descended; that according to their account the Europeans began five Revolutions after them, and that they give 'em a very Ridiculous Original; for they say that an Amphibious Serpent of a prodigious Bigness, falling upon a Woman in her Sleep, Enjoyed her without doing her any Harm; that the Woman awaked about the end of the Action, and conceived so great an Horror for it, that she threw her self into the Sea. The Serpent carried her to a Neighbouring Island, where she repented of her despair, and was delivered of two Children, the one a Male, and the other a Female, who gave so many Signs of Malice that their Mother was extremely

(l) Pag. 117.

---

acus Vossius comment. in Catul. pag. 287. (d) Chronique daleuse de Louis XI. p. m. 386. See also Robert Gaguin the 10th Book of his Histoire de France fol. m. 284. verso. He this happen'd in a Convent of Issoire in Auvergne. (e) Pag. (f) Pag. 93. (g) Pag. 69.

of the Sevarambes made use of it. I shall observe by the by that the Author of Religio Medici (E) was in some measure of the Opinion of the Australians. I shall occasionally Explain more exactly than I have done in another † place, what concerns (F) Plato's Androgynes.

† In the Article of Adam.

Allson

extremely Afflicted at it. The Serpent perceiving the trouble she was in, gave her to understand by Signs that he would carry her into her Country, if she desired it. He did it, and then he came back to the little ones, who Coupled and Multiplied. One would think that this is a wretched Allusion to the Fabulous Story of some Hereticks, who said that (a) Eve had two Children by the Serpent which Tempted her (b).

(E) The Author of Religio Medici was in some Measure, &c.] I wish, says he, we could multiply like Trees without any Conjunction, or that some other way of getting Children might be found out; for certainly there is nothing more Foolish and Unworthy of a Wise Man, nothing more shameful and unbecoming the greatness of our Souls than to think, when the heat is over, how far the Impertinence has been carried. Not that I have an aversion for that Charming Sex. On the contrary I am naturally inclined to Love and Admire whatever is Beautiful; Nay, I am extremely pleased with the sight of a fine Picture; were it only that of a Horse. (c) Mihi satis placeret, si nobis etiam arborum more citra conjunctionem procreare liceat, sive alia quæpiam reperiatur rerum propagandarum ratio, quam coitione illa vulgaris, & trivialis: nihil profecto ineptius est, aut viro sapiente indignius; nihil quod mentis celsitudinem turpius dejiciat, quam si animo jam defervente reputet, quam insigniter ineptierit. Nec tamen hæc ita quæquam interpretari velim, quasi à sexu illo dulcissimo alienatiore animo sim, immo ultro admiror, & amplector, quicquid pulchrum est. Summa cum voluptate eleganti cuipiam picturæ inhæreo, etiamsi equi tantum fuerit. The Author of the Notes upon this Work of Dr. Brown, observes that (d) the Fooleries the Doctor speaks of being necessary to Mankind, it was necessary that Men should be very fond of 'em. He quotes some Passages of St. Augustin, wherein things are carried too far; for that Father says not only that the Superior part of the Soul is Degraded and Dethroned by such amorous Imbraces, that a Wise Man is not obliged to Marry, and that those who do it, ought rather to be Admired than Imitated; but also that the Duty they pay to one another without a Motive of Procreation is a Venial Sin. (e) Conjugalis concubitus generandi gratia non habet culpam; concupiscentiæ vero satiandæ, sed tamen cum conjuge propter fidem thori venialem habet culpam: adulterium vero sive fornicatio letalem habet culpam: ac propter hoc melior est quidem ab omni concubitu continentia, quam vel ipse matrimonialis concubitus, qua fit causa gignendi. Hæc habet August. in lib. de bono conjugal. c. 6. in Soliloquiis c. 10. Si, inquit, ad officium pertinet sapientis (quod nondum comperi) dare operam liberis, quisquis hujus rei tamen gratia concumbit, mirandus mihi videri potest, at vero imitandus nullo modo. The same Commentator alledges St. Augustin upon these Words of Dr. Brown, nihil ineptius aut viro sapente indignius. (f) Hinc Augustin. in libro soliloquiorum cap. 10. Nihil, inquit, esse sentio, quod magis ex arce dejiciat animum virilem, quam blandimenta fœminea, corporumque ille contactus, sine quo uxor haberi non potest.

(F) What concerns Plato's Androgynes.] Plato supposes that there were three sorts of Humane Creatures in the Beginning of the World. Some were only Male, others Female, and others both. The latter are the Androgynes. Each individuum of those three kinds had four Arms, and four Feet, two Faces turn'd one towards the other and placed upon one Neck, two Privy Parts, and so on. They walk'd upright; but when they walk'd too fast they fell upside down. They were Strong and Bold, so that they attempted to make War with the Gods. The Celestial Court held a Council about it, but came to no Resolution in the matter; for had Mankind been destroyed with Thunderbolts, as the Giants were, the Gods would have been losers by it. (g) Who would have Offered up to them Incense and Sacrifices? On the other hand, it was not fit to suffer the Boldness and Insolence of Men. Jupiter found out this Expedient; he divided them all into Two: But there arose a great Inconveniency from it; for each half endeavoured to be Re-united to the other, and when they met, they Imbraced one another so tenderly and with so much Pleasure, that they could not resolve to part, and so Died of Hunger. Jupiter found out a Remedy for that Disorder: He Transposed the Privy Parts, and so contrived the matter that the Pleasure of their Imbraces ceased after a certain time, and then every Body minded his own Concerns. Plato adds that the Males, who are one half of an Androgyne, are very much addicted to Women, and that the Females, who are one half of an Androgyne, are passionately in Love with Men. He pretends that the Females, who Love other Females without minding the Males, are one half of the Ancient double Females; and that the Males, who are fond of Males, are one half of the Ancient double Males (h). If any one desires to see some Reflections upon what Eusebius (i) says, that Plato had this Notion of Androgyne's from Moses, he may consult the Commentary of (k) Ludovicus Regius. He confesses that (l) Mercerus and Quinquarbre Royal Professors in Hebrew have been of great use to him in it. He finds that Marsilius Ficinus is often mistaken. I should lose my time, saith he (m), should I take notice of all the passages of Plato ill Translated by him; he ought rather to be thanked for the Pains he took in mending the Old Translation as well as he could. ——— (n) He had no great skill in Greek and Latin, and has committed many Faults in his Translation of that Author, particularly in things that require the Knowledge of Antiquity and Nature. I have discoursed about it with the Bishop of Montpellier and Turnebus and Goupil Royal Professors, and every one of 'em helped me according to his Ability. That Bishop of Montpellier is the same whom he Praises in the Fiftieth Leaf in these words. Being in doubt about the Sense of that Passage, I have consulted Messire G. Pellissier Bishop of Montpellier, a Man very well skill'd in the Knowledge of good Authors, and even of natural Things; and he has been pleased to help me in this Passage and all others, whenever I desired his Assistance. To divert the Reader he sets down a Poem, that is worth reading. After such a long and tedious Explication of an important Passage, says he (o), before I proceed further, I shall set down a Poem heretofore written upon the Androgyne, by Messire Antony Heroet, now Bishop of Digne, which he inscribed to the late King Francis, the Father of good Learning. This I shall do for the Reader's Diversion. I shall willingly mention that Poem, not only on account of its Elegancy, but also by reason of the Friendship and Familiarity I contracted with the Author, whilst I attended at Court upon Chancellor Olivier, a very Wise and Learned Man, with whom he used to be (p). 'Tis true he does not keep to Plato's Notion, as any one may see by comparing them, but takes a Poetical Liberty, leaving out what he thinks fit.

Here is the beginning of that Poem.

Au premier aage que le monde vivoit
D'herbe, de gland: trois sortes y avoit
D'hommes, les deux tels qu'ilz sont maintenant,
Et l'autre double estoit, s'entretenant
Ensemblement tant masle que femelle.
Il faut penser, que la façon fut belle:
Car le grand Dieu qui vivre les faisoit,
Faitz les avoit, & bien s'y congnoissoit.
De quatre bras, quatre pieds, & deux testes
Estoyent formez ces raisonnables bestes.
La reste vaut mieux, pensée que ditte,
Et se verroit plustost peinte qu'escrite.
Chacun estoit de son corps tant ayse,
Qu'en se tournant il se trouvoit baisé:
En estendant ses bras, on l'embrassoit:
Voulant penser, on le contrepensoit:
En soy voyoit tout ci qu'il vouloit veoir,
En soy trouvoit ce qu'il falloit avoir.
Jamais en lieu ses pieds portez ne l'eussent,
Que quand & luy ses passetemps ne feussent.
Si de son bien luy plaisoit mal user,
Facile estoit envers soy s'excuser.
De luy n'estoit fait ne raport, ny compte,
Ne congnoissoit honnestete, ny honte.
Si de son cœur sortoyent simples desirs,
Il y entroit tant de doubles plaisirs,
Qu'en y pensant chacun est incité

(a) Archontici apud Epiphan. hæres. 40.

(b) See the Remark B in the Article Eve.

(c) Thomas Brown, Religio medici, part. 2 sect. 9. pag. m. 197.

(d) Et si recte ineptias illas ac nugas, quas vir cum muliere agit, quoties feminei voluptate uti decrevit, consideremus, nihil stultius fingi posse reperiemus. Sed ob liberorum procreandorum necessitatem, humanique generis conservationem, Deus proclives nos ad ejusmodi nugas ac voluptates esse voluit. Annotata ad religion. Medici pag. 403.

(e) Ibid.

(f) Ibid.

(g) Αἱ τιμαὶ γὰρ αὐτοῖς καὶ τὰ ἱερὰ τὰ παρὰ τῶν ἀνθρώπων ἠφανίζετο. Extincto hominum genere humanus deorum cultus venerationque periret. Plato in convivio pag. 1185.

(h) Fac. from Plato in convivio pag. 1186.

(i) De præp. Evang. lib. 12. c. 7.

(k) He was Regius Professor at Paris, and Translated several Dialogues of Plato into French, and among others the Feast: To which he added a Commentary.

(l) Folio, Paris 1559, in 4.

(m) Fol. 51.

(n) Fol. 52.

(o) Folio 53.

(p) La Croix du Maine says that Heroet, a Native of Paris, was related to Chancellor Olivier.

Aſſoon as this Article was read at Geneva, a Perſon, for whom I have a very great Eſteem, was pleaſed to ſend me a Memorial, which I ſhall inſert (G) in this Article. It appears from it that a Cordelier, who forſook his Order, is the Author of that pretended Voyage into Terra Auſtralis. I wonder that M. Couſin, who has given us very ſeriouſly an Extract of James Sadeur's Chimerical Adventures, in his Journal des Savans, knew nothing of the Vannes Edition 1676. He thought that the Paris Edition Printed for Barbin, 1692, was the firſt.

[illegible]

SADDUCEES, a Sect, which aroſe among the Jews two hundred (A) Years or thereabouts before the Birth of the Meſſias. 'Tis thought that Sadok, a Diſciple of Antigonus Sochæus was the Founder of it. He and Baithus, who was alſo a Diſciple of the ſame Antigonus, * put a wrong ſenſe upon the Doctrine of their Maſter: They concluded that there are no Rewards or Puniſhments after this Life from his exhorting them to ſerve God, not like Mercenary Men, who act only in hopes of getting ſomething by it, but like thoſe Generous Servants, who are Faithful and Obedient to their Maſters without expecting any Reward. This fine Maxim not being well underſtood by thoſe two Diſciples of Antigonus, occaſion'd their

* [illegible] Willemer in diſſert. philologica de Sadducæis pag. [illegible]

A maintenir, que le felicité
Fut le tel temps, & le ſiecle doré.

(G) A Memorial.——It appears from it that a Cordelier, who forſook his Order, is the Author.] Here follows part of a Letter written to me from Geneva, the 23d of March, 1697. "You will not be diſpleaſed to know the true Author of the Relation of Terra Auſtralis, which came out under the name of James Sadeur. His Name was Gabriel Foigni, and he was a Cordelier in a Convent of Lorrain his Native Country. He came into theſe parts in the Year 1667, and Imbraced our Religion; notwithſtanding which he Lived an irregular Life. At firſt he ſetled in the little Town of Morges, where he was the Church Singer; but one Day going to Sing, after he had been Drinking, he did ſome undecent Things at Church, which occaſion'd his being turn'd out. He came hither, and in order to get a Livelihood he went from Houſe to Houſe teaching young Boys, Grammar, Geography, &c. and the Germans the French Tongue. Sometime after he Married a Woman of the Dregs of the People, who was not accounted ſo Scrupulous as Lucretia. Afterwards he bethought himſelf of Publiſhing ſome ſmall Books; and among others an Almanack every Year, under the name of the Great Garantus, which was commonly very Faulty as to the Computation of Times; a Set of Cards for Heraldry, and the Pſalms of Marot and Beza, with a Prayer of his own making at the end of each Pſalm, containing only ſome inſipid Compliments to the Deity. Laſtly, the relations of Voyages being very much in Vogue at that time; he Compleated his Works by his Auſtralia, as he calls it: He had it Printed here Privately about the latter end of the Year 1676. Our Clergy, who thought that Book contain'd many things contrary to the Holy Scripture, and ſeveral Obſcenities, ſent for the Printer, who declared that Foigni had given him the Manuſcript. Foigni ſtoutly maintain'd that James Sadeur was the true Author of it, and that he had received the Copy from Bourdeaux: But at laſt being ſummon'd to appear before the Magiſtrates he confeſt that he had writ that Book to get ſomething, and that James Sadeur was a Suppoſititious Name. As a Puniſhment, he was ordered to leave the Town with his Family; but ſome German Gentlemen, whom he taught the French Tongue, having interceeded for him, he was allowed to ſtay here. But three or four Years after, his Maid being with Child, and he himſelf being Proſecuted upon that account, he went away and retired into Savoy, and got into a Monaſtery, where he Died five Years ago.

I ſhall ſet down here what a conſiderable Man told me in the Year 1699, viz. That the Relation Printed under the Name of James Sadeur, is the work of a Gentleman of Bretagne, a great admirer of Lucretius, whom he had Tranſlated into French, deſigning to Publiſh his Tranſlation. He put out at Vannes, in the Year 1676, the Relation of James Sadeur. I might reconcile this with the Memorial ſent to me from Geneva, by ſuppoſing that the Monk, who forſook his Order, took out of that work the Materials of the Auſtralia Publiſh'd by him, or that he Tranſcribed it word for word, and Publiſh'd it as an Original. There are ſome things in that Relation ſo nicely managed, that I can hardly believe that Foigni was Maſter of ſo much Art. I have forgot to deſire ſome of my Friends to compare Sadeur's Relation with the Auſtralia. I am apt to think that there is ſome difference between thoſe two Pieces.

(A) Two Hundred Years or thereabouts before the Birth of the Meſſias.] The moſt probable Opinion is, that Sadok, a Diſciple of Antigonus Sochæus, was the Founder of the Sect of the Sadducees. Now this Antigonus Succeeded Simon the Juſt (a) in the Chair of the Sanhedrin. This Simon died in the Year of the World 3662, or according to others 3692. One may therefore believe that Sadok's Innovation began to appear in the Year of the World 3700, that is, 248 Years before CHRIST. Thus M. Willemer argues in a Theſis maintain'd under his direction at Wittemberg the 28th of September 1680. Some Learned Men are of Opinion that the Hereſy of the Sadducees is more Ancient, and that it Sprung from a wrong Senſe put upon the 37th Chapter of Ezekiel, whilſt the Prophets Zachariah and Malachi were ſtill Alive. Dr. Lightfoot (b), who followed that Opinion in his Commentary upon St. Matthew's Goſpel, departed from it (c) in his Commentary upon the Acts of the Apoſtles, and maintain'd a very different Opinion, viz. that the Hereſy of the Sadducees did not appear till a long time after Sadok's Death. 'Tis to be obſerved that Joſephus the firſt time he mentions that Sect, does not repreſent it (d) as a New one, but as a Party intirely formed. The time his Diſcourſe refers to is that of Jonathas Brother to Judas Maccabee; and therefore it muſt be placed 153 Years before CHRIST. He mentions that Sect again about a hundred Years after (e), and repreſents it as a very Ancient one. The Jews, ſays he (f), had long before divided their Wiſdom or Philoſophy into three Sects, viz. the Eſſenians, the Sadducees, and the Phariſees. Lucas Brugenſis has a very bold Opinion. He ſays that the College of the Scribes Founded by Ezra was very Flouriſhing under the Maccabees, and that thoſe Scribes began then to examine the Queſtion about future Rewards and Puniſhments, becauſe they came to know what the Greeks ſaid about it. That inquiry occaſion'd two Sects, that of the Sadducees and that of the Phariſees: The latter were for the Affirmative, and the others for the Negative. He pretends that the Jews believed only temporal Rewards and Puniſhments according to the Law of Moſes, and that if the Patriarchs and Prophets had a greater Knowledge, they did not however teach the Doctrine of a future Life as an Article of Faith. According to this Hypotheſis the Jews learn'd of the Greeks the Immortality of the Soul, and future Rewards and Puniſhments, whereas 'tis commonly believed that the Pagans had thoſe Excellent Doctrines from the Scripture. Here follow the words of Lucas Brugenſis's. (g) Quum tempore Maccabæorum plures florerent Scribæ quorum collegium ab Eſdra exordium ſumſerat, qui ſapientiæ ſtuderent, & ut jugo Græcorum ſubjacebant, nonnunquam audirent Græcorum de his rebus (animæ humanæ immortalitate, corporis reſurrectione, æterno bonorum præmiis, & malorum ſuppliciis) fabulas, factum eſt ut cœperint quæſtiones de his rebus in medium afferre, & inter ſe ventilare, atque a ſe mutuo diſſidere, aliis iſta adſtruentibus, qui vocati fuere Phariſæi, aliis negantibus qui Sadducæi. Ante hæc tempora non videtur populus Iſrael quidquam de his rebus doctus fuiſſe, aut quidquam

(a) Hujus Simeonis Juſti diſcipulus ac in cathedra Synedrii ſucceſſor fuit Antigonus Sochæus. J. b. Helvicus Willemerus in diſſertat. philologica de Sadducæis pag. 23. edit. Wittemb. 1680.

(b) Lightfoot hor. hebraic. in Matth. III. 7. p. 236. edit. Carpz. apud Joh. Helvic. Willemer. ubi ſupra pag. 24.

(c) Id. hor. Hebr. in actus Apoſt. pag. 123. apud eund. ib. pag. 26.

(d) Joſeph. Antiq. lib. 13. c. 9.

(e) Ἐκ τοῦ πάνυ ἀρχαίου τῶν πατρίων. Jam inde a multis retro ſeculis. Joſeph. ib. l. 18. c. 2. pag. 617.

(f) Joſephus, Book 13. c. 2.

(g) Lucas Brugenſis annotat. in Matth. III. 7. apud Willemerum ubi ſupra pag. 28.

their setting up for Party-Leaders. They Founded two Pernicious (B) Sects, which utterly destroyed Religion, and foreseeing † that they would be kill'd, if they ventured to declare Publickly all the Consequences arising from their Principles, they durst not reject the Authority of the Scripture, and only rejected the Traditions. Those who embraced the Sect of Sadoc, were call'd Sadducees. They made already a considerable figure in the time of Jonathas Brother to Juda Maccabæus, that is, about the Year of Rome 600; for * Josephus informs us that there were at that time three Sects among the Jews, viz. The Pharisees, the Sadducees and the Essenians. He adds ‡ that the Sadducees rejected the Doctrine of Predestination, and Taught that Man is the only cause of his Prosperity or Adversity, according as he makes a good or an ill use of his Free-Will. He says § in another place that the Sadducees and Pharisees had many Qarrels together, and that Rich People sided with the Sadducees, but the Mob stood for the Pharisees. The latter prescribed many Rites as being transmitted and handed down to them by their Ancestors, tho' they were not Written in the Law of Moses: On the Contrary the Sadducees rejected all the Doctrines and Usages not contained in the Scripture. We Read in the same passage of Josephus that the high Priest γ Hircanus, who had been a Disciple of the Pharisees, forsook and abused them, having declared for the Sect of the Sadducees at the Suggestion of his Favourite Jonathas, who was one of 'em. We are told by the same Historian δ that the Sadducees did not believe the immortality of the Soul, ζ nor that God concerned himself (C) with Evil either to do it, or to take notice of it. He observes η that the Number of the Sadducees was not considerable, but that they were generally invested with the highest Dignities; notwithstanding which they had no great Interest; few things were done according to their Advice, and those who exercised the Magistracy were obliged to Comply against their Will with the Decisions of the Pharisees, otherwise they had not been tolerated by the Mob. Josephus makes two Observations, which, I think, will give a great light into the matter: One of 'em is that the Pharisees θ were not severe in Punishing any Body; the other is, that the Sadducees κ shewed a great severity in the Functions of Judicature. Lastly, he says λ that there was no good understanding among them, that they lived like wild Beasts, and that Friends were not better used in their Conversation than if they had been strangers. 'Tis no easy thing to reconcile this with what he says in another place, that this Sect was not beloved by the Mob but by Rich People; for the latter don't like a morose and peevish Humour, and are for introducing the sweets and conveniencies of Life wherever they can. Perhaps one might think that what he says concerning the discord of the Sadducees and their Clownish Conversation signifies only ‖ that they accounted it a Virtue to have the Liberty of disputing with their Masters. It was almost an unavoidable Consequence from their Principles, since they boldly rejected the Authority of Tradition, and did not care whether the several Texts of the Scripture had been explained by the Ancients in such a manner or not. This being laid down, a Disciple had as much right to Contradict his Master, as the latter had to Contradict his Predecessor, and so on. The Sadducees are often mention'd in the Holy Scripture; but tho' it informs us † that they † Maimonid.

* Joseph. Antiquit. Judaic. l. 13. c. 9.

‡ Id. ib. & lib. 2. de bello Judaico c. 12. (alias c. [illegible]

§ Id. Antiq. lib. 13. cap. 18. sub fin.

γ He died about the Year of Rome 649

δ Id. Antiq. lib. 18. c. 2.

ζ Id. de bello Jud. ubi supra.

η Id. Antiq. lib. 18. c. 2.

θ Id. Antiq. lib. 13. c. 18.

κ Id. Antiq. lib. 20. c. 7. See the Remark D.

λ Id. de bello Jud. ibid.

‖ Id. Antiq. lib. 18. cap. 2.

de istis publice prædicatum, eo quod lex harum rerum disertam mentionem non faceret, terrenas dumtaxat spes minasque bonis malisque ob oculos ponens. Fuit quidem Patriarcharum & prophetarum non dubia hic fides, quod vel undecimum Caput Epistolæ ad Hebræos testatum facit, sed multa a Patriarchis & Prophetis credita prædictaque fuere quæ ut non proposita atque enarrata, ita nec credenda necessario populo fuere, ut virginitas matris Messiæ, paupertas, passio, mors, resurrectio Messiæ. Videtur clara publicaque hujusmodi rerum æternarum doctrina Messiæ reservata fuisse, interim dum Messias expectaretur quo paratiores forent animi ad excipiendam fidem de rebus hujusmodi invisibilibus, futuris & æternis, permiserat DEUS varias de his opiniones oriri & sapientum synagogas inter se altercationibus discuti. M. Willemer (a) does very much dislike this Opinion, and refers the Reader to the Orthodox Divines, who have confuted the Socinians, &c. concerning the belief of the Jews.

(B) They founded two pernicious Sects.] Every Body does not acknowledge that each of those two Disciples founded a Sect: Some Learned Men pretend that the Sect of the Sadducees and that of the Baithuseans were but one and the same Sect, which went indifferently sometimes by the Name of Sadok, one of its Founders, and sometimes by the Name of Baithus, the other Founder; but because Sadok was more eager than his Collegue in maintaining the party formed by him, his Name was more frequently made use of than that of Baithus to denote their followers. Nay the latter rather chose to be call'd Sadducees than Baithuseans, because Baithus being a Bastard, they were afraid it would bring a Blot upon them. This opinion may be seen more at large in a (b) Book of Carpzovius. It is the more likely because some Learned Men confess they could never find out wherein the Sadducees differ'd from the Baithuseans. Ignosce ignorantiæ nostræ, they are Dr. Lightfoot's Words (c), si fateamur nescire nos penitus quid interérat inter Sadducæum, & Baithusæum, an convenirent in eodem, an dissentirent in aliquibus? de Baithusæis apud sacras paginas altum silentium, apud Judaicas mentio frequentissima, & videntur in quibusdam distingui a Sadducæis, ast in quibus obscurius. The Learned Maimonides (d) does plainly intimate that they were only two Names for one and the same thing. Nevertheless some Rabins have found a notable difference in it, for they say (e) that the Doctrine of the Resurrection was never denied by the Baithuseans, and that (f) the Sadducees were much more wicked, and downright Infidels. Nay some (g) will have it that the Baithuseans were a Branch of the Essenians; but that Opinion has been irrefragably confuted (h)

(C) Nor that God concern'd himself with Evil, either to do it, or to take notice of it.] Josephus charges them with this impious Doctrine: These are his Words. (i) Σαδδουκαῖοι —— τὴν μὲν εἱμαρμένην παντάπασιν ἀναιροῦσι, καὶ τὸν Θεὸν ἔξω τοῦ δρᾶν τι κακὸν ἢ ἐφορᾶν τίθενται: Sadducæi —— fatum omnino negant, & Deum extra omnem mali patrationem inspectionemque constituunt. Josephus does not seem to have understood their Opinion, for we shall see (k) hereafter that they believed that God rewards good Men in this World, and punishes the Wicked. They went to St. John the Baptist as well as the Pharisees (l) to be Baptized by him, when they ey denied the Immortality of the Soul, and the exiſtence of Angels and Spi- and that the Phariſees believed both, it gives us a worſe Character of the than of the Sadducees. I ſhall examine what has been (D) ſaid of the Immorality of the latter, and I'll make it appear that no good Proofs can be given for it. Their Virtue would be leſs ſurpriſing than that of a follower of Epicurus; they heard that he Preached Repentance in the Deſerts of Judea. The Scripture ſays that (a) they were deſirous to avoid the Evils they thought themſelves threatned with. How then can it be denied that they believed that the Baptiſm of Repentance adminiſtred by St. John would appeaſe God's Anger, or procure them ſome Advantage? They did not therefore believe, as Joſephus will have it, that God does not concern himſelf with puniſhing Evil. Saldenus is in the wrong to find fault with Voſſius, because he juſtifies them on that Head. (b) Ex philoſophis gentium hanc Sadducæorum opinionem (animam non eſſe immortalem) amplexi ſunt Epicurei; ſine longe deteriorem. Nam Sadducæi agnoſcebant Deum curare res humanas, quippe cum bonis bene facere in hac vita. Epicurei autem in totum tollebant providentiam divinam. I cannot tell, ſays Saldenus (c), why the great Voſſius went about to juſtify ſuch an infamous Sect; for having conſulted many Authors, who have writ Books concerning the Sects of the Hebrews, I find every where that the Sadducees rejected the Doctrine of Providence. I ſhall only quote Joſephus. And then he alledges what is to be found in the 9th Chapter of the 13th Book of the Jewiſh Antiquities concerning the Opinion of the Sadducees about Predeſtination and Free-Will. It had been better for him to quote the paſſage alledged by me at the beginning of this Remark; for it does not follow because a Man rejects the fatality of Predeſtination and teaches that Men are free to do good or evil, that he denies a Providence. The Pelagians, the Socinians, in a Word thoſe who have writ with the greateſt vehemency againſt the neceſſity of Humane Actions, maintain at the ſame time that God Governs the World, that he puniſhes Vice and rewards Virtue. 'Tis to be obſerved that Grotius thinks that the Greek Words of Joſephus, which I have quoted, are not correct.

(a) Hactenus Brugensis mirum in modum cumulans σοφιστικὰ ἀκυρώματα homine Theologo indigna contra fidem fidelium V. & N. Test. essentialiter eandem. Willemer, ibid.

(D) I ſhall examine what has been ſaid of the Immorality of the Sadducees.] M. Willemer (d) charges them with Cruelty, and to prove it he ſays that they induced (e) King John Hircanus to perſecute the Phariſees violently. He refers us to the 18. Chapter of the 13th Book of the Jewiſh Antiquities. I have conſulted that paſſage, wherein I only find what follows. Hircanus a Diſciple of the Phariſees, and very well beloved by them, loſt intirely their Friendſhip. They conceived a great hatred againſt him, and becauſe upon a certain occaſion they gave him ground to be very angry with them, he forſook their Sect, and imbraced that of the Sadducees at the inſtigation of Jonathas his Favourite. He aboliſh'd the Ordinances of the Phariſees, and ſeverely puniſh'd thoſe who obſerved them. Laſtly, he put an end to the Sedition, which thoſe two Sects had raiſed, and ſpent the remaining part of his Life in Peace and Felicity. M. Willemer adds that Alexander Janneus, being applauded and ſtir'd up by the Sadducees, was more Cruel than his Father Hircanus, and that having got out of a Thouſand difficulties in which he had been intangled by the Jews, he cauſed 800 of the chief Men among the Phariſees to be Crucified, and that before they expired, he ordered their Wives and Children to be murdered in their ſight. During thoſe Executions he gave a Noble Entertainment to his Concubines and to the chief Men among the Sadducees. This Author refers us to the 22d Chapter of the 13th Book of the Jewiſh Antiquities, where I don't find that the Sadducees are mention'd in the leaſt. As for the Author of the Cabbala Hiſtorica quoted by him, I have not been able to conſult him; but tho' he ſhould ſay what M. Willemer alledges out of his Book, can we believe him? Can a Man, who lived at ſo great a diſtance from thoſe times, be credited rather than Joſephus who ſays nothing of it? At laſt Queen Alexandra by her Husband's Advice and with the aſſiſtance of the Phariſees undertook to puniſh the Sadducees in order to reſtrain their Turbulent Spirit, but ſhe could not (f) effect it, nor prevent the new Broils which they occaſion'd in the State between Hircanus and Ariſtobulus; and when Herod had rid himſelf of thoſe two Princes, the Sadducees made uſe of their intereſt with him to commit all ſorts of Crimes. Joſephus in the 17th Chapter of the 16th Book of the Jewiſh Antiquities is of Opinion that Herod was moved by the Sadducees and their impious Doctrine concerning the Fatal neceſſity of all things, to cauſe his Son to be ſtrangled and three Hundred Captains to be ſtoned. This is M. Willemer's Account, and he concludes that it has been truly ſaid that the Sadducees were very immoral Men, Epicurus's Swines, and very pernicious Hereticks. (g) Ex vero igitur dictum eſt, Sadducæos fuiſſe moribus peſſimis, & Epicuri de grege porcos; ita qui doctrinam pernicioſam omnino hæreticos. But 'tis certain he draws a wrong Conſequence; for 1. the Matters of Fact on which he builds are not to be found in Joſephus, the Author he alledges: 2. Tho' they were true, it would not follow from them that the Sadducees wallowed in ſenſual Pleaſures as thoſe do who are call'd Epicuri de grege porci. All that could be proved from thence, is that they made an ill uſe of their intereſt with Princes to oppreſs the Phariſees, of whom they had great Reaſon to be afraid, ſince that Sect was animated with a ſuperſtitious Zeal, and ſupported by the Mob. I confeſs that ſuch a Conduct is unjuſt; but the like is to be ſeen in all parties, or in all Factions of State or Religion. Thoſe, that teach the Doctrine of Future Rewards and Puniſhments, have not been leſs careful to take hold of favourable Opportunities in order to oppreſs their Rivals. They are not leſs ſevere and cruel in their Counſels; and therefore there would be nothing ſingular, and no Character of diſtinction in the proceedings of the Sadducees, tho' the matters of Fact mention'd by the German Writer were true. What will he ſay then, if I ſhew that they are falſe or uncertain? Which is not a difficult thing.

'Tis certain that Joſephus does not ſpeak in the leaſt of the Sadducees in the Chapter, where he tells us how Herod cauſed his Sons and three Hundred Captains to be put to Death. He would have made himſelf extremely Ridiculous, if he had ſaid (h) that the Doctrine of thoſe Men concerning the Fatality of all things moved Herod to ſuch a Cruelty; for it was a Notorious thing that they rejected the Doctrine of Predeſtination, and whenever he mentions 'em, he obſerves that according to their Principles a Man's Fate depends wholly upon his Free-Will. I don't deny that Joſippus (i), ſays that the Sadducees occaſion'd the Inſurrection of the Jews againſt Alexander Janneus, and the Cruelty of that Prince towards that People, becauſe they adviſed him to perſecute the Phariſees and their Adherents; (k) but the Teſtimony of ſuch an Author is very inconſiderable, eſpecially when we may oppoſe againſt it the ſilence of ſuch an Hiſtorian as Joſephus, who never ſhews any partiality to the Sadducees. Rabbi Abraham of Salamanca is too Modern a Writer to build upon his Authority; and therefore we are not obliged to believe upon his Word what he ſays (l) of the Immorality of thoſe Hereticks. Once more; if they had been cried down for their Debaucheries and Wicked Actions, 'tis highly improbable that Joſephus, who ſpeaks of 'em ſo often, would have been wholly ſilent on that Head, and that the only thing mention'd by him concerning their Morals ſhould rather make us believe that they did not live a ſenſual Life. He tells us that they were Men of a Clowniſh and Wild Converſation, who ſhewed no more Civility to their Friends than to Strangers. (m) Σαδδουκαίων δὲ καὶ πρὸς ἀλλήλους τὸ ἦθος ἀγριώτερον, αἵ τε ἐπιμιξίαι πρὸς τοὺς ὁμοίους ἀπηνεῖς ὡς πρὸς ἀλλοτρίους. Sadducæi vero & inter ſe fera moribus diſcrepantes, & converſatio eorum circa exteros inhumana. This is not the Character of voluptuous Men; for on the contrary they are very complaiſant one to another, and endeavour to (d) Willemer, ubi ſupra pag. 44.

(g) Id. ib. pag. 45.

(h) Ipſe Herodes M. id immanem ſæviciam . . . peſſimis Sadducæorum conſiliis ac impia doctrina de neceſſitate omnium fatali impulſus creditur Joſepho lib. XVI. A. J. cap. 45. Id. ib. pag. 44.

(i) See the Marginal Note of Genebrard upon the 21. chapter of the 13. Book of Joſephus fol. m. 464. verſo.

(k) See in Voſſius de hiſtor. Græcis lib. 2. c. 2. pag. 197. what a contemptible Writer he is.

(l) Sadducæi fuerunt improbi peſſimiſque moribus præditi. R. Abraham Salmanticenſis apud Willemer. pag. 44.

(m) Joſeph. de bello Jud. l. 2. c. 7. ſub fin. pag. m. 788. 789.

em; for that part of Religion, which they kept, might have had an influence upon their (E) Lives thro' the Motives of Hope and Fear. However one may very well make their Conversation agreeable. M. Willemer (a) lays a great stress upon St. John the Baptist's calling the Sadducees (b) a generation of vipers. He runs back to the first Serpent, that seduced Eve. Let him say what he pleases: I need only answer him, that the Pharisees were call'd so as well as the Sadducees; and therefore if any thing be concluded from it concerning the immoral Lives of those, who denied the Immortality of the Soul, it will no less concern those who believed future Rewards and Punishments. The same may be said of the Leaven, which our Saviour (c) would have his Disciples to beware of: The Pharisees are as much concern'd in it as the Sadducees.

Take Notice that 'tis the Opinion of many Authors that the Sadducees call'd themselves so from a Word, which signifies Righteousness. (d) Ἐπονομάζουσι δὲ ἑαυτοὺς Σαδδουκαίους, δῆθεν ἀπὸ δικαιοσύνης τῆς ἐπικλήσεως ὁρμωμένης. Σεδὲκ γὰρ ἑρμηνεύεται δικαιοσύνη. Sadducæos se a justitia nominant. Sedek enim justitiam significat. Those, who approve this Etymology, observe that those Hereticks were call'd Sadducees (e), because they were fond of being accounted just Men, and others bestowed that Encomium upon them. M. Willemer (f) cites for this Opinion Isidorus, Beatus Rhenanus, Bernard de Breitenbach, and Dr. Mountague. He says 'tis a dispute from what sort of Righteousness those Sectaries were denominated. 'Twas, according to St. Jerome, an inherent Righteousness; for they pretended to have acquired it perfectly by the Observation of the Law. Many approve this Opinion of St. Jerome. (g) D. Hieronymus in Matthæum XXII. Tom. VI. oper. allegat propriam inhærentem justitiam, de cujus perfectione, ex lege à se observata, fuerint gloriati. Sequuntur eum multi Patrum, plurimique Scholasticorum ut & Mathias Flacius part. 1. Clav. Script. pag. 1064. Georgius Fabritius histor. sacr. lib. X. Num. 432. pag. 584. Atque Greg. Lex. S. pag. 236. Others will have it to be a distributive Justice, and are still divided about it; for some say 'tis that which consists in rewarding, and others that which consists in punishing. The former pretend that according to the Sadducees Justice is only administred in this World; good Men are rewarded, and Wicked Men punish'd in it, and nothing remains to be done after this Life. The latter say that those Hereticks were very severe in the Administration of Justice, and that they were call'd Sadducees upon that Account. (h) Non-nemo —— ob remunerativam justitiam eos justos appellatos statuit, quod existimarint in hac vita omnem compleri justitiam, h. e. justis bene fieri, malis evenire mala, mortuo autem homine nullum superesse judicium justitiæ. Punitivam vero justitiam eligit Nicolaus de Lyra Comment. in Act. V. ita inquiens: Dicuntur Sadducæi à Sadech, quod est justitia in Hebræo: nam Sadducæi inter alios Judæos erant in judiciis & punitionibus acerrimi, ut dicitur (i) in Scholastica historia, propterea sibi nomen justitiæ usurpabant. If the Facts, on which this Etymology is grounded, be true, we need not doubt that the Sadducees pretended to be good Moral Men, and carefully avoided to live a loose Life. However it be, we have here many Authors, who must needs believe that they were Regular Men; and at the worst all that can be said is, that Authors don't agree about this Subject: But after what has been said, it will be no difficult thing to judge which of 'em are in the right. 'Tis to be observed that one may easily believe that the Sadducees were very severe; for since they did not believe that a Malefactor would be punish'd after this Life, 'twas Natural for them to think that he was to be Condemn'd to a very severe Punishment in this World.

I must take notice of some Faults of Mr. Lloyd. I think he is mistaken, when he says, 1. That what Josephus tells us of their Austerity, ought to be understood of the severe Sentences which they pronounced in administring justice. 2. That according to the same Historian the Jews hated them by Reason of that severity, and were more inclined to the Pharisees, who shewed a greater Moderation in inflicting Punishments. (k) Erant enim in maleficos acerbiores in judiciis, & pœnarum mulctis exercendis rigidi, quemadmodum ex hist. Scholast. citat Serrarius, non dissentiente Josepho. Hinc enim repetunt illud elogium, quo morosos, difficiles, minimeque tractabiles pronunciat: adeo ut ab illorum moribus durioribus abhorreret populus, & ad Pharisæos potius propenderent, qui [illegible], quod ille dixit, ἐπιεικῶς πρὸς τὰς κολάσεις ἔχουσι. I shall observe upon the first Item, that the description of the rough way of the Sadducees is improperly alledged. Josephus does not consider 'em as Judges in that place. What he observes (l) in the 8th Chapter of the 10. Book of the Jewish Antiquities should have been quoted by Serrarius, Nicolas de Lyra and several others, and not the Historia Scholastica. As to the Second, I say that Mr. Lloyd could not be blamed, if he had spoken his own thoughts; but he ascribes to Josephus a Connexion of Matters, a reasoning, or a Proposition, termed causale, which is not to be found in his Works. Such a Proposition is sometimes false, tho' its parts considered by themselves be true; for this is not sufficient. The (m) Particle, whereby they are connected together, ought not to bring in a Falsity. Mr Lloyd did not consider this: Many Authors are guilty of the same Carelesness.

(E) Might have had an influence upon their Lives thro' the Motives of hope and fear.] All things duly considered, I don't think that I ought to retract what I have said in another Book: " (n) There was a
" Sect among the Jews, which openly denied the " Immortality of the Soul, viz, the Sadducees. I " don't find that notwithstanding so detestable an " Opinion, they were worse livers than the other " Jews; on the contrary 'tis very likely they were " more Honest Men than the Pharisees, who pretend-
" ed to observe punctually the Law of God." I must only add a short Observation to that passage, viz. that the good Life of the Sadducees might have been an effect of their believing a Providence; for 'tis thought they believed that God punishes Men in this World for their wicked Actions, and rewards their Virtue. See the Remark G. This Opinion may serve for a Curb and a Spur: it may induce Men to the Practice of Virtue in hopes of a Temporal Happiness, and deter them from Evil thro' the Fear of Temporal Punishments. Nay, it may seem to be a more powerful Motive than the other Doctrine, because good and evil things, when present or near at hand, make a much greater impression, tho' they be inconsiderable, than good or evil things, tho' never so great, that are only viewed at a great distance. This is what may be said by those, who examine this superficially; but those who dive into the thing, judge otherwise of it. They believe that generally speaking the greatest Power of Religion with respect to Virtue consists in the persuasion of Eternal Rewards, and Punishments; and that those who deny the Immortality of the Soul, break the best Springs of Religion. Which may be confirm'd by two Remarks: One is, that 'tis hardly possible to persuade People that they shall prosper upon Earth if they live a good Life, and that they shall be unhappy if they live an ill Life. Every Body thinks he sees every Day a Thousand Instances of the contrary; and can any Doctors, tho' never so eloquent, persuade a thing, which Men think to be contradicted by a continual Series of Experiences? They may indeed tell us in answer to our Objections (o), that we know but little wherein true Prosperity and true Adversity consist, and that Wicked Men are sufficiently punish'd by the Remorses (p) of their Conscience in the midst of their Wealth and Glory, whilst an honest Man is worthily rewarded by the sole possession (q) of Virtue and the Testimony of a good Conscience. They will tell us a Thousand fine things upon this subject, and form in us a kind of persuasion; but it will not be a constant one, and they may be afraid that during our bad intervals, we shall tell 'em what Brutus said to Virtue. If you object to me that there is a certain

(a) Willemer. ubi supra pag. 17.

(b) Matt. III. 7.

(c) Ibid. XVI. 6.

(d) Epiphan. Hæres. 14. p. m. 31.

(e) Eo quod justitiæ laudem tum sibi apponerent, tum aliis tribuerent. Willemerus pag. 5.

(f) Idem pag. 6.

(g) Id. ib.

(h) Id. ib.

(i) Josephus should have been quoted.

(k) Nicolaus Lloydius in Diction. histor. & poetico v. Sadducæi.

(m) [illegible] l'Art de penser 2. part. ch. [illegible] p. m. 175.

(n) Pensées diverses sur les Comètes pag. [illegible]

(o) Neque mala vel bona, quæ vulgus putet: multos qui conflictari adversis videantur, beatos; ac plerosque quamquam magnas per opes, miserrimos si illi gravem fortunam constanter tolerent, hi prospera inconsulte utantur. Tacit. Ann. l. 6. c. 22.

(p) Neque frustra præstantissimus sapientiæ firmare solitus est, si recludantur [illegible] mentes, posse [illegible] & ictus; quando ut corpora verberibus, ita sævitia, libidine, malis consultis, animus dilaceretur. Il. ib. cap. 6.

(q) Ipsa quidem virtus pretium sibi, solaque late &c. Claudian. de consul. Mallii init.

well wonder that they were not (F) Excommunicated, and that they made but one Body of Religion with the reſt of the Jews, as the Janſeniſts and Moliniſts do now with the other Chriſtians of the Romiſh Communion. The Sadducees ‡ don't appear under that Name in the Talmud, but only under the Notion of Hereticks and Epicureans. There is little Reaſon to ſay that they admitted only the Five (G) Books of Moſes, and that tain Impreſſion in Men, which frequently rouzes it ſelf, and is very active; it makes one believe contrary to Experience, that Piety is attended with Temporal Bleſſings, and that the Tranſgreſſion of the Law of God is puniſh'd in this World: I ſay, if you object ſuch a thing to me, I anſwer that the Orthodox will feel the activity of that Impreſſion as well as the Sadducees, and that being moreover perſuaded of a Future State, Religion will have a greater Influence upon their Lives. Which is my Second Obſervation.

To conclude, I ſay it cannot be denied that if a Man is fully perſuaded that the Divine Juſtice diſtributes Rewards and Puniſhments only in this Life, he may abſtain from Evil, and practiſe Virtue out of a Religious Motive. But then it muſt be ſaid that ſuch an Opinion is ſo unlikely to overcome the Depravation of our Nature, that one may well affirm that the Sadducees deſtroyed the true Foundations of Religion, and that the good Life of a Sadducee may be look'd upon as a kind of inſtance of the Conjunction of Moral Honeſty with Impiety. M. Willemer will grant it, for he ſays that a Sadducee not believing the Immortality of the Soul could not be a good Man. (*) Qui vero a turpiſſimis quibuſque vitiis graviſſimiſque ſceleribus temperarent ſibi, qui per negatam animæ immortalitatem arctiſſime conjuncta huic dogmata corporum reſurrectionem, omnium diſſolicationem, ſempiternam bonorum glorificationem, ac improborum condemnationem affirmare non poterant, ſed pertinaciter inficiabantur. The Author of theſe Latin words proves a Fact by a Reaſoning: ſuch a method is not always ſafe, becauſe Men don't uſe to live according to their Principles. In general, when the Queſtion is about a matter of Fact, Experience ought to be more minded than a Speculative Argument. Take notice of theſe words of Moreri, which he had from M. ‡ Godeau: 'Tis true that if the Sadducees were more Impious than the Phariſees in their Doctrine, they were not however ſo vain and ſo great Hypocrites, and did not appear ſo Cruel to JESUS CHRIST. You'll find the ſame Obſervation in Hofman's Dictionary.

(F) That they were not Excommunicated.] I begin this Remark with a Paſſage, that contains an Obſervation of Lucas Brugenſis. (a) Mirum igitur videri queat quòd uti ſcribit Lucas Brugenſis annotation in Matth. III. verſ. 7. quanquam errarent Sadducæi, & quidem graviter; nunquam tamen à veteri Synagoga declarati ſint hæretici, h. e. deſertores fidei, aut legis a DEO traditæ, vel ut populi ſeductores, Synagogæ communione ejecti quemadmodum Samaritani Joh. 4. 9 Imo promiſcue verſabantur etiam ipſi Phariſæi & Sacerdotes cum Sadducæis tam in ſacris quam prophanis locis, Act. 4. 1. c. 23. 6. & communia non raro inibant conſilia adverſus Chriſtum ejuſque diſcipulos Matth. 16. verſ. 1. Actor. 5. 1. Denique licebat cuivis, utri vellet parti adhærere. Verum id tribuendum corruptiſſimis ſeculi illius moribus. It muſt be confeſt that it was an Exceſſive Toleration; for the Errors of the Sadducees did not conſiſt in indifferent Things, but concern'd the moſt Eſſential Doctrines of Religion: The Modern Writers, who are for a Toleration, don't deſire it ſhould be ſo comprehenſive as that of the Jews; they don't deſire an Eccleſiaſtical Toleration for all Sects, but are contented with a Civil and Political one. We have ſeen that M. Willemer aſcribes the Toleration of the Synagogue for the Sect of the Sadducees to the Corruption of thoſe Times. He gives other Reaſons for it, and particularly the care thoſe Hereticks took to comply in all things with the Publick Worſhip: (b) Magnopere impediebat ejectionem promeritam favor Magnatum plane ſingularis erga Sadducæos. Adjuvabat ingens Sadducæorum, quæ invaluerat, potentia, ac ingenioſa qua abominandam hæreſim tegebant, aſtutia: crebra item ſacrificia, atque reliqua Levitici cultus onera, quæ pro ſalute populi ſe ſuſcipere gloriabantur. 'Tis certain that the moſt Enormous Diverſity of Opinions as to ſpeculative Doctrines, is more Tolerated than the leaſt diſpute about the Publick Worſhip. Be careful to Practiſe all the outward Duties preſcribed by the prevailing Religion; and notwithſtanding your great Hereſies you'll be leſs Moleſted than if you ſhould oppoſe the outward Worſhip without being guilty of thoſe Hereſies.

I muſt obſerve that a Reform'd (c) Divine, who is very much againſt Toleration, has confuted thoſe, who ſay that Hereticks ought to be Puniſh'd with Death, among other Reaſons by alledging our Saviour's Conduct towards the Sadducees. He obſerves that JESUS CHRIST dealt with them with great Clemency, and did not blame the Magiſtrates who Tolerated them. See the Penſées diverſes ſur les cometes in the 185. Article.

(G) That they admitted only the Five Books of Moſes.] Tertullian ſays they followed the Hereſy of Doſitheus, who rejected the Prophets, and that beſides they were ſo Impious as to deny the Reſurrection. (d) Taceo ——— Doſitheum, qui primus auſus eſt prophetas quaſi non in Spiritu Sancto locutos repudiare. Taceo Sadducæos qui ex hujus erroris radice ſurgentes, auſi ſunt ad hanc hæreſim etiam reſurrectionem carnis negare. (e) Origen, (f) St. Jerome, and many other Writers ſay the ſame; I mean, that the Sadducees acknowledged no other Books to be Canonical beſides the Pentateuch. I have alſo advanced the ſame Opinion in (g) another Work; but now I confeſs that it does not ſeem to me well grounded. There is a Negative Argument againſt it, which appears to me very good. The Holy Scripture never ſays, ſpeaking of the Sadducees and their Errors, that they rejected the Prophecies. I confeſs this ſilence is not a convincing Reaſon; but what ſhall we ſay of Joſephus, who does not aſcribe to them ſuch a Rejection? One can hardly believe that he would have omitted ſuch a Remarkable and Important Article, even when he obſerves that this Sect rejected the Traditions. Here is a ſtronger Argument: He not only ſays nothing of their rejecting part of the Scripture, in a place where he could not be ſilent about it; but poſitively affirms that when they denied the Authority of the unwritten Traditions, they gave this Reaſon for it, (h) nothing ought to be accounted Lawful but what is written. Can an Hiſtorian ſpeak thus of a Sect, that rejects the greateſt part of the Scripture, without being a Mad-Man? I know that a Caviller may ſay (i) that Joſephus's words concern only the written Laws, and conſequently the Pentateuch; but I know alſo that this Hiſtorian could not avoid mentioning in that place the Contempt, which 'tis ſaid thoſe Hereticks had for the other Books of the Scripture. M. Simon is poſitively againſt thoſe, who affirm that they acknowledged no other Books to be Canonical beſides the Pentateuch, and alledges the Teſtimony of Joſephus. That Sect, ſays he (k), retained the whole Body of the Scripture according to Joſephus, who affirms that the Sadducees received (l) πάντα τὰ γεγραμμένα, all the Scripture, and only rejected the Traditions; and therefore thoſe are miſtaken, who believe that the Sadducees kept only the Five Books of Moſes in imitation of the Samaritans. There are many Paſſages in the Babylonian Talmud, and in the Writings of the Rabbins, (m) whereby it appears that the Sadducees acknowledged the Hagiographa, and the Prophetical Books of the Scripture to be Divine, and only deſpiſed the Explications of their Doctors. Some think that the Samaritans (n) have been confounded with the Sadducees, and that it was the reaſon why ſeveral Writers fancied that the latter rejected all the Books of the Scripture beſides the Pentateuch, as the Samaritans did. But thoſe two Sects ought to be diſtinguiſhed; for the Jews had no that therefore CHRIST disputing with them * alledged only the Pentateuch. Arnobius is the only Author who informs us that according to some (H) they ascribed an Organized Body to God. He relates this in a manner that is somewhat liable to Censure.

---

‡ Huls. [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] Advers. ſec. IX. p. m. 159.

(*) Willemer. ubi ſupra pag. 41.

(‡) Godeau hiſt. Eccleſ. tom. 1. pag. 126. of the Paris Edition in Folio, 1674.

(a) Id. ib. p. 14, 15.

(b) Id. ib. pag. 15.

(c) Jurieu, Apolog. pour la Reformation tom. 2. pag. 251. edit. in 4.

(d) Tertullian. de præſcript. adverſ. hæret. c. 45.

(e) Origenes tractat. 21. in Matth.

(f) Hieronym. in Matth. c. 22.

(g) In the Penſées diverſes ſur les Cometes pag. 532.

(h) Ἐκεῖνα δεῖν ἡγεῖσθαι νόμιμα τὰ γεγραμμένα· τὰ δ' ἐκ παραδόσεως τῶν πατέρων μὴ τηρεῖν. Oportere eas tantum ſervari quæ ſcripto continentur. Joſeph. Antiq. lib. 13. c. 18. pag. 454.

(i) Serarius & Petavius will have it ſo. See Petavius's Notes in Epiphan. ad hæreſ. 14. p. 28.

(k) Simon, Hiſt. Critique du vieux teſtament B. 1. ch. 16. p. m. 93.

(l) I think M. Simon would have much ado to find thoſe Greek words in Joſephus. (m) See the Diſſertation of John Helvicus Willemer pag. 33, 34. (n) See the ſame Diſſertation. pag. 10. & 11.

SAINT-CYRAN (JOHN DU VERGER DE HAURANNE ABBOT OF) one of the Patriarchs of Jansenism, was a Native of Bayonne. Moreri speaks of him ||. I might add many things to what he says, but I put 'em off till another time. He was a very Learned Man, as it appears from his work † against the Somme Theologique of Father Garasse, and from the Books that he Published against the Jesuits, on which Bishop Godeau bestowed an Encomium β at the desire of the Clergy of France, in the Year 1646. The Author did not put his Name to 'em; he appeared in the last Books under the Disguise of Petrus Aurelius for the reasons mention'd § by his Friends. Few People know that he is the Author no Communication with the Samaritans, and made but one Ecclesiastical Body with the Sadducees. Nay sometimes a Sadducee (a) was their High Priest, and 'tis not improbable that the High Priest Caiphas (b) was one of that Sect.

This Argument would be wrong: The Sadducees chose such Books of the Scripture as were not formally contrary to their Errors; they acknowledged them to be Canonical, and rejected the rest as plainly containing the Immortality of the Soul and the Doctrine of the Resurrection. Their Idleness made 'em pitch upon this short way of disputing. Sadducæi compendio studentes & otio, immo etiam ut effugerent plurium confutationes abjectis & abolitis omnibus prophetarum libris solos quinque Mosis receperunt (c). I say that such Arguments as this are fallacious: Matters of Fact require to be proved by Arguments grounded upon Facts, and not by Probabilities supported by speculative Reasons. Besides we don't want such Reasons; for Men may so easily invent Subterfuges, Glosses and Distinctions, that they need not reject the Authenticity of a Book, to answer the Arguments alledged against 'em out of it. Don't the Socinians profess to acknowledge all the New Testament, and yet it contains more passages against their Errors than the Old Testament against those of the Sadducees? Nay, what is more surprising, many Christians, who still acknowledge the Truth of the Holy Scripture, laugh at Magick, (+) and maintain that the Devils have no Power. I must observe that a Modern Rabbin questions the Truth of what is said in the Scripture, that the Sadducees did not believe any Spirits. It would follow from thence, says he, that they rejected the Pentateuch, wherein Angels are mention'd in several places. (d) De eo quod Sadducæi dicuntur (Act. 23. 8.) negasse spiritus, non disputo. Sane ut multi putant sic sequeretur eos negasse legem Mosaicam quæ variis in locis angelorum mentionem facit. He argues wrong: The Sadducees made use of Distinctions in answer to those Passages. See Willemer (e), and the Writers quoted by him, and particularly Grotius (f). Consult also Vossius (g), whom he does not quote. What is certain is, that they practised the Rites of the Jews, and profest to believe that by that means God would bestow upon them the Favours he has promised to those who observe his Law, and they would avoid the Curses wherewith the Transgressors were threaten'd. (h) Promissionibus legis inhiabant, eoque nomine DEUM sibi sacrificiis, precibus, jejuniis, aliisque cultus Levitici ceremoniis placare conabantur, ne iratum Numen promissiones amplissimas a populo tolleret. The Author of these Latin words shews against Dr. Lightfoot, that the passage of Malachi (i) does not suit with that Sect, since they never believed that the Law was to be despised, nor that the Observation of it was insignificant. (k) Neque Sadducæorum doctrinæ & moribus convenit locus Malach. III. v. 14. nunquam enim professi sunt Sadducæi, legem DEI non esse observandam, aut observantiam legis esse frustraneam. Contrarium docet ipse Lightfoot Hor. Hebr. in Act. Apost. p. 122. quænam, inquiens, religio Sadducæi? Orat, jejunat, sacrificat, observat legem, & tamen non expectat resurrectionem aut vitam æternam. Quorsum hæc religio? Ut obtineat scilicet bona temporalia quorum solum promissionem observat ille fassum in lege nihil rimans ultra literam. The passage of Malachi would admirably suit with some Sadducees, who might have learn'd from Experience the falsity of the Maxims of their Doctors.

(H) They ascribed an Organiz'd Body to God. Arnobius relates this in a manner that is somewhat liable to Censure.] Consider well his words. (l) Neque quisquam Judæus in hoc loco nobis opponat & Sadducæi generis fabulas tanquam formas tribuant atque os Deo. Hoc enim putatur in eorum literis dici, & ut vel re certa, atque auctoritate firmari: quæ aut nihil ad nos attinent, nec ex aliqua portione quicquam habent commune nobiscum: aut si sunt, ut creditur, socia, quærendi sunt vobis altioris intelligentiæ doctores, per quos possitis addiscere, quibus modis conveniat literarum illarum nubes, atque involucra relaxare. One of those, who have Commented upon him, Censures him in the following manner. Nimis confuse Arnobius, saith he (m), atque etiam periculose. Nam de libro Veteris Testamenti tanta temeritate loqui impium plane & horrendum. Hoc igitur ait quia Rabbinorum scripta infinitis fabulis jam scatebant—— Summam imperitiam prodit hoc loco Arnobius. Atqui melius Numenius Pythagoreus qui libro de summo bono primo Judæos in iis nationibus numeravit quæ Deum incorporeum existimabant, citatis etiam prophetarum testimoniis atque troporum enodatione, si quando contraria sententiis videbatur elici posse adhibita. This Censure is not altogether groundless, but it should have been less severe; for Arnobius means this. We are not answerable for the idle Fancies of the Jews; but there is no harm in the things that are common to us with them, if the Mystical Sense be well understood. He could not deny that according to the Literal Sense of the Scripture God has Hands and Feet, a Mouth, Eyes, &c. He should therefore have told the Heathens that the Truth lies concealed under those Expressions. He shewed himself a dextrous and able Rhetorician by not insisting on that Objection, and telling only his Adversaries in four or five Lines, that the Christians don't ascribe to God any Figure or Organical Composition. Had he been willing to enter upon a more exact discussion of the matter, as Numenius did, he would have enervated his Work; for since he was writing an Invective against the Pagans, it was not his business to lose any time in answering them. 'Twas better for him to act all along the part of an Assailant; an Author ought to be upon the Defensive as little as he can, when he writes Books of this Nature. To conclude, we find in (n) Origen what Numenius did in favour of the Jews; which shews that the Pagans did not neglect the pretended advantages they hoped to draw from those Passages of the Scripture, that seem to ascribe some Imperfection to God. The Christians had recourse to the figurative Sense, and alledged against such Passages those, wherein the Perfection of God is clearly express'd. But Arnobius's work could hardly allow of such a Diversion, which afforded a pretence to answer that the Passages of the Poets ought to be explain'd one by another, and that some of 'em were to be understood in a figurative Sense. It had been an improper thing for Arnobius to revive such a Notion: The Commentator, who censures him, was not aware of it.

(A) Ibn

(e) Willem. p. 38, 39. (f) Grotius in Matth. cap. 22. v. 23. (g) Vossius de orig. & prog. idol. l. 1. c. 6. (h) Willem. p. 41. (i) Ye have said, It is vain to serve God: and what profit is it, that we have kept his Ordinance, and that we have walked mournfully before the LORD of Hosts? Malach. chap. 3. ver. 14. (k) Willem. pag. 25.

* Matth. Mark and Luke [illegible]

|| [illegible]

† [illegible]

β See a piece of the Jesuit Vavasseur intituled Antonius Godellus Episcopus Grassensis an eloquens? Acne etiam Scriptor idoneus.

§ In the Dialogue of two Parishioners of St. Hilary du Mont, pag. m. 45.

(a) See Josephus Antiq. lib. 20. c. 7.

(b) See the Vth Chapter of the Acts of the Apostles, v. 17.

(c) Centur. Magdeburg. Cent. I. lib. 1. cap. 5.

(+) Mr. Becker a Minister of Amsterdam maintain'd this Doctrine with great heat in some Books written in the Vulgar Tongue. He was deposed upon that account. He pretended to say nothing contrary to the Scripture.

(d) Manasse Ben Israel lib. 1. de resurrect. mortuor. cap. 6. pag. 43. apud Willemerum ubi supra pag. 38.

(l) [illegible]

(m) Desid. Heraldus in Arnobium pag. m. 134.

(n) Origen. contra Celsum lib. 1. Heraldus quotes the Passage in Greek.

Author of an (A) Apology for the Bishops, who take up Arms. This Paradox is less surprizing, than that which he maintain'd in his (B) Casus Regius. He died ‡ of an Apoplexy at Paris, the 2d of October ψ 1643. The Assembly of the Clergy was so much displeased with the Encomium bestowed upon him in the Gallia Christiana of Messieurs de Sainte Marthe, that they ordered (C) it to be struck out.

Those, who say that he died a Prisoner at Bois de Vincennes, are mistaken, and might have avoided that mistake, * if they had taken notice that among his (D) Letters, there are some that were written to Paris after he had recovered his Liberty. His Friends pretend || that he was imprisoned in 1637, for no other reason, but because Cardinal de Richelieu had a mind to Revenge himself, that Abbot having refused to give his Vote for the dissolution of the Marriage of the Duke of Orleans and the Princess of Lorrain. If this was the true reason of his Confinement, some other Causes were alledged for it, and Endeavours were used to undo him as a false Doctor: His Trial μ began upon that Foot. But some say ‡ St. Romuald Abregé du thresor Chronol. tom. 3. pag. 453. (ψ) Leure Chronol. tom. 3. p. 377.

* See Leydecker, in histor. Jansenismi pag. 407. & epistolam Christiani Philireni ad Junium Pacolongum pag. 19.

|| See the 5. Volume of la Morale pratique p. 385. See also pag. 415.

μ See L'Esprit de Mr. Arnaud, tom. 1. pag. 279 & seq.

(A) That he is the Author of an Apology for the Bishops, who take up Arms.] Consider these words of M. Joly. (a) The Canons of Munster ought to prove their Nobility by fifteen descents, as they say, and they are so fond of it and of their Military Performances, that I have seen an Epitaph upon the Tomb of a Canon, which imports that he died a Captain in the War. Hence it is that they use to get their Pedigrees and Coats of Arms painted in a Cloyster adjoining to the Church, or in some publick Place. This Example, in my Opinion, does not deserve to be imitated no more than those, that were Collected and Inserted in the Book Intitled l'Apologie de l'Evesque de Poitiers, in the Year 1615, which a Learned Man of that time call'd in a pleasant manner, and not without Reason, The Alcoran of the Bishop of Poitiers; tho' the Author of that Book, who did not put his Name to it, has been since much talk'd of on account of some other works concerning Piety and the Doctrine of the Church, which are much better. M. Joly would say no more, tho' he meant our John du Verger. That Bishop of Poitiers, was the Patron of that Learned Man, and resign'd to him (b) the Abby of Saint-Cyran in 1620. I have read in a Compiler that John du Verger (c) being Principal of a College in his Country, and hearing that this Bishop wanted a Reader or a Library Keeper, offered his Service to him, which the Bishop accepted. Voetius did not forget this Warlike Adventure of the Bishop of Poitiers in his List of some Ecclesiasticks who took up Arms. That Prelate appears at the end of that Catalogue. (d) Henricus Ludovicus Rupiposæus Episcopus Pictaviensis non solum arma tractavit, & armato populo armatus præivit, ut Pictavio nonnullos ex Patritiis quibus diffidebat ejiceret: sed etiam Apologiam edidit anno 1615. adversus eos qui dicebant, non licere Ecclesiasticis in casu necessitatis ad arma recurrere: sub cujus finem Catalogum bene longum texuit Cardinalium & Episcoporum qui tempore necessitatis arma tractarunt, Joannis Columnæ Legati Gregorii IX. contra Fridericum, Arnoldi Pelgrue Vasconii contra Venetos, Ægidii Albornos Cardinalis Toletani, cum Rege Castiliæ contra Mauros, & contra Ludovicum Bavarum & aliorum complurium, quorum nomina ibidem legi possunt, simulque videri nullam coegisse necessitatem ut viri Ecclesiastici ad id negotium admoverentur; quando laicorum ducum satis larga copia suppeteret.

(B) The Paradox which he maintain'd in his Casus Regius.] I have not read that Book, but 'tis said that he maintain'd in it that there are thirty four Cases, wherein a Man may Kill himself innocently. (e) Paulo ante (obitum) composuerat librum inscriptum Casus Regius, ubi attulerat 34. casus in quibus quilibet poterat libere se ipsum interficere. Unde unus ex discipulis ejus nomine Mester arripuit nuper occasionem se ipsum interficiendi, cum Metensis esset. Father Paul approved the Principles of the Stoicks in this respect; for when he was told that the Pope design'd to have him carried away, he answered among other things, " (f) That if he was taken alive in order " to be carried to Rome, the Pope could not think " that a Man has not a greater Power over his Life " than all others put together, and that therefore " he might deprive himself of his Life, rather than " the Pope should have the satisfaction to deprive " him of it in Publick." I don't know whether many People have taken notice of this Maxim of Fra-Paolo.

THIS Doctrine of our Abbot was sometimes mention'd in the first Answers to the Lettres Provinciales written by M. Pascal. " (g) You should " rather think of mending the Doctrine of the " Abbot of Saint-Cyran, who was so bold as to say " that we may Kill our Neighbours when we are " moved to it by an inward inspiration, tho' it be " forbidden by the outward Law. You may see " the Proof and the practice of it in the second Page " of the Information, drawn up against him by the " late King's Order, in the Year 1638. The Original is in Clermont-College. ——— (h) There " are some Opinions concerning this (i) matter, " which are plainly contrary to the Christian Faith. " ——— (k) Some are repugnant to Morality, " which we call Scandalous, as those of the Abbot " of Saint-Cyran (1), who said that we are bound " to Kill a Man, when moved to it by Inspiration, " tho' it be contrary to the outward Law, which " forbids it. Some are against common Sense, " which we call Extravagant and Rash, as that of " the same Abbot, who goes about to prove in his " Casus Regius, which you acknowledge to be his " first work, that Men are often bound to Kill themselves; and that this Obligation being one of the " most difficult and important, the performance of " it requires an extraordinary Courage and Firmness. ——— (l) Can those, who teach, that 'tis " a lawful thing to Kill one self, (2) and that a Man " is often bound to do it, have a right to determine " when 'tis lawful to Kill one's Neighbour? And " can those, who say, that we ought to Obey the in- " ward Motion, (3) which prompts us to Kill a Man, " tho' it be forbidden by the outward Law, declare " at what time the outward Law allows of it, and " gives us a full Power to do it? I dont think that M. Pascal made any answer to this Point, tho' he was in a manner forced to it by such frequent Repetitions, and I don't know whether his Silence was ever Objected to him.

(g) Responses aux lettres Provinciales pag. 170. 171. Liege 1658.

(h) Ibid. pag. 341.

(i) That is, concerning the Killing of a Man.

(1) 'Tis a piece of his Trial, which is to be seen in Clermont-College.

(k) Ibid. pag. 360.

(2) The Abbot of St. Cyran in his Casus Regius.

(3) A Maxim of the Abbot of St. Cyran according to the Deposition of the Witnesses in his Process kept in Clermont-College.

(C) That they ordered it should be struck out.] This I find in St. Romuald. " The Son of one of " the Twin Brothers of Scævola de Sainte Marthe, " who is lately dead, Publish'd in their Name four " great Volumes in Folio, Intitled Gallia Christiana, and mentioning that Abbot, bestowed on him " a great Encomium, as if he had been the most " Orthodox, and the most Holy Man that lived in " our days; but the general Assembly of the Clergy " of France ordered it to be struck out by a formal " Decree (m).

'TIS to be observed that (n) the Prelates, who in their Assembly caused that Encomium to be suppress'd, would not buy any Copy of the Gallia Christiana, wherein it was left out.

(D) That among his Letters.] 'Tis a work very much cried up by the Jansenists. M. Arnauld d'Andilly Publish'd it in 1648, and Dedicated it to the Clergy of France. They are Devout Letters, full of Pious Maxims, as we are told; for I have not seen them. M. Leydecker (o) has given us some Extracts of 'em, whereby the Reader may have a good Opinion of that work. On the contrary Father Bouhours (p) quotes some Fragments of those Letters, ſay that Cardinal de Richelieu (E) looking upon him as a Man very well qualified to write againſt the Proteſtants, exhorted him to go about it in his Priſon, and offered to ſupply him with Books and all neceſſary helps. He was not much eſteem'd by the Famous Grotius (F); which is not very ſurpriſing; for Grotius following the Doctrine of the Arminians was not very well diſpoſed to admire ſuch a rigid follower of St. Auguſtin. I have ſaid in another place that the Opinion of this Abbot about the Council of Trent was diſcovered to the Publick by M. Abelly in the Life of Vincent de Paul, and that the diſcovery of this Secret was acceptable to many People. Which muſt not be ſo underſtood as if the Publick had not known before that ſuch a Thought was aſcribed to that Abbot. I only meant that many were glad to know that the Teſtimony of Vincent de Paul appeared in Print; but before that Work of M. Abelly came out, one might have read in ſome (G) other Books that the Abbot of Saint-Cyran did not very well approve the Council of Trent.

(l) St. Romuald Abregé du thresor Chronol. tom. 3. p. m. 452. 453. ad ann. 1643. (m) Vigneul Marville, Melang. tom. 2. p. 23. Dutch Edit. (n) Leydecker in histor. Jansenismi pag. 470. & seq. (p) Bouhours, Maniere de bien penser, pag. 345. & seq. Dutch Edition. See also the Answers to the Lettres Provinciales, pag. 234. 235. & seq. Edit. of Liege 1658.

SAINT-CYRE was one of the brave Men among the Proteſtants under the Reign of Charles IX. His Name was (A) Tanneguy Bouchet de Puy-Greſſier. He was one of the Heads of the Conſpiracy of Amboiſe; and after the † Battle of Dreux he was ſent to Orleans to be Governor of that place upon Advice that the Royal Army deſign'd to beſiege it. He brought the Troops || of Guienne to the Prince of Condé after the Battle of St. Denys, and was kill'd in that of Moncontour, being *one of the * oldeſt and braveſt Men in France*. We find a more particular account of his Bravery in d'Aubigne's Hiſtory. The Conſternation of the Reformed, ſays he ‡, " was not ſo great, but that they rallied and often charg" ed thoſe who preſs'd them hard, tho' they were cloſely purſued by the Com" panies of the Marſhals de Camp, which had not fought. The chief Glory of that " running fight ought to be aſcribed to the Reiſters; but Saint-Cyre Puy-Greſſier
" ought to have a ſhare in it. That old Man having rallied three Troops of " Horſe in the Wood of Mairé, and perceiving that one Charge would ſave the " Lives of a Thouſand Men, his Miniſter who contributed to this Reſolution
" of his, adviſed him to harangue his Soldiers. Good Men, ſaid he, want no long " Speech: Brethren and Friends thus you muſt do; having ſpoke theſe words, be" ing covered with an Armour Silvered over from Head to Foot according to " the old French way, bear-faced, with a Beard as white as Snow, and Aged 85
" Years, he advanced towards the Enemy twenty paces before his Troop, drove all

* In the Remark a.

* D'Avrig. tom. 1. pag. 131.

† Idem pag. 219.

|| Caſtelnau Memoir. l. 6. c. 8.

* They are la Popeliniere's words.

‡ Hiſt. l. 5. c. 17. pag. 257. ad ann. 1569.

Letters, written in a frightful Style. He makes uſe of the Edition of the Sieur de Preville, 1655. 'Tis ſaid in Moreri's Dictionary that the Lyons Edition is one of the fineſt; I don't know whether it be that of 1679. Note that we are told in the Book Intituled la Morale pratique des Jeſuites, pag. 413. of the 8th Volume, that Father Pintereau a Jeſuit has only Printed ſome ſcraps under the Name of a Chimerical Gentleman, whom he calls the Sieur de Preville. You may ſee in the following Pages how the Original Letters of Janſenius and the Abbot of Saint-Cyran came into the hands of the Jeſuits.

(E) Cardinal de Richelieu looking upon him as a Man very well qualified to write againſt the Proteſtants.] 'Tis ſaid that this Abbot was reſolved to anſwer the Miniſters, who had writ againſt Cardinal du Perron about the Pope's Supremacy and the Real Preſence. His Confinement put a ſtop to his deſign: Cardinal de Richelieu encouraged him to go on; but the Abbot made anſwer that it was not becoming the dignity of the Church that her Head and her greateſt Myſtery ſhould be defended by a Priſoner. (a) Communis opinio eſt Abbatem Sancyranum, antequam in arce Vincennæ detineretur, meditatum, & aggreſſum etiam vindicias Cardinalis Perronii adverſus heterodoxorum plures, qui in virum jam mortuum inſurrexerant, ulturi quas vivus ſibi plagas inflixerat, & ſuſcepiſſe defendenda quæ Cardinalis immortalitate dignus ſcripſerat de Euchariſtia, & de primatu Petri ab hæreticis maxime laceſſita. Id cum obaudiſſet Cardinalis Richelius, fertur ad id opus, quem currentem putabat, incitaſſe, & pollicitus ſi inchoatam apologiam velles proſequi, curaturum, ne quidquam librorum, & ſubſidiorum deeſſet, quæ ad abſolvendam velles, aut forent neceſſaria; ſed excelſo animo reſponſum a Sancyrano non convenire Eccleſiæ dignitati, illius caput, & myſteriorum maximum ab homine accuſato, qui ſui juris non eſſet, defendi. M. Arnauld ſays only, (b) 'tis well known that his Confinement was the only thing that prevented his anſwering the Miniſters, who had writ againſt the Doctrine of the Catholick Church concerning the Euchariſt.

(F) He was not much eſteem'd by the Famous Grotius.] In order to prove this I ſhall only ſet down a paſſage out of a Letter of Balzac to the Jeſuit Leonard Allemai. (c) Quam æquo utantur Grotio etiam alieni videre poteris ex his quæ ſubjungo verbis Epiſtolæ, non ita pridem ab eo ſcriptæ, ad optimum & humaniſſimum virum Joannem Cordeſium. " Et mihi Aurelius interdum ſufflaminis egere videtur. Nam quorſum tantus Suarezii contemptus; hominis, ſi quid recte judico, in Philoſophiâ, cui hoc tempore connexa eſt Scholaſtica Theologia, tantæ ſubtilitatis, ut vix quenquam habeat parem. Quid attinet Moliniſtarum nomen Societati toties objicere, cum ſi quid Molinæ excideret periculoſius, id poſterioribus Jeſuitarum, præcipuè Leſſii, ſcriptis ſit caſtigatum. Neque vero non nihil etiam ab illâ ſententia periculi eſt, quæ cum concilio Valentino, laudante Aurelio, ſtatuit quorundam ſalutem Deum nolle, ſi illi quidem nude ut homines ſpectentur."

(G) One might have read in ſome Books.] It will be ſufficient for me to quote one of 'em, viz the Triumphus Catholicæ veritatis adverſus Novatores, Printed in 1651. Father Labbe, who is juſtly accounted the Author of it, inſerted a Memorial in it containing the dying Words of Octavius de Bellegarde Arch-Biſhop of Sens. 'Tis ſaid that this Arch-Biſhop ſent to the Pope's Nuncio by the Baron de Renti this laſt Declaration of his Opinions, that the Pope might be informed of it. One Article of that Piece runs thus: (d) " That the Arch-Biſhop of Sens ——
" is bound to believe that this whole party is right" ly ſuſpected by the Church, knowing that it be" gan with an illuſion, which produced among o" ther effects a falſe Devotion call'd, le Chapelet ſe" cret du S. Sacrement, Condemned as ſuch by eight " Doctors of the Sorbonne; and being informed by " credible Perſons, (1) that the Abbot of *Saint-
" Cyran* ſpoke of the Council of Trent as of a po" litical Aſſembly, which was not in the leaſt a true
" Council."

(A) Tanneguy Bouchet.] He deſcended from (e) " John Bouchet Counſellor in the Parliament of Pa" ris in the Year 1372. and afterwards admitted
" Preſident into the Grand Chambre the 29 of A" pril 1389. originally of Auvergne, who was the Fa" ther of John Sieur de Puy Greſſier in Poitou, pa" ternal Anceſtor of the Sieurs *du Puy-Greſſier de
" Sante Gemme*, and de Villiers Charlemagne, and
" of this Tenneguy Bouchet, " whom (f) la Popeliniere

(a) Vincent. Baronius Apolog. Ordinis Prædicatorum tom. 1. pag. 163.

(b) Morale pratique des Jeſuites tom. 8. pag. 376. 377.

(c) Balzac, epiſt. ſelect. pag. m. 1

(d) Triumphus Catholicæ veritatis pag. 159. 160.

(1) See upon this point and ſeveral others what is obſerved in the Sui... Les Reliques de l'Abbé de S. Cyran.

(e) Le Laboureur Addit. aux Mem. de Caſtelnau tom. pag.

(f) La Pop

“ all the Marſhals de Camp before him, and ſaved many Lives by his Death.” He was not leſs virtuous than Valiant, as he made it appear by (B) puniſhing two perſons guilty of Adultery.

SAINTE-

ſiniere calls wrong Du Boucher. The Eldeſt Branch of that Family ended in Frances Boucher Lady de Puy Greffier, who married Artus de Coſſé Seigneur de Gonnor Marſhal of France, and in another Frances Boucher half Siſter of the former, who married firſt Antrem de Foix Seigneur d'Eſparoh, and then Francis de la Trimouille Count de Benaon (a). I ſhall mention by the by, a ſmall adventure of Frances de Boucher the Wife of Artus de Coſſé. Her (b) Husband was deprived upon her account of the Office of Superintendant of the Finances, whereby he got the firſt Year wherewithal to Pay all his Debts, and as much Money again as he owed. He carried his Wife to Court in order to wait upon Catherine de Medicis. She was a (c) Country Lady, who had never ſeen the Court, and who was ſo ſimple as to thank her Majeſty for the Superintendancy, as a Favour whereby they had been inabled to pay their debts and to get great Wealth. The Marſhal who heard this Compliment, was vexed at it; but the Queen was wonderfully pleaſed with ſuch an ingenuous confeſſion, which might have proved the ruin of her Husband, if it had been unacceptable to that Princeſs.

(B) In puniſhing two Perſons, &c.] The thing is very Remarkable. Beza relates it in the following manner. (d) On the 26th. of March 1563 the Sieur de Saint-Cyre, otherwiſe call'd Puy-Greffier, who had been appointed Governour of Orleans from the time that the Prince left that Town, a good Man and a great Enemy to Vice, cauſed a new and remarkable Execution to be made in the Perſons of Deſlandes Sieur du Moulin formerly Secretary to the King, and of —— Godard the Wife of John Godin Lieutenant to the Provoſt-Marſhal of Blois. Whilſt this Provoſt was in the Army, du Moulin debauched his Wife at Orleans, for which Crime he was hanged with her in the place du Martroy: Which being told at Court appeared ſo ſtrange, that many were not aſhamed to ſay, that if there was nothing elſe in the Reformed Religion, they would be ſure not to imbrace it. 'Tis a very ingenuous Reflection: and indeed what can one do in a Religion, which does not refer to God the Puniſhment of Adulterers, but delivers 'em to the Secular Power in order to be puniſh'd with Death? This is ſufficient to put many People out of conceit with a Religion; 'tis worſe than the Condemnation of Polygamy, which kept many Infidels from imbracing Chriſtianity. Leſt any one ſhould ſuſpect the Author I have quoted, I ſhall cite another, who was not a Proteſtant, and who relates the thing in very Majeſtical Words. (e) Pridie judicium non hujus ſeculi nec tunc ſecundum Franciæ mores, ubi adulterium non puniri magni nominis Juriſconſultus Joan. Faber olim dixit, Aureliani latum eſt contra Landam Molinum, qui Godardam Jo. Godini uxorem dum vir in caſtris eſſet corrupiſſe convictus, ad mortem damnatus eſt, amboque Landa & Godarda in publica platea laqueo ſuſpenſi ſunt, Pigreferio priſci moris ac ſeveritatis viro qui a Condæo urbi præpoſitus fuerat judicium urgente, & graſſantibus vitiis exemplo opus eſſe dictitante; quod tamen in aula adeo male acceptum eſt, ut plerique ſumma impudentia palam teſtarentur ſe a Proteſtantibus ſemper alienos futuros, & vel ob eam cauſam nunquam in eorum verba juraturos eſſe, qui adulteriis hucuſque impunitis nova & apud nos inaudita ſeveritate pœnam capitis ſtatuerent. Thoſe Courtiers were in the right to ſay that Puy-Greffier's Severity was out of faſhion; nay, the Cavilian Faber (f) quoted by Thuanus expreſly ſays that it was never heard that any Body had been puniſh'd for Adultery in France. Now moſt People would have ſaid in that reſpect, let (g) us beware of innovations. It muſt alſo be granted that this Severity was not of long continuance among the Proteſtants, according to the Maxim, nullum violentum durabile. It laſted longer (h) at Geneva; but at laſt it vaniſh'd away: And it may be ſaid in general to the ſhame of Chriſtians, that they have ſuffered the Penal Laws, which many Pagan Nations had enacted againſt Adultery, to be aboliſh'd time out of mind. There is hardly any Crime that goes more unpuniſh'd than that: Thoſe who require that it ſhould be puniſh'd, muſt rather expect to be the talk of the Town, and to be laugh'd at by every Body, than to have a good ſucceſs in their cauſe. I don't pretend to approve in every thing the Penal Laws of the Heathens upon this head; for could any thing be more horrid than the Cuſtom, which Theodoſius ſuppreſt at Rome? Women guilty of Adultery (i) were Condemned to live in little Cells, and to proſtitute themſelves to all Comers; and to make every one ſenſible that the Puniſhment was executed, ſeveral little Bells were rung during the time of the Execution.

Any one, who compares Thuanus's Words with the Epiſtle Dedicatory of Briſſonius's Book, ad legem Juliam de adulteriis, will wonder that this great Hiſtorian ſhould ſpeak of the impunity of Adultery, as he does: for it will appear that Briſſonius dedicating his Book the 29. of September 1557. to Chriſtopher de Thou Preſident in the Parliament of Paris, and the Hiſtorian's Father, praiſes him for having cauſed ſome Perſons guilty of that Sin to be puniſh'd. He adds, that this Spectacle was approved by all good Men, which put the Author upon Writing a Commentary on the Law which that Magiſtrate had revived. His Words deſerve to be ſet down. (k) Superioribus temporibus hæc Satyrici poetæ querela aures noſtras perſonavere, (l) Ubi nunc lex Julia dormis? Inſederat videlicet imperitorum animis ridicula quidem, ſed tamen quæ maximam ad nequitiam feneſtram patefecerat opinio, adulterorum in Gallia impunita eſſe peccata, quæ paſſim corruptis moribus ludi jam duci, & in pretio haberi id vitii cœperat. Hanc tu Reipub. pernicioſam opinionem editis non ita dudum de aliquot adulteris exemplis eripuiſti, perfeciſtique, ut non tam puniendi voluntatem, quam accuſatores majoribus noſtris antehac defuiſſe judicemus. Quod ſpectaculum cum maximus bonorum omnium plauſus conſecutus eſſet, hinc me laudum tuarum, ad quas hunc cumulum acceſſiſſe valde gaudebam, recordatione incenſum res ipſa admonuit, ut antiquam de adulteriis coercendis ab Auguſto latam legem, quæ quaſi poſtliminio in uſum rediret, in ordinem digererem, & interpretatione adhibita illuſtrarem. 'Tis very likely that notwithſtanding all the Applauſes of good Men, Chriſtopher de Thou grew remiſs, and that perceiving he could not put a ſtop to the Corruption, he was forced to let things take their uſual courſe. Hence it is that his Son took no notice of that ſhort interruption of Impunity. Briſſonius intimates that if there had been Accuſers in former times, the Judges of France would have made it appear that they were not unwilling to puniſh Adulterers. Indeed I believe that few People have been accuſed of that Crime; but the difficulty of proving ſuch an Accuſation, and the ſhame that attends thoſe who carry the cauſe, are more than ſufficient to prevent ſuch Suits (m). I have quoted Montagne upon this Subject in another (n) Book. It muſt be confeſt that 'tis not ſo much the connivence of the Magiſtrates, or the ſilence of Preachers, as the greatneſs of the Evil, that prevents the Execution of the Laws. A Profeſſor of Philoſophy at Groningen publiſh'd in 1663 a Collection of Diſſertations, wherein he ſays that the Divines of Straſburg prevailed about 30 Years before with the Magiſtrates to inflict a capital Puniſhment upon Adulterers; and he wiſhes the reformed Divines of the Low Countries would not expreſs ſo much Zeal againſt Dancing, as againſt the too great indulgence for Adultery. He fancies that if they had thundered againſt it, they would have engaged the Magiſtrates, with God's Bleſſing upon their endeavours, to inflict a more ſevere Puniſhment than a Fine. (o) Qui (Theologi) ſi æque fervide a pluribus jam annis detonuiſſent in adulterium, (quod, pro dolor! per totum Belgium pecuniaria duntaxat mulcta expiatur) ex Dei benedictione, dubio procul, jam diu a ſuis Superioribus conſecuti fuiſſent quod ex voto obtigit, ante annos ferme viginti, Theologis Auguſtanæ Confeſſionis, Argentinæ Evangelicam doctrinam annunciantibus: qui, licet non ſubduxerunt Auditoribus ſuis temperatas in nuptiis choreas, a Magiſtratu tamen impetrarunt gladium adulterii vindicem. Had he been a Miniſter, he would have found the difficulty of ſuch an Advice.

(i) Socrates Hiſt. Eccleſ. [illegible] cap. [illegible] See the Article Briſſon.

(k) Barn. Briſſon. epiſt. dedicat. ſingularis libri ad legem Juliam de adulteriis.

(l) Juven. ſat. 2. v. 37.

(m) See the new Letters againſt Maimbourg's Hiſtory of Calviniſm. pag. 588. & ſeq.

(n) Ibid. pag. 539.

(o) Mart. Schoockius exercitat. 16. pag. 3[illegible]1.

SAINTE-ALDEGONDE (Philip de Marnix Seigneur du Mont) Born (A) at Bruſſels in the Year 1538. made himſelf Famous by his Imployments and Writings. He fled into Germany when the Liberty of conſcience was oppreſt by the Spaniards in the Netherlands, and was gratified at Heidelberg with the Office of Counſellor in the Eccleſiaſtical Council. He return'd (B) into his Country in the Year 1572 to make uſe of his Talents for the ſupport of Liberty and the good of the reformed Religion. He was very much eſteem'd by the Prince of Orange, to whom he did ſeveral important Services, not ſo much (C) by his Sword as by his Words. He was one of the Deputies, whom the States ſent into England in 1575. to deſire Queen Elizabeth's Protection. Three Years after he was ſent by the Arch-Duke Matthias to the Diet of Worms, where he made a (D) very fine Speech, and boldly deſcribed the Spaniſh Tyranny. He was one of

the

(A) Born at Bruſſels.] I would not affirm it, if Melchior Adam was the only Author that ſays ſo; for I find he adds to it a Falſity, whereby one might be apt to think that he was not rightly informed. He ſays (a) that the Father and Mother of Philip de Marnix were Natives of Burgundy, and retired to Bruſſels. Which is not true; Sainte-Aldegonde anſwering a Writer, who call'd him a Foreigner of Burgundy, ſays, (b) none of my Anceſtors was a Native of Burgundy, that I know of; and 'tis a Notorious thing that I was Born, brought up, Educated and Married in this Country. And likewiſe my Father was Born, brought up and Married in it, ſo that except my Grand Father and his Predeceſſors, who were natives of Savoy, all my paternal and maternal Anceſtors were born in the Low Countries. And therefore the reaſon why I affirm that he was Born at Bruſſels, is that Verheiden (c) ſays ſo, without adding any of the Falſities that are to be found in Melchior Adam. It ſeems that Swertius and Valerius Andreas knew not that Philip de Marnix was Born in the Netherlands: Which is a ſurpriſing ignorance, ſince they knew he had writ ſome (d) controverſial Books. Had they known his Native Country, they would have placed him in the Catalogue of the Writers of the Netherlands: They don't uſe to leave out the Proteſtant Authors.

(B) He return'd into his Country in the Year 1572 to make uſe of his Talents.] Since Verheiden and Melchior Adam knew nothing of the circumſtances of his return, it will not be improper for me to ſupply what they have omitted. Sainte-Aldegonde (e) having left the Low Countries on account of Religion, was admitted ſoon after into the Service of the Elector Palatine; but William Prince of Orange, who look'd upon him as a Man well qualified for his deſigns, demanded him of the Elector: Which was granted him firſt of all for two Months, and then for two more, and at laſt for all the time he ſhould want him; only the ſaid Elector reſerved to himſelf the liberty of recalling him, when he ſhould think fit. Sainte-Aldegonde gives this account to ſhew that he followed the Prince of Orange only as his private Miniſter and Servant, and not as a Member of the States, or to intrude into the Adminiſtration of publick affairs. And therefore, ſays he, if I have been imployed in publick affairs either in the Name, and by order of the States, or otherwiſe, it was always at his deſire, and to pay him a due obedience as I was ordered by my firſt Maſter. I will alſo mention what has been omitted concerning the Perſecutions he went thro', before he fled into Germany. I was, ſays he (f), outlaw'd, baniſh'd, deprived of my Eſtate, and expoſed to the hatred and abuſes of my Friends and Relations; and at laſt I lay in a Priſon for a Year under the Duke of Alva and the Commander Requeſenes; and during that confinement I pray'd to God every night at leaſt for the ſpace of three Months, as if it had been the laſt night of my life, knowing that the ſaid Duke of Alva had twice ordered that I ſhould be put to Death in Priſon. It was objected to him that the Dutcheſs of Parma had been his Miſtreſs; but he anſwered (g) that he never had any thoughts of going into the Service of that Lady, and never frequented her Court, ſince he had in a manner concealed himſelf by reaſon of the violent perſecutions, ever ſince his return from Geneva till the beginning of the Troubles.

(C) Not ſo much by his Sword as by his Words.] Melchior Adam, from whom I have taken the greateſt part of the Text of this Article, is my Author for this. Quo in loco, ſaith he (h), non tam fortiter gerendo, quam imitatione Cyneæ cordate loquendo, non poſtremum patriæ libertatis propugnatorem ſe declaravit. He knew how to write and ſpeak well, and was a Scholar and a Man of parts; His Services were particularly memorable on account of thoſe qualifications. 'Twas he who drew up the Formulary (i) of the famous Confederacy in the Year 1566. whereby many great Men of the Low Countries engaged to oppoſe the Inquiſition. Brederode, who was the Head of that League, (k) made him Treaſurer of it. Sainte-Aldegonde ſpoke in the Name of the Prince of Orange in the Aſſembly of Dordrecht, made up of the Deputies of all the Towns. It was in the Year 1572. He made a lively deſcription of the Calamities of the Country, and moved that Aſſembly to oppoſe the Tyrants. (l) Ibidem ejus orator Dominus de Sainte Aldegonde effuſam de principis pio affectu, patriæ neceſſitate, Hiſpanorum tyrannide declamationem pronunciat, ac civitates novo bello contra Regem, regis tamen nomine uſurpato illaqueat. The Spaniards did ſo dread that Orator and Negotiator, that the Duke of Parma gave expreſs Orders to obſerve him narrowly in the Conferences held at Cologne in the Year 1579. (m) Monens interim ut Coloniam adventantem Philippum Marnixium ——— ſedulo obſervaret, ab eoque uti, ab homine impie callido ſibi præcaveret. The Proteſtant Readers knowing the Character of the Man, who abuſes Sainte-Aldegonde in this laſt paſſage, will never have a worſe Opinion of him. He aſſiſted (n) at the Pacification of Ghent in the Name of the Prince of Orange and of the Nobility of Holland and Zealand in the Year 1576. He was ſent to Bruſſels the Year following; but we ought not to credit what is ſaid by the Hiſtorians of the contrary party, that (o) it was to attempt upon the Life of Don Juan of Auſtria. He was taken (p) by the Spaniards, at the Hague in the Year 1573. and it being feared that ſuch a Priſoner, who was very prejudicial to them, would meet with a very ill uſage, the Prince of Orange (q) ſent 'em word that he would uſe Repriſals againſt the Count de Boſſu. The Year following, Mondragon being forced to Capitulate at Middleburg, offered to ſet Sainte-Aldegonde and three other Priſoners at Liberty, provided the Capitulation he demanded, ſhould be granted him. (r) Se apud Requeſenium effecturum ut captivus Aldegundius (quod avebat Orangius) treſque inſuper alii Aldegundii arbitratu remitterentur in Zelandiam intra ſex menſes. That Agreement was accepted and executed: Which I obſerve, to ſhew how much our Philip de Marnix was conſidered. He was to have the choice of three Priſoners, who were to be ſet at Liberty with him. The States deſign'd (ſ) in 1587 to ſend him to the Conferences about a Peace with Spain; but having reſolved to continue the War, his Deputation proved a meer Project.

(D) A very fine Speech, and boldly deſcribed.] Thuanus ſays it was Printed and anſwered. (t) Eo à Matthia miſſus Phil. Marnixius Santaldegondanus orationem mire liberam ad VII viros & imperii principes, qui aderant, Nonis Maii habuit, qua deplorato miſerabili Belgii ſtatu, & Albani Auſtriique tyrannide acerbis verbis exagitata Imperii opem imploravit; quippe commune Belgii cum Imperio periculum eſſe, prædixitque fore, ut belli incendium, niſi ſiſtatur, ſe latius ſpargat, & Coloniam, Monaſterium, Emdam, aliaſque vicinas civitates, quas ex Albani conſilio Hiſpani ſub jugum mittere jampridem decreverint, olim complectatur. proinde rogat ——— ad eam orationem publicatam poſtea contraria oratione Calidii Chryſopolytani nomine Lucemburgi edita reſponſum eſt, qua tota in exagitanda Belgarum in Deum

ac

(a) Bruxellis ——— e parentibus Burgundis qui eo conceſſerant. Melch. Adam. in vitis Juriſc. pag. 333.

(b) Sainte-Aldegonde, Reſponce apologetique au libelle intitulé antidote fol. A 5 verſo.

(c) Verheiden in elog. præſtantium aliquot Theolog. pag. 141.

(d) They mention them ſpeaking of Michael Baius and the Jeſuit John David, who writ againſt Sainte Aldegonde.

(e) Sainte-Aldegonde, Reſponſe apologetique fol. D 3.

(f) Id. ib. in the next leaf to B 5.

(g) Id. ib. fol. D 5.

(h) Melch. Adam. in vitis Juriſc. pag. 333.

(i) Strada de bello Belgico, decad. 1. lib. 5 pag. m. 203.

(k) Brederodius confœderatorum nomine, & Philippum Marnixium ærarium Theſaurarium creat. Id. ib. pag. 2[illegible] ad ann. 1566.

(l) De ortu & progreſſu Calvin. reformat. lib. [illegible] ſect. 4 pag. [illegible]

(m) Strada ubi ſupra dec. 2 lib. 2 p. 1[illegible]

(n) Thuan. lib. 62, p. m. 16[illegible]

(o) Strada ubi ſupra lib. 9 pag. [illegible] ad ann. 1577.

(p) Id. ib. lib. 7 pag. [illegible]

(q) Id. ib. pag. [illegible]

(r) Id. ib. lib. 8 pag. 400 ad ann. 157[illegible]

(ſ) Idem decad. 2 lib. 9 pag. [illegible]

(t) Thuan. lib. 66. pag. [illegible] ad ann. 1578.

the Plenipotentiaries, whom the States ſent into France in the Year 1581 to make (E) the Duke of Alençon their Sovereign. He was Conſul of Antwerp in 1584, when that Town was beſieged by the Duke of Parma. In the Year 1593 he conducted into the Palatinate the Princeſs || Louiſe Juliana, who had been betrothed to the Elector Frederick IV †. The Books he publiſh'd were (F) not the leaſt Service he did: Some of 'em concern'd Politicks, and others Controverſy; ſome were Serious, and others Comical: The latter (G) proved moſt uſeful: His very Songs procured a great (H) Advantage to the new Republick. He tranſlated the Pſalms of ac principem ſuum rebellione occupatur. Note that this Speech (a) was Tranſlated into Dutch Verſe by Baptiſt Houwart, and that (b) Cornelius Looſe, a Native of Tergou, was the Perſon who anſwered it.

|| Daughter to the Prince of Orange William I of the Name, † Father of the Elector [illegible] in vit. Jurii conſ. pag. [illegible] & ſeq.

(E) To make the Duke of Alençon their Sovereign.] Melchior Adam has forgot to tell us that Sainte-Aldegonde followed that Prince into England in the Year 1581. and wrote to the States the falſe News of his Marriage with Queen Elizabeth. 'Tis an Example, which M. de Wicquefort alledges to the Ambaſſadors, in order to ſhew how cautious they ought to be in Writing News. Sometimes, ſays he (c), "one cannot believe his own Eyes. Vidit aut vidiſſe putat. The Sieur de Sainte-Aldegonde, who was Agent for the Sates of the Low Countries at the Court of England in the Year 1581. being come one Evening into the Queen's Chamber, ſaw her diſcourſing with the Duke of Alençon. The Lords and Ladies were at ſo great a diſtance from them that they could have no ſhare in their Converſation: but every Body ſaw a thing, from which one might draw a very great Conſequence. The Queen taking a Ring from her Finger, put it on the Duke's, who quickly went out with great chearfulneſs, as having received an earneſt and a pledge of his Marriage. Sainte-Aldegonde, who look'd upon it as a thing of the greateſt importance to his Maſters, gave 'em notice of it by an Expreſs he diſpatch'd that very ſame night. All the Towns of the Low Countries expreſs'd their joy by ringing of Bells, Bone-fires, &c. for a piece of News, that proved falſe. The Queen blamed Sainte-Aldegonde for being ſo haſty in giving notice of a thing, the truth of which he might have known in a few hours."

(F) The Books he publiſhed.] Meurſius gives a Catalogue of 'em: It contains (d) Theſes aliquot de Eccleſia atque Eccleſiaſticarum traditionum κριτήριον ſeu certa norma. Item de ſacramento cœnæ dominicæ. Reſponſio ad Michaelis Raii regii Profeſſoris Lovanienſis apologiam. Epiſtola conſolatoria ad fratres exules Brabantos, Flandros, Hannones, Arteſios, alioſque Belgas peregrinis in regionibus ob puram Evangelii doctrinam diſperſos. Tractatus de cœna Domini ad Galliarum Regis ſororem Lotharingiæ Duci nuptam. Contra libertinos. Apologetica reſponſio contra anonymum quendam libertinum. To which may be added, ſays Meurſius, ſeveral Pieces publiſh'd at ſeveral times, admonitiones, declarationes, tractatus, conſilia, diſputationes, conſolationes, interpretationes, and many anonymous Writings. His deſign was to refute the Romiſh Controverſiſts, and to raiſe Enemies to the King of Spain. I leave you to judge whether having the Talent of Writing with great facility, he did not publiſh many Pamphlets about the preſent Tranſactions. He did then what Baron Liſola did ſince. It has been ſaid that he was lucky in gueſſing the deſigns of the Spaniards, and that therefore the Alarms he raiſed were not inſignificant. (e) Prudentia & hiſtoriæ cognitio quanta in eo fuerit, ſcriptum illud declarat, in quo agit de Hiſpanorum ſcopo, ad quem ſua ipſi tela dirigunt; qui Monarchiam ſibi præfigentes, nihil non auſint. In eodem tanquam vates prognoſticis politicis multa prædixit: quæ eveniſſe Britannia, Polonia, Gallia, aliæque regiones teſtantur.

(G) His Comical Books were moſt uſeful.] He publiſh'd in Dutch the Roman Hive, Alvearium Romanum, in the Year 1571. and dedicated it to Francis Sonnius Biſhop of Boiſleduc, one of the chief Inquiſitors of the Low Countries (f). That Book full of Comical Stories was wonderfully applauded by the People, and proved more prejudicial to the Church of Rome than a ſerious and learned Book. Nay, 'tis ſaid that many People were undeceived by it: Eraſmus's Collequies had produced the ſame effect: (g) Hoc ſcriptum —— eſt varietate hiſtoriarum, & acumine ſententiarum refertiſſimum: jocis facetiiſque in Papiſtarum theatrales nugas & fabulas mire conditum: adeo ut lectoribus illorum temporum præcipue, ſingularem attulerit voluptatem: & occaſionem multis præbuerit de religione Chriſtiana ſerio cogitandi. Et hic liber ut populari applauſu acceptus, ſic non ſine fructu plurimorum lectus, plus rei Belgicæ illa tempeſtate in religionis negotio profuit; quam eruditi aliquot commentarii. He wrote a Book of the ſame Nature in French, which was Printed ſoon after he died, with this Title, Tableau des differens de la religion. He is very merry in it, and yet alledges very good Reaſons. This Work proved as ſucceſsful as the Alvearium. Moſt Stories are the ſame in both. Many People read it with a great deal of Pleaſure, and were more confirm'd in their belief than if they had read the beſt work of Calvin. Thuanus did not approve this way of handling Controverſy. "I have ſeen, ſaid he, (h) Philip de Marnix de Sainte-Aldegonde at the Siege of Paris, and I lodged three Months in the ſame Houſe with him —— He was a polite Man, but there was no great matter in him. He was (i) Chancellor of Gelderland. He ſpeaks of Religion as Rabelais did, which is very ill done." John David a Jeſuit publiſh'd another Alvearium in Dutch to confute that of Sainte-Aldegonde, which he call'd a moſt (k) pernicious Book. He knew well enough that the moſt dangerous way of Writing againſt a Doctrine is to turn it into Ridicule.

(H) His very Songs procured a great Advantage to the new Republick.] I might have cited above Verheiden inſtead of Melchior Adam, who only tranſcribes him; but I thought it an indifferent thing, provided I ſhould once point out the Original. But I ſhall ſet down here the Words of Verheiden. Ab hoc Viro, ſaith he (l), etiam profecta dicitur decantata illa CANTILENA compoſita in laudem PRINCIPIS GUILIELMI Naſſavii, Ad Belgas Tyrannide Albani oppreſſos edita. Quæ quidem Cantilena ita ſcite facta, ita concinno rhythmo moduliſque ſuis eſt attemperata, ut plebis animos mire ad Principis, Libertatiſque Patriæ amorem excitaverit. In hoc igitur SANCI-ALDEGONDIUS ſe alterum quaſi TYRTÆUM, toties a Platone laudatum, oſtendit. Nam cum PRINCIPIS Fortiſſimi laudes, hortamenta virtutis, damnorum ſolatia, ſalutariaque conſilia contineat; magnum ardorem defendendi PRINCIPIS PATRIÆQUE LIBERTATIS populo injecit: adeo ut nihil illis temporibus convenientius prodiiſſe judicare liceat. He is in the right to ſay that nothing could better fit the circumſtances of the Time, than a pretty Song full of Invectives againſt the Duke of Alva, and of Encomiums on the Prince of Orange. The deſign of erecting ſome Provinces of the King of Spain into a Common Wealth required many things, and particularly a Continual Application to prevent the Suggeſtions of thoſe, who might have repreſented that it was almoſt impoſſible to hold out againſt ſo potent a Monarch, that the Charges neceſſary to carry on the War againſt him would very much exceed what he exacted, and that therefore 'twas a great piece of Folly to ſpend (m) one's All rather than bear an Impoſt. This might have been confuted by a Thouſand good Reaſons, and it was of great moment to make the People ſenſible of it both from the Pulpit and in Books: But nothing was more proper for ſuch a deſign than a Song; for 'tis a thing that remains imprinted in the Mind, and every Body, even the Peaſants and Servant-Maids, daily repeat it with great joy and ſatisfaction. And therefore this was one of the moſt important Services of Philip de Marnix. Which puts me in mind of the Song about the Scalado, which the Geneveſe ſing in their Houſes on the Anniverſary day, as a thing almoſt eſſential to that Ceremony. I am ſure that at firſt the Impreſſions made by this Song in the Minds of the People, ſurpaſt all others.

(a) Melch. Adam. ubi ſupra pag. 116.

(b) Placc. de Pſeudonym. pag. 172.

(c) Wicquefort, Traité de l'Ambaſſad. Tom. 1. p. m. 129. See alſo Strada ubi ſupra dec. 2. lib. 4. pag. 143. ad ann. 1581.

(d) Meurſ. Athenæ Batavæ pag. 180.

(e) Melch. Adam. ubi ſupra pag. 335.

(f) Id. ib. pag. 336.

(g) Id. ib.

(h) Thuana, pag. m. 39.

(i) I think Thuanus is miſtaken in this.

(k) Librum peſtilentiſſimum. Valer. Andr. bibl. Belg. pag. 490.

(l) Verheiden in elogiis aliquot Theologor. pag. 145.

(m) Omnia dabant ne decimam darent.

of David out of Hebrew into Dutch Verſe, but that (I) Tranſlation was not made uſe of in Churches. He was about a Dutch Tranſlation of the Scripture, when he died at Leyden the 15th of December 1598 *. He had lately made a journey into France for the Prince's affairs. He was not free from (K) Slanders, and find

(I) This Tranſlation of the Pſalms was not made uſe of in Churches.] He affected to uſe none but Dutch Words, and acted quite contrary to the other Poets of his Nation, who inſerted in their Books many Words taken from the French. His Tranſlation was better than that which was ſung in Churches; nevertheleſs it was not admitted. Thus in France the old verſion of Marot and Beza was prefer'd to that of Mr Conrart, which ſome had a mind to introduce. I ſhall ſet down a paſſage of Melchior Adam: (a) Id opus hactenus aliquoties typis publicatum, ſed nunquam communi concionatorum conſenſu eſt receptum: cum contra verſio alterius a tot millibus edificatur. Nimirum

Pro captu lectoris habent ſua fata libelli.

Here follows another paſſage, whereby it appears that Philip de Marnix, the better to introduce his verſion, made it, as much as ever he could, like that which was already uſed. M. Conrart had the ſame precaution, but to (b) no purpoſe: People were too much uſed to the Common Tranſlations. (c) Ante complures annos diſplicuit nonnullis apud Belgas nimis ille a textu Scripturæ per laxiores paraphraſes metricas receſſus: præſertim Pſalmorum Datheni, qui ex Pſalmis Gallicis Maroti & Bezæ expreſſi erant. Verſavit hac cura inter alios nobiliſſ. Marnixium montis Sancti-Aldegondis Dominum; qui propterea novam paraphraſin rhythmo-metricam compoſuit, ſtrophis, lineis, ſyllabis, cum Datheni Pſalmis, pari paſſu euntem, ut cum illis in templis cantari, aut facile in ſubſtitui poſſet. Sed cum Datheni Pſalmi jam memoria a pleriſque tenerentur, non viderunt Eccleſiæ, quomodo commode & abſque aliqua commotione plebis eccleſiaſtica in publicis ſacris hic quicquam loco moveri poſſet.

(K) He was not free from Slanders.] Some inſtances of it may be ſeen in the Words I have quoted out of Strada. But here is a more biting Stroke: That Jeſuit having ſaid that Sainte-Aldegonde was one of thoſe, who had been ordered to ſeize upon Dom Juan of Auſtria by a trick or by main force, adds: (d) Quod ſane facinus etſi non abhorrebat a reliqua vita aut Aldegundii hominis ignominioſiſſime nequam, qui Calvinum puer docentem audierat, ſenex jam alios ipſe docebat: aut Heſii——— tamen an illi re ipſa moliti hoc ſint, ut Auſtriacus multis authoribus exiſtimavit——— affirmare non auſim. I have a Book Printed at Cologne in 1673. with this Title, De ortu & proceſſu Calviniana reformationis in Belgio: in quo exibentur pacta & fœdera ibidem inita, & demonſtratur nullam eorum à Reformatoribus habitam eſſe rationem, Authore C. L. S. V. V. Sainte-Aldegonde is very ill uſed in it, and the Author ſays among other things, that whilſt he was endeavouring to undo the Catholicks of the Netherlands in the Diet of Worms, he made it his Buſineſs to perſuade the Ambaſſadors of the Emperor and of the Electors, that the Arch-Duke Matthias had been invited by the Inhabitants of that Country to be the protector of the Romiſh Religion, which was very much endangered by the Civil War. (e) Belgas Archiducem Matthiam pro tuenda Catholica Romana religione ad Provinciarum regimen evocaſſe, præſertim cum illa inter civiles heſce tumultus magnis motibus percelleretur.

I ſhall obſerve by the by, that the Author of that Book was diſcovered, tho' he had taken all poſſible care to conceal himſelf. He was baniſh'd upon that Account, and his Eſtate was confiſcated. He lived at Cologne under the Protection of the Pope's Nuncio in 1678. I only ſay this upon the Credit of the Italian Journaliſt (f). If what is ſaid of Sainte-Aldegonde in that Book were true, it would be a Trick of an Ambaſſador, which he did not invent, and which is common enough (g). I have another Book intitled, Antidote ou contrepoiſon contre les conſeils ſanguinaires & envenimez de Philippe de Marnix Sr. de Ste-Aldegonde, &c. An Antidote or Counterpoiſon againſt the Bloody and pernicious Counſels of Philip de Marnix Sieur de Sainte-Aldegonde, contain'd in a Book publiſh'd by him againſt the Spiritual Zealots, whom he calls in his Language Geeſtdryvers. Written by way of a Letter by a German Gentleman, a Lover of Peace and of the Belgick Liberty. The time and place of the Impreſſion and the Printer's Name don't appear in it; but one may know that it came out about the Year 1598. The Author of that Book abuſes Sainte Aldegonde in the following manner. (h) "That Counſel puts me upon ſcanning your former Actions, when I call to mind that the States of Holland and Zealand would not permit you to come into their Territories. You was then in a deſpair by Reaſon of the Murther of the late Prince of Orange of Glorious Memory, and becauſe the deſign at the Duke of Cruwmeſtein miſcarried. Your Conſcience was very much troubled, as miſtruſting God's Power, till you ſurrendred Antwerp in the Year 1585 and not contented with that great piece of Service done to the Duke of Parma, you made it your buſineſs in common diſcourſe to Praiſe that Prince, adviſing ſome to make a general Peace, the better to conceal your Fault by the ruin and deſolation of a hundred Thouſand Poor afflicted People; for you preſumed ſo much upon your Ability as to pretend to make the ſaid Duke revolt againſt his Maſter, and by that means to procure a reunion of the 17 Provinces. You boaſted that you had open'd the matter to him in the time of the Parliament of Beveren, when you had ſo many private diſcourſes with him in the preſence of all your Collegues, who are venerable Men and ſome of the moſt illuſtrious in the ſaid Town: Which was too great an undertaking for ſuch a Man as you are. I ſhall ſay nothing of your ill Conduct in the Government of that Town, ſince you might have ſupplied it with ſufficient Proviſions and Ammunition for a Siege of ſome Years, conſidering the abſolute Power you uſurp'd in it———(i) The wiſe Prince of Orange of Glorious Memory was ſenſible, ſome Years before he died, of your turbulent Spirit, when he removed you by degrees from his Council and Perſon, leſt he ſhould ſometime or other find himſelf in a plunge, like the effects of this deteſtable Advice of yours.

Equity requires that we ſhould hear what Philip de Marnix anſwered to that German Gentleman. "Since the States General, ſays he (k), who would not permit me to come into their Territories, have not continued in their reſolution, but on the contrary have been willing that I ſhould be nearer them, have converſed with me above twelve Years, and imparted to me many deſigns and ſecrets, and even confer'd upon me honourable Imployments, ordering that I ſhould be well uſed, to give me thereby ſome marks of their Affection; don't you ſee that they have by that means cleared me of the Calumnies, which ſlandering Men like you, had invented againſt me, tho' they durſt not open their Mouths in my preſence?———How dare you put a Conſtruction upon what the States have done, quite contrary to their intention? How dare you blame me, becauſe in ſuch a Critical time they thought fit, for ſome particular Reaſons, that I ſhould be abſent for ſome time by reaſon of the ill Reports that were ſpread againſt me; being impoſſible that a Man in ſuch a Poſt as I had, ſhould pleaſe every body. Eſpecially if it be conſidered that a falſe Report went about that I prevented the Reading of the Queen of England's Letters at Antwerp; at which the Engliſh Soldiers were ſo exaſperated, that ſome of 'em ſwore they would kill me: But afterwards being informed of the Truth of the matter, and even that I was going to the Queen in order to clear my ſelf, they changed their mind. If therefore the States for this or ſome other conſideration thought fit that I ſhould be abſent for ſome time, (for the Letters of the States of Zealand alledged no other Reaſon but the Reports that went about me) how can you be ſo Impudent as to defame me for a thing which is to my Glory and Honour? Afterwards he gives a long Liſt of the courageous Actions performed by his Order or Counſels ſince the Death of Prince William; which ſhews that this Aſſaſſination, which made him very uneaſy, did not throw him into deſpair, and deprive him of the uſe

* Melch. Adam. in. pag. 314

(a) Melch. Adam. ubi ſupra pag. 336.

(b) Note, that the Church of Geneva and many others have at laſt laid aſide the old verſion of the Pſalms: but the Walloon Churches have reſolved to keep it. See the Remark P, in the Article Marot.

(c) Giſbertus Voetius de Politia eccleſiaſt. tom. 1. pag. 529.

(d) Strada de bello Belg. dec. 1. lib. 9. p. m. 572. 528. ad ann. 1577.

(e) De ortu & proceſſu Calvin. reform. in Belgio lib. 2. ſect. 9. pag. 78. He quotes Uytenbogartius, hiſtor. Eccleſ. part 3.

(f) See the 6. Giornale de letterati 1678. in the extract of the Book intitled, de ortu & proceſſu &c.

(g) See the Remark A. in the Article Bellai (William du) led that his Retreat was the Life of a Man in diſgrace. He was Extremely perplexed ge of his Reaſon. He gives a particular Account of his Conduct during the Siege of Antwerp; he proteſts that he oppoſed to the utmoſt of his Power thoſe who were for Capitulating, and that he and his Twenty one Collegues (a) had all their Inſtructions in Writing, when they went out of the Town to Surrender it upon Conditions. He ſays that he made the Enemies believe (b) that they had ſtill Proviſions enough for ſeven or eight Months, ſo that M. Richardot, the ſecond day after he entred into the Town, ſaid when he ſaw what a Condition it was in, that he had never been ſo much Impoſed upon. He is very long in Juſtifying himſelf as to the Praiſes he had beſtowed upon the Duke of Parma. He ſays that (c) making a Report to the great Council of what had paſs'd during the Capitulation, he was obliged to ſet forth the Reaſons alledged by the Deputies of the Duke of Parma, to remove the Miſtruſt that prevailed among the People. They had enlarged upon the Virtues of that Duke, and made an Abridgment of his Life, to ſhew that on all occaſions he had faithfully kept his Treaties. Sainte-Aldegonde related what they had ſaid. Here follows an inſtance of popular Injuſtice, and of the wrong Conſtruction that is put upon things. " (d) " This Diſcourſe made in ſuch an Aſſembly, and " ſpread all over the Town, was conſtrued by ma- " ny, as if what I had related concerning the De- " puties of the Duke of Parma, had been my Opi- " nion; ſo that every body was ſaying that I had " extoll'd the ſaid Duke to the Sky: Whereupon " ſome Miniſters, (even ſome of thoſe, whom I took " care to conſult before I did any thing) made me " a ſharp Remonſtrance, as if I had renounced my " Religion and my Party. I confeſs that by an effect " of Humane Infirmity, I was more nettl'd at it " than I ſhould have been, and my Anſwer was at- " tended with ſome marks of Indignation.——And " becauſe I perceived that tho' I had ſatisfied them, " the ſame Report went on ſtill all over the Town, " and that many of thoſe, who Envied and Hated " me, and who retired into Holland in Crowds, tri- " umphed over me upon that account, to the preju- " dice of my Reputation; I confeſs I was ſo moved " with it, that in my Apology, without remembring " that I had related thoſe things, as being ſpoken by " our Enemies, I plainly and abſolutely maintain'd " that there was no harm in Praiſing our Enemies, " for ſuch things as are really Commendable, and I " mention'd ſeveral good Qualities of the Duke of " Parma. To which I was induced, not only by " reaſon of the ſaid Calumnies, but alſo by the Ne- " ceſſity of the Time, and becauſe I was in his Pow- " er, together with the whole Town; tho' I may " truly ſay that I had ſtill other thoughts". I ſhall mention this new Reaſon, becauſe it diſcovers to us a Weakneſs, an Artifice, and a Corruption, which prevail in all Places and in all Ages. I have always been of Opinion, ſays Sainte-Aldegonde (e), " That " nothing can be more dangerous for the Preſerva- " tion of a State in hard and difficult Times, than " to deſpiſe one's Enemy. For as Orators tell their " Scholars that they ought never to fancy that their " Adverſaries want Wit; ſo in point of War 'tis " very dangerous to think that our Enemies are fool- " iſh and careleſs People. And yet many were apt " to entertain ſuch Thoughts, endeavouring to make " every body believe that the Duke of Parma was " a Man of no Prudence and Ability in Military " Affairs. An Opinion, Gentlemen, which might " have proved very prejudicial to your State, if " your Prudence had not prevented the ill Effects of " it, by looking for Aſſiſtance every where. Since " my return into Zealand, I have ſeldom mention'd " the Duke of Parma, except when I was required " to do it, by thoſe who had the Power to Com- " mand me; and then I told them what I thought " of him. Thus much for the Praiſes beſtowed up- " the Duke, which have been laid to my Charge by " ſo many People. Wherein I believe I have done " nothing but what I was obliged to do for the " Preſervation of the Town, and of the Churches " that were in it.

Here you ſee a great difference between thoſe, who are altogether for countenancing popular Opinions, and thoſe who argue Equitably and Solidly. The latter think themſelves obliged in Juſtice and out of a good Policy not to give a wrong account of the Forces, Valour and good Conduct of the Enemy: The former are for telling Impudent Lies about thoſe things. Not but that they are ſenſible that ſuch Lies may be prejudicial in ſome reſpects; but they rather chuſe to indulge by ſuch means their own Paſſions and thoſe of the People; and becauſe they take 'em to be more Advantageous than Detrimental, conſidering the Humour of the Mob, they don't approve Sincerity, and if any one practiſes it, they Impudently charge him with Treaſon.

I omit the Apology relating to the Letter written by Sainte Aldegonde to the Lord de Meetkerke, concerning a general Peace. He vindicates himſelf by clearing the Matter and ſhewing the drift of his Deſign, and he confeſſes that ſome falſe and fooliſh Reports went about it. I likewiſe omit what concerns his being accuſed of neglecting to ſupply Antwerp with Proviſions, &c. I think he fully juſtifies himſelf as to theſe Articles. Let us ſee what concerns his being told in a Reproachful manner that he was removed from Buſineſs, and that he made himſelf ſuſpected by Prince William. We ſhall ſee in his Anſwer ſeveral particulars belonging to his Hiſtory. (f) " After the Death of the ſaid Elector, and " even after the departure of the (g) King's Brother, " having earneſtly deſired to be diſmis'd, in order to " live a Private Life, his (h) Excellency was pleaſ- " ed to grant my Requeſt, but upon condition that " whenever he ſhould ſend for me, I ſhould be " ready to perform his Orders, which I promiſed " to do. Upon this Promiſe he had a mind to diſ- " patch me to Bruges, giving me the Government " of that Town and what depended upon it, (which " was prevented by my Sickneſs, and the ſecret " Practices of thoſe, who invited thither the Duke " of Arſchot.) Afterwards he ſent me to Antwerp, " having little hopes of preſerving that Town, by " reaſon of the different Inclinations of the Peo- " ple, and the Animoſity they expreſs'd againſt " him, under pretence that he Favoured the French. " He got me admitted there into the Council of Bra- " bant, and ſoon after I was by his means appointed " the Head of the Town, under the Title of Firſt " Burgo-Maſter, ſeeing that I had ſtoutly refuſed " that of Markgrave." He ſays afterwards, that this Prince (i) a Month or Six Weeks before he Died, ſent for him to Antwerp, on account of the Reſolution that was taken to ſend into France for Succours. (k) " Ever ſince God was pleaſ- " ed to call him to himſelf, after the Siege of Ant- " werp, which laſted thirteen Months, during which " time I uſed my utmoſt endeavours to keep it for " the States and the United Provinces, tho' God " was not pleaſed to proſper my Labours, I wil- " lingly laid aſide the Adminiſtration of Affairs, " and no body can ſay that I ſued for any other Im- " ployment directly or indirectly. Much leſs can it " be ſaid that I was turn'd out, ſince I always loved " to live a Retired Life in the Country, till the " ſaid States were pleaſed to call me to Leyden, " in order to ſpend my time in a Sacred Study, on " which all my Friends knew that my Mind was al- " together bent. Which is ſo true that this Man, " thro' a kind of Contradiction, ſends me into Zea- " land to Cultivate my Garden and Improve my " Lands, as I did heretofore for a conſiderable " time.

I ſhall add ſomething out of Strada. That Jeſuit acknowledges that Sainte-Aldegonde left nothing unattempted for the Defence of Antwerp. He repreſents him (l) as a Man well ſtock'd with Methods of leading the Mob. His Adherents, ſaid he, gave out that they knew the Duke of Parma would offer very reaſonable Terms, but that he had privately promiſed the Soldiers that they ſhould Plunder the Town. (m) Aldebant aliqui civium, nempe ex Aldegundii cohorte, ſibi exploratum eſſe, Parmenſem Principem oblaturum quidem conditiones haud ſpernendas, clam tamen ſtipendiorum loco cum Hiſpanis pactum eſſe populationem urbis. The Magiſtrates (n) ſent out Emiſſaries, who declared all over the Town, that ſome Letters had been received from France, importing that the Troops were at laſt in March to come to their Relief. That Hiſtorian obſerves that moſt (o) Citi-

(a) Id. ib. fol. C 2 verſo.

(b) Ibid. fol. C 3 verſo.

(c) Ibid. fol. C 4.

(d) Id. ib. verſo &c.

(e) Id. ib. C 4 verſo.

(f) Sainte Aldegonde ubi ſupra fol. D 2 verſo.

(g) That is, the Duke of Alençon.

(h) That is, William Prince of Orange.

(i) Id. ib. fol. D 4.

(k) Id. ib. verſo.

(l) Aldegundius non conſumptis adhuc quas apprime callebat artibus tractandæ multitudinis, ſpargit in vulgus ſcripturum ſe Parmenſi principi. Strada lib. 7. dec. 2. pag. 423.

(m) Id. ib. pag. 424.

(n) Id. ib.

(o) Pleriqueque Gallicas literas Antuerpiæ natas in Aldegundiano conclavi ſuſpicabant. Id. ibid. pag. 425.

pleaſed when Complaints were made that he exhorted (L) the States to perſecute the Sects. I have read a Book, wherein 'tis obſerved that he (M) loved Dancing, and that the Scruples of the Preciſiſts may be removed by it. It cannot be denied, without him ſuſpect thoſe Letters to have been Forged in Sainte-Aldegonde's Cloſet. Whereby he repreſents him as a Man, who uſed his beſt endeavours to Preſerve that Prince. He adds that Sainte-Aldegonde (a) having loſt all Hopes, and being willing to take care of his Intereſt, forwarded the ſending of ſome Deputies to the Duke of Parma. He mentions the Diſcourſe he made to the Duke; he ſays (b) that he had a Conference of four hours with that Prince, at which the other Deputies were not preſent, and that he particularly inſiſted on the Liberty of Conſcience, giving hopes that upon ſuch a Condition Holland, Zealand, and the reſt of the Low-Countries, might ſubmit again to the King of Spain, and that he took it upon himſelf. He pretends that the Duke of Parma, who rejected that Condition, made uſe of ſuch a wonderful Eloquence, that Marnix own'd he had never ſeen a Prince, who ſpoke better. Laſtly, Strada ſays, that he ſeem'd to have altered his Mind ſince that Conference, and more inclined to conclude a Capitulation, and that he Publiſh'd a Book, wherein he not only beſtowed great Encomiums upon that Duke, but alſo declared that one could not bear Arms againſt Philip II. with a good Conſcience. This Confeſſion, continues Strada, of a Man, who had ſo great an Intereſt in his Party, was prejudicial to the Confederates, and they began to ſuſpect Sainte-Aldegonde to ſuch a degree that he was laid aſide. (c) Quinetiam edito poſtea libello, quum res ab Alexandro patratas, clementiam ejus in victos, in ſervanda fide ſanctimoniam, ceteraſque Imperatorias virtutes, liberali præconio celebraſſet; adjecit inter alia, Sumi adverſus Philippum Regem arma a ſubditis populis, integra conſcientia, nequaquam poſſe. Quæ ſane confeſſio non temere inter loquendum prompta, ſed litteris ad memoriam conteſtata, ut erat hominis authoritate inter ſuos, & Calviniana ſapientia longe clariſſimi, Fœderatorum cauſæ momenti plurimum abrogavit, ipſe ſuis offenſus inviſuſque, regendam ad Rempublicam poſtea non acceſſit.

(L) That he exhorted the States to Perſecute the Sects.] I have ſaid more than once, when there was occaſion for it, that it was a hard caſe for the Proteſtant Writers of the XVIth Century to think themſelves obliged to exhort the Magiſtrates to Puniſh Hereticks, whilſt they thought it ſtrange that the Catholick Princes ſhould Perſecute the Proteſtants. Their own Arguments were retorted againſt 'em, and they could hardly come off but by ſuppoſing, as all Parties do, that their Doctrine was true. Sainte-Aldegonde muſt needs have been more Perplexed than many others, ſince he had taken ſo many Journeys, made ſo many Diſcourſes, and writ ſo many Books for a State, which had taken up Arms againſt the Spaniards to free themſelves from the Yoke of the Inquiſition. How many things might have been ſaid againſt him, when he exhorted the Sovereigns of that ſame State to exterminate ſome Sects? Here is an Inſtance of the Perplexity he was in. He ſuppoſes 1. that theſe words were only Objected to him, (d) 'Tis high time, Noble and Venerable Lords, that you ſhould go about to maintain the Honour of God in this World, if you deſire that he ſhould Protect and Defend your Country. 2. That the Antidote oppoſed againſt that Counſel conſiſts in this: "Men ought to live quietly one with another, "and every body ought to have the liberty of believing "what he thinks to be Right, and we ſhould not con- "cern our ſelves with it. Permitte Divis cætera." He quotes the ninth and forty firſt Pages of the Antidote; but there is in the ninth Page a Clauſe omitted by him. He is blamed for uſing theſe words, to ſuppreſs and intirely annihilate that Mortal Poiſon. 'Tis further ſaid (e) that he thinks it very ſtrange that there ſhould be ſtill ſome Men ſo tender-hearted as to queſtion whether the Magiſtrates ought to inflict Corporal Puniſhments, and lay a Fine upon thoſe who are guilty of Inſolence in the Service of God. What he leaves out, pretending to know nothing of it, alters the ſtate of the Queſtion, and removes the difficult part of it. Can ſuch a proceeding be conſiſtent with Sincerity? Is it not an unfair thing to reduce the Antidote to a ſingle Propoſition of the forty firſt Page, without conſidering many ſolid Arguments that go before it? In another (f) place of his Work he examins what he had left out in the beginning; but his Examination ſhews the Perplexity he was in.

Note, That he bore an ill will to the Enthuſiaſts long before. See his (g) Letter to Beza written the tenth of January 1566.

(M) That he loved Dancing, and that the Scruples of the Preciſiſts, &c.] See Schookius (h), who has inſerted in one of his Books, a Letter (i) written by Sainte-Aldegonde in 1577. to Gaſpar Verheiden, a Dutch Miniſter. That Letter ſeems to me very judicious. I ſhall take two or three Curious Things out of it. The Author affirms that many People were ſo offended, becauſe Dancing was not approved in the Reformed Churches, that it made 'em unwilling to joyn with them, and that many laid aſide their Prejudices againſt the Proteſtants, when they came to know his Opinion and Practice about it. From whence he infers, (k) that too rigid a Morality about ſuch an Exerciſe was ſo far from being Edifying, that it was Scandalous. He ſays that the (l) Prince himſelf was very much Offended when he heard that one could not Dance at a Wedding without incurring the Cenſure of the Church. He thinks that (m) Dancing is a good and commendable thing in the Netherlands, becauſe it keeps People from Drinking or Gaming after Meals. He is not much concern'd becauſe the Zealots have not the ſame Eſteem for him as they had before; for, ſays he, I don't deſire that my Reputation ſhould be grounded upon Superficial Things, but upon Solid ones. (n) Exiſtimationis certe (quam tu mihi apud pios omnes amiſſam hoc facto eſſe autumas) rationem, ego nunquam in rerum externarum umbris, ſed in ipſis rebus poſitam eſſe ſtatui. However he approves the Conduct of the Church of Geneva, which, by forbidding Dancing, had ſuppreſt many unbecoming things that were Practiſed every day. It was an uſual thing in thoſe parts to carry Young Maids to the Ball up and down in the Night time, and to vex 'em with Lewd Poſtures. He does not think that one can be preſent at ſuch a Spectacle without a Sin, and much leſs an Actor in it (o) Ut ego Genevates merito laudandos cenſeam, qui turpiſſima dedecora, quæ quotidie ſine fronte committebantur, hoc uno interdicto, quaſi Tenedia bipenni, reſecuerint. Sed illis erat uſitatiſſimum, quod & hodie eſt multo frequentiſſimum, apud Burgundos, Sabaudos, atque omnes Allobroges, & multos etiam Gallos, puellas virgines intempeſtiva nocte, ſine ullo cuſtode, ad choreas, quocunque vellent abducere, & quamdiu vellent in fœdiſſimis atque obſcœniſſimis geſticulationibus, quovis anni tempore, ſine ulla prope intermiſſione, prætextu chorearum, uſque ad nauſeam fatigare. Quos ego mores vel inſpectare, nedum exemplo comprobare, nefas eſſe duxerim.

The Reformed Churches, which forbad Dancing, cannot be ſufficiently Praiſed for it; and it were an abſurd thing to fancy that the Miniſters blamed it, only as it is a ſkill in Walking or Leaping. It is a very Lawful Exerciſe under that notion, it is neither Good nor Bad Morally ſpeaking. But the manner of it occaſion'd a thouſand Diſorders, and in the very Room wherein the Ball was kept, it made dangerous Impreſſions upon a Woman's Chaſtity. The Proverb concerning Convents, (p) as dangerous as a return from Matines, might have produced another with a ſmall Alteration, as dangerous as a return from a Ball.

A DESCRIPTION of the ill Conſequences of Dancing.

To confirm what I have ſaid, that the Proteſtant Churches of France did very wiſely forbid Dancing, I ſhall quote a Paſſage out of a Book written by Lambert Daneau, if I am not miſtaken. The Author maintains (q) that the Devil never Invented a more effectual way than Dancing to fill the World with Whoredom: "for if the bare meeting of a Man and "a Woman, Lewd Words, Wanton Songs, and "Feeling, are ſufficient to kindle Luſt, as we have "but too many Inſtances of it every day; one may "judge of the great Inconveniencies that will [illegible] "from the Concourſe of all thoſe things in one and out doing him injuſtice, that he was one of the Illuſtrious Men of the XVI. Century; for he was very Zealous for his Religion, and had a great deal of Wit and Learning: Beſides he underſtood the Civil Law, Politicks, Negotiations, Divinity, Hebrew, Greek and Latin, and many living Languages †.

(a) Confeſſus Aldegondius ſe rem deſperatam publicam vidiſſe, ſibi privatim conſulturum legationem . . . feſtinavit. Id. ibid. pag. 427.

(b) Id. ib. Pag. 412.

(c) Id. ib. Pag. 433.

(d) Sainte-Aldegonde, Reſponce apologetique fol. A 4.

(e) Antidote pag. 10.

(f) Id. Reſponce apologetique [illegible]

(g) [illegible]

(h) Schook. [illegible] pag. 317. [illegible]

(i) In the [illegible] of the Epiſtolæ illuſtrium Belgarum.

(k) Hanc conſuetudinem non modo nullam eſſe in hac importuna moroſitate, & revocata ad humanæ opinionis placitum cenſura, ædificationem, at increbuiſſe etiam ſcandalum. Schook, pag. 318.

(l) I take he means the Prince of Orange.

(m) Imo vero his locis ſanctas duxerim choreas quæ poſt epulas ad infienda ebrioſorum pocula inhibendoſve aleatorum ludos, agitantur cum fructu. Ibid.

(n) Ibid. pag. 319.

(o) Ibid. pag. 320.

(p) See Paſquier, Recherch. de la France Book 8. ch. [illegible] pag. m. [illegible]

(q) [illegible]

SAINTE-CROIX (Proſper) made a Cardinal by Pius IV. had been Advocate Conſiſtorial and Auditor of the Rota. He was Nuncio in Germany, Portugal, † See Verheiden in elog. [illegible] Theolog. [illegible]

"the ſame place, and in the ſame Perſons, who beſides meet together for their Diverſion. But all "thoſe things are to be found in Dancing; ſo that "it may be ſaid that Dancing is a Compoſition of "all ſorts of Poiſons invented by the Devil, to "hide the fear of God, and kindle all manner of "fleſhy Luſts; that 'tis a Bait for the Eyes and Ears, "and in general for all the Senſes to ſeduce them, "and convey the Poyſon into the Soul thro' their "Channel. —— (a) Upon ſuch an occaſion every "body may chuſe, even in the Arms of Husbands "and Mothers, ſuch Women as they fancy; and "then they take 'em by the Hand, and as if they "were already enjoying their Deſires, they Kiſs, "Embrace and carry them up and down: Young "Men making it their buſineſs to appear Nimble and "Merry, and to Pleaſe Women with a thouſand "Motions; and Women on their part uſing their "Endeavours to do the like. The Men know how "to make 'em Friſk and cut ſuch high Capers, that "the Company may ſee their Legs to the very "Thigh. A Ball is attended with a thouſand Mo-"tions, Glances and Capers; each ſort of Dance "affords new ways of Pleaſing, Seeing and Feel-"ing: And all thoſe things are performed with "great Shouting, and a great deal of Mirth.—— "(b) The Dancers are not the only Perſons liable "to thoſe Inconveniencies, but alſo thoſe who "are meer Spectators, ſince Women have a full "ſight of Young Men, whilſt they play their "Nimble and Merry Tricks; and likewiſe the Men "a full ſight of the Women and Maids, whilſt they "ſhew their Wantonneſs. How great a Power "have the Eyes and the Ears (or rather the Devil, "who makes uſe of thoſe Organs) upon idle Peo-"ple, well Fed and greedy of Pleaſure! —— "(c) But let us ſuppoſe that ſome will dance with-"out having any ill Deſires; can it be ſaid that "they will not excite 'em in others? For they do "every thing that may kindle Luſt, and as St. Je-"rome ſays in a like Caſe, they preſent the Poiſon "to any that will take and ſwallow it. Now there "will be but too many diſpoſed to Drink it. A "Maid is pitch'd upon to Dance; which is already "ſufficient to make her fear that ſhe has excited a "fooliſh Deſire in the Perſon, who pitches upon "her. But when he Kiſſes her very tenderly, and "makes much of her, and whilſt he is Dancing, he "redoubles his Efforts; what can ſhe think but "that he does it upon her account, and that the "Fire of Love, which kindles his Luſt, makes him "ſo Nimble. Beſides, that Maid goes up and down "with a Bold and Merry Countenance, and without "any Shame, as it were to ſhew her ſelf to every "Body. But how can ſhe be ſure, that none of "thoſe, who look upon her, will feel an unlawful "Deſire? And if you ſuſpect that you have occaſi-"on'd an ill Thought in a Man, what's become of "your Conſcience, if you are not ſorry for it, and "don't avoid ſuch Meetings? The ſame may be ſaid "of Young Men with reſpect to Women". I ſhould tranſcribe the greateſt part of that Book, if I was willing to mention all the ſtrong Reaſons alledged in it. That Treatiſe was Dedicated to the King of Navarre, by the Miniſters of the Holy Goſpel in the Reformed Churches. His Court wanted very much to be Reformed in that reſpect, for it was not like that of Joan d'Albret. Her Example was alledged to that Prince: (d) "No Body doubts, "Sir, that your Majeſty, beſides the great Parts "and excellent Judgment which God has beſtowed "upon you, having had ſo Good and ſo Holy an "Education from your Infancy by ſuch an Excellent "Queen and Mother, that ſhe was deſervedly call'd "the Wonder of her Age, and remembring the "good Example ſhe gave you, (for ſhe always kept "her Houſe free from ſuch filthy Things, ever ſince "ſhe was call'd to the Knowledge of the Goſpel, "and had the Command of her ſelf,) it is impoſſi-"ble that the Corruption of this Age ſhould prevail "upon you more than Holy Precepts, the ill Ex-"amples of other Courts more than the remem-"brance of that wherein you have been bred up, "and the Allurements of the World more than Piety, "which you have ſuck'd in with your Mother's Milk.

'Tis plain that when Dancing is attended with ſo many Irregularities, it deſerves to be blamed by all thoſe, who write Moral Books. Sainte-Aldegonde would not have approved of it. The Count de Buſſi Rabutin Condemn'd (e) the uſe of Balls as a very dangerous thing: Reaſon and his own Experience convinced him of it. All the Caſuiſts ought to be Preciſiſts or Rigoriſts upon this Head. The Philoſopher, who wrote againſt the Preciſiſts, declared (f) that he blamed Dancing under this Notion; but he ſaid he did not believe it was of the ſame Nature among the Proteſtants of Germany; and that the Preciſiſts, who are offended at a Cuſtom, that prevails in that Country, where both Sexes Dance together, ſhould conſider that they don't diſapprove certain Cuſtoms, at which the Germans are more like to be Offended. (g) Si mixti ſaltantium chori, nos ratione Germanorum offendant, næ eos multo magis offenderint promiſcui juvenum & virginum accubitus in nuptiis, maxime oſcula ex more gentis Belgicæ, præ cæteris Hollandicæ, frequentari ſolita. Obteſtor eos, quorum zelus contra choreas forte improbari non poſſet, ſi a ſcientia convenientier dirigeretur, an non multo majus ſcandalum promiſcua & quotidiana hæc oſcula (ita loquitur Sueton. lib. 3. cap. 34.) præbeant Sarmatis, Cimbris, & Germanis, quam nobis (ſi gentilitios mores diſtinguere noluerimus) præberi poſſint a nuptialibus eorundem tripudiis? He draws up a Parallel between the cuſtom of Kiſſing and that of Dancing, and maintains that Foreigners will be more Offended at the firſt, than the Preciſiſts are at the laſt. (h) Quam πρόφασιν pro ſuis Batavis excogitaverit hic rigidus Theologus, idemque juratus adverſarius non minus omnigenarum chorearum, quam votorum innoxiorum propinato poculo additorum? Maxime, ſi Cimber, aut Sarmata viderit uxorem illius, convivas ſuos ad oſtium oſculo excipientem & dimittentem. Næ, peregrinus hic conviva, cum Clemente Alexand. lib. 3. Pædag. ejuſmodi oſculum, a graviſſimi licet Paſtoris uxore ex uſu gentis frequentatum, vocaverit oſculum inceſtum, veneno plenum, ſanctitatem ſimulans, & oſculum impudicitiæ: ex Ambroſio vero in cap. ult. 2. ad Corinth. affectus libidinoſi indicium. Nec eſt, quod adverſarius dicat hoc judicium, ſeu Cimbri, ſeu Sarmatæ, charitatis expers eſſe, quum ipſe longe inclementius judicet de ſaltationibus, quas proclamat eſſe proxima incentiva libidinis, interim non cogitando, per oſcula multo expeditius ingredi libidinem; atque Cimbro, ſeu Sarmatæ, videri proſtitutæ famæ, & pudicitiæ, fœminas eſſe, quæ præſumpſerint hoſpites oſculo excipere. He concludes that Nations ought to Excuſe one another, and to conſider above all things that an ancient and long Cuſtom may make a thing Innocent in one Country, that is Undecent in another. He inſtances upon Engliſh Women walking with other Men than their Husbands. (i) Quæ ratione oſculi dicta ſunt, applicari poſſunt (k) deambulationibus, quas uxores Anglorum, cum alienis viris inſtituere ſolent, quæ & inter primariæ dignitatis Belgas hoc tempore frequentari incipiunt. Certe offenderint hæ matronas Chriſtianas ad Septentrionem degentes; quæ mirabuntur admodum, hæc & ſimilia citra cenſuram tolerari poſſe ab illis Theologis, quorum zelus quotidie occupari ſolet circa ſaltationes & pocula votiva. Nos vero, citra pulveris jactum, ex omnibus hiſce difficultatibus expedire conſtanter poſſumus, quando docemus, in talibus gentium mores & conſuetudines ante omnia inſpici debere quorum ratione, ut rigidiores quoque Preciſiſtæ Hollandi ſua concedunt ſuavia, Anglicanis matronis prodeambulationes cum maritis non ſuis; ita aliis gentibus mox invidere non deberent ſuas ſaltationes, modo ab iis abſit mollities, & illud τεχνικὸν, ad accendendam libidinem ab otioſis nepotibus excogitatum.

It

(a) Ibid. pag. 39.

(b) Ibid. pag. 41.

(c) Ibid. pag. 41.

(d) Ibid. [illegible] Dedicatory [illegible] A iij.

(e) See in the [illegible] part of the Retour des pieces choiſies his Letter to the Biſhop of Autun concerning Balls and Dancing.

(f) Nulla ratione tamen patrocinari volo tripudiis modernis, à Bathylli modis non abhorrentibus, atque convenientibus magis Pathico, ſive cinædo, quam homini Chriſtiano. Mart. Schoockius ubi ſupra pag. 327.

(g) Id. ib:

(h) Id. ib. pag. 328.

(i) Id. ib. pag. 329.

(k) Henry Stephens mentions that cuſtom in his Latin Apology for Herodotus.

al, Spain and France. Catherine de Medicis procured him the Arch-Bishoprick of Arles, where he prevented with an extreme Severity the Establishment of the Protestant Religion. He died at Rome the 4th of October 1589, being 76 Years old. I shall speak (A) of his Books. At his return from his Nunciature in Portugal he procured the knowledge of (B) Tobacco in Italy; which is the reason why that Herb was call'd Santa croce α.

SANCTA MAURA, an Island formerly call'd Leucadia †, nine Miles β from that of Cephalonia. The Greeks call it γ still Leucada, for properly speaking they call Sancta Maura the Fortress, where there was formerly a Monastery of that Name. That Fortress is three Miles distant (C) from the Ruins of the Town of Leucas, in a place where the Canal between the Isle and the Continent is one League broad. Nevertheless it has δ a constant Communication with the Continent by Reason of a Bridge, and of several Islands joyn'd together by several Bridges. It has also ζ an (D) Aqueduct about a Mile long, which serves for a Bridge to those, who go a foot. There are about thirty Villages in the Island: The Greeks have a Bishop in it. It abounds with Corn, Wine, Oyl, and several sorts of Fruit, and is about 12 * or 15 Leagues round. The Turks (E) made themselves Masters of it in 1479. The Venetians took it from them under the Conduct of the Captain General Pesaro in 1502. and restored it to them soon after by a Treaty of Peace. They retook it under the General Morosini the 23d of July 1684. The Pirates of Sancta Maura have been much talk'd of: They were the first that made use of Galliots. The Bacha of the θ Morea went on purpose into that Island in 1675. to burn their small Vessels. Dureg Bey, a Famous Corsair of Lepanto, had seven or eight Corsairs of Sainte-Maura under his Command.

SANCTESIUS (CLAUDIUS) in French κ de Saintes, one of the chief Controversists of the XVI. Century, was a native of (A) Perche. He turn'd Canon Regular λ in the Year 1540 in the Monastery of St. Cheron μ near Chartres, and was sent to Paris some time after, where he studied classical Learning, Philosophy and Divinity in the College of Navarre ν. He took his Degree of Doctor of Divinity in 1555. and then ‖ applied himself very much to Controversy, and was admitted into the House of Cardinal de Lorraine ξ. In the Year 1561, he was one of the Disputants for the Romish party in the Conference of Poissy, and afterwards one of the twelve Divines whom Charles IX sent to the Council of Trent. He and Simon Vigor disputed with two Ministers in the House of the Duke of Nevers in

It may be observed that this Philosopher had not the same Reasons that Sainte-Aldegonde had, to write an Apology for Dancing. He protests (a) that he never had a mind to Dance; and that if the Magistrates should forbid Dancing, it would not make him uneasy in the least. Sainte-Aldegonde could not have said so with any sincerity.

(A) I shall speak of his Books.] His Book are, Decisiones Rotæ Romanæ. Gallicarum rerum Commentaria. Epistolæ ad Federicum Nauseam aliosque. Several Speeches. Constitutiones laneæ artis a Sixto V. in Urbe erectæ. The Jesuits of the Roman College have his Treatise, De Officio Legati, and one Volume of his Letters in Manuscript (b).

(B) Procured the Knowledge of Tobacco.] Which appears from some Verses of Castor Duranti, quoted by Mandosio, wherein that Herb is described as an Universal Remedy.

Nomine quæ Sanctæ Crucis herba vocatur, ocellis
Subvenit, & sanat plagas, & vulnera jungit,
Discutit & strumas, cancrum, cancrosaque sanat
Ulcera, & ambustis prodest, scabiemque repellit;
Discutit & morbum cui cessit ab impete nomen,
Calefacit & siccat, stringit, mundatque, resolvit,
Et dentum & ventris mulcet capitisque dolores;
Subvenit antiquæ tussi, stomacoque rigenti
Renibus & spleni confert, ultroque, venena
Dira sagittarum domat, ictibus omnibus atris
Hæc eadem prodest: gingivis proficit atque
Conciliat somnum: nuda ossaque carne revestit:
Thoracis vitiis prodest, pulmonis itemque,
Quæ duo sic præstat non ulla potentior herba.
Hanc Sanctacrucius Prosper quum Nuncius esset
Sedis Apostolicæ Lusitanas missus in oras
Huc adportavit Romanæ ad commoda gentis,
Ut proavi Sancta lignum Crucis ante tulere
Omnis Christiadum quo nunc respublica gaudet,
Et Sanctæ Crucis illustris Domus ipsa vocatur
Corporis atque animæ nostræ studiosa salutis.

A Parallel between Tobacco and the Wood of the True Cross, is a very Extravagant Panegyrick.

(C) Three Miles from the Ruins.] Spon (c) Censures Ortelius and Ferrarius for believing as other Geographers do, that Sancta Maura is still in the same place with the Town of Leucas, the Ruins of which are to be seen three Miles from Sancta Maura. I don't find in Ortelius's Thesaurus Geographicus that the Town of Sancta Maura, and that of Leucas are in the same Situation; but only that the Isle of Leucadia is now call'd Sancta Maura. There is nothing in it that deserves to be Censured. Spon adds, that the Town of Leucas was built upon a rising Ground a Mile from the Sea, in the narrowest part of the Canal that was made, when the Isthmus was cut, and that there are not above fifty Miles between that place and the Continent. I confess I cannot apprehend that a Town should be built upon a Canal 50 Paces broad, and yet be a Mile distant from the Sea; for that Canal is in the same place where the Isthmus was: But can a Town built upon an Isthmus 50 Paces broad be above 50 Paces distant from the Sea? Supposing the English Channel to be only 30 Toises broad, will it follow from thence that Dover and Calais are not upon the Sea.

(D) It has also an Aqueduct.] Spon (d) who saw that Aqueduct says, that it serves for a Bridge to those who go on Foot, tho' it be hardly above three Foot broad, and has no Breast-height. Tho' a Man be never so Fearless, he Trembles when he goes over it, especially if he meets any Body that comes from the Place he goes to; for two Men have much ado to go over it abreast. But Father Coronelli says (e) it is a stately Aqueduct, built with Stone, and supported by three hundred and sixty Arches.

(E) The Turks made themselves Masters of it in the Year 1479.] It was under Mahomet II. See the particulars of it in that Sultan's Life written (f) by M. Guillet: They are Curious enough. Leonard Tocco Dynaste of Acarnania was then Possest of Sancta Maura.

(A) Was a Native of Perche.] I know that according to La Croix du Maine and Moreri, he was a Native of Chartres; but I rather believe John de Launoi, who has these words; (g) Claudius Sanctesius ortum habuit in ea Galliæ regione cujus populi nunc Perticenses, Gregorio Turonensi Pertenses, antiquioribus Aulerci Diablintes dicti fuere.

(B) Were

α [illegible]

† [illegible]

β [illegible]

δ [illegible]

ζ [illegible]

* Moreri in the word Sainte de Saintes Letter C.

θ In Greek [illegible]

κ [illegible]

λ [illegible]

μ [illegible]

ν Id. ib.

ξ Id. ib.

‖ And not 1556, as Launoi will have it.

(a) Protestationi hoc unum [illegible] adjicio, mihi citra choreas, atque quemquam sive teri sive meti; quam de earum exercitio ne per somnium quidem cogitaverim tota vita, quam exemplo [illegible] illius [illegible] apud Plautum, ex Dei mei voluntate, in qua libenter acquiesco, transigo inter catenatas molestias & curas: unde & ferre possum Magistratuum Edicta, chorearum abolitionem perpetuam urgentia. Id. ib. p. 321.

(b) Ex Prosp. Mandosio Biblioth. Roman. & Oldoino Athen. Roman.

in 1566 ‡. He was ſo incenſed againſt the Proteſtants that he maintain'd that (B) thoſe, whom they had Baptized, were to be Baptized again. He left nothing unattempted to turn 'em out of his Dioceſe, and to get all the Canons of the Council of Trent (C) admitted into the Kingdom without any Reſtriction. He did not ſcruple to ſay that Calvin and Beza taught Atheiſtical Notions *. He ſided with the League with ſuch a Fury, that he maintain'd that Henry III. had been juſtly Aſſaſſinated, (D) and that Henry IV. deſerved the ſame Puniſhment. The Manuſcript, wherein he aſſerted that Doctrine, was found in his Cloſet, when Biron made himſelf Maſter of Louviers, and Seized upon that unhappy Prelate. He was not treated like a Priſoner of War, but he was ſent to Caen ‖ to be Tried; and becauſe he obſtinately continued to maintain that Pernicious Doctrine, he would have been put to Death, had not Cardinal de Bourbon, and ſome other Eccleſiaſticks who were with the King, prevail'd with him to Condemn him to a perpetual Impriſonment. He died ſoon after in his Confinement ‖: It was in the Year 1591. 'Tis to be obſerved that he had ſaid long before in a Book, to ſpite the Proteſtants, that (E) Subjects ought never to oppoſe the Ordinances of their Sovereigns. He Publiſh'd a ſmall Piece in 1561. to ſhew that Hereticks ought not (F) to be Tolerated. 'Tis a very Ancient Opinion, and very common

‡ The Proteſtants of Normandy had been [illegible]

‖ Taken from Thuanus. See his words in the Remark D.

(B) Were to be Baptized again.] He himſelf tells us that Pius V. having decided that thoſe, who had received Baptiſm among the Innovators, ought not to be Baptized again, order'd his Nuncio to command him and the other Preachers of Paris to teach no longer the contrary. That Brief of Pius V. is very ſcarce. I ſhall ſet down the words of Doctor de Launoi. Ad annum MDLXXII. Lutetiæ concionabatur, cum Pius V. Pontifex ſtatuit, neque ſimpliciter, neque cum adjectione repetendum eſſe baptiſmum, quem Novatores dediſſent. Id teſtatur in Synodo, quam cum Epiſcopus fuit, anno MDLXXVII. habuit. Quam, inquit, definitionem Pius Pontifex ante quinque vel ſex annos per Breve, ac per internuntium Apoſtolicum dignatus fuit nobis atque aliis, qui tum Lutetiæ Pariſiorum fungebamur concionatorum officio, ſignificare atque inhibere, ne aliter doceremus. Breve illud vix invenitur (a).

(C) And to get all the Canons of the Council of Trent admitted into the Kingdom.] This I ſhall prove from the words of the ſaid Doctor. Porro autem, ſays he (b), in Epiſcopali munere nulli non pepercit labori ac diligentia, ſive ut hæreſim a finibus ſuis exterminaret, ſive ut Tridentini Concilii decreta penitus admitterentur ac ſervarentur.

(D) That Henry III. had been juſtly Aſſaſſinated.] (c) Captus in opido (d) Claudius Sanctius Ebroicenſium Epiſcopus famoſus Theologus regiis partibus infeſtiſſimus cum libris & chartis, inter quas ſcriptum repertum eſt, quo parricidium Regis tanquam juſte factum tuebatur, & idem licere in Regem hodiernum defendebat. Itaque non lege belli cum eo actum, ſed Cadomum ſub cuſtodia miſſus, ut in eum Senatus inquireret, & tanquam de perduelli ſupplicium ſumeretur. Nec enim ſacri ordinis prærogativæ in crimine læſæ Majeſtatis apud nos ratio habetur, ſed in convictos, ſive ſacerdotes ſive epiſcopi ſint, tanquam ſolutos ac profanos legum ſeveritas exercetur, parumque res ab executione abfuit: Sanctio jam peracto reo, ut erat pervicaci ingenio errorem præfracte propugnante. Sed interceſſerunt poſtea Cardinalis Borbonius aliique è ſacro ordine, qui cum Rege erant, tenueruntque, ut pro meritis pœna, quam legibus noſtris, ut ipſi fatebantur, meruerat, carceri perpetuo manciparetur, in quo paulo poſt deceſſit. Henry IV. acted without doubt upon this occaſion according to the Clemency and Generoſity that were Natural to him; but he acted alſo out of a timorous Prudence, which frequently ſhook his great Courage, when he came to obſerve that the Monſter of the League he was to overcome, more fierce and dangerous than Hercules's Hydra, would grow more furious and terrible by the Effuſion of his Blood. Wherefore that Prince thought himſelf obliged to uſe Mildneſs in order to Tame and Pacify that Wild Beaſt. Clemency on the one hand and Policy on the other ſaved Sanctesius the ſhame of loſing his Life upon a Scaffold, as he deſerved.

(E) That Subjects ought never to (†) Oppoſe.] The Book, wherein he advances this Opinion, was Printed at Paris, in 1561. with this Title, Confeſſion de foi Catholique, contenant en bref la reformation de celle que les Miniſtres de Calvin preſenterent au Roi en l'Aſſemblée de Poiſſi. The fifty ſeventh Article of that Confeſſion contains theſe Words: "We "hold that Subjects ought to obey their Laws and "Ordinances, to pay Tributes, Impoſts, and other "Duties, and bear the Yoke of Subjection with a "ready Will, tho' Princes were Infidels, and the "Empire of GOD ſhould not be preſerved intire. "And therefore we deteſt thoſe, who would reject "Superior Powers, ſet up Communities at their "Pleaſure, introduce a confuſion of Goods, and o"verthrow the Order of Juſtice. We alſo reject "all Murderers and Aſſaſſins, hired and ſworn to "follow and ſupport Sects, and thoſe who declare all "thoſe, who Diſpleaſe or Reſiſt them, to be wor"thy of Death, and who get Kings, Lords, Church"es and Towns, attack'd under pretence of the word "of God." The Author undertook to ſhew that the Catholicks went farther than the Proteſtants; for the latter added a Clauſe to the Article, wherein they declared their Opinion about the Obedience of Subjects; (e) Provided, ſay they, the Empire of God be preſerved intire. Tho' this Clauſe has been often Reflected upon, as being too General and Captious, it is very Juſt and Orthodox, if it be rightly underſtood, tho' it may be wreſted to a Pernicious Senſe againſt the Intention of the Authors. But 'tis certain that Sanctesius left it out of his Confeſſion only out of Animoſity againſt Geneva; and no Man did ever contradict himſelf more Impudently than he did. Which is the uſual Fate of thoſe who argue without Principles, and embrace an Opinion only to differ from their Enemies, and have a pretence to inſult 'em. When that Paſſion is over, and the intereſt of their Party requires another thing, they renounce their firſt Opinions, and eſpouſe quite contrary ones. We have ſome late Inſtances of it.

(F) Hereticks ought not to be Tolerated.] His Book is Intituled, Ad edicta veterum Principum de licentia ſectarum in Chriſtiana religione. Item methodus contra ſectas quam ſequuti ſunt primi Catholici Imperatores. He approves that Hereticks ſhould be put to Death, and declares that if the Fires, which had been lighted in France to deſtroy Calviniſm, had not been extinguiſhed, that Sect had not prevail'd. (f) Audivi Severum Sulpitium de Priſcilliani hiſtoria, quaſi tabulam abſolutionis per domos judicum aliquorum circumlatum, cum adhuc in Gallia exercerentur judicia de capite pro religione ex Chriſtianiſſimorum regum edictis, atque ex ea hiſtoria plus damni noſtræ fidei, quam a Calvino libris & emiſſariis illatum. Non enim ultro citroque intrepide commeaſſent, & ad factionem tot homines ſollicitaſſent, ſi conflagratio non fuiſſet temere reſtincta, & a nonnullis quaſi fides publica data religionis & Reipub. perturbatoribus. The whole ſtrength of his Book is grounded upon Cuſtom and Practice; for he alledges few Reaſons, and none that's good. Whoever impartially compares the Arguments for or againſt Toleration, muſt needs confeſs that he could not have alledged any good Reaſon for Perſecution, tho' he had been a Man of much greater Abilities than he was.

(a) Launoius ibid. pag. 770.

(b) Ibid. pag. 772.

(c) Thuanus lib. 101. pag. 412.

(e) Confeſſion of Geneva art. 40.

(f) Frater Claudius de Sainctes, in Methodo quam ſequuti ſunt principes cap. 13. fol. 112. verſo.

(†) ... are Hereticks, for they take up Arms againſt the Magiſtrates, ... will not Obey them, but are for Planting their Religion with ... Sword, that is only given to the Magiſtrates.

common to this very day, tho' no Doctrine was ever Confuted with more ſolid Arguments *. The Titles of his other Books may be ſeen in the Hiſtory of the College of Navarre. Moreri and du Sauſſai (G) have committed unpardonable Miſtakes. 'Tis to be obſerved that Sanctesius confeſs'd he was ſuſpected for ſome was. The Reaſons for a Toleration have been ſet forth with the utmoſt Evidence by ſome late Writers. See the Prefaces to the Hiſtory of the Edict of Nantes; the Book (a) intituled, Traité de la liberté de conſcience, ou de l'autorité des Souverains ſur la religion des peuples, oppoſé aux maximes de Hobbes & de Spinoſa, adoptées par le Sieur Jurieu dans ſon Hiſtoire du Papiſme, & dans ſon Syſtême de l'Egliſe; the Philoſophical Commentary upon theſe words, Compel them to come in; and the Latin Letter Printed at Tergow, in 1689. M. de Beauval (b) aſcribed it to M. Bernard, a French Miniſter, very well known by his Works, and very well qualified to write a Book that contains ſuch a cloſe Reaſoning; but 'tis certain he is not the Author of it, and 'tis thought that Mr. Locke wrote it. But without undertaking to read a long winded Work, one needs only read a ſmall piece written at London, in 1685. by an Illuſtrious Magiſtrate (c) of a Town in Holland. It is Intituled, H. V. P. ad B * * * de nupero Angliæ motibus Epiſtola, in qua de diverſorum à publica religione, circa divina ſentientium diſſeritur tolerantia. That Letter was Printed at Rotterdam, in 1685. in Latin, French and Dutch.

The Reaſons alledged for Toleration muſt needs be very cogent, ſince all thoſe, who have done their utmoſt endeavours to Anſwer 'em, have been obliged to have recourſe to unfair Means, and to acknowledge that Hereticks ought not however to be puniſh'd with Death (d). Their Malice and Unfairneſs appear by their endeavouring to create a belief, that thoſe who are for Toleration favour the Socinians; that they are ill affected towards the Government, and deprive the Supreme Powers of one of the moſt conſiderable Rights that God has given 'em. This is a baſe and unjuſt Proceeding: At this rate one muſt not find fault with the Cruel Decrees, by virtue of which ſo many Proteſtants have been Burnt in France, the Netherlands, Spain, and Italy; for the Socinians do mightily exclaim againſt thoſe Cruelties. They inveigh no leſs againſt the Papiſts, who have put to Death thoſe, that are mention'd in the Proteſtant Martylogy, than againſt thoſe, who put to Death Servetus, Gentilis, &c. In a word, one muſt not write againſt the Pope, the Jews and the Turks; for 'tis manifeſt that Socinus and his Followers do not ſpare them. If thoſe, who undertake to ſhew that no Penal Laws ought to be Enacted againſt erring Men, are wanting to the reſpect they owe to Sovereigns; if they diveſt the Supreme Powers of one of their moſt conſiderable Rights; our late Apologiſts for Perſecution will be found guilty of that Crime, ſince they maintain that no Blood ought to be ſhed upon account of Religion. Do they not take away from Sovereigns the brighteſt Gem in their Crown? Have they not the Power of Life and Death over Malefactors? Beſides, can it be ſaid that God has put the Sword into the Hands of the Magiſtrates of Holland, to puniſh thoſe who Tranſgreſt againſt the firſt Table of the Law, as well as thoſe who Tranſgreſs againſt the ſecond, without reflecting upon 'em, and expoſing them to the Hatred of their Subjects? If this be true, is not their Toleration of Idolatry as great a Crime, as if they Tolerated Murderers and Highway-Men? Beſides, could there be any thing more Ridiculous than to inflict no other Puniſhment than Baniſhment upon Notorious Aſſaſſins and Poiſoners? See the diſpute of Meſſieurs de Wallemburch (e) about this Queſtion, Whether ſuppoſing that the Magiſtrates have a Right to puniſh Hereticks, they may put 'em to Death. They reduce their Diſpute with the Lutherans to this Queſtion; for they alledge the Famous Gherard, who was for Enacting Penal Laws againſt Sectaries, but did not approve that they ſhould be puniſh'd with Death. They clearly ſhew him that 'tis a Frivolous Exception. But in order to ſee the Confuſion of thoſe, who are againſt Toleration, we need only obſerve that they make bold to ſay, that the Sovereigns, who oppoſe the Introduction of a true Doctrine, are very commendable. " (f) I cannot blame the Swiſs, " ſays one of 'em, who will not permit by any means " the growth of any Sect amongſt 'em. Holland " abounds with different Religions. It were to be " wiſh'd that thoſe diſorders had been prevented " from the beginning." The Author of theſe words being a Miniſter, two Abſurdities contain'd in them were objected to him. The Catholick and the Reformed Cantons, was he told, " (g) will not Tolerate New Sects. Is it then upon this account " that you cannot blame them? How little is your " Zeal for the Propagation of your Religion? Is it " not your Duty to wiſh that the Catholick Cantons " would Tolerate the Reformed amongſt them, " and to blame them for refuſing to hear Jeſus " and his Prophets? Truly you are no good Apoſtle of Chriſt." He had been told before: (h) " If your Opinion had been followed in theſe happy Provinces———the Proteſtant Religion had " never prevail'd in it———And if Spain had been " always uppermoſt, and had prevented thoſe diſorders from the beginning, you would not live " ſo comfortably in the Habit you wear; for the " Proteſtant Religion would be ſo far from prevailing in this Country, that one would hardly " have a notion of it. Truly the Reformed are " very much beholden to you.

(G) Moreri and du Sauſſai have committed unpardonable Faults.] I only ſay this of ſome of 'em. I. I have already (i) obſerved Moreri's miſtake about Sanctesius's Country. II. He could not be at the Conference of Poiſſy after his return from the Council, ſince he did not go to that Council till after that Conference was held. III. How could Charles IX. who died the 30th of May 1574, name him to the Biſhoprick of Evreux, in the Year 1575? I don't queſtion that our Doctor ſued for that Dignity before that Prince died, and had a promiſe of it; but 'tis certain he did not obtain it till the Reign of Henry III. He himſelf ſays ſo; nor does he diſſemble that his Patron (k) told him in a (l) reproachful manner, that he ſued for Biſhopricks in remote Provinces, to free himſelf from the ſlavery of the Court. (m) Quoniam Chriſtianiſſimi Regis Caroli mors interceſſit, ne qua factione vel gratia mutaretur, quod ſemel Principi placuerat. Quibus potuit precibus apud Reginam matrem, novum Regem, Regiſque fratrem, optimos maximos Principes, & Sanctitatem veſtram, ac fratrum Cardinalium claſſem egit, ut is mihi maneret Epiſcopatus; nec prius quievit, quam accepit promotionis meæ diploma ad te perferri. Quod accidit illis diebus, quibus Avenione, non annis, ſed curis Eccleſiæ ac reipublicæ confectus, agebat (n) animam: quaſi moriens hunc mihi cum Epiſcopatu tradidit & commendavit. This ſhews that his Nomination was expedited at the Court of France, and ſent to the Court of Rome in December 1574; but becauſe he did not receive his Bulls before the Year 1575. M. de Launoi was in the right to ſay that he was preferr'd to a Biſhoprick in 1575. Here follow the groſs Miſtakes. IV. The Innovators mention'd by Moreri had ſo little Intereſt at the Court of France, before Sanctesius turn'd Rebel, that if they had undertaken to vent ſome Calumny againſt him, they would rather have done him good than harm. Perhaps they repreſented to Henry III. who was no leſs Perſecuted by the League than they, the exceſſes of that Factious Biſhop; but this was no Calumny. V. What an Abſurdity to pretend that they Poiſon'd him? He was no longer in a capacity to do them any Prejudice; for tho' he avoided the Puniſhment of death, he was to be confined in a Priſon the remaining part of his Life. VI. To ſay nothing of his Trial, and of the reaſon why he was thought to deſerve Death, is an unpardonable Omiſſion. Spondanus was guilty of the ſame Omiſſion: The Muſe, who preſides over Hiſtory, muſt needs look upon ſuch writers as great Prevaricators. M. de Launoi has not committed the ſame Fault; for he names the Author who mentions the Puniſhment of that Biſhop, and he thinks he deſerved it. (o) Anno M D XCI. deceſſit perpetuo mancipatus carceri propter ea, quæ Jacobus Auguſtus Thuanus memoriæ tradidit in Hiſtoriarum libro CI. Sic virum tantum, & de Eccleſia ſome time (H) of being inclin'd to Calviniſm; and that he repreſented Cardinal de Lorraine as a Faithful (I) under Perſecution. He was one of thoſe Divines, who found it a difficult thing to anſwer the paſſages of St. Auguſtin alledged by the Proteſtants againſt free Will. Wherefore he leſſen'd the Authority of that Holy Doctor as much (K) as he could in his Controverſial Writings about the Doctrine of Grace.

---

* See the Remark F.

(a) Printed at Amſterdam 1687. in 12.

(b) Hiſtoire des Ouvrages des Savans for September 1689. art. 2.

(c) Mr. PAETS. See a ſhort Encomium upon him in the Nouvelles de la Republique des lettres for October 1685. art. 2. pag. 1093. 1094 of the 2d. Edition. That great Man died the 8th of October 1686.

(d) See the 8. Letter of the Tableau du Socinianiſme.

(e) See their Book De unitate Eccleſiæ lib. 6. part. 1. cap. 2. & ſequent. pag. 222. & ſequent. edit. Colon. 1656. in 4.

(f) Eſprit de Mr. Arnaud, tom. 2. p. m. 335.

(g) [illegible]

(h) [illegible] the Hero of John Calvin.

(i) In the Remark A.

(k) The Cardinal de Lorraine.

(l) Ante omnia me ut regni [illegible] quem non ignorem CAPTASSE [illegible] Epiſcopatus, ut me in libertatem a ſervitute aulica, [illegible] aſſererem. Card. Sanct[illegible] Epiſt. dedicator. [illegible] de Euchariſtia, ad Gregorium XIII.

(m) Sanctesius ibid.

(n) The Cardinal de Lorraine died at Avignon, the [illegible] of December 1574.

(o) Launoi ubi ſupra pag. 7[illegible]

SALMACIS, a Fountain at Halicarnaſſus, which was ſaid to effeminate thoſe who (A) drank of, or went into it. The Poets being willing to Account for this ill quality, ſuppoſed that a Nymph, who was paſſionately in Love with Hermaphroditus, the Son of Venus and Mercury, threw her ſelf into that Fountain, whilſt he ceta olim tam bene meritum periiſſe valde lubentem, niſi promendi cauſa id ipſe poſtulaſſet. I wonder the Miniſters of State ſuffer that ſo many Writers ſhould ſay nothing of the Biſhops Rebellion. Thoſe, who ſhall rebel hereafter, will be apt to think that Hiſtorians will take no notice of it.

Here follow the miſtakes of Andrew du Sauſſai. I. He ſays that Sanctesius was (a) Profeſſor in the Year 1533. in a Monaſtery of Regular Canons. II. He tells us that Sanctesius went to the Council of Trent before the Conference of Poiſſy was held. III. That he aſſiſted in a Provincial Council of Rouen in the Year 1576: but that Council was not held before the Year 1581. as M. de Launoi informs us (b), who adds that Sanctesius publiſh'd the Year following a French Tranſlation of the Acts of that Aſſembly, which he had (c) promoted and directed. IV. That invincible Hero of the Gallican Church did not confine himſelf within thoſe bounds, if we believe du Sauſſai. He and Simon Vigor diſputed with Spina and du Roſier, two of the chief Miniſters, and got a compleat Victory. That is, the Biſhop of Evreux was not contented to aſſiſt at a Provincial Synod in the Year (d) 1576. and to put in order and publiſh the Synodal Decrees of his Dioceſe, but engaged alſo in a regular diſputation with thoſe two Miniſters. What an Anachroniſm is here! That Conference was held 8 or 9 Years before Sanctesius came to be a Biſhop. V. He died in 1591. and not in the foregoing Year. VI. 'Tis an unexcuſable prevarication to mention the Death of that Prelate, and at the ſame time, to call him eximius, without ſaying any thing of his Rebellion, and Abominable Doctrine, and of the infamous puniſhment he was like to undergo. What du Sauſſai ſays of him is contain'd in 15. Lines. How many Faults would he have committed, if he had made an Encomium of 15 Pages?

(H) Of being enclin'd to Calviniſm.] He ſays thoſe Suſpicions were grounded on his appearing more moderate, when he engaged in a diſpute in Nevers-Houſe, than he ſeem'd to be at the Conference of Poiſſy. (e) Ego qui Piſſiaci habebar acrior, & tantum non ſeditioſus, anno ſuperiore in collatione facta cum Spina & Roſeo Miniſtris, credebar mutatus, & paulo momento ad Calviniſmum poſſe impelli, quoniam de priſtina vehementia tantum remiſeram, quantum in domino Vigoreo Calviniſtis infeſtiſſimo Doctore magis ac magis cernebam inflammari & exardeſcere.

(I) Cardinal de Lorraine as a Faithful under perſecution.] If we may believe Sanctesius, that Cardinal was very ſick of the bruiſe of Joſeph; he daily afflicted his righteous Soul, like another Lot, ſeeing the Evils of the Church. He was a dying every day in the midſt of the Tribulations and Anguiſhes he endured for the cauſe of God, and was continually preparing himſelf for Martyrdom, being told every day that there was a deſign upon his Life; and he would ſay ſometimes, Let's go and die with him. (f) Per annos fere ſexdecim a comitatu illuſtriſſimi Principis, ac maximi Cardinalis Caroli Lotharingi, niſi alicujus officii publici cauſa, non receſſi, nec ille me ſtudiorum tantum, ſed ad exteros omnium profectionum, colloquiorum & negotiorum multorum, quæ difficillimis Galliæ temporibus ipſi contra hæreticos inciderunt, me participem fecit, ut tentationum & paſſionum, quibus per tot annos quotidie moriebatur, & omni hora de vita periclitabatur, cui quoties nunciabatur, paratas eſſe inſidias, tam parum timidus, quam nimium eſſe putabatur, ſolebat ad me converſus dicere: Sequaris Sacerdotem Levita; aliquando vero: Eamus, & moriamur cum illo. Cum deſereretur ab intimis, addebat: Socii paſſionum eritis & conſolationis. Thoſe, who have read in Mezerai and other Catholick Writers, that this Cardinal was a Worldly, Proud and Voluptuous Man, that he had a great Power and intereſt (g), and violently perſecuted the Proteſtants, will not read this Deſcription of his glorious ſufferings without laughing. In another Book Sanctesius begs of God that he would ſtrengthen the Cardinal his Servant, perſecuted for a good Cauſe. (h) Omittam vero libens tum pleraſque illius libelli ineptias, veluti quod invitum ipſe a ſuo ſodalibus hæc pertractare dicit, ac tandem etiam ſuo Cardinali virtutem & conſtantiam in perſecutionibus precatur, quæ quidem non ſine riſu legi poſſunt. I have often thought of a thing, that would very much perplex the Aſiaticks, if they had a mind to take notice of that part of our Hiſtories of the XVI. and XVII. Centuries relating to the Troubles of Religion. Each Church complains that ſhe is under ſufferings, and looks upon her Victories as a means in God's hands to free her from the ſlavery and ſlaughter ſhe was threaten'd with. I need not ſhew that the Proteſtants expreſs themſelves in that manner with reſpect to the Conqueſts of Guſtavus Adolphus; but I ſhall make it appear that the Jeſuits did the ſame conſidering the great ſucceſs of the Emperor. In order to it I ſhall ſet down an Extract of a Letter written to James Reihing by a Jeſuit, who was Chaplain to the Famous Count de Tilly. (i) Rem noſtram, id eſt Catholicorum ——— bene ſe habere hoc decreet bellum, in quo jam quarto anno verſor cum Illuſtriſſimo Comite de Tilli, &c. Erant mira Conſilia noſtrorum Adverſariorum ſed quam mirabilis in altis Dominus! molicbantur nobis internecionem, inciderunt in foveam, quam fecerunt: & ut libenter noſtri hoſtes confitentur, nunquam dediſſent, quod acceperunt, beneficium Vitæ. Ut vel inde pateat, quæ pars furorem, quæ ſequatur æquitatem.

(K) He leſſen'd the Authority of Saint Auguſtin as much as he could.] The Janſeniſt, who publiſh'd in 1689. ſome Letters written by the Prince of Conti to Father de Champs, added to them among other things a Diſſertation intitled, S. Auguſtin juſtifié du ſoupçon ou des apparences de Calviniſme. I find the following paſſage in it concerning Sanctesius. "(k) He was one of thoſe, who thought it neceſſary "to maintain at all times an opinion contrary to "that of the Hereticks in order to get a compleat "Victory over them, and who conſidering the fright-"ful part of St. Auguſtin's Doctrine concerning Pre-"deſtination more than the Solid Foundation of the "Scripture and Tradition, on which it is grounded, "were too eaſily frighted at that Doctrine. That "Author made bold to ſay, That St. Auguſtin wri-"ting againſt the Pelagians with too much heat, did "too haſtily deſpiſe the unanimous Opinion of all thoſe, "who lived before him. A Man who ſpeaks of St. "Auguſtin in this manner, and charges him with "having altered his Opinion three times, does cer-"tainly deſerve to be delivered up to Father de "Champs, that he may deal with him, as he thinks "fit. Father John Martinon, likewiſe a Jeſuit, who "wrote under the diſguiſe of Antoninus Moraines, "was aſhamed of it. That Author, ſays he, will "give me leave to obſerve that it had been better for "him, according to the reſpect that is due to ſo great "a Doctor, if he had conſtantly followed him, giving "ſometimes a favourable ſenſe to his Words, inſtead "of imputing to him ſuch an inconſtancy in his Opini-"ons.

(A) Thoſe who drank of, or went into it.] Strabo having ſaid that the Fountain Salmacis was in Halicarnaſſus, adds that it had an ill Name, as having the Power of making thoſe, who drank of it, Voluptuous and effeminate. (l) Διαβεβλημένη οὐκ οἶδ᾽ ὁπόθεν, ὡς μαλακίζουσα τοὺς πίνοντας ἀπ᾽ αὐτῆς: neſcio qua de cauſa infamis quod ex eo bibentes mollitiem contraherent. But according to Ovid none could (g) See the Article, and particularly the paſſages quoted out of Brantome.

(h) Beza, ad Claud. de Xaintes, Apolog. I. init. Oper. tom. 2. pag. 288.

(i) Johan. Agricola in epiſt. ad Jacobum Reihingum, apud Henning. Witte, Memoriæ Theologor. in Orat. funebri Reihingi, pag. 912, 913.

(k) Lettres du Prince de Conti, ou l'accord du libre arbitre avec la grace de J. Chriſt. pag. 190, 191.

(l) Strabo, lib. 14. pag. 451.

he was bathing himſelf, and cloſely embraced him; and that her Careſſes and (B) entreaties not being able to move his Heart, ſhe begg'd of the Gods that ſhe might remain for ever in the Poſture ſhe was in. Her Requeſt was granted: Her Body and that of Hermaphroditus made but one Perſon with both Sexes. Hermaphroditus perceiving that Change, obtain'd from Venus and Mercury by his entreaties that the Water of that Fountain ſhould have the Virtue of making People effeminate. Strabo and Vitruvius deny that it had that Virtue, and alledge ſome other * Reaſons for the ill Report that was made of it. 'Tis a miſtake to ſay that this Son of could experience ſuch a change without going into it.

Venus

Unde (a) ſit infamis, quare male fortibus undis
Salmacis enervet, tactoſque remolliat artus, Diſcite.

. . . .

Quiſquis (b) in hos fontes vir venerit, exeat inde
Semivir, & tactis ſubito molleſcat in undis.

Strabo makes a judicious reflection upon this. Voluptuous Men, ſays he, in order to clear themſelves aſcribe to the Elements what proceeds only from the ill uſe they make of their Wealth. Good Cheer makes 'em lewd, and they find Fault with the Air and Water; which is a great illuſion. (c) Ἔοικε δ' ἡ τρυφὴ τῶν ἀνθρώπων αἰτιᾶσθαι τὰς ἀέρας ἢ τὰ ὕδατα. τρυφῆς δ' αἴτια οὐ ταῦτα, ἀλλὰ πλοῦτος, καὶ ἡ περὶ τὰς διαίτας ἀκολασία. Enimvero luxuria hominum videtur in aeris & aquæ temperiem culpam referre; atqui non hæc cauſam luxuriæ præbent, ſed divitiæ & victus intemperans ratio. According to Vitruvius the Fountain Salmacis was reported to have that ill quality, not becauſe thoſe, who drank of it, became Lewd and Voluptuous, but becauſe it afforded the Barbarians an opportunity of growing Civil and Tractable, and leaving off their Fierceneſs: For being expell'd by the Colony, which the Argivi ſettled in Halicarnaſſus, they (d) were obliged to return to that Fountain for want of Water, and ſo they converſed with the Grecians, and grew polite.

(B) Her intreaties not being able to move his Heart.] Hermaphroditus began to Travel in the World at 15 Years of Age. He was a very handſome Boy; the Nymph Salmacis did no ſooner perceive him on the Banks of her Fountain but ſhe fell in Love with him. Tho' her Amourous paſſion (e) made her very impatient, ſhe trick'd up her ſelf and Painted her Face before ſhe went to him. Her Compliment contain'd few needleſs things: If you are not a God, ſaid ſhe to him, you look like one: Happy is your Father, happy are your Mother, your Siſter and your Nurſe, but happier ſtill ſhe, who is, or ſhall have the Honour to be your Wife. If you are a Married Man, be unfaithful to your Wife for my ſake; and if you are not Married, I deſire to become your Wife immediately.

Sed (f) longe cunctis longeque beatior illa eſt,
Si qua tibi ſponſa eſt, ſi quam dignabere tæda.
Nunc tibi ſive aliqua eſt, mea ſit furtiva voluptas:
Seu nulla eſt, ego ſim, thalamumque ineamus eundem.

Theſe Words made the Young Man bluſh; but his Modeſty and his ſilence did not put a ſtop to her violent Paſſion: She ask'd him many Kiſſes, at leaſt ſuch as are given to a Siſter: And at leaſt ſhe was ready to take him by the neck, when he plainly told her that he would run away, if ſhe would not be quiet (g). She withdrew and hid her ſelf in a Thicket, and perceiving Hermaphroditus in the Water, ſhe was ſo inflamed with Love that ſhe threw her ſelf into it ſtark naked. She took hold of him, kiſs'd him, and hugg'd him ſo cloſely that he was not able to extricate himſelf: But ſhe could not prevail upon him; he perſiſted in his indifferency.

Veſte (h) procul jacta, mediis immittitur undis,
Pugnantemque tenet, luctantiaque oſcula carpit;
Subjectatque manus, invitaque pectora tangit
Et nunc hac juveni, nunc circumfunditur illac.
Denique nitentem contra, elabique volentem
Implicat ut ſerpens, quam regia ſuſtinet ales.

. . . .

Perſtat Atlantiades, ſperataque gaudia Nymphæ
Denegat: illa premit, demiſſaque corpore toto
Sicut inhærebat, Pugnes licet, improbe, dixit,
Non tamen effugies. Ita dii jubeatis, & iſtum
Nulla dies à me, nec me deducat ab iſto!
Vota ſuos habuere deos.

It was then that the Nymph begg'd of the Gods that ſhe might never be parted from the beloved object ſhe held between her Arms. What ſhe ask'd was granted her; and this was the Origin of Hermaphrodites.

Every Body knows the Moral reflections grounded upon that Fable; but every Body does not know the myſtery that ſome have found in it. They pretend that the Ancients meant by it, that the fair Sex ought not to begin the Attack, but leave it to Men, and ſtand upon the defenſive. If the parts were changed, ſay they, there would be a great decay in the Empire of Love. 'Tis true that Women would make Vigorous and Furious Attacks; but Men would make a better defenſe ſtill. See M. de Fontenelle in his Dialogue between Sappho and Laura; the reſult of which is as follows. (i) "Men would defend themſelves too well. When 'tis required that a Sex ſhould make a reſiſtance, 'tis required it ſhould be ſuch as to make the Conqueror reliſh the Victory. A Sex ought not to be ſo weak as to ſurrender immediately, nor ſo ſtrong as never to ſurrender. This is our Character, and perhaps it would not be that of Men. Believe me, after many Reaſonings about Love or any other matter whatſoever, it will be found at laſt that things are well as they are, and that a Reformation would ſpoil all." It were a difficult thing to foreſee what would happen, if the Sex that reſiſts ſhould become the Aggreſſor, and if the Sex which Attacks ſhould ſtand upon the defenſive. The conjectures, that may be made upon ſome few haſty advances of the fair Sex, which have proved unſucceſsful, cannot be depended upon. 'Tis likely that ſuch advances have oftner ſucceeded. What is certain is that Men upon a Thouſand occaſions where in they ſtand upon the defenſive, betray a great weakneſs, make but little reſiſtance, and are baſely overcome. Tho' they are convinced that they have been deceived and betrayed, tho' they are reſolved to Revenge themſelves, tho they threaten, and ſwear they will never ſee that unfaithful Woman; yet ſome Flattering Words, ſome Sighs, and one or two Tears will quickly pacify them (k). Being ſenſible that what is required of them is unjuſt and ſhameful, they are reſolved not to grant it; but can they refuſe it, if it be begg'd of them with great importunity, and if they mind the craftineſs and fawning of a Cocquet? 'Tis a great miſtake to depend upon their reſiſtance: If Nature had put 'em upon the defenſive, they would be quickly overcome. 'Tis better that the reſiſting part ſhould be allotted to Women. Let us remember Moliere's weakneſs (l).

As for thoſe, who in order to prove that reſiſtance has not been rightly allotted to Women, maintain that they defend themſelves only by an ill Principle: they ought to be rejected as moroſe and unjuſt Cenſurers: And tho' they ſhould repeat a Hundred times over and over that Women make a reſiſtance only to kindle a greater fire, and excite a more violent deſire, without pretending to a final perſeverance; tho' they ſhould ſay as many times that the Reaſon why they diſpute the ground, is becauſe they are afraid of giving a quick diſguſt, and that therefore their long delay is not very meritorious, they ſhould not deſerve to be heard. Neither they, nor their Verſes (†) ought to be minded. Grant 'em only that nice Men are willing to meet with ſome difficulties, and not well pleaſed when they meet with none, being not like the Man upon whom the following Epigram was made.

Hoc (m) te nomine prædicas beatum,
Gilli, quòd facili fruare amica
Et benigna adeò, ut rogata nondum,
Mox ſupina cadat, pedeſque tollat.
Sed erras nimiùm, miſelle Gilli:
Nam quæ nil penitus negare neſcit,
Opus, non homines, amat puella:
Et quæcunque nimis cadit libenter,
Surgit iſta nimis quoque libenter.

(a) Ovid. Metam. lib. [illegible] [illegible] (c) Strabo [illegible] (d) Deſcendebant aquatum ad [illegible] ſibi fontem, atque ibi in [illegible] tabernis [illegible] Græcorum conſuetudinem & ſuavitatem ſua voluntate reducebantur. Hinc aqua illa, non impudico morbi vitio, ſed humanitatis dulcedine mollitis animis barbarorum eam famam eſt adepta. Vitruvius lib 2. c. 8.

(e) Nec tamen ante adiit, etſi properabat adire, Quam ſe compoſuit, quam circumſpexit amictus, Et finxit vultum, & meruit formoſa videri. Ovid. Met. lib. 4. v. 317.

(f) Id. ib. v. 325.

(g) Poſcenti Nymphæ ſine fine ſororia ſaltem Oſcula, jamque manus ad eburnea colla ferenti, Deſinis? aut fugio, tecumque ait, iſta relinquo. Ovid. ib. v. 334.

(h) Id. ib. v. 357.

Venus and Mercury (C) was Born with both Sexes, and that according to Peter Gregory 'twas Mercury who shewed so much indifference for the Nymph Salmacis.

SAMBLANCAI (JAMES DE BEAUNE, BARON DE) Superintendant of the Finances in the Reign of Francis I. was Condemn'd to be hanged for imbezling the King's Treasure. That Sentence was executed ‡ the 12 of August 1527, but he was declared Innocent some * time after his Death. He was a Native of || Touraine. I shall set down somewhat at large (A) the circumstances of his Trial, as they are to be found in a Book of Varillas.

SAMBLANCAI (WILLIAM DE BEAUNE, BARON DE) the Son of the foregoing, was the Father of four Sons and one Daughter, who made a great Figure in the Court of France. I. James de BEAUNE, Baron de SAMBLANCAI, Viscount of Tours, &c. was the Eldest. He was Knight of the Order of St. Michael, and Gentleman of the King's Bed Chamber in Ordinary; and left behind him but one Daughter, who was very much talk'd of by Reason of her Beauty and Galantry under the Name of Madam de † Sauve. The III. Son of William de Beaune was known by the Name of la Tour d' Argi, and was the Father of Mary de BEAUNE, the ‡ Bouchet, Annales d'Aquitain fol. [illegible] where [illegible] for [illegible] [illegible]

* Varillas Hist. de François I. B. 7. p. m. 260.

|| Bouchet ibid. verso

I repeat the Words of M. de Fontenelle, Things are well as they are. If the Question was about Bodily strength, they should want to be reformed; the resisting part had not been rightly allotted: But since the question is about Attacks upon the Heart, it ought to be the Lot of the Sex, which exceeds the other in Beauty, good Air, and Address.

(C) It was Born with both Sexes and that ——— 'twas Mercury, who shewed so much indifference.] A Modern Author says that Venus being got with Child by Mercury, was delivered of a Child, which had both Sexes. (a) Venerem a Mercurio compressam autumant (poetæ) talem prolem genuisse, quæ sexum utrumque participaret, sicuti apud Ovidium lib. 4. Metamorph. videre est, dum scribit.

Mercurio puerum & diva Cithereide natum
Naiades Ideis enutrivere sub antris,
Cujus erat species, in qua materque paterque
Cognosci possent, nomenque traxit ab istis.

Item;

Nec duo sunt, sed forma duplex, nec fœmina dici,
Nec puer ut possit, neutrumque & utrumque videtur.

Tamen eundem ex Mercurio & Salmacide, una Nympharum Naiadum genitum dicit Petrus Gregorius in Syntagm. Jur. univ. lib. 7. cap. 2. num. 8. There are two things in these Words, which want to be rectified. The two last Verses do not concern the State that the Son of Venus was in, before Salmacis embraced him; for he had then only the Masculine Sex: They concern the State he found himself in, when the Prayers of Salmacis were heard. There is a vast Number of such Proofs in Authors. Here are the Words of Gregorius Tolosanus. Non secus quam & illi nugantur qui cum fabula Ovidii lib. (b) Metamorph. fab. 10. (c) narrant Androgynem factum ex Salmacide una Nympharum Naiadum, & filio Mercurii. That Civilian had been saying that according to Plato all Men were at first Androgynes, but being divided into two nothing remain'd of 'em but the Name, which became a shameful one. Plato does not say (d) that all Men were Androgynes, but he observes that this Name was (e) opprobrious. He is in the right to say so, for besides that 'tis question'd whether Hermaphrodites are not Monsters, that Name is bestowed upon the most infamous Debauchees. Licet etiam Hermaphroditus is dicatur, qui turpiter & facit & patitur adversus & aversus impudicus, uti docet Suidas in voce ἑρμαφρόδιτος (f). There is a Book Intitled, l'Isle des Hermaphrodites nouvellement descouverte, avec les mœurs, loix, coustumes & ordonnances des habitans d'icelle. 'Tis an ingenious Satyr upon the Court of Henry III.

(A) The Circumstances of his Trial.] The King being informed that Lautrec had not received the Money design'd for him, sent for Samblancai; (g) “and instead of calling him his Father, as he used to do, look'd upon him with an ill Eye, and ask'd him why he had not remitted to Lautrec the three Hundred Thousand Crowns, which had been promised so positively. Samblancai not being yet sensible of the danger he was in, answered with his usual ingenuity, that upon the same day that Assignments for the Milanese had been drawn up, his Majesty's Mother came to the Treasure, and demanded the whole Payment of what was due to her, as well in Pensions and Gratifications, as for the Dutchies of Valois, Touraine and Anjou, that were given her: That he represented to her that if he should give her such a great Sum all at once, the King's Treasure would be drained, and the Fund design'd for the Dutchy of Milan diverted contrary to what had been ordered by the King that Morning in her presence, and which she had agreed to: But that this Princess persisted in her demand, and threatned to undo him, if he refused to give her whatever she ask'd: And upon his Representing to her that his Life would be in danger, if Lautrec found no Money at his Arrival at Milan, she replied that her Interest with the King was sufficient to prevent his being prosecuted, and that if he should be call'd to an Account for misapplying the Money design'd for Italy, 'twas but saying he (1) had done it by her order. The King, to be better informed of the matter, sent for his Mother, and Samblancai repeated the whole Story in her presence; upon which she fell into such a passion, that notwithstanding the respect she owed to her Son, she gave the Lye to Samblancai, and desired to be revenged of that Rash Man, who pretended that she was Guilty of High-Treason. But because it would have appeared by the Dates of the Receipts she had left in the King's Treasure, that she had received the Money design'd for Lautrec, she confess'd that she had demanded the Payment of her Pensions; but she maintain'd that Samblancai had paid her the Money, without telling her that it was to be sent into Italy. She denied what Samblancai had further said, and so earnestly desired he should be Imprison'd, protesting however that it was only the better to clear her self of the Crime laid to her Charge, that the King was obliged to get him Arrested in the Anti-Chamber. —— (h) Samblancai was no sooner a Prisoner but (i) Commissioners were appointed for his Trial ——— The imbezling of the King's Treasure was the only Crime he was Tried for; and he was Condemn'd to Death, whether because the Judges were afraid of exasperating the King's Mother if they should Vote for a lesser Punishment, or because they were prepossest with an Opinion that a Man cannot have for a long time the management of the King's Money with clean hands. The Execution was publick ——— All Authors don't agree about the Circumstances I have mention'd, and some will have it that Samblancai was undone by another Court Intrigue. They say (2) that the Queen's Mother gave him some Receipts written and sign'd with her own hand for the Money she demanded of him; but that the chief (3) Deputy of that Treasurer fell passionately in Love with a Lady belonging to the Queen's Mother, who persuaded him to steal the Receipts of that Princess, which was done; that the Queen's Mother being thereby enabled to undo Samblancai, denied that she had received any Money of him, and Samblancai not finding the Receipts to convict her, was Apprehended and Condemn'd; that he was publickly Executed; and that the Truth did not come out till the Queen's Mother being a dying revealed it to the King, and beg'd his Pardon for it. Lastly some Manuscripts import that in order to ruin Samblancai a vast Sum was demanded of him for the Pressing Necessities of the State; that he excused himself not only because the King's Treasure was empty, but

also

(1) In the Trial of James de Beaulnes Seigneur de Samblançay, the King's Treasurer.

(h) Varillas ibid. pag. 215.

(i) Viz. Chancellor du Prat, who was beholden for his Fortune to the King's Mother, President Gentil, and some other Counsellors who were the Chancellor's Friends. Varillas ibid. pag. 216. Belcarius seems to me more credible, who does not say that Chancellor du Prat, bipedum omnium nequissimus, was one of the Commissioners but that he chose them. Belcarius, l. 17. n. 12.

(2) Towards the latter end of the old Chronicle of Angers.

(3) Viz. Gentil. who was made afterwards President.

the Wife of Anne de Montmorency Marquis de Turi. The IV. was † Chancellor to Catherine de Medicis, Bishop of Puy, and Abbot ‖ of Royaumont. He died in 1565. I have skipp'd the II. because I have so many things to say of him that I design to bestow a Paragraph upon him. The Daughter was Married first (y) to Louis Burgensis, first Physician to the King, and Sieur de Montgauguier; and then she was the fourth Wife of Claudius Gouffier, Marquis de Boisi, Duke of Rouanez, Master of the Horse to the King. She died without issue. Brantome * says that before she was call'd Madam de Rouanez, she went by the Name of Madam de Chateaubriant. He adds that she was a great Favourite of Queen Catherine de Medicis her Mistress. He is in the right to say so; Thuanus (A) says the same.

RENAUD DE BEAUNE the II. Son of William, was Arch-Bishop of Bourges and then of Sens in the Reign of Henry IV. and one of the most Eloquent and Learned Prelates of that time. What made him most remarkable was that he did not depart, as so many other Ecclesiasticks did, from the Laws of the Kingdom concerning the Succession to the Crown. He maintain'd to the last that tho' the King of Navarre was a Heretick, the Crown of France did lawfully belong to him after the Decease of Henry III. In order to maintain this Assertion he set forth in the Conferences of Surene ‡ the most specious Reasons that the Law and the Scripture can afford: But his Wit, Eloquence, and Learning did not persuade the Deputies of the League; for besides their being resolved not to yield, whether they could answer the Reasons of the Royalists or not, they were headed by Peter d'Epinac Arch-Bishop of Lyons, who was not inferior to Renaud de Beaune in Wit, Eloquence and Learning, and who alledged as well (B) as he Divine and Humane Laws; so that after

"also because the King owed him above three Hundred Thousand Livres, which afforded a pretence to make him give an Account of his Administration; that he gave it, and because his Papers were in good order, he made it appear that his Majesty owed him the Sum mention'd by him; that the thing had gone no farther, if he had been as great a Politician as he was a great Financier; but that he unseasonably prosecuted those who had unjustly accused him, being not contented with his Glorious Defense, and pretending to receive immediately the Money the King owed him, tho' no Body knew better than he that his Majesty was not able to pay him; that Samblancai was the worse for it, because the Ministers not knowing how to get rid of his importunity, bribed a Man of Tours called Prevot, his Deputy, who stole from him the private Receipts; that when they had in their hands what prevented his being convicted of imbezling the King's Money, he was Arrested, and Commissioners out of the Parliaments of Paris and Bourdeaux were appointed to try him; that he desired to be tried by his Ordinary, who was the Arch-Bishop of Tours, by Virtue of his Letters of Tonsure which he shewed, but that the Arch-Bishop, who was his Son, happen'd to die at that time; that Samblancai was (4) Condemn'd to be hanged, and Executed on the 14 of August 1523. being 62 Years of Age; that he was carried to the Gallows at Monfaucon at one of the Clock in the Afternoon, and that he got his Execution put off till seven a Clock in the Evening, in hopes that the King would send him his Pardon upon the Ladder, as he had sent it to Saint Vallier upon the Scaffold; but that the Person, who attended on him, having at last told him that there was (5) no Pardon to be hoped for, he put himself into the Hands of the Executioner, saying that he knew too late that it was better to serve the King of Heaven than the Kings of the Earth, and that if he had done for God what he had done for the King, he had been better rewarded. Nevertheless it appears by the Epigrams of the Famous Poet Clement Marot, which contain several particulars of the Life of Francis I. not to be found any where else, that Samblancai died courageously, and that the Timorousness of the Person, who attended on him to the place of Execution, gave a greater lustre to his Courage."

The first Account of this Author is a Paraphrase upon Belcarius, who (a) observes that Lautrec fell under the King's Mother's indignation, because he spoke too freely of her Amorous Intrigues. Take Notice of Genlis, who according to Varillas had been one of Samblancai's Judges, was hanged (b) some Years (c) after.

(A) Thuanus says the same.] He says (d) that Margaret de (e) Beaune, the Wife of Claudius Gouffier, Marquis de Boisi, Sister to Renaud de Beaune Arch-Bishop of Bourges, procured very noble Employments to her Brother, because she had a great interest at Court; so far that Rouanez was erected into a Dutchy in consideration of her Marriage with the Marquis de Boisi. (f) Commendatione sororis Margaritæ gratiosæ in aula fœminæ, quæ sub id Claudio Gouferio Bossii marchioni & Rodamnæ ob id creato duci magno Franciæ scutifero nupsit, maximis jam tum negotiis adhibitus, etiam Francisci Alenconii Ducis Cancellarius fuit. This is one of the things Daughters are good for in a Family: They are sometimes the only cause of the Fortune of their Brothers and Relations. Perhaps Renaud de Beaune, notwithstanding all his fine qualities, would have remain'd all his Life time in a mean Condition, had not his Sister's interest put him in the way of raising himself, and discovering his Merit. That Historian adds, that the Family of Beaune and that of Thou had Contracted a very strict Friendship long before; and that after the sad Death of James de Beaune Superintendant of the Finances, his Children forsaken by every body at Court and in the City, as it happens on like occasions, found a Sanctuary among the de Thou's; that Renaud de Beaune lodged for some time in the House of Augustin de Thou Grand Father to the Historian, and that from that very time there was a talk of Marrying Christopher de Thou, Augustin's Son, to Margaret de Beaune, Renaud's Sister; that tho' this Project had no effect, that Lady had always been a Friend to Christopher de Thou, and used her Interest for him, when she was in Favour, more than for any Body else, except her Brothers: that she intrusted him with her last Will, as being her particular Friend, many Years before she died. Besides she made him Executor of her Will (g).

(B) Who alledged, as well as he, Divine and Humane Laws.] Thuanus has inserted in the 106th Book of his History the substance of what was alledged on both sides. Cayet (h) relates it more at large, and says (i) among other things that the Arch-Bishop of Bourges, who could not deny that each party alledged several examples, and made use of the Authority of the Scripture to prove their Opinions, confined himself to this Maxim, that one might have the right understanding of the Scripture, "by invoking the Holy Spirit of God, who gives it to those, who ask for it, and imprints the knowledge of Truth in their minds, intellectum bonum das petentibus eum." He added "that the Voice of Christ and his Apostles was evident, and that Christians were continually told that they ought to fear God, Honour the King, and render to God what is due to him, and to Cæsar what belongs to him; that every Soul was to obey the Powers ordained by God—— But that he would no longer confute the passages, and Examples, that had been alledged, notwithstanding which one ought to do what is expresly Commanded in the Word of God." This seems to be his meaning: When the Scripture is made use of to maintain Contrary Opinions, the best way to Extricate one

(y) In Brodeau's Pratique criminelle.

(z) In the Annales d'Aquitaine.

(a) Eam (matrem) ad invisum Lautrecum infestam, quod de ejus impudicitia liberius loquentem saepe, reperit. Belcarius Comment. rerum Gallicar. lib. 17. n. 12. p. 504.

(b) See his Epitaph in Beza's Juvenilia fol. m. 30 verso.

(c) Bouchet, Annales d'Aquitaine fol. 281. says it was about the Year 1538. and that he was President in the Court of Inquests in the Parlament of Paris, and a Native of Italy, and that he was guilty of stealing the Receipts of Treasurer Foucher, who had been hanged at Paris for want of 'em.

(d) Thuan de vita sua lib. 3. p.m. 1194.

(e) Mr. le Laboureur, addit. to Castelnau, tom. 1. pag. 322. & Father Anselme Hist. des grands Officiers de la Couronne, p. 469. call him Claudius.

aſter many fine Diſcourſes they were obliged to think of (C) another Expedient, viz. That the King of Navarre ſhould change his Religion. This was the only thing which cut the Gordian Knot. The Pleadings of Renaud de Beaune do (D) at this day more Honour to the Clergy of France, than they did then good to Henry IV. Thuanus ſays a remarkable thing of this Prelate, which is, that he was (E) a prodigious Eater. I add * that he was at firſt Counſellor in the Parliament of Paris, afterwards Preſident of the Inqueſts, and then Maſter of the Requeſts; after that Biſhop of Mande, and Chancellor to the Duke of Alençon, Son of Henry II. He had an admirable Memory; for Forty Years after he had Learned Humane Learning under James Tuſanus and James Strazel, he remembred the fine Paſſages which they had taught him in good Greek and Latin Authors, and apply'd them with a good Grace, and very judiciouſly, tho' the great Affairs that paſſed thro' his Hands might have blotted out of his Memory thoſe old Ideas which he had no leiſure to refreſh †.

The

one ſelf is humbly to implore the Aſſiſtance of the Holy Spirit. And then we may be able to diſcover the Truth, knowing that the expreſs Orders of God ought to be our Rule, and not ſome particular Examples, which ſeem to be an Exception to thoſe Orders. This Maxim ſeems to be reaſonable, but I don't ſee how it can compoſe Differences; for each Party will boaſt that they have implored the Aſſiſtance of the Holy Spirit, and will maintain, if the Intereſt of their Cauſe requires it, that Commands ought to be explain'd by Examples, that is, that their Caſe requires that the example of the Maccabees, &c. ſhould be imitated, inſtead of conforming to St. Paul's Precept, Let every Soul be ſubject to the Higher Powers. And therefore it ought to be granted, that whilſt Sovereigns have no better ſupport than the Doctrines of Divines, they reſt upon Weather-Cocks, that turn with every Wind, and uſe the Word of God as a Wax Noſe, to the great Scandal of Good and Pious Souls, and the great ſatisfaction of Prophane Men.

(C) They were forced to take another Courſe.] Maimbourg does agreeably and neatly relate what he took out of Victor Cajet. "The two Heads of "the Deputation on both ſides, ſays he (a), two "of the moſt Dexterous and Eloquent Men of their "Age, were Men of too great Abilities, and main-"tain'd their Opinions with too much Wit and "Strength, to come to an agreement in their Diſ-"pute. The Arch-Biſhop of Bourges in the three "Speeches he made to prove his Aſſertion, and "to confirm it by confuting the Anſwer made to it, "alledged the ſtrongeſt Arguments to perſuade "the Leaguers of theſe three things, which he "conſtantly maintain'd to the laſt as ſo many un-"deniable Truths. 1. That Men are obliged to "acknowledge for their King the Perſon, to whom "the Kingdom belongs, by the inviolable Right "of a lawful Succeſſion, without any regard to the "Religion he Profeſſes, or to his Morals." 2. That King Henry IV. was neither a Heathen nor an Arian, nor a Perſecutor of the Catholick Church, and was reſolved to renounce his Errors, aſſoon as he ſhould be inſtructed in the Truth. 3. That all the French ought to acknowledge him, and then unanimouſly endeavour to inſtruct him. The Arch-Biſhop of Lyons (b) anſwered, thoſe three Points, and declared that as long as the King of Navarre remained an Heretick they would have no Commerce with him. The Arch-Biſhop of Bourges replyed with great force; but ſeeing the Leaguers were not to be ſhaken, he told them the King was reſolved to be Converted (c). Here is a Sovereign King, who cannot obtain of his Subjects, that they would have the goodneſs to permit him to ſerve God according to the Light of his Conſcience. It's a ſhame to Chriſtianity to have introduced into the World ſo great a Diſorder. It is the part of Subjects to beg liberty of Conſcience of their Sovereign; but here are Subjects who refuſe it to him.

(D) More Honour to the Clergy of France.] The League has furniſhed the Proteſtants with abundance of Killing Arguments againſt the Seditious Maxims of the Court of Rome, adopted by an infinity of Lay-Men and Eccleſiaſticks. Theſe Objections would have been ſtronger, if all the Clergy of France had followed the Rebellion; but ſince one of the Principal Prelates ſpeaking for a conſiderable part of the Catholicks, maintain'd ſo ſolemnly the Doctrine of Obedience, they fancy there's nothing to be feared for the Future, and that the Acts of the Conference of Surene can afford both defenſive and offenſive Arms.

(E) That he was a prodigious Eater.] Scarce had he ſlept four Hours (d), but Hunger forced him to riſe and eat his Break-Faſt, which he did regularly at One a Clock in the Morning, or rather ſooner; he repoſed till Four a Clock, and then he went to Eat: He did the ſame at Eight: He Dined at the uſual Hours: He Eat four Hours after: He Eat a large Supper at the ordinary time, and took a Collation before he went to Bed. He did not Eat after the French Faſhion; for in Winter he was at leaſt an Hour at Table, and an Hour and a quarter in Summer. For this reaſon he cared not to Dine abroad, and when a great Prince who had often Invited him, and found him always Armed with Excuſes, asked him the reaſon of his refuſal, he gave him this Anſwer, you do not Eat like a Man, but like a Dog; that is, you make too much haſte. That Prince promiſed him to remedy this Inconvenience, and was as good as his word, for he ordered his Steward that when this Prelate ſhould be there, he ſhould put a pretty diſtance of time between each Courſe. (e) Cibum autem ita per otium ſumebat, ut ſumendo horam integram impenderet hieme, æſtate; in qua tardior orexis, horæ etiam quadrantem adderet, & ambulantibus, quales in aula noſtra, cœnis ſummopere offendebatur; adeo ut cum ſæpius a principe primario ad prandium invitaretur, & toties ſe excuſaret, rogatus qui id faceret, facete reſponderit, illum non humano ſed canino more prandium uſurpare, feſtinatas nimis epulas intelligens. Quo intellecto ille eum ſe non ſolum laute quod ſemper faciebat, ſed prolixe accepturum promiſit, & eo invitato ſemper ſtructorem monebat, ut miſſibus apponendis legitimum tempus interponeret. Another thing in him was very ſingular, that this prodigious quantity of Meat did not make him heavy nor (f) drowzy, nor full of Vapours. He was always well diſpoſed for the Exerciſes of the Mind; as for thoſe of the Body he peformed none, he was even afraid of Walking for fear of exciting his Appetite. (g) In tanta ciborum, quibus alebatur copia, cum nec membrorum agitatione, nec deambulationibus, ne exuperantem appetitum proritaret, corpus exerceret, naturam ſucco nimio turgentem medicamentis purgantibus crebro adjuvabat, quæ medicæ rei non ignarus domi per homines peritos ſibi parabat. Itaque raro ægrotabat, & quamvis in ſumma corporis pigritia mens ſemper laboraret, nunquam fatigabatur. What Thuanus ſays of this method of Eating at the Court of France in haſte, and as it were walking, which did not pleaſe our René de Beaune, puts me in mind of a Story I have heard more than once. It's well known that Marſhal de Turenne Commanded Armies where were many Forreign Officers. They praiſed the Good Chear of his Table, but could not endure that the Meals ſhould be ſo ſhort, and eſpecially when they obſerved that the French Officers were ſcarce riſen from Table, but they began to aſk one another what ſhall we do? Alaſs! Said the Strangers, we were ſo well at Table; you ſeem'd ſo impatient that one would have thought you had ſome great Buſineſs to diſpatch, and now you know not what to do. Why didn't you keep where you where, ſince you don't know how to ſpend the time?

(F) The

---

* Thuan. de vita propria, lib. 1. pag. m. 1194.

† Id. ib.

(a) Maimbourg, Hiſt. de la Ligue, Book 4. p. m. 4..

(b) Ibid. pag. 4..

(c) Ibid. pag. 472.

(d) Thuan. de vita propria, lib. 1. circa init. pag. 1194.

(e) Id. ib.

(f) Nunquam commotior aut ſomnolentior viſus, nulla gravedine aut dolore capitis tenebatur, ſemper æque ſui compos & ad omnia paratus, extra negotia quietem & confabulationes ſectabatur. Id. ibid.

(g) Id. ib.

The Fables he uttered out of the Pulpit, I mean in the Funeral Oration of Catherine de Medicis, (F) are so Ridiculous that they would scarce be pardonable in those writers of Romances, who have Published the History of the Fair Magdelone, of Peter de Provence, of the Four Sons of Aimon, and of Palmerin d'Olive, &c. Henry IV. acknowledged several ways his Fidelity and Services, but above all by the Constancy with which he apply'd himself (G) to surmount the long Difficulties he met with at the Court of Rome, about his Translation from the Arch-Bishoprick of Bourges to the Arch-Bishoprick of Sens.

SAMPSON, a Judge of God's People. I shall not relate his History, it's known to every Body; you may read it in Moreri, and more at large in the Dictionary (‖) of the Bible. I'll only observe one thing, which seems to me very singular. Some would have it, that by the words of the Scripture which tell us that the Philistins made him grind, is to be understood that they made him Lye (A) with their Wives that they might have a Race from so brave a Man. The Allegory which La Mothe le Vayer found in the Actions of this Hero is more Ingenious than True. He says they † represented the Sceptick Philosopher.

SANCHEZ

‖ Compos'd by Mr. Simon, Doctor of Divinity, and Printed at Lyons, 1693.

† See his Traité Sceptique sur n'avoir pas le sens commun, in the 9th Vol. of his Works pag. 284. & seq.

(F) The Fables he uttered.] See here a scantling of them. "(a) At the time that the great Captain Brennus led his Army thro' all Italy and Greece, there were with him two French Gentlemen, the one called Felonius, and the other Bono, who seeing the ill design that Brennus undertook after his great Conquests, to go and Seize upon the Temple of Delphos, to pollute himself and his Army with the Sacrilege of that Temple, they both retired and went into Asia, with their Ships and Men, where they penetrated so far that they came into the Country of the Medes, which is near Lydia and Persia, where having made great Conquests, and obtained many Victories, they Retreated, passing thro' Italy, hoping to come back again to France. Felonius stay'd at a place where Florence is now Situated along the River Arno: The Situation extreamly pleased him, it being like one that before had Pleased him in the Country of the Medes, and he built there a City which is now called Florence. His Companion Bono built the City of Bononia, not far from it: And from that time by reason of the Conquests and Victories that Felonius had got in the Country of the Medes, he was call'd Medicus among his People, the Sir-Name remaining in his Family; as we read of Paulus who was called Macedonicus, because he had Conquered Macedonia, and taken Prisoner King Perseus; and of Scipio who was called Africanus for Conquering Africa." Brantome from whom I have this Passage presently adds: (b) I do not know from whence M. de Beaune had this History; but it's very probable that before the King, and so great an Assembly as was there at the Queen's Funeral, he would not have alledged it without some good Author. He had observed before he mention'd this Fabulous Genealogy, that this (c) Arch-Bishop was as Learned and as Worthy a Prelate as any in Christendom, but that some said of him that he was a Man of no great Belief, and not fit to be weighed in the Scales of Saint Michael, who weighs all good Christians at the Day of Judgment, as they say. The Leaguers gave out that he was an Atheist (d).

Since I have mention'd his Funeral Oration of Catherine de Medicis, I shall observe that he also made that of the Duke of Alençon, in 1584. "(e) And because in pronouncing this Harangue, which was very indifferent, he put his Hand often to his Beard, the following Distich was made of him:

> "Quod timet & patulo promissam pectore barbam
> "Demulcet Biturix, (f) hoc Ciceronis habet."

(G) Constancy with which he applyed himself, &c.] I do not pretend to say that he withstood those Difficulties without ever yielding: I only mean that having expected a more favourable time, he renewed his Pursuits till he obtain'd his desire. You'll find the Particulars of all this in the following Account of Mr. Amelot de la Houssaie. "(g) In 1596, says he, the King had writ to the Pope in Favour of Renaud de Beaune Arch-Bishop of Bourges, to have him Translated to the Bishoprick of Sens, and to obtain it for him gratis. But (1) the Absolution which this Prelate had given the King in the Abbey Church of St. Denis, and the Proposition he had made to the Clergy in the Assembly of Mantes, of Creating a Patriarch in France, had made him so odious to the Court of Rome, that the Pope would not hear of him. Our Cardinal (only then Bishop of Rennes) in vain represented to the Pope and Cardinal Aldobrandino, that such a refusal or delay would be interpreted as done, because this Arch-Bishop had taken the King's part, which would not only give Offence to the King, but also to all the Princes, Prelates, Lords, and Gentlemen, who had followed him; and it would be thought that there remained in the Soul of his Holiness some Memory of the past offences and rancours; that the ill Reports that were made of him to his Holiness, were only grounded upon this viz. That the Prelate had found out a shorter way to serve the Catholick Religion, and the Authority of the Holy See, than those had done, who thinking to preserve them had Ruined them both, if they had been believed. All this did not move them, and the Pope excused himself of his Rigour, by saying that this Affair would never pass in the Consistory, and that the Cardinals would oppose it, and from thence take occasion to think ill of the King himself. (2) The Affair remained thus till the Promotion of M. d'Ossat, who in Obedience to the King's Orders, in the first days of his Cardinalship renewed the matter of this Prelate's Translation. (3) But the Pope answered him again with the same Tune and said, That if he Proposed the Affair to the Consistory he would receive an Affront, being certainly inform'd that there were some Cardinals who would oppose it. And the Cardinal Nephew added, that it was not fit for that Prelate that his Affair should be proposed in the Consistory: (4) By which he gave to understand that there would be some things ript up which would be to his Confusion.——The King seeing the extreme Repugnancy the Pope had to the matter, and that it was not worth the while to make more Instances, resolved at last to follow the Prudent Counsel of the Cardinal of Florence ——and he ordered (h) our new Cardinal (i) to tell the Pope, that tho' he had many Reasons to desire the Expedition of the Arch-Bishoprick of Sens in the Person of the Arch-Bishop of Bourges; nevertheless to comply with the Will of his Holiness, he would cease to Importune him any more. (5) And so the Pope was delivered from this Pursuit, which infinitely displeased him for the Reasons I have given, till the beginning of the Embassy of the Count de Bethune, who had Orders to renew it Three Years after. And Cardinal d'Ossat laboured so hard with him about it, that they obtained at last the Translation of the Arch-Bishop of Bourges to the Arch-Bishoprick of Sens, which was Expedited in the Consistory of the 29th of April, 1602 (6)."

(A) Made him Lye with their Wives.] According to this we might find a new Conformity between his History and that of Hercules. Be it as it will, it's certain that the Hebrew word which signifies to grind, is sometimes taken in an obscene Sense. What the Bible of Geneva has Translated in the Book of Job, (k) Let my Wife grind for another, signifies according to the Vulgar, may my Wife become the Concubine of another, scortum alterius sit uxor mea. But some may say, would Job say the same thing twice together? For it's clear that following

(a) Brantome, Memoires des Dames illustres pag. 32. & seq.

(b) Id. ib. pag. 34.

(c) Id. ib. pag. 32.

(d) See the Notes upon the Confession Catholique de Sanci pag. 87. & seq. edit. 1699.

(e) Journal d'Henri III. ad 26. Junii 1584 pag. m. 80.

(f) See Martial epig. 89. lib. 2.

(g) Amelot de la Houssaie, vie du Cardinal d'Ossat p. 25. 26.

(1) Letter 76. & 95.

(2) Lette 92.

(3) In hi Audien of the 13 of Marc

(4) Lett 176.

(h) Am lot ibid pag. 27.

(i) That i d'Ossat.

(5) Lett 183.

(6) Le

SANCHEZ (FRANCIS) Professor of Physick at Toulouse, Born at Braga in Portugal, was Transported in his Infancy to Bourdeaux by his Father, who was a Learned Physician. He Travelled into Italy, and stayed some time at Rome, from whence he return'd into France, and studied at Montpellier, and took his degree of Doctor of Physick at the Age of Twenty Four. The Wars about Religion having forced him to leave that City, he went to Toulouse, where he taught Philosphy Twenty Five Years, and Physick Eleven Years. He dyed Aged something more than Seventy Years. His Life is to be seen (Z) in the beginning of his Works *. He was a great Sceptick as I have said in the Remark. He is very much Praised in the Patiniana †, where we read that he was Born of Jewish Parents, and that he Died at Toulouse, being Threescore and Ten Years Old, in the Year 1632.

SANCHEZ (THOMAS) a Spanish Jesuit, Born at Corduba in 1551. entred into the Society in the Year 1567. The Austerity of his Life, his Sobriety, his Mortifications, his Application to Study, his Chastity, are Prodigies, if what Alegambe ‡ and Sotuel ‖ say of him be true. He Died at Granada, the 19th of May, 1610. and was Buried there β Magnificently γ. His Learning is not to be doubted of; he has given publick Proofs of it in the Great (A) Volume that was Printed at Genoa, 1592. and in the Four Volumes in Folio that were Printed after his Death. It were to be wished that the Work Printed at Genoa, and afterwards in many other Towns, had given as great Proofs of δ his Judgment as of his Wit and Learning; for the Temerity he had of explaining an Incredible Number of Filthy and Horrible Questions may produce great Disorders. There has been (B) bitter Complaints made of it, and all that has been said for his

‡ In Bibl. Scriptor. Societ. Jesu p. 816.

‖ In eadem Biblioth. pag. 767

β See the Remark C.

γ Idem ibid.

δ See the Passage of Petrus Aurelius at the Beginning of the Remark B.

following words, may others bow and bend over her, super illam incurventur alii, signify Prostitution. It's clear that incurvari signifies the same thing here as inclinare se (a) in Plautus. This difficulty is nothing; for all Antient Writers both Sacred and Profane afford us an infinity of Examples of such Tautologies. These words of the Lamentations of Jeremiah (b), according to the Version of Geneva, They have taken the Young People to Grind, signify, according to the Vulgar, they have Impudently abused the Youth, adolescentibus impudice usi sunt. But here is a Passage of St. Jerome, quoted by Brusius, which will afford me the Proof I want. (c) In tertio decimo commentariorum super Jesaiam cap. 47. ad locum, Tolle molam, mole farinam, ita scribit, (Hieronymus) quia sequitur denuda turpitudinem tuam, etiam mola ab Ebræis figuraliter intelligitur: quod scilicet in morem scorti victorum libidini pateat. Illudque quod in Judicum libro de Samson scribitur, ad molam cum à Philistim esse damnatum, hoc significare volunt, quod pro sobole robustissimorum virorum hoc in Allophylas mulieres facere sit compulsus. Drusius (d) observes that Molere in this obscene Sense signifies the Action of the Male; for which reason he makes a Gloss upon the words of Job. Molere in hoc sensu viro tribui solet. De lingua Latina loquor, in qua notissimum illud, (e) alienas permolere uxores. Forsan apud Jobum passive sumendum, molatur alteri, ab altero, hoc est, ut sensus sit, molat alter uxorem meam. I think they do not want Reason, who can scarce persuade themselves that the Philistins, who were his great Enemies, would have Condemned him to a Punishment so agreeable; for Sampson loved Women, and he would have been well kept to perform the Office of a Stallion. There had been nothing to fear but Constraint.

> Nulla (f) est tam facilis res, quin difficilis siet, > Quam invitus facias.

(Z) His Life is to be seen in the beginning of his Works.] The Author of this Life called Raimond Delassus had been his Scholar. The greatest part of the Writings of Sanchez are about Physick; they were Printed at Toulouse in 4. 1636. There were added to them Four Treatises of Philosophy, which were Re-printed in 12. at Rotterdam, 1649. Here are the Titles of 'em: Quod nihil scitur. De divinatione per somnum ad Aristotelem. In librum Aristotelis Physiognomicôn Commentarium. De longitudine & brevitate vitæ. The Treatise quod nihil scitur (g) represents Ingeniously and Subtilly the Vanity of what we call Science, Study, Composition of Books, &c. It was Published before the Edition of all the Work of the Author; for I find in Barthius (h) that two Dissertations were Re-printed in Germany, in the Year 1618; one of Maturinus Simonius, an Italian Doctor, de litteris pereuntibus; the other of Francis Sanchez, a Spanish Doctor, quod nihil scitur. Sanchez understood Geometry, and (i) made some Objections against Clavius, which he pretended that Jesuit had not well answered.

(A) In the great Volume Printed at Genoa.] It treats to the bottom of what concerns Marriage. It's pretended that Clement VIII. declared that no Man had examined with more Diligence, nor cleared with more Exactness the Controversies that concern this Sacrament. (k) Vehementer admiratus est subtile hominis acumen, peracre judicium, raram perspicuitatem, singularem & exquisitam in rebus indagandis solertiam, in tradendis facillimam methodum, in evolvendis citandisque Auctoribus exactissimum & plane indefessum studium; serioque pronunciavit, nullum unquam Scriptorem extitisse, qui dubias de Matrimonio controversias uberius & accuratius enodasset. Among all those Elogies, there is hardly any that does him more Honour than what relates to the exactness of his Quotations. It is a Talent, more rare than People think, and I am very glad that Nicolas Antonio is of that Opinion: (l) Celebratur (ne id taceam quod minime vulgare est) inter alias dotes Thomæ diligentia quædam singularis in allegandis fideliter scriptoribus quorum testimoniis utitur. Several persons have abridged this great Volume de matrimonio; some (m) disposing the matter according to an Alphabetical Order, others observing the Method of the Author. The other Volumes of Sanchez contain either an Explication of the Precepts of the Decalogue, or of Monastick Vows, or many Questions of Law Matters.

(B) Bitter Complaints made of it.] Here is a Passage of the Abbot of St.Cyran: (n) Si de uberrima & subtilissima spurcitiarum omnigenarum ventilatione agitur, nemo unquam eam laudem Thomæ Sanchez eripiet, quin omnium primus Sacramentum matrimonii cum tanta cogitationum sermonisque licentia, imaginatione potius quam judicio duce, versarit, quantam ante ipsum Ecclesia ab initio Christiani nominis nec viderat, nec audierat. Let us cite these words of a Minister. "It may be, says he (o), you have heard "of a great Volume composed by Thomas Sanchez, "de Matrimonio. You cannot come to any Bookseller's Shop at Antwerp or Liege, but you may see "the Title of it in great Letters. This Book is the "work of a Jesuit, who treats of all the Cases of "Conscience concerning Marriage. It contains "more Impurity than all the most Infamous Italian Books together. See how the Clergy of "France speaks of it by the Mouth of one of their "Members. That prodigious Volume (r) Contains "a most subtil Examination of all imaginable Impurities; 'tis a Common-Shoar that includes most "horrible things not fit to be spoken. It may be called justly a shameful Work, composed with an Enor-"mous

(i) Delassus in ejus vita, apud Nicol. Antonium, Biblioth. Script. Hispan. tom. 1. pag. 363.

(k) Nat. Sotuel, Biblioth. Scriptor. Societat. pag. 767.

(l) Nicol. Antonius, Biblioth. Scriptor. Hispan. tom. 2. p. 252.

(m) I have an abridgment of it in an Alphabetical order made by Emanuel Laurence Soares, a Priest of Lisbon, in the Year 1621. in 12.

(n) Petrus Aurelius in Vindiciis censuræ.

(o) Jurieu, Apologie pur les Reformateurs, ch. 2. p. 150. edit. in 4.

(r) Petrus Aurel. Vindic. Censuræ Facult.

his Juſtification is (C) weak; and yet there are ſome Caſuiſts, who continue every day to Publiſh ſuch like Impurities †. They have done it a long time, and it's a deplorable thing to ſee that Courtiers, who had their Memories ſtuffed with theſe ſort of filthy accounts, did cite as a common Place-Book * the "Summa Benedicti, who is a Franciſcan Doctor, who has writ very well of "all ſorts of Sins, and ſhews that he has ſeen and read a great deal". This Book of Benedictus is Tranſlated into French: It was Publiſhed in that Language at Lyons ‖ in 1584, and at Paris in the Year 1602, which might well have been let alone.

SAPPHO

"mous Curioſity, Horrible and Odious for its diligent "Exactneſs, penetrating into moſt monſtrous, filthy, "infamous and diabolical Matters. It's impoſſible "to apprehend how an Author could be ſo ſhameleſs, as "to Compoſe ſuch a Book, ſeeing a Man that has not "quite diveſted himſelf of all Modeſty, ſuffers terribly in reading it. The reſt of the Cenſure is "ſtronger, but I ſuffer too much in Tranſlating "it: 'Tis not an old Cenſure, it was only "made in 1632." I believe 'tis a miſtake to attribute this Cenſure to the Clergy of France; for that Aſſembly gave no orders to Petrus Aurelius to examine this Work, and to give his Judgment of it in the name of the Clergy. I confeſs that Aſſembly approved the Writings of Petrus Aurelius; but notwithſtanding, it is not to ſpeak exactly, to maintain that this Aſſembly ſaid, by one of their Members, all that is found in thoſe Writings: Mr. Rivet is contented to aſcribe this Cenſure to the Sorbonne, and even that is not exact; for under pretence that this Body of Divines give their Approbation to a Book wherein a certain Author is ill treated, it cannot be ſaid that the Sorbonne has Cenſured that Work. That's never ſaid but when the Faculty proceeds in due form againſt a Book, and qualifies the Propoſitions of it. I do not think that ever the Sorbonniſts proceeded in this manner againſt Sanchez; and if they had done it, I cannot believe that Theophilus Raynaud would have dared to deny it, as he does in the following words, (a) Volo per hanc occaſionem non ſilere, quam iniquè ac maligne ——— Thomas Sanches, laceratus ſit a quibuſdam fori (b) rabulis, quorum vitæ ſpurcitiam, & fidem heteroclitam, alii jam pridem prodiderunt. Sed & hæretici ——— magno hîc zelo concitantur, quod recens admodum petulanter fecit Ludimagiſter Bernenſis Chriſtophorus Luthardus, ad parallelum Calvini cum priſcis hæreticis Simonianis: ſpurciloquia ſua in Sanchem, MENDACITER affingens Academiæ Pariſienſi Be it as it will, let us cite the Miniſter who does not ſpeak exactly. (c) Hic omittere non debeo & lectori meo invidere, laude digniſſimam Sorbonæ Pariſienſis Cenſuram in Librum Thomæ Sanchez, prout ea habetur in vindiciis Cenſuræ a doctoribus Sorbonicis approbatis, & a Petro Aurelio editis. pag. 517. & ſeq. De illo opero Matrimoniali, inquiunt, dicere ſpeciatim poſſumus, eſſe opus non gloriandum, ſed pudendum; tàm immani curioſitate, tàm inviſà in rebus ſpurciſſimis & infandis ſagacitate horrendum, ut mirum ſit pudoris alicujus hominem, ea ſine rubore ſcripſiſſe, quæ quivis modeſtioris ingenii vix ſine rubore legat. Portenta iſta ſunt, non ſcripta; animorum inſidiæ, non mentium ſubſidia, incentiva libidinum, ſchola flagitiorum, non honeſtæ diſciplinæ, non ſcientiæ, Chriſtianæ inſtrumenta. Infœlix ſcientia, quæ omnes perdere, paucos juvare nata eſt. Quæ circà ſordes & ſterquilinia volvenda & revolvenda volutatur, ut ejus doctorem jure cum ſcarabæo conferas, vel cum iis qui latrinariam factitant.

(C) What has been ſaid for his Juſtification is Weak.] The Cenſurers of this Author may pretend two things: The firſt is, that he could not poſſibly write ſo many particular Impurities, without being Unchaſt himſelf: (d) Extant inter alia nonnullorum Jeſuitarum de his argumentis ſcripta, in quibus explicantur talia, quæ vix diabolus ipſe, ſtudium omne adhibendo, ſuggerere poſſet: ubi non ſolùm genera, ſpecies, ſed & modos omnes, objecta, ſubjecta, circumſtantias, ita minutatim examinant, ut nemo ſanus ea profecta fuiſſe judicet à mente purâ & caſtâ. Inter quos eminet Thomas Sanchez Hiſpanus Jeſuita, in prolixo tractatu de matrimonio. The ſecond is, That he could not Communicate to the Publick the Knowledge of ſo many Monſtrous Irregularities, without doing a prejudice to good Manners: It being certain that many are inclined to commit theſe Abominations when they know they are Practiced. Therefore a Man that is wiſe and zealous for the Salvation of his Neighbours, ought carefully to avoid letting them know the Impurities that are diſcovered in the Tribunal of Confeſſion; for we may be aſſured that thoſe who know nothing of the matter, will more eaſily abſtain from it, than thoſe who know the Enormity and Filthineſs thereof.

As to the firſt of theſe two Accuſations, the Friends of Sanchez anſwer, That (e) he was a Man of an admirable Virtue and perfect Chaſtity. His immaculate Virginity accompanied him to his Tomb, ſay they, and the Day he was Buried all People thronged in, either to Kiſs or to touch with their Beads his Body covered with Flowers, and ſhining with Virginal Chaſtity. (f) Ad communis parentis funus (ſic eum vocabant) advenit Illuſtriſſimus Archiepiſcopus, graviſſimuſque Senatus Regius: confluxere ſacrorum Ordinum viri Religioſi; urbis univerſa Nobilitas, & promiſcuæ plebis innumera multitudo, qui defuncti corpus floribus conſperſum, & eximiâ quadam ſpecie ac virginali nitore micans certatim conabantur vel roſariis contingere, vel oſculis ſuppliciter venerari. They refer us to ſome Authors, who have praiſed the Purity of his Life. (g) Ejus innocentiam & vitam puriſſimam exhibent Crombetius l. 2. de ſtudio perfect. cap. 12. & Joannes Bourghesius l. cui titulus eſt Societas JESU, Deiparæ ſacra cap. 20. This is to tell us that his Mind and Imagination were filled with thoſe filthy Matters, but his Heart and Body were free from that Contagion. Many People think this as hard as for the Hebrew Children to be in the Babylonian Furnace without being Burnt. But after all, it's not impoſſible but that the Horror that might be conceived for thoſe horrible abuſes of Matrimony, and the deſire of Correcting them, might preſerve the Innocence of an Author who ſhould wallow in thoſe Ordures; of an Author, I ſay, whoſe Age, Temper and Education might be powerful Preſervatives againſt the Pollutions of the Fleſh. There is ſome reaſon to think that Authors who dwell too much upon the Explication of the Priapeia, and the obſcene Paſſages of Catullus and Martial, are not very Chaſt; and it's but too certain that there have been ſome Commentators who dwelt upon thoſe Matters too long, and made a deep Scrutiny into them, only becauſe they were Unchaſt. But that is not to be taken for a general Rule; for the ſole deſire of ſhewing a great deal of Reading, and an uncommon Learning, is very capable of engaging an Humaniſt to Comment largely upon the Poets I have mentioned. The firſt reading of thoſe Poems does briskly attack Virtue, eſpecially that of Young Men: By degrees one grows harder; and there are ſome Criticks, who after having read ſeveral times Catullus and Martial, either to clear up the uſe of ſome Old Cuſtom, or to Comment on them, are no more moved with their impure Expreſſions, than if they read an Aphoriſm of Hippocrates. It happens to thoſe Criticks as it happens to Phyſicians and Chirurgeons, who being uſed to filthy Ulcers, after ſome time, find no offence from the ſtink. I Pray God it may happen ſo to Confeſſors, in whoſe Ears are poured out all the Sinks and Naſtineſs of the World. There are but too many of them doubtleſs, whoſe Virtue is overcome, when they hear the Impurities of their Penitents. But this can afford no Conſequence againſt certain Men in particular; ſo that we ſhould be very raſh, ſhould we aſſert that Sanchez was not arrived to this Inſenſibility, and that he was infected with the ſtinking Ordures he ſtirr'd with ſo much Application: And after all, he has an Excuſe, which the moſt Chaſt Commentators upon the Catalect cannot have; for he may ſay he only put his hand to this ſtinking Work with

† See the Cenſure upon a Book of Amadeus Guimenius made by the Faculty of Divinity at Paris, the 3d. of February 1665. They condemn ſeveral Propoſitions, that are only denoted by the firſt words, and cannot be modeſtly Tranſlated into French.

* Brantome, Dames galantes tom. 1. pag. m. 51. See alſo pag. 185.

‖ Du Verdier, Bibl. pag. 651.

(a) Theophil. Raynaudus, de malis & bonis libris, n. 85. p. m. 53.

(b) In his Hoplotheca pag. 262. he ſpeaks thus: Thomas Sanchez à pleriſque fori rabulis ſpurcus audivit, quod in Opere de Matrimonio, librum nonum qui eſt de debito conjugali infecerit ſpurcitiis, & multa chartis commiſerit quæ abſque fœdo ſenſu & verecundiæ contrucidatione, vix legi poſſint.

(c) Andr. Rivetus, Explicat. decalogi, Oper. tom. 1. pag. 1400. col. 2.

(d) Idem Rivetus ib.

SAPPHO.

SAPPHO was one of the moſt renowned Women of all Antiquity for her Verſes and her Amours: She was a Native of Mitylene * in the Iſle of Lesbos, and lived with a deſign to purge the World. It's by this, that Endeavours are made to anſwer the ſecond Accuſation, which is more difficult than the firſt.

I have ſaid elſewhere (*) what is alledged to juſtify Albertus Magnus in the ſame caſe. His Friends pretend that there ought to be Books, wherein Confeſſors may meet with neceſſary Inſtructions againſt the Diſorders imparted to them: and therefore that a great Doctor like him ought to write upon that Subject. The ſame anſwer is is alſo given for Sanchez. The filthy Queſtions, ſay they, which he examins exactly, are very ſerviceable to the Directors of Conſcience. Why ſhould one be Angry with a Phyſician for ſtirring filthy Excrements, in order to procure his Patients health? This Conſideration hindred the Jeſuits from curtailing Sanchez. One of them ſays, among other things, that being to judge of a very impure Matter, he could never have reſolved the inſurmountable Difficulties which offered themſelves, without the Solutions of this Author (†). Fuiſſe autem eam de Matrimonio ſcriptionem neceſſariam, audire memini ex homine & probatorum morum ſeveritate, & eruditione clariſſimo, P. Valerio Reginaldo. Is cum in quadam Provinciali Congregatione, a nonnullis meticuloſis propoſitum eſſet ut opus Patris Thomæ Sanchez de Matrimonio truncaretur ea tractatione, cujus fœtor totis pro tribunalibus a malevolis Cauſidicis contra eum ingeſtus erat; graviter conteſtatus eſt, nihil eſſe in eo opere conſcientiarum duntaxat arbitris conſcripto, quod offenſionem merito moveret. Cum non modo apud Juriſperitos, (Tiraquellum præſertim in legibus Connubialibus,) teterrima abſque neceſſitate ad merum curioſitatis pabulum legantur, ſed etiam apud alios de Matrimonio Scriptores, nec non apud ſummiſtas eadem occurrant; quæ omnia Lybitinæ addicere, & impoſſibile & damnoſum foret. Apud Sanchem certe, quod maxime ſpurcum ac vel lectu fœdum videri poterat, ſibi aliquando ad dijudicandum fuiſſe propoſitum; & niſi ex eo Autore enodationem habuiſſet, ſalebras ſibi inexpedibiles fuiſſe futuras. Itaque non plus offendi quemquam debere, ea fœtidorum dubiorum tractatione ad directionem pœnitentium neceſſaria, quam ſuccenſeamus, cum Medici olida ejectamenta in ægri bonum & curationem emovent. The Abbot of St. Cyran under the Name of Petrus Aurelius had refuted beforehand this bad Reaſon. He maintained that this work may do a great deal of harm, but little good. By ſetting before the Eyes of the Publick an infinity of infamous Impurities that are committed in the Nuptial Bed, good Souls are ſcandalized, the Curioſity of others is excited, and the Laſciviouſneſs of others, &c. It's better for Directors in ſuch caſes to have recourſe to the living Voice of Doctors, than to a publick Work, where it's hard to find the caſe in queſtion with all its Circumſtances. It muſt be granted this Remark is very ſolid: The Roman Catholicks are in the wrong not to imitate the Sects of the Ancient Philoſophy, where the whole Syſtem was never put in Writing: A part being reſerved to be taught by word of Mouth to the beloved Scholars: This was only preſerved by Tradition. The Pope ſhould have forbid the Caſuiſts to Print any thing about the caſes of Luxury; he ſhould have ordered the Matter ſo, that the Inſtruction of the Confeſſors either with reſpect to the Queſtions, or to the Penances upon this Head, might be Communicated from one to the other in private, or at moſt in Manuſcript under the Seal of Secrecy. Let us cite Peter Aurelius. (a) Modeſtiore, fuerunt ſemper Eccleſiaſtici tractatores ——— Nec tanti fecerunt ancipitem iſtam & periculoſam conjugalium arcanorum, flagitiorum, piaculorumque ſcientiam. Maluerunt iſta neſciri a paucis, quorum forte intereſſet, quam ſciri a plurimis ad peſtilentiſſimæ curioſitatis illecebram, ad cupiditatum fomitem, ad publicum dedecus, dum promiſcuè, maximis voluminibus, ante ora omnium propoſita, explicantur. Nam & raro uſu venit ut talium nefandorum cognitione ſit opus; & cum uſu venit, tutius viri probi, Eccleſiaſticarum rerum peritiores conſuluntur, qui iſta ex æquo & bono, & ex Eccleſiaſtica diſciplina comparatione dijudicent, quam ex libro quopiam publice noxio aut periculoſo, ubi aliquid generatim tantum, aut obſcure, aut a præſenti negotio remote, ut fere accidit, ſcriptum ſit, quæſtionis fortaſſe diverſiſſima expoſitio privato cujuſque judicio repetatur. Atque ita hactenus obſervarat Eccleſia, donec Thomas Sanchez ſuperiorum ſcriptorum colluviem magis deſtitutamque conſpurcationem ſpectans, [illegible] mine, velut CLOACA ingenti, ſordes in ſe undique convolvit.

The other Reaſons of Theophilus Raynaud are not better. He cites (b) long paſſages out of St. Chryſoſtome, which prove that this Father of the Church has repreſented to the life the infamous Impurities of his time. He ſhews that St. Epiphanius (c) has deſcribed in the ſame manner the Impurities of the Gnoſticks, and that St. Cyril made uſe of the ſame Liberty to deſcribe thoſe of the Manichees. He maintains that Hincmarus (d) in his Book about the Divorce of Lotharius and Telberga ſpoke more Impurely then Sanchez. He ſays that the excuſes which St. Chryſoſtome, St. Cyril and Hincmarus made to their Auditors and Readers, may ſerve for an Apology for his fellow Jeſuit. He mentions what (e) Radulphus Flaviacenſis obſerved, againſt the falſe niceneſs of thoſe who blamed the obſcene Terms which Moſes made uſe of in Leviticus. But 'tis ſo eaſy to perceive a great difference between thoſe Examples and the Conduct of the Spaniſh Writer, that I ſhall not ſtand upon the Proofs of the weakneſs and emptineſs of that Parallel. Every body eaſily perceives, that the ſame things that are permitted to thoſe who know a fact, which the Enquiries of Hiſtorians, or Juridical Proceedings have manifeſted, ought not to be allowed to thoſe who only knew it by way of auricular Confeſſion. The Ancient Fathers ought to enjoy the Liberty of manifeſting the execrable Deportments of the Hereticks. Hincmarus might compoſe a Relation upon the moſt impure Conduct of a Divorced Queen; and when once Vice is atteſted either by Hiſtory or by a Verbal Proceſs, Authors have a Right to mention it if it be to the purpoſe: But as to Vices that are only revealed to the Confeſſors, another Method ought to be taken with them. I paſs by what a great many People would not have omitted; that now a days no Famous Preacher would be ſo bold as to take the Liberty St. Chryſoſtome and St. Cyril took, and that if any Writer of the Ancient Church is to be imitated on that ſcore, 'tis Salvian, of whom Theophilus Raynaud cites theſe fine Words. (f) Quæ quidem omnia tam flagitioſa ſunt, ut etiam explicare ea quiſpiam atque eloqui ſalvo pudore non valeat. Quis enim integro verecundiæ ſtatu, dicere queat illas vocum ac verborum obſcœnitates, illas motuum turpitudines, illas geſtuum fœditates? quæ quanti ſint criminis, vel hinc intelligi poteſt, quod & relationem ſui interdicunt. Nonnulla quippe etiam maxima ſcelera, incolumi honeſtate referentur, & nominari & argui poſſunt, ut homicidium, latrocinium, adulterium, ſacrilegium, ceteraque in hunc modum: ſolæ theatrorum impuritates ſunt, quæ honeſte non poſſunt vel accuſari: ita nova in coarguendâ earum turpitudinum probroſitate res evenit arguenti: ut cum abſque dubio honeſtus ſit qui accuſare ea velit, honeſtate tamen integra, ea loqui & accuſare non poſſit. Obſerve here the Opinion of Salvian touching the Impurities of the Stage one ought to have Honour and Modeſty to Condem them, but one muſt have Impudence to deſcribe them (g). This is the Model which Sanchez and many other Caſuiſts ought to have followed. I ſay many others; for he is neither the firſt nor the laſt (h) that writ in that manner. See Mr. Jurieu in the Apology for the Reformers in the Chapter I have cited. Let us conclude, that 'tis a thing very blamable and deplorable that there ſhould be ſo many Books of that Nature; but it's infinitely more deplorable that the Impurities they contain ſhould be ſo many real Crimes. The School-Men ſpin things ſo fine, that even in matters of Morality they have debated very needleſs Queſtions and things that never happen; and you ſee continually the Caſuiſts diſtinguiſh between the Practice and the Theory, and propoſe Metaphyſical and imaginary caſes. This probably was one of the Reaſons which made Mr. Rivet judge, that the Infamies that are read in Sanchez had been invented by that Author; and therefore being at Aix la Chapelle with a Jeſuit, he told him he could not ſufficiently wonder that a Man who had made a Vow of Chaſtity, lived in the time of Alcæus her Country-Man, and in the time of Steſichorus, that is to ſay, (A) in the 42 Olympiad, ſix hundred and ten Years before JESUS CHRIST. She Compoſed || a great Number of Odes, Epigrams, Elegies, † Epithalamiums, &c. All her Verſes run upon Love (B), and had ſuch Natural and moving Charms that 'tis no wonder if ſhe was called the tenth Muſe ‡. Strabo looks on her as a Wonder *, and ſays that never any Woman could come near her in Poetry. There remains (C) nothing of ſo many Poems ſhe made but ſome ſmall Fragments

---

* Strabo, lib. 13. pag. 426. Suidas in Σαπφώ.

(*) See the Article Albertus, Remark D.

(†) Theoph. Raynaud. Hoploth. ibid. pag. 362.

(a) Petrus Aurelius in Vindiciis cenſuræ, apud And. Rivetum ubi ſupra.

(b) Th. Raynaud. Hoploth. ubi ſupra pag. 365, 366.

(c) Ibid. pag. 364.

(d) Locus eſt ſtylum demittere in ſpurcitias longe fœdiores quam uſquam apud Sanchem legantur. Theophil. Raynaud. de malis & bonis libris, pag. 53. See alſo his Hoplotheca p. 363.

(e) Idem Hoplotheca pag. 364. & de malis libris pag. 56.

(f) Salvianus de providentia, lib. 6. p. m. 199. 200.

(g) The Words of Cicero Philip. 2. againſt Mark Antony may be applyed to this Subject. Tu eo liberior quod ea in te admiſiſti quæ à verecundo inimico audire non poſſes.

(h) Ita factum videmus ante Sanchem, ac poſt eum a quamplurimis ut mirum ſit hunc æſtum efferbuiſſe in unum Sanchem. Raynaud. Hoploth. pag. 364.

|| Suidas voce,
† Servius in Virgil. Dionyſ. Halicarn.
‡ Antholog. lib. 1. cap. 67. Auſonius Epig. 32.
* Θαυμαστόν τι χρῆμα, admirandum quid. Strabo lib. 13. pag. 424.

they, ſhould ſuppoſe ſuch Abominations as were not practiced, I ſee, reply'd the Jeſuit, you have never been a Confeſſor. We hear often more Impure Caſes than thoſe; ſo that 'tis neceſſary that Confeſſors ſhould be provided with directions, according to which they may be enabled to impoſe due Penances. Mr. Rivet replyed Smiling, 'tis ſtrange that you ſhould brag ſo much of the Holineſs of your Church, ſince according to your Confeſſion ſuch things are practic'd in it, of which the very Heathens knew not the Name. (a) Hæc ego cum ante aliquot annos bjicerem Jeſuitæ cuidam Aquiſgrani, adderemque me non exiſtimare reperiri exempla talium abominationum, neque valde mirari ab homine cæſtitatem profeſſo fuiſſe excogitata: Regerebat, me nunquam fuiſſe admotum audiendis confeſſionibus, atrociora multò & ſpurciora ſæpiſſimè audiri ab me contentium, ut neceſſarium opus ſit confeſſariis inſtitui ſuper iſtis, ni velint hærere talibus occurrentibus peccatis, juxta quæ eſt injungenda pænitentia. Subridens dicebam, mirum igitur eſſe quod tantopere glorientur de ſanctitate Eccleſiæ ſuæ, in quâ, & ſæpe, ut ille fatebatur, ea perpetrarentur, quæ apud Ethnicos ne nominatata quidem fuerant. We don't know the Domeſtick privacies of the Ancient Pagans, as we know thoſe of the Countries where Auricular Confeſſion is practic'd; and therefore we cannot tell whether Marriage was ſo brutally diſhonoured among the Pagans as it is among the Chriſtians: But at leaſt 'tis probable that the Infidels did not ſurpaſs in this reſpect many perſons who believe all the Doctrines of the Goſpel. Thoſe for whom the Book of Sanchez is writ are ſuch as go to Confeſſion, and ſubmit to the Penances enjoyned them by their Confeſſors. They therefore believe what the Scripture teaches us of Heaven and Hell, they believe Purgatory and the other Doctrines of the Roman Communion; and yet you ſee them plunged into Abominable impurities not fit to be Named. I obſerve this againſt thoſe who perſuade themſelves that the Corruption of Manners proceeds from Mens doubting or being Ignorant that there is another Life after this.

(a) Rivet. in Decalog. ad verſ. 13. Oper. tom. 1. pag. 1405. col. 2.

(A) In the 42 Olympiad] This fully confutes the Story of the Amours of Anacreon and Sappho; for tho' we ought not to place between them an interval or Space of 100 or 120 Years, as Mrs. le Fevre does (b), yet 'tis true, that their Ages do not well enough agree for a Commerce of Gallantry. We may well ſuppoſe that in the 52 Olypiad Anacreon was capable of Love; but ſince the Chronologers place Sappho in the 42 Olympiad, we muſt conclude that ſhe was then in her greateſt Reputation, and that ſhe might be about 30 Years Old. Now when ſhe threw her ſelf head-long, ſhe was in Love with a Young Man ſhe hoped to regain: Therefore there is no probability that ſhe lived till Anacreon was Born. And one may be well aſſured he never ſaw her nor ever was in Love with her. 'Twas only to give his fancy a full ſcope that Hermeſianax ſuppoſed ſhe was Beloved by Anacreon. (c) Ἐν τούτοις ὁ Ἑρμησιάναξ σφάλλεται συγχρονεῖν οἰόμενος Σαπφὼ καὶ Ἀνακρέοντα, τὸν μὲν κατὰ Κῦρον καὶ Πολυκράτην γενόμενον, τὴν δὲ κατ' Ἀλυάττην τὸν Κροίσου πατέρα ——— Ἡγοῦμαι παίζειν Ἑρμησιάνακτα περὶ τούτου τοῦ ἔρωτος. In hoc fallitur Hermeſianax qui Sappho coævam Anacreonti fuiſſe putat, cum ea ſub Alyatte Crœſi patre vixerit, Anacreon verò ſub Cyro & Polycrate ——— Hermeſianactem per luſum de Anacreontis amore id ſcripſiſſe arbitror. (d) Others by the ſame Poetical liberty handed about ſome Verſes wherein Anacreon play'd the Gallant to Sappho, and ſhe anſwered him. Diphilus a Comick (e) Poet introduced Archilocus and Hipponax courting Sappho in one of his Plays. This is the ſame Witty conceit. Mrs. de Scuderi has not therefore made uſe of this Anachroniſm without Examples, when ſhe ſuppoſes (f) that Anacreon courted Sappho. If Sappho had been ſuch an one as ſhe is Characteriſed in the Grand Cyrus, ſhe had been the moſt accompliſh'd Perſon of her Age. The Lady, who made her ſo great a Model of Perfection, went a long time by the Name of Sappho in the Ingenious Writings wherein ſhe was ſpoken of. This was to do a great deal of Honour to the Ancient Sappho, ſince they gave her Name to a Lady (g) who Writ Perfectly well in Verſe and in Proſe, and whoſe Virtue was admired. To conclude, there is Reaſon to think that if Anacreon and Sappho had ſeen one another in their Youth, they would have fallen in Love one with another, and that we ſhould have had a more certain Account of the intrigues of the Gallant than we have of thoſe of Alcæus (h). Nay Perhaps they would have Married together, but I don't know whether they would have long agreed; each of them Loved too much his like. I do not know where Tanaquillus Faber (i) found that Diphilus made mention of their Amours; it ſhould be in Athenæus, but he ſays nothing of it. I have already ſaid that Mrs. le Fevre puts between them the ſpace of a Hundred or ſixſcore Years; but I add that this does not agree with what ſhe lays down, that Anacreon was Contemporary with Solon, Æſop, Cyrus, Crœſus and Piſiſtratus. Theſe 2 laſt Remarks are equally againſt (k) the Father and the Daughter.

(b) Preface to Anacreon.

(c) Athenæus lib. 13. p. 599.

(d) Chamæleon apud Athen. lib. 13. p. 599.

(e) Apud eundem ibid.

(f) In the Grand Cyrus.

(B) All her Verſes run upon Love.] (l) Pauſanias obſerves that Anacreon was the firſt, who after Sappho writ ſcarce any thing but Love Verſes, and that Sappho (m) writ a great many things upon this Subject which did not agree well together. The meaning of it is that ſhe turned this Subject ſo many ways, that ſhe ſpoke of it ſometimes in one manner and ſometimes in another. The ſport pleaſed her. Among other things ſhe had made a Calculation of the ſigns by which one might know an Amorous Perſon; and ſhe had ſo good Succeſs in it that the Phyſician Eraſiſtratus (n) knew by thoſe ſigns the Diſtemper of Antiochus. Every Body knows that this young Prince was deep in Love with Stratonice his Mother in Law, and that not daring to diſcover it he pretented to be ſick, and the cauſe of his Trouble being known, his Father parted with her to him: But as often as this Adventure is ſpoken of, People do not think of Sappho who afforded the Phyſician the neceſſary Expedients. Thoſe, who intended to denote the Poems of this Woman by their true Character, called them her Fires and her Amours. (o) Spirat adhuc amor Vivuntque commiſſi calores Æoliæ fidibus puellæ. Plutarch compares her to Cacus the Son of Vulcan, of whom the Romans writ that he caſt out of his Mouth fire and Flame: What ſhe Sings is a Compoſition of Fire, ſays he (p), her Verſes are the Expulſion of the Flame ſhe has in her Heart.

(C) There remains &c.] The Hymn to Venus was preſerved by Dionyſius Halicarnaſſeus (q), who inſerted it in his Works as an Example of a Perfection he had a mind to Characterize. On the ſame Account, and with the ſame view Longinus (r) has preſerved to us the Ode to her Miſtreſs. Catullus (ſ) has Tranſlated part of this Ode: all theſe circumſtances are a pregnant Proof of the ſingular eſteem the Ancients had for her Verſes.

Tanaquillus Faber was reſolved to publiſh ſome Obſervations upon that Ode; but he abſtained from it becauſe he was brought into Tronble for ſome things he had put in his Edition of Anacreon. Ut ne tandem bona fide ἀπο——— ſiam, ſaith he (t), quod ſane haud neceſſe eſt, decrevi nil quidquam ad hoc admirabile odarium dicere. Fuit olim, fateor, cum Sapphonem amabam; ſed ex quo illa me perditiſſima femina pæne miſerum perdidit cum ſceleratiſſimo ſuo congerrone, (Anacreontem dico, ſi neſcis, Lector,) noli ſperare quidquam a me dictum iri, unde aut ipſa, aut ipſius opera, (queis tamen olim in Græcia nil elegantius, nil magis terſum aut venuſtum quidquam extitit,) probari videantur. Itaque quando mihi impoſita fibula eſt, hic lacuna eſto. The piece which

(g) [illegible]

(h) [illegible]

(i) [illegible]

(k) [illegible]

(l) Pauſanias lib. 1. pag. 13.

(m) Pauſanias lib. 9. p. 171.

(n) Plutarch in Demetrio pag. 9[illegible].

(o) Horat. Od. 9. l. 4.

(p) [illegible] Ipſa autem vere igni mixta loquitur, & per carmina calorem corde conceptum emittit. Plutarchus de amore, pag. [illegible]

(q) De coll. loc. verborum c. 23.

(r) [illegible]

(ſ) See Iſaac Voſſius's commentary upon Catullus pag. 123. [illegible] of Sappho corrected.

(t) Tanaq. Faber not. in Longinum pag. 2[illegible].

ments which the Ancient Scholiaſts have cited, and a Hymn to Venus, and an Ode to one of her Miſtreſſes; for you muſt know that her Amorous Paſſion extended even to the (D) Perſons of her own Sex, and this is that for which ſhe was moſt cried down. Suidas has preſerved the Names of 3 of her ß Miſtreſſes, who ſpoiled her Reputation and defamed themſelves by a ſtrange ſingularity which was imputed to their Commerce. He has alſo preſerved the Names of 3 of her Female Scholars whom ſhe did, without doubt, initiate in her Myſteries. Since Lucian does not obſerve ‖ that the Women of the Iſle of Lesbos, who he ſays were very Subject to this Paſſion, Learned it of Sappho, 'tis better to imagine that ſhe found it already Eſtabliſhed in her Country than to make her the Inventer of it. Be it as it will, Sappho always paſſed for a Famous Tribas, and ſome think that it was for this Reaſon, that ſome (E) Sirnamed her Maſcula Sappho †. If her Deſign was to paſs by and neglect the other half of Mankind, ſhe was fruſtrated of her Expectation; for ſhe fell which he cites (a) out of his Notes on Anacreon, ſhews us that he was perſuaded that Sappho writ this Ode for a Woman ſhe was in Love with. We ſhall ſee in the following Remark that his Daughter was not of this Opinion; yet 'tis a very probable one. To conclude, if there is no better Proof than the above quoted Latin paſſage of this Author, to pretend (b) that he ceaſed to eſteem Sappho, 'tis to rely upon an ill foundation.

(D) Extended even to the Perſons of her own Sex.] I cannot blame the Charity of Mrs. le Fevre (c), who has endeavoured for the Honour of Sappho to render the fact uncertain; but I think her too reaſonable to be vexed at us for believing our own Eyes. The Ode which Longinus has mention'd, is not in the Style of a Friend writing to a Friend: It ſavours of Love all over, and not of Friendſhip: Otherwiſe, Longinus, who was ſo good a Judge, would not have brought it as a Model of the Art with which great Maſters repreſent things: He would not, I ſay, have given us as an Example of that Art, the manner wherewith the Symptoms of an Amorous Fury are collected in that Ode, Τὰ συμβαίνοντα ταῖς ἐρωτικαῖς μανίαις παθήματα; and Plutarch would not have cited this ſame Ode to prove that Love is a Divine Fury, which cauſes more violent Enthuſiaſms than thoſe of the Prieſteſs of Delphi, of the Bacchantes and of the Prieſts of Cibele. (d) Τί τοσοῦτον ἡ Πυθία πέπονθεν ἁψαμένη τοῦ τρίποδος; τίνα τῶν ἐνθιαζομένων οὕτως ὁ αὐλὸς καὶ τὰ μητρῷα καὶ τὸ τύμπανον ἐξίστησιν The Poetical Tranſlation of this is to be found in theſe Verſes of Horace, if inſtead of iræ you put amor.

Non (e) Dindymene, non adytis quatit
Mentem ſacerdotum incola Pythius,
Non Liber æque, non acuta
Sic geminant Corybantes æra,
Triſtes ut iræ

People were ſo perſuaded in Ovid's time, that Sappho Loved Women as Men do; that he makes no difficulty of introducing her making a Sacrifice to Phaon of the Female Companions of her Debauchery.

Nec (f) me Pyrrhiades Methymniadeſve puellæ,
Nec me Lesbiadum cetera turba juvant.
Vilis Anactorie, vilis mihi candida Cydno:
Non oculis grata eſt Atthis, ut ante meis.
Atque aliæ centum quas non ſine crimine amavi
Improbe, multarum quod fuit, unus habes.

. . . .

Lesbides infamem quæ me feciſtis amatæ,
Deſinite ad citharas turba venire meas.

Horace is another Evidence againſt her (g) in the Complaints he ſuppoſes ſhe made of the Maids of Lesbos, Et Æoliis fidibus querentem Sappho puellis de popularibus; for if ſhe had complain'd that the Ladies of her Country envyed her Merit, ſhe would not have choſen the young ones for the Subject of her Complaint: But becauſe ſhe had ſpoke to them of Love, and the greateſt part of 'em were either too ſimple, or, to ſpeak better, too Crafty to be catched, and thoſe who had complyed, had made her infamous; for this Reaſon ſhe complained of the Young Maids. This Verſe of Ovid, Deſinite ad citharas turba venire meas, ſhews, that the Women of Lesbos had done juſtice to her fine Verſes. To conclude, I leave it to a new Father Sanchez to decide, whether a Married Woman, who had complied with the Paſſion of Sappho, would have Committed Adultery and made her Husband a Cuckold? I do not know whether this queſtion has eſcaped the inexhauſtible Curioſity of the Caſuiſts about Matrimonial Cauſes.

Let us confirm this by the Teſtimony of a great Wit, who did not believe that his Complaiſance for Mrs. le Fevre ſhould go ſo far as to approve the Pains ſhe has taken in favour of Sappho. After the Death of her Husband, ſays he (h), Sappho, tho' young, renounced Marriage, but not the pleaſure of loving. She had a Soul too paſſionate to be without it; which may be eaſily judged by the tenderneſs all over her Poems, which has put her above all the Poets as to that Point. So finding her ſelf too weak to vanquiſh ſo violent an Inclination as that, ſhe wholly gave her ſelf up to it, and loved all manner of ways, far beyond the bounds which Modeſty naturally preſcribes to her Sex. 'Tis in vain to juſtify her on that Head; it cannot be done but at the expence of Truth: and neither her averſion for the ſhameful Love of Charaxus, nor all the Honours ſhe received from the Lesbians, of can waſh off a Stain, which all thoſe who have ſpoke her could not diſguiſe, notwithſtanding the Elogies they have given her, and which her own Works Evidence more clearly ſtill. Many beautiful Women are put in the Number of her Miſtreſſes.

(E) The Sirname of Maſcula Sappho.] It's not ſo eaſy as it's thought to know truly what Horace means by Maſcula Sappho; but if he pretended to reproach her with her Love againſt Nature, it's eaſy to know he took the wrong time. The Epithete would be very faint and too far fetched without neceſſity. There are, notwithſtanding, Learned Men who underſtand it ſo. (i) Chabot places among them the Interpreter of Juvenal, and Porphyrion an Ancient Scholiaſt upon Horace, and gives us Domitius for his Author as to the latter. Without doubt he means Domitius Calderinus, whoſe Commentary upon Martial (k) I have not; but according to Chabot we find there, that Porphyrion has interpreted the Word Maſcula both in a proper and figurative ſenſe, vel quia Sappho in poetico ſtudio verſata eſt, in quo ſæpius enituit, vel quia tribas diffamata fuit. Cruquius, who has publiſhed the old Scholiaſts upon Horace, has not publiſhed theſe Words of Porphyrion. As for the Interpreter of Juvenal cited by Chabot, it's reaſonable that we ſhould take him for the Scholiaſt of that Poet; but I do not find that he ſays what is imputed to him: 'Tis Britannicus (l) who ſays it upon the 47 Verſe of the 2d Satyr. However it be with the Ancient Commentators, 'tis certain, that the Moderns do commonly mention 3 Opinions about the ſenſe of Maſcula Sappho. 1. That this Word means that ſhe was a Tribas. 2. That it denotes the Inclination ſhe had for the Sciences, inſtead of handling the Spindle and Diſtaff. 3. The Courage ſhe had to precipitate her ſelf at Leucate. This laſt Opinion is Scaliger's (m) and Turnebus's (n), which is ſtrongly Confirmed by the following Verſes of Auſonius (o).

Et de nimboſo ſaltum Leucate minatur,
Maſcula Lesbiacis Sappho peritura ſagittis.

See the Article Leucate, and the following Remark.

Thevet rejects the firſt ſenſe, and follows the Second and Third, but not without confounding himſelf Childiſhly. Horace and Auſonius, ſays he (p), when they call'd this Lesbian Woman the Maſcula, meant nothing elſe but that ſhe did what was proper for Men, in Compoſing ſo excellent Verſes, or that ſhe had undertaken to get into thoſe beautiful places of Leucate, near which the Men durſt not come. What an Abſurdity to give the Name of Beautiful

Places

ß Ovid. Amoribus, epiſt. Sapph. ad Phaon. See the Remark D.

‖ Dialog. Meretr. tom. 2. p. 714.

† Hor. epiſt. 19. l. 1. Auſonius cupid. crucif.

(h) Longe Pierre, in the Life of Sappho prefixed to the Tranſlation of Sappho's Poems into French Verſe.

(i) In Horat. epiſt. 19. l. 1.

(k) Chabot quotes it in epigr. ad Philænim. l. 7.

(l) Tale monſtrum libidinis dicitur Sappho excogitaſſe, unde maſcula eſt appellata ab Horat. in epiſtolis See Vinetus upon Auſonius Cupid. Crucif. v. 25.

(m) In Auſon. Cupid. crucif. & in Virgil. Cirin.

(n) Adverſar. l. 10. c. 2.

(o) Cupid. Crucif.

(p) Thevet ubi infra pag. 226.

fell deſperately in Love with Phaon, and did in vain all that ſhe could to make him love her: But he deſpiſed her and Forced her (F) by his Coldneſs to throw her ſelf from a high Rock to extinguiſh her devouring Flame. O! (G) what a Cruelty! She had been long before the Widow of one of the Richeſt Men of the Iſle of Andros, called Cercala †, by whom ſhe had a Daughter called Cleis. And ſo the Mother of Sappho was called. I do not know her Father's Name; for there are ‖ eight aſſigned to her by Authors ‡. She had 3 Brothers, one of which called Charaxus § dealt in Wine from Lesbos in Ægypt, and fell in love there with a Famous Curteſan, by ſome, called Rhodope, but Sappho calls her Doricha. She was very Angry with her Brother (H) about this Engagement. It's ſaid that the place to a dreadful Precipice, whither none went but out of deſpair? This therefore, continues he, is to wrong our Sappho (a), and to Calumniate her without Reaſon, ſince the Divine Philoſopher Plato admired her for her dexterity and vivacity of Wit, and for her profound Wiſdom, which ſet her, not only above the reſt of her Sex, but alſo above the moſt able Men. I do not believe that ever Plato ſpoke of her profound Wiſdom, and if he had given her that Elogy, it ſhould not be underſtood in the ſenſe of Thevet, but in the ſenſe wherein it is taken at this very day among the Walloons, and was formerly taken in France. The Midwives were called Sages, not becauſe of their Virtue, but becauſe they knew many things that other Women knew not. They are called at this Day femmes ſages in Guenne and Languedoc, but in other Provinces, where they ſpeak more exactly the French, to avoid the Equivocation, they make uſe of a Tranſpoſition, and call them ſages femmes. Tell at this Day a Walloon, that he is Happy in his Children, that his Daughters are ſage, he'll think you laugh at them, and hee'll tell you they are not, that 'tis not proper for their Sex, and that 'tis enough for a Maid to fear God and underſtand her Buſineſs. Which ſhews that he underſtands, by being ſage, to be Learned, to know Latin, &c. The Greek word σοφὸς ſignified ſometimes a knowing Man, and in this ſenſe Plato takes it ſometimes, and particularly when he ſpeaks of Anacreon. This is what a very good Critick (b) has obſerved. In the ſame manner this Word ought to be underſtood, if Plato had made uſe of it in praiſing Sappho. Let us conclude with theſe Words of a Commentator upon Tanaquillus Faber (c): "It's very "well known why Horace and Auſonius called her "Maſcula, not for her Courage, but in the ſame ſenſe "as γυνὴ ἀνδρεία in Lucian, where an Impudent "Woman explains her ſelf, ſaying, ἡ ἐπιθυμία "ἀνδρός ἐστί μοι, καὶ τὸ πᾶν ἀνήρ εἰμι."

(F) Forced her by his Coldneſs.] Mrs. le Fevre ſays that Sappho could not Command her ſelf from following Phaon into Sicily, whither he retired that he might not ſee her; and that during her ſtay in that Iſland, ſhe made the fineſt Verſes in the World; and that 'tis very probable ſhe made there the Hymn to Venus, in which ſhe begs ſo ardently the aſſiſtance of that Goddeſs. Her Prayers were not heard; the ſweet and Tender Verſes ſhe compoſed ſo often (d) on this Subject were to no purpoſe: Phaon was Cruel to the laſt Degree. The unfortunate Sappho was forced to take a dangerous Leap; for ſo I may juſtly call the Remedy to which ſhe had recourſe, which was to go upon the Promentory Leucate and throw her ſelf into the Sea. It was looked on in thoſe days as the true means to cure the Pains of Love and for this Reaſon that place was call'd the Lovers leap. Some ſay that Sappho was the firſt that made a trial (e) of this way of curing Love: Others ſay, (f) ſhe was the firſt Woman that did it; but that, before her time ſome Men had done it. Many Poets have ſpoke of this deſpair of Sappho: One of them (g) having drained himſelf of all the Counſels he could give to an unfortunate Lover, and at laſt referring him to the great Remedy of all Evils, makes uſe of this Expreſſion.

Quod ſibi ſuaſerunt Phædra & Eliſſa dabunt,
Quod Canace, Phylliſque, & faſtidita Phaoni.

See here what Statius ſays,

Steſichori que (h) ferox, ſaltuſque ingreſſa viriles
Non formidata temeraria Leucade Sappho.

Pliny tells us a Story about the cauſe of Sappho's Love for Phaon. It was ſaid that the occult qualities of a certain Herb had excited that Paſſion. Here are the Words of Pliny, (i) Ex his: He ſpeaks of the different ſorts of Eryngion, or hundred Headed Thiſtle, candidam noſtri centum capita vocant —— Portentoſum eſt, quod de eo traditur: Radicem ejus alterutrius ſexus ſimilitudinem referre, raram inveniri: ſed ſi viris contigerit mas, amabiles fieri. Ob hoc & Phaonem Lesbium dilectum à Sappho. Multæ circa hoc non Magorum ſolum vanitates, ſed etiam Pythagoricorum. That is to ſay, according to the verſion of du Pinet, the Latins call the White Eryngium Centum Capita —— and certainly it's a wonderful thing, if what they ſay of this Root be true. For there are ſome that ſay, that the Root of White Eryngium (which is very rare) has the Sex of a Man or a Woman: And it's held, that if a Man meets with one that repreſents the Privy parts of a Man, he ſhall be Beloved by Women: And 'tis thought, this made Sappho in Love with Phaon. And indeed, not only the Magicians, but alſo the Pithagoreans ſpeak wonderful things of this Root. Theſe are idle Stories. Sappho was ſo well tempered for Love that ſhe needed no occult qualities of Roots to enflame her.

(G) O! what a Cruelty!] The Cruelty of Phaon will not ſurpriſe us ſo much, if we reflect that Sappho was only a Widow upon the decline, who had never been handſome, who was ill ſpoken of in her Widdowhood, and who made her Flame very publick. A Man that is never ſo little nice, does not Care for ſuch unbecoming Addreſſes, and draws ill Conſequences from them. Add to this, that Sappho had not the endearment of Novelty, which often, even with nice People, makes amends for the defect of Beauty and the flower of Youth. Phaon knew all ſhe was capable of; the Trees and the Graſs had been her Confidents; and perhaps his flight proceeded more from being ſpent than from indifference. Conſider what ſhe Writes to him by the Pen of Ovid.

Hæc quoque laudabas, omnique à parte placebam,
Sed tum præcipue cum ſit amoris opus.
Tunc te plus ſolito laſcivia noſtra juvabat,
Crebraque mobilitas, aptaque verba joco:
Quique, ubi jam amborum fuerat confuſa voluptas,
Plurimus in laſſo corpore languor erat.

. . . .

Invenio ſilvam quæ ſæpe cubilia nobis
Præbuit, & multa texit opaca coma.
Agnovi preſſas noti mihi ceſpitis herbas;
De noſtro curvum pondere gramen erat.
Incubui tetigique locum qua parte fuiſti.

She was not then ſo capable of hearkening to Reaſon, as when ſhe (k) repreſented to a Young Man who courted her for Marriage, that being older than him ſhe would not marry him. The younger Phaon had been, the more ſhe would have found her Account in him. If I have ſaid that ſhe was not handſome, it was becauſe I thought might prefer to the Authority of Plato, who (l) calls her the Beautiful Sappho, the Authority of Ovid who makes her ſpeak thus:

Si mihi difficilis formam natura negavit,
Ingenio formæ damna rependo meæ.
Sum brevis. At nomen quod terras impleat omnes
Eſt mihi: menſuram nominis ipſa fero.
Candida ſi non ſum: placuit Cepheia Perſeo.

Mrs. le Fevre does not believe Plato or Athenæus; for ſhe ſays, that Sappho was not Beautiful, that ſhe was neither tall nor little, that ſhe had a very brown Complexion, and very lively and ſparkling Eyes. What ſhall I ſay of Maximus Tyrius, (m) who pretends that becauſe ſhe was black and little, Socrates (n) call'd her Beautiful, by reaſon of the Beauty of her Verſes.

(H) She was very Angry with her Brother.] See how Ovid tells us this particular.

Arſit inops frater victus meretricis amore,
Miſtaque cum turpi damna pudore tulit.

Paſſim

---

† Suidas in Σαπφώ.

‖ Id. ib.

‡ See the Remark K in the Article Anacreon.

§ Strabo lib. 17. pag. 556. Athen. lib. 13. pag. 596.

(a) Id. ib. pag. 227.

(b) See Mr. le Clerc in the 1. Vol. of his ars critica pag. 194. 195.

(c) Reland ubi infra fol. C. 4.

(d) Καὶ ἕτερος ὁ Φάων ἐστὶν ἐφ' ᾧ τὸν ἔρωτα αὐτῆς ἡ Σαπφὼ πολλάκις ᾆσμα ἐποίησεν. Et ille Phaon eſt, in cujus amorem Sappho ſæpe carmen cecinit. Palæphatus de incred. cap. 49. pag. m. 231. Phaſianinus having read αἷμα inſtead of ᾆσμα made a ridiculous Tranſlation.

(e) Menander apud Strabon. l. 10. pag. 311.

(f) Scaliger in Auſonium Cupid. cruci.

(g) Auſon. Epigr. 92.

(h) Stat. lib. 5. ſilv. 3. v. 154.

(i) Plinius lib. 22. cap. 8. pag. m. 183.

(k) In a Fragment of a Letter quoted by Mrs. le Fevre.

(l) In Phædro p.m. 1214. Athenæus calls her alſo by the ſame Sappho, l. 13. p. 596. & ſo does Plutarch de amore, pag. 762. & Julian the Apoſtate, Epiſt. ad Alypium (

(m) Orat. 8. p. 96.

(n) Idem Plato

the Mitylenians did her the Honour (I) after her Death, to ſtamp their Money with her Image. Some Authors make mention of another (K) Sappho.

Mr. Moreri found one in Martial, * only thro' an extreme Inadvertency. We read in Ariſtotle the Proof Sappho made uſe of to ſhew that Death is an Evil. The Gods, ſaid ſhe ||, have Judged it ſo, for otherwiſe they would die. There was in the Prytaneum of Syracuſa, a moſt beautiful Statue of Sappho: See what Cicero ✝ ſays of it, when he reproaches Verres with Stealing it. It was the work of Silanion, and probably the ſame that Tatian ſpeaks of reproaching the Gentiles with the Honour they paid to diſhoneſt Women. See the Citation l of this Page.

S A R A H, Siſter and (A) Wife of Abraham, was his faithful Companion in Factus inops agili peragit freta cærula remo,

Quique male amiſit, nunc male quærit opes.
Me quoque, quod monui bene multa fideliter, odit;
Hæc mihi libertas, hæc pia lingua dedit.

I leave you to judge what anſwer he might have made, and what weight the Remonſtrances of ſuch a Siſter could have. Athenæus obſerves (a) that the invectives againſt the Curtezan of Naucratis, were grounded upon the exceſſive Sums ſhe got from her Lovers. Herodotus calls that Curtezan Rhodopis, and (b) ſays that Charaxus, who had ſpent a great Sum to Redeem her, was ill treated by the Invectives of his Siſter Sappho.

(I) Stampt with their Image.] I ſhall obſerve on this occaſion, that Lambin for want of underſtanding a Paſſage of Pauſanias (c), ſays falſely, That there was in the Citadel of Athens a Statue of Sappho. Anacreontis Teii, ſays he (d), qui majore ex parte res amatorias ſcripſit, ſtatua in arce Athenienſium prima poſt Sapphonem locata eſt. See the Greek. Ἔστι δὲ τῷ Ξανθίππῳ πλησίον ἕστηκεν Ἀνακρέων ὁ Τήϊος, πρῶτος μετὰ Σαπφὼ τὴν Λεσβίαν τὰ πολλὰ ὧν ἔγραψεν ἐρωτικὰ ποιήσας. It's evident that theſe Greek words mean nothing elſe, but that the Statue of Anacreon was put near that of Xanthippus; the Statue, I ſay, of Anacreon, who is the firſt after Sappho, who Conſecrated to matters of Love the greateſt part of the things he writ.

I ſhould be glad to know whether Thevet is miſtaken or not, when he aſſures us, (e) That the Romans Erected in Memory of Sappho a Statue of Porphyry richly wrought. It's Tanaquillus Faber (f), who has obſerved, that the Mitylenians ſtamped their Money with the Image of this Heroine, and by this treated her like a Queen when ſhe was dead. He cites no Body for it; but Mr. Reland, who has made Notes upon (g) this work of Tanaquillus Faber, quotes this Paſſage of Julius Pollux, οἱ μυτιληναῖοι μὲν Σαπφὼ τῷ νομίσματι ἐνεχάραττον, and ſtill obſerves that there are yet ſome Meddals of Sappho, which bear the name of the Mitylenians, ΜΥΤΙΛΕΝΑΙΩΝ. Thevet ſays he (h) drew the Picture of Sappho from an Antient Medal, which he brought out of the Iſle of Lesbos, and that one like that, with many others, was given to the Baron de la Garde, then the French Ambaſſador at Conſtantinople, by the firſt Phyſician of Sultan Soliman. Ariſtotle obſerves that the Mitylenians had payed ſome Honours to Sappho, but he does not tell us in what thoſe Honours (i) conſiſted. Tatian reproaches the Greeks with the Statue of (k) the Curtezan Sappho made by Silanion; of that Curtezan, ſays he, who Sung her own Luxury, and was Amorous, even to Madneſs. (l) Καὶ ἡ μὲν Σαπφὼ γύναιον πορνικὸν ἐρωτομανὲς ϗ τὴν ἑαυτῆς ἀσέλγειαν ᾄδει. Et quidem Sappho meretricia muliercula inſano amore capta ſuam ipſa laſciviam cantat. (m) Pliny ſpeaks of a Painter called Leo, who had drawn the Picture of Sappho.

(K) Of another Sappho.] Mr. Moreri ſays there are ſome, who mention a ſecond Maid of the Name of Erythræ, who made Verſes, and that 'tis the Opinion of Athenæus, lib. 13. Athenæus does not ſay that this other Sappho was a Poet, or that ſhe was Born at Erythræ: He ſays that ſhe was of Ereſſus (n), and by profeſſion a Curtezan, and that ſhe fell in Love with Phaon. According to this Opinion the great Sappho, the Sappho of Mitylene, who made ſuch excellent Poems, might, without much trouble, be re-inſtated into a good Reputation; there would be nothing elſe to do but to Tranſport her bad Fame upon the other Sappho. The miſchief is, that a lame Paſſage of Athenæus, ſeconded as much as you pleaſe by the Evidence of Ælian (o), is not to ſerve us for a Guide preferably to a thouſand Authorities that are againſt it. Mr. Lloyd, and Mr. Hoffman adviſe us to diſtinguiſh well between the two Sappho's, the one of Ereſia, and the other beloved by Phaon, as we ſee, ſay they, in Athenæus lib. 13. This is Copied out of Voſſius (p), and is not truer for it; for Athenæus ſpeaks there of one Sappho only a Native of Ereſſus, who was deſperately in Love with Phaon: Whether their Love was mutual or no, he gives us no account. Suidas might occaſion a doubt, were it not probable that he has divided what ought to remain United. He ſpeaks of two Sappho's: What he ſays of the firſt, beyond all doubt belongs to her that Excelled in Lyrick Poetry: What he ſays of the ſecond, viz. that ſhe was of Mitylene in the Iſle of Lesbos, that ſhe threw her ſelf from Leucate into the Sea for the Love of Phaon, that ſhe played on Inſtruments, and was famous for Lyrick Poetry, does not certainly leſs agree with the firſt. And ſo I ſee no reaſon of any weight to admit two Women of that Name, eſpecially if we muſt diſtinguiſh the one from the other, by the qualities which Suidas and Charles Stephens attribute to them.

Here is a very abſurd Fault. (q) Canius, a Latin Poet, a Native of (r) Cadis, and a Friend of Martial ---Married two Wives, Theophila a learned Woman, but a little too free, and Sappho, not ſo well learned, but more reſerved. ——— Martial mentions what I write. lib. 3. epig. 63. & lib. 7. epiſt. 68.

Caſtior hac & non doctior illa fuit, &c.

This is what we read in Moreri's Dictionary. But if we read Martial, we find (s) that he makes mention of one only Wife of Canius, and ſays ſhe was called Theophila; that ſhe was Learned and made Verſes that Sappho might Praiſe; that the latter was not more Learned than Theophila, but that Theophila was more Chaſt than Sappho. The Verſe which Moreri quotes is the laſt of the Epigram. He ſhould not therefore have added an Etcætera. This is but a Trifle in compariſon of his overſight in giving to Canius a Wife called Sappho, leſs Learned, but more Modeſt than Theophila. I ſay nothing of two other Faults which are in his Dictionary in the Article Canius. He quotes the 19th epig. of the 3. Book of Martial, inſtead of the 20th, and æmulator is put inſtead of æmulatur.

(A) Siſter and Wife of Abraham.] That's ſo clear by the 20th Chapter of Geneſis, that were it not for the ill habit of Sacrificing the natural ſenſe of the words of the Scripture to the leaſt difficulties that ariſe, there could not be two Opinions upon the matter. Let us take right the Circumſtances of the Fact. Abraham being come into the Country of the Philiſtins made Sarah paſs for his Siſter. Whereupon Abimeleck taking her to be a Maid, or a Widow, ſo that nothing could hinder him from making her one of his Wives, cauſed her to be brought to him. But knowing by Revelation that ſhe was Abraham's Wife, he reſtored her, complaining of their Lies, which had expoſed him to ſo great a Miſchief. I ſay, their Lies, for on the one ſide Abraham had ſaid of his Wife, ſhe is my Siſter; and Sarah had ſaid of her Husband, he is my Brother. Abraham excuſed himſelf in the firſt place on account of the Fear he was in for his Life, if he had ſaid ſhe is my Wife; in the ſecond place upon this, that ſhe was truly his Siſter, the Daughter of my Father, ſaid he Thevet ubi ſupra pag. 224. (i) Ariſtot Rhetor. l. 2. c. p. 445. Mr. Reland in his Remarks upon Tanaquillus ber, quotes the words of Ariſtotle. (k) Tatian. orat. contra æcos p. m. 168. B. (l) Id. ibi C. (m) Plin. lib. 35. . 11. pag. m. 235. (n) A Town in the Iſle of Lesbos.

---

(c) [illegible] Quam pulcra Sappho Charaxi fratri ſuo mercaturæ gratia Naucratim profecto nave dilectam verſibus ſuis ...ndit, quod multa ...um pecunia emunxiſſet. Athen. lib. 13. cap. 7. pag. 596. (b) Herodot. lib. 2. 135. (c) Ex lib. pag. 23. (d) Lambin. in Horat. Od. 27. l. 1. (e) Thevet, Elog. des ſavans Hommes Tom. 1. pag. 223. edit. 1671. 12. (f) Le ...re, ... des ...et. ...ec. ...m. 23. See Nouv. la Rep. lettres 1700. 461.

* See the Remark K towards the end.

|| ἢ ὡς Σαπφὼ ὅτι τὸ ἀποθνήσκειν κακόν· οἱ θεοὶ γὰρ οὕτω κεκρίκασιν· ἀπέθνησκον γὰρ ἄν. Aut quemadmodum Sappho, mori malum eſſe, Dei enim ſic judicarunt: alioqui mortui eſſent. Ariſtot. Rhetor. l. 2. c. 23. pag. m. 445. E.

✝ Cicero in Verrem orat. 6. fol. m. 78.

(o) Ælian. lib. 12. c. 19. var. hiſt.

(p) Voſſius, de poet. Græc. pag. 17.

(q) Moreri at the word Canius.

(r) As it appears from the 62d Epigram of the 1ſt Book of Martial, not quoted by Moreri.

(s) Mart. epig. 68. lib. 7.

in all his Travels. She was already Married to him, when § they retired out of Ur of Chaldæa to go to Charan. The Barrenneſs, with which ſhe was afflicted in her own Country, did not leave her in foreign Countries; and this was it which made her take a Reſolution of giving her Husband a Subſtitute, that ſo ſhe might become a Mother in the Perſon of the Subſtitute, ſince ſhe could not be one in her own Perſon. Hagar her Servant, whom ſhe choſe for this Employ, was quickly with Child and paid her with ingratitude *. She deſpiſed Sarah; but Sarah not being able to bear this Inſolence, uſed ſo fully the full Power her Husband gave her over Hagar, that ſhe forced her in a little time to fly out of the Houſe. One may ſee in another place ‡ the Return of this ungrateful Servant and the extremities ſhe was reduced to, when ſhe was turned out a ſecond time. We ſhall not repeat it. It's better to ſay that at laſt, thro' a particular Benediction of God, Sarah proved with Child being 90 Years Old, and was brought to Bed of a Son called Iſaac. She lived 127 Years ‖. We ought not to forget that ſhe was very Beautiful, and that her Beauty and the Complaiſance ſhe had for her Husband, not

to he (*), tho' ſhe is not the Daughter of my Mother. After this, he endeavoured to juſtify his Wife by ſaying, that he had asked of her a Favour, that whereſoever they went ſhe ſhould declare that he was her Brother. I admire that 'tis not clear to all in this Diſcourſe, that Sarah was not Abraham's Siſter by the Mother's ſide, but by the Father's ſide. See here my Reaſons.

I. In the firſt place, if Sarah had not been the Siſter of Abraham in this manner, the Apology of her Husband had only deceived more and more that good Prince, who complained of his former Diſſimulation; for no Man could think by Abraham's diſcourſe that ſhe was only his Niece. I leave all People to judge whether Abimelech could form any other Ideas from Abraham's Apology. It's to no purpoſe to ſuppoſe that Sarah was the Daughter of Haran, and conſequently the Grand-Child of the Father of Abraham; and to add, that a Nephew is ſometimes called (a) Brother, and that a Grand-Son is ſometimes called Son; that ſerves to no purpoſe in this Affair, for the Circumſtances require that Abraham ſhould uſe the words in the moſt proper Signification; for if he had not, he muſt paſs for a Man who deſign'd to impoſe upon Abimelech.

II. Beſides to what purpoſe ſhould he make uſe of this diſtinction, Daughter of my Father, Daughter of my Mother, if he meant only that he was the Uncle of Sarah? Let us put the caſe that he might have called Siſter, her that was only his Neice; to what purpoſe ſhould he ſay that his Mother was not the Grand-Mother of this Niece? It is, will ſome ſay, to repreſent ingeniouſly the Degree of his Kindred in reſpect of Sarah. But why did he uſe the Word Daughter in an ambiguous Signification? Why does he not uſe it in its right ſenſe, as I ſuppoſe he did. Beſides, the ingenuity ſpoken of would be very unſeaſonable; it would weaken the Apology of the Patriarch; for it would make the bonds of Kindred appear leſs ſtrong. If it be objected to me, that in my Suppoſition that ſame Ingenuity weakens the Apology more then it ſtrengthens it; I'll give a Reaſon why Abraham declared that Sarab was not his Siſter by the Mother's ſide. They made a difference between the Marriage of a Man with his Siſter both by the Father and Mother, and the Marriage of a Man with his half Siſter. The Athenians (b) who permitted the Marrying of the Siſter by the Father, forbad the Marrying of the Siſter by the Mother. Solon decided it ſo. On the Contrary Lycurgus (c) permitted the Lacedemonians to Marry the Siſter by the Mother, and not by the Father. Some have ſaid, that as the Community of Blood is more certain between a Brother and a Siſter by the Mother, then between a Brother and a Siſter by the Father; the Permiſſion of Solon was, generally ſpeaking, leſs odious (d) than the Permiſſion of Lycurgus. Will any one ſay, after this, that in my Suppoſition Abraham ſaid without any neceſſity, that his Wife was not his Siſter by the Mother's ſide; as in the contrary Suppoſition he would have ſaid to no purpoſe, that his Mother was not the Grand-Mother of Sarab?

III. Add to this, that if Abraham meant nothing elſe but that his Father Terah was the Grand-Father of Sarah, he took the Terms of Father and Siſter in a large and leſs proper ſignification. Why therefore did he declare that his Mother was not the Mother of Sarah. Was ſhe not, in the ſenſe that he took the Word Father in relation to Terah; that is to ſay, was ſhe not the Grand-Mother of Sarah, juſt as Terah was her Grand-Father? Some think to clear the difficulty by ſuppoſing that Haran was the Father of Sarah, and that he was not the Brother of Abraham by the Mother: They aſſign therefore two Wives to Terah, and they ſuppoſe he had Haran by the one and Abraham by the other. And Conſequently if Sarah was the Daughter of Haran, her Grand-Father was the Father of Abraham; but her Grand-Mother was different from the Mother of Abraham. I Anſwer, all this falls to the Ground as ſoon as 'tis ſuppoſed that this Patriarch made uſe of the Words Siſter and Daughter in a large ſignification; for upon this Foot 'tis certain, that the Mother of Abraham is Grand-Mother to the Children of Haran, whether ſhe engendred Haran, or whether ſhe was only the Wife of him who engendred him. As ſoon as you leave the proper and ſtrict ſignification of the Words which denote the Kindred, and that you follow the Cuſtom that is obſerved in Families, the word Mother agrees to the Wives in Relation to all the Children of their Husbands, and by Conſequence that of Grand-Mother, with reſpect to all the Children of all the Children of their Husbands: So that if Abraham had taken the Terms in a large ſignification, which the ſtyle of Friendſhip or Civility has introduced into Families, he could not have denied, as he did, that his Mother was the Grand-Mother of Sarab. Some wiſh they could ſay that he took the ſame Words ſometimes in a proper, and ſometimes in an improper ſignification. But this were to ſuppoſe that he acted the Sophiſter, and impoſed upon the well-meaning Abimelech?

IV. The 4th Reaſon is taken from this, viz. that it cannot be ſuppoſed upon any good Grounds that Sarab was adopted by Terab. If it were ſo, Abraham might have made uſe of his diſtinction without departing from exactneſs of ſpeaking; for in that caſe his Father might have been called the Father of Sarab in a ſignification proper enough. But ſee here what ruins this Evaſion: They have recourſe to it only to avoid the imputation of Inceſt, and they do not avoid it by that; for a Fraternity or Brotherhood, founded upon Adoption, properly ſo called, was no leſs an Obſtacle to Marriage than a Natural Fraternity. According to the Laws (e), a Brother who Married his adopted Siſter, Committed an Inceſt, properly ſo called.

V. From whence I draw one of my chief Reaſons. If any thing ſhould determine us not to take in a literal ſenſe the preciſe Declaration of Abraham, that Sarab is truly his Siſter, Daughter of his Father, but not of his Mother, it wou'd be the inceſtuous Marriage that reſults from this Fraternity. But does not that very thing refute (f) thoſe, who ſay that Sarab was Abraham's Niece? Is it not agreed that this Degree of Kindred renders Marriages Inceſtuous? Our Adverſaries therefore muſt ſeek out Excuſes for the Inceſt of Abraham. If they can find any, it will be as well for us as for them; the differences being only of leſs or more, it will not be hard for us to give their Reaſons the Extent that will be needful for us; eſpecially conſidering that Jacob made no ſcruple to be Married at the ſame time to two Siſters, which in other times would have been an

---

§ Genes. 11. 29, 31.

* Genes. 16.

‡ In the Article of Agar.

‖ Moreri falſly ſays 137.

(*) Genes. 20. 12.

(a) Loth, Abraham's Nephew is call'd his Brother, Geneſ. 14. 16. but this Example is of no uſe to thoſe who ſuppoſe that Sarah was Loth's Siſter; for upon this ſuppoſition Loth would be call'd Brother, as being a Brother-in-Law, rather than as being a Nephew.

(b) See the proofs of it apud Muretum l. 15. c. 5. variar. lect. & apud Gebhardum in Corn. Nepotem vit. Cimonis. Conſult the Art. Cimon Remark D.

(c) See the ſame Authors.

(d) Filia patris (ſoror, non uterina) jure conjungebatur Noachidi, quoniam inter gentes ratio conſanguinitatis paternæ non habebatur. Jarchius apud Heidegg. hiſt. Patriar. tom. 2. pag. 78.

(e) Inter fratrem ſororemque nuptias eſſe prohibitas ſive eodem utroque parente, ſive altero tantum nati ſint: verum ſi per adoptionem ſoror ſibi ſit quamdiu manet adoptio, etiam nuptias prohiberi: at ſi per emancipationem adoptio diſſoluta ſit, poſſe inter eos rite iniri connubium. Juſtinian. lib. 1. [illegible]

(f) See Rivet in Geneſ. exercit. [illegible] Heidegg. hiſt. Patriarch. tom. 2. pag. [illegible] to call her ſelf his Wife but his Siſter, expoſed her (B) to be Twice taken from him, an Abominable thing. Clemens Alexandrinus looks upon it to be ſo ſmall a difficulty, that he ſays it very eaſily, that the Words of the Patriarch (a) teach us that Men muſt not Marry a Siſter by the Mother's ſide. 'Tis certain there are good Reaſons given to juſtify the Patriarch on this head; I ſhall not mention them; you may eaſily find them in other Books. I ſhall only tell thoſe, who would accuſe me of undervaluing the Conſcience of Abraham as to the Crime of Inceſt; that before they come to me, they muſt condemn a great many (b) Ancient and Modern Divines, both Catholicks and Proteſtants. I ſet no great Value upon what is found in the Annals (c) of Eutychius, that the firſt Wife of Terah, Mother of Abraham, was called Jona, and that his Second Wife, Mother of Sarah, was called Tehevita: however 'tis a ſign, that there is an Ancient Tradition for the Opinion I have followed.

VI. Here's another Reaſon. If Sarah was not the Daughter of Terah, but his Grand-Daughter, ſhe muſt be the Daughter of Haran or of Nachor. But ſhe was neither; I prove it. We find in Geneſis (d) that the Wife of Nachor was called Milca, and that ſhe was the Daughter of Haran, Father of Milca and Jiſca. Since the latter is Named without having the ſame Reaſon to Name her as there was for the other, (for no Husband is aſſign'd to her as to the other) 'tis probable that if Haran had had other Daughters, they would have been Named at the ſame time, and above all, Sarah would not have been forgotten, ſince mention had been made of her Marriage with Abraham. We may then ſafely conclude that Haran had only two Daughters, Milca and Jiſca. This Reaſon is ſo convincing, that it obliges many of our Adverſaries to ſuppoſe that Sarah and Jiſca are the ſame Perſon. They do no great Honour to the Sacred Hiſtorian. What an admirable Writer would he be, if in three Lines he ſhould give two different Names to a Woman, without telling us that they are only two Names of the ſelf ſame Perſon? See in the 22. Chapter of Geneſis, the Liſt of the Children of Nachor: You will not find Sarah there, and you'll ſee that his Firſt-Born came into the World after Abraham went out of his Country; for it was at his return from Mount Morija, where Abraham would have Sacrificed his Son Iſaac, that he heard that Milcha had brought forth Eight Children to her Husband Nachor, viz. Huts, her Firſt-Born, &c. Beſides, were it poſſible, that if Sarah had been the Daughter of Haran, the Scripture ſhould never ſpeak of Loth, as of her Brother?

VII It's eaſy to anſwer thoſe who object the words of the Scripture, Geneſ. 11. 31. where Sarah is called the Daughter-in-Law of Terah; for a Married Woman has more regard to the Relations of her Marriage, than to thoſe of her Birth.

(B) Twice taken from him.] Theſe two Rapes reſemble one another as much as two drops of Water. In both of them Abraham ſuppreſſed his being Sarah's Husband; and bid her ſay he was her Brother; and he did it becauſe he was afraid they would Kill him, if they knew he was her Husband, and would be kind to him for her ſake, if they thought he was not her Husband. In both of them the Raviſhers were puniſhed from above, before they could ſatisfy their Paſſion, and ſent her back with Preſents for her Husband, and reproacht him with Lies. The firſt Rape happen'd in Ægypt King Pharaoh; the ſecond in Guerar by Abimelech King of the Philiſtines. Sarah was at leaſt Sixty Five Years Old when Pharaoh took her away, and Ninety when ſhe was Raviſhed by Abimelech; for ſhe was Ten Years Younger than her Husband (e), and their Voyage into Ægypt was after their going out of Charan, that is to ſay, after (f) the Seventy Fifth Year of Abraham. As to the Voyage to Guerar, it was after the foretelling of the Birth of Iſaac, that is to ſay, when Abraham was a Hundred Years Old. Say what you will, this Hiſtory is a proof that Abraham feared Death more than any Conjugal Diſhonour, and that he was far from being a Jealous Husband. He leaves to the paternal care of Providence the Honour and Chaſtity of Sarah; but he neglects no Humane means for his own Life. Not to acknowledge therein the Infirmity of Corrupt Nature is to be voluntarily Blind. That Patriarch might have ſaid on this occaſion, Homo ſum, humani nihil a me alienum puto (†). Thoſe who believe that the fear of Danger made him Reaſon ill are miſtaken; there is no fear of God, ſaid he, (g) in this Country, and they will Kill me becauſe of my Wife. He believed therefore that thoſe, who would make no ſcruple to Kill a Man, would make ſome to take away a Married Woman. Yes, he believed it, and not without reaſon. The good of Society, without doubt, more than the Love of Vertue, made the Rape of a Married Woman to be look't on as an Enormous Injuſtice, the ill Conſequences of which Sovereigns themſelves dreaded; but it was not look'd upon as ſo great a Matter, if a great Lord enjoyed a Woman that was not Married, to increaſe the number of his Concubines. And therefore Abraham reaſoning ſolidly, might be ſure, that at leaſt the fear of Men would hinder the Ægyptians and the Philiſtines from taking away his Wife, becauſe he would be a perpetual Witneſs of the Violence done to a Married Woman. The reaſonable Concluſion of this was to be afraid, leſt they ſhould privately Diſpatch him, that they might keep Sarah, and yet not be reproached with taking away a Married Woman. This fear is not the worſt paſſage of this Hiſtory. Who does not know the underhand dealings of David, in order to deſtroy the Husband of his Miſtreſs? The deſire of being well treated, as being the Brother of the Beautiful Sarah, is more blameable than the fear of being Killed. However we ought to abhor the Brutality (h) of Fauſtus the Manichee, and content our ſelves with what (i) St. Jerome ſays of the matter. St. Chryſoſtom (k) and St. Ambroſe have found here matter for a Panegyrick on the Charity of Sarah, who was willing, in favour of her Husband, to expoſe her Chaſtity to the greateſt dangers. (l) Extrema adiit, ſororem ſe ejus aſſeruit, contenta ſi ita eſſet neceſſe, periclitari pudore potius quam virum ſalute: ut tueretur maritum mentita eſt germanitatem, ne inſidiatores pudoris ejus tanquam æmulum & vindicem uxoris necarent. Origen was of another Opinion; he found ſo many Scandals in the Litteral Senſe, that he had recourſe to Types and Allegories. Alioquin, ſays he (m), quæ nobis ædificatio erit legentibus Abraham tantum Patriarcham non ſolum mentitum eſſe Regi, ſed pudicitiam conjugis prodidiſſe? Quid nos ædificat tanti Patriarchæ uxor, ſi putetur contaminationibus expoſita per conniventiam maritalem? Hæc Judæi putent & ſi qui ſint amici literæ non ſpiritus. Others (n) have recourſe to Inſpiration, and pretend that Abraham was directed by a Prophetical Spirit. This is the way never to be ſilent. This Remedy ought to be better managed, and never to be uſed but as Extreme Unction. Some (o) apply it to Sarah as to her deſiring her Husband to lie with her Servant Maid. As for thoſe who ſay (p) to excuſe Abraham, that his Life was ſo neceſſary for the accompliſhment of the Divine Promiſes, that he was obliged to preſerve it at any rate, even at the coſt of his Wife's Honour, they confute themſelves: They alledge for his Juſtification, what is againſt him; for if his Life was neceſſary for the fulfilling of the Divine Decrees, he needed not fear to be Killed, he might be ſure none could do it.

The looſe Caſuiſts and Protectors of Equivocations, take advantage of this Conduct of the Patriarch.

Sſſ

(†) Terent. in Heautont. Act. 1. ſc. 1. pag. m. 112.

(g) Geneſ. 20, 11.

(h) He accuſed Abraham, Quod matrimonii ſui infamiſſimus nundinator avaritiæ ac ventris cauſa duobus regibus Abimelech & Pharaoni diverſis temporibus Saram conjugem ſororem mentitus, quod erat pulcherrima, in concubitum venditarit. Vide Auguſtinum contra Fauſtum, l. 22. c. 33.

(i) He calls it fœdam neceſſitatem.

(k) Homil. 32. in Geneſ. See the Remark A in the Article Abimelech.

(l) Ambroſ. de Abrah. c. 2.

(m) In cap. 6. Geneſeos Heidegger. pag. 149. pretends that Origen inſulted and cenſured Abraham, quod per conniventiam maritalem Saram contaminationibus expoſuerit. But how could he reproach him with it, ſince he rejects the Literal Senſe? (n) Paulus Burgenſis apud Heidegg. pag. 149. (o) Joſeph. Antiq. l. 1. c. 10. (p) Apud Heidegger. ubi ſupra.

him, whereby her Chaſtity had ſuffered Shipwrack, if God (C) had not prevented it. A ſingular Providence ſaved her from this Shipwrack, and reſtored her to her Husband, with her Honour ſafe and ſound, beſides the Benefits those two amorous Princes beſtowed on him. This might ſweeten the ſad Experience he had of the Inconveniencies which they find, who carry about with them a Beautiful Wife, which are ſometimes greater, than if they Travelled with an Ugly one. One cannot eaſily clear (D) Abraham and Sarah in this matter, nor about the buſineſs of Hagar; therefore they are in the wrong * who are ſo angry with Calvin, for ſpeaking the Truth on this ſubject. We ought to keep at an equal diſtance from the Irreverence of Fauſtus † the Manichee, and from the ſuperſtitious Flattery of ſome others. The Beauty of Sarah had ſomething peculiar in it, which ought not to be forgoten; viz. that it continued

* See Rivet in Exercit. [illegible] tom. I oper. pag. [illegible] & Heidegg. Hiſt. patr. tom. I. p. [illegible] & the Remark H of this Article.

† See the Remark B.

ated. See the laſt Anſwer (a) to the Lettres Provinciales, that is, the Entretiens de Cleandre & d'Eudoxe.

(C) If God had not prevented it.] The Scripture does not tell us what Evil hindred Pharaoh from Lying with Sarah; it (b) ſays only that God ſtruck him with great Plagues, and all his Houſe. As to Abimelech, it ſays that (c) God threatned him in his Sleep, to kill him with all his Family; but at the end of the Chapter, it ſays, that by Abraham's Prayers, God Cured Abimelech, his Wife, and his Servant Maids, and that afterwards they had Children; for, the Scripture adds, That the Lord had entirely ſhut up the Wombs of the Houſe of Abimelech, becauſe of Sarah the Wife of Abraham. I believe one might rather have killed the Interpreters, than hindred them from making Conjectures upon thoſe Plagues of Pharaoh: The Field is more large in this reſpect, then in relation to Abimelech; for the Scripture ſeems to denote a ſort of Diſtemper, with reſpect to the latter. But they, probably, have judged of the one by the other; and, as it is likely, that the Perſonal Chaſtiſement of Abimelech fell upon the Parts deſigned for Generation, ſince his Wife and his Maid-Servants were Afflicted in thoſe parts, it's believed that it was ſo likewiſe with Pharaoh (d). The Rabbins ſay, (e) he was Tormented with ſo violent a Gonorrhea, that he had no Pleaſure to think of Women, ſo far was he from being able to Lye with them. They add, That Sarah had a Guardian Angel, who ſtruck in ſuch a manner all thoſe ſhe would have him ſtrike, that they had neither the Deſire, nor the Power to come near her; and that it was by means of thoſe Angels that ſhe preſerved her ſelf from the Laſcivious Perſecutions of Pharaoh. Philo ſays only, (f) That this Prince endured inſupportable Pains, and that he had no other Thought but how to be rid of them. All his Court were whipped with the ſame Scourge, becauſe they had aſſiſted or applauded him in the Rape of Sarah. Eupolemon ſays (g) that the Plague got into his Houſe, and that the South-Sayers having anſwered, it was for the Rape of a Woman, he reſtored her without touching her. Joſephus adds (h) Seditions to the Plague. A Modern Author (i), who bears him an ill Will, refutes him. The reaſon he goes upon is, That a Popular Sedition does not hinder a Prince from diverting himſelf with a Woman, and has, no more than that Plague, a particular relation with the Sin of Pharaoh. This Author therefore would have it, that he was afflicted in thoſe Parts that ſhould have been the Inſtrument of his Debauchery, and he confirms his Thought by the Maxim of the Wiſe-Man (k), per quæ peccat quis per eadem & torquetur. Be it as it will, it cannot be denyed, but that Sarah ſtayed ſome time in the Houſes of her Raviſhers: This is certain, at leaſt, as to the laſt Rape, ſince they had leaſure to find out, that it was upon her account that the Wombs of all the Women in the Court of Abimelech were ſhut up. From whence ariſes this ſmall Difficulty? That Prince reſtored Sarah, as ſoon as he was ſhew'd in a Dream, that ſhe was the Wife of Abraham; he therefore knew nothing of it till ſhe had been ſometime in his Houſe. What did he deſign to do with her, ſeeing he let her alone all the time? Was it for this that he took her into his Houſe? Thoſe who make this Objection, know not the cuſtom of the Eaſtern Princes. They have many Wives, and others are procured to them from time to time: But we muſt not fancy that they Careſs them one after another by turns; there are ſome, whoſe turn never comes, tho' they be moſt Beautiful. Abimelech was contented to have Sarah into his Houſe, knowing that he could Lye with her when he pleaſed; but God prevented it, before he choſe his time. We may ſay the ſame of Pharaoh. I don't ſuppoſe him to have been ſo great a Monarch, as to obſerve the Ceremonies that were practiſed in the Court of Perſia, where a Woman (l) that pleaſed the King, was ordered to Waſh and Perfume her ſelf a Year before ſhe was brought to him. I ſhall not therefore inſiſt on the Conjecture of St. (m) Jerom, who explains, by this method, the reaſon why Sarah was ſometime without doing any thing in the Houſe of Pharaoh. But let us ſay of this laſt King, what we have ſaid of the King of the Philiſtines; or we may ſay that they were ſtruck with a dangerous Diſtemper the very firſt day they took her. Joſephus ſays Abimelech was ſo ſick, that his Life was deſpaired of. Others ſpecify the nature of the Evil; (n) they ſay he had ſuch violent Pains in his Genital Parts, that he could not perform the act of Copulation. St. Chryſoſtom and St. Jerom do not well agree; for (o) the firſt maintains, that it required as great a Miracle that Sarah might come out of the Houſe of Pharoah Undefiled, as for Daniel to be ſafe among the Lyons, and the three Hebrew Children in the Fiery Furnace. There's a little difference to be obſerved between the two Narratives of Moſes; he ſays expreſly, that Abimelech did not come near Sarah, but he gives no account whether Pharaoh did it or no. Theodoret (p) believed that the Sacred Hiſtorian uſed that Precaution, with reſpect to Abimelech, to ſtop the Mouth of Slander, becauſe Sarah was broughs to Bed the ſame Year ſhe had been with that Prince.

(D) One cannot eaſily clear Abraham.] For beſides what we have ſaid above, would it not be an Authority for the perverſe Doctrine of Equivocations, if it was once certain that neither he nor Sarah ſpoke an untruth? Thoſe who impugne the ill Morals of Leſſius and ſome other Jeſuits, ſay that thoſe Lie who make Anſwers which have no relation to the Intention of him who asks a Queſtion. Thoſe Anſwers, tho' they contain nothing but Truth, do not ceaſe for all that to be Lying; for Example, if a Son of Cain had been juridically interrogated who he was, with a deſign to know who was his Father, and had anſwered that Cain was his Uncle, he had ſaid nothing but Truth, for his Mother was Cain's Siſter; yet his Anſwer had not been exempt from Deceit. The ſame may be ſaid of Sarah. Abimelech asked her what Relation ſhe had to Abraham; he had all the Right imaginable to ask her, for he was King of the Country; his Intention was to know whether ſhe was Married, or no; and it was upon this that he deſigned to regulate his Conduct as to her. She anſwered, I am Abraham's Siſter; her Husband who had ſuggeſted to her this Anſwer, ſaid on his part, I am Sarah's Brother. Is it not the ſame thing, as if he had anſwered, the Relation of Brother and Siſter is the greateſt Relation that is between us, and would not this Anſwer have been a formal Lye? If one, that knows all the Circumſtances of a great Conſpiracy, ſhould be asked, What do you know of it? Should Anſwer, I know ſuch a thing of it, which is not the chief Matter of the Conſpiracy, would not he be a Deceiver, would he not be a Liar? For his Answer would be Equivalent to this, I only know this. A Commentator ment, at leaſt, till ſhe was (E) 90 Years old. Several Reaſons are given for it. Some ſay, that it was becauſe ſhe had no Children, and becauſe ſhe had (F) renounced all Matrimonial Commerce, after ſhe ſaw her ſelf Barren. In caſe theſe Reaſons do not ſatisfy, there is added to them a particular Providence of God, which, as they ſay, preſerved from all the Attacks of Old Age, the Beauty of Sarah, amongſt

---

(a) Pag. 158. & 159. of the Dutch Edit. 1690.

(b) Geneſ. 12. 17.

(c) Geneſ. 20.

(d) See Pererius in Geneſ. c. 12. v. 17.

(e) Apud Lyranum citante Saliano pag. 413.

(f) In libr. de Abrah.

(g) Apud Euſebium præp. l. 9. c. 4.

(h) Lib. 1. c. 8.

(i) Salian. tom. 1. pag. 413.

(k) Cap. 11. v. 17.

[illegible] upon Geneſis (*), going about to prove that Marriage between Brothers and Siſters was not practis'd in Abraham's time, makes uſe of this Remark. Sarah anſwering, ſays he, that ſhe was Abraham's Siſter, was preſently believed not to be his Wife; therefore, at that time, theſe two Relations were concluded to be incompatible, viz. to be both Siſter and Wife. This reaſoning is falſe; for ſuppoſe that theſe Marriages took place in a Country, the Cuſtom there would be, that the Siſter, after her Marriage, would not be called the Siſter of her Husband, but his Wife; ſo that every Siſter, not call'd the Wife of ſuch a one, but only his Siſter, would be looked upon then not to be his Wife. And for this Reaſon, Abraham and Sarah deceived plainly the Ægyptians and the Philiſtines, by ſuppreſſing the Relation of Marriage, and ſpeaking only of that of Brotherhood; tho' thoſe Nations were not Ignorant of the Compatibility of thoſe Relations. But it was enough to be deceived by Abraham, that they ſhould know that the one ſwallowed up the other, much as the quality of Father abſorbed that of Uncle in the Perſon of [illegible], with reſpect to his Children. In a word, the ſuppreſſion of a Truth is a real Lye, as often as it is deſigned to make the Hearer form a falſe judgment. Abraham and Sarah are in the caſe. Thoſe who deny that Marriages between Brothers and Siſters, were known among the Canaanites, ought to read the Chapter of Leviticus, where Marriages in ſuch and ſuch degrees are forbid. Let us not forget that Iſaac made uſe of the diſſimulation of his Father upon ſuch a like Principle: he ſaid alſo, for fear of being killed, that Rebecah was his Siſter (‡).

(E) The Beauty of Sarah — continued — till ſhe was 90 Years old.] This is proved by the 20 chap. of Geneſis, where 'tis ſaid, that Abraham, being gone into the Country of Guerar, would only paſs for the Brother of Sarah; which was the Reaſon why Abimelech took her into his Houſe with a deſign to Marry her. The Birth of Iſaac had been already foretold this Patriarch: But his Wife was 90 Years old when this happened; therefore &c. I know the Scripture does not ſay, in this Paſſage, that Sarah was Beautiful, but 'tis no hard matter to Collect it from the Circumſtances of that Voyage. We find in the 12th Chapter, that the Reaſon which obliged Abraham to ſay, in Ægypt, that Sarah was his Siſter, was, becauſe he ſaw ſhe was Beautiful, and was afraid of being killed, that ſhe might be the better enjoy'd. Sarah no ſooner appeared, but ſhe was taken into the King's Houſe. There's no doubt but Abraham diſſembled his Marriage in Guerar upon the ſame Motive. He himſelf declares, That (a) he was afraid of being killed becauſe of his Wife; he knew therefore ſhe was Beautiful enough to inſpire Love. The event ſpeaks it clearly; for as ſoon as ſhe was ſeen, the King of Guerar took her to make her his Wife. It was without doubt for her Beauty; for to ſay with Father Salianus, that he took her as a Venerable Widow, who underſtood the Management of a Houſe, and as the Siſter of a Man whoſe Alliance he looked on, to be very Advantageous to him, is a meer Illuſion. It's probable, that Abraham went only into the Country of the Philiſtins to avoid the Famine that purſued him; it was therefore eaſy for the King of that Country to gain Abraham without making himſelf a Sacrifice to a Widow of fourſcore Years of Age. He would have purchaſed, at a dear rate, the Friendſhip of Abraham, if Sarah had been decay'd as Commonly Women are at that Age. Let us therefore acknowledge as a certain Truth, that ſhe was ſtill a Beautiful Woman. A good Father Capuchin (b) of Paris imagined pleaſantly that Abimelec took Sarah only upon a Religious Account: He was, ſays he, a holy King and a Prophet, and took her only to Converſe with her about matters of Devotion and the next life. He thought this Reverend Mother wou'd teach him many things concerning the Kingdom of God. But would he have been Chaſtiſed for ſuch good and Spiritual Intentions? What a ſtrange fancy! Fleſh and Blood, without doubt, would have had a greater ſhare in their Diſcourſes than devotion if he had been let alone.

We ought not to mind the Thought of Hugo à S. Victore; the Conſequences of it are dangerous. Let us not open a Breach in the Holy Scripture; Prophane Men would enter into it that way, like Wolves into a Sheep-fold, and commit a thouſand Diſorders. This Author pretends (c) that Moſes has not put in its place the taking away of Sarah by Abimelech, but in a time diſtant from the true time above 30 Years. Nor ought we to have recourſe to the Expedient of thoſe who ſay (d), that 'tis no greater wonder that Sarah ſhould have been handſome at 90, than to ſee a handſome Woman at 40 ſo now a days: for, ſay they, Women lived then to be 130 Years, as now about 80. By their leave, they Calculate wrong: Where would they find, according to their Suppuſtation, the Deadneſs of Sarah's Womb, of which the Apoſtle ſpeaks (e)? Why did it ceaſe to be with Sarah (f) after the manner of Women! What would become of Abraham's Celebrated Faith with reſpect to the Birth of Iſaac? Is it ſtrange, at this day, that a Woman at 40, ſhould Conceive? Let us adjuſt their Calculation: 90 Years are to 130 much as 56 to 80. It's therefore with our Beauties of 56 Years that we muſt compare Sarah. Now I confeſs that tho' it be very rare that a Woman of 56 ſhould be taken away for her Beauty, much leſs be deſign'd for the Bed of a Sovereign, as a dainty and Royal bit, yet there are ſome for all that, that have Beautiful Remains at that Age. See what I have related elſewhere out of Brantome concerning Joan of Arragon and the Dutcheſs of Valentinois. We may therefore ſay, without having recourſe to Miracles, which ought to be kept as much as poſſible for a great neceſſity, that the good Conſtitution of Sarah, and her being exempt from lying in and Nurſing, might preſerve her Beauty even to the Age of 90. Procopius (g) thinks that when ſhe was made capable of Conceiving, ſhe recovered her loſt Beauty, and that God, by a ſpecial Favour, made her thoſe two Preſents at once. Procopius may ſay what he pleaſes.

(F) Renounced all Matrimonial Commerce.] Let us cite Pererius: (h) Deinde id accidit Saræ ob ſummam ejus caſtitatem & continentiam, quippe quæ ſtatim ut ſenſit ſe ſterilem & invalidam ad generandum abſtinuit a copula carnali, ut ſupra oſtendimus ſuper illis verbis quæ ſunt in capite 18. Poſtquam conſenui &c. It will not be improper to ſee on what he grounds his Opinion. He makes uſe of theſe Words of Sarah, Poſtquam conſenui & Dominus meus vetulus eſt voluptati operam dabo (i)? That is, After I am waxed old, ſhall I have pleaſure, my Lord being old alſo? Theſe are two difficulties that Sarah raiſed after the Promiſe that was made to Abraham, that his Wife ſhould be brought to Bed of a Son the Year following. Muſt I then, ſaid ſhe, notwithſtanding my great Age, receive the Careſſes of my Husband! this is the firſt Difficulty: but is not my Husband too old for that! This is the Second Difficulty. I think we cannot reaſonably deny to this Author that the Words of Sarah ſignify, that ſhe and her Husband obſerved a perfect Continence; but all the reſt is nothing but meer Conjecture, viz. That they had already above 14 Years agreed on a mutual Abſtinence; that is to ſay, from the time that Hagar became the Concubine of Abraham. But let us ſuppoſe it to be ſo: We muſt infer from thence, that Sarah put an end to Matrimonial Joys when ſhe came to be 75 Years of Age. How comes Pererius to draw from this one of his Reaſons, why the Beauty of that Lady was preſerved to 90 Years? (k) intemperantia Veneris cito mulierem inveterat & vehementer deformat ac turpat. That is to ſay, the immoderate uſe of Venereal Pleaſures make Women look Old, and Ugly. Be it ſo. I leave the diſcuſſion of it to Phyſicians: But does it follow from thence, that a total abſtinence from that Exerciſe puts off old Age, and preſerves the Beauty of Women? No

(a) Geneſ. 20. 11.

(c) Apud Pererium 1. diſput. in Geneſ. c. 20.

(d) Id. ib.

(e) Rom. 4. 19.

(f) Geneſ. 18. 11.

(g) Addit Procopius divinitus cum fœcunditate Saræ reſtauratam fuiſſe priſtinam pulchritudinem. Cornel. à Lapide in Geneſ. pag. 149.

(h) Pererius in Geneſ. c. 20. v. 2. Torniellus & Cornelius a Lapide are of the ſame Opinion.

(i) Geneſ. 18. 12.

(k) Perer. in Geneſ. cap. 20. diſput. 1.

mongſt other Motives, to try the Faith of (G) Abraham. This was little minded by thoſe, who in the heat of their Homilies exaggerated ſo much (G Δ) her Decay, to make the greater Wonder of the Milk that filled her Breaſts. It's pretended † that ſhe had ſo great a plenty of it, that ſhe was forced to take ſeveral Children to Nurſe; and that the day that Iſaac was weaned, ſhe gave all the Children of thoſe that came to the Feaſt, her Breaſt to ſuck. They add, That ſhe her ſelf would ſuckle her Son, to remove all ſuſpicions of his being a ſuppoſititious Child. St. Chryſoſtome approves * this Thought. There's no probability that this holy Woman died of Grief, when ſhe was told that Iſaac was Sacrificed by Abraham; and we may boldly place this among the Fables of the Rabbins ‖. Joſephus ſays, that Sarah died a little after the return of her Husband and Son; But, according to his own Calculation, ſhe lived 22 Years longer; for he ſays with the Scripture, that ſhe was 90 Years old when ſhe was brought to Bed of Iſaac, and 127 when ſhe died; and on the other hand, he aſſures us, that Iſaac was 25 Years old when his Father would have ſacrificed him.

It's here that I muſt ſhew, 1. That Calvin is wrongly (H) accuſed of having Logician will find any ſtrength in ſuch ſort of Conſequences, generally ſpeaking, conſidering the great number of things, of which the two Extreams are bad, and pernicious both for the Body and Soul. In particular, the Conſequence here in Queſtion, is ſtrongly impugned by Phyſicians (a). But if we would be ſo Complaiſant, as to grant it to Pererius, what Service would it do him in relation to Sarah, who, according to him, deprived her ſelf of the Matrimonial right, only at the Age of 75 Years.

---

(G) To try the Faith of Abraham.] This ſeems at firſt ſight to be very ſtrange; for one can ſcarce conceive a greater Temporal Happineſs, then the perpetual Beauty of that which one Loves. What Vows or Wiſhes are ſo favourable to new Married Perſons, as to wiſh that they may never ſeem old one to another?

Diligat (b) ipſa ſenem quondam, ſed & illa marito
Tunc quoque cum fuerit non videatur anus.

But if you conſider it well, you'l find that for a Man who is to Travel with a Family, a Beautiful Woman is no little Burthen; and Abraham found it ſo, and may ſerve for an Example. What fears was he not under of being killed, and what mortifying Expedients was he not obliged to have recourſe to? Be it as it will, a Famous Divine of Zurich (c) ſpoke in this manner: Puto pulcritudinis Saræ cauſam non fuiſſe aliam quam ſupernaturale Dei donum & ſpecialem ejuſdem providentiam, qui eam in extrema ſenectute voluit fieri matrem Iſaci, atque ſimul cotem fidei & patientia Abrahami, quæ in hac ob formam uxoris immiſſa tentatione non parum explorata fuit.

(G Δ) Exaggerate ſo much her decay.] St Chryſoſtome ſays, That the Rod of Moſes, which made Water ſpring out of the Rock, wrought a leſs difficult Miracle, than was done when Milk ſprung out of Sarah's Breaſts. (d) Non ſic admirabile fuit quod ex petra in deſerto ſcaturierint fontes aquarum quando illam virga Moyſes percuſſit, ſicut de vulva jam emortua puerum naſci, & lactis fontes ſcaturire. Here are the Words of another Father: (e) Portabat uterum gravem talis mater quæ inanis ambulare vix poterat——— Marcidæ mammæ quas in vacuos folles ſubducti ſucci detrimenta laxaverant, lactei fontis ubertate tenduntur.

(H) Calvin is wrongly accuſed.] Let us begin with the Word of the Accuſer. (f) Non eſt prætereundum impie loqui Calvinum qui Saram quaſi lenam & Abraham quaſi adulterum ancillæ ſuæ carpit. Theſe Words, and many others that follow, are ſo like thoſe of Cornelius à Lapide, that there's Reaſon to think Merſennus tranſcribed them from him. His Work was Printed in 1623. and that of Cornelius à Lapide in 1616. (g) Carpit hic Calvinus Saram quaſi lenam, Abram quaſi adulterum ancillæ ſuæ Agar. This Calumny againſt Calvin goes yet higher: I have, as much as I could, ſought for the firſt Author of it, but I dare not ſay, I have found him in the Perſon of Feuardentius. What is certain is, that this Monk preceded the Minime (h), and the Jeſuit (i) whom I have cited. His Accuſation was not well known to Leonard Coqueus, who infallibly would have named Calvin, and cited the Theomachia Calviniſtica, if he had known what is to be found there. He has done neither of them; his Reproaches are indeterminate; they fall in general upon the Hereticks, cites another Work of Feuardentius. He ſays that Fauſtus the Manichee blamed the Conduct of the Patriarch Abraham, as a thing that betrayed (k) a great Incredulity, and an ardent Deſire of having Children; and afterwards he adds: (l) Refert etiam Feuardentius in appendice ad libros Alphonſi à Caſtro contra hæreſes lib. 1. verbo Abraham, quoſdam hæreticos modernos ——— non minus impios fuiſſe in ſanctiſſimum Patriarcham Abrahamum, ut ei crimen adulterii impingant. Theſe are the Accuſations particularly bent againſt Calvin. “(m) Piiſſimam aviam Chriſti Saram multis vexat contumeliis, multis jactat injuriis: (1) Sarai rationem alienam a verbo Dei apud ſe quærit. In ipſo progreſſu non leviter peccavit, quod orbitatis impatiens, a verbo Dei diſceſſit. Obrepit deſperatio. Connubii legem pervertit, lectum conjugalem polluendo. Nec culpa etiam vacat Abram, quod ſtulto ac præpoſtero uxoris conſilio obſequutus eſt. Reprehenſione digna eſt Abrahæ facilitas. Utriuſque autem claudicat fides. Dei virtutem non debuit alligare ordini naturæ, vel reſtringere ad ſuum ſenſum. Et in ſequentibus: (2) Admittit concubinam quæ inſtar pellicis futura erat. Ad eandem qua ipſa fervebat impatientiam maritum ſollicitat. Vacillat quidem Abrahæ fides, cum à verbo Dei declinans, uxoris impulſu ad remedium prohibitum transferre ſe patitur. Momento uno tentationi ſuccumbit. Deinde, doloſiſſimo ſchemate utens, id ipſum quod negare ſe de illa fingit, palam adfirmat: (3) Neque enim domui ſuæ voluit erigere lupanar, nec ancillæ ſuæ productrix, vel mariti lena eſſe——— O hominem in diſputando vafrum, veteratorem, & malitioſum! Ecquid enim aliud eſt Abra, uxorem proſtituere, pudicitiam ejus nudare præſidio, pudicitiam prodere (quod Calvinus palam tribuit Abrahæ) quam ei lenocinari? Aut quid, Conjugii legem pervertere, lectum conjugalem polluere, pellicem viro quærere & ſubminiſtrare, alienam in thorum mariti inducere (quorum à Calvino inſimulatur Sara) quam domi ſuæ lupanar erigere, & mariti lenam eſſe, quod hic ſimulate Calvinus negat & damnat?” One may obſerve two Frauds in the proceeding of that Cordelier. He ſuppreſſes the Expreſſions, wherein Calvin Endeavours to extenuate the Fault of Sarah and Abraham: this is the firſt foul play. He aſſerts impudently, That Calvin uſes a ſhameful turn of Sophiſtry, to accuſe, in effect, under a falſe appearance of Negation, this Holy Woman of having been a ——— to her Husband. This is, the ſecond Fraud, and it may be called a dreadful Calumny. The free manner with which Calvin judges of the Conduct of the Husband and the Wife, clearly ſhews he uſes no ſhifts or Deviations: He ſpeaks his Thoughts with the greateſt liberty; and makes uſe of all the Right, that Reaſon and Scripture give us of paſſing our Judgment upon the quality of an Action. It's therefore manifeſt, that he ſpeaks ſincerely, when he denies that Sarah was a —— &c. This appears further by the Words which follow, and which Feuardentius has ſuppreſſed. (n) Improprie tamen vocatur uxor, quæ præter Dei legem in alienum thorum inducitur. Quare ſciamus hunc concubitum hic illicitum fuiſſe ut inter ſcortationem & conjugium quaſi medius fuerit. Idem omnibus commentis accidit quæ Dei verbo aſſuuntur. Quamlibet enim honeſto tegantur prætextu corruptela ſubeſt, quæ a verbi puritate degenerat, eamque vitiat. This is the Language of a plain and ſincere Caſuiſt; one may therefore be well aſſured that this is the worſt that Calvin had a mind to ſay. Now, he ſays clearly, That the Commerce of Abraham and Hagar run a middle courſe between he belch'd out the the moſt abuſive words againſt Sarah, becauſe ſhe deſired her Huſband to make uſe of their Maid-Servant. 2. That St. Auguſtin has not made a good Apology (I) for Abraham.

---

† See Pererius in Geneſ. c. 21. Salian. pag. 4[illegible] 474.

* Homil. 45. in Geneſ.

‖ Who ſay ſo apud Toſtatum. See Salian pag. 489.

(a) See Gaſpar a Reies, Elyſio jucund. quæſt. Campo, quæſt. 36. where he maintains quod omnimoda coitus omiſſio magna damna parit præſertim in aſſuetis, in fœminis frequentiſſime, in viris rariſſime & cum minori noxa.

(b) Martial. l. 4. epigr. 13.

(c) Heidegg. hiſt. Patr. tom. 2. pag. 148. Rivet ſaid the ſame before him. Oper. t. 1. pag. 277. & Pererius in Geneſ. ſaid ſo before Rivet.

(d) Chryſoſt. homil. 46.

(e) Auguſt. Serm. 68. de temp.

(f) Merſennus obſervat. in problemata Veneti n. 119. pag. 165.

(g) Cornel. à Lapide in Geneſ. cap. 16. v. 2. pag. 170. edit. 1623.

(h) Father Merſenne.

(i) Cornelius à Lapide.

SARISBERIENSIS * (Joannes) an Engliſh Man, Biſhop of Chartres, was Born about the Year 1110. He went into France at the Age of 16 or 17. He afterwards had a Commiſſion from the King his Maſter, to go and ſtay with Pope Eugenius about the Affairs of England. Some would have play'd him an ill trick in that Court, and falſely accuſed him; but at laſt the Truth came to light, and he ſtaid with Eugenius, with all the Favours he deſerved. He was ſtill more eſteem'd by the Succeſſor of that Pope, and being recalled into England, he received great marks of Eſteem from Thomas Becket who was then High Chancellor. This Chancellor wholly governed his Maſter Henry II. and as he wanted aſſiſtance under ſo heavy a Burden—he made uſe of the Counſel of Joannes Sariſberienſis, eſpecially about the Education of the King's eldeſt Son, and of many young Noble Engliſh Lords, whom he had undertaken to Educate in good Manners and Learning. He deſired him alſo to take care of his Houſe, as long as he was in his Voyage of Guienne with the King his Maſter. Being returned from that Voyage, he was made Arch-Biſhop of Canterbury, and left the Court to reſide in his Dioceſe. Sariſberienſis Accompanied him, and faithfully followed him, when this Prelate was obliged to retire into France, and when about ſeven Years after he was recalled into England. It is well known that he was Murder'd in his own Archiepiſcopal Church. Sariſberienſis undertook to ward off a Blow that one of the Aſſaſſins aimed at the Head of his Maſter, but between Fornication and Marriage. Feuardentius has ſuppreſſed this Remarkable paſſage of Calvin's Commentary: (a) Benedictione (quam ſciebat divinitus promiſſam eſſe) potiundæ voto, conjugalem thorum ſponte alteri cedit—— ſic laudabile fuit votum Saræ quoad finem vel ſcopum in quem tendebat, ut tamen in ipſo progreſſu non leviter peccarit—— Utriuſque autem claudicavit fides, non in ſubſtantia quidem, ſed in medio ipſo (ut loquuntur) vel agendi ratione.

Obſerve, That Copiers are very apt to magnify things. Cornelius a Lapide and Marinus Merſennus ſay plainly and abſolutely, That Calvin accuſes Sarah of ——— and Abraham of Adultery. Feuardentius was contented to ſay, that the Accuſation was propos'd indirectly, and under a deceitful ſhew of a juſtification.

(I) St. Auguſtin has not made a good Apology for Abraham.] He made uſe of 4 Reaſons. The 1ſt is, That Abraham was not induced to this Act by a Motion of ſenſual Love, but to have Children: (b) Uſus eſt ea (concubina) quippe ad generandam prolem, non ad explendam libidinem. The 2d is, That he did it, not to do an injury to his Wife, but to pleaſe her, and to give her the Conſolation that her State of barrenneſs required. The 3d is, That this Conduct was grounded upon the Right, which St. Paul ſpeaks of in the 7th Chap. of the 1. Epiſtle to the Corinthians: Likewiſe Man has no Power over his own Body, but the Woman. There is here no Fault, neither on the Woman's, nor on the Man's ſide; ſhe gives her Maid to her Husband, in hopes of Iſſue, and he takes her on the ſame proſpect. (c) Nulla eſt hic cupido laſciviæ, nulla nequitiæ turpitudo. Ab uxore cauſa prolis ancilla marito traditur, a marito cauſa prolis accipitur; ab utroque non culpæ luxus ſed naturæ fructus exquiritur. The 4th Reaſon is, That Abraham ſent away Hagar as ſoon as his Wife would have it ſo. I have cited elſewhere (d) the Words of St. Auguſtin on this Subject: Leonard Coquæus, a Commentator upon that Father, makes no difficulty to refute him. He oppoſes to the firſt Reaſon this Axiom of St. Paul, (e) Ill muſt not be done that Good may come, and the Common Doctrine of the Moraliſts, That a good action requires not only a good Motive, but alſo a matter that is lawful. (f) Ad quod ſit actio honeſta, requiritur non modo bonus finis & reliquæ circumſtantiæ, verum etiam quod ſit circa debitam materiam. This affords him the Refutation of the Second Reaſon; for if the Commerce of the Patriarch with his Maid was bad in it ſelf, it did not become lawful by the compliance of Abraham with the Deſire of Sarah: The Counſels or Suggeſtions of a Wife do not clear a Husband as to Unlawful things; which appears clearly by the Fall of our firſt Father Adam, who, in vain, alledged the perſuaſions of his Wife. The third Reaſon is not better; for a Wife cannot convey to another the Right, of which St. Paul ſpeaks, no more than a Husband can yield to another Man the right of which the ſame Apoſtle ſpeaks. (g) Non poteſt uxor jus illud quod habet in corpus viri transferre in alteram mulierem, ut congreſſum viri ſui cum alia muliere aſſenſu ſuo poſſit facere licitum, ut nec vir poteſt transferre in alterum virum illud jus quod habet in uxorem. Leonard Coquæus ſays nothing on the 4th Reaſon, becauſe he did not look upon it as part of the Apology: But the moſt ſtupid may eaſily perceive, that it only ſerves to ſhew, that the Patriarch was not moved to it by any Impurity. 'Tis a good thing quickly and eaſily to quit an unlawful Engagement, but it does not prove that the Enjoyment was lawful. This Commentator ſuppoſes, that St. Auguſtin did not alledge theſe Reaſons as Proofs of the Purity of the Commerce of Abraham and Hagar, but only as Proofs that refuted the aſſertion of the Manichees, who affirm'd that this Patriarch was deſperately in Love with Hagar, and lay with her only to ſatisfy his Paſſion. He ſuppoſes alſo, that the ſame Father knew very well the Reaſon that cleared Abraham, which was, that there was a true Marriage between Hagar and her Maſter. He examines afterwards the 3 Reaſons of St. Ambroſe. The firſt is taken from this, That Abraham lived before the Law of God forbad Adultery. (h) Abraham ante legem Moyſi & ante Evangelium fuit, cum nondum interdictum adulterium videretur, pœna criminis ex tempore legis eſt, quæ crimen inhibuit, nec ante legem ulla rei damnatio eſt. The 2d is the ſame with the firſt and ſecond of St. Auguſtin. The 3d is taken from this, That the Conjunction of Abraham and Hagar was one of the Types of the Old Teſtament. The Commentator obſerves (i), That Sixtus Senenſis (k) found in the firſt Reaſon of St. Ambroſe, two Principles that diſagree with the Common Opinion of Divines; the firſt, That the Action of Abraham was an Adultery; the 2d, That Adultery was at that time lawful, ſeeing the Law had not forbid it. He maintains that Hagar was the lawful Wife of Abraham, and that Adultery was a Crime even before it was forbid by any poſitive Law, ſince it was contrary to the Law of Nature: (l) Erat tamen per ſe illicitum & prohibitum lege divina naturali. As to the 3d Reaſon of St. Ambroſe, he refutes it by this Aphoriſm, that the quality of a Type does not influence any Morality into things, and by conſequence does not take from them what is bad. Plerunque, ſays St. Gregory (m), res qualibet per hiſtoriam virtus eſt, per ſignificationem culpa, & aliquando res geſta in facto cauſa damnationis eſt, in ſcripto autem prophetia virtutis. St. Auguſtin follows the ſame Principle. In peccatis, ſaith he (n), magnorum virorum aliquando rerum futurarum figuram animadverti & indagari poſſe.

Let us obſerve here 4 things. In the firſt place, Coquæus makes St. Auguſtin take an unjudicious and unſincere courſe. He knew, ſays he, the true Proof of the Innocence of Abraham, and ſuppreſſed it; he contented himſelf with clearing him as to the reproach of being in (a) Calvin. in c. [illegible] v. 5.

(b) Auguſt. de Civit. Dei lib. 16. c. 25.

(c) Ibid.

(d) In the Remark Δ of the Article Agar.

(e) Rom. 3. 8.

(f) Leonh. Coquæus ubi ſupra pag. 351.

(g) Id. ibi.

(h) Ambroſ lib. 1: de Abrah. cap. 4. apud Leonh. Coqueum ibid.

(i) Leonh. Coqueus ib. p. 352.

(k) Sixt. Senenſis bibl. ſanctæ lib. 5. annot. 94. apud Coqueum ibid.

(l) Idem Coqueus ibid.

(m) Gregor. lib. 3. Moral. c. 16. apud Coqueum ib.

(n) Auguſt lib. 3. de doctr. Chriſt. c. 23. apud eund. ib.

but he received it on his Arm: The wound was so great, that the Surgeons, who took care of it very near a Year, dispaired of his Cure. It's pretended that he was Cured by a Miracle of Thomas Becket. He was made Bishop of Chartres at (A) the earnest intreaty of the Province some Years after; and he lived in this Episcopal See with the same Manners, and the same Virtue he had always preached and recommended in his Writings. He died about the Year 1182 *. He composed, among (B) other Books, a Treatise in Latin of the Vanity of the Court. He was one of the greatest Wits of his Age, and one of the most polite and most able Men in good Literature †.

SAWICKI (GASPAR) a Jesuit Born at Vilna in Lithuania in 1542. He entred into the Society at Rome in 1566, and after having studied Divinity, he returned into Poland and taught Controversy at Vilna. He was for 9 Years Prefect of the Novices at Cracow, and Superior of the professed House during five Years in the same City. He had in other Places no less Honourable Employments. He was also a Preacher. He followed the Ambassadors of Poland into Muscovy, and was a great assistance to them during the 3 Years of a close Imprisonment he spent with them. Notwithstanding his great Age, and his Sickness, he was obliged to accept the Office of Procurator of the Jesuits at Rome, and acquitted himself very well in it: But as he was returning into Poland, he died in a Waggon near Francfort is Love with his Servant Maid. But was this enough? Had not the Manichees scope enough to load him with Reproaches, tho' they had granted that he was not in love with his Maid? 'Tis therefore to such Reproaches that St. Augustin ought to have answered, and he did certainly do it. He pretended, that supposing the Circumstances, as he supposed them, he could justify a Man who lay with his Wife's Maid. But was there ever a looser Morality than his? Would not one at this Day run down the Bauni's, and the Escobar's, if they taught that provided a Man thinks only of leaving behind him some Successors, his Wife may desire him to lie with her Maid, and he may follow her Counsel? Do not tell me that St. Augustin considers only the Age that Abraham lived in; for since he is grounded upon the right which St. Paul gives to a Husband over his Wife, and to a Wife over her Husband, he pretends, without doubt, to Account for all times. We have seen in another (a) place what he says of the Action of Acindynus. My second Remark is, That the Doctrine of Calvin is much purer on this point then that of the Ancient Fathers. He Condemns plainly, without going about the Bush, the Conduct of Abraham and Sarah. He fetches no Excuse for them from the use of Poligamy already established among the Nations; he says it was not for them to oppose the Law that tyes married Persons one with another. (b) Nec valet excusatio quod concubinam uxoris loco esse voluerit, quia fixum illud manere debuerat, mulierem viro adjunctam esse, ut essent duo in carnem unam. Tametsi jam polygamia apud multos invaluerat, legem tamen illam qua duo inter se mutuo obligantur convellere nunquam fuit in hominum arbitrio. Nay, he observes, that the Fall of Abraham ought to set us upon our Guard against the Ambushes of Satan, who Attacks us, not only by Persons that are manifestly Criminal, but also by good People. (c) Porro cum Sarai tam sancta mulier instar flabelli, ad eandem qua ipsa fervebat impatientiam maritum sollicitet: hinc discamus quam sedulo nobis agenda sint excubiæ ne qua occulta fraude nos circumveniat Satan. Neque enim improbos tantum & sceleratos subornat qui ex professo fidem nostram oppugnent: sed ut incautos opprimat, clam interdum ac furtim per bonos & simplices nos adoritur. In the 3d place, I observe that the liberty Calvin took of Censuring severely the Action of Sarah and Abraham, is of much greater use to Christian Morality than the pains the Fathers have taken to justify Abraham and his Wife. They have sacrificed the general Interests of Morality to the Reputation of a Private Person: I could almost find in my heart to apply to all those, who are animated with that Spirit, this fine saying (d) of Cicero: Urbem philosophia proditis dum castella defenditis. Lastly, I Remark, That Josephus supposes a thing, of which the Scripture has not a word; (e) That God Commanded Sarah to put Hagar in her Husband's Bed. Here is exactly the Deus ex machina of the Tragick Poets; and the ancora sacra of the Proverb. Many Commentators upon Genesis alledge the Authority of this Historian, and observe that St. Augustin has insinuated the same thing. (f) Idem insinuat S. Augustinus lib. 10. contra Faust. c. 32. There is no Gordian Knot but may be broke that way.

* Taken from the Life of Joannes Sarisberiensis prefixed to the French Translation of his Book de Nugis Curialium.

---

(A) He was made Bishop of Chartres —— some Years after.] Here is again one of those Writers of Elogies, (g) who neglect the Dates. He could not mark in a more uncertain manner the time of the promotion of Joannes Sarisberiensis to that Bishoprick, since the Year of the Death of Thomas Becket is not observed by him. Let us supply this Defect, and say that this Archbishop was killed about the end of the Year 1170. This is certain, but it's not agreed in what Year Joannes Sarisberiensis was made Bishop of Chartres. Vossius (h) says it was in 1164, but he's mistaken. Father Labbe (i) who reproves him for it, places the promotion of that Bishop in 1172, and adds, that he died in 1182 and was buried in the Abbey of Notre Dame de Josaphat. Father Oudin (k) says the same. But M. du Pin has not followed their Chronology, except in the Year of his Death. Joannes Sarisberiensis, says he (l), was at last made Bishop of Chartres in 1179. and dyed 3 Years after.

(B) He composed, among other Books, a Treatise in Latin of the Vanity of the Court.] This is a much noted Book, and there are many Editions of it. It's title is, Policraticus, sive de nugis Curialium, & vestigiis philosophorum. Father Labbe (m) tells us that the first Edition is that of Paris 1513, and that Constantin Frandinus procured it. I make use of the Leyden Edition, ex officina Plantiniana apud Franciscum Raphelengium 1595. in 8. M. du Pin looks upon it as an excellent Book (n) "upon the Employs, "the Duties, the Virtues and Vices of Great Men, "and especially of Princes and great Lords; which "contains an Infinity of moral Thoughts, Sentences, "fine passages of Authors, Examples, Apologues, "pieces of History and common Topicks". Lipsius says, 'tis (o) a Rhapsody, that contains many pieces of Purple, and Fragments of a better Age. In quo centone multos pannos purpuræ agnosco & fragmenta ævi melioris. Janus Douza uses this Author too severely; for he puts him in the Class of Compilers, who take on every hand, and are like Horace's Crow. Omnium disertissime, says he (p) quoting the Testimonies of Authors who have said, that a certain Work-man had found out the Secret of making Glass malleable, Joannes Saresberiensis, quamvis ab exemplis supra dictis in partem nonnihil dissentiens, libro de Nugis Curialium IV. cap. V. qui Policraticus inscribitur, non quidem de suo, ne quid erres, sed verò de alieno (id quod Corniculæ isti cum fartoribus illis semipriscis, Solino puta, Macrobio, Isidoro, atque aliis ejusdem farinæ mangonibus commune) solens utique, præsertim de Satura Arbitri nostri. See what James Thomasius (q) has answered to this Censure of Douza. Note, That this Work of Joannes Sarisberiensis has been translated into French, and printed at Paris in 4°. 1640. with the Title, Les Vanitez de la Cour. The Author of the Translation only puts for his Name D. M. at the Bottom of his Epistle Dedicatory to the Marquis d'Asserac.

His other Books are Metalogicus, seu tractatus de Logica, Philosophia, &c. Printed at Paris 1610. and Leiden 1639. in 8°. Vita atque passio Sancti Thomæ Cantuariensis Archiepiscopi & Martyris. A Book of Letters published at Paris 1611. in 4°. Ex Bibliotheca Papyrii Massonis. Seven other Historical Letters

---

(a) See the Remarks in the Article Acindynus (Septimius.)

(b) Calvin. ubi supra v. 1.

(c) Id. ib. v. 2. See also what he says soon after.

(d) See the Article Francis I. Remark N.

(e) Σάῤῥα τοῦ Θεοῦ κελεύσαντος ἐπικλίνει μίαν τῶν θεραπαινίδων. Sara Deo jubente in thalamum ejus adducit unam famularum. Joseph. lib. 1. antiq. c. 11. pag. 19. C.

(f) Cornel. a Lapide ubi supra. See also Marsennus ubi supra.

(h) Vossi de histor. Latinis pag. 4

(i) Labbe, dissert. de script. Eccles. tom. 1. pag. 606.

(k) Oudin in supplem. de scriptor. Eccles. pag. 441.

(l) Du Pin, Bibl. des Auteurs Eccles. tom. 9. pag. 15 Dutch Edit.

(m) Labbe ubi supra.

(n) Du Pin ubi supra.

(o) Lipsius in Tacit. Ann. lib. 12.

(p) Janus Douza Præcid. in Petronium lib. 3. cap. p. m. 1595.

(q) Thomas. de plagio literar. pag. 140.

[illegible] upon the Ides, the 10th of January 1608. He Compoſed many Books (Y), wherein inſtead of his own Name he took a Suppoſititious one. I do not believe now that 'tis he, who treated (Z) Eraſmus ill, in a Book Publiſhed under the Name of Gaſpar Cicocius.

SCALA (BARTHOLOMEW) a Learned Man in the XVth Century, was Born at Florence in * 1424. He was the Son of a Miller (A); but he raiſed himſelf by his Induſtry and Learning. He was a Domeſtick of Coſmo de Medicis, afterwards the Florentins (B) raiſed him by degrees to ſeveral conſiderable Imployments, and ennobled him, and placed him in the Senate. He was alſo Secretary † to that Republick. He writ Latin tolerably well for thoſe times, but with ſome Barbariſms β. Politian having Criticiſed on a little Poem of Scala, [illegible] to a Quarrel, which encreaſed much γ by Anſwers and Replies. [illegible] Scala bore him δ already a private Grudge, becauſe many Letters [illegible] in the Name of the Republick had not Pleaſed Laurence de Medicis, who had given orders to Politian to write others. Be it as it will, Scala undertook to write the Hiſtory of Florence, from the Foundation of that City till 1450. His Work comprehends Twenty Books, but he only compleated Five, becauſe Death ſtopped his Career. Yet he lived Seventy Three Years, for he died in 1497. He alſo Compoſed the Life of Vitalian Borromeo, and an Harangue to (C) Innocent VIII § &c. Alexandra SCALA his Daughter was Learned in Greek and Latin, as I ſhall ſhew, and by that means ſhe Married a Learned Greek. Politian Praiſed her much, † Voſſius de Hiſt. Lat pag. 616.

β [illegible] minime Gratæ, & [illegible] in Miſcellanea Gratiæ, Polit. epiſt. [illegible] & 19. l. 12.

γ See the 12. Book of Politian's Letters. You'll find alſo 5 Letters of Scala in the 5th.

δ [illegible] tem [illegible] qui que literas illum ſæpe tuas publice ſe ipſum rejeciſſe, nobiſque dediſſe formandas, quæ prima odii livoriſque in me tui cauſa extitit. Polit. epiſt. 18. l. 12.

---

ters inſerted by du Chesne, in the 4th Volume of his Collection of the Hiſtorians of France. There are many other Letters of our Author found among thoſe of Thomas Becket, Collected by Father Lupus, and Printed at Bruſſels in 1682. in Two Volumes in 4to. Baleus gives out that this Biſhop compoſed a Comment upon the (a) Brunellus of Vigelli; but a learned Critick denies it (b) for this Reaſon, becauſe that Poem was Dedicated to William de Long-Champ, whom Richard, King of England, made Biſhop of Ely, in 1189, and who died in Exile in 1197. Fifteen Years after the Biſhop of Chartres, who is the Subject of this Article.

(Y) He Compoſed many Books, wherein inſtead of his true Name.] That which he Intitled, Anatomia conſilii editi de ſtabilienda pace Regni Poloniæ, Jeſuitis pulſis, was Publiſhed in 1611, under the Name of Gaſpar Cicbocki. He Publiſhed in the Poliſh Tongue a Dialogue, Curſoris & Nautæ in quo de violenta Gedanenſium Monialium S. Brigittæ per Hæreticos facta proſcriptione narratio inſtituitur; and he took the Name of Lunowski. He Compoſed under that of John Golubski, (c) Replica rumorum Poſnanienſium ab hæretico Miniſtro per Pruſſiam ſparſorum. Triplica contra duplicam Miniſtri Toruntenſis. Mirabilis concordia, ſeu potius veriſſima rabies Evangelicorum inter ſe, contra Joannem Tuiecki Hæreticum.

(Z) That he treated Eraſmus ill.] Father Theophilus Raynaud having mention'd ſome things very Diſadvantageous to Eraſmus, refers his Reader to Gaſpar Chicocius: (d) Videndus qui varias ejus impietates & adverſus eum judicia ſapientum addenſat Gaſpar Chicocius, lib. 1. Alloquiorum cap. 19. & 20. Guy Patin, who knew Books well, and had a good Library, was ſhort in the matter: 'Tis probable he thought he could hear no News of that Book at Paris, ſince he conſulted the Oracle at Lyons, I mean the Author himſelf, who had cited Chicocius. (e) Give me leave, ſays he to his Friend of Lyons, to be a little Importunate with you: When you ſee Father Theophilus, try to know of him who Gaſpar Chicocius is lib. 1. Alloquiorum, who writ againſt Eraſmus, and where that Book was Printed. He gives us no account of any Anſwer. As for me, I ingenuouſly confeſs I never ſaw that Book: Thoſe whom I have conſulted about it, told me that they had never heard of ſuch an Author. I thought it was Gaſpar Sawicki, and I affirmed it in the firſt Edition of this Dictionary; but I am now of another Opinion: I find it was a Canon and Curate of Sendomir. He is cited in a Book of Staniſlaus Lubienietski (f). I have read in Simon Starovolſcius (g), that Gaſpar Cicbocius Born at Tarnowicz, a City of the leſſer Poland, was made Maſter of Arts in 1567, and that afterwards he obtained of Cardinal George Radziwil, this Canonſhip and Rectory, and that he Compoſed two Books, the one called Anatomia, to juſtify the Jeſuits, and the other Alloquia Oſeciana, to refute the Errors of Hereticks. This laſt work would have brought a great Miſchief upon him, for he treated the King of England very ill in it; But Death freed him from the danger. (h) Fecit —— librum —— Alloquia Oſeciana dictum, quo Hæreticorum errores oſtendit ac refutat ſimul, quamvis ſucceſſu parum felici, quod minus honorificam in eo Regis Angli mentionem feciſſet: tuliſſetque ſane multa acerba & gravia, ni mors ſenem opportune liberaſſet.

(A) The Son of a Miller.] Leander Albertus gives us an account of it. Bartholomæus Scala, ſays he (i), vir doctus, ut potius Muſarum alumnus, quam inter rotas molarum natus videretur. Scala writes himſelf, that he was of a low Extraction. (k) Veni nudus, omnium rerum bonarum egenus ad remp. viliſſimis ortus parentibus, multa cum fide, nullis omnino divitiis aut titulis, nullis clientelis, nullis cognationibus. Politian having called him (l) monſtrum furfuraceum, gives this reaſon for it: Monſtrum quidem qui ex colluvione monſtrorum compoſitus es: furfuraceum vero in piſtrini ſordibus natus, & quidem piſtrino digniſſimus.

(B) The Florentins raiſed him.] Here is what he ſays about it in the above cited Letter: (m) Coſmus tamen pater patriæ noſtræ me complexus eſt, receptique in familia obſequia. Interea Florentinus populus ad prioratum me evexit, deinde ad vexilliferatum; tandemque & in Senatorium me ordinem equeſtremque collocavit, tanto profecto ſuffragiorum conſenſu, ut nihil eſſe factum unquam popularius multi putarent. Politian would have thought, that he had treated him too well if he had ſaid of him, That the Cabals did as much towards it as Merit: He pretends that it was a meer ſport of Fortune (n). De honoribus quidem nihil eſt quod tibi nimium placeas; vetus enim ludus hic, ut indigni tollantur in altum, videlicet ut hoc quoque ſe poſſe fortuna declaret, cujus tu ſolius opus es.

(C) He alſo Compoſed ——— an Harangue to Innocent VIII. &c.] The Liſt of his Works, if I am not miſtaken, is pretty compleat in the Catalogue of the Florentin writers Compoſed by Poccianti, and Printed at Florence in 1589. There were then but few of his Writings Publiſhed. Two Learned Danes took care to Publiſh the chief of them, viz. (o) the Florentin Hiſtory, and the Life of (p) Vitalian Borromeo. I cannot tell whether the Apologies, which Marſilius Ficinus very much eſteemed, and the Letter which he writ upon the Queſtion, Whether a Wiſe Man ought to Marry (q), have been Publiſhed. Apologi centum ad Laurentium Medicem, quos miris encomiis exornat Ficinus in 8. libro epiſtolarum (r).

( ) Per-

(a) [illegible]

(h) Id. ib.

(i) Deſcript. Ital. pag. 70.

(k) Scala, epiſt. ad Ang. Politian. It is the 16th of the 12th Book of Politian's Letters. Paris 1526. in 4.

(l) Politian, epiſt. 18. lib. 12.

(m) Scala ibid.

(n) Politian epiſt. 18. lib. 12.

(o) Oliger Jacobæus Publiſhed it in 4. It is mention'd in the 4th Journal of Italy 1677. (p) Chriſtopher Bartholinus Publiſhed it. It is mentioned in the ſame Journal of Italy. (q) This Queſtion was handled by Heinſius. See in Baudii amores the Letter, An & qualis viro literato ſit ducenda uxor? To which is added the Diſſertation of an Anonymous Writer, De matrimonio literati, an cœlibem eſſe an nubere conveniat? It is in a Collection of ſeveral pieces, Printed in 1606. (r) Poccianius, de ſcriptor, Florentinis pag. 24.

much, and was not Satyrical upon the Daughter as he had been upon her Father. The Daughter on her side had no regard to that Quarrel, but answered the Civilities of Politian with other Civilities.

SCALA (ALEXANDRA) Daughter and Wife of Learned Men, was her self Learned in Greek and Latin †. Her Father was the above mentioned Bartholomew Scala. I have spoke, in its proper place, of Michael Marullus her Husband. Politian lived with her in better Intelligence than with her Father. He Praised her often in Greek; she answered him in the same Language *. They writ Verses on each side, which were Printed: But what Marullus and Politian writ to one another, was nothing less than Compliments ‖; it was a War of Erudition, full of Animosity and Injurious words. The reason why Marullus Married Alexandra Scala, was (A) because he would perfect himself in the Latin Tongue, if we may believe Paulus Jovius: But if we may believe her Husband, she was very Beautiful, and very Vertuous, and why should we doubt that those good Qualities, and the Employments of her Father might make Marullus court her for Marriage? It would be a very edifying thing to see this Poet make Verses (B) in Praise of his Wife; for we scarce see any now of (C) this Nature: Marriage commonly dries up the Poetical Vein, which flowed so abundantly for a Mistress. But it does not appear when he made those Verses on her, that he was her Husband. This Learned Florentin Woman died in 1506 β.

SCAMANDER, a River of Phrygia near Troy. It was also called Xanthus, but there was a great difference between these two Names: Scamander belonged to Humane Language ξ, Xanthus to that of the Gods. This is the Opinion of Homer. Some Writers pretend that this Poet (A) means that Xanthus was the Antient Name of this River, and that Scamander was the Modern: Others say, that † Vossius ibid.

* Id. ib.

‖ Cum Politiano, [illegible] dicunt [illegible] epistolis inter [illegible] exercuerit. Jovius elog. c. 58.

β Vossius ubi supra.

ξ See the Remark A.

(A) Perfect himself in the Latin Tongue.] I shall set down a Passage of Paulus Jovius. (a) Nihil jam Græce doctum esse satis ad laudem putabat, nisi tota patrii sermonis facultas Romanæ facundiæ jungeretur, PROPTEREA Florentiæ Alexandram eruditi ingenii puellam uxorem duxit. Mr. Varillas Paraphrasing, according to his custom, what he finds in Books, enlarges upon Paulus Jovius in this manner: "(b) The Love Marullus had for the Latin "Tongue, made him Marry the Daughter of "Bartholomew Scala, who understood and spoke it "admirably well. She taught him so well, that "Laurence de Medicis found him capable of Translating the Moral works of Plutarch". I have already shewed that Marullus made Latin Verses before he Married Alexandra Scala; and therefore Jovius says too much, and Varillas instead of rectifying it amplifies it. We may compare his Pen to Spectacles.

(a) Jovius elog. cap. 58.

(b) Anecd. de Flor. pag. 179.

(B) Make Verses in Praise of his Wife.] We are not to believe, that all the Verses we find in Marullus's Poems to the Praise of Alexandra Scala, were made after he was Married to her; this little Epigram at most can be said to have been written by him after his Marriage (c).

Quod tam tota decens, formosaque tota venusta
Rara quidem, sed non unica Scala mea es;
At quod casta, decens, at quod formosa pudica,
Dispeream si non unica Scala mea es.
Nam cum Pieridum reputo commercia sacra,
Jam non ulterius unica, Scala dea es.

But if we consider it well, we shall find no Expression here that signifies any thing of Marriage; mea Scala may as well be applyed to a Mistress as to a Wife; and we see that Marullus makes use of the same Mark of Tenderness towards Sappho,

Hoc Sappho melior mea,
Cujus facta domi dictaque plurima
Prastans ingenium inquinant.

says he (d), Praising the good manners which Alexandra Scala Learned in the Service of the Muses. All the other Verses he made in her Praise, do manifestly relate to the time that preceded their Marriage. There are some wherein he Praises her, (e) because at the Age of about Fifteen, she made admirable Verses.

Cum versu referas novem sorores,
Vix lustris bene adhuc tribus peractis,
Cum dulci sale seriisque blandis
Ipsum jam superes puella patrem,
Quo nihil gravius facetiusque est.

In this same Epigram he calls her mea Scala; yet one cannot believe that he was then her Husband. Let us see what he says to her Father.

(c) Lib. 4. p. m. 80.

(d) Epigr. l. 4. pag. m. 71.

(e) Lib. 3. pag. 64.

Plus (f) multo tamen, o beate amice, est
Quod Scalam Latio pater dedisti,
Aucturam numerum novem sororum
Casto carmine, castiore vita.

He was not then his Son-in-Law, when he spoke to him in that manner. That's clear.

(C) We scarce see any now of this Nature.] There are many Modern Poets, who would look upon themselves to be highly reproached for having prodigally spent their Praises, if they should be told that they have Praised their Wives. They would think that this Expression would have more force, than if it should be said of them, that they Sung Praises from the Scepter to the Shepherd's-Hook, and from the Cedars of Libanus, to the Hissop that grows on the Wall. They would believe that this Idea would give their Flatteries the same extent, which is given to Love, in the following Verses (g):

Je penserois n'être pas malheureux,
Si la beauté dont je suis amoureux
Pouvoit enfin se tenir satisfaite
De mille amans avec un Favori;
Mais j'enrage que la coquette
Aime encor jusqu'à son mari.

The most gallant Poets among the Antients were not of this Humour. Ovid (h) extreamly Praises his Wife; Martial (i) would have Posterity to know that his Wife spoke well, and that she kept him from being sorry that he had left Rome. I omit Statius, who did so much praise his (k).

(A) Means, that Xanthus was its Antient Name.] Let us relate what he says.

Ἄντα (l) δ' ἄρ' Ἡφαίστοιο μέγας ποταμὸς βαθυδίνης
Ὃν Ξάνθον καλέουσι θεοί, ἄνδρες δὲ Σκάμανδρον.

Contra autem & Vulcanum magnus Fluvius verticibus profundus Quem Xanthum vocant dii, homines vero Scamandrum.

Here is the Reflection of Meziriac: "(m) As, says "he, Vigenere has well observed upon the Scamander of Philostratus, when Homer gives two Names "to some things, one according to the Gods, and "the other according to Men; it's to be understood that that of the Gods is the Antient, and "almost forgotten Name, and that of Men the "Modern and most in use." He might have cited the Scholiast (n) upon Homer to this purpose, and not Vigenere. Observe that Plutarch (o) owns, that Xanthus was the Antient Name. He adds, that this River was not called Scamander till Scamander the Son of Corybas, who run Mad out of that it was called Scamander before (B) it was called Xanthus, and what Etymologies are * related of thoſe two Names. It's pretended that the Waters of that River had the Property of making the Womens Hair that Bathed in it, of a Light Colour (C), and that the Trojan Women made uſe of that Property. 'Tis alſo ſaid that the Maids of that Country, as ſoon as they were Betrothed, went thither, (D) to offer their Virginity to Scamander, which gave an opportunity to a Young Athenian to Enjoy Callirrhoe. I do not think that this Ri-of a fit of Devotion to the Mother of the Gods, Drowned himſelf in it. For ſo Meziriac (a) explains the Greek of Plutarch. Mauſſac explains it otherwiſe. See the Margin (b).

(B) It was called Scamander before it was called Xanthus.] Meziriac quotes three Authors upon this matter. Theſe are his words: (c) "Ariſtotle Book 3. chap. 12. of his Hiſtory of "Animals, ſpeaks thus. Δοκεῖ δὲ καὶ ὁ Σκάμανδρος "ποταμὸς ξανθὰ πρόβατα ποιεῖν, διὸ καὶ τὸν Ὅ"μηρον ἀντὶ Σκαμάνδρου Ξάνθον προσαγορεύειν "αὐτόν. It ſeems that the River Scamander makes "ſheep of a Red Colour, and that for the reaſon "Homer calls it Xanthus, inſtead of Scamander. "Antigonus paradox 73, follows Ariſtotle and cites "him. Ælian B. 8. chap. 21. de animalibus, ſays "the ſame more clearly ſtill. Ὁ δὲ ἐν Τροίᾳ Σκά"μανδρος, ὅτι ξανθὰς ἀποφαίνει τὰς οἶς, "πρὸς τῷ Σκαμάνδρῳ τῷ ἐξ ἀρχῆς, ἀπὸ "τούτου ἢ τὸν προσβάτων ἐπίκλησιν χρῆσθαι ἔσχε, τὸν "Ξάνθον. The River of Troas called Scamander, "becauſe it makes the Sheep rediſh that drink of its "Waters, is alſo called Xanthus, beſides the "Name of Scamander it had before". After this Meziriac (d) ſays that the River Scamander, according to ſome, owes its Origin to Hercules. That Hero being ready to die of Thirſt, fell a digging the Earth, out of which ſprung the Head of a River, which from thence was called Scamander, as if one ſhould ſay σκάμμα ἀνδρὸς the digging of a Man. There is a Scholiaſt (e) who ſays, that the place where Hercules digged the Ground yielded ſome drops of Water, becauſe it had been ſtruck with Thunder, as a conſequence of the Prayers which that Hero had directed to Jupiter, when he was much diſtreſſed with Thirſt. This Scholiaſt pretends that the River that flowed out of this place was called Scamander, becauſe it eaſed Hercules, as if one ſhould ſay Camander, γενόμενον καμάτου ἄκος αὐτῷ. He adds, That it was called Xanthus, becauſe the Trojan Women waſhing their Hair in it, made it light coloured (f). The Author of the great Etymologicon tells us, that this River (g) took its Name from Scamander the Son of Teucer, who came into Phrygia out of the Iſle of Crete his Native Country; but that afterwards this River was called Xanthus, becauſe the three Goddeſſes, before they ſet themſelves before Paris to be Judged by him, went and waſhed themſelves in this River, which made their Hair light coloured. All this overthrows the Hypotheſis of thoſe, who ſay that the Name Xanthus preceded that of Scamander.

(C) Of a light Colour, &c.] See the Proofs of all this in the preceding Remark. It had alſo the ſame virtue upon Sheep, as may be ſeen by the Three Authorities of Meziriac; to which I add theſe words of Pliny: (h) In Bœotia amnis Melas oves nigras (facit) ——— rufaſque juxta Ilium Xanthus unde & nomen amni.

(D) Offered their Virginity to Scamander.] I'll relate this Story as we find it in Vigenere. "(i) In this River, ſays he, (as Æſchines relates in his Epiſtles) Young Maids were wont to "Bath themſelves when they were Betrothed, in"voking the River in theſe words, λάβε μου Σκά"μανδρε τὴν παρθενίαν. Receive, O Scamander, "my Virginity. This gave an opportunity to Ci"mon the Athenian, who was deſperately in Love "with Callirrhoe already promiſed to another, to "hide himſelf in the Shrubs about the River. He "put on a Crown of Ruſhes and Reeds, and when "the Damſel came to Bath, and Sang the uſual "words, he came out of his Ambuſcade, and told "her he willingly accepted of it: And ſo preſently "Deflowred her". 'Tis certain that this is found in (k) one of Æſchines's Letters, and ſo the Citation is exact; but Vigenere has not related all that he ſhould have told his Readers. 'Tis neceſſary they ſhould know ſome other Circumſtances to make the moſt Inſtructive Reflections. I ſay then that Æſchines does not ſpeak of this Adventure, as of a Hiſtory learned by Tradition, or read in ſome old Chronicle. If he had ſpoke of it in this manner, we might place it among the Novels of Boccace. He ſpeaks of it as of a thing almoſt done in his ſight. (l) Ἡμεῖς ἅμα τι τοῖς ἄλλοις ἐπὶ τὴν γαμουμένην καὶ τὰς ἄλλας χορὰς παρθένων τὸν ποταμὸν λουομένας καὶ τὸ καλὸν τῶν παρθένων, ὡς ἡμῖν ἐξεῖναι ἰδεῖν, ἐθεώμεθα. Nos una cum cognatis nuptiarum & caeteris turbae comites flumen & lavacra virginum quatenus fas nobis eſſet, ſpectabamus. His Fellow-Traveller was the Perſon, who committed that Infamous Act; he cenſured him for it, and found that he was Impenitent, and that he alledged for his Excuſe, that many had played the ſame Trick before. 'Tis neceſſary alſo to know the Innocent Simplicity of the Young Maid, who was abuſed: She was fully perſuaded that it was the God Scamander who had got her Maiden-Head; for four Days after, ſeeing Cimon among thoſe that went in a Proceſſion, ſhe Saluted him with a great deal of Reſpect, and told her Nurſe, There is Scamander who got my Virginity. The Nurſe ſet up a great cry, and ſo the matter was divulged. (m) Τέτταρσιν ὕστερον ἡμέραις πομπὴ μὲν ἦν Ἀφροδίτης· ἐπόμπευον δὲ αἱ νεωστὶ γεγαμημέναι· καὶ ἡμεῖς τὴν πομπὴν ἐθεώμεθα. ἡ δὲ νύμφη ἰδοῦσα τὸν Κίμωνα ὡς μηδὲν αὐτῷ κακὸν συνειδότα ἅμα ἐμοὶ θεώμενον, προσκυνεῖ τε, καὶ ἀποβλέψασα πρὸς τὴν τροφὸν ὁρᾷς ἔφη, τίτθη, τὸν Σκάμανδρον, ᾧ τὴν παρθενίαν ἔδωκα; καὶ ἡ τίτθη ἀκούσασα ἀνέκραγε, καὶ τὸ πρᾶγμα ἔκπυστον γίνεται. Cum quatriduo poſt pompa eſſet Veneris, & recens nuptae ei pompae intereſſent, nos quoque illam ſpectabamus. Sponſa autem Cimonem conſpicata, ut nullius mali ſibi conſcium, una mecum ſpectantem, honorem ei praebuit: & nutricem intuita, Vides (inquit) mea nutrix, Scamandrum, ut virginitatem dedi? quo illa audito, exclamat: itaque facinus divulgatur. When we conſider that Wit and Learning never appeared with ſo much Luſtre, as in the Age that Æſchines lived in, we may the better apprehend the fatal Power of a Falſe Religion. It deſtroys good Senſe, it extinguiſhes the Light of Nature, and transforms Man into a Beaſt. Callirrhoe, was Born of (n) an Illuſtrious Family, and was, without doubt, nobly Educated; and yet the Impertinencies of the Poets, Canonized by the Heathen Prieſts, had ſo much corrupted her Judgment, that in good earneſt ſhe believed Rivers were Deities, who Crowned themſelves with Reeds, and could enjoy a Woman. In the Reign of Tiberius, an Illuſtrious Lady (o) was not leſs ſimple; ſhe believed ſhe had lain with Anubis, and bragged of it as of a great Favour. The Monks, who have played ſo many Tricks with Women, never durſt, that I know of, tell them that ſuch a Saint would lie with them. The Ideas of Purity and Immateriality have always been ſtrictly joyned in Chriſtianity with thoſe of Beatification. But I do not doubt that ſome Devout Maids might be brought to believe it, if it were undertaken. This Maxim (p), The Corruption of the moſt Excellent Things is the Worſt, is verifyed by the Example of Religion. There's nothing ſo advantageous to Man, if we conſider either the Mind or the Heart, as to know God rightly: On the other hand, nothing is ſo fatal to him, as not to know him rightly, as the Pagans did. Obſerve what Homer ſays, that the Prieſt of Scamander was Honoured at Troy as a God.

(q) Ὑψήνορα δῖον
Υἱὸν ὑπερθύμου Δολοπίονος, ὅς ῥα Σκαμάνδρου
Ἀρητὴρ ἐτέτυκτο, θεὸς δ' ὣς τίετο δήμῳ.

(l) Æſchines ubi ſupra.

(m) Id. ib. p. 125. A.

(n) Πατρὸς δὲ τῶν ἐπιφανῶν, illuſtri patre nata. Id ibid. pag. 125.

(o) See Joſephus, antiq. lib. 18. ch. 4.

(p) Corruptio optimi peſſima.

(q) Homer Iliad. lib. 5. ver. 76.

ver merited the Reputation it has (E) acquired by the help of the Poets; but on the other hand it was more conſiderable than ſome fancy. Julia the Daughter of Auguſtus had like to have been Drowned in it; Agrippa her Husband was very ſenſible of this Danger (F), and ſhew'd his Indignation on this occaſion againſt the Trojans, tho' they were not to be reſponſible for it. Strabo Criticiſes upon

Hypſenora nobilem
Filium magnanimi Dolopionis qui Scamandri
Sacerdos factus fuerat, Dei vero inſtar honorabatur à populo.

A REFLECTION upon a Thought of Cicero, concerning the Divinity of Romulus.

I'll make an Obſervation upon the ſmall effect the light of Learning had againſt the darkneſs of Idolatry. Cicero admired the Divinity of Romulus, becauſe it was not eſtabliſhed in the days of Ignorance, when it was more eaſy to vent ſuch Fictions, but in an Age when Learning flouriſhed, and had entirely aboliſhed the Antient Barbarity. It ſeems that, from this Principle, he would conclude that neither Fiction nor Impoſture had any ſhare in the belief of the Romans concerning the Divinity of Romulus. (a) Magis eſt in Romulo admirandum, quod cæteri, qui dii ex hominibus facti eſſe dicuntur, minus eruditis hominum ſeculis fuerunt, ut fingendi proclivior eſſet ratio, quum imperiti facilè ad credendum impellerentur. Romuli autem ætatem minus bis ſexcentis annis jam inveteratis literis, atque doctrinis, omnique illo antiquo ex inculta hominum vita errore ſublato fuiſſe cernimus.——— Ex quo intelligi poteſt, permultis annis ante Homerum fuiſſe quam Romulum, ut jam doctis hominibus ac temporibus ipſis eruditis ad fingendum vix quicquam eſſet loci. Antiquitas enim recepit fabulas fictas etiam nonnunquam incondite. Hæc ætas autem jam exculta præſertim eludens omne, quod fieri non poteſt, reſpuit. St. Auguſtin refutes excellently this Reaſoning. He ſays, 1. there was no place but Rome that believed Romulus was a God. 2. That ſhe was little, and as it were in her Infancy, when ſhe Embraced this Opinion. 3. That Poſterity was obliged to retain this Faith, to render the City more Flouriſhing, and more capable of Founding a great Empire. 4. That the People that were ſubdued by the Romans, did not believe of Romulus, what they believed of him at Rome; but out of Policy, they ſaid the ſame the Romans did. You'll ſee better in the Original words the Thoughts of St. Auguſtin. (b) Cicero propterea dicit divinitatem Romuli mirabiliter creditam, quòd erudita jam tempora fuerunt, quæ falſitatem non reciperent fabularum. Quis autem Romulum Deum niſi Roma credidit, atque id parva & incipiens? Tum deinde poſteris ſervare fuerat neceſſe, quod acceperant à majoribus, ut cum iſta ſuperſtitione in lacte quodammodo matris ebibita creſceret civitas, atque ad tam magnum perveniret imperium, ut ex ejus faſtigio velut ex altiore quodam loco alias quoque gentes, quibus dominaretur, hac ſua opinione perfunderet: ut non quidem crederent, ſed tamen dicerent Deum Romulum, ne civitatem cui ſerviebant, de conditore ejus offenderent, aliter eum nominando quam Roma, quæ id non amore quidem hujus erroris, ſed tamen amoris errore crediderat. He forgot two principal Anſwers which he might have made. He might have ſaid in the firſt place, That the light of Learning, and the Improvement of the Mind, had not made their way as far as Rome, when the Divinity of Romulus was propoſed. 2. That this Light, and this Improvement cannot poſſibly hinder ſuch like Fictions from taking Root. Did not Alexander paſs for a God? Did they not make Decrees upon this Article of Faith, in all the Learned Cities of Greece, when Learning was come to the higheſt pitch? Did not the Romans, for all their Learning, believe that the Soul of Julius Cæſar (c) was converted into a Star? Did they not erect Temples (d) and Altars to a living Emperor? Could the Philoſophers cure the Crafty Spirit of Flatterers, and the Credulous Spirit of the Mob? If other things than Learning and Science had not prevented it, the Divine Worſhip of Alexander, Cæſar, Auguſtus, &c. had continued as long as that of Hercules and Romulus.

(E) Which it acquired by the help of the Poets.] Homer making Scamander the Son of Jupiter, (e) always repreſents it as a great River, and beſtows on it the Epithet δινήεις vorticoſus, βαθυδίνης profunde vorticoſus, βαθύῤῥοος profunde fluens, and ſuch like exceſſive great Expreſſions. Pomponius Mela had reaſon to ſay, (f) that Scamander and Simois paſs for greater Rivers than they really are. The Moderns ſpeak of them with Contempt. (g) "As to the Rivers Simois and Xanthus, ſo much "Celebrated by the Poets, which watered the Meadows of Troy, we can ſay nothing of them, but "that they are rather little Brooks, where ſcarce "a Loach can live; for in Summer they are dry, "and in Winter a Gooſe can hardly ſwim there. "If we have raiſed any Doubts about thoſe Rivers, "'tis no new thing; for in Ariſtotle's time they "could not be found. Read the 12. Chap. of the "3. Book of the Hiſtory in this manner: Scamander etiam amnis flavas reddere oves creditur: quamobrem Xanthum pro Scamandro nuncupatum ab Homero autumant. As if Ariſtotle meant that "Homer had taken Scamander for Xanthus; for "Xanthus is as much as to ſay Flavus. Let the "Queſtion therefore be put whether Scamander and "Xanthus be the ſame or no?" If the laſt half of this Paſſage had not been full of Faults, I had not quoted it. I find there firſt of all this Falſity, that in the time of Ariſtotle the River Scamander was not to be found. In the ſecond place, 'tis falſe that the words which are quoted out of Ariſtotle, do prove what Belon deſigned to prove. Laſtly, he ſhould have ſaid that Xanthus and Scamander are all one. I do not Criticiſe upon the other half of the Paſſage. Belon ſpeaks as an Eye-Witneſs. I will not bring into queſtion his Sincerity, nor give any Credit to Thevet, who ſays that Xanthus and Simois are great Rivers. I ſhould be ſorry to Contradict ſuch a Man. They are (h) Lewis Guion's words concerning Thevet; but what I ſay of it (i), I have taken it out of Belon, a Phyſician of Mans, out of the ſecond Book of his Obſervations, and I have often heard him relate it being at Paris, to Poſtel, whom I familiarly frequented Four Years. Beſides one called Albert le Bon, who ſays he was in thoſe parts, and ſtay'd there a whole Winter, perfectly agrees with what Belon has writ on that ſubject. I believe Thevet never was there, and that what he writ was only by hear-ſay. But as on the one ſide I do not deny what Belon ſays, I am ſure on the other ſide, that thoſe Rivers were not antiently ſo little. Their Waters may have taken another courſe either under the Earth, or otherwiſe: So that tho' the Moderns may ſay, without any Hyperbole, what they aſſert, they cannot engage us to believe that Pliny is miſtaken, when he ſpeaks of the Scamander as of a Navigable River. (k) Scamander amnis navigabilis, & in promontorio quondam Sigeum oppidum, dein portus Achæorum, in quem influit (l) Xanthus Simoenti junctus, ſtagnumque prius faciens Palæſcamander. The words of Strabo are not leſs Favourable to me: They teach us (m) that the Scamander having received the Simois, dragged along ſo much Mud and Sand, that they had almoſt filled up the Mouth of the River, and formed Lakes and Moraſſes. This cannot be ſaid of a little Brook or Rivulet, but of Rivers that are pretty conſiderable.

(F) Agrippa, her Husband, was very ſenſible.] The Fragments of Nicolas Damaſcen (n) tell us that Julia had like to have been Drowned there, the Year of Rome 738, and that Agrippa was ſo angry with the Trojans for not having ſent Guides with her, that he Fined them in a Hundred Thouſand Drachms. This Puniſhment was Unjuſt, for they knew nothing of her arrival. Here is, will ſome ſay, a Man who may be put in the number of Cuckolds that have been very obliging and kind to their Wives. If ever a Man was a Cuckold, it was Agrippa:

(a) Cicero de Republica lib. 3. apud Auguſtin. de civit. Dei lib. 22. cap. 6. pag. m. 1036, 1037.

(b) Auguſt. ibid. pag. 1037.

(c) See Suetonius in Cæſare cap. 88.

(d) Horat. epiſt. 1. lib. 2.

(e) Homer Iliad. lib. 21. [illegible]

(f) Iſte ab Idæ monte demiſſus Scamander eſt, & Simois fama quam natura majora flumina. Pompon. Mela lib. 1. c. 18.

(g) Belon, Singularities Book 2. chap. 6. pag. [illegible]

(h) Louis Guyon, Diverſes Leçons, tom. 1. Book 2. chap. 10. pag. 261.

(i) He had juſt before quoted Belon's words, about the ſmallneſs of these rivulets.

(k) Plinius lib. 5. cap. 30. p. m. [illegible]

(l) Pliny ſhould have ſaid that Xanthus and Scamander are the ſame River.

(m) Strabo, lib. 13. pag. [illegible]

(n) Nic. Damaſcen. [illegible] a Valeſ. edit. [illegible] 418.

upon Homer about the Spring of the River (G) Scamander. There were other (H) Rivers of the ſame Name. I ſhall not have much to ſay (I) againſt Mr. Moreri.

SCHEFFER (JOHN) Profeſſor in the Univerſity of Upſal, and one of the moſt Learned Men of his time, was Born at Strasburg in 1621. He was not 30 Years old when he went into Sweden, where Queen Chriſtina gave a favourable reception to all Learned Men. He had already made his Name known (A) by the Works he had publiſhed. The Profeſſorſhip, for which he was called, was given him in the Univerſity of Upſal * by the Credit of the Baron Skytte. It was the ſame Profeſſorſhip that Freinſhemius had exerciſed, and which he left to be the Queen's Library keeper; it was, I ſay, the Profeſſorſhip of Eloquence † and Politicks. Scheffer gained great Applauſe in this Profeſſorſhip, and was much eſteem'd by the Learned Chriſtina, who gratify'd him with a very good Penſion, which ſhe paid him even after ſhe had abdicated her Dominions. He Compoſed, by her order, (B) ſome Works. His Employments multiply'd in time, for he was made Library-keeper of the Univerſity of Upſal, Regius profeſſor honorary ‖ of the Law of Nature, and Member of an Academy which is only Employ'd in the illuſtration of the Swediſh Antiquities. The Works he publiſhed in this laſt Quality are a moſt illuſtrious Proof of his Diligence, and of his Zeal for the Honour of that Nation. He died the 26th of March 1679 ½. The Catalogue of his Writings (C) has been Printed more then once.

* It was in the Year 1648.

† It was founded by John Skytte in the Year 1625.

‖ Profeſſor juris naturæ ac Gentium.

SCHESTED (ANNIBAL) a Daniſh Lord of great Wit and Merit Married a Daughter of Chriſtian IV. King of Denmark, Siſter of the Counteſs Eleonor, of whom I ſhall ſpeak in the Article of Count Ulefeld. It is given out a that this Count and Mr. Scheſted loved, both at once, the Counteſs Eleonor, and that this Rivalſhip was the cauſe of the great hatred that was between them all their life. They were always Contrary one to another; and when Mr. Scheſted pleaded the Cauſe of the King who would be divorced from his Wife, the other pleaded for

I take for a certain Evidence of it, the Anſwer that ſhe gave to thoſe who wondred that her Children were ſo like Agrippa: I never Cuckold him, ſaid ſhe, till I find my ſelf with Child. (a) Cumque conſcii flagitiorum mirarentur quo modo ſimiles Agrippæ filios pareret, quæ tam vulgo poteſtatem ſui corporis faceret: ait; Numquam enim niſi navi plena tollo vectorem. Suetonius obſerves that one of the Reaſons why Tiberius made ſome difficulty to Marry Julia, was becauſe ſhe had been too free with him when ſhe was Married to Agrippa (b). How often were the Gallants of that Princeſs put to the Torture? Pliny (c) reckons that very thing among the Misfortunes of Agrippa. The Cuckoldom of this Favourite is therefore a certain thing: But can his Gentleneſs be well prov'd by the indignation he ſhewed againſt the Trojans? I do not believe it; for it's probable his love for Julia was not the true cauſe of his Anger; it was an effect of Policy. He was angry, either to make Auguſtus believe that he ſeriouſly eſpouſed the Intereſt of Julia, or to maintain his Credit. A Subject Married to the Daughter of his Sovereign is not at Liberty to revenge himſelf or not, on thoſe who diſhonour his Wife: Whatever he may be inwardly, he is outwardly obliged to appear on ſuch occaſions Revengeful. Beſides, Agrippa knew very well, that the Trojans had not grounded their Conduct upon his Diſcontent. And ſo the Contempt they might have ſhewed to his Wife fell upon himſelf; and conſequently he thought himſelf obliged, out of Policy, to puniſh them for it, to teach all Subjects to Fear and Honour him.

(G) Strabo Criticiſes upon Homer, about the Spring of this River] That Poet ſays, (d) that this River had two Springs, the one Cold, and the other Hot near Troy; but Strabo aſſures us, (e) that it had only one Spring upon Mount Ida, and that this Spring was Cold. He thinks the Cold Spring was deſtroyed, and Conſequently he does not blame Homer in this reſpect.

(H) Other Rivers of the ſame Name.] There was another River of the ſame Name in Sicily (f), near Ægeſta, and another in Boeotia. The latter was a Monument of the Frailty of the Female Sex. The matter of fact was thus. Deimachus the Son of Eleon accompanied Hercules to the Expedition of Troy. The War growing long, he thought it proper to divert himſelf with a young Maid that was much in love with him. She was the Daughter of Scamander and was called Glaucia. Deimachus got her with Child. Sometime after he was killed in a Battle. Glaucia, who was afraid ſhe could not hide her Fault, fled to the Protection of Hercules, and told him all that had paſſed, and found him a Man full of Compaſſion, who beſides was glad that the race of his Friend was not extinct. He carried her into Boeotia with the Son of which ſhe was delivered, and brought her to Eleon. This Son was called Scamander, and Reigned in the Country. He gave his Name to the River Inachus (g).

(I) I have not much to ſay againſt Moreri.] 1. According to him, Caſtaldus aſſures us, that the Scamander is at preſent called Simois; but (h) Ortelius cites Caſtaldus to prove that the Modern Name is Simoeres. 2. 'Tis too general an Expreſſion to ſay, that this River falls into the Ægean Sea. He ſhould have ſaid, that its Mouth is (i) near the Promontory Sigæum. 3. Theſe words epotaque flumina Medo prandente are ill placed immediately after theſe, Herodotus relates, that the Army of Xerxes dryed it up; for there's none but would imagin that this Latin is the Tranſlation of the very words of Herodotus: which is falſe. 'Tis Juvenal (k) whom he ought to have cited for theſe Latin words. He ought to have cited Herodotus (l) cap. 42. lib. 7.

(A) His Name known by the Works he had publiſhed.] Theſe three are mention'd in his Elogy (m): Diſſertatio de varietate navium Printed in 1643. in 4°. Agrippa liberator ſeu de novis tabulis, Printed in 1645 in 12°. Æliani variæ hiſtoriæ notis illuſtratæ Printed in 1647. in 8°.

(B) He compoſed, by her order, &c.] Queen Chriſtina obliged him to Tranſlate out of Greek into Latin the Strategicum Mauritii, and to illuſtrate the Philoſophy of Pythagoras. That Strategicum and Arriani tactica, which he cauſed to be Printed in Greek (n) and Latin with Notes, at Upſal 1644, were never Printed before. He publiſhed the ſame Year, and in the ſame place, (o) an Eſſay of his Inquiries about the Philoſophy of Pythagoras, De natura & conſtitutione philoſophiæ Italicæ ſeu Pythagoricæ liber prodromus magni operis de Philoſophia Pythagorica, de vita Pythagoræ, & de claris Pythagoricis.

(C) The Catalogue of his Writings has been Printed more than once.] He himſelf prefixed it to his lectiones Academicæ, publiſhed at Hamburg 1675; and he informed his Reader that the Catalogue of his Books had been added by his Bookſeller to his Political Diſſertations upon Levy in 1665. From that time continues he, my Friends have exhorted me from ſeveral places, to publiſh a continuation of it. I do it, the more willingly, becauſe I am certain it contains ſome Works, that are not known in Foreign Countries, and that lie here in the

T t t 2

(a) Macrob. Saturnal. lib. 2. c. 5. p. m. 271.

(b) Juliæ mores improbaret ut quam ſenſiſſet ſui quoque ſub priore marito appetentem quod ſane vulgo etiam exiſtimabatur. Sueton. in Tiber. c. 7.

(c) In tormentis adulteriorum conjugis. Plin. lib. 7. c. 8. pag. m.

(d) Homer Iliad. lib. 22. v.

(e) Strabo lib. 13. pag. 41

(f) See Strabo lib. 13. & Diodorus Siculus lib. 20.

(g) Taken from Plutarch in quæſtionib. Græcis pag. 301.

(h) Ortelius in Theſauro Geograph. voce Scamandrus in edit. Hanov. in 4.

(i) Strabo lib. 13. pag. 411.

(k) Juven. Sat. 10. v. 177.

(l) Ἀπέλιπε τὸ ῥέεθρον, οὐδ' ἀπέχρησε τῇ στρατιῇ πινόμενος. Hunc (Scamandrum) profluentem ſua aqua deſtituit nec hominibus jumentiſque potantibus ſuffecit. Herodot. p.m. 400.

(m) Prefixed to his Miſcellanea at Amſterdam 1698.

(n) In 8.

(o) Likewiſe in 8.

for the Queen. The Judges pronounced Sentence in Favour of the Wife against the Husband, and the Breach was made up soon after. M. Wilefeld Married the Countess Eleonor; his Rival Married afterwards one of her Sisters: But his hatred continued, and 'tis said that he gave sad Proofs of it when this Count was ¶ detained Prisoner at Malmoe by the Swedes. The Chevalier de Terlon § tells us, that Mr. Schested was made Prisoner near Copenhagen by a Swedish Party, and that the civility the King of Sweden shewed him, made him suspected by the Court of Denmark; and on the other side the Swedes suspected that he had suffered himself to be taken to have the bettter opportunity of giving an Account at Copenhagen of what past in their Camp. This Chevalier says hereupon, That Annibal Schested always gave to the King of Denmark Evident Proofs of a great Respect, and of the Zeal and Fidelity that a Prince can expect from the most affectionate of his Subjects. He was sent Ambassador into Sweden after the Treaty of Peace concluded the 27th of December 1659. You will find in the Supplement to Moreri *, that he dy'd at Paris the 23d of October 1666, Aged 53 Years, and that he was Plenipotentiary of Denmark for the Negotiation of a Treaty of Peace.

SCHILLING (CHRSTOPHER) was one of the Learned Men of the XVI. Century, especially in Greek †. He was a Native of Francestein in Silesia, and taught first at Hirschberg in his own Country, and afterwards in the Palatinate, and at last he was admitted Physician in the University of Padua. The Reason that made him leave Hirschberg, was because he had a Quarrel about the Eucharist with Balthasar Tilesius, Minister of that Place; for he inserted in the Catechism which he dictated to his Disciples, certain things which he had of || Melanchthon, and which did not please Tilesius. The Conclusion of the Quarrel was, that Schilling lost his place, as I have already observed in the Article of David Pareus. He retired into the Palatinate, and was made Rector of a College, which the Elector Frederick III. Founded at that time at Amberg in 1566. He was afterwards Rector of the College of Heidelberg, from whence, I think, he went away because of some Dispute about precedency. He is an (Z) Author.

SCHOMBERG (NICOLAS DE) Cardinal and Archbishop of Capua in the XVI. Century, was a German of the Noble and Ancient Family of Schomberg in Misnia. He had been a Dominican Fryer, and it was Savanarola who gave him the Habit at Florence ‡ in 1497, and who by his preaching had stirred up in him a desire of entring into that Order; for Schomberg Travelled into Italy only out of Curiosity. He had several Employments among the Dominicans; he taught Divinity at Rome and Florence; He was Prior in a Convent of the latter City, and was made Procurator General of that Order by the choice of the Famous Thomas de Vio who was General of it, and who is so Famous by the Name of the Dust by the negligence of my Bookseller at Upsal, or for other Reasons. (a) Quem (Indicem) eo libentius juris facio publici quo scio certius, esse quæ sive oscitantia Librarii Upsaliensis, sive causis aliis hic jacent pulvere sepulta, & idcirco alibi ignorantur. I shall observe by the by, that 'tis of great importance for an Author, that his Works be Printed by a Bookseller who knows how to sell them; for among idle or unskilful Booksellers, the best Books lye upon their hands. There's to be seen a more exact Catalogue of the Works of Schefferus in Suecia literata; and we have a new one prefixed to a Book sold at Amsterdam as Printed in 1698 with the Title of Joh. Schefferi Miscellanea. 'Tis divided into four Classes. The 1st. contains what he has writ concerning Sweden: I'll only mention the Upsalia antiqua cujus occasione plurima in antiquitatibus Borealibus & gentium vicinarum explicantur. This Work was Printed at Upsal in 1666. in 8°. The Author has left it to his Heirs, Corrected and enlarged. De situ & vocabulo Upsaliæ epistola defensoria, Stockholm 1677. in 8. Memorabilium Suecicæ Gentis exemplorum liber, Hamburg 1671, in 8. De tribus orbibus aureis nuper in Scania erutis e terra disquisitio antiquaria, Stockholm 1676. in 8. De antiquis verisque Regni Sueciæ insignibus, in the same place 1678. in 4. Lapponia sive Gentis regionisque Lapponum descriptio accurata cum figuris, Francfort 1673. in 4. This Work was Printed in English at Oxford 1674. in high Dutch at Nuremberg the same Year in 4°, and in French at Paris in (b) 1678. in 4°. It was found very much enlarged in the Closet of the Author. Suecia literata seu de scriptis & scriptoribus Gentis Sueciæ, opus posthumum, Stockholm 1680. in 8. There is in it a Catalogue of the Swedish Writers and of Foreigners who have writ Books in Sweden. It is disposed, not according to an Alphabetical order, but according to Chronology. There's a great defect in the Index, for the Authors are placed in it only according to their Christian Names. The Author perhaps would have mended that Fault, if he had been alive when it was Printed. Mr. Mollerus has made a Second (c) Edition of it, and has added many Curious and Instructive Remarks to it; Hypomnemata, as he calls them, hystorico-Critica paucula è pluribus selecta. The Supplement he has made to the Article of our Scheffer, may serve those very much who would know the Circumstances or Dependencies of the Writings of this Professor. The 2d Class of his Writings contains autores Græcos & Latinos illustratos. You may see there that he has published, with Notes, the Panegyrick (d) of Pacatus, the various Histories of Ælian, the Fables of Phædrus, the Fragment of Petronius, Justin, Hyginus, Obsequens, &c. The 3d Class contains the Miscellanies, that is to say, the work I have already mentioned, de philosophia Pythagorica, and his Book de militia navali veterum, Printed at Upsal 1653. in 4°. which was found (e) with so many Corrections and Additions in the Closet of the Author, that 'tis a new work: de antiquorum torquibus Printed at Stockholm 1656. in 8°: de re vehiculari veterum, cum Pyrrhi Ligorii libro ejusdem argumenti ex Italica lingua in Latinam verso & animadversionibus illustrato, Printed at Francfort in 1671 in 4°. de arte pingendi Printed at Nuremberg in 1669 in 8°. Index in libros Grotii de jure belli & pacis. Consilium de institutione literaria, &c. The 4th Class contains the Books not Printed, which consist of Notes upon the Author of the Book concerning the Pre-Adamites, of Letters, Harangues, Programma's Adversaria, &c.

The Supplement of Mr. Mollerus to the 2d Edition of Suecia literata takes notice, That there were published after the Death of the Author, breviarium politicorum Aristotelis, at Stockholm 1684. in 8°. & Hugo Grotius de jure belli & pacis, in usum Gustavi Adolphi Comitis de la Gardie, enucleatum, at Stetin 1693. in 12°. Observe that Scheffer, under the Suppostitious Name of Constantinus Opellus (f), Printed a Letter, wherein he Attacks the Book of Mark Meibomius de Triremium fabrica, Published at Amsterdam 1671. in 4°.

(Z) He is an Author.] There is a Collection (g)

¶ See the Remarks in the Article Wilefeld.

§ Memoirs pag. 141. Dutch Edit.

* At the word Hannibal.

† See the life of [illegible] pag. [illegible]

|| He had been Melanchthon's Disciple at Wittemberg for the space of 9. Years.

‡ According to Seckendorf Hist. Luther. l. 3. pag. 91. It was in the Year 1495.

(a) Joh. Schefferus ad lector. benevolum.

(b) Father Lubin is the Author of that version.

(c) At Hamburg 1698. in 8.

(d) At Stockholm in 1651. & 1668. in 8.

(e) Quos ita auctos mutatos atque commentatos reliquit Schefferus, ut haberi possint pro aliis & novis.

(f) Joh. Mollerus hypomnem. ad Suec. literat. pag. [illegible] of Cardinal Cajetan, Leo X. gave to Schomberg § the Archbishoprick of Capua in 1520. Clement VII. made him one of his most intimate Counsellors, and sent him into France to Negotiate a Peace between Charles V. and Francis I. As he was not a very acceptable Man to France, he had much ado to obtain leave to be at the Conferences of Cambray, where he contributed much to the Peace that was concluded there. Paul III. made him a Cardinal Priest by the Title of Saint Sixtus in 1535. 'Tis said that even before α he was made a Cardinal, he had like to have been Elected Pope in the Conclaves, wherein Hadrian VI. and Clement VII. were chosen. He preached 5 Sermons (A) before Pope Julius II. upon the Temptation of JESUS CHRIST, which were much esteem'd. There are some of his Letters in the * Collection of those of Princes, and one among the rest † upon the Death of Sir Thomas More Chancellor of England. 'Tis said ||, That he was Cousin of the Nun that Married Luther. He died at Rome September 9, 1537. Aged a little more then 65 Years, and was buried in the Convent della Minerva near Cardinal Cajetan his good Friend ‡. Consult the History of Lutheranism by Seckendorf, p. 92. lib. 3. You'l find a fine Elogy of this Prelate prefixed to each of the two Dialogues of Alcyonius de exilio.

SCHOMBERG (THEODORICUS DE) a German Gentleman, served in the Army of the Reisters, which Prince John Casimir, Son of the Elector Palatine brought into France, to the assistance of the Protestants in 1567. and performed a very Courageous Action (B) at the passage of the River Seine. He continued afterwards to do a great many good Services, till he was killed β at the Battle of Ivri in 1590. having given great Proofs of his Valour, and contributed notably to the Victory which Henry IV gained.

SCHOMBERG (GASPAR DE) Count of Nanteuil, a German Gentleman of an Ancient (A Δ) Family in Missnia, being in France during the Wars of Religion, was so much esteemed, that Charles IX took him into his Service. He was at first engaged in the Huguenot Party; for while μ he studied at Angers in 1562, he put himself at the Head of the Protestants, to hinder the Catholicks from making themselves Masters of that City; but not having succeeded in his Design, he retired to the Prince of Condé, who sent him into Germany to carry Letters to the Duke of Deux-Ponts to hasten the Levies that were expected from him, and to the Landgrave of Hesse, to obtain assistance of Men and Money. He became afterwards a Royalist, and hindred very much the Designs of his first Master. He hindred him dexterously in 1568. (A) from being succour'd by the Troops of the Prince of Orange. He was often sent into Germany to make Levies there, and acquitted himself with a great deal of Honour of the Command θ that he had of those Troops. But he was not less fit for the Cabinet than for War, as he evidenced in many Important Negotiations. Thuanus γ, who Negotiated with him the Accommodation of the Duke of Mercœur, and many Affairs concerning the Edict of Nantes, does very much commend him: He assures us, that he was a Man of a great Wit, and of an admirable Prudence, very expert and able in the Affairs of War, dextrous and experienced in Negotiations, of a manly persuasive Eloquence, of a singular Probity, Civil, Magnificent, Officious and obliging to every Body. He gave Evidence of a particular Zeal for the good and Glory of France, under 3 Kings one after another, during the space of 35 Years. He loved Learned Men; and to say all in few Words, he did every thing with so much Honour and Disinterestedness that neither the Dignities with which he was invested, nor the great Affairs that went thro' his Hands both in Peace and War, did not prevent his § Auberi, Pallavicini did not say it was Clement VII.

α Ex Historia ... dic. Altamura, pag. 271 ad 1521. Rapsodia, Scriptores Cardinal. p. m. 1..

Lettere di Principi, l. 3 fol. 33. Ughellus tom. 6. in Archiep. Capuan.

* Oldoinus, Athen. Roman. pag. 606.

† It is to be found fol. 23. of the 3. Book, Printed at Venice in 1581. and fol. 124. Verso in the Translation of Belleforest.

|| Palavic. Istor. del Concil. l. 3. c. 17. ex relatione Legati Soriani. Mr. Seckendorf, Hist. Luther. l. 3. p. 92. denies it.

‡ Altamura ubi supra.

β Thuanus lib. 98. Davila lib. 11.

of his Greek and Latin Poems Printed at Geneva in 1580, and some letters (a) upon some Questions of Physick, in a Collection of Pieces Printed in 1598 at Francfort.

(A) He preached five Sermons.] He Preached them in 1505 (b). They were Printed in 1511. The very next Year they were Re-printed (c) at Leipsick, where they were also Printed again in (d) 1684. because grown very scarce. Altamura had no Reason to say that these Sermons were Preached before Leo X; for they came out of the Press before the Creation of that Pope.

(B) A Courageous Action at the Passage.] The Royalists had cast into the Ford Planks nailed with Circles and Caltrops, and were in order of Battle on the other side of the River. The Protestants placed Four Hundred Arquebusiers by the Willows on the Banks of the River, for the guard of those who cleared the Ford with rakes, Schomberg threw himself into the River a-cross all this, and made so brisk a charge upon the Enemy, that he killed Forty upon the spot, and brought two Standards to the Prince of Conde, who having no Order of Knighthood to give him, put about his Neck a Chain worth two Hundred Crowns at the head of the Army (e).

(A Δ) Of an Ancient Family in Missnia.] I Remember to have read the Funeral Oration of Henry de Schomberg, Son of this Gentleman pronounced at Toulouse by the Bishop of Usez Peter de Bertier, who was afterwards Bishop of Montauban. I have forgot the Words he made use of to celebrate the High Birth of the deceased: I can nevertheless affirm, that he gave out that his Ancestors had been raised to the most Eminent Employments in Saxony, and that they had been of the First Rank for many Ages in those parts. But M. de Seckendorf observes that this Family was never raised in Germany to the dignity of a Count; and that Gaspar de Schomberg was of a Branch Collateral to that of Cardinal de Schomberg. See his History of Lutheranism Book 3. p. 92.

(A) He dexterously hindred.] I shall make use of the very Words of d'Aubigné. Near Soissons, says he (f), "Gaspard Schomberg came by the King's "Order to the Prince (g), with whom he treated "of a general Composition to assist his Army "with Money, and make 'em return into Germany; "but in particular, he managed so well the greatest "part of the Captains, that when the Prince spoke "to them of going to joyn the Prince of Condé, "he found them all Cold Divines and bad Partisans, discoursing of the justice of War, without "forgetting the Rights of Kings, and the Affairs "they had in their own Country. Schomberg went away

(f) D'Aubigné, Histoire universelle, tom. 1 liv. 5. ch. 28. p. m. 482.

(g) That is, to the Prince of Orange.

his leaving a great many of Debts behind him. He died of a sudden Death in his Coach near St. Antony's Gate returning from Conflans, where he had assisted at a Council held there by Henry IV. to Name Commissioners Executors of the Edict of Nantes; which was the 15th of May 1599. He had been Naturalized ‡ in 1570, and made some time after Governor of the Upper and Lower Marche. He had Married Jean Chasteigner de la Rochepozai, Widow of Henry Clutin Sieur d'Oisel, Ambassador of France at Rome, by whom he had (B) two Sons and three Daughters. I have been a long time without finding whose Son the young Scomberg was, who was killed at the Famous Duel || of Quelus and Entraguet in 1578. He was one of the Seconds of the latter; and this was the first time that Seconds Fought §: but at last I have found in Father Anselme, that he was Brother of our Gaspar de Schomberg.

† Father Anselme, Hist. des grands Officiers, pag. [illegible]

‡ Journal de Henri III.

§ Mezerai, Abregé chronolog. tom. 5. pag. 335. ad ann. 1578.

SCHOMBERG (HENRY DE) Son of the foregoing, was Marshal of France, and of a much distinguished Merit, not only for his brave Actions, but also for his excellent Qualities. One may see an Account of his Employs and Actions in Mr. Moreri, who has Copied them out of Father Anselme. He might also have Copied what follows, viz. That χ Henry de Schomberg was first Married in 1599, to Frances d'Epinai ʒ, Sister and Heiress of Charles Marquis d'Epinai in Bretagne; and secondly, in 1631. to Anne de la Guiche, Daughter and Heiress of Philibert de la Guiche, Great Master of the Ordinance in France. He had by his first Wife Charles de Schomberg, of whom I shall speak hereafter, and a Daughter who was Married to Roger du Plessis, Duke de la Roche-Guyon, Knight of the King's Orders, and first Gentleman of the Chamber. By the Second Marriage he had a Posthumous Daughter, who was Baptized at Paris the 5th of March 1633, and who was Married to Charles de Rohan, Duke of Mombazon, and Prince of Guemené.

χ Page 675. of the 1 tom. of the Pa- [illegible]

ʒ Anselme, Hist. des grans Officiers ubi supra.

SCHOMBERG (CHARLES DE) Son of the foregoing, was Duke of Haluin by his Marriage with the Dutchess of that Name, and Marshal of France. You may see an Account of his Dignities and Exploits in Moreri, Copied word by word out of Father Anselme *. He should also have Copied that Anne & Dutchess of Haluin, his Wife, died of the small Pox at Nanteuil, without Children, in September 1641 and that he Married again the 24th of September 1646, Mary de Hautefort, a Tire-Woman to the Queen, and Daughter of Charles, Marquis de Hautefort, by whom he had no Children. This Mary de Hautefort was much Celebrated, for her Virtue, by Scarron and other Poets: But a Modern Satyrist (A) has given her a furious

& She died the 6th of January 1602.

* Ibid. pag. 257.

" away, having received some Injuries, and even " a Box on the Ear from Genlis; and the Prince " was forced to go towards Strasburg and sell " his Plate, his Tapestry, his Moveables and his " spare Cloaths, dividing all among the Chiefs, " and giving them (if not what he ought) at " least what he could; and then mortgaged to them " the Principality of Orange, and Monfort, pro" mising to pay them the Interest and Princi" pal within twelve Years: And he and those, who " were better minded, joyned the Duke of Deux-" Ponts, who was then preparing for the Wars of " France." See Mr. Varillas in the life of Charles IX. in the Year 1568. but especially Thuanus lib. 43, in the same Year.

(B) He had two Sons and three Daughters.] Henry, (of whom I speak in his Article) Hannibal, who was killed in the War of Hungary against the Turks; Catherine, who died before her Father, without leaving any Children by her Marriage with Lewis de Barbançon, Sieur de Cany; Margaret, who was not Married, and Frances who left Children behind her by her Marriage with Francis de Daillon, Count du Lude (a).

(A) A Modern Satyrist.] 'Tis the Author of a Book which was Printed at the Hague (b) in 1687. with this Title: Memoires de Mr. L. C. D. R. concernant ce qui s'est passé de plus particulier sous le regne du Cardinal de Richelieu, & du Cardinal Mazarin. 'Tis not well known who writ this Book; 'tis only guessed that it was one who had been Secretary to the Countess de Soissons, Neice of Cardinal Mazarin. He had, without doubt, a great deal of Wit; but there never was such a Packer of all sorts of Stories, nor such a Compiler of all the Satyrical Rhapsodies of the Taverns and Armies. There's nothing more false than what we read in the first Tome (c) of the Melanges of Vigneul Marville in these Words: " (d) From since that time the Petits " Maitres were not heard of till the time of " Cardinal de Richelieu, who kept in his Ser" vice a certain number of bold and resolute Fel" lows, whom he employ'd in the Execution of his " Designs. Rochefort, whose Memoirs are pub" lished, was one of 'em." This pretended Rochefort was not then in the World, or was but lately born when this Cardinal died. However it be, he says page 93, That the Dutchess of Chevreuse was apprehensive, lest la Porte whom, tho' he was a Taylor by Trade, she had taken into her Bed, should sacrifice her to the Marechalless of Schomberg, who, after having resisted the King's Addresses, could not, according to common Fame, defend her self from such a mean Person. Before I mention what the Abbot Faydit has published on this Subject, I shall make this little Remark; That the time that's allotted for this Affair, is that which passed between the Death of Cardinal de Richelieu and that of Lewis XIII. Now at that time the Marshal de Schomberg had not Married the Lady in Question; and therefore 'tis an absurd thing to talk of her at that rate. Let us See what the Abbot Faydit says.

I confess, says he, " That what determined me, " when I composed my Book (e), to set down at " length this Passage of Celsus, was only the de" sign I had effectually to comfort, by the Example " of the most blessed Virgin, a most virtuous La" dy, whose Honour was Attacked by a most Un" just and Cruel Calumny. Those who know me, " are not ignorant that I have a long time made " Profession of Honouring an Illustrious Dutchess " and Mareschalless of France, who having been in " her Youth, the Ornament and Admiration of the " Court, as well for her Eminent Piety as for her " Beauty and Wit, is become, in her old Age, the " Edification of all the Town by the continual Ex" amples of her Virtues, and the joy of all those " who see her, by the sweetness of her Conversation. " But as there is nothing so pure but what is at" tacked by Calumny, there's an insolent Scribler, " who in a Book full of Falsities, intituled, Me-" moires de M. L. C. D. R. has had the Impudence " to bespatter with his Venomous Satyr so fine a " life, without considering that this Lady, of " whom he speaks so ill, is the same whom the Poets " (f), who are naturally Satyrical, called in her " Youth Saint Haut——— He has not been afraid " through the most Treacherous and Ridiculous " of all Calumnies, to give her for a Gallant a Man " she had never saw, nor knew. Going one day to visit

(a) Anselme, Hist. des grands Officiers, pag. 248.

(b) The Title says, A Cologne, chez Pierre Marteau.

(c) Page. 324. of the 2. Edition. of Rouen.

(d) That is from the time of Henry. III.

furious blow. Lewis XIII. had a great kindness for her, and she suffered a Disgrace (B) which rather heightned than diminished her Reputation.

SCHOMBERG (FREDERICK DE) created Marshal of France the 30th of July, in the Year 1675. was killed at the Famous Passage of the Boyn in Ireland, the 10th of July 1690. He was one of the greatest Captains of his Age, and Commanded Armies under more Kings, and was raised to Eminent Dignities in more Countries than any other. He deserves a long Article, but not having received the Memoirs which I expected, I am forc'd to refer it to another time. He is one of those great Men, whose History ought to be written by an able Pen. I do not doubt but that the Duke of Schomberg his worthy Son, has already taken care to procure this Honour to his Family, * and this fine Present to the Common-wealth of Learning.

In the mean time, one may be informed of many things, by consulting the Memoires of Mr. Fremont d' Ablancourt, Published in the Year 1701. You'll find an Extract of them in the Histoire des Ouvrages des Savant, for the Month of November 1700.

SCHORUS (ANTONY) a Native of † Hoochstraten in Brabant, was one of the best Grammarians of the XVIth Century. He laboured diligently to introduce into the Schools || Cicero's Latin, and Composed some Works (A) very proper "visit her, I found her a little astonished to see "her self so basely treated in that Impertinent "Book: I could not forbear to tell her, on purpose to Comfort her, that the Blessed Virgin her "self, who was the purest of all Creatures, had "not escaped such like Calumnies; and that a little after her Death, a Famous Writer had the "Impudence to assert, That she had a Criminal Commerce with a Soldier called PANTHER, and "that he was the Father of Jesus Christ. As this "seemed New to her, and besides Comforted her, "she desired me to Transcribe that Passage (a)".

